PREFACE.

In introducing the present work to the notice of the public, the Editor, it will be perceived, offers it, not as a new edition of his former Greek Thucydides, but as an entirely distinct performance on a far more extensive scale; in which it has been his purpose to embody the combined results of his classical and critical researches, as carried on during a long course of years previous to the publication of his English Translation with Notes, and of his smaller Greek Edition, and as continued in subsequent researches, which, while immediately directed to another and far higher object, afforded at the same time large scope and ample materials (of which the Author was accustomed studiously and systematically to avail himself) for the incidental illustration of the great writer whom he had already translated, explained, and edited; but of whom it was still his anxious wish and long-cherished design to produce an Edition on a scale somewhat commensurate to the merits of this most distinguished of historians, and sufficiently extensive to comprehend whatever might be essentially necessary to the emendation and explanation of this most difficult of writers.

Having thus adverted generally to the origin and purpose of the work, the Editor will now proceed to state, more in detail, what he has here endeavoured to effect. It might, indeed, seem proper,—considering that several editions, of more or less merit and usefulness, are already before the public,—that he should point out the deficiencies which the present work is intended to supply, as well as the purposes which it is designed to answer. Declining, however, to enter into such particular statements as might be thought to involve invidious animadversions on his justly esteemed brother-editors, he will only remark, in a general way, that not one of the editions just adverted to presents, he conceives, that which, either in respect of text or annotation, the present state of criticism and philology may be said to demand. Even as regards the text, where most has been done, the result of the critical labours of nearly a generation has been only this,—that the readers of Thucydides are provided, not with one standard text, but with four texts (those of Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller) differing not a little from each other, and all of them from the ordinary text as found in the editions of Duker or Bauer; from which those editors have occasionally receded on very insufficient grounds. Now as it is not to be supposed that students—still less readers of Thucydides in general—possess all those critical editions, or ordinarily are enabled to decide which of the four texts should, in any given instance, be considered as presenting the genuine reading,—it seemed desirable to the present Editor, that while forming such a nova recensio as might be likely to supply a standard text, he should detail systematically the variations of that text from each of the four above mentioned,—and, where requisite, from the common text: and that in all cases of importance he should state the evidence for or against the respective readings, and adduce the reasons which had induced him to adopt or reject any given reading; so that the student might thence learn to judge for himself. But if so great was the want of a text formed on these principles, and serving these purposes, much greater was the want of such a body of annotation as should in some measure form a continuous or regular commentary. This, the Editor needs scarcely observe, is a feature which the editions of Goeller and Dr. Arnold (notwithstanding their respective merits, which it is by no means his intention to depreciate) are far from presenting: nor is it found in the otherwise very valuable work—from which the present Editor has derived no inconsiderable aid—the edition of Professor Poppo; which, although a work of vast labour, is yet totally destitute of that connecting thread in annotation, which binds all together, like pearls in a chain; and is also, from its very bulk,—as a ponderous Variorum,—little adapted to the purpose of continuous perusal. And, besides the disadvantage to ordinary students arising from the want of compression, there is the yet greater inconvenience resulting from the want of that perspicuity, which, as tending to present a sort of picture to the mind, is so essential to the formation of clear as well as comprehensive views. This deficiency, as regards continuity of annotation, is no where so perceptible as—where it is most felt to be an evil—on the Orations, or on matter containing the substance thereof. There especially it is that continuity of annotation is required; and there, too, it is that we feel the want of that acute perception, and profound investigation of the logic of any passage where ratiocination is at all concerned, which consists in tracing the connexion of ideas in the writer's mind, and opening out the train of thought and course of reasoning pursued throughout; and without which no mere philological process will be found effectual to draw forth the latent sense.

Upon the whole, from various causes, which it is needless to investigate, the best expositors have been far less successful in removing the formidable difficulties of Thucydides than might have been expected from their extensive learning and unwearied diligence; insomuch that many of the most puzzling passages have been left, in a great measure, such as they were in the time of Cicero,—when they extorted from the great orator the well-known declaration, that "Thucydides is occasionally almost unintelligible." Indeed, if the editors had been ingenuous enough to confess the truth, they would not have been slow to admit that they have themselves not unfrequently found him such *. And no wonder; since, in addition to the usual causes of obscurity common to all ancient writings, much of the peculiar difficulty of Thucydides may be traced to the character of his mind, and to its natural results, a cast of thought and mode of expression quite sui generis †. Hence what came forth from such a mind could not be suited to, nor was it intended for, the multitude, but rather for the wiser few, who have to direct or govern the many. The general cast of thought, indeed, of the illustrious historian presents various points of marked resemblance to that of the great Apostle, St. Paul. In the writings of the one, as in those of the other, we observe the same characteristics, of a mind teeming with ideas, and an anxious wish to communicate them, for stronger effect, in the fewest words; and accordingly often involving one clause in another, where the matter would otherwise have been divided into separate sentences. In both, the cast of composition is peculiarly marked by the brief, the pointed, and the antithetic, occasionally tending (by a necessary consequence) to the involved and obscure. While, however, they resemble each other in cast of thought and mould of composition, they differ widely in the choice of language and phraseology, and the general purpose which they proposed to themselves in their writings. The historian, as writing merely for the enlightened few, is found systematically to select such modes of expression as shall recede furthest from the trite or common-place, and, by thus aiming at the unusual, occasionally falls into the far-fetched, harsh, and frigid *. On the other hand, the Apostle, whose purpose—unlike that of the historian—was to address not the few, but the many, as systematically prefers the use of ordinary language, and the phraseology of common life; though in his very plainness, and occasional homeliness, there is a simple majesty, which rises far above the pomp of words; and, while disdaining the niceties of elaborate elegance, attains in an eminent degree to the power of the forcible, the energetic, and even the sublime.

* Duker, I observe, occasionally allows this to be the case; and a more recent editor, though himself a Greek, (namely, Dukas,) not unfrequently complains bitterly of the difficulties of his author. Thus, for instance, on a very intricate passage at l. iv. 25, he exclaims, almost in despair, Ταῦτα πάντ' ἀμφίβολα καὶ ἀμφιῤῥεπῆ ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου, κοὐδὲν ἐκ τοῦ ἀσαφοῦς ἀσεμφῶς ὑγιὲς οὐδὲ πάγιόν ἐστιν ἐννοεῖν, ἐπιστήσαντι ἀκριβῶς. Ὦ, οἷα ἡμῖν παρέχεις πράγματα, Θουκυδίδη!

Be the causes, however, what they may, the fact, that most formidable difficulties do often occur in the writings of Thucydides, is universally admitted; and these it has been the purpose of the present Editor fairly to state and fearlessly to encounter. His leading object was to effect that for Thucydides, which he trusts he has, in a great measure, effected for the Greek Testament. Accordingly he has laboured especially to present a Text as pure as possible, with a very carefully amended punctuation, accompanied with such critical notes as should not merely justify his editorial decisions as to various readings, &c., but furnish students with all necessary information, and occasionally open out important principles of criticism. As to the philological and explanatory notes, they are so framed as to constitute a perpetual or continuous commentary, almost entirely original, but partly derived (with due acknowledgment, wherever practicable) from the best expositors; the whole formed on the same principles as those acted on in his Greek Testament, and omitting, he trusts, nothing essential towards the thorough understanding of this most difficult of writers; while presenting, at the same time, much that will be found useful in the study of the Greek writers in general; one of the most important features of this edition being the systematic establishment of the reading, or determination and illustration of the sense of the text, by a perpetual reference to passages parallel either in sentiment or in turn of expression (nay, not unfrequently direct imitations of Thucydides) in the best writers, from the time of Homer and Hesiod, Pindar and Herodotus, down to the Byzantine historians. This has given occasion to a variety of incidental explanations and illustrations both of the Greek classics and the Scriptures, as well in matters of philology as in points bearing on classical antiquities.

* While in the highest degree alive to the merits, the Editor is by no means insensible to the defects of his favourite writer. While admiring the weighty thoughts and profound political lessons of this κτῆμα ἐς ἀεί, he cannot but wish that they had been clothed in language less perplexed and obscure. The too frequent recurrence of something like writing in enigma, he is rather disposed to tolerate than approve; and indeed it is such as he would be little able to endure in any writer of less pre-eminent intrinsic merit. In short, he may not unaptly apply to this kind of writing in Thucydides, what Mr. Fox once said of Burke's high-flown rhetorical panegyrics on America, during the war of independence, "I cannot bear this sort of thing in any body but Burke, and in him only because he cannot help it."

The Editor has, he trusts, rendered no unimportant assistance to students, by the systematic introduction both of glossarial notes on all terms of difficulty or unfrequency, and of new and literal versions of all passages of any great obscurity; an aid which will be found especially valuable on the numerous orations occurring in various parts of the work, the careful perusal of which with these helps will be found extremely useful to students of oratory;—these speeches having been, in all ages, allowed to constitute the purest models of the chaste, simple, and what is called severe, style of ancient Greek oratory; and having, as such, been the especial study of Demosthenes, who is said to have transcribed them eight times with his own hands.

For geographical or historical matters, rarely discussed in the present edition, the reader is referred to the Editor's English Translation with Notes; and, as regards the former, to Colonel Leake's most instructive and scholarlike works on Northern and Southern Greece, Asia Minor, and Athens and Attica,—books indispensable to the student or reader of Thucydides, and indeed of the Greek historians in general; and of so masterly a character as fairly to entitle the writer to the appellation of the first geographer of our age. The numerous Maps and Plans which accompany this edition, having been formed with the greatest care from the best accessible materials, and occasionally with the kind aid of the above highly distinguished person, cannot but prove highly acceptable to the student. Nor will the full and complete Indexes of Greek words and phrases explained, and matters discussed, be found the least useful feature in this edition.

On the execution of the present work, it is not for the Editor to pronounce. This he willingly leaves to the decision of those by whom chiefly he desires to be judged,—the truly learned and candid, who (to use the words of Dr. Johnson) "knowing the scantiness of human knowledge, can compare the causes of error with the means of avoiding it, and the extent of art with the capacity of man." Sensible, indeed, he is that after all that he has attempted, and all that he trusts he has effected, he has fallen short of what would, in his own estimation, be adequate to the merits of the illustrious writer who forms the subject of his labours. Leaving it, however, to an enlightened public to decide as to the value of these results of long-continued investigation, he can truly say, that the lapse of years—which has only called forth closer and closer application to the object he has so long had in view—has tended to render him more than ever sensible of the great variety and depth of knowledge required in an editor of THUCYDIDES. And when he considers that the present advanced, and still advancing, state of Greek scholarship renders it improper in any one to come before the public without bringing something like a mastery of the subject that he has chosen to treat on,—so far from wishing he could have produced his long-meditated edition of the illustrious historian sooner, he would gladly have deferred it longer, could he have entertained any reasonable hope of materially improving it. As, however, that is by no means the case—the Editor must rest satisfied with having, in the formation of the present work, put forth his whole strength, and used his most strenuous endeavours; which to see crowned with success, and made available to the cause which it has been the main purpose of his life to promote—the union of deep and solid learning with sound religious knowledge—will, he trusts, independent of any personal consideration, more than indemnify him for labours however irksome, and sacrifices however unsparing. Having laboured thus assiduously, he desires to commit the event unto Him with whom are the issues of human action, and without whose help and blessing all labour—even of those who dig deepest in the mines of learning and science—is but "a labouring in the fire, a wearying of oneself for very vanity." So true is the sentiment of the great Grecian bard,

> Ἄνευ δὲ Θεοῦ, σεσιγα- > μένον γ' οὐ σκαιότερον χρῆ
> μ' ἕκαστον. PINDAR, Olymp. ix. 56.

SUMMARY OF THE CONTENTS

BOOK I.

THE subject of the Peloponnesian war first treated of ; to evince the importance for which, beyond all others that Greece had ever before known, Thucydides, ch. I., reviews the state of Greece from the earliest age down to the commencement of that war. Its earliest state described as one in which its inhabitants were barbarous and migratory clans, II. ; without even the common name of Grecians or Hellenians, III. The dawn of civilization shown to have been in the time of Minos, king of Crete, who first became possessed of a navy, and therewith suppressed piracy, IV. ; for robbery and piracy had anciently prevailed every where, both by sea and land, V. ; insomuch that the Greeks of that age constantly carried arms, like the barbarians of the age of Thucydides, VI. Hence the more ancient cities were built, for security, at some distance from the sea, VII. ; but, on the suppression of piracy by Minos, navigation and commerce became secure, and growing civilization prepared the Greeks for the expedition against Troy, VIII. ; which, however, chiefly originated in, and was organized by the power and influence of Agamemnon, king of Mycenæ, IX., who was a potent monarch for those times ; and the armament he commanded against Troy was on a larger scale than Greece had ever before witnessed, but yet was not comparable with the armaments of the Peloponnesian war, X. ; an inferiority, however, arising more from want of wealth than of population, XI. After the Trojan war, Greece long continued in an unsettled, and consequently unimproving state ; until at length becoming more settled and populous, colonization became necessary and frequent, XII. The increase of wealth causes much political power to pass into the hands of the rich ; wealth beginning to overbalance nobility. Attention now paid to nautical affairs, first by the Corinthians, next by the Ionians, and especially Polycrates, despot or usurper of Samos, XIII. ; afterwards by the tyrants of Sicily, and by the Corcyræans, XIV. The power of the Grecian states was much advanced by their navies ; yet the progress of Greece in wealth and consequence was slow, and hindered by various impediments, XV. That of the Asiatic Greeks was checked by the proximity of the Persian power, XVI. ; and that of the Greeks in general was hampered in its progress by the selfish policy of the tyrants, who aimed at nothing but upholding their own power, XVII. After the suppression of these tyrannies,—the last of which was that of the

Pisistratidæ,—soon followed the Persian war, and thence a confederacy of Grecian states for mutual defence, which afterwards separated into two, one headed by the Lacedæmonians, the other by the Athenians, XVIII. Of the former, the confederated states were oligarchies, faithfully attached to them because their assistance was necessary to hold the body of the people in subjection; while those of the latter were subject states, held by force under compulsory obedience, XIX. Thucydides then proceeds to say that this sketch of the state of Greece in the early ages, and of the origin and progress of civilization, though particular facts be stated inaccurately, (as, from the indifference of mankind about all accounts of events in remote periods, is likely to be the case,) may, however, be depended upon as the truth, and will serve to prove the assertion with which this history commences, that the Peloponnesian war was the most important one Greece had ever before seen, (XX. XXI.) and accordingly deserved to be faithfully recorded; and in order thereto, no pains had been spared to attain the truth; the writer being more anxious to instruct posterity, even to the latest period, than amuse his contemporaries, XXII. After again adverting to the supreme importance of the Peloponnesian war over any foregoing events, the historian proceeds to open out both the real and the ostensible causes thereof; the former as originating in the jealousy entertained by the Lacedæmonians; the latter, in the disputes occasioned by the affairs of Epidamnus and Potidæa, (which are narrated ch. 24—66,) AFFORDING THE FIRST AVOWED CAUSE OF THE WAR, XXIII.

THE AFFAIR OF EPIDAMNUS, ch. XXIV—LV. The aristocratical party of Epidamnus being exiled by the democratical, raise forces, for their restoration, from some of the neighbouring barbarians, and harass the city with a predatory warfare. The latter implore the aid of Corcyra, their mother country, but without success, XXIV. They then have recourse to Corinth, the mother country of Corcyra. The Corinthians, partly from jealousy of the Corcyræans, grant their request, XXV.; and send them settlers and soldiers; whereupon the Corcyræans espouse the cause of the exiles, and endeavour to effect their restoration by besieging Epidamnus by sea and land, XXVI. The Corinthians, on their part, send a fleet composed of their own ships and some of their allies, to raise the siege and relieve the town, XXVII. After some ineffectual endeavours to settle the dispute by negociation, the Corcyræans come to an engagement with and defeat the Corinthian fleet, and then obtain possession of Epidamnus, XXVIII, XXIX. They pursue their advantage till the Corinthians send out another fleet to hold them in check, and in the mean time make extensive preparations for war; whereupon the Corcyræans, in alarm, send an embassy to implore the aid of the Athenians; while the Corinthians, on their part, send a counter-embassy to entreat their non-interference, XXXI. SPEECH OF THE CORCYRÆANS, XXXII—XXXVI. SPEECH OF THE CORINTHIANS, XXXVII—XLIII.; after hearing which, the Athenians decide on concluding a defensive alliance with the Corcyræans, XLIV.; and send a fleet of ten sail to their aid, XLV. Meanwhile the Corinthians and their allies proceed against Corcyra with a fleet of 150 ships, and fix their naval station at Chimerium, XLVI. The Corcyræans and Athenians, with 120 sail, take one opposite, at the Sybota islands, XLVII. Both parties prepare for battle, XLVIII. They engage, and victory, long doubtful, then at length decides for the Corinthians, XLIX.; in endeavouring to follow up which, the Corinthians are checked by a reinforcement of 20 ships from Athens, which join the enemy, L.; and retreat to their own naval station, LI. On the day following, the Corcyræans and Athenians in their turn offer them battle, LII.; which they decline, being desirous rather of returning home, and seek to effect their purpose by negociation with the Athenians, LIII.; meanwhile both parties erect a trophy, and claim the victory, LIV. The Corinthians then return homeward with their prisoners, of whom they treat the better sort with marked kindness,—hoping, by their influence, to gain over Corcyra to the oligarchical cause and the Peloponnesian confederacy, LV. SECOND AVOWED CAUSE OF THE WAR, the affair of Potidæa, LVI—LXV. Potidæa, a colony of Corinth, but an ally of Athens, falling under the suspicion of the Athenians, is required to give certain securities for its fidelity, LVI.; meanwhile Perdiccas, king of Macedonia, endeavours to form a confederacy against Athens among the maritime states bordering on his kingdom, and to excite the Peloponnesian confederation to a war with Athens, LVII. The Potidæans, after in vain endeavouring to induce the Athenians to wave the securities demanded, revolt, in conjunction with the Chalcidians and Bottiæans, LVIII. The Athenian forces in that country prove, for the moment, too weak to check the revolt, LIX.; meanwhile the Corinthians have time to send succours to Potidæa, LX.; but, on receiving reinforcements from home, the Athenians compel Perdiccas to a hasty treaty, (which, however, he almost immediately breaks,) and then proceed against Potidæa, LXI. The Potidæans and their allies engage with them in front of Potidæa, and are defeated and driven pell-mell into the town, LXII. Aristeus, the commander of the Corinthian auxiliaries, with great difficulty escapes from the action, and effects an entrance into the place. Statement of the loss on both sides, LXIII. Potidæa is now closely besieged, first on the side of the mainland, and then, on the arrival of reinforcements from Athens, on that of the peninsula of Pallene likewise, LXIV. Aristeus, after in vain proposing to break through the enemy with all but 500, himself contrives to escape, and keeps up the war in the neighbourhood; meanwhile Phormio devastates the territories of the Chalcidians and Bottiæans, LXV. The Corinthians, being more than ever embittered against the Athenians, prevail on the Lacedæmonians to summon a general congress of their allies at Sparta; where, after several states had complained of the injustice and ambition of Athens, the Corinthians pronounce a most bitter invective, and urge the confederacy to immediately declare war against the Athenians, in a very vehement address, from LXXIII. to LXXVIII. inclusive. After which the Lacedæmonians take counsel how to decide, and their king Archidamus delivers a speech in favour of deferring hostilities, LXXX—LXXXV.; to which Sthenelaidas, one of the Ephori, replies by briefly touching on the injuries sustained by various allies of Lacedæmon, which she is bound, he says, in honour to avenge by an immediate declaration of war, LXXXVI. The question is then put to the vote, and the majority of the assembly decide for going to war immediately, LXXXVII.; the real motive for which decision being alarm at the formidable power of Athens, LXXXVIII. The narrative is now interrupted by a digression, in which is given a sketch of the origin and progress of the Athenian dominion, from the Persian invasion to the beginning of the Peloponnesian war, LXXXIX—CXVIII. First is related how the rebuilding of the walls of Athens was brought about, after the final defeat of the Persians under Mardonius, LXXXIX—XCII. Also, how, by the counsel of Themistocles, Piræus was fortified, and the navy made the principal object of public attention to the Athenians, XCIII. Pausanias is sent out as commander-in-chief of the Grecian allies, to accomplish the remainder of the Persian war, XCIV. By his unpopularity the Asiatic and the Insular Greeks, and also those of the Thracian coast, secede from the Lacedæmonians, and attach themselves to the Athenians as chiefs of their confederacy, XCV. UPRISE OF THE ATHENIAN EMPIRE, (A. C. 447,) XCVI. This part of the Grecian history being either passed over, or inaccurately treated, our historian is induced to give a sketch of it; especially as serving to show how the power of Athens came to be so formidable as to drive the Lacedæmonians into a war, in order to humble it, XCVII. The Athenians, after being at first moderate and popular, soon became domineering and rapacious, and thus caused the allies to revolt, XCVIII. Their power over them chiefly obtained by allowing them to compound for their personal service in the war with Persia by a money payment, which thus enabled the Athenians to maintain a navy which should keep the allies in subjection, at the expense of the allies themselves, XCIX. Various martial exploits of the Athenian confederacy: battles of the Eurymedon—the revolt of Thasus—attempt to colonize Amphipolis, C. The Thasians entreat the aid of the Lacedæmonians, but they are prevented from sending it by the great earthquake at Sparta, and the consequent revolt of the Helots; whereupon Thasus surrenders, CI. The Lacedæmonians apply for and obtain the aid of the Athenians against the Helots; but becoming jealous of them, they send them back home,—a circumstance which engenders much irritation on the part of the Athenians, CII. Termination of the war with the revolters, who evacuate the country, and are settled by the Athenians at Naupactus. Megara goes over to the Athenian alliance, and Nisæa and Pegæ are occupied by the Athenians, CIII. Ægypt revolts from the king of Persia, and is supported by aid from the Athenians, CIV. Various hostilities occur between the Athenians and Peloponnesians. Ægina is besieged by the Athenians: the Corinthians, to cause a diversion, make an incursion into the country of Megara, CV.; but are defeated with great loss by the Athenians under Myronides, CVI.

The long walls of Athens erected. The Spartans assist the Dorians against the Phocians. The Athenians prepare to prevent their return home, by occupying the passes of Geranea. They remain in Bœotia, and try to obtain their end by political intrigue for the overthrow of democracy at Athens, CVII. At length a general engagement takes place at Tanagra, in which the Athenians are utterly defeated, and the Lacedæmonians return home without opposition. Soon afterwards the Athenians overcome Bœotia, and complete the cónquest of Ægina, CVIII. Continuation and completion of the Egyptian war, which terminates in the utter defeat of the Egyptians, and the destruction of the Athenian forces there, and also of the reinforcement sent for their relief, CIX, CX. The Athenians make an ineffectual invasion of Thessaly. Pericles obtains a victory over the Sicyonians. Accession of Achaia to the Athenian confederacy, CXI. Expedition of the Athenians against Cyprus; death of Cymon, CXII. Revolt of Bœotia from Athens. Battle of Coronæa. The Bœotians recover their independence, CXIII. Revolt of Eubœa and Megara from Athens. The Peloponnesians invade Attica, but are induced to retire. Eubœa is reduced to unconditional submission by Pericles, CXIV. Thirty years' peace concluded between the Athenians and Peloponnesians. Five years afterwards a war between Miletus and Samos occasions the revolt of Samos from Athens, in which the Byzantians join, CXV. Pericles proceeds against Samos, and, defeating the Samians, besieges the capital, CXVI.; and, on the arrival of reinforcements from Athens, compels them to submit, and deliver up their fleet to the Athenians. The Byzantians submit, CXVII. The thread of the history is resumed from ch. LXXXVIII. The Lacedæmonians, after having resolved on war, consult the oracle at Delphi, and receive a favourable answer, CXVIII. They then convene their allies, and put the question as to immediate war. The Corinthians strongly contend for it, CXIX. Speech of the Corinthian deputies to that effect, CXX—CXXIV. On the question being put, the votes for war form a decided majority. Preparation for it accordingly. Meanwhile, to give a better colour to their proceedings, the Lacedæmonians pretend a zeal for religion, and require the Athenians to banish from among them 'the accursed.' The term explained by the story of Cylon, CXXVI. The real object of the Lacedæmonians is to excite odium against Pericles, as being of the race of those accursed, CXXVII. The Athenians make a counter-demand to the Lacedæmonians to drive out their accursed: who those are, is explained by a narration of the treason and death of Pausanias, involving the curse of Tænarus, and that of Minerva of the Brazen House, CXXVIII—CXXXIV. In the examination of the proofs of treason against Pausanias, matter is found to implicate Themistocles, whose fortunes up to his death are recounted, CXXXV—CXXXVIII. The thread of the story is then resumed from ch. CXXVII. After some ineffectual negociation, ambassadors are sent to Athens by the Lacedæmonians with their ultimatum, that every Grecian state should be restored to independence; a demand which Pericles counsels them by no means to comply with, in a most rousing and impressive address, CXL—CXLIV.; by which he prevails on the Athenians to dismiss the Lacedæmonian ambassadors with a point-blank refusal of their demands, CXLV. Yet during all this period, some intercourse, though not without mutual suspicions, is kept up between the two countries, CXLVI.

BOOK II.

From the return of the Lacedæmonian envoys all intercourse is entirely broken off, except by heralds, I. Here, then, properly commences the Peloponnesian war. The first blow is struck by the Lacedæmonian confederacy, in an attempt on the part of the Thebans (while the Peloponnesians are assembling for the invasion of Halice) to surprise a town in the Bœotian territory, but in alliance with Athens. Some Theban forces succeed, by the aid of the aristocratical party in Platæa, in effecting an entrance into the city by night, II. The inhabitants in general, surprised and overawed, at first accede to terms of peace and amity offered by the Thebans, but afterwards recovering from their surprise and alarm, especially on perceiving the weakness of the invading force, they attack and defeat it, putting to the sword or capturing the whole, III, IV. Reinforcements in full strength arrive from Thebes, but not till the first body of troops have already surrendered at discretion. The Thebans commence making retaliation on the Platæans outside of the town; to prevent which, the Platæans engage, on their desisting, to release their prisoners; but on the departure of the Thebans, the Platæans fetch in the persons and property outside of the town, and then put to death their prisoners, V. News of the transaction arriving at Athens, the Athenians apprehend such Thebans as are in Attica, and proceed to garrison and victual Platæa for a siege, removing all the useless population at Athens, VI. On this occurrence taking place, both sides prepare for war, and seek to provide themselves with allies, both Greeks and foreigners, VII. State of public feeling in Greece; forebodings by a recollection of prophecies and oracles, and anticipations of future calamities. The Lacedæmonian cause in most parts the popular one, VIII. Enumeration of the several states of which the two confederacies were composed, IX. The contingents of the several states which formed the Lacedæmonian confederacy assemble at the isthmus of Corinth, in order to invade Attica, X. Archidamus, king of the Lacedæmonians, addresses the allies in a heart-stirring, but cautionary, harangue. He bids them confide in the justice of their cause, and rely on the anxiety of all Greece for their success; yet not to expose themselves to defeat by any undue contempt of their enemy, and neglect of the means for ensuring success, XI. That no means might be left untried for procuring justice before he had recourse to hostilities, Archidamus makes a last attempt at negociation, by sending an ambassador to the Athenians; but the Athenians send him away without even a hearing; whereupon Archidamus marches forward, XII. Meanwhile Pericles counsels the Athenians to remove their families and property from the country into the city, and encourages them to the contest by stating the extent of their resources for the war, in revenue and armed force, both military and naval, XIII. The Athenians remove their families and effects, and send their cattle to Eubœa and the neighbouring islands. This removal proves very irksome, because the inhabitants of the rural towns, though united nominally into one commonwealth with Athens, had mostly resided there, and regarded them as their respective homes, and consequently migrated very unwillingly. In illustration of the subject Thucydides interweaves a brief notice of the early state of Athens, XV, XVI. Athens thronged with the rural population, which is accommodated in the city as well as circumstances would permit, but with much difficulty, and in situations very inconvenient,—even in huts along the long walls and Piræus; nay, wherever there was a vacant space, however forbidden by religion or custom to be occupied. The Athenians, however, apply themselves vigorously to the war; and, in order to cause a diversion, despatch a fleet of 100 sail to cruise around and ravage Peloponnesus, XVII. Meanwhile the Peloponnesians proceed in their invasion, and lay siege to a frontier fortress called Œnoe, where Archidamus lingers for some time in hope that the Athenians would be terrified into submission, and thus the necessity of invasion would be averted, XVIII. This hope, however, being disappointed, and Œnoe withstanding all their attacks, they raise the siege, and proceed slowly towards Athens, devastating the whole country in their course, XIX. They again linger some time at Acharnæ, and in the neighbourhood of Athens, and devastate one of the most fruitful tracts of Attica, hoping to provoke the Athenians to a general action, or at least to sow dissension by means of the enraged sufferers, XX. Great alarm and indignation among the Athenians, who clamour against Pericles, and are with difficulty restrained from sallying forth against the enemy. Pericles, however, persists in his policy of avoiding the coming to any drawn battle, and only sends out light troops to check the enemy's stragglers. Hence a skirmish arises between a body of Athenian horse, supported by some Thessalian cavalry sent as an aid to the Athenians, and the Bœotian horse, XXII. Meanwhile the Athenian fleet sets out on its cruise for retaliation, along the sea-coasts of Peloponnesus, and soon after the Peloponnesians evacuate Attica and return home, XXIII. To provide more effectually for wielding this strong arm by sea,—which seems to have drawn off the Peloponnesians sooner than otherwise would have been the case,—the Athenians put aside a reserve of money and ships for pressing emergencies like the present, and especially to withstand any attack by sea, XXIV. Operations of the Athenian fleet in its cruise, and especially the attack on Methone, the spirited action of Brasidas, (now first mentioned,) in relieving the place and raising the siege. Pheia, a sea-port of Elis, taken by the Athenians, XXV. Operations of another Athenian fleet on the coast of Locris, XXVI. The Æginetæ are expelled from their country by the Athenians, and the island colonized by Athenian settlers. The expelled Æginetæ settled by the Lacedæmonians at Thyrea, XXVII. Eclipse of the sun (Aug. 3rd, A. C. 431) so great that the stars are visible, XXVIII. The Athenians bring about a treaty of alliance with Sitalces, king of Thrace, to which Perdiccas, king of Macedonia, also accedes, XXIX. Continuation of the operations of the Athenian fleet cruising around Peloponnesus; Sollium and Astacus are captured, and Cephallenia gained over to the Athenian alliance, XXX. The land and the sea forces form a junction—composing the greatest assemblage ever brought together by Athens—and making an incursion into Megara, lay waste most of the territory. After this first incursion they regularly make one every year, XXXI. The islet of Atalanta fortified by the Athenians, as a check on the Locrian privateers, XXXII. The Corinthians go on an expedition to Acarnania, in order to restore Euarchus, the exiled tyrant of Astacus, to his power; which they accomplish, but fail in their attempt to bring over the Acarnanians to the Peloponnesian alliance, and are repulsed in an attack on Cephallenia, XXXIII. Description of the solemn funeral rites, which, agreeably to custom, were publicly celebrated, over the Athenians who had fallen in the first campaign of the war, XXXIV. The Funeral Oration, as pronounced by Pericles, XXXV—XLVI.

Second Year of the War. Attica again invaded by the Peloponnesians. The pestilence breaks out at Athens, XLVII. The disorder first considered as to its origin and probable causes, and then minutely described in all its leading symptoms and the peculiar circumstances attendant on its prevalence, XLVIII—LI. The effects, physical and moral, of the pestilence are vividly depicted, the latter involving a disregard of all the ceremonies of religion and decencies of social life,—every law divine and human being trampled upon, and the most unblushing selfishness and unrestrained sensuality prevalent; LII, LIII. Other results thereof in the calling to mind of ambiguously-worded ancient prophecies, and the explanation of them by the event, LIV. The Peloponnesians leave Attica after a stay (the longest throughout the war) of sixty days, LVII. Reinforcements proceed from Athens to the besieging forces before Potidæa, but after losing a great part of their numbers by the pestilence, which they carried with them, they return home without effecting any thing, LVIII. The Athenians, sinking under the united sufferings of war and pestilence, and frustrated in some attempts to bring about peace with Lacedæmon, bitterly inveigh against Pericles, who, convoking an assembly of the people, addresses them in a most impressive speech, adapted at once to soothe their irritation, and inspirit their sinking courage, LIX—LXV., but which only partially succeeds; for Pericles is severely fined, but soon after is restored to his office of president of the state. Only survives about a year. His character, and a defence of his opinion as to the capability of Athens to contend with the Peloponnesians, and a statement of his general policy in guiding the helm of state affairs, LXV. The unsuccessful expedition of the Lacedæmonians against Zacynthus, LXVI. Ambassadors are sent by the Peloponnesians to the king of Persia to ask his aid, but are apprehended on their route, in Thrace, and given up to the Athenians, who put them all to death, LXVII. The scene now changes to Western Greece, and there is narrated an attack of the Ambraciots on Argos Amphilochicum: for the better understanding of the grounds of the hostility between the belligerents, an account is given of the origin and early history of the place, and how it came to be in alliance with the Acarnanians, and consequently the Athenians, LXVIII. Disposition of the naval force of Athens, at the beginning of the winter subsequent to this second summer of the war as follows: A squadron under Phormio is stationed at Naupactus for the blockade of the Crissean gulf, and the security of the allies of Athens in Western Greece; and another under Melesander on the coast of Caria and Lycia, to protect the merchantmen trading to Phœnicia from the Peloponnesian privateering cruisers, LXIX. Potidæa, brought low by famine, is compelled to surrender, on condition of the inhabitants being permitted to depart without molestation, LXX.

Third Year of the War (A. C. 429). The Peloponnesians, instead of invading Attica, proceed against Platæa, whose inhabitants remonstrate with them as to the injustice of the attack, LXXI. Archidamus, in reply, demands of them the observance of a strict neutrality between the belligerents, as the only condition of their being left unmolested, LXXII. They ask and obtain permission to refer the matter in question to the Athenians; who, on being consulted, require them to continue faithful to their alliance with them, and engage to bear them harmless, LXXIII. Accordingly the Platæans reject Archidamus' offers; and in consequence he, after solemnly appealing to the Platæan tutelary deities, to bear witness to and maintain his righteous cause, LXXIV., proceeds to lay siege to Platæa, the operations of which are minutely described, as well as the various measures of defence resorted to by the besieged, LXXV—LXXVII. The Peloponnesians being unsuccessful in every attempt to take the place, or even destroy it by fire, are at length obliged to turn the siege into a blockade, by strong lines of circumvallation around the place, the bulk of the army returning home, LXXVIII. Expedition of the Athenians against the revolted Chalcidians; defeated near Spartolus, with some loss, especially that of the three commanders, LXXIX. The Ambraciots, aided by a strong force of barbarians and some troops from Peloponnesus, invade Acarnania and penetrate to its capital, Stratus, LXXX. The barbarian auxiliaries are defeated near that place, and the attempt utterly fails, LXXXI. The Peloponn-nesians having effected their retreat to Œniadæ, return home from thence to Peloponnesus, LXXXII. Meanwhile the Peloponnesian fleet, on its way to co-operate with the land invasion, is intercepted at the entrance of the Corinthian gulf by the Athenian fleet, LXXXIII., and sustains a total defeat, LXXXIV.: to remedy the consequences of which, the Lacedæmonians send two commissioners with reinforcements to aid the admiral with their counsels. Meanwhile Phormio sends to Athens for fresh forces, which are retarded on their way, by having to discharge a previous duty at Corinth, LXXXV. Meanwhile the Peloponnesian fleet attempts to bring the inferior naval force of the Athenians to an engagement within the gulf, before it shall have been reinforced, LXXXVI. The commanders of the two fleets respectively address their men in language suitable to the occasion, LXXXVII—LXXXIX. And now, owing to a skilful manœuvre of the Peloponnesians, the Athenians are, against their wills, brought to action within the Strait, and are at first partially worsted; but ere long recover their lost ground, and defeat the Peloponnesians, who retreat to Corinth, XCI, XCII. The commanders of the Corinthian force, to retrieve their late defeat, attempt a bold stroke, by a sudden attack on the Piræus, sending a body of seamen across the isthmus of Corinth, to Megara, in order to man some Megarian ships laid up at Nisæa: but, their courage failing them in the hour of action, they abandon their attempt on Piræus, and confine their attack to the island of Salamis, devastating it and capturing three empty ships of war, XCIII. On intelligence of the impending attack, an Athenian fleet is speedily sent forth to stop the progress of the enemy's force, which makes its retreat forthwith to Megara, XCIV. The scene now changes to Northern Greece, and there is narrated an expedition of the Odrysian Thracians under their king Sitalces, XCV. An enumeration is given of the various tribes which composed the motley force that followed him into the field, and a brief description of the situation and extent of his territories, and the nature of his resources for war, XCVI. Sitalces sets forward with a force gradually increasing until it amounts to about 150,000 men, XCVII. He invades Macedonia, of the origin and progress of which kingdom, from the time of its founder downwards, there is inserted a brief notice, XCVIII, XCIX. Sitalces captures some towns, and overruns much of the open country, C.; but being disappointed of the auxiliary force promised by the Athenians, and prevailed on by the solicitations of his nephew, Seuthes, hearkens to the overtures of peace offered him by Perdiccas, and withdraws his forces from Macedonia, CI. The scene now changes to Western Greece; and there are narrated the military operations of Phormio, who resolves on attacking Œniadæ, but is prevented from carrying his plan into execution by the season of the year, which aided the natural strength of the place, whose situation, by way of illustration, is described, and a statement given of certain topographical circumstances respecting the river Achelous, and the origin of the name of the country of Acarnania, which was the scene of the events just recorded, CII. Phormio, on the return of spring, proceeds to Athens with his prisoners and booty. An exchange of prisoners, on an equal footing, is entered into by the two belligerent powers, CIII.

BOOK III.

Year IV. The Peloponnesians make their annual invasion of Attica for the third time, I.; which is immediately succeeded by the revolt from Athens of the whole of the island of Lesbos, except the city of Methymna; an event which was hastened by information of the design having been revealed to the Athenians, II. They are at first unwilling to credit the information, but on discovering its truth send a fleet of forty sail against the revolted Lesbians; who, however, on receiving speedy intelligence of its coming, proceed to put Mitylene in a posture of defence, III. The Athenians grant the Mitylenæans an armistice, to allow them time to send ambassadors to Athens, to exculpate themselves. They send them thither, and also others privily to Lacedæmon, entreating timely aid, IV. The Mitylenæan embassy returns to Mitylene without effecting its purpose; whereupon hostilities are recommenced, and the Mitylenæans, whose example had been followed by all the other islanders except the Methymnæans, make a sortie against the Athenians, but failing of success, they keep quiet, waiting for the arrival of succours from the Peloponnesians, V. The Athenians summoning to their aid the circumjacent allies, proceed to blockade Mitylene by sea and land. In the former they succeed, but in the latter they fail, VI. The scene now changes to Western Greece, where an Athenian fleet of twenty sail, after cruising round Peloponnesus, arrives at Naupactus, and from thence makes attacks on Œniadæ and on Leucas, but in either case without success, and with the loss of part of the forces and Asopius the commander, VII. The Mitylenæan ambassadors sent to Lacedæmon are directed by the Lacedæmonians to attend at the general assembly of the Greeks at the festival of Olympia, where, after the festival, they address the allies, VIII., entreating their aid in a very impressive speech, IX—XIV.: the result of which is, that the Peloponnesians receive the Mitylenæans into their confederacy, and prepare to aid their efforts by a fresh invasion of Attica both by sea and by land, XV. The Athenians, to make a display of their power, and thereby to deter the enemy from the enterprise, send a fleet of 100 ships to cruise around and devastate Peloponnesus; which occasions them to abandon the invasion of Attica, though they proceed to prepare the forces for raising the siege of Mitylene, XVI. The greatness of the Athenian navy at this time is adverted to, with an intimation that it tended mainly to exhaust their treasury, XVII. The Athenian forces being unable to blockade Mitylene by land, (insomuch that the Mitylenæans contrive to send out forces to Methymna in order to bring it over to their cause,) reinforcements are sent from Athens under the command of Paches, and thus the city is completely invested both by sea and by land, XVIII. The means are now recorded which were resorted to by the Athenians in order to provide funds for the exigencies of the war; of which one was an extraordinary contribution furnished by the richer citizens. A force sent to levy money on the allies on the coast of Asia Minor is defeated, XIX. The story of Platæa (supra ii. 78) is now resumed, and a narrative is given of the successful attempt of a part of the unfortunate garrison to scale the walls of circumvallation, and thus effect their escape, XX. For the illustration of the means of effecting this daring exploit, a description is given of the besiegers' works of circumvallation, XXI., followed up by a minute account of the mode in which it was effected, and the circumstances attendant thereon, XXII—XXIV. The scene now changes to Lesbos. Salæthus, a Lacedæmonian envoy, contrives to enter secretly into Mitylene, and cheers the drooping spirits of the people by assurances of speedy assistance; and here the fourth year of the war is brought to a termination, XXV. On the return of summer a powerful Peloponnesian fleet is sent to Lesbos, and the land forces invade and devastate Attica, XXVI. Meanwhile, and before the arrival of the fleet, Salæthus fully arms the populace in order to a sortie against the besiegers. They, however, mutiny and compel the higher classes to surrender the city to Paches, on terms of unconditional submission to the pleasure of the Athenian people, but with the proviso that until such should be known, they should suffer no molestation. Some persons, however, distrusting this engagement, take sanctuary at the altars. Paches induces them to come forth, and sends them for security to Tenedos, XXVII, XXVIII. Very shortly after, the Peloponnesian fleet arrives on the coast of Lesbos, and the commanders deliberate on the best course to be taken, XXIX. Teutiaplus counsels that they should proceed to Mitylene, and try to recover it by a sudden attack, XXX. Some Ionian and Lesbian exiles recommend a descent on the coast of Ionia: but Alcidas resolves to hazard nothing, but return back home, XXXI. His cruelty as well as cowardice is characterized in putting to death all of the Athenian allies whom he took in the course of his voyage, XXXII. He returns home with all speed, being hard-chased, as far as Patmos, by Paches, XXXIII.; who, after abandoning the pursuit when it had become hopeless, returns to the coast of Asia, and recovers Notium from the aristocratical party, who had effected their triumph over the people at large, by calling in the aid of the neighbouring Persian Satrap, XXXIV. Paches then returns to Mitylene, and sends Salæthus, and those Mitylenæans who had been ringleaders in the late revolt, to Athens, XXXV. The Athenians immediately slay Salæthus, and pass a decree that the whole of the Mitylenæans shall be put to death, and despatch a ship with the order; but immediately afterwards relenting, a second assembly is convoked to reconsider the question; on which occasion Cleon, who had been the prime mover of the former decree, is the first to come forward and oppose its being revoked, XXXVI., which is done in an able speech, XXXVII—XL. His arguments are answered by Diodotus, (who had in the former assembly resisted the massacre of the Mitylenæans,) in a most powerful address, XLI—XLVIII. Diodotus' motion is carried, and a second ship is despatched forthwith to Lesbos, and arrives on its errand of mercy just in time to arrest the execution of the orders first sent, XLIX. The principal movers, however, of the revolt, to the number of 1000, are put to death, and the property of the soil is forfeited by the present proprietors, who are henceforth to hold it on payment of a quit-rent to 2700 Athenians, amongst whom the land is shared, L. The islet of Minoa, in the Saronic gulf, adjacent to Megara, is seized by the Athenians, LI. The sad story of Platæa is now resumed, and carried down to the fatal catastrophe. The slender garrison still remaining are reduced to such straits by weakness and destitution, that they surrender the city to the Lacedæmonians, on condition that having voluntarily delivered up the city to the Lacedæmonians, they should be tried by them only, and the guilty should alone be punished; but without trial none. Five commissioners are sent from Sparta to judge them. On the trial no formal accusation is brought forward, but only a single interrogation is propounded, to which no safe reply can be made. They ask leave to be heard in their defence, and obtain permission, LII. They address the Lacedæmonians in a most impressive and pathetic speech, LIII—LIX. The Thebans, who had been their main accusers, and against whom they had made bitter recriminations, demand to be heard in answer, LX.; and on receiving permission, they address the Lacedæmonians in a most vehement invective against the Platæans, LXI—LXVII. The Lacedæmonians simply repeat the former interrogation, and on receiving an answer in the negative, they, regarding the Platæans as condemned out of their own mouth, put them all to death, and give up the city to the Thebans, who soon after raze it to the ground. Some animadversions on the conduct of the Lacedæmonians in this affair, LXVIII.

The Peloponnesian fleet, after effecting with great difficulty its passage home, and after being refitted and reinforced, proceeds on a voyage to Corcyra, LXIX. The state of things in the island recounted. The leaders of the aristocratical party having been, by the intrigues of the principal persons at Corinth, where they had been prisoners, brought over to the Athenian interest, assassinate Peithias, the leader of the democratical party, and then compel the people at large to abandon the Athenian alliance, and proclaim a neutrality between the two belligerents. Ambassadors sent to Athens to announce and justify this change of policy, LXX, LXXI. They are there apprehended. Meanwhile the aristocratical party take courage, and openly attack the democratical. The two factions occupy different quarters of the city. The situation of each respectively described, LXXII. The common people call in the aid of the slaves; while the aristocratical party raise some auxiliaries from the barbarians on the opposite coast of Epirus, LXXIII. The democratical party at length come off victorious, LXXIV., and immediately Nicostratus arrives from Athens with a small fleet, and proceeds to mediate between the contending parties; when the distrust of the aristocratical party excites suspicions in their adversaries, and consequently all truce is broken, and 400 of the aristocratical party are put in durance in an islet opposite to Corcyra, LXXV. At this juncture the Peloponnesian fleet, which had proceeded to Corcyra, arrives off the city, LXXVI. The Athenian and Corcyræan ships conjointly go forth to give battle to the Peloponnesians; but, owing to haste and some confusion on board, they are defeated, and retreat back to the port, LXXVII, LXXVIII. Alcidas, however, does not venture to follow up his victory, but delays, until having received intelligence of a powerful Athenian fleet being far on its way to the island, he immediately takes to flight, and makes the best of his way back to Peloponnesus, LXXX. And now the democratical party use the power thrown into their hands, and perpetrate a horrible and sanguinary massacre of their adversaries for seven days in succession, LXXXI. The subject of the sedition at Corcyra is now most ably considered in its origin, progress, and the results both physical and moral, LXXXII—LXXXIV. The Athenian fleet now takes its departure, and such of the aristocratical party as have escaped the passionate fury of their adversaries, make their escape over to the continent, whence they again cross over to the island, and taking post on Mount Istone, carry on a plundering warfare against those in the city, LXXXV. The scene now changes to Sicily, and there is recounted the first occasion on which the Athenians took part in Sicilian affairs, and that under pretence of aiding thê Ionian cities of that island against the Dorian, LXXXVI. The plague returns at Athens, and carries off a very considerable number of the inhabitants. Earthquakes occur in various places, LXXXVII. The Athenians undertake an expedition against the Liparæan isles, but without success; which terminates the fifth year of the war, LXXXVIII. Year VI. The return of summer brings back the usual irruption of the Peloponnesians into Attica; meanwhile earthquakes and inundations of the sea occur in various places. The physical causes of those events briefly considered, LXXXIX. Operations of the Athenian forces in Sicily. Chief result, the compelling of Messina to join their confederacy. Various operations of the Athenians in Melos and Bœotia recounted, XCI. The founding of the colony of Heraclea Trachinia by the Lacedæmonians recounted, and its failure, owing to the tyranny of the Lacedæmonians and the persevering hostility of the surrounding Thessalians, XCII, XCIII. The scene now changes to Western Greece, where Demosthenes, in command there, is prevailed on by the Messenians of Naupactus to make an attack upon Ætolia, the state of which at this period is briefly described, XCIV. Demosthenes sets out on his expedition in confidence of success, and intending to follow up the blow by penetrating into Phocis and even part of Bœotia, XCV. Progress of the expedition, and its first result in the Ætolian tribes, which had been at variance, all uniting for common defence, XCVI. Demosthenes pressing forward, without waiting for some promised auxiliaries, is surrounded by the Ætolians, and defeated; effects his retreat with considerable loss, XCVII, XCVIII. Operations of the Athenians on the coast of Locri in Sicily, XCIX. The Ætolians now propose, with the help of a Peloponnesian army, to attempt the subjugation of Naupactus, C. The Peloponnesian forces, after mustering at Delphi, proceed, in conjunction with the Ætolians, against Naupactus, CI., which is rescued from imminent danger by the prompt aid afforded by the Acarnanians, who send to Demosthenes troops sufficient to defend the place: whereupon the Peloponnesians arrange with the Ambraciots a combined invasion of Acarnania and the country of Argos Amphilochicum, CII. Some inconsiderable operations of the Athenians in Sicily and Italy, CIII. Solemn purification of Delos by the Athenians, which gives occasion to mention the great festivals anciently held there, attested by two passages from Homer's Hymn to Apollo, CIV. The proposed expedition of the Ambraciots and Peloponnesians against Acarnania and Argos is set on foot: and as a first step, the Ambraciots occupy the strong post of Olpæ, and then await the coming up of the Peloponnesians. Meanwhile the Acarnanians, under the direction of Demosthenes, take measures to prevent the junction of the Peloponnesians with the Ambraciots, CV. Nevertheless the Peloponnesians contrive by a rapid forced march to effect the junction at Olpæ, CVI. The Acarnanians, aided by a small body of Athenians, and ably commanded by Demosthenes, engage with the Ambraciots at Olpæ, and the latter are defeated, CVII, CVIII. The result of the battle is, that Demosthenes enters into a secret treaty with the Peloponnesians, by which they should be allowed to return home without molestation, CIX.; and then takes measures to waylay and cut off a large body of Ambraciots who had set out to reinforce the allied forces at Olpæ, CX. Meanwhile the Peloponnesians abandon their Ambraciot allies to their fate, and make their way to the friendly country of Agræa, where they are well received, CXI. Demosthenes succeeds in cutting off the whole body of the Ambraciots, on their way to Olpæ, CXII. Intelligence of the calamity is communicated to the remnant of the Ambraciots at Olpæ, by the herald whom they had sent to ask of the Athenians the usual permission to inter their countrymen who had fallen in the battle of Olpæ, CXIII. Demosthenes returns to Athens in triumph; and the Acarnanians and Amphilochians enter into a treaty of peace and alliance with the Ambraciots, CXIV. Some operations of the Athenian forces in Sicily carried on with various success, until a strong reinforcement arrives from Athens, and the whole armament is put under a new commander, CXV. Eruption of lava from Mount Ætna, which destroys part of the territory of the Catanæans, CXVI.

LIBER I.

I. ΘΟΥΚΥΔΙΔΗΣ Ἀθηναῖος ξυνέγραψε τὸν πόλεμον τῶν Πελοποννησίων καὶ Ἀθηναίων, ὡς ἐπολέμησαν πρὸς ἀλλήλους,

Chap. I. 1. This celebrated Preface (c. i—xxiv.) is not without reason supposed by some to have been written after the conclusion of the war, when Thucydides began to arrange and digest the information he had previously collected, into the form of a regular history. On its nature and purpose see Euersius Dissert. de proœmio Thucydidis, Goetting. 1803. He aptly distributes it into three parts; in the first of which (c. i.) the writer briefly shows why he committed to writing the history of the Peloponnesian war; in the second (c. ii—xix.) his purpose is to illustrate the magnitude of that war, by instituting a comparison between the ancient state of Greece and that which then subsisted; in the third (c. xx—xxiii.) he opens out the nature both of Grecian history and of this work itself. In short, his purpose seems to have been to set forth the importance of the subject he is about to treat, by showing that the Peloponnesian war was by far the most memorable that Greece had ever known; as is then sufficiently evinced by a review of the state of Greece from the earliest times down to the commencement of the Peloponnesian war, c. ii—xix.

Θουκυδίδης] This is one of those names which have the form only of patronymics, without the signification; as Μιλτιάδης, Εὐριπίδης, Σιμωνίδης. See Matth. Gr. Gr.

Ἀθηναῖος] 'an Athenian;' not 'the Athenian,' as some render; for that would require the article, and at once destroy the modesty of the author's manner of expressing himself, which is similar to that observable in Herodotus' proœm: Ἡροδότου Ἁλικαρνησσῆος ἱστορίης ἀπόδεξις ἥδε.

ξυνέγραψε] The accustomed modesty of our historian will not permit us to suppose, with some, that he could intend by ξυν. to denote 'accurate and diligent narration.' Much nearer the truth is the observation of the Scholiast, that γράψαι is used of one thing, ξυγγράψαι of several. Indeed there seems to be a reference to those narrations, and other documents, on which all authentic history is founded, and of which it is for the most part compounded. This the Latins expressed by componere. So Sallust, in the exordium to his history, has: 'Res populi Romani militiæ ac domi gestas composui.' This use of the word is quite Thucydidean, being confined to our author or his imitators; e. g. Procop. Hist. in proœm. Ocell. Lucan. init. Ctesias ap. Lucian. Tim. 11, 71. Κτησίας ὁ Κνιδίου συνέγραψε τάδε, &c. Also Antigonus, an historian almost coeval with Thucydides, whose commencing words (as preserved by Dion. Hal. i. 10, 34) are as follows: Ἀντίοχος Ξενοφάνεως τάδε συνέγραψε περὶ Ἰταλίας, ἐκ τῶν ἀρχαίων λόγων τὰ πιστότατα καὶ σαφέστατα, &c. Similar, however, is the expression of Herodot. i. 47 & 48. συγγράψασθαι, 'to commit to writing' what has been said or told to one. Hence the substantive ξυγγραφεὺς signifies 'one who compounds a regular history,' framed on authentic narratives or other documents; and thus it differs from λογογράφος, the term used c. i. 21 (see Ammonius), or λογοποιὸς in Herodot. ii. 143; v. 36 & 135 of Hecatæus; in which two terms the word λόγος means an historical narrative, as in Herodot. vii. 152. vi. 19. Yet the terms seem used indifferently by Dion. Hal. i. 59, 9. Sylb. οὔτε συγγραφεὺς οὔτε λογογράφος. In Herod. iii. 103, 2, συγγραφ. is simply used in the sense to narrate: τὸ εἶδος ἐπισταμένοισι οὐ συγγράφω.

prefer ὃν ἐπολ., which is found in Dionysius, and is thought to have been read by Valla. But the former seems rather to have quoted from memory, and the latter to have translated freely. Others, as Wyttenbach, take the ὡς for ὅν; and a similar idiom was formerly in use in our own language. But this use of ὡς for the relative was almost confined to the Greek poets, especially Homer. Besides, ὃν would be too pleonastic for Thucydides: whereas ὡς is highly significant, denoting the manner, as ἐλπίσας, just after, the cause why it was undertaken. That Themist., Polyb., and other ancient authors here read ὡς, appears, I would observe, from various imitations of this passage, e. g. Themist. p. 184 & 264. Others may be seen in the note to my English translation.

καθισταμένου] 'being set on foot,' for συνισταμένου. Instead of εὐθὺς καθιστ. a learned critical annotator on Thucydides (Mr. G. Burges) conjectures the true reading to be εὐθὺς ἐκ καθισταμένου. Yet I apprehend that, had the author intended such a sense as his critic supposes, he would rather have written ἀρξ. ἀπὸ καθ. But as the words now stand (which, from the consent of MSS., seem to be as Thucydides left them), it is plain that he did not mean εὐθὺς καθ. to be regarded as dependent on ἀρξ., but as forming a separate construction, and ἀρξ. as involving an ellipsis, to be supplied from the context, of τοῦ ἔργου. And in εὐθὺς καθ. scil. πολέμου we have a phrase formed on the model of αὐτίκα νυκτὸς, 'as soon as it was night,' where there may be an ellipsis of ἐκ. As confirmatory of the above view, I would notice the reading of the MS. Paris, A. αὐτίκα, for εὐθύς; which, though evidently a mere gloss, yet serves to show how the passage was understood by the glossographer himself, and probably the early grammarians generally. Another example of this use of εὐθὺς for αὐτίκα occurs just after in this very section. Finally, after καθισταμένου (which stands for συνισταμένου, set on foot, by a use similar to that, infra v. 16, πολέμου καθεστῶτος; iii. 3, τοῦ πολέμου καθισταμένου) supply, from the context, πολέμου.

ἐλπίσας] 'having expected,' for προσδοκήσας. Ἐλπίζω and the substantive ἐλπὶς, like spero and spes in Latin, are often used simply of decided opinion as to any future event, whether good or evil.

ἀξιολογώτατον τῶν προγεγεν.] Here (as at i. 10, seq. vi. 17 & 31) we have the superl. for, what strict accuracy would require (those former wars being considered separately), the comparative. See Hermann on Vig. p. 718. The idiom is, indeed, one found also in Latin writers. So Livy, Hist. xxi. 1, doubtless with the present passage in mind, has: 'Licet præfari, bellum maxime memorabile omnium, quæ unquam gesta sint, me scripturum.' Nay, Tacitus Agric. 36, has the yet more anomalous expression, 'Ceterorum Britannorum fugacissimi.'

τεκμαιρόμενος ὅτι—καὶ ὁρῶν] Mark the transition at καὶ ὁρῶν, for καὶ ὅτι ἑώρα, freq. in Thucyd. from a construction with ὅτι to the participle. So in Xenoph. Sympos. viii. 11, τεκμαίρομαι τῇ τοῦ ἐρωμένου καλοκαγαθίᾳ, καὶ ὅτι σε ὁρῶ τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ παραλαμβάνοντα εἰς τὰς πρὸς τοῦτον συνουσίας.

ἀκμάζοντες ἦσαν] Some critics would read ἦϊσαν, from Suidas and Photius, or ἦσαν, as standing for ἦϊσαν; a reading adopted by Bekk. in his latest edition. Goell., however, determines that Attic usage would rather require ἦεσαν; a somewhat hypercritical distinction. For my own part, I have chosen, from deference to the authority of these eminent editors and critics, Poppo and Goell., and from internal evidence, rather than from regard to the authority of MSS. (which, in so minute a variation, is of slender weight) to retain the common reading, according to which the sense may be thus expressed, 'conjecturing this from the circumstance that (an idiom also occurring infra iv. 123, and found in Dion. Hal. Ant. vi. p. 1166, 5, τεκμαιρόμενος ὅτι, &c. and Dio Cass. often) both [parties] were at the height (i. e. highest state) of preparation for it,' meaning, that they were fully provided with all resources for it; so corresponding to a similar expression infra ii. 8, ἐῤῥῶντα ἐς τὸν πόλεμον. A better sense, indeed, and one more significant, is yielded by the reading ᾖσαν, in support of which may be adduced a passage infra i. 122, θαρσοῦντας ἴέναι ἐς πόλεμον. But this,—besides that it is weak in external authority and philological support,—involves a somewhat harsh transposition; and hence it is better to retain the common reading. In ἀκμάζοντες τῇ παρασκευῇ we have a form of expression corresponding to others elsewhere

τε †ἦσαν ἐς αὐτὸν ἀμφότεροι παρασκευῇ τῇ πάσῃ, καὶ τὸ ἄλλο Ἑλληνικὸν ὁρῶν ξυνιστάμενον πρὸς ἑκατέρους, τὸ μὲν εὐθὺς, τὸ δὲ καὶ διανοούμενον. 2. κίνησις γὰρ αὕτη μεγίστη δὴ τοῖς Ἕλλησιν ἐγένετο, καὶ μέρει τινὶ τῶν βαρβάρων, ὡς δὲ εἰπεῖν καὶ ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἀνθρώπων. 3. τὰ γὰρ πρὸ αὐτῶν, καὶ τὰ ἔτι παλαιότερα, σαφῶς μὲν εὑρεῖν, διὰ χρόνου πλῆθος, ἀδύνατα ἦν· ἐκ δὲ τεκμηρίων, ὧν ἐπὶ

τὸ ἄ. Ἑλληνικὸν] for οἱ ἄλλοι Ἕλληνες, says Goell., and also Matthiæ in his Gr. § 267, who ranks this under the rule of adjectives in ικὸς in the neuter, which express a whole, as τὸ πολιτικὸν for οἱ πολῖται, τὸ Δωρικὸν, τὸ βαρβαρικὸν, &c. Yet without reason is it that he makes the article necessary to this idiom; for it is sometimes found in our author without it. So infra vii. 44, we have, καὶ ὅσον Δωρικὸν μετ' Ἀθηναίων ἦν.

ξυνιστάμενον] 'ranging itself.' Διαν. Supply ξυνίστασθαι, from ξυνιστάμενον preceding.

2. κίνησις] A term, like motus in Latin, used to denote, not the war of one nation with another, but rather civil commotion or war between different provinces or districts of the same nation. So in Herodian vi. 3, 3 (a passage evidently imitated from the present), we have: κίνησίς τε μεγίστη πᾶσι τῆς ὑπὸ Ῥωμαίοις ἐγένετο, and i. 7, 1, κίνησις δὴ μεγίστη. Appian, tom. i. 825, 4. Jos. Bell. Jud. procem. Before κίνησις we have no article, because, as Goell. observes, the subst. obtains the place of the predicate, and αὕτη of the subject. Δὴ, when used, as here, with superlatives and words which partake of the nature of superlatives, has an intensive force. See Hoogev. de Part. p. 153, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 603.

On the sense of these words, κίνησις γὰρ αὕτη—ἀνθρώπων, some doubt exists. The question is, whether the assertion in κίνησις—ἐγένετο is meant to be confined to τοῖς Ἕλλησιν, or to be extended further; and if so, how far. Now the construction requires it to be extended to μέρει τινὶ τῶν βαρβάρων, (a form of expression similar to another at c. xxiii. and l. vii. 30,) and of which the sense is, 'to some considerable portion of the barbarians or those not Greeks.' (See my Lex. New Test. on the word βάρβαρος.) Nor is there any thing in the truth of history, at least Thucydidean history, to forbid this; since our author at c. xxiii. expressly calls the Peloponnesian war greater than the Persian. But further than this, the assertion need not, by the construction, be extended; for the words ὡς εἰπεῖν—ἀνθρώπων may be rendered, 'extending, too, I had almost said, even to the greater part of the human race.' Of course we are to suppose an ellipsis of some verb of motion, as ἐξέρχεσθαι, or some verb denoting extent, as διήκω; which, I would observe, is the less harsh, since, from the phrase ἐπὶ πλεῖστον (scil. διάστημα), almost necessarily involving the idea of motion as well as distance, it may very well be supposed understood. Of such a verb of motion expressed, we have an example at i. 70, ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἐξέρχονται; and of a verb of extent, both expressed and left to be supplied, two examples occur, i. 50, and iv. 3. Finally, the genit. ἀνθρώπων may be accounted for by considering ἐπὶ πλεῖστον, or ἐπιπλεῖστον, as, in effect, an adverb, and, like other adverbs of distance, as ἐκὰς, πρόσω, &c., followed by a subst. in the genit. Accordingly ἐπιπλ. ἀνθρώπων is well compared by Poppo with the Latin phrase longissimè gentium.

3. τὰ πρὸ αὐτῶν] Scil. τῶν πραγμάτων (so τὰ τοῦ πολέμου); meaning the Persian and the Trojan wars; and by τὰ ἔτι παλαιότερα those of the heroic ages.

This idiom (on which see Matth. Gr. § 448) has place especially in the present adjective ἀδύνατος (e. g. infra i. 59. iii. 88), and it is not unfrequent in verbals in τέος and ιμος. Finally, while frequent in the imitators of Thucydides, especially Procop., Dio Cass., Joseph., and Arrian, it occurs also in other writers besides those of the Attic Greek, being found in Herod. i. 91. iii. 82. iii. 104. vi. 31. v. 121; Pind. Ol. i. 83, ἐμοὶ δ' ἄπορα. And formed on this is the similar idiom, Virg. Æn. i. 667, nota tibi.

ὧν] Here Schaefer, Poppo, and Goell. would repeat ἐξ, from the preceding ἐκ; and so at i. 28, we have: παρὰ πόλεσιν αἷς ἂν ἀμφότεροι ξυμβῶσιν; where at αἷς must be repeated παρά. Poppo, in his Supplement, says, 'per schema κατὰ κοινοῦ explicanda verba.'

Of ἐπὶ μακρότατον σκοποῦντι, the sense

ιακρότατον σκοποῦντί μοι πιστεῦσαι ξυμβαίνει, οὐ μεγάλα νομίζω γενέσθαι, οὔτε κατὰ τοὺς πολέμους, οὔτε ἐς τὰ ἄλλα. II. Φαίνεται γὰρ ἡ νῦν Ἑλλὰς καλουμένη οὐ πάλαι βεβαίως οἰκουμένη, ἀλλὰ μεταναστάσεις τε οὖσαι τὰ πρότερα, καὶ ῥᾳδίως ἕκαστοι τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἀπολείποντες, βιαζόμενοι ὑπό τινων ἀεὶ πλειόνων· 2. τῆς γὰρ ἐμπορίας οὐκ οὔσης, οὐδ' ἐπιμιγνύντες ἀδεῶς ἀλλήλοις, οὔτε κατὰ γῆν οὔτε διὰ θαλάσσης, νεμόμενοί τε τὰ αὑτῶν ἕκαστοι is, 'going back as far as possible in my inquiry.' Compare Herodot. iv. 16, ὅσον μὲν ἡμεῖς ἀτρεκέως ἐπὶ μακρότατον οἷοί τ' ἐγενόμεθα ἀκοῇ ἐξικέσθαι, πᾶν εἰρήσεται. The meaning of the whole sentence is, 'But, as far as any evidence which, on the most extensive examination, have chanced to obtain my confidence,' &c.

μεγάλα] This is to be referred to the τὰ (scil. πράγματα) preceding. Οὔτε ἐς τὰ ἄλλα, 'nor in respect of other things.' Of εἰς in the sense quod attinet ad, see Matth. Gr. § 578.

Ch. II. 1. Now is subjoined a proof of the foregoing assertion, founded on the ascertained fact, that the earliest state of Greece was one of utter barbarism, its inhabitants being merely migratory tribes. Accordingly the ancient state of Greece is treated of, c. ii—xix.; and first, that which subsisted prior to the Trojan war, ii—viii.

φαίνεται] 'it is clearly ascertained.' Such is the sense which the term bears, when joined with a nomin. of the subject, being construed with both participles and substantives. See Matth. Gr. § 549, 5.

βεβαίως] 'constantly, in a settled manner.' So Aristid. t. i. 194, βεβαίως ᾠκίσθη. Dion. Hal. t. i. 8, Sylb. μηδεμίαν γῆν βεβαίως ὡς πατρίδα κατοικοῦσι. Jos. Ant. xiv. 5, 3, βεβαίως οἰκηθῆναι συνέβαινε τὰς πόλεις.

μεταναστάσεις τε οὖσαι] Repeat φαίνονται from the preceding. Μετανάστασις denotes transmigration, change of residence by emigration, whether voluntary or involuntary, as opposed to ἀπανάστασις, an abandonment of one's residence, chiefly compulsory.

For μεταναστάσεις τε οὖσαι, some critics read, from MSS., μετανάστης τε οὖσα. But though that be elegant, and was probably read by Joseph. in his Bell. v. 94, yet the common reading is not only defended by almost all the MSS., but was certainly read by several ancient writers. Finally, besides a similar passage infra ii. 16, οὐ ῥᾳδίως τὰς μεταναστάσεις ποιοῦνται, it is supported by Xen. Mem. iii. 43, 6 (of the Athenians), πολλῶν μὲν μεταναστάσεων ἐν τῇ Ἑλλάδι γεγονυιῶν, διέμειναν ἐν τῇ ἑαυτῶν: and by Diodor. Sic. iii. 433, 6, πολλῶν μεταναστάσεων ἐν αὐτῇ γενομένων. Strabo, l. xii. p. 572, ed. Amst. γενέσθαι τὰς ἐφόδους καὶ τὰς μεταναστάσεις συνέβη, τῶν τε βαρβάρων ἅμα καὶ τῶν Ἑλλήνων ὁρμῇ τινι χρησαμένων πρὸς τὴν τῆς ἀλλοτρίας κατάστασιν. The word μετανάστασις is rare, and it would not be easy to add to the above examples (except Philo Jud. ap. Steph. Thes.), for though I have noted the word as occurring in Dion. Hal. t. i. 703, Sylb., yet there the context requires μετάστασει, which is found in Thucyd. and the best writers. Also in Ocellus Luc. c. 3, p. 37, ed. Rudolph. πολλάκις γὰρ ἤδη καὶ γέγονε καὶ ἔσεται βάρβαρος ἀ Ἑλλάς· οὐχ ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων μόνον γιγνομένα μετανάστασις. But there is there a manifest corruption in μεταν., for which Gale would read μετάστατος, Heeren μετανάστατος, both terms of slender authority, and too far receding from the literarum vestigia. I propose μετανάστις, the feminine form of μετανάστης.

βιαζόμενοι—πλειόνων] 'compelled by such as might successfully invade them in superior numbers.' That commerce by sea did not subsist, arose from the prevalence of piracy.

2. ἐμπορίας] Meaning maritime commerce; for of land traffic there was no want, especially to cities situated in a thoroughfare, like Corinth. Ἐπιμιγνύντες must be taken in a neuter sense, as in our mix. So i. 13, παρ' ἀλλήλους ἐπιμισγόντων. Philostrat. in Vit. Apoll. lib. v. 24, πολλῶν ἐπιμιγνύντων δεῦρο. Hence in Joseph. Ant. xiii. 3, 3, διὰ τὴν ἀμιξίαν οὐκ ἐφιενούμενοι πρὸς ἄλλους, read, with the best MSS., ἐπιμιγνύμενοι. We may observe the varied construction of the long sentence, τῆς γὰρ ἐμπορίας—παρασκευῇ; and the slight confusion arising from the οὐκ—οὐδὲ—οὔτε—τε. Moreover, ἐπιμιγνύντες would, by the οὐδὲ, seem to be a nominativus pendens, though from its connexion with νεμόμενοι following, by means of τε, it is made a nominative to the verb ἀπανίσταντο.

νεμόμενοι] 'occupying, living on.' Ὅσον

ἀποζῆν, 'so far only as to supply them with a bare subsistence.' That such is the full sense, (there being here, as often after ὅσον, an ellips. of μόνον,) and not that assigned by Schaefer, Goell., and Arnold, 'getting a living from, living on them,' is plain from the context, and is confirmed by various passages of ancient writers who have borrowed the expression in question, evidently understanding it in the foregoing sense; e. g. Dio Cass. 1227, 77, γράμματα ὅσον ἀποζῆν ἠσκημένοι. Max. Tyr. Diss. xx. p. 206, μὴ ἐμπιπλαμένῳ, ἀλλ' ὅσον ἀποζῆν. Liban. Orat. 326, μόλις ἔχουσιν ὅσον ἀποζῆν. and 509, A. 554, B. Theoph. Sim. 13, D. ὅσον ἀποζῆν ἐθησαυρίζοντο. Procop. 281. Lucian ii. 563. iii. 293, 374. Phil. Jud. 455. Agath. 125. Sometimes the μόνον is expressed, as Plato Protag. 342, D. Sozom. vi. 33, νέμονται τὴν γῆν, μόνον τὸ ζῆν ἐντεῦθεν (for ἀποζῆν) ποριζόμενοι: Theoph. Sim. 83, εἰς ὅσα ἀποζῆν οἰκονομοῦσι τὰ παρεχόμενα, where for ὅσα I conjecture ὅσον, as at 126, εἰς ὅσον ἀπεχρῆν (I conj. ἀποζῆν) τράπεζαν παρεχόμενα. Finally, the form εἰς τὸ ἀποζῆν is found in Procop. Hist. 113, 10. Arc. Hist. 104.

περιουσίαν χρημάτων] 'Superabundance of goods, wealth, or property of every kind, not money only.' See note at iii. 74. Here, however, pastoral or agricultural wealth must chiefly be meant, as in Xen. An. vi. 6. 15. (Ed. Thiem.) Herodot. ii. 134.

οὐδὲ γῆν φυτεύοντες] 'Not planting,' (namely, vines, olives, or fruit-trees,) but only cultivating the soil, through fear of the fruit-trees being, by the usual practice of war, cut down.

ἄδηλον ὂν ὁπότε] Compare infra viii. 96. Jos. Ant. xviii. 6, 5, et al. Procop. xli. 29. On this idiom of a nomin. absol. for genit. absol. see Matth. Gr. § 564. The words following, καὶ ἀτειχίστων ἅμα ὄντων, are hypo-parenthetical, and consequently τις ἐπελθὼν preceding is closely connected with ἀφαιρήσεται, the sense being, 'should come and take away [their substance].' Also ἄλλος must be construed with τις before, so as to mean quispiam alius, as in Xen. Cyr. iii. 2, 12, ἐγὼ ἐῶσω ὅπου τις καὶ ἄλλος, &c. Here, indeed, Mr. G. Burges, stumbling at so harsh (though Thucydidean) a transposition, proposes to read, ἄλλοσ' for ἄλλος. An emendation strongly countenanced by palæographical reasons; and indeed that the two words have been elsewhere confounded by the scribes, is shown by Bast, in his Lettre, p. 129. But thus, I would observe, the Greek would not be good, and, to express this sense, ἄλλοθεν rather would be required; to which, indeed, some support might be derived from a passage of Hom. Od. vii. 57, εἰ καί ποθεν ἄλλοθεν ἔλθοι. Yet this would wander too far from the literarum vestigia, and, after all, introduce a somewhat forced and frigid sense. Finally, καὶ in this parenthetical sentence has the exact force of our word too; and ἅμα answers to our word withal. At ἀτειχίστων supply αὐτῶν, which may stand, by hypallage, for 'their settlements.'

καθ' ἡμέραν] An adverbial phrase for an adjective, especially occurring in the case of verbs signifying living or livelihood. So Eurip. Elect. 234, ἡπον σπανίζων τοῦ καθ' ἡμέραν βίου. Isocr. de Pace, § 41, ἐπὶ τοῦ βίου τοῦ καθ' ἡμέραν. Alexis ap. Athen. p. 124. A. κἀκ τῆς τροφῆς τῆς καθ' ἡμέραν, &c. Menand. ap. Stob. Sentent. 133, 8, οὐ τῶν ἀναγκαίων καθ' ἡμέραν μόνον Τιμὴν παρασχεῖν δυνατόν. The same expression also occurs in St. Luke, xi. 3, τὸν ἄρτον ἡμῶν τὸν ἐπιούσιον δίδου ἡμῖν, τὸ καθ' ἡμέραν.

οὐ χαλεπῶς ἀπανίσταντο] H. Stephens, after showing that χαλεπῶς has here the two-fold sense, 1. haud difficulter ut facile esset pellentibus eos dimovere; 2. that of haud ægre, ut ipsi prompti abirent—then discusses at large the distinction of sense between these three terms, ἀνίστασθαι, μετανίστασθαι, and ἀπανίστασθαι. Suffice it to say, that while ἀνίστ. carries the general idea of emigrating, whether from force or by choice, (see c. xii.) μεταν. carries that of changing one's residence; and ἀναστ., that of taking oneself off. Lucian, in a passage evidently formed on the present, (vol. iii. 233.) appears to have here read μεταν.; his words being as follows: ῥᾳδίας ποιοῦνται μεταναστάσεις—ἡγούμενοι ἁπανταχοῦ τῶν ἐπιτηδείων εὐπορήσειν. On these perpetual migrations of the early Greeks, see Isocr. Paneg. p. 62, sq. And on the migrations of the ancient world in δι' αὐτὸ οὔτε μεγέθει πόλεων ἴσχυον, οὔτε τῇ ἄλλῃ παρασκευῇ. 3. μάλιστα δὲ τῆς γῆς ἡ ἀρίστη ἀεὶ τὰς μεταβολὰς τῶν οἰκητόρων εἶχεν, ἥ τε νῦν Θεσσαλία καλουμένη, καὶ Βοιωτία, Πελοποννήσου τε τὰ πολλὰ πλὴν Ἀρκαδίας, τῆς τε ἄλλης ὅσα ἦν κράτιστα. 4. διὰ γὰρ ἀρετὴν γῆς αἵ τε δυνάμεις τισὶ μείζους ἐγγιγνόμεναι, στάσεις ἐνεποίουν, ἐξ ὧν ἐφθείροντο, καὶ ἅμα ὑπὸ ἀλλοφύλων μᾶλλον ἐπεβουλεύοντο. 5. τὴν γοῦν Ἀττικὴν, ἐκ τοῦ ἐπὶ πλεῖστον διὰ τὸ λεπτόγεων ἀστασίαστον οὖσαν, ἄνθρωποι ᾤκουν οἱ αὐτοὶ ἀεί. 6. καὶ παράδειγμα τόδε τοῦ λόγου οὐκ ἐλάχιστόν ἐστι, διὰ

παρασκευῇ] Meaning military apparatus.

3. τῆς γῆς ἡ ἀρίστη] On this idiom (by which, instead of adjectives being considered as epithets of substantives, and put in the same case, the substantive considered as the whole, and the adjective the part; and then the substantive is put in the genitive, the adjective having the gender of the substantive), see Matth. Gr. § 442, 2, who has adduced several examples; in addition to which I would add, Dion. Hal. t. i. p. 186, 26. Sylb. τῆς γῆς τὴν κρατίστην.

ἥ τε νῦν Θεσσαλία] For it had formerly the appellation Emathia; (so Catull. Carm. lxv. 26, Emathiæ Columen; Peleu.) and besides this, others also.

4. αἵ τε δυνάμεις—ἐνεποίουν] At ἐνεποίουν is to be supplied αὐτοῖς, from the τισι preceding. And the term ἐμποιεῖν (which is for ποιεῖν ἐν, as Hesiod. Theog. 7, Ἀκροτάτῳ Ἑλικῶνι χοροὺς ἐνεποιήσαντο) has simply the sense 'introduce, occasion among;' as in Plut. vii. 485, Reisk. vi. 100, ἐμποιεῖν τινι κρίσεις φαύλας. Appian. i. 554, ἐμποιεῖν τινι δόξαν. Τισὶ ἐγγιγ. stand for γιγ. ἐν τισί. Render: 'For by the excellence of the soil, the riches of some becoming greater, gave birth to factions, whereby they were brought to ruin.' Of the phrase ἐμποιεῖν στάσεις an example occurs in Isocrates; and in other writers we find the phrases ἐμπ. πολέμους and ἐμποιεῖν ὀργήν.

5. γοῦν] 'For instance.' In this sense, by which is introduced a proof by example, the word often occurs in Thucyd., and other of the best writers.

ἐκ τοῦ ἐπὶ πλεῖστον—οὖσαν] It is best to regard ἐκ τοῦ ἐπὶ πλεῖστον as a single expression, forming a phrase equivalent to ἐξ ἀρχῆς or ἀνέκαθεν, 'from the remotest period.' Thus τὸ ἐπὶ πλεῖστον stands in the place of a subst., like τὸ παρὰ πολὺ, ii. 89, or τὸ ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ in Aristotle and other authors.

διὰ τὸ λεπτόγεων] 'On account of the thinness of the layer of soil,' and its consequent infertility, at least for the growth of corn (in which view compare a passage of the parable of the sower, Mark iv. 5, 6); though olives and figs flourish in such situations. This epithet λεπτ. is one not unfrequently applied to soil, as in Polyæn. vi. 13, πεδίον λ., Theoph. Inst. i. 2. Theophr. H. P. viii. From its barrenness Attica was little troubled by external war, offering slender temptations to invaders; and as little was it harassed by internal faction, there not being here, as in Thessaly and other parts, the OPES irritamenta malorum.

ἄνθρωποι ᾤκουν οἱ αὐτοὶ ἀεὶ] How, it may be asked, could the Athenians be said to be always the same, when there was such an intermixture of foreign blood? It is sufficient, however, to understand the meaning of the author to be, that 'notwithstanding a frequent immigration thither of fresh settlers, yet Attica was so far always inhabited by the same race, inasmuch as there was no emigration to other countries,' as was the case with the rest of Greece. Now the circumstance of their being αὐτοχθόνες was ever the boast of the Athenians. (See infra ii. 36, and notes.) Hence they were often addressed as such, in compliment, by the greatest orators,—as Demosthenes and Lysias in their Funeral Orations, and by Plato in his Menexenus; and, besides these, the dramatic writers; see Eurip. Erecth. 68. Aristoph. Vesp. 1071.

6. καὶ παράδειγμα—αὐξηθῆναι] Render, 'And no stronger proof is there of the truth of this statement, than that those other nations (i. e. those who occupied the more fertile tracts) of Greece did not, on account of their migrations, increase in population equally with Attica.' The construction is as follows: καὶ παράδειγμα τοῦ λόγου, διὰ τὰς μετοικίας ἐς τὰ ἄλλα (scil. μέρη) μὴ ὁμοίως αὐξηθῆναι παράδειγμα οὐκ ἐλάχ. τόδε ἐστίν. But supposing this to be the true construction and sense, the ἐς can by no means have place here, and ought, as Matthæi, Poppo, and Goell. are agreed, to be cancelled; especially as it might easily arise from the ας preceding. If it be retained, we may, with one of the scholiasts and Dr. Arnold, suppose that τὴν Ἑλλάδα is the subject to the verb αὐξηθῆναι; and that ἐς τὰ ἄλλα means, 'in its other parts,' or rather, 'as to its other parts.' Yet as τὴν Ἀττικὴν just preceded, to suppose such to be the subject here, were surely not a little harsh; and indeed the sense thus arising is far too feeble and jejune for a writer like Thucydides. Hence we may best suppose the ἐς to have accidentally crept in. Again, no less harsh were it, after the elliptical μέρη to supply τῆς Ἑλλάδος; since Ἑλλὰς constitutes the main subject of the chapter, and we have τῆς Ἑλλάδος just after; consequently there would be as little propriety as necessity in its being expressed here. Certain it is, that the signification of παράδειγμα is not, as Dr. Arnold interprets, example, but, as often elsewhere, argumentum, proof, literally exemplum ad probandum, as in Plut. vii. 639, Reisk. παράδειγμα δὲ τῷ λόγῳ Ξενοκράτης ἐποιήσατο τὸ τῶν τριγώνων. And such is not unfrequently the sense which the term bears in Plato. By λόγου (which stands for τῶν λεγομένων) is to be understood the statement given a little before in the words οὐ χαλεπῶς—παρασκευῇ: or we may, with Goell., define it 'sententia demonstranda, dictum quod comprobandum auctor supra posuit.' In the next words, ἐκ γὰρ τῆς ἄλλης Ἑλλάδος, the γὰρ 'probat ab exemplo;' a frequent force of this particle, especially in cases where the formula παράδειγμα τόδε or τεκμήριον τόδε has preceded. So infra ii. 39, 2, we have, τεκμήριον δὲ οὔ τε γὰρ, &c. Other examples may be seen in Matth. Gr. § 615 and 630.

ἐκπίπτοντες] 'being banished.' In this passive sense the term is frequent in Thucyd. and his imitators, especially Joseph., Procop., Arrian, and Plutarch. Οἱ πολέμῳ ἐκπίπτοντες οἱ δυνατώτατοι is for οἱ τῶν πολέμῳ ἐκπιπτόντων οἱ δυνατώτατοι. See Matth. Gr. § 319. In ὡς βέβαιον ὂν (where supply τί) we have the nomin. absol. for the genit. absol.; the meaning being, 'as a residence of perfect security [for persons and property];' (lit., 'some stable habitancy.') So the Schol. explains it as put for ὡς βεβαίας οὔσης τῆς οἰκήσεως. Similar is the expression of Jos. Bell. iii. 8, 4, κἂν ᾖ βέβαιον. An example of the τι expressed occurs infra vi. 10, οἴεσθε σπονδὰς ἔχειν τι βέβαιον.

ἀπὸ παλαιοῦ μείζω — πόλιν] Doubtless they mainly contributed thereto; but the chief cause of the early populousness of Attica was, that those who settled there constantly remained, from the perfect security to personal property there enjoyed.

οὐχ ἱκανῆς οὔσης] Supply χωρεῖν αὐτούς. So in Gen. xiii. 6, we have, οὐκ ἐχώρει αὐτοὺς ἡ γῆ. Comp. too Gen. xxxvi. 7. The term occurs, also in the absolute use, vii. 42 and 51.

CH. III. 1. δηλοῖ δέ] The δὲ is resumptive; the subject treated of above, καὶ δι' αὐτὸ, (and which was interrupted by the parenthetical words, μάλιστα δὲ—ἐξέπεμψαν) being here resumed, and another proof of the foregoing assertion now adduced—namely, that they had not in common the very name of Greeks.

ἀσθένειαν] Meaning (according to the acceptation of the word also in Pausan. vii. 17, and Herodot. i. 143.) political inability; chiefly, we may suppose, resulting from the not having the περιουσία χρημάτων before mentioned, by which alone war can be maintained. See infra i. 141, 5, init.

δοκεῖ δέ μοι, &c.] The construction—which is here, as often in Thucyd. varied,—is ably treated of by Goell. as follows: 'Post verbum finitum εἶχε usus est infinitivo cum nominativo εἶναι ἡ ἐπίκλησις, et in fine pro nominativo infert accusativum cum infinitivo: καλεῖσθαι Ἕλληνας. Quod eo factum esse probabile est, quia præcesserunt præpositiones cum accusativis: κατὰ ἔθνη et καθ' ἑκάστους, quæ ipsa verba ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν πρὸ Ἕλληνος τοῦ Δευκαλίωνος καὶ πάνυ οὐδὲ εἶναι ἡ ἐπίκλησις αὕτη, κατὰ ἔθνη δὲ ἄλλα τε καὶ τὸ Πελασγικὸν ἐπὶ πλεῖστον, ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν τὴν ἐπωνυμίαν παρέχεσθαι. 2. Ἕλληνος δὲ καὶ τῶν παίδων αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ Φθιώτιδι ἰσχυσάντων, καὶ ἐπαγομένων αὐτοὺς ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ ἐς τὰς ἄλλας πόλεις, καθ' ἑκάστους μὲν ἤδη τῇ ὁμιλίᾳ μᾶλλον καλεῖσθαι Ἕλληνας· οὐ μέντοι πολλοῦ γε χρόνου ἠδύνατο καὶ ἅπασιν ἐκνικῆσαι. 3. Τεκμηριοῖ δὲ μάλιστα Ὅμηρος· πολλῷ γὰρ ὕστερον ἔτι καὶ τῶν Τρωϊκῶν γενόμενος, οὐδαμοῦ τοὺς ξύμπαντας ὠνόμασεν, οὐδ' ἄλλους ἢ τοὺς μετ' Ἀχιλλέως ἐκ τῆς Φθιώτιδος, οἵπερ καὶ πρῶτοι Ἕλληνες ἦσαν· Δαναοὺς δὲ ἐν τοῖς ἔπεσι, καὶ Ἀργείους, καὶ Ἀχαιοὺς ἀνακαλεῖ. 4. οὐ μὴν οὐδὲ βαρβάρους εἴρηκε διὰ τὸ μηδὲ Ἑλληνάς πω, ὡς ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ, ἀντίπαλον εἰς ἓν ὄνομα ἀποκεκρίσθαι. 5. Οἱ δ' οὖν ὡς ἕκαστοι Ἕλληνες κατὰ

2. ἰσχυσάντων] for δυναστευσάντων: the meaning being, that 'they ruled, as powerful chieftains.' Of the word in this sense, I have noted examples in Diodor. Sic. iii. 432, 4. Æschyl. Pers. 697, ἐκείνοις ἐνδυναστεύσας.

ἐπαγομένων] The word is used impersonally, ἀνθρώπων being understood. This sense of the verb in the middle voice, 'to call to one's assistance,' is found also infra ii. 68. v. 45, and is frequent in Herodotus and Pausanias. It also occurs in Arrian, Joseph., and Procop.

ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ] The term is here and at i. 35. v. 38. vii. 5,—by an usage peculiar to our author,—employed not so much in the general sense benefit, but rather in the special one, aid, succour.

ἐκνικῆσαι] evalescere, to be prevalent: a sense of the word also found in Agath. p. 13, 10, οὐ πολλοῦ δὲ χρόνου οἶμαι, καὶ ἅπασιν ἐκνικῆσαι, and p. 35, 8; Athen. p. 276, E. ἐξενίκησεν ὁ ἰχθὺς οὕτως καλεῖσθαι. It is likewise frequent in Pausan.

3. ἀνακαλεῖ] The ἀνα here has an intensive force, as in ἀναπείθειν, ἀναλίσκειν, &c.

4. βαρβάρους] Meaning non-Greeks. See my Lex. N. T. in v.

μηδὲ — εἷς ἓν ὄνομα ἀποκεκρίσθαι] 'had not yet been distinguished by that one general appellation, in contradistinction to any special one.' Simil. Procop. 118, 30, (by an evident imitation of the present passage) τό τε ὄνομα ἐς αὐτούς πη ἀποκεκρίσθαι scil. οἶμαι.

5. οἱ δ' οὖν ὡς ἕκαστοι — ξυνῆλθον] Render: 'Those several communities of people—such, I mean, as spoke a language mutually understood by each other—who were then separately, and afterwards collectively, called Hellenes, did, through weakness and want of reciprocal communication, effect nothing by joint effort before the Trojan war. Nay, it was only after a greater attention to nautical affairs, that they combined together even unto that expedition.' The construction and sense in this passage are much cleared by considering (as I have done) the words ὅσοι ἀλλήλων ξυνίεσαν as parenthetical; a view, I find, also adopted by Goell. In this same sense the expression occurs in Herodot. iv. 110 and 114. At στρατείαν ξυνῆλθον the construction is so harsh, that one might, with Mr. Burges, here suspect some corruption. Instead of τὴν στρατείαν might with some probability be conjectured τῇ στρατείᾳ (the ν and ι adscript being very frequently confounded); by which the dat. would stand for the accus. with εἰς, as in Eurip. Dan. 28, εὐνῇ συνελθεῖν ἠβούλετο. And that Thucyd. did so write I should be strongly inclined to think, were it not for certain passages in which I have found a construction similar to the present, e. gr. Soph. Aj. 486, ἐπεὶ Τὸ σὸν λέχος ξυνῆλθον, where Hermann very properly explains it as put for τὸ σὸν λέχος ξυνελθοῦσά σοι ἔσχον, and compares a similar form of expression in Hom. Il. I. 31, ἐμὸν λέχος ἀντιόωσαν, where there is, as here, a certain modesty of speaking, for ἐμοὶ λέχους ἀντ. He might also have adduced a passage of Eurip. Phœn. 831, ἡ δὲ σύναιμον λέχος ἦλθεν, where the old reading, as found in many MSS., was σ. εἰς λέχος. And there certainly we have an ellipsis of εἰς; which might, indeed, be supposed in the present case, were it not for the ξυν. As it is, we may best here, as in the passage of Soph. above cited, suppose a blending of two modes of expression, ξυνελθεῖν τὸ εἰς τι, and ξ. τι, when the εἰς being omitted, the verb comes to have the general sense of doing the action expressed or implied in the context. Thus the words here may be understood as though the author had written στρατείαν ξυνελθόντες ἐποιήσαντο. Render: 'Nay they only conjointly undertook the expedition against Troy, because they were by this time become more familiar (or conversant) with the sea than formerly.' Here I have, with Bekk., Pop., and Goell., edited, from almost all the best MSS., πλείῳ, instead of the common reading τὸ πλείω, which would only mean plerumque, (as in Æschyl. Theb. 23.) or sæpe, (as often in Plato); whereas πλείω will mean 'magis [quam antea].' Πλείω is, indeed, Attic Greek for πλεῖον, as in Eurip. Heracl. 258, τοῦ θεοῦ πλείω φρονῶν: Polyb. iv. 36, where πλείονα is to be understood absol. for magis; so Plato 45, C., πλείω χαίρουσιν οἱ νοσοῦντες τῶν ὑγιαινόντων: and 417, B. πλείω καὶ μᾶλλον.

Ch. IV. 1. Μίνως γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ is both inchoative and ratiocinative. See Hoogev. Part. The Schol. remarks, that 'by three comparisons Thucydides shows the slender power of the times which preceded the Peloponnesian war; first, by comparison with the period before Minos; secondly, with that from his age to the Trojan war; and thirdly, from thence to his own times.'

παλαίτατος—ἐκτήσατο, &c.] Thus in a similar passage of Herodot. i. 14, we have: πρῶτος βαρβάρων τῶν ἴδμεν — ἀνέθηκε ἀναθήματα. And so in Latin writers, primus hoc fecit. Ναυτικὸν, 'a navy,' subst.; as infra 13, and vii. 7, and often in Dio Cass. This form of expression rarely occurs in other writers; though I have met with it occasionally in Aristotle.

ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἐκράτησε·] 'held a very extensive mastery.' So Callimachus, cited by Cyrill. adv. Julian. I. p. 191, καὶ νήσων ἐπέτεινε βαρὺν ζυγὸν αὐχένι Μίνως. By the Grecian sea is meant the Archipelago.

Κυκλάδων] So called, as forming a sort of circle round Delos.

τοὺς ἑαυτοῦ παῖδας ἡγ. ἐγκαταστήσας·] Similar to this is an expression in Ps. xlv. 17, where the Sept. has: ἀντὶ τῶν πατέρων σου ἐγενήθησαν υἱοί· καταστήσεις αὐτοὺς ἄρχοντας ἐπὶ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν· where for σου ἐγενήθησαν, I conjecture the true reading to be, γενηθήσονταί σοι, and for πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν, πάσης τῆς γῆς.

τό τε λῃστικὸν—καθῄρει ἐκ τῆς θαλ.] 'he swept away piracy from the sea,' cleared the sea of piracy. Καθῄρει, for ἐξῄρει, ἠφάνιζε. See Schol. on Eurip. Hipp. 18. So Dio Cass. 807, 51, λῃστρικά τινα—καθῄρουν. Dion. Hal. Ant. i. 12, init. ἀνακαθῄρας τὸ βάρβαρον ἐκ μέρους τινὸς αὐτῆς, &c. Polyæn. v. 14, τὰ λῃστικὰ τῆς θαλάσσης ἀναιρῶν, for καθαιρῶν. The form λῃστρικὸς, found in several inferior MSS., is one of later Grecism, for the earlier λῃστικός.

ὡς εἰκὸς] 'as it was likely [he would];' or, 'as it is likely,' according to the sense of the phrase in Xen. Cyr. ii. 1, 2.

τοῦ τὰς προσόδους, &c.] At τοῦ, ἕνεκα or ὑπὲρ is to be understood; on which see Matth. Gr. § 540, 1. Here ἰέναι is used in the acceptation of our verb to come in, whence the subst. income. In the same sense the word also occurs infra ii. 13, and προσιέναι elsewhere.

Ch. V. 1. Οἱ γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ is explicative (having the sense of nimirum in Latin), and serves to introduce the cause and origin of piracy.

οἱ Ἕλληνες — καὶ τῶν βαρβάρων, &c.] The vain distinction which the Greeks thus drew between themselves and ἠπείρῳ παραθαλάσσιοι καὶ ὅσοι νήσους εἶχον, ἐπειδὴ ἤρξαντο μᾶλλον περαιοῦσθαι ναυσὶν ἐπ᾽ ἀλλήλους, ἐτράποντο πρὸς λῃστείαν, ἡγουμένων ἀνδρῶν οὐ τῶν ἀδυνατωτάτων, κέρδους τοῦ σφετέρου αὐτῶν ἕνεκα καὶ τοῖς ἀσθενέσι τροφῆς· καὶ προσπίπτοντες πόλεσιν ἀτειχίστοις καὶ κατὰ κώμας οἰκουμέναις ἥρπαζον, καὶ τὸν πλεῖστον τοῦ other nations, has been often remarked. This I am inclined to think they derived, together with many other usages, from Egypt: for Herodotus tells us, ii. 158, βαρβάρους δὲ πάντας οἱ Αἰγύπτιοι καλέουσι τοὺς μή σφι ὁμογλώσσους.

μᾶλλον περαιοῦσθαι ναυσὶν] i. e. 'to hold more intercourse by shipping,' lit. 'to cross the sea more to each other'; in which sort of phrase the word πόντον or θάλασσαν is sometimes expressed. Of the exact phrase ναυσὶν περαιοῦσθαι, I have noted no example elsewhere. The nearest approach to it is in κατὰ θάλασσαν περαιοῦσθαι infra i. 26.

ἐτράποντο πρὸς λῃστείαν] 'betook themselves to piracy.' So Liban. Or. p. 124, B. τὰ πρῶτα ἔργα τῶν νεῶν λῃστεῖαι καὶ διαρπάζειν τὰ ἀλλήλων. Herodotus, indeed, ii. 152, attempts to extenuate the guilt, by pleading the excuse of necessity: ἀναγκαίη κατέλαβε Ἰωνάς τε καὶ Κᾶρας ἄνδρας κατὰ λῆϊν ἐκπλώσαντας. Piracy would seem indeed to have been produced by peculiar circumstances, and, as in the case of the northern European nations, to have grown up together with commerce; or rather (to use the words of Dr. Southey, Naval Hist. of England, vol. i. p. 139) 'commerce may be said to have originated from piracy, the civilizing consequence of a barbarous cause.' In fact, as Mr. Mitford observes, 'Greece, in its early days, was in a state of perpetual marauding and piratical warfare. Cattle, as the great means of subsistence, were first the great object of plunder. Then, as the inhabitants of some parts by degrees settled to agriculture, men, women, and children were sought for slaves. But Greece had nothing more peculiar than its adjacent sea; where small islands were so thickly scattered, that their inhabitants, and in some measure those of the shores of the surrounding continent also, were mariners by necessity, and almost by nature. Water-expeditions, therefore, were soon found most commodious for carrying off spoils.'

τοῖς ἀσθενέσι] 'the poorer sort of persons,' persons of slender means: a signification of the word not sufficiently known or attended to, but of which no unimportant illustration is supplied by the following passages, in which I have noted its occurrence: Eurip. Suppl. 433, ὅ τ᾽ ἀσθενὴς, ὁ πλούσιός τε. Herodot. ii. 47, οἱ δὲ πένητες αὐτῶν ὑπ᾽ ἀσθενείης βίου, and viii. 5. Aristoph. Pac. 635, τοὺς πένητας ἀσθενοῦντας κἀποροῦντας ἀλφίτων. Eurip. El. 39, ἀσθενεῖ δούς. Eurip. Plisth. frag. vi. ὁ γὰρ πᾶς ἀσθενὴς αἰὼν βροτοῖς, where I would propose to amend the acknowledged corruption which there exists, by reading for the above, ὁ γὰρ πᾶσ᾽ ἀσθενέσιν ἀγὼν β. Thus the meaning will be, that 'to all persons of slender means there is a great struggle,' namely, to live (similarly, as it is said, Prov. xvi. 26, 'He that laboureth, laboureth for himself; for his mouth craveth it of him;' where the Sept. has ἐκβιάζεται). Moreover, in the foregoing lines, Ὦ πλοῦθ᾽, ὅσῳ μὲν ῥᾷστον εἰ βάρος φέρειν· Πόνοι δὲ κἀν σοὶ καὶ φθοραὶ πολλαὶ βίου Ἔνεισ᾽, I would point φέρειν; and, for ὅσῳ, I would read ὅσον, quantum, quàm, 'how very easy to be borne!' Similar is the use of ὅσον πλεῖστον in Dionys. Hal. i. 510, 527, 561.

ἀτειχίστοις] 'unwalled.' So supra, c. 2, ἀτειχίστων ὄντων. By the words following, κατὰ κώμας οἰκουμέναις, it is intimated that these cities, or rather towns, were built (like almost all the ancient ones) scatteringly, 'sparsis domibus et disjectis' (to use the words of Tacitus), so as to appear rather an assemblage of several villages, than a city. Sparta exactly answered to this description, as also did Mantinea, Tegea, &c.

With the phrase κατὰ κώμας οἰκ., compare similar ones elsewhere: Diod. Sic. iii. 260, κωμηδὸν οἰκεῖν. Pausan. ix. 5, 4, κατὰ κώμας ἔτι ἦσαν αἱ οἰκήσεις, and ix. 14, 2, Μαντινέας κατὰ κώμας διῳκισμένους. The expression seems to have been originally derived from Herodot. i. 96, 5, κατοικημένων τῶν Μήδων κατὰ κώμας. Both these expressions, ἀτειχίστ. and κατὰ κώμας οἰκ., occur infra l. iii. ᾤκουν δὲ (scil. πόλεις) κατὰ κώμας ἀτειχίστους; and by an evident imitation of the latter passage, Polyb. ii. 17, 9, has: ᾤκουν κατὰ κώμας ἀτειχίστους, where the true reading, I doubt not, is ἀτειχίστως. Indeed of the phrase

οἰκεῖν ἀτειχίστως an example occurs in Philostr. Vit. Ap. iii. 15. Finally, hence may be illustrated an obscurely expressed passage of Dion. Hal. Ant. i. 12 (evidently formed on this of our author), ᾤκισε πόλεις μικρὰς καὶ συνεχεῖς, ὥσπερ ἦν τοῖς παλαιοῖς τρόπος οἰκήσεως συνήθης, where for οἰκήσεως I conjecture the true reading to be οἰκίσεως; also for καὶ συνεχεῖς, which words have no tolerable sense as referred to in ὥσπερ ἦν—συνήθης, I would read κοὐσ., by which the meaning will be, 'not continuously built, but sparsè.' And so at c. 10, we have mutually opposed ξυνοικισθεῖσα πόλις and κατὰ κώμας τῷ παλαιῷ τρόπῳ οἰκισθεῖσα, which passage of our author was doubtless in the mind of Dion. Hal. in writing the above words.

οὐκ ἔχοντός πω αἰσχύνην] 'not bringing shame.' So Herodotus iii. 133, ὅσα αἰσχύνην ἐστὶ φέροντα. Plat. Men. 19, ἡ νίκη αἰσχύνην φέρει.

φέροντος δέ τι καὶ δόξης μ.] 'but carrying with it rather somewhat of glory.' So Plut. Pomp. 24, ὡς καὶ δόξαν τινὰ τοῦ ἔργου φέροντος. Procop. Bell. G. ii. 14, et al.

2. οἷς κόσμος καλῶς τοῦτο δρᾶν] Subst. for adj., as in our old English idiom, 'it is a credit to do' this or that. Of the term following, καλῶς, the import has been somewhat disputed. The Schol., in explaining it εὐσεβῶς, φιλανθρώπως, offers what is rather a specious gloss than a well authorized sense. Not without reason have the best commentators, from Stephens to Poppo, preferred to explain it peritè; though without adducing any examples of the word so used, or showing on what grounds it will bear such a sense. As throwing some light on this peculiar use, I would notice a striking parallel to it, found in our English word handsomely, as used (by an exactly similar shade of signification) in the acceptation dexterously; a use of the word (I would observe) no other than what may be called the proper and primitive one, handsome being derived from the Dutch handsaem, dexterous, lit. handy. So in a passage of Spenser (adduced by Johnson, Eng. Dict.) we have: 'Under it he may convey any fit pillage that cometh handsomely in his way.' And in another of Waller: 'Becomes unhandsome, handsomely to 'scape.' Finally, much the same sense will arise by rendering the expression, with Stephens, benè; since a deed may be said to be done καλῶς, when performed suitably to the object in view. And so, Xen. Cyr. iii. 3, 24, we have: ᾄσμα καλῶς ᾄσθὲν εἰς μουσικὴν, ex artis legibus. Such, too, is the sense meant to be conveyed by a not dissimilar term, St. Luke xvi. 8, ἐπήνεσε—ὅτι φρονίμως ἐποίησε, i. e. by a prudent adaptation of means to an end.

οἱ παλαιοὶ τῶν ποιητῶν] for οἱ παλαιοὶ ποιηταὶ, by an idiom not unfrequent, on which see Matth. Gr. § 60.

τὰς πύστεις — ἐρωτῶντες] Πύστις is an old Attic word almost peculiar to our author; though I have noted it once in Æschyl. and once in Eurip. Τῶν καταπλεόντων, 'of those mariners who touch at any port or make the land:' an expression not unfrequent in Thucyd. Of ἐρωτῶντες the sense is (by an idiom like that of πεποίηκε, c. 10, where see note) 'introducing them as asking.' See Hom. Od. iii. 71, and other passages cited by me on Transl.

ὡς οὔτε ὧν] Ὡς here stands for ὥσπερ, as though. Ἀπαξιούντων, dedignantibus, 'esteeming it unworthy of them' (as in Cicero, Indignor aliquid), or aspernantibus (in which sense the word occurs in Plut. vii. 72, 1, ἀπ. τὴν κακίαν) or, perhaps, renuentibus, disavowing. And so Gloss. ἀπαξιῶν, renuens.

οἷς τ᾽ ἐπιμελὲς εἴη εἰδέναι] 'those who might make it their business to know.' So Xen. Mem. iv. 7, οἷς ἐπιμελὲς ταῦτα εἰδέναι. Dion. Hal. i. 220, 19, Sylb. οἷς ἐπιμελὲς, &c. Herodot. ii. 150. Of the form οὐκ ἀμελὲς (though unnoticed by philologists) I have noted the occurrence in two passages, Synes. Epist. p. 171, D. ἐμοὶ γὰρ οὐκ ἀμελὲς ἐστιν εἰδέναι, &c. Pausan. ix. 2, 2. On the form οὔτε—τε οὐ, see Matth. Gr. § 639.

3. καὶ μέχρι τεῦδε] 'nay, until this day.'

παλαιῷ τρόπῳ νέμεται, περί τε Λοκροὺς τοὺς Ὀζόλας, καὶ Αἰτωλοὺς, καὶ Ἀκαρνᾶνας, καὶ τὴν ταύτῃ ἤπειρον. τό τε σιδηροφορεῖσθαι τούτοις τοῖς ἠπειρώταις ἀπὸ τῆς παλαιᾶς λῃστείας ἐμμεμένηκε. VI. Πᾶσα γὰρ ἡ Ἑλλὰς ἐσιδηροφόρει, διὰ τὰς ἀφράκτους τε οἰκήσεις, καὶ οὐκ ἀσφαλεῖς παρ' ἀλλήλους ἐφόδους· καὶ ξυνήθη τὴν δίαιταν μεθ' ὅπλων ἐποιήσαντο, ὥσπερ οἱ βάρβαροι. 2. σημεῖον δ' ἐστὶ ταῦτα τῆς Ἑλλάδος, ἔτι οὕτω νεμόμενα, τῶν ποτὲ καὶ ἐς πάντας παλαιῷ τρόπῳ νέμεται] 'are inhabited in the old [predatory] manner.' This sense of the verb in the passive form is rare; while that in the middle is not unfrequent. The general meaning, however, here intended to be expressed, is not so much that of inhabiting, as of living, as regards manners and customs (and therefore the sense is not ill represented by the version of Stephens in his Thes. in voc., 'in multis Græciæ locis mores antiqui coluntur'), by which are especially to be understood, the manners and customs which prevail in society and government. The only other example I have met with of this passive form, and in the above sense, is in Æschyl. Suppl. 684 (Schutz), ὡς πόλις εὖ νέμοιτο, for οἰκοῖτο, as standing for διοικοῖτο. See Note on ii. 37, 1. Of the active form in this sense, an example occurs in Æschyl. Eum. 879, Παλλάδος πόλιν νέμοντες.

Αἰτωλοὺς] These were infamous for piracy. See Polyæn. iv. 6, 18. Max. Tyr. Diss. xxiii. 2. Polyb. iv. 37, 7.

τό τε σιδηροφορεῖσθαι, &c.] Render: 'The being armed [while engaged in the ordinary occupations of life] has continued in use with those continental nations from the old piratical mode of life;' inasmuch as arms were necessarily worn not only by pirates and freebooters, but by all persons who meant to defend themselves and secure their property, even peasants—a state of society which even now exists in several parts of Asia, especially Turkey, Hindostan, and Circassia. So Dr. Clarke, in his Travels, says that 'among the Circassians the labours of the plough become a warlike occupation, and the sower goes to cast his grain attended by his sabre and his fusil.'

Ch. VI. 1. ἐσιδηροφόρει] 'wore arms.' Of this verb in the active voice frequent examples occur in Diod., Plut., Appian, and Max. Tyr. In the passive form I have met with it no where except in the preceding chapter and in a passage of Aristot. Pol. ii. 6, 9, τοὺς γὰρ ἀρχαίους νόμους λίαν ἁπλοῦς εἶναι καὶ βαρβαρικούς· ἐσιδηροφορουντο γὰρ οἱ Ἕλληνες, where the writer had evidently in mind the above passage of Thucyd. If it be asked why our author chose to adopt the passive form in the one case, and not the active, as in the other, I answer, because he meant to express not the sense gestare arma (as the Latin translators render the term), but armari, the being armed or furnished with weapons of defence. And so, I would observe, the Latin armari, a word equally rare, occurs in Plin. H. N. xi. 28, apes armantur aculeis. This custom of wearing arms had, by the time of Thucyd., grown into general disuse. A similar cause to that which first originated it (namely, mutual fear), again introduced it about the year B. C. 250, as appears from Plut. Arat. c. vi.

διὰ τὰς ἀφράκτους οἰκήσεις] This is usually understood to mean, that the houses were unfenced: but that houses were ever fenced, is, I believe, more than we any where read of either in history or antiquities. Hence it will be best to suppose οἴκησις here used (as infra vi. 88, αὐτόνομοι αἱ οἰκήσεις) for οἰκητήρια, in the sense domicilia, or sedes. So Plutarch viii. 377, says of Thuria: Ὡρίωνος ἦν οἰκητήριον, and in his Symp. V. of Galepsus, κοινὸν οἰκητήριον τῆς Ἑλλάδος. Similarly, too, we have in Pausan. ix. 5, 1, Ἄοσι κατὰ κώμας ἔτι ἦσαν οἰκήσεις. By employing the term in question, our author means to represent these habitation-places as mere oppidula or viculi, agreeably to what was said supra § 1, πόλεσιν ἀτειχίστοις καὶ κατὰ κώμας οἰκουμέναις: namely, towns composed of an assemblage of open villages or scattered hamlets.

οὐκ ἀσφαλεῖς] 'not safe,' namely, from the robbers who infested all the frequented roads: a state of society like that described, Judg. v. 6, 'the highways were unoccupied, and the travellers walked (or rather, went) through by-paths.'

ξυνήθη] Adj. for adv. ξυνήθως. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 446, 8. Μεθ' ὅπλων, for ἐνόπλοι or ἐν ὅπλοις, as Hdian. vi. 9, 10.

ὁμοίων διαιτημάτων. 3. ἐν τοῖς πρῶτοι δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι τόν τε σίδηρον κατέθεντο, καὶ ἀνειμένῃ τῇ διαίτῃ ἐς τὸ τρυφερώτερον μετέστησαν. καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι αὐτοῖς τῶν εὐδαιμόνων, διὰ τὸ ἁβροδίαιτον, οὐ

2. διαιτημάτων] vitæ rationum, as Herodot. ii. 36, 11. At ἐς πάντας ὁμοίων διαιτ. the ἐς is not to be taken in the sense apud, but per, as denoting extent. The phraseology here is very elliptical, and if expressed at full length, the words would stand thus: τῶν ποτὲ καὶ ἐς πάντας ὁμοίως διαιτημάτων διατείνοντα, 'extending alike to all.' Accordingly, in a passage of Procop. p. 321, 30, evidently imitated from the present, we have: τὰ δὲ ἐπιτηδεύματα μέχρι ἐς τοὺς ἀπογόνους παραπεμπόμενα τῶν προγεγενημένων τῆς φύσεως ἴνδαλμα γίνεται.

3. ἐν τοῖς πρῶτοι, &c.] There is here a certain peculiarity of idiom, such as occurs also infra iii. 17, 81, and vii. 24, and has been ably treated on by Hermann on Viger, 787, 250; Matth. Gr. § 290; and Kühner, Gr. § 591, 2. It is commonly explained on the supposition that the dative case of the superl. would be added if the sentence were given at full length, namely, ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις πρῶτοι. Dr. Arnold thinks that in its actual usage it is to be considered as one word, like the expression ἔστιν οἵ: it being observable that the gender of the article never changes, but only that of the adjective. Thus we have ἐν τοῖς πλεῖσταις νῆες, infra iii. 17, and not ἐν ταῖς πλείσταις: just as we have ἔστιν οἵ, ἔστιν ὧν, &c. and rarely εἰσὶν οἵ, or εἰσὶν ὧν.

καὶ ἀνειμένῃ—μετέστησαν] 'and, relaxing the severity of ancient customs, passed into a more refined and civilized mode of life.' Of ἀνειμένῃ the gloss found in the Schol. ἀνθηρᾷ, is, I would observe (notwithstanding what Stephens has urged), any thing but irrelevant; and in vain is it that he would cancel the word: for though ἀνθηρὸς is, like ἀνθινὸς, a term properly applied to dress (and so Artemid. Oneir. ii. 3, we have ἐσθὴς ἀνθηρά: and in Eurip. Iph. Aul. 73, ἀνθηρὸς μὲν εἱμάτων στολῇ. See also Schol. on Eurip. Phœn. v. 505), yet it is sometimes used in a metaphorical sense, to signify lautus, splendidus; and with a view to this acceptation, the Schol. we may suppose, employed the word. Yet under this figurative expression a certain natural allusion seems also to have been had in mind, namely, to certain flowered robes which, from ancient pictures, appear to have been at one time in vogue among the Athenians.

Of the expression in question, ἀνειμένῃ τῇ διαίτῃ, examples occur in Phil. Jud. p. 584; Dio Cass. p. 19, 7, ἀνειμένῃ τῇ διαίτῃ χρώμενοι: and so Plut. Sert. 13, 1, πρεσβύτερος ἦν, καί τι καὶ πρὸς ἀνειμένην ἤδη καὶ τρυφερὰν δίαιταν ἐνδεδωκώς. Finally, as imparting light to, and receiving light from, the present passage, I would adduce the following in Eurip. Andr. 725, ἀνειμένον τὸ χρῆμα πρεσβυτῶν γένος.

ἐς τὸ τρυφερώτερον μετέστησαν] for μετεβλήθησαν. So in Agath. ii. 11 (a passage evidently imitated from the present), we have: ἐς τὸ τρυφερώτερον τῆς διαίτης μεταβεβλῆσθαι: and Athen. 229, μεταβαλλόντων ἐπὶ τὸ πολυτελέστερον. Of ἐς τὸ τρυφ. the sense is, 'into a somewhat luxurious mode of life.'

καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι αὐτοῖς τῶν εὐδ. &c.] So in Phil. Jud. 900, we have: οἱ πρεσβύτεροι τῶν ἁβροδιαίτων. The dat. here may stand for the genit.; or rather, αὐτοῖς is for ἐξ αὐτῶν, ex illis. See Matth. Gr. § 392, 1; and note infra iii. 98, 1.

The connexion of sentiment here, Poppo ably traces as follows: 'Athenienses primi mitiore et delicatiore vita usi sunt; sed hi quoque olim Ægyptiorum more lineas tunicas gestarunt, et in reliquo cultu barbarorum similes fuerunt; quem barbaricum cultum imprimis opulenti, (εὐδαίμονες) et ex iis potissimum seniores diu retinuerunt.'

διὰ τὸ ἁβροδίαιτον] Meaning not luxury in general, but rather that of dress in particular. Comp. the similar expression of Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1787. To this luxury of dress the elderly Athenians were, it seems, not a little prone. And so in Aristoph. Thesm. 848, we have: γέρων δὲ χωρεῖ χλανίδα καὶ κονίποδας ἔχων, i. e. a garment made of very soft wool, and a sort of smart pumps with thin soles; and Vesp. 758, θρέψω—παρέχων ὅσα πρεσβύτῃ ξύμφορα· χόνδρον λείχειν, χλαῖναν μαλακὴν, σισύραν.

Moreover, these words are meant to intimate why they had worn the linen dress and the golden ornaments, not why they had ceased to use them. Accordingly they are to be construed with φοροῦντες, not with ἐπαύσαντο. The Athenians, we find, first used a simple costume, as did the other Greeks: but being the first to relax from the ancient strict simplicity of life, and resort to one of greater luxury, they began to wear linen instead of woollen garments. And this species of luxury did not cease before the elderly men among the wealthy inhabitants of Attica, who retained the former fashion longer than others, themselves gave over wearing these linen tunics and golden ornaments for the head. The same fashion also existed among the Ionians, who were of the same race with the Athenians. Accordingly, when this species of luxury was laid aside, the Athenians again, following the example of the Lacedæmonians, returned to a more simple costume.

Finally, as the simple fact of wearing linen garments could not in itself constitute a luxury, I entirely coincide in the opinion of Goell. that the luxury in question must have consisted in their being not only of linen material, but often richly embroidered. Such vestments (he adds), embroidered with flowers and all sorts of ornamental work, had always been much in use among the Ægyptians: and indeed the wearing of linen vestments, both plain and embroidered, was probably borrowed by the Greeks from Egypt. That Ælian, in his Var. H. iv. 22, and Heraclides Pont. ap. Athen. 512, should, in adverting to what our author here states, use the expression, not λινοῦς, but ποικίλους, certainly will not prove, what Hemsterhus. suspects, that our author so wrote here: but this it plainly shows,—that so they understood him to mean, and, it would seem, not without reason. Such, too, we may suppose to have been the opinion of the Schol. from his explanation (above adverted to) of ἀνειμένῃ by ἀνθηρᾷ. If it be asked, why then did not our author at once use the more explicit term, ποικίλους? I answer, for no other than the same reason as that for which he chooses, infra ii. 97, to write simply ὑφαντὰ, not ἐνυφαντά: namely, because he often prefers, for brevity's sake, to leave a thing implied rather than expressed.

χρυσῶν τεττίγων ἐνέρσει κρωβύλον ἀναδούμενοι — τριχῶν] Render: 'wreathing their hair into a topping, which they clasped around by the insertion of golden grasshoppers.' The word κρώβυλος (according to its derivation, which Goell. has well shown to be from καρα, or κρα, and the old ΟΡΥΛΛΕΝ, whence Ϝέλλειν, εἰλεῖν, and the Latin volvere) denotes 'something that involves the head around, and encircles it as with a crown.' From the Schol. we learn, that the κρώβ. was a sort of braiding of the hair, drawn up either way, and terminating in a point. It was among the men called κρώβυλος; among the women, κόρυμβος; and among the children, σκόρπιος.

With respect to the χρυσοῖ τέττιγες, these served (like the ornamental combs of modern times) to keep the top-knot (κρώβυλον) in order. Of these the top was shaped after the resemblance of a grasshopper; that being a form originally adopted from the predilection of the Athenians for whatever bore any affinity to themselves, who boasted of being αὐτόχθονες, or aboriginal: in which instance we may (as Mr. Mitchell on Aristoph. Vesp. 230, suggests) suppose them to have imitated their prototypes, the Egyptians; for as they (he adds) wore their favourite symbol, the chafer, in this manner, so Attic pride set up a rival in the head-dress thus introduced by Cecrops and his followers. Finally, to these grasshopper combs we have an allusion in Aristoph. Eq. 1331, ὅδ' ἐκεῖνος ὀρᾷν τεττιγοροφόρος, τῷ 'ρχαίῳ σχήματι λαμπρός: and others in Philostr. Imag. p. 837, and Heracl. Pont. in his treatise περὶ ἡδονῆς, cited by Athen. p. 512. Moreover, in the following passage of a very ancient writer, cited by Athen. 525, we have similar ornaments ascribed to the Samians (by whom their use was doubtless derived from the early Athenians), χρύσειαι δὲ κόρυμβαι ἐπ' αὐτῶν, τέττιγες ὡς, χαῖται δ' ἠφόρηντ' ἀνέμῳ.

Here, for the common reading ἐν ἔρσει, Bekk. Pop. and Goell. have very properly edited, from several MSS., ἐνέρσει—a reading, I would add, confirmed by what we find in similar passages of Ælian, V. H. iv. 22; Procop. Hist. 201, 2. 246, 8. 286, 36; Theophyl. Sim. p. 93 and 152; Agath. p. 9; Etym. Mag. 340, 2. The word is derived from the old fut. ἐνέρσω of ἐνείρω, insero, intersero, occurring in Herodot. iv. 190.

Of this use of ἀναδέω, religo, I have noted an example in Dion. Hal. t. i. 424, κεκρυφάλοις (net-work, head-gear) τὰς πλοκαμίδας ἀναδοῦντας.

Finally, an evident allusion to the present passage is observable in Lucian, Navig. 3, γέροντας ἀναδουμένους κρώβυλον ὑπὸ τέττιγι χρυσῷ ἀνειλημμένον.

Ἰώνων τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους — κατέσχε]

πολὺ αὖτη ἡ σκευὴ κατέσχε. 4. μετρίᾳ δ' αὖ ἐσθῆτι καὶ ἐς τὸν νῦν τρόπον πρῶτοι Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐχρήσαντο, καὶ ἐς τἆλλα πρὸς τοὺς πολλοὺς οἱ τὰ μείζω κεκτημένοι ἰσοδίαιτοι μάλιστα κατέστησαν. 5. ἐγυμνώθησάν τε πρῶτοι, καὶ ἐς τὸ φανερὸν ἀποδύντες, λίπα μετὰ τοῦ γυμνάζεσθαι ἠλείψαντο· τὸ δὲ πάλαι καὶ ἐν τῷ Ὀλυμπιακῷ ἀγῶνι διαζώματα ἔχοντες περὶ τὰ αἰδοῖα οἱ ἀθληταὶ ἠγωνίζοντο, [καὶ

Pop. supposes the σκευὴ to be as it were personified: yet in the idea of a dress being personified, there is something so harsh, that I would venture to conjecture, for τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους, ἐν τοῖς πρεσβυτέροις. The ἐν might very well be absorbed by the foregoing ων; and then τοῖς πρεσβυτέροις would easily pass into τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους, from the construction with κατέσχε seeming to require it, though in reality κατέσχε belonged to ἡ σκευὴ, the sense being, 'this mode of dress prevailed,' as in the phrase λόγος, φήμη, or δόξα κατέχει: and also infra iii. 89, τῶν κατεχόντων σεισμῶν. If the above conjecture be thought not admissible, it must be supposed, that as diseases, trouble, fear, and danger are said κατέχειν τινά (see Steph. Thes. 3964, B), and hence any one is said κατέχεσθαι, to be affected by them (so in Hdian. ii. 5, 1, we have κατέχει με εὐμοιρία, 'tenet me felicitas,' for, constitutus sum in felicitate), on the same principle there may here be a sort of hypallage, and σκευὴ may be understood not so much of the dress itself, as the custom or fashion of wearing it, which, like other habits, may be said to hold or occupy the person who is held by it.

4. μετρίᾳ ἐσθῆτι] 'modest, simple mode of dressing.' 'The Lacedæmonian dress (observes Müller) consisted of two parts, the χιτὼν and the χλαῖνα, both of woollen. The first was a narrow kind of frock without sleeves, coming down to the knees; the other, a sort of large square shawl (like the Scotch plaid and the Moorish bornouse), which wrapped round the left arm, then passed across the back and under the right arm, from whence it was crossed over the breast, and the end thrown over the left shoulder.'

ἰσοδίαιτοι μάλιστα κατέστησαν] 'were put mostly on an equality with the bulk of the people.' In the expression ἰσοδίαιτοι (which the Schol. explains by ὁμοδίαιτον) there is reference not only to the common food and dress, but also to the common education, civil and military, in which all Spartans shared alike. So Julian, p. 134, 9 (with this passage evidently in view), has: ἴσης ἀξιοῦν ἐχρῆν τροφῆς καὶ παιδείας: and so Aristot. Pol. iv. 9; Liban. Or. in Jul. § 109, προσήκειν αὐτῷ τοῖς πολλοῖς ἰσοδίαιτον εἶναι. The word also occurs in Dio Cass. 22, 21. 158, 87. 108, 69; Lucian ii. 82. iii. 404.

5. ἐγυμνώθησάν τε πρῶτοι] 'i. e. (says the Schol.) in the games.' Gottleber observes that the word 'first' must not be too much pressed, since it appears from Plat. Rep. v. p. 452, that the Cretans were the first, and that from them the Lacedæmonians borrowed this, like most of their other customs. But Plato there only says that they first adopted gymnastic exercises. The two accounts may very well be reconciled by taking ἐγυμνώθησαν of the gymnasia, not the ἀγῶνες.

ἐς τὸ φανερὸν] It is not necessary, with Goell. to take this as standing for ἐν τῷ φανερῷ; nor, with Bauer, to suppose an ellip. of προελθόντες. The ἐς simply denotes purpose of action, 'stripping for all to see.' In λίπα ἠλείψαντο, 'smeared themselves with oil,' λίπα is, according to Buttm. and Kuhner, the dat. of the neuter λίπας; the last syllable having become shortened, in common pronunciation, from λίπᾳ to λίπα, similarly as in the words ὕδας and γῆρας. We have, indeed, in Pausan. viii. 19, 1, λιπάδα ἠλιμμένοι. But as that involves two glaring grammatical blunders, there can be no doubt that the true reading in that passage is, as Sylb. long ago was of opinion, λίπα ἀληλιμμένοι: or, rather, as a milder and yet equally effectual emendation, I would propose λίπ' ἁλ. Probably the writer might have in view the Homeric expressions, λίπ' ἄλειψε, Od. vi. 227; and ἀλειψαμένω λίπ' ἐλαίῳ, Il. x. 577.

διαζώματα ἔχοντες] The word διάζωμα, though rare, is found in Joseph. Ant. iii. 7, 1, διάζωμα δ' ἔστι περὶ τὰ αἰδοῖα. Philostr. Vit. Ap. iv. 42, διάζωμα ἔχων, γυμνός.

The διάζ. was a broad girdle, used for decency's sake. It is called by Pausan. i. 44, 1, περίζωμα. But that, as we learn from Pollux ii. 166, and vii. 65, only denoted a belt about the loins, worn by those who used great personal labour, to prevent ruptures.

οὐ πολλὰ ἔτη ἐπειδὴ πέπαυται.] 6. ἔτι δὲ καὶ ἐν τοῖς βαρβάροις ἔστιν οἷς νῦν, καὶ μάλιστα τοῖς Ἀσιανοῖς, πυγμῆς καὶ πάλης ἆθλα τίθεται, καὶ διεζωσμένοι τοῦτο δρῶσι. πολλὰ δ' ἂν καὶ ἄλλα τις ἀποδείξειε τὸ παλαιὸν Ἑλληνικὸν ὁμοιότροπα τῷ νῦν βαρβαρικῷ διαιτώμενον. VII. Τῶν δὲ πόλεων ὅσαι μὲν νεώτατα ᾠκίσθησαν, καὶ ἤδη πλωϊμωτέρων ὄντων, περιουσίας μᾶλλον ἔχουσαι χρημάτων ἐπ' αὐτοῖς οὐ πολλὰ ἔτη ἐπειδὴ πέπ.] There has been no little controversy raised as to the time at which the Athletes first disused these girdles. Some (as the Schol. on Homer, and the Etym. Mag.) say it took place at the 32nd Olympiad. Others (as Eustath. on Hom. Il. ψ), at the 14th Olympiad. 'But if (continues Meursius) the thing were so far back, how could Thucydides, who wrote about 300 years after, say that the custom had only lately ceased?' He would therefore cancel the οὐ. But to this change (unsupported as it is by any MSS.) there is grave objection. And the οὐ is strongly confirmed by a passage (evidently imitated from the present) of Appian, t. i. 17, 56, καὶ οὐ πολὺς χρόνος ἐξ οὗ, &c. Also by Plutarch de Ser. Num. v. 12, καὶ μὴν οὐ πολὺς χρόνος, ἀφ' οὗ Λοκροὶ πέμποντες εἰς Τροίαν πέπαυνται τὰς παρθένους. The discrepancy in question may be removed by taking the words οὐ πολλὰ ἔτη ἐ. π. not of the Olympic games, but (as in the case of the words a little before, ἐγυμνώθησαν πρῶτοι) of gymnastic contests in general. Thus the meaning will be, that 'not many years had elapsed, since this custom of wearing girdles in gymnastic exercises, which had gradually been declining from the time that the Lacedæmonians πρῶτοι ἐγυμνώθησαν, had, at no long distance of time, wholly ceased.'

From the united authority of the Schol. on Homer, the Etym. Mag., Eustathius, the Schol. on our author, and Pausan. i. 44, 1, it seems clear that Orisippus was the first who ran naked in the stadium. Nor is there any real discrepancy between this statement and that of Dion. Hal. Ant. vii. 72, who, in an interesting passage, evidently written with a view to this of our author, says, that the first who ventured to come forth and run naked at the Olympic stadium, was Acanthus. There is, I repeat, no contradiction: for though Orisippus was the first who ran naked, yet Acanthus was the first who came forth naked, and so ran.

6. ἐν τοῖς βαρβάροις ἔστιν οἷς, &c.] This Poppo regards as standing for ἐν τῶν βαρβάρων ἔστιν οἷς: but it is better to consider ἔστιν οἷς as a clause taken out of the context, and forming a separate clause introduced by way of restriction; q. d. among the barbarians, that among some of them, &c.

ὁμοιότροπα] for ὁμοιοτρόπως, as often in Dio Cass. See Matth. Gr. § 446.

Ch. VII. 1. καὶ ἤδη πλωϊμωτέρων ὄντων] scil. πραγμάτων, lit. 'when things began to admit of navigation,' i. e. 'when navigation began to be more frequent and uninterrupted,' 'when there was a freer communication by sea.' So infra c. viii. we have: πλωϊμώτερα ἐγένετο. Also Dion. Hal. Ant. Rom. i. 63, πλωΐμων δὲ γενομένων. Phil. Jud. p. 994, ἔτι πλωΐμων ὄντων. Dio Cass. 227, 10, ἐπειδὴ πλώϊμα ἐγένετο. For πλωϊμωτέρων, Bekk. and Goell. edit πλοϊμ.: but I have thought proper, with Poppo, to retain the common reading, supported, as it is, by the best MSS. and confirmed by the usage of writers who have imitated our author, as Dio Cass., Dion. Hal., Procop., Pausan., Lucian, and others; while the word as written with o is of later origin, and chiefly found in Themist., Heliod., and Artem. Indeed that πλώϊμος was here written by our author, may be argued from the use infra c. xiii. of the verb πλωΐζειν. Finally, the derivation of the word will in this case prove nothing; for as πλωΐμος comes from πλοῦς, πλόος, so πλώϊμος comes from the old πλώω, found in Hdot. whence πλώζω, and πλωΐζω, found in Thueyd. In a passage of Max. Tyr. xxxi. 7, ἥδιστον θεαμάτων—θάλαττα πλεομένη, I conjecture should be read πλωΐμη, which is confirmed by Pausan. i. 3, 5, ἐπὶ πλωΐμῳ θαλάσσῃ: and x. 20, 217, πλώϊμος θάλασσα: and Theoph. Char. Eth. iii. τὴν θάλατταν ἐκ Διονυσίων πλώϊμον εἶναι. The form πλώϊμος, πλωΐμη, is further confirmed by Suid. πλοΐκη (for which ought undoubtedly to be read πλωΐμη) καὶ πλόϊμος θάλασσα. The reading there, πλεομένη, evidently arose from a mere gloss. So Zonaras in Lex. explains, πλόϊμος by πλεόμενος. In Appian i. 781, occurs the elsewhere, I believe, unprecedented form, ἁπλωτά τε ἤδη πάντα ἦν.

τοῖς αἰγιαλοῖς τείχεσιν ἐκτίζοντο, καὶ τοὺς ἰσθμοὺς ἀπελάμβανον, ἐμπορίας τε ἕνεκα καὶ τῆς πρὸς τοὺς προσοίκους ἕκαστοι ἰσχύος· 2. αἱ δὲ παλαιαὶ, διὰ τὴν λῃστείαν ἐπὶ πολὺ ἀντισχοῦσαν, ἀπὸ θαλάσσης μᾶλλον ᾠκίσθησαν, αἵ τε ἐν ταῖς νήσοις καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἠπείροις· (ἕφερον γὰρ ἀλλήλους τε καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὅσοι ὄντες οὐ θαλάσσιοι κάτω ᾤκουν·) καὶ μέχρι τοῦδε ἔτι ἀνῳκισμένοι εἰσί. VIII. Καὶ οὐχ ἧσσον λῃσταὶ ἦσαν οἱ νησιῶται, Κᾶρές τε ὄντες καὶ Φοίνικες· οὗτοι γὰρ δὴ τὰς πλείστας τῶν νήσων ᾤκισαν. μαρτύριον δέ· Δήλου γὰρ καθαιρομένης ὑπὸ Ἀθηναίων ἐν τῷδε τῷ πολέμῳ, καὶ τῶν θηκῶν ἰσθμοὺς ἀπελάμβανον] So iv. 45, ἀπολαβόντες τὸν τῆς Χερσονήσου ἰσθμὸν ἐτείχισαν; and iv. 113, ἀπειλημμένον ἐν στενῷ ἰσθμῷ; iv. 102, ἀπολαβὼν τείχει μακρῷ, in which, and all such passages, philologists have fallen into error by not perceiving that ἰσθμὸς is put for what Thucyd. at vii. 26, calls ἰσθμῶδες χωρίον. Thus ἀπολαμβάνειν in this use signifies, as we say, to take off, take in, and occupy. The situation of Corinth was chosen as being the great thoroughfare between Peloponnesus and the rest of Greece. Sometimes when a peninsula was too large to be occupied by the city to be founded, the very isthmus was occupied so as to command the whole, as in the case of Potidæa.

Alluding to the contrary practice formerly subsisting, of building them without walls (like large open villages), and removed from the sea-coast, that they might be out of the way of pirates. See Mitf. vol. i. p. 25.

πρὸς τοὺς προσοίκους ἕκαστοι ἰσχύος] 'For (as observes Mitf.) the terms neighbour and enemy have, in the language of politics, been ever nearly synonymous.' So, I would observe, in Juven. Sat. xv. 33, we have: 'Inter finitimos vetus atque antiqua simultas, Immortale odium.' And to this our author alludes elsewhere; e. g. iv. 92, πρὸς τοὺς ἀστυγείτονας πᾶσι τὸ ἀντίπαλον καὶ ἐλεύθερον καθίσταται.

2. ἀντισχοῦσαν] 'prevalent.' So Bek. and Pop. edit, for vulg. ἀντισχοῦσαι; comparing the words infra vii. 71, ἐπὶ πολὺ ἀντισχούσης τῆς ναυμαχίας. And they might also have adduced ii. 64, μίσος οὐκ ἐπὶ πολὺ ἀντέχει. Plut. Symp. ap. Steph. Thes. μηδὲ πρὸς μίαν ἡμέραν ἀντέχειν, which is just after expressed by διαμένειν. Plato Ax. 365, ἀντίσχει δέος τι; and Pol. 492, ἀνθέξειν ἢν οὐ—οἰχήσεσθαι. It is scarcely necessary to observe, how preferable in point of simplicity and force is the above reading as compared with the other, which yields a sense forced and frigid.

ἕφερον] 'laid waste,' ravaged, plundered. A somewhat rare sense of the word, founded on its similar acceptation in Hom. Il. ii. 302. Not unfrequently it occurs followed by ἄγω, as in Herodot. vi. 90.

θαλάσσιοι] i. e. as the Schol. on vii. 67, explains, θαλασσουργοί, seafaring. The signification is rare. Yet it occurs also in Herod. vii. 144; Lucian ii. 96; Arrian E. A. vii. 19, 10, θαλάσσιοι ἄνθρωποι: all derived from Homer's Il. ii. 614, οὔ σφισι θαλάσσια ἔργα μεμήλει.

ἀνῳκισμένοι εἰσί] for ἄνω ᾠκ. A signification also found in Plut. Marc. 6; Philostr. Vit. Alex. iii. 13; Pausan. 119, 32. 128, 26. Nor is it confined to the later writers; examples of it occur in Aristoph. Pac. 207; Theophr. ap. Athen. p. 682, τοῖς ἀνῳκισμένοις τῆς θαλάσσης. Finally, in the masculine here and before at ἕκαστοι, there is (as Goell. observes) a constructio ad sensum, because as there we have a transition from ships to mariners, so here we have from cities to citizens. Compare viii. 64.

Ch. VIII. 1. οὐχ ἧσσον] for μᾶλλον.

Κᾶρές τε ὄντες καὶ Φοίνικες] 'who were both Carians and Phœnicians.'

ᾤκισαν] 'colonized.' So all the recent editors read for vulg. ᾤκησαν. The colonization in question must be understood not as subsisting at the same time, but in succession; for it appears from Diodorus and Conon, that the Carians were not the original settlers, but colonized the islands after the expulsion of the Phœnicians. On the subject of the Carians, see Herodot. iv. 147. vi. 44.

μαρτύριον δέ·] This, as Matth. observes, is one of those cases in which (as in that of τεκμήριον δὲ, σημεῖον δὲ, δῆλον δὲ) propositions are merely intimated by the use of the principal word; which is then followed by a proposition introduced by γάρ. The plena locutio occurs in Herodot. ii. 58, τεκμήριον δέ μοι τούτου τόδε (ἐστί), and Æschyl. Eum. 659, τεκμήριον δὲ τοῦδέ σοι δείξω λόγου.

ἀναιρεθεισῶν ὅσαι ἦσαν τῶν τεθνεώτων ἐν τῇ νήσῳ, ὑπὲρ ἥμισυ Κᾶρες ἐφάνησαν, γνωσθέντες τῇ τε σκευῇ τῶν ὅπλων, ‡ ξυντεθαμμένοι, καὶ τῷ τρόπῳ, ᾧ νῦν ἔτι θάπτουσι. 2. Καταστάντος δὲ τοῦ Μίνω ναυτικοῦ, πλωϊμώτερα ἐγένετο παρ' ἀλλήλους· οἱ γὰρ ἐκ τῶν νήσων κακοῦργοι ἀνέστησαν ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, ὅτε περ καὶ τὰς πολλὰς αὐτῶν κατῴκιζε. 3. καὶ οἱ παρὰ θάλασσαν ἄνθρωποι μᾶλλον ἤδη τὴν κτῆσιν τῶν χρημάτων ποιούμενοι, βεβαιότερον ᾤκουν· καί τινες καὶ τείχη περιεβάλλοντο, ὡς πλουσιώτεροι ἑαυτῶν γιγνόμενοι· ἐφιέμενοι γὰρ τῶν ὑπὲρ ἥμισυ] Sub. μέρος; but the plena locutio scarcely ever occurs in the classics. Thucyd. seems to have regarded the word as a noun; while Herodot. (who almost always prefixes the article) regards it as an adjective. By 'above half' is here meant, the Scholiast says, above half of the original colonizers, namely, Phœnicians and Carians; 'for,' he adds, 'the Greeks burnt the bodies.' Such, however, was not always the case.

ξυντεθαμμένοι] The MSS. fluctuate between ξυντεθαμμένοι and ξυντεθαμμένῃ: of which the former has been edited by Goell.—the latter by Pop. and Bek. The Greek is equally good, and the sense yielded the same according to either reading, ξυντεθαμμένοι meaning, 'cogniti habitu armorum (for armaturâ), quippe qui cum eis, vel eâ, sepulti essent;' and ξυντεθαμμένῃ, 'cogniti armaturâ, quippe quæ cum eis esset sepulta.' I have preferred the former, because, though each is alike Thucydidean, ξυντεθαμμένοι is less likely to have arisen from the scribes, being, indeed, the more difficult reading; and it is strongly confirmed by a passage, evidently imitated from the present, of Arrian E. A. i. 16, 8, τούτους ἔθαψεν Ἀλ. ξὺν τοῖς ὅπλοις· from which words it appears that the writer in this passage of our author, recognized very properly an ellipsis of ὅπλοις, to be supplied from ὅπλων, or, what is the same thing, αὐτοῖς.

Finally, σκευῇ τῶν ὅπλων may be said to stand for ὅπλοις, by a form of expression of which several examples occur in Procop. and Pausan.; and so apparatus armorum in Liv. viii. 14. Here, however, I apprehend, the word σκευῇ is not pleonastic, but bears the sense accoutrement, equipment, διακόσμησις, meaning manner of equipping, and so equivalent to fashion of their arms, that being peculiar. As, then, they were the inventors of the bosses, handles, and devices of shields, and the crests of helmets, so, from the ancient and generally existing custom of burying warriors with their arms (to which there is an allusion in Soph. Aj. 577, τὰ δ' ἄλλα τεύχη κοίν' ἐμοὶ τεθάψεται, and the passage of Arrian above quoted) they would thus be recognised by the fashion of their arms.

τῷ τρόπῳ, ᾧ νῦν ἔτι θάπτουσι] 'and also by the mode [of interment], the [one] now in use among them,' namely, by turning their heads the contrary way to that of the Phœnicians, whereby they would be effectually distinguished from them.

2. καταστάντος τοῦ Μίνω ναυτικοῦ] 'the navy of Minos being established.'

πλωϊμώτερα ἐγένετο παρ' ἀλλ.] 'there was mutual free communication by sea.' See note supra c. vii.

οἱ γὰρ ἐκ τῶν νήσων κακ. ἀνέστ. ὑπ' αὐτοῦ] A brief mode of expression for οἱ ἐν ταῖς νήσοις κακοῦργοι ἀνέστ. ἐξ αὐτῶν, as in Theophr. Char. Eth. ii. ἄρας τι τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς τραπέζης; and iv. τὰ ἀπὸ τῆς ἐκκλησίας διηγεῖσθαι. (Bauer.) Κακοῦργοι is for λῃσταί. Ἀνέστησαν is, by a frequent use of aorists active, (comp. iv. 53, 3,) to be taken in a passive sense.

Ὅτε περ is a very rare form (occurring in Hom. Il. iv. 259), in which the περ does not, as Viger makes it, mean cunque, but circiter, the primitive sense, indeed, of this particle; which comes from περί, about; and, when employed with particles of time, it corresponds to our about, as used in the old English when-about, for about the time when, so whereabout, thereabout, and (as Hermann on Vig. 791, says) 'is used of things, which are rather matter of conjecture than of knowledge.'

3. μ. τὴν κτῆσιν τῶν χρημ. ποιούμενοι] 'having become possessed of greater wealth.' Comp. c. xiii.

βεβαιότερον ᾤκουν] 'cultivated a more settled mode of life.'

τείχη περιεβάλλοντο] lit. 'encircled themselves,' meaning, their cities. So Herodot. i. 141, 18, τείχεά τε περιεβάλλοντο ἕκαστοι: and i. 163, 14. So may be understood Jerem. xxii. 15, 'Shalt thou reign, because thou closest thyself in cedar?' i. e. 'inlayest thy rooms with cedar.'

πλουσιώτεροι ἑαυτῶν γιγνόμενοι] 'being richer than heretofore,' having a greater command of wealth. 'The superl. (says κερδῶν οἵ τε ἧσσους ὑπέμενον τὴν τῶν κρεισσόνων δουλείαν, οἵ τε δυνατώτεροι περιουσίᾳ ἔχοντες, προσεποιοῦντο ὑπηκόους τὰς ἐλάσσους πόλεις. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ τῷ τρόπῳ μᾶλλον ἤδη ὄντες, ὕστερον χρόνῳ ἐπὶ Τροίαν ἐστράτευσαν. IX. Ἀγαμέμνων τέ μοι δοκεῖ τῶν τότε δυνάμει προῦχων, καὶ οὐ τοσοῦτον τοῖς Τυνδάρεω ὅρκοις κατειλημμένους τοὺς Ἕλένης μνηστῆρας ἄγων, τὸν στόλον ἀγεῖραι. 2. λέγουσι δὲ καὶ οἱ τὰ σαφέστατα Πελοποννησίων μνήμῃ παρὰ τῶν Matthiæ in his Gr. Gr. § 460) is frequently accompanied, not by the genitive plural of a class of objects, but by the genitive of the reflexive pronoun, by which, in this case, is expressed the highest degree which a thing or person attains to.' Of this examples occur in Herodot. i. 193, ἐπεὰν δὲ ἄριστα αὐτὴ ἑωυτῆς ἐνείκῃ, and ii. 203. Xen. Mem. ii. 2, 46, δεινότατος σαυτοῦ ἦσθα: where I conj. for σαυτοῦ, ἑαυτοῦ. So Eurip. as cited in Plat. Gorg. p. 83, ἵν' αὐτὸς αὑτοῦ τυγχάνῃ βέλτιστος ὤν. In a passage of Onosand. p. 54, 3, πίστις αὐτομόλον τι μηνύοντος αὕτη βεβαιοτάτη. I conj. αὕτη, αὐτῆς.

προσεποιοῦντο ὑπηκόους τὰς ἐλάσσους πόλεις] There is here a blending of two phrases into one, namely, προσποιεῖσθαί τινας, and ποιεῖσθαι ὑπηκόους.

μᾶλλον ἤδη ὄντες] Sup. ἢ πρότερον, 'having by these means attained to greater consequence [than before].'

ὕστ. χρόνῳ] 'in after time,' for ὑστέρῳ χρόνῳ.

Ch. IX. 1. Ἀγαμέμνων—ἀγεῖραι] The constr. is: Ἀγαμέμνων τέ μοι δοκεῖ τὸν στόλον ἀγεῖραι, &c. The sentence may be thus rendered: 'Indeed Agamemnon seems to me to have assembled that armament, by being, as a potentate, superior to the princes of his time, and not so much by the suitors being bound under oaths to Tyndarus.'

ὅρκοις κατειλημμένους] for ἐνεχομένους. So infra iv. 86, ὅρκοις καταλαβών. Dion. Hal. t. i. 164, 22, Sylb. ὅρκοις ἕκαστον καταλαβών. Plut. Syll. 10, ὅρκοις καταλαβών. A sense this arising from the physical one, of 'so laying hold of any thing as to hold it down' (κατά): in which sense the word occurs in Plut. (cited by Steph. Thes.) καταλαβόντες ἰμᾶσι.

2. λέγουσι δὲ καὶ οἱ τὰ σαφέστατα—δεδεγμένοι] Of these words the sense depends upon the construction, which has been variously laid down. The most natural order is: οἱ δεδεγμένοι τὰ σαφέστατα Πελοποννησίων, rendered by Goell. 'qui res certissimas seu maxime perspicuas memoriæ traditas a majoribus acceperunt,' meaning, not that the things in question are of themselves so, but that they have become exploratissimæ et luculentissimæ by a comparison of the things one with another. A view, this, far preferable to that of the Schol. who supposes a transition, for οἱ τὰ Πελοποννησίων σαφ. δεδ. taking σαφ. as an adverb: for though this be a use of σαφ. not unfrequent, it would here involve an intolerable harshness. Accordingly I must rather acquiesce in the former method, confirmed as it is by similar expressions, in passages imitated from the present, of Dio Cass. p. 8, 15, φασὶ δὲ οἱ τὰ σαφέστατα Σαβίνων εἰδότες, &c. and Phil. Jud. t. ii. 26, ὡς δ' οἱ τὰ σαφέστατα διηγούμενοι φασίν. The sense will, then, be, 'those who have received the clearest accounts of [the affairs of] the Peloponnesians;' similar to what is said infra i. 22, τῶν τε γενομένων τὸ σαφὲς σκοπεῖν καὶ τῶν μελλόντων. Yet so much harshness is there involved in taking Πελοποννησίων as standing for περὶ τῶν Πελοποννησιακῶν, that I cannot forbear mentioning a conjecture which occurred to myself many years ago, and since then also to Poppo; and that is, that the article τὰ has been inadvertently put out of its order by the scribes, and that our author wrote οἱ σαφέστατα τὰ Πελοποννησίων μν. π. τ. πρ. δεδεγμένοι, certissimè, liquidissimè acceperunt. The τὰ might easily be lost after σαφέστατα, and then inserted at a wrong place. In favour of this may be urged the usus loquendi; e. g. Soph. Œd. Tyr. 286, παρ' οὗ τις ἂν Σκοπῶν (i. e. ἐξετάζων) τάδ', ὦ ναξ, ἐκμάθοι σαφέστατα. Polyb. vi. 4, 11, Γνοίη δ' ἄν τις σαφέστατα περὶ τούτων. Æschyl. Agam. 38, σαφέστατ' ἂν λέξειεν. Xenoph. Cyr. v. 5, 5, ἵνα σαφέστατα κατίδωμεν. Aristoph. Plut. 46, φράζειν σαφέστατα. Of the phrases σαφῶς μανθάνειν, εἰδέναι and ἐπίστασθαι, examples occur in the best writers, including Thucyd.; and though I do not remember to have seen σαφῶς δέχεσθαι, yet in Æschyl. Prom. 819, we have σαφῶς ἐκμάνθανε. Finally, σάφα πρότερον δεδεγμένοι, Πέλοπά τε πρῶτον πλήθει χρημάτων, ἃ ἦλθεν ἐκ τῆς Ἀσίας ἔχων ἐς ἀνθρώπους ἀπόρους, δύναμιν περιποιησάμενον τὴν ἐπωνυμίαν τῆς χώρας, ἐπηλύτην ὄντα, ὅμως σχεῖν, καὶ ὕστερον τοῖς ἐκγόνοις ἔτι μείζω ξυνενεχθῆναι, Εὐρυσθέως μὲν ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ ὑπὸ Ἡρακλειδῶν ἀποθανόντος, Ἀτρέως δὲ μητρὸς ἀδελφοῦ ὄντος αὐτῷ, καὶ ἐπιτρέψαντος Εὐρυσθέως, ὅτ' ἐστράτευε, Μυκήνας τε καὶ τὴν ἀρχήν, κατὰ τὸ οἰκεῖον, Ἀτρεΐ· τυγχάνειν δὲ αὐτὸν φεύγοντα τὸν πατέρα διὰ τὸν Χρυσίππου θάνατον· καὶ ὡς οὐκέτι ἀνεχώρησεν Εὐρυσθεύς, βουλομένων καὶ τῶν Μυκηναίων, φόβῳ τῶν Ἡρακλειδῶν, καὶ ἅμα δυνατὸν δοκοῦντα εἶναι, καὶ τὸ πλῆθος τεθεραπευκότα, τῶν Μυκηναίων τε καὶ ὅσων Εὐρυσθεὺς ἦρχε τὴν βασιλείαν Ἀτρέα παραλαβεῖν, καὶ τῶν Περσειδῶν τοὺς Πελοπίδας μείζους καταστῆναι.

3. Πέλοπά τε] The sense is, 'that Pelops first acquiring power by the abundance of wealth, with which he came from Asia to a people in poverty,—then, although but a new comer, he yet gave name to the country; and, with posterity, attained unto still greater estimation.' This wealth was derived from Tantalus, whose wealth became proverbial. Thus Isocr. ad Phil. § 61, mentions the riches of Tantalus, and the power of Pelops. So, too, Theocr. Id. viii. 53, μή μοι γᾶν Πέλοπος, μή μοι χρύσεια τάλαντα Εἴη ἔχεν, &c. Also Menand. ap. Stob. οὐδ' ἂν συναγάγῃς τὰ Ταντάλου τάλαντ' ἐκεῖνα λεγόμενα. The same may be said of Agamemnon, as appears from the proverb, like our 'as rich as Crœsus,' occurring in Arrian, Epict. ii. 29, τοῦ Ἀγαμέμνονος πλουσιώτερος.

ἦλθεν ἔχων] Participles so employed, with their cases, have the signification of cum. So Æschyl. Theb. 40, ἥκω—φέρων. See Matth. Gr. § 557, 4.

τὴν ἐπωνυμίαν τῆς χώρας—σχεῖν] lit. 'had the naming of the country,' i. e. gave occasion to its name. So Pausanias, as cited by Abresch, has: χαριζόμενοι δέ οἱ Μ. τὴν ἐπωνυμίαν διδόασιν αὐτῷ τοῦ οἰκοδομήματος. Hence by the adj. ἐπώνυμος is denoted (as in the expression ἐπ. Ἄρχον) 'he who gives name to any thing.' So Plat. de Legg. p. 397, ἐπώνυμον εἶναί τινος. Thus cities called after heroes were said to be ἐπώνυμοι ἡρώων: to which custom, a most ancient one, we have allusion in Ps. xlix. 11, 'and call the lands after their own names.'

τοῖς ἐκγόνοις ἔτι μείζω ξυνενεχθῆναι] Very specious is the sense assigned by Hobbes, Smith, and Haack, 'that the wealth and power possessed by him were increased by his posterity.' But it is not easy to see how this sense can be elicited from the words. The construction seems to be as follows: καὶ (λέγουσιν) ὕστερον ἔτι μείζω ξυνενεχθῆναι (γενέσθαι) τοῖς ἐκγόνοις, where ξυνενεχθῆναι means contigisse, a frequent signif. in Herodot. and Thucyd.; and it often has γενέσθαι expressed, but more usually understood, as here.

Εὐρυσθέως μὲν—καταστῆναι] The sense of the passage cannot clearly be expressed without moulding it anew thus: 'For, on Eurystheus being slain in Attica by the Heraclidæ, Atreus, his maternal uncle, who had taken refuge with him from the anger of his father at the murder of Chrysippus, and to whom, on account of his affinity, he had, at his departure for the expedition, committed Mycenæ and his government; Atreus, I say, when Eurystheus returned not, partly with the good-will of the people, with whom he had the reputation of ability, and whose affections he had conciliated, and partly through their fear of the Heraclidæ, obtained the sovereignty,' &c. Ἀποθανόντος, having a passive sense, takes ὑπὸ, like a passive verb. Τυγχάνειν and παραλαβεῖν depend on λέγουσι.

φεύγοντα τὸν πατέρα] 'patrem fugiebat.' So in Xenoph. Cyr. iii. 1, 24, we have φ. πατρίδα: also in Plut. and Lysias, φ. τὴν πατρίδα: and similarly in Virgil, fugio patriam. The accus. of person I have no where else noticed.

δυνατὸν δοκοῦντα εἶναι] 'having the reputation of ability;' as infra i. 79, ξυνετὸς δοκῶν εἶναι, and 1 Corinth. iii. 18, εἴ τις δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἶναι.

τὸ πλῆθος τεθεραπευκότα] 'having courted the multitude,' as in Isæus, p. 20. Eurip. El. 996.

3. ἃ μοι δοκεῖ Ἀγαμέμνων παραλαβών, καὶ ναυτικῷ τε ἅμα ἐπὶ πλέον τῶν ἄλλων ἰσχύσας, τὴν στρατείαν οὐ χάριτι τὸ πλεῖον ἢ φόβῳ ξυναγαγὼν ποιήσασθαι. 4. φαίνεται γὰρ ναυσί τε πλείσταις αὐτὸς ἀφικόμενος, καὶ Ἀρκάσι προσπαρασχών, ὡς Ὅμηρος τοῦτο δεδήλωκεν, εἴ τῳ ἱκανὸς τεκμηριῶσαι. 5. καὶ ἐν τοῦ σκήπτρου ἅμα τῇ παραδόσει εἴρηκεν αὐτόν 'πολλῇσι νήσοισι καὶ Ἀργεϊ παντὶ ἀνάσσειν·' οὐκ ἂν οὖν νήσων ἔξω τῶν περιοικίδων (αὗται δὲ οὐκ ἂν πολλαὶ εἶησαν) ἠπειρώτης ὢν ἐκράτει, εἰ μή τι καὶ ναυτικὸν εἶχεν. εἰκάζειν δὲ χρὴ καὶ ταύτῃ τῇ στρατείᾳ οἷα ἦν τὰ πρὸ αὐτῆς.

X. Καὶ ὅτι μὲν Μυκῆναι μικρὸν ἦν,—ἢ εἴ τι τῶν τότε πόλισμα νῦν μὴ ἀξιόχρεων δοκεῖ εἶναι,—οὐκ ἀκριβεῖ ἄν τις σημείῳ χρώμενος ἀπιστοίη μὴ γενέσθαι τὸν στόλον τοσοῦτον, ὅσον οἵ τε ποιηταὶ εἰρήκασι καὶ ὁ λόγος κατέχει. 2. Λακεδαιμονίων γὰρ εἰ ἡ πόλις ἐρημωθείη, λειφθείη δὲ τά τε ἱερὰ καὶ τῆς κατασκευῆς τὰ ἐδάφη, τὸ πλεῖον] for μᾶλλον, which word, indeed, is found in one MS., but evidently by a gloss. Οὐ χάριτι. So Pausan. iii. 12, 5, χάριτι στρατεύσαντος ἐπὶ Ἴλιον. Goell. refers to Hom. Od. v. 307; and Il. i. 158. ii. 341.

3. καὶ ναυτικῷ τε ἅμα] 'and in naval power also,' καὶ—τε being equiv. to atque etiam.

4. καὶ Ἀρκάσι προσπαρασχών] for πρὸς δὲ καὶ Ἀ. παρέχων, 'and likewise providing (ships) for the Arcadians.' See Iliad. ii. 101.

εἴ τῳ ἱκανὸς τεκμηριῶσαι] 'A formula dubitandi,' (says Goeller) 'adopted from Thucydides by many writers.' And he subjoins examples from Ælian, Dionys. Halicarn., Longinus, and Eusebius; to which might be added various others from the later historians. The formula, however, does not necessarily imply doubt; but is not unfrequently used, as here, in cases where some slight exception might be made to a testimony.

5. ἐν τοῦ σκήπτρου ἅμα τῇ παραδόσει] It was the custom with the ancients at that early period, when writings were not yet distributed into books or chapters, to make a division according to the prominent subjects any where treated on. This was especially the case with Homer, portions of whose Iliad were called by the names of τάφος Πατρόκλου, Νεκυομάντεια, as here τοῦ σκήπτρου ἡ παράδοσις. Nor was this custom confined to the classical writers, but obtained in the Scriptures. Thus at Mark xii. 26, ἐπὶ τῆς Βάτου· and Rom. xi. 2, ἐν Ἠλίᾳ.

Cap. X. 1. καὶ ὅτι μὲν Μυκῆναι] Of this somewhat obscure passage the sense may be thus expressed: 'And because Mycenæ indeed was but a small city, (and which of the cities of those times does not now appear inconsiderable?) that were a groundless reason for disbelieving the armament to have been so considerable as the poets represent it, and fame has reported it to have been.' In this expression, ἢ εἴ τι, there is something peculiar, though unnoticed by the commentators, the sense being, 'or what though any one,' &c.; where I would propose to point, ἢ, εἴ τι, τῶν. The Cod. Ven. and Clar. a prima manu, have καὶ εἴ τι. I suspect that our author wrote ἢ, καὶ εἴ τι, the καὶ thus serving to strengthen the sense. And so infra iii. 26, we have καὶ εἴ τι ἐβεβλαστήκει. Moreover, for δοκεῖ, a little after, I doubt not Thucyd. wrote δοκοῖ, which is absolutely required by the proprietas linguæ. Finally, by regarding (as I have done) this whole portion, ἢ—εἶναι, as hypoparenthetical, the sense is not a little cleared.

ἀπιστοίη μὴ γενέσθαι] After verbs which contain a denial, the Greeks frequently add the negative μὴ to the infinitive. See Matth. Gr. § 533. Obs. 3.

ὁ λόγος κατέχει] 'prevails,' 'is prevalent.' In this sense κατέχω is used with various nouns denoting any thing said; as Eurip. Hipp. 1464, φῆμαι κ. Pind. Pyth. i. 187, κατέχει πάντα φάτις. Xen. de Ven. xiii. 1.

2. τῆς κατασκευῆς τὰ ἐδάφη] 'the foundations of the edifices.' This version expresses, I believe, the true sense of κατασκευή here and just after. The term seems to have reference chiefly to public buildings, as temples and theatres; but also to the mansions of the rich and great, such as were κατ' ἐξοχήν called ædificia. The above view of the sense has, since it was first, many years ago, propounded by myself, been, I find, adopted by Goell. and Arnold. The latter supposes the word to bear this sense from its use to denote the stationary furniture either of houses (as i. 89. ii. 5, 14, 16, 38, 65, 97. vi. 36) or of a ship, as vi. 31, namely, armamenta, in contradistinction to παρασκευή, which is properly applied to things that are temporary and occasional.' A distinction, however, I would remark, not always observed. Thus infra viii. 5, we have κατασκευὴ τοῦ πολέμου, for παρασ. τ. π. And again vi. 17, κατασκευαῖς for παρασκ. Finally, as confirmatory of the above interpretation, I am now enabled to adduce two passages evidently imitated from this of our author, namely, Agath. ii. 15, τῆς κατασκευῆς τὰ ἐδάφη and Procop. Goth. p. 319, τῆς κατασκευῆς τὰ ἐδάφη.

πολλὴν ἂν οἶμαι—εἶναι] Render: 'There might, I imagine, in long process of time, arise in the minds of posterity an utter disbelief of their power, in comparison with what fame had represented it to be.'

τὰς δύο μοίρας] This is one of those cases in which the Greek article is used where the English is not. When any number of portions of any whole is mentioned in reference to the total amount, the number expressing it must have the article; and when the total number is not expressed, THREE is to be supposed; e. g. lib. ii. 10, τὰ δύο μέρη. Finally, this passage of our author is (I would observe) evidently had in view by Aristid. ii. 147, B. where for ἀπορήσαντες I conj. εὐπορ.

πόλεως] It is strange that Poppo should here think the article indispensable, and maintain that it should either be inserted, or else the subst. itself be cancelled, as it has been by Hermann. Neither the one nor the other is necessary; for where the context plainly points to only one of any class of things, it is often omitted as unnecessary, since no mistake can be made. Indeed the term πόλις is by Kuhner, Gr. § 484, classed with ἄγρος and various other words, as being 'often used without the article, because such occur frequently in common parlance, and are accordingly so generally in use, that even without the article they are capable of expressing a defined and individualized object.' Examples of the idiom as regards πόλις may be seen in Schaefer's note on Soph. Œd. Tyr. 630, κἀμοὶ πόλεως μέτεστιν, οὐχὶ σοὶ μένω.

κατὰ κώμας—οἰκ.] 'inhabited after the manner of villages.' In fact, Sparta was little more than a cluster of large villages situated around the citadel, or city proper, at various distances and on various situations, some high and some low, but all enclosed with one common wall. See Mueller's Dorien, vol. ii. p. 31.

διπλασίαν—ἢ ἔστιν] Διπλάσιος is one of those words, which, as they imply the idea of a comparative, take its regimen. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 334, who gives several examples of the use with the genitive, but not one with the ἤ and the verb substantive, which is indeed rare, but occurs in Xen. Cyr. iv. 2, 18; and Hist. iv. 8, 22. Athen. iii. 8.

3. λειπομένην δὲ τῶν νῦν] This is one

ποιήσει εἴ τι χρὴ κἀνταῦθα πιστεύειν—ἦν εἰκὸς ἐπὶ τὸ μεῖζον μὲν, ποιητὴν ὄντα, κοσμῆσαι—ὅμως δὲ φαίνεται καὶ οὕτως ἐνδεεστέρα. 4. πεποίηκε γὰρ χιλίων καὶ διακοσίων νεῶν, τὰς μὲν Βοιωτῶν εἴκοσι καὶ ἑκατὸν ἀνδρῶν, τὰς δὲ Φιλοκτήτου πεντήκοντα, δηλῶν, ὡς ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ, τὰς μεγίστας καὶ ἐλαχίστας· ἄλλων γοῦν μεγέθους πέρι ἐν νεῶν καταλόγῳ οὐκ ἐμνήσθη. 5. αὐτερέται δὲ ὅτι ἦσαν καὶ μάχιμοι πάντες, ἐν ταῖς Φιλοκτήτου ναυσὶ δεδήλωκε· τοξότας γὰρ πάντας πεποίηκε τοὺς προσκώπους. 6. περίνεως δὲ οὐκ εἰκὸς πολλοὺς ξυμπλεῖν, ἔξω τῶν βασιλέων καὶ τῶν μάλιστα ἐν τέλει, ἄλλως τε καὶ μέλλοντας of those verbs in which the idea of a comparative is included, and which therefore takes a genitive. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 336.

ἐπὶ τὸ μεῖζον] So ἐπὶ τὸ πλεῖον. It is not necessary, with Bos, to suppose an ellipsis of μέρος, as is manifest from the Latin, in majus.

4. πεποίηκε] 'has made it consist.' A use of the word found in the best writers from Herod. downwards.

χιλίων καὶ διακοσίων νεῶν] On this subject the words of Plutarch are: ἐξ ὧν λογίζεσθαι πάρεστιν, ὅτι τῶν νεῶν πασῶν οὐσῶν ἐγγὺς χιλίων διακοσίων καὶ ἐχουσῶν ἐξ ἑκατὸν ἀνδρῶν, ὁ σύμπας ἀριθμὸς δώδεκά που μυριάδων γίνεται· where, without reason, would Castalio, Ernesti, and Wyttenbach for ἐξ read ἑκάστης. The word is there, as in the present passage, left to be understood. Of ἐξ, as used in this sort of expression, examples sufficient exist elsewhere. And so Eustathius, on the passage of Homer, adduces ἐκ πεντήκοντα ἐρετῶν, and ἐξ ἑκατὸν εἴκοσι.

Pope, I would notice, in his remarks on the Homeric catalogue, has made a strange blunder respecting the above passage of Plutarch. He writes: 'Plutarch was in a mistake when he computed the men 120,000; which proceeded from his supposing 120 in every ship.' Now if Plutarch had so supposed, he would surely have made the total not 120,000, but 144,000. But Plutarch, we see, in reality reckons the number in each to average 100. I mean not by this to defend Plutarch's estimate, which is, I think, too large; for besides the ships of Philoctetus, those fifty of Achilles had only fifty each, as we learn from the Iliad, l. xvi. 168. Hence the medium number (which Thucydides seems to approve being taken) is sufficiently high. The question, however, is at once uncertain and unimportant.

5. αὐτερέται—δεδήλωκε] I would connect ἐν ταῖς Φ. ναυσὶ with δεδήλωκε, and render thus: 'He has, moreover, intimated, by what he said of those on board the vessel of Philoctetes, that all were at once both rowers and warriors.' At αὐτερέται subaud. νεῶν, which is supplied at iii. 18, 5. The term αὐτερ. is well explained by Pollux, vii. 95, as denoting 'one who both rows and fights,' which is very applicable to the present passage, since μάχιμοι is associated with the term; otherwise it might only mean 'one who rows for himself,' and is not rowed by others; is not a mere passenger. The word is of rare occurrence out of Thucydides; though I have noted examples in Heliod., Procop., and Theophyl. Sim.

προσκώπους] Of this word the full meaning is, ὁ πρὸς κώπῳ ἔχων χεῖρα. See Eurip. Alcest. 262 and 373. Æschyl. Agam. 1607, νερτέρᾳ προσήμενος κώπῃ. Aristoph. Ran. 197. I have also noted down the word from Lucian, t. i. 490 and 641. Theoph. Simoc. p. 144 and 156, and other writers.

6. περίνεως] Of this somewhat rare term, the sense here is well expressed by our word supernumeraries. A signification also found in Dio Cass. p. 570, 34, τοὺς περίνεως—κατέταξεν: also occasionally in Procop. Such were likewise called ἐπιβάται, or mere passengers, as opposed to the crew. And so indeed the word is here explained by Pollux, i. 91, and Neoph. Ducas.

τῶν μάλιστα ἐν τέλει] 'those especially in office.' For τέλος sometimes denotes office (as Æschyl. Theb. 246, εἰ δοίης τέλος), and τὰ τέλη, officers of law, magistrates; the thing standing for the person. So Eurip. Iph. A. 990, εὖ ἀρχὰς εἶπας, εὖ καὶ τέλη. The phrase οἱ ἐν τέλει often occurs in Thucyd., and is found in Soph. Ant. 67. Phil. 925. Aj. 1352; and often in Dio Cass., Pausan., and other imitators of the early Attic writers. I have thought proper thus to establish this rare use of the word to denote office, not only because it serves πέλαγος περαιώσεσθαι μετὰ σκευῶν πολεμικῶν, οὐδ' αὖ τὰ πλοῖα κατάφρακτα ἔχοντας, ἀλλὰ τῷ παλαιῷ τρόπῳ λῃστικώτερον παρεσκευασμένα. 7. πρὸς τὰς μεγίστας δ' οὖν καὶ ἐλαχίστας ναῦς τὸ μέσον σκοποῦντι, οὐ πολλοὶ φαίνονται ἐλθόντες, ὡς ἀπὸ πάσης τῆς Ἑλλάδος κοινῇ πεμπόμενοι. XI. Αἴτιον δ' ἦν οὐχ ἡ ὀλιγανθρωπία τοσοῦτον, ὅσον ἡ ἀχρηματία. τῆς γὰρ τροφῆς ἀπορίᾳ τόν τε στρατὸν ἐλάσσω ἤγαγον, καὶ ὅσον ἤλπιζον αὐτόθεν πολεμοῦντα βιοτεύσειν· ἐπειδὴ †δὲ ἀφικόμενοι μάχῃ ἐκράτησαν, (δῆλον δέ· τὸ γὰρ ἔρυμα τῷ στρατοπέδῳ οὐκ ἂν ἐτειχίσαντο·) φαίνονται to account for the Thucydidean phrase, but defends and illustrates an expression in Eurip. Bacch. 815, (Matth.) supposed to be corrupt, and which has therefore been variously altered by the critics, where of Διόνυσος it is said: ὃς πέφυκεν ἐν τέλει Θεὸς Δείνοτατος, ἀνθρώποισι δ' ἠπιώτατος· meaning, 'He is in his office a God very terrible.' A passage this bearing a striking resemblance to one in Deut. vii. 21, 'The Lord thy God is a mighty God and terrible;' and Ps. lxviii. 35, 'O Lord, terrible art thou, out of (or from) thy holy places,' lit. 'exercised from,' i. e. 'in the exercise of thine office as God of Israel,' which is supposed to proceed from His sanctuary, as the type of heaven itself.

μέλλοντας] The grammar requires μελλόντων, for it refers not to the περίνεως, or passengers, only, but to the armament generally. But this is one of the many passages where the construction is adapted rather to the sense than to the words of what had gone before: for περίνεως πολλοὺς ξυμπλεῖν has exactly the same meaning as if Thucyd. had written περίνεως πολλοὺς μετὰ σφῶν ἄγειν, and accordingly μέλλοντας follows, just as if he had so written it. (Arnold.)

πλοῖα κατάφρακτα] 'decked ships,' Schol. σεσανιδωμένα, literally 'with hatches to shut down.' So Pollux, i. 119, κατάφρακτα πλοῖα, and i. 92. In all these cases πλοῖον has the general signification, vessel. Κατάφρακτα and παρεσκευασμένα are, as Goell. observes, prædicati loco, as in Lucian D. M. 8, ἔχων τὸν πέλεκυν ὀξύτατον, otherwise the article would not have been used. In such cases the article has the force of the pronoun possessive. Comp. Ps. v. 28.

7. δ' οὖν] So Bekk. edits, for vulg. γοῦν, found in all the MSS., and which was adopted by Goell. in his 1st edit.; though in his 2nd he restores the old reading, rendering at any rate; a sense, however, by no means apposite. I prefer to read δ' οὖν (or οὖν, which is found in the Clar. and Venet.) because a continuative or resumptive particle is here greatly wanted, inasmuch as the words in question have an evident connection with those preceding, δηλῶν—ἐλαχίστας, the intermediate ones αὐτερέται — παρεσκευασμένα being in a great measure parenthetical and illustrative, similarly (I would observe) as certain portions in St. John vi. 22—24; xviii. 5, 6, and 24. The word may best be rendered accordingly.

ὡς ἀπὸ πάσης] for, i. e. 'considered as from the whole.' On this restrictive sense of ὡς, see Matth. Gr. Gr.

Ch. XI. 1. τῆς τροφῆς ἀπορίᾳ] The article is used as infra ii. 52, τοῦ ὕδατος ἐπιθυμ. and other passages. In this case the force of the article is, I apprehend, that of reference, namely, to some word left to be understood. The full sense here is, 'the food necessary for their sustenance.' As confirmatory of the above view, I would advert to what may be said to form the complete expression infra vii. 82, τῆς ἀναγκαιοτάτης ἐνδείᾳ διαίτης.

τὸν στρατὸν ἐλάσσω ἤγαγον] The force of the article may be thus expressed: 'They brought the (or their) army in less numbers.' After ὅσον subaud. μόνον.

βιοτεύσειν] This the Scholiast explains τροφὴν ἔχειν. The word is peculiar to Thucydides and his imitators.

ἐπειδὴ δὲ] The sense of this obscure passage may be thus expressed: 'Nay, after having on their arrival gained a battle (for that they did so, is plain, otherwise they could not have erected the fortification around their camp), they appear even then not to have employed their whole force, but to have turned their attention to the cultivation of the Chersonesus, and to piratical depredations, through mere want of subsistence.'

δῆλον δὲ] See note supra c. 8; and Elmsl. on Soph. Œd. Col. 146.

δ' οὐδ' ἐνταῦθα πάσῃ τῇ δυνάμει χρησάμενοι, ἀλλὰ πρὸς γεωργίαν τῆς Χερσονήσου τραπόμενοι καὶ λῃστείαν τῆς τροφῆς ἀπορίᾳ. ᾗ καὶ μᾶλλον οἱ Τρῶες, αὐτῶν διεσπαρμένων, τὰ δέκα ἔτη ἀντεῖχον βίᾳ, τοῖς ἀεὶ ὑπολειπομένοις ἀντίπαλοι ὄντες. 2. περιουσίαν δὲ εἰ ἤλθον ἔχοντες τροφῆς, καὶ ὄντες ἀθρόοι, ἄνευ λῃστείας καὶ γεωργίας, ξυνεχῶς τὸν πόλεμον διέφερον, ῥᾳδίως ἂν μάχῃ κρατοῦντες εἷλον· οἵ γε καὶ οὐκ ἀθρόοι, ἀλλὰ μέρει τῷ ἀεὶ παρόντι ἀντεῖχον· πολιορκίᾳ δ' ἂν προσκαθεζόμενοι ἐν ἐλάσσονί τε χρόνῳ καὶ ἀπονώτερον τὴν Τροίαν εἷλον. 3. ἀλλὰ δι' ἀχρηματίαν τά τε πρὸ τούτων ἀσθενῆ ἦν, καὶ αὐτά γε δὴ ταῦτα, ὀνομαστότατα τῶν πρὶν γενόμενα, δηλοῦται τοῖς ἔργοις ὑποδεέστερα ὄντα τῆς φήμης, καὶ τοῦ νῦν περὶ αὐτῶν διὰ τοὺς ποιητὰς λόγου κατεσχηκότος· XII. ἐπεὶ καὶ μετὰ τὰ Τρωϊκὰ ἡ Ἑλλὰς ἔτι μετανίστατό τε καὶ κατῳκίζετο, ὥστε μὴ ἠσυχάσασα αὐξηθῆναι. (ἥ τε γὰρ ἀναχώοὐδ' ἐνταῦθα] 'ne tum quidem,' as in Æschyl. Prom. 212, and often in Xenoph., Aristid., and other authors. And so in Latin, ibi for tum.

λῃστείαν] Here (as often in Thucyd. and the more ancient writers) the word is used, not of absolute piracy, but of that petty war and pillage of which individuals rather than the state were the object; and which bore some resemblance to the privateering of modern times.

Βίᾳ is to be construed with ἀντεῖχον, and rendered, 'held out in pertinacious resistance.'

2. ξυνεχῶς τὸν πόλεμον διέφερον] 'had without intermission carried on war so as to bring it to a conclusion.' So the Schol. ἐξήνυον The phrase is used by Herodot., Aristoph., Dion. Hal., Joseph., and others.

παρόντι] So Pop. and Goell. edit (from a majority of the best MSS.) for vulg. παρατυχόντι, and very properly; since the vulg. yields a sense little suitable to the context. Ἀντεῖχον, 'maintained the contest.'

πολιορκίᾳ δ' ἂν προσκαθεζόμενοι] 'had they fairly sat down to the siege, and not converted it into a blockade.' On ἂν with a particip. see Matth. Gr.

3. γε δὴ] 'sanè quidem, adeo.' The γε is in some MSS. not found, being, we may suppose, accidentally omitted.

ὑποδεέστερα τῆς φήμης] Meaning, 'the fame or report concerning,' &c.

Ch. XII. 1. ἐπεὶ καὶ] 'nam etiam.'

κατῳκίζετο] So I have edited, with Pop., Bekk., and Goell., from many of the best MSS.; internal evidence being much in favour of this reading. The sense of the two terms, μετανίστατο and κατῳκίζετο, may be thus expressed: 'was still migrating [from place to place], and was being settled' (or peopled with inhabitants), i. e. was not yet settled. Opposed to this is the state of Greece adverted to supra, namely, that in which it was thoroughly settled, so as to send out colonies. Of κατοικίζεσθαι, as used in the above sense, a few, and only a few, examples are found; e. g. in Plato (though used not of a country, but of a city), p. 704, C. κατοικίζεται ἡ πόλις. 702, E. τὸ δ' ἄστυ κατῳκισμένον ἦν. 702, C. τὸ Δωρικὸν ἐθεασάμεθα κατοικιζόμενον. And so in our author, infra ii. 17, 2, προῄδει μὴ ἐπ' ἀγαθῷ ποτε αὐτὸ κατοικισθησόμενον, scil. τὸ Πελασγικόν.

Finally, in these words, ἡ Ἑλλὰς ἔτι μετανίστατό τε καὶ κατῳκίζετο, one cannot but notice the poetic, nay, almost Pindaric, boldness of expression, for what in more prosaic phraseology would have been conveyed by the plainer terms, ἐν Ἑλλάδι ἔτι μεταναστάσεις καὶ κατοικίσεις ἦσαν.

This whole passage of our author was, I would notice, evidently in the mind of Philochorus in lib. i. of his Attic history, a fragment of which is preserved in the Etym. Mag. 160, 5, 10, Ἄστυ δὲ προσηγόρευσαν τὴν πόλιν, διὰ τὸ πρότερον νομάδας (scil. ὄντας) καὶ σποράδην ζῶντας, τότε συνελθεῖν καὶ στῆναι ἐκ τῆς πλάνης ἐπὶ τὰς κοινὰς οἰκήσεις, ὅθεν οὐ μετανέστησαν: where, for καὶ στῆναι, I conj. καὶ καταστῆναι, 'to become fixed and settled.'

ὥστε μὴ ἠσυχάσασα αὐξηθῆναι] Goell., after Pop., regards this as one of those passages in which, when a particip. is added to a finite verb, one negation is meant to be applied to both; referring, for examples, to i. 141, and iv. 126. But it may be doubted whether the μὴ be here meant to be so taken (namely, for ὥστε μὴ ἡσυχήσασα, μὴ αὐξηθῆναι.) 'Ησυχ. is for ἡσυχάσασαν, and that for ὥστε μὴ ἡσυχάσαι καὶ αὐξηθῆναι, or ὥστε μὴ ἡσυχίᾳ αὐξηθῆναι; for, as the Scholiast truly observes, ἡσυχία καὶ αὔξησιν ποιεῖ.

ρησις τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἐξ Ἰλίου χρονία γενομένη πολλὰ ἐνεόχμωσε, καὶ στάσεις ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ ἐγίγνοντο, ἀφ' ὧν ἐκπίπτοντες τὰς πόλεις ἔκτιζον. 2. Βοιωτοί τε γὰρ οἱ νῦν, ἑξηκοστῷ ἔτει μετὰ Ἰλίου ἅλωσιν, ἐξ Ἄρνης ἀναστάντες ὑπὸ Θεσσαλῶν, τὴν νῦν μὲν Βοιωτίαν, πρότερον δὲ Καδμηΐδα γῆν καλουμένην, ᾤκισαν·—ἦν δὲ αὐτῶν καὶ ἀποδασμὸς πρότερον ἐν τῇ γῇ ταύτῃ, ἀφ' ὧν καὶ ἐς Ἴλιον ἐστράτευσαν·—Δωριῆς τε ὀγδοηκοστῷ ἔτει ξὺν Ἡρακλείδαις Πελοπόννησον ἔσχον·) 3. ‡μόλις τε ἐν πολλῷ χρόνῳ ἡσυχάσασα

ἤ τε γὰρ ἀναχώρησις—ἔσχον] These words are (as I have made them) parenthetical, and intended to exemplify the transmigrations and the settlings just before spoken of.

πολλὰ ἐνεόχμωσε] 'introduced many changes.' The recent editors have rightly adopted this for the old ἐνεώχμωσε, which is not Greek. So, by an evident imitation of our author, Procop. 100, 32, πολλὰ ἐνεόχμωσε: and 318, 30. Appian ii. 27, 31, χρόνος τε ἐπελθὼν ἐνεόχμωσε πάντα.

ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολύ] So I read, with Pop., from several of the best MSS.; such being more in the style of our author than the common reading, ὡς ἐπὶ πολύ, which has been retained by Bekk. and Goell.

ἀφ' ὧν] scil. στάσεων, not πόλεων, as some understand. So supra ch. 2, 6, we have οἱ στάσει ἐκπίπτοντες. At ἐκπίπτοντες Poppo would understand οἱ πολῖται, taken from the preceding πόλεσι. I would prefer to read on conjecture, οἱ ἐκπ., and to understand οἱ στασιῶται. By τὰς πόλεις are meant such cities as were colonized.

2. Βοιωτοί τε γὰρ] Of γὰρ the sense here is (as often elsewhere), exempli gratiâ.

μετὰ Ἰλίου ἅλωσιν] The art. after μετὰ, though found in some MSS., is by no means necessary. See Poppo.

ἐξ Ἄρνης ἀναστάντες ὑπὸ] 'expelled from Arne:' note the aor. act. in a passive sense; of which several examples occur, both as respects ἀναστ., and especially ἐξαν., in Dio Cass., Josephus, Procop., Pausan., and other writers who have imitated Thucyd.: though, indeed, the use in question did not originate with our author, being found (at least in the instance of ἐξαν.) in Herodotus.

Arne was a territory and city of Magnesia in Thessaly, from which the Bœotian Arne, afterwards called Cheronæa, was colonized and named.

ᾤκισαν] So Bekk., Pop., and also Goell. (in his 1st edition) edit, for vulg. ᾠκησαν, such being required by the context. In his 2nd edition, however, Goell. has restored the old reading.

ἀποδασμὸς] The term properly signifies 'a part abstracted from the whole' of any thing (as in Dion. Hal. Ant. 417, 16); but also, as here, a portion taken away from a multitude. And so the term is used in Agath. p. 35 and 66. Euseb. Præp. Ev. ix. 41. Theophyl. viii. 1, cited by Wessel. on Hdot. i. 146, Φωκέες ἀποδάσμιοι, i. e. a reliquis divulsi.

ὀγδοηκοστῷ ἔτει] 'in the 80th year' [afterwards]. A remarkable, but not very unfrequent, ellipse. Ἔσχον is for κατέσχον.

3. μόλις] So, for vulg. μόγις, Haack, Poppo, Goell., and Bekk. edit, from several of the best MSS.: though, indeed, the authority of MSS. is but slender in cases where two words are perpetually confounded; which may pre-eminently be said of μόγις and μόλις. And, indeed, the difficulty of determining in such cases is increased by the distinctive sense of each word being undetermined by philologists; and no wonder; the two words in question being, there is every reason to suppose, originally the same; or rather the one a dialectical variation of the other. Moreover, the senses ascribed to both respectively are so similar, as absolutely to merge into each other; and hence the difficulty of fixing the sense of either in any given passage. In the present instance, the commentators suppose the sense intended to be, slowly at length. Yet from the occurrence immediately after of ἐν πολλῷ χρόνῳ, a pleonasm is thus involved, which might, indeed, seem to be ἡ Ἑλλὰς βεβαίως, καὶ οὐκέτι ἀνισταμένη, ἀποικίας ἐξέπεμπε· καὶ Ἴωνας μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ νησιωτῶν τοὺς πολλοὺς ᾤκισαν, Ἰταλίας δὲ καὶ Σικελίας τὸ πλέον Πελοποννήσιοι τῆς τε ἄλλης Ἑλλάδος ἔστιν ἃ χωρία· πάντα δὲ ταῦτα ὕστερον τῶν Τρωϊκῶν ἐκτίσθη.

defended by a passage of Æschyl. Pers. 515, Θρῄκην περάσαντες μόγις πολλῷ πόνῳ. But there the reading is not quite settled, the Schol. and early editions having μόλις, not to say that in that passage there appears to be a commixture of two senses, namely, vix tandem and ægre, difficulter, similarly as in Hdot. i. 116, ἐπὶ χρόνον ἄφθογγος ἦν μόγις (without var. lect.) δὲ δὴ (for ἤδη) κοτε ἀνενεχθεὶς εἶπε, &c. Also in Hom. Il. xxi. 417, μόγις (without var. lect.) ἐσαγείρετο θυμόν. Eurip. Cycl. 573, ὡς ἐξένευσα μόγις. In the passage, however, of our author, the sense seems to be simply ægrè, vix; and as μόλις has constantly that signification, I have therefore given the preference to the reading μόλις.

ἀνισταμένη] Used as μετανίστατο at the beginning of the chapter.

τὸ πλέον] So Pop., from 8 MSS., while Bekk. and Goell. retain the vulg. τὸ πλεῖστον.

Ch. XIII. 1. γιγνομένης] So Bekk., Goell., and Pop. edit.

τὰ πολλὰ] for τὸ ἐπὶ πολύ, or ἐπὶ τὸ πολύ.

τυραννίδες] 'despotic monarchies,' as distinguished from the βασιλεῖαι, or regular monarchies, just afterwards mentioned. The difference being this, that in the latter case the power was legitimate, hereditary, and limited; in the former, usurped and despotic (at least nominally so, there being no sort of constitutional or legal check on the will of the monarch), and ceasing at the death of the party possessing it.

πρότερον δὲ—βασιλεῖαι] Render: 'for formerly there were kingships occupied by hereditary right, and with certain defined privileges and prerogatives.' Of πατρικαὶ the sense cannot be better represented than by the term hereditary, the word being used to denote 'what a man receives from his ancestors,' κατὰ διαδοχὴν γένους, as the Schol. expresses it (see infra viii. 6, and note); and so the word is explained by Isocr. Evag. p. 195, to mean 'a dominion which a man receives from his father.' So the term is used in Aristot. Pol. iii. 10, where the kingships of the heroic ages are described as πατρίαι καὶ κατὰ νόμον. And a little before, it is said (by an evident allusion to the present passage), ἔχουσι δ' αἱ βασιλεῖαι τῶν βαρβάρων τὴν δύναμιν πᾶσαν παραπλησίαν τυραννικῇ, εἰσὶ δὲ ὅμως κατὰ νόμον καὶ πατρικαί. Such, too, before the time of our author, was the use of the word by Pindar, Pyth. x. 110, ἐν δ' ἀγαθοῖσι κεῖνται πατρῳαὶ κεδναὶ πολίων κυβερνάσεις. It is proper to observe, however, that the term in question is to be understood in a qualified and popular, rather than in a strict and absolute sense; for, as says Goell. 'constat ætate heroica regnum paternum non jure hæreditario ad filios transmissum esse, et videntur potius populus ac principes successorem legisse, atque tantum ex usu et consuetudine filios in regna paterna successisse.' Moreover, as this kingship was not absolutely hereditary, so in its exercise it was not absolute, but limited according to laws and customs. From Hom. Il. ii. 204, and various other passages of ancient writers, it appears that the monarch recognized the laws as the only measure of regal power, and the people as the source of all power; and that even hereditary right required to be united with merit, personal or intellectual, in order to maintain authority. So Dion. Hal. Antiq. p. 336, Sylb. κατ' ἀρχὰς μὲν γὰρ ἅπασα πόλις Ἑλλὰς ἐβασιλεύετο, πλὴν οὐχ, ὥσπερ τὰ βάρβαρα ἔθνη, δεσποτικῶς, ἀλλὰ κατὰ νόμους τε καὶ ἐθισμοὺς πατρίους· καὶ κράτιστος ἦν βασιλεὺς ὁ δικαιότατός τε καὶ νομιμώτατος, καὶ μηδὲν ἐκδιαιτώμενος τῶν πατρίων. δηλοῖ δὲ καὶ Ὅμηρος, δικασπόλους τε καλῶν τοὺς ναυτικά τε ἐξηρτύετο ἡ Ἑλλὰς, καὶ τῆς θαλάσσης μᾶλλον ἀντείχοντο. 2. πρῶτοι δὲ Κορίνθιοι λέγονται ἐγγύτατα τοῦ νῦν τρόπου μεταχειρίσαι τὰ περὶ τὰς ναῦς, καὶ τριήρεις πρῶτον ἐν Κορίνθῳ τῆς Ἑλλάδος †ἐνναυπηγηθῆναι. 3. φαίνεται δὲ καὶ Σαμίοις Ἀμεινοκλῆς Κορίνθιος ναυπηγὸς ναῦς ποιήσας τέσσαρας. ἔτη δ' ἐστὶ μάλιστα τριακόσια ἐς τὴν τελευτὴν τοῦδε τοῦ πολέμου ὅτε Ἀμεινοκλῆς Σαμίοις ἦλθε. 4. ναυμαχία τε †παλαιτάτη ὧν ἴσμεν γίγνεται Κορινθίων πρὸς Κερκυραίους· ἔτη δὲ μάλιστα καὶ ταύτη

In the remaining terms, ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς γέρασι, the ἐπὶ expresses condition; and ῥητοῖς is well explained by the Schol. ὁμολογουμένοις, determinate: a sense illustrated by Eurip. Hipp. 461, χρῆν σ' ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς ἄρα πατέρα φυτεύειν. Also by Lucian, Sat. § 2 (a passage evidently written with a view to these words of our author), ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς παραλαμβάνω τὴν δυναστείαν. Frequent examples, indeed, occur in the best writers of the phrase ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς, to denote what is conditional or definite. So Dion. Hal. Antiq. iii. 60, p. 567, sub init. ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς τισι ὁμολογίας ποιεῖσθαι. Finally, after the ῥητοῖς there is an ellipse of δικαίοις, which word is expressed in Dion. Hal. Antiq. x. p. 603, 5, Sylb.

Of γέρασι the sense seems to be, privilegiis, prærogativis, so called from the honour which they carried with them. In nearly this sense the word is often used by Homer and Pindar. See Damm, Lex. Hom., who, after observing that it primarily denotes 'the principal share of any thing' apportioned to the king, proceeds to remark: 'ergo γέρας in genere omne præcipuum notat quod quis præ aliis habet, etiam præcipuum honorem aliquem.' It is used in Pindar, Pyth. 5, 23, to denote the royal dignity generally; and in 7, 58, the regal office. In Herod. i. 161, 14. i. 165, 3. and vi. 56, 59. are mentioned certain γέρεα βασίλεια belonging to the kings of Sparta. But the present passage is most aptly illustrated by the following one, from an epistle of Pisistratus to Solon, in Diog. Laert. Sol. l. i. 53. οὐ πλεῖόν τι φέρομαι τοῦ ἀξιώματος καὶ τῆς τιμῆς, ὁμοῖα δὲ καὶ τοῖς πρὶν βασιλεῦσιν ἦν τὰ ῥητὰ γέρα So, too, Æschyl. Prom. v. 237, δαίμοσιν νέμει γέρα Ἄλλοισιν ἄλλα, καὶ διεστοιχίζετο ἀρχήν. Thus also we have γέρα τὰ νομιζόμενα infra, c. 25.

ναυτικά τε ἐξηρτύετο] 'began to construct navies.' In ἐξ. we have an usual nautical term. The middle force of the verb may be expressed thus: 'built herself navies.'

2. μεταχειρίσαι τὰ περὶ τὰς ναῦς] for μεταχειρίσασθαι τὰ π. τ. ν. 'rem navalem tractasse.' So iv. 18, 4, πόλεμον μεταχ. Of this use of the active for the deponent, examples occur elsewhere in our author in the cases of λῃΐζειν, πλωΐζειν, &c.

ἐνναυπηγηθῆναι] This reading I have thought proper to receive, with Haack, Pop., and Goell., instead of the old one, ναυπηγ., which has been retained by Bekk. Besides the strong evidence in favour of the above reading, supplied by its being found in the far greater part of the MSS., so difficult is it to imagine how the ἐν could have crept in, had it not come from the writer, that, notwithstanding it may seem here superfluous, I have received it, especially since our author not unfrequently uses compounds in ἐν, and occasionally employs them together with another ἐν joined to the noun; e. g. infra iii. 104, ἐναποθνήσκειν ἐν τῇ νήσῳ· and ii. 57, et al.

3. Σαμίοις] 'for the Samians.' See Liban. Or. 580.

μάλιστα] On the force of this word affixed to numbers, philologists are divided in opinion. Goell. objects to circiter, and explains it by ferme. But these two significations may be said to merge into each other; and the true sense seems to be, 'thereabouts, a little over or under, as near as may be;' a mode of expression, as regards chronological matters, commendably cautious.

4. παλαιτάτη] So, from twelve of the best MSS., Pop., Goell., and Bekk., for vulg. παλαιοτάτη. Yet it may be questioned whether the latter be not the more ancient form; letters, as Horne Tooke says, being, like soldiers, apt to drop off in a long march. Certainly the word is found in Pindar, and not unfrequently in Plato; and, from its occurring in writers accustomed to imitate our author, it was doubt-ἑξήκοντα καὶ διακόσιά ἐστι μέχρι τοῦ αὐτοῦ χρόνου. 5. οἰκοῦντες γὰρ τὴν πόλιν οἱ Κορίνθιοι ἐπὶ τοῦ ἰσθμοῦ, ἀεὶ δή ποτε ἐμπόριον εἶχον, τῶν Ἑλλήνων τὸ πάλαι κατὰ γῆν τὰ πλείω ἢ κατὰ θάλασσαν, τῶν τε ἐντὸς Πελοποννήσου καὶ τῶν ἔξω, διὰ τῆς ἐκείνων παρ' ἀλλήλους ἐπιμισγόντων· χρήμασί τε δυνατοὶ ἦσαν, (ὡς καὶ τοῖς παλαιοῖς ποιηταῖς δεδήλωται· 'ἀφνειὸν' γὰρ ἐπωνόμασαν τὸ χωρίον·) ἐπειδή τε οἱ Ἕλληνες μᾶλλον ἐπλώϊζον, τὰς ναῦς κτησάμενοι τὸ λῃστικὸν καθῄρουν· καὶ ἐμπόριον παρέχοντες ἀμφότερα, δυνατὴν ἔσχον χρημάτων προσόδῳ τὴν πόλιν. 6. καὶ Ἴωσιν ὕστερον πολὺ γίγνεται ναυτικὸν ἐπὶ Κύρου Περσῶν πρώτου βασιλεύοντος καὶ Καμβύσου τοῦ υἱέος αὐτοῦ, τῆς τε καθ' ἑαυτοὺς θαλάσσης, Κύρῳ πολεμοῦντες, ἐκράτησάν τινα χρόνον. 7. καὶ Πολυκράτης Σάμου τυραννῶν ἐπὶ Καμβύσου, ναυτικῷ ἰσχύων, ἄλλας τε τῶν νήσων ὑπηκόους ἐποιήσατο, καὶ Ῥήνειαν ἑλὼν ἀνέθηκε τῷ Ἀπόλλωνι τῷ Δηλίῳ. Φωκαῆς τε Μασσαλίαν οἰκίζοντες Καρχηδονίους ἐνίκων ναυμαχοῦντες· δυνατώτατα γὰρ ταῦτα τῶν ναυτικῶν ἦν.

XIV. Φαίνεται δὲ καὶ ταῦτα, πολλαῖς γενεαῖς ὕστερα γενόμενα τῶν Τρωϊκῶν, τριήρεσι μὲν ὀλίγαις χρώμενα, πεντηκοντόροις δ' less found at least in some MSS. at an early period.

5. οἰκοῦντες γὰρ] The γὰρ may be rendered nimirum.

ἀεὶ δή ποτε] In this formula the ποτε is to be referred to ἀεί. And of ἀεί ποτε, several examples occur in Xenophon. The δὴ has a slightly intensive force, as in the formula καὶ δή ποτε, which is nearly equiv. to καί ποτε in Xen. An. i. 5, 7.

ἐμπόριον εἶχον] Besides the passages here referred to by commentators, see Strabo, p. 548, 5. Plut. Arat. 16, s. fin. Aristid. i. 15, A.

παρ' ἀλλήλους ἐπιμισγόντων] So supra ch. 2, 2, ἐπιμιγνύντες ἀλλήλοις.

τοῖς παλαιοῖς ποιηταῖς] Alluding solely to Homer, who, Il. ii. 570, has ἀφνειόν τε Κόρινθον. And so in a passage of Acts xvii. 28, the use of the plural, ὡς καί τινες τῶν καθ' ὑμᾶς ποιητῶν εἰρήκασι, will not prove that St. Paul thus meant in reality to cite from more than one poet.

ἐπλώϊζον] 'rei nauticæ operam dabant.' So Bekk., Pop., and Goell. edit for ἐπλωΐζοντο. The alteration rests solely on MS. authority, and is not supported by general usage; for the deponent form is far more common. Yet the active form, however rare, does occur (as in Plato, p. 388), and is the more ancient (being found in Hesiod, Ἔργ. 252, πλωΐζεσκεν νηυσί): and as Thucydides usually prefers the older forms, this is preferable.

τὸ λῃστικὸν καθῄρουν] That is, the Corinthians, as appears from what follows; and this is confirmed by the use of the article with ναῦς (i. e. 'the ships' just mentioned): κτησ. 'having acquired.'

ἀμφότερα] So Bekk. and Pop. edit, from the best MSS., for vulg. ἀμφότεροι. On which adverbial use, for ἀμφοτέρωθεν ('both by land and by sea') the reader is referred to Buttm. Gr. § 150. There is in this case an ellips. of κατὰ, which word is expressed in Dio Cass. p. 128, 7, et al. In Liban. Or. 584, we have ἐπ' ἀμφ.

6. υἱέος] On this Thucydidean and old Attic form, (which is edited from the best MSS. by Ha., Bekk., and Pop.) see Buttm., and Matth. Gr. Gr. So ἄστεος, ἠμίσεος, and βραχέος, adduced by Poppo, Proleg. i. 221.

καθ' ἑαυτοὺς] 'on their own coast, opposite to them,' namely, the Ægæan sea, at least the western part and that bordering on Greece.

7. Πολυκράτης] In Herod. iv. 39 and 120.

'Ρήν. ἀνέθηκε τῷ 'Α.] namely, by fastening a chain to it, from Delos, as we learn from iii. 104.

CH. XIV. 1. πλοίοις μακροῖς] 'long barks,' namely, like the long-boats of our men-of-war, and bearing a certain resemblance to the piratical barges of earlier ἔτι καὶ πλοίοις μακροῖς ἐξηρτυμένα, ὥσπερ ἐκεῖνα. 2. ὀλίγον τε πρὸ τῶν Μηδικῶν καὶ τοῦ Δαρείου θανάτου, ὃς μετὰ Καμβύσην Περσῶν ἐβασίλευσε, τριήρεις περί τε Σικελίαν τοῖς τυράννοις ἐς πλῆθος ἐγένοντο καὶ Κερκυραίοις· ταῦτα γὰρ τελευταῖα πρὸ τῆς Ξέρξου στρατείας ναυτικὰ ἀξιόλογα ἐν τῇ Ἑλλάδι κατέστη. 3. Αἰγινῆται γὰρ καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ εἴ τινες ἄλλοι, βραχέα ἐκέκτηντο, καὶ τούτων τὰ πολλὰ πεντηκοντόρους· ὀψέ τε ἀφ' οὗ Ἀθηναίους Θεμιστοκλῆς ἔπεισεν Αἰγινήταις πολεμοῦντας, καὶ ἅμα τοῦ βαρβάρου προσδοκίμου ὄντος, τὰς ναῦς ποιήσασθαι αἷσπερ καὶ ἐναυμάχησαν· καὶ αὗται οὔπω εἶχον διὰ πάσης καταστρώματα.

XV. Τὰ μὲν οὖν ναυτικὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων τοιαῦτα ἦν, τά τε παλαιὰ καὶ τὰ ὕστερον ‡γενόμενα. ἰσχὺν δὲ περιεποιήσαντο ὅμως οὐκ ἐλαχίστην οἱ προσσχόντες αὐτοῖς, χρημάτων τε προσόδῳ καὶ ἄλλων ἀρχῇ· ἐπιπλέοντες γὰρ τὰς νήσους κατεστρέφοντο, καὶ μάλιστα ὅσοι μὴ διαρκῆ εἶχον χώραν. 2. κατὰ γῆν δὲ πόλεμος,

ἐξηρτυμένα] 'formed, composed,' &c., for ἡτοιμασμένα. Ὥσπερ ἐκεῖνα, scil. τὰ παλαιὰ, τῶν Τρωϊκῶν.

2. ὀλίγον τε πρὸ—ἐς πλῆθος ἐγένοντο] The sense may be thus expressed: 'And it was [but] a short time before the Median war and the death of Darius, (who succeeded Cambyses on the throne of Persia,) that triremes, in any considerable number, were possessed by the tyrants around Sicily, and by the Corcyræans.' At ὀλίγον sup. μόνον, as just after at ἀξιόλογα. Moreover, περὶ Σικ. τοῖς τυράννοις is for τοῖς τυρ. περὶ Σικ. And περὶ Σικ. is not to be taken simply for Σικελικοῖς, but regarded as a significant phrase, meant to advert to the situation of these petty Grecian absolute monarchies around Sicily (i. e. its coast), just as infra vi. 2, the Phœnician settlements too are said to be περὶ πᾶσαν τὴν Σικελίαν.

ταῦτα γὰρ τελευταῖα — κατέστη] At ἀξιόλογα sup. μόνον, the meaning being, 'These last were the only navies before the expedition of Xerxes, worth mentioning in Greece.' Κατέστη, lit. exstiterunt.

3. εἴ τινες ἄλλοι] 'such others as had any;' where we have a commixture of two clauses. The οἵτινες found in many MSS. is evidently a gloss. Βραχέα, for μικρὰ, 'inconsiderable;' as i. 89, 130. ii. 22, 76. vii. 77, and also in Herodot. and other of the best writers.

ὀψέ τε ἀφ' οὗ] scil. ἦν: lit. 'late since, or before.'

τοῦ βαρβάρου] for τῶν βαρβάρων, as in Latin Romanus stands for Romani.

προσδοκίμου ὄντος] 'being expected [to come]', which last term is expressed in a passage of Diod. Sic. t. vii. 180, πρ. ἦν ὁ βασιλεὺς ἥξειν εἰς τὴν, &c. And so in Hdot. v. 108, we have: ἐξάγγελλεται—Ἀρτύβιον προσδόκιμον ἐς τὴν Κύπρον εἶναι, where I conjecture for εἶναι, ἴέναι.

καὶ αὗται, &c.] for καίπερ α., as Bauer and Haack explain. Διὰ πάσης, sup. νέως, 'throughout ship.' An ellipse thought by Pop. and Goell. harsh. It is certainly unusual; but we may compare the frequent one of διαπαντός.

The ancient ships, it seems, had not at first decks throughout, but only, as Neoph. Duc. says, ἐν πρώρᾳ καὶ κατὰ πρύμναν· τὰ δὲ μέσα ἦσαν κενά τε καὶ κοῖλα. On the subject of the decking of ships, see Wachsmuth, Ant. Gr. i. p. 381.

Ch. XV. 1. περιεποιήσαντο] sibi compararunt, 'acquired for themselves.' Οἱ προσσχόντες αὐτοῖς, scil. τοῖς ναυτικοῖς, 'those who attended to [the formation of] them,' i. e. the shipping. So Hdot. ix. 33, προσεῖχε γυμνασίοισι. 1 Tim. iv. 13, πρόσεχε τῇ ἀναγνώσει. The general sense meant to be expressed in these and the words following is, that 'all those Grecian states that acquired (περιεποιήσαντο) any power, acquired it by their possessing a navy.'

καὶ μάλιστα ὅσοι μὴ διαρκῆ εἶχον χώραν] 'and such especially as, like the Athenians, had not a territory sufficient to supply their wants [did so].' Διαρκῆ, for αὐταρκῆ, as in Plut. Sol. ap. Steph. Thes. ἡ χώρα διαρκής.

ὅθεν τις καὶ δύναμις παρεγένετο, οὐδεὶς ξυνέστη· πάντες δὲ ἦσαν, ὅσοι καὶ ἐγένοντο, πρὸς ὁμόρους τοὺς σφετέρους ἑκάστοις· καὶ ἐκδήμους στρατείας πολὺ ἀπὸ τῆς ἑαυτῶν ἐπ' ἄλλων καταστροφῇ οὐκ ἐξήεσαν οἱ Ἕλληνες. 3. οὐ γὰρ ξυνεστήκεσαν πρὸς τὰς μεγίστας πόλεις ὑπήκοοι, οὐδ' αὖ αὐτοὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ἴσης κοινὰς στρατείας ἐποιοῦντο· κατ' ἀλλήλους δὲ μᾶλλον, ὡς ἕκαστοι, οἱ ἀστυγείτονες ἐπολέμουν. 4. μάλιστα δὲ ἐς τὸν πάλαι ποτὲ γενόμενον πόλεμον πάντες δὲ—ἑκάστοις] The construction is: πάντες δὲ (scil. πόλεμοι) ὅσοι καὶ ἐγένοντο, ἦσαν ἑκάστοις πρὸς ὁμόρους τοὺς σφετέρους, 'such even as there were,' &c., the καὶ having here the sense of even, as in 1 Cor. xi. 6, καὶ κειράσθω. Mark ix. 13, ὅτι καὶ Ἠλίας ἐλήλυθε. And so our author just before uses καί: ὅθεν τις καὶ δύναμις παρεγένετο. The clausula ὅσοι καὶ ἐγένοντο, is thrown in by way of correction, being meant to intimate the fewness of their wars.

2. ξυνέστη] 'conflatum est,' arose.

πολὺ ἀπὸ τῆς ἑαυτῶν] These words are put within brackets by Pop., and Goell. thinks they ought to be cancelled, as containing nothing but what is found in ἐκδήμους. But that opinion was founded on the error of interpreting ἐκδ., from the common dictionaries and Stephens' version, longe remota, longinqua; whereas ἔκδημος is often put for ἀπόδημος, in the sense abroad, foreign, without defining the distance. So ii. 10, ἐπὶ ἔκδημον ἔξοδον, 'to a foreign expedition,' and Ælian H. Anim. ii. 346, ταῖς ἐκδήμοις στρατιαῖς ἕπονται γύπες. Eurip. Hipp. 37, ἔκδημον αἰνέσας φυγήν, 'foreign exile.' And so in Pollux i. 177, we have, ἐρεῖς ἐκδήμους πολέμους, καὶ ἀποδήμους. Indeed this was a frequent Atticism. So Mœris says: Ἔκδημος Ἀττικῶς· ἀπόδημος Ἑλληνικῶς. The sense, then, far off, is to be sought for in the very words proposed to be expunged; which, as they thus contain an addition of sense, and have, besides, the support of every MS., and since no good reason can be imagined why they should have been foisted in, I have, with Bekk., thought proper to retain them; especially since I cannot but suspect that our author intended therein an allusion to the unfortunate expedition of the Athenians to Sicily, of which it is said (in nearly the very words here used), infra vi. 21, πολὺ ἀπὸ τῆς ἡμετέρας αὐτῶν μέλλομεν πλεῖν. And so also at vi. 33, 5, we have: πολὺ ἀπὸ τῆς ἑαυτῶν. Indeed the words in question are sufficiently defended by the antithesis, so frequent in our author, between τῆς ἑαυτῶν and ἄλλων.

3. οὐ ξυνεστήκεσαν] 'had not leagued themselves.' The recent editors have very properly cancelled the αἱ, which had formerly place before ὑπήκοοι, the construction, they say, being, οὐ γὰρ ξυν. (ὡς) ὑπήκοοι πρὸς τ. μ. π. And so the Schol. explains: αἱ ἐλάττους πόλεις οὐ συνεμάχουν ταῖς μεγάλαις ὑπήκοοι οὖσαι. Such an ellip., however, as αἱ ἐλ. πόλ., would be not a little harsh. Nor will there be any occasion to resort to it, if we trace the construction as follows: Οὐ γὰρ πόλεις ξυνεστήκεσαν ὡς ὑπήκοοι πρὸς τὰς μεγίστας scil. πόλεις, the word πόλις being not unfrequently in our author taken twice in construction. Or, supposing οἱ Ἕλληνες to be the nomin. to ξυν., the construction will be: οὐ γὰρ [οἱ Ἕλληνες] ξυν. (ὡς) ὑπήκοοι πρὸς τ. μ. π., and understanding the sense of πόλεις αἱ ἐλάττους to be, by the force of the πρὸς implied, the general meaning will be, 'there were no subject-leagues, by the smaller states taking their stand with (πρὸς) one or other of the larger.' So infra iii. 11, we have: ἐχόντων πρὸς ὅ, τι χρὴ στῆναι.

οὐδ' αὖ αὐτοὶ] Here αὖ has been very properly inserted, from several MSS., by all the recent editors. At ἀπὸ τῆς ἴσης, the Schol., Goell., and Pop. would supply συντελείας. But the regular ellips. in such a case is rather μοίρας (which word is expressed in Homer. See Bos, Ellip. p. 176); though, indeed, that term might very well, from the context, bear the sense, 'portion [of the expense];' and the ἴσης mean, not what is equal, but what is just, right, equitable. Accordingly the same sense will arise, as that assigned by Haack and Arnold, 'on equal terms.' So infra iii. 40, τοῦ ἀπὸ τῆς ἴσ. ἐχθροῦ.

κατ' ἀλλήλους] 'one with another,' i. e. in an interchange of hostilities. Ὡς ἕκαστοι stands antithetically opposed to κοινὰς, the sense being, singulatim, severally, as often in our author.

4. μάλιστα δὲ ἐς—διέστη] Meaning, 'but it was chiefly at that war, which anciently took place between the Chalcideans and Eretrians, that Greece was engaged in general or combined hostilities; the rest of the states separating into parties, as they sided with one or the other.' On the subject of this war, see Herodot. v. 99.

Ch. XVI. 1. ἐπεγένετο] befel; the word being chiefly used of what is evil.

μὴ αὐξηθῆναι] There is here commonly supposed to be an ellip. of the article τοῦ. But that has been, with reason, rejected by Pop., because, in effect, the infin. does not depend on the subst. alone, but on the whole expression κωλύματα ἐπεγένετο. And so infra iii. 40, we have: ξυγγνώμην ἁμαρτεῖν λήψονται. Thus it is as though our author had written: ἐκώλυσε μὴ αὐξ. (see Matth. Gr. § 542, Annot. i. 6, and Herm. on Vig. p. 703.) of course supposing an ellips. of ὥστε, which word is expressed in a passage of our author cited by Steph. Thes. κωλύω ὥστε μὴ περιπλεῖν. The same ellipse may be noticed in another passage of Thucyd., in which similarly we have: κωλύειν ἡμᾶς πλεῖν.

Κῦρος καὶ ἡ Περσικὴ βασιλεία] A remarkable Hendiadys, of which I have in Transl. adduced several examples. One here must suffice. Pausan. i. 36, 4, οἱ τὰ Φιλίππου καὶ Μακεδόνων καθεῖλον. For βασιλεία Pop. and Goell., from several MSS., edit ἐξουσία, accounting βασ. a gloss. I agree in this with Bekk., who retains the vulg. And this leads me to notice the most formidable difficulty in the sentence, namely, how to find a nominative for ἐπεστράτευσε; for βασιλεία cannot be such, since it belongs to ἐπεγένετο, to be repeated. I suspect that after βασιλεία an ἡ has been lost, which will make a regular nominative to ἐπεστράτευσε, and without which such an anomaly will be left as is unprecedented even in Thucydides. From its situation the ἡ would easily slip out of the context.

τε] Bekk. and Goell. read, from several MSS., δέ. I have, with Pop., retained the common reading.

Ch. XVII. 1. τύραννοι δὲ] Pop. here, from several MSS., edits τύραννοί τε, wrongly, I conceive; for there is plainly a transition, and δὲ has very frequently this force. Τὸ ἐφ' ἑαυτῶν μόνον προορώμενοι, 'having an eye to their own private interest alone;' 'what concerned themselves, and had nothing to do with others.' Kuhn. Gr. § 611, 'what rests on themselves.' See Matth. Gr. § 584, extr. So vi. 12, τὸ ἑαυτῶν μόνον σκοπῶν, and Appian i. 380, 72, τὸ ἑαυτοῦ μόνον σκόπει. Soph. Aj. 1313, ὅρα μὴ τοὐμὸν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ σὸν, and Elect. 1114, τοὐμὸν δ' οὐχὶ τοὐκείνου σκοπῶ.

ἔς τε τὸ σῶμα—αὔξειν] 'as regarded their personal security and gratification.' καὶ ἐς τὸν ἴδιον οἶκον αὔξειν, and 'to the aggrandizing of their own family.' And no wonder; for as Aristot. Pol. iii. 5, says, ἡ τυραννίς ἐστι μοναρχία πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον τοῦ μοναρχοῦντος.

δι' ἀσφαλείας — ᾤκουν] 'conducted, managed, ruled the cities in as cautious a manner as they could,' namely, by not provoking popular commotion, and by avoiding foreign wars and distant expeditions. This sense of οἰκεῖν for διοικεῖν (which occurs also infra ii. 37, and iii. 37) is required by the context. Δι' ἀσφαλείας is an adverbial phrase, the whole expression δι' ἀσφ. ὅσον ἐδύναντο μάλιστα standing for ὅσον ἐδύναντο ἀσφαλέστατα. Instead of the vulg. ἠδύν., Pop., Goell., and Bekk. have edited ἐδύναντο. Finally, with δι' ἀσφαλείας, comp. the similar phrase infra vii. 9, τὰ κατὰ στρατόπεδον διὰ φυλακῆς ἔχων.

ἐπράχθη τε, &c.] Render: 'and nothing was achieved by them (lit. 'nothing was Ἐπειδὴ δὲ οἵ τε Ἀθηναίων τύραννοι καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς ἄλλης Ἑλλάδος ἐπὶ πολὺ καὶ πρὶν τυραννευθείσης οἱ πλεῖστοι καὶ τελευταῖοι, πλὴν τῶν ἐν Σικελίᾳ, ὑπὸ Λακεδαιμονίων κατελύθησαν· (ἡ γὰρ Λακεδαίμων, μετὰ τὴν ‡κτίσιν τῶν νῦν ἐνοικούντων αὐτὴν Δωριέων, ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ὧν ἴσμεν χρόνον στασιάσασα, ὅμως ἐκ παλαιdone on their part') at all worthy of notice, unless it were aught against the states bordering on each.' In εἰ μὴ εἴ τι, we have an Attic phrase for εἰ μή ὅ τι.

οἱ γὰρ ἐν Σικελίᾳ, &c.] Render: 'for, as to the tyrants in Sicily, they,' &c.

2. οὕτω πανταχόθεν—εἶναι] Κατείχετο, was held down, hampered, impeded, namely, in rising to power. The construction here (which is somewhat anomalous) may be best adjusted by supposing an ellipse of ὥστε after κατείχετο, in which both κατεργ. and εἶναι are comprehended. On the principle of this use of ὥστε, see Matth. Gr. § 502, a. c. and § 545; also on the omission of the word, § 532, a. and note infra iii. 66. Finally, μή τε in the former part of the sentence has corresponding to it τε in the latter part, by a use similar to that in Latin of nec—et. Ἀτολμ. 'less enterprising.'

Ch. XVIII. 1. ἐπειδὴ δὲ οἵ τε] Of this obscure passage the sense may be best explained in a version, thus: 'But when both the tyrants of Athens and those of the rest of Greece,—generally, and even before the parts, under tyrannic government,—had been deposed, and the greater part and last of them, except those in Sicily, by the Lacedæmonians (for Lacedæmon, from the period of its settlement by the Dorians, who now inhabit it, has, after having been the longest harassed by factions of any nation on record, for a considerable time enjoyed a well-regulated government, and ever been free from tyrants; it is about four hundred years, or a little more, up to the end of this war, that the Lacedæmonians have used the same polity; by which also they have been enabled to regulate and settle political affairs in other states); after, I say, this extirpation of the tyrants from Greece, it was not many years before the battle of Marathon took place.'

The construction throughout is in a remarkable degree involved and irregular. It is well observed by Goell.: 'Protasis primâ sententiâ alio modo post parenthesin repetitur verbis μετὰ δὲ τὴν τῶν τυράννων κατάλυσιν et per duplicem particulam γὰρ causam et causæ causam indicat, ut animadvertit jam Hermogen. π. μεθοδ. δεινότ. c. 14 (16).'

To descend to particulars, in the words καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς ἄλλης Ἑλ. we have, as Herm. on Soph. Elect. 135, remarks, a blending of two modes of expression into one (as in that passage of Soph. τόν γ' ἐξ Ἅιδα—ἀναστάσεις, for τὸν ἐν Ἅιδου ἀναστάσεις ἐξ Ἅιδου), οἱ ἐκ τῆς ἄλλης Ἑλλάδος standing for οἱ ἐν τῇ ἄλλῃ Ἑλλάδι ἐξ αὐτῆς. Of ἐπὶ πολὺ the sense is, 'far and wide, extensively, magna ex parte.' At τελευταῖοι the article is to be repeated from the preceding οἱ πλεῖστοι, such being required by the truth of history, and also demanded by Bishop Middleton's canon of the article.

By the term εὐνομεῖσθαι is denoted 'the having good and well-administered laws.' So Herodot. i. 66, οὕτω μεταλαβόντες εὐνομήθησαν. Xen. Œcon. ix. 14. Æschin. i. 27. Aristot. Pol. p. ult. Dionys. Hal., Max. Tyr. and other writers. In praise of this εὐνομία, as opposed to faction or misgovernment, we have the following beautiful sentiment in Pindar, Olymp. 13, 6, ἐν τᾷ (sc. Corintho) γὰρ Εὐνομία ναίει, κασίγνητ- ταί τε, βάθρον πολίων, Ἀσφαλὴς Δίκα, καὶ ὁμό- τροπος Εἰράνα, ταμίαι Ἀνδράσι πλούτου, χρύσεαι Παῖδες εὐβούλου Θέμιτος.

I have here thought proper, with Bekk. and Goell., to restore the old reading κτίσιν, which had been, on the authority of the greater part of the MSS., altered by Haack and Pop. to κτῆσιν. For though it be less supported by the evidence of MSS., it yields a far better sense, and, moreover, is strongly confirmed by the words of our author, infra v. 16, ὅτε τὸ πρῶτον Λακεδαίμονα κτίζοντες. Also by a passage of Isocr. Paneg. 16, who calls the Heraclidæ and the Dorians οἰκιστὰς Σπάρτης.

τὰ ἐν ταῖς ἄλλαις πόλεσι καθ.] 'the other states of the alliance.' Understand πράγματα, in the sense πολιτεύματα, namely, 'according to the model of Lacedæmon.' Comp. i. 76, 1.

τὴν τῶν τυράννων κατάλυσιν ἐκ τῆς Ἑλ.] A blending of two expressions.

2. δεκάτῳ δὲ ἔτει] 481 B. C.; which, however, is to be understood not of the battle of Salamis, but of the setting-out of the armament.

τῷ μεγ. στόλῳ] 'The great armament,' as we say, the Spanish armada.

3. μεγάλου κινδύνου ἐπικρεμασθέντος] 'as it were suspended over their heads,' imminente. So iii. 40, τοῦ ἐπικρεμασθέντος δεινοῦ, and v. 53.

διανοηθέντες] 'having determined;' for διανοεῖσθαι, as oft in Thucyd., denotes not to turn in mind, consider, propose, but, by implication, to decide upon, determine.

ἀνασκευασάμενοι] Schol. τὰ σκεύη ἀναλαβόντες. Ἀνασκευάζεσθαι signifies 'to pack up one's goods for a removal.' So Xen. Cyr. viii. 5, 4: also actually to remove them; as Xen. An. vi. 2, 5, and Plut. viii. 286, ἀνασκ. τὸν τάφον τινός. Dio Cass. 191, 59. 213, 26. Arr. Exp. Al. i. 26, 8, ap. Hesych.

ἐμβ. ναυτικοὶ ἐγένοντο] 'became seamen instead of landsmen,' which the Athenians had hitherto been reckoned.

4. διεκρίθησαν πρὸς Ἀθηναίους] So supra cap. 15, τὸ ἄλλο Ἑλληνικὸν ἐς ξυμμαχίαν ἑκατέρων διέστη.

δυνάμει—μέγιστα διεφάνη] 'were decidedly the greatest in power.' Of this use of διαφαίν. examples occur at iv. 51. vi. 17; and Dio Cass. 343, 39, δ. μάλιστα, and 675, 55. Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 3. Dion. Hal. i. 389, 45. ἐλάττω δόξης διεφάνη.

5. ὁμαιχμία] 'the common league' against the Persians; which comprehended both parties, and which seems to have been formed on the condition that the members of the common confederacy should abstain from mutual hostility. Ὁμαιχμία is used, not ξυμμαχία, which term, in the age of Thucyd., implied a subserviency to some one principal member of the alliance. Ὁμ. is a rare word, but occurs also in Hdot. vii. 145. App. i. p. 88. Procop. p. 169, 307.

οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι] I have here, with Pop. and Goell., cancelled οἱ before Ἀθηναῖοι, on the authority of some of the best MSS., confirmed by i. 1, τὸν πόλεμον τῶν Πελοποννησίων καὶ Ἀθηναίων: and i. 10, 4, τὰς μεγίστας καὶ ἐλαχίστας. Bp. Midd. has selected this passage as the exemplification of his rule, which permits the omission of the article in this case.

ἀπὸ τῶν Μηδικῶν ἐς τόνδε ἀεὶ τὸν πόλεμον, τὰ μὲν σπενδόμενοι τὰ δὲ πολεμοῦντες ἢ ἀλλήλοις ἢ τοῖς ἑαυτῶν ξυμμάχοις ἀφισταμένοις, εὖ παρεσκευάσαντο τὰ πολέμια, καὶ ἐμπειρότεροι ἐγένοντο, μετὰ κινδύνων τὰς μελέτας ποιούμενοι. XIX. Καὶ οἱ μὲν Λακεδαιμόνιοι οὐχ ὑποτελεῖς ἔχοντες φόρου τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἡγοῦντο, κατ' ὀλιγαρχίαν δὲ σφίσιν αὐτοῖς μόνον ἐπιτηδείως ὅπως πολιτεύσωσι θεραπεύοντες· Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ ναῦς τε τῶν πόλεων τῷ χρόνῳ παραλαβόντες, πλὴν Χίων καὶ Λεσβίων, καὶ χρήματα τοῖς πᾶσι τάξαντες φέρειν· 2. καὶ ἐγένετο αὐτοῖς ἐς τόνδε τὸν πόλεμον ἡ ἰδία παρασκευὴ μείζων, ἢ ὡς τὰ κράτιστά ποτε μετὰ ἀκραιφνοῦς τῆς ξυμμαχίας ἤνθησαν.

6. εὖ παρεσκευάσαντο τὰ πολέμια] 'had well prepared or exercised themselves in warlike affairs.' Πολέμια, for πολεμικά, as often in Herodot. and Thucyd., and also the writers by whom they have been imitated; e. g. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 20, 8, ἦσαν δὲ τὰ πολέμια, ἐκ τοῦ μετὰ κινδύνων ποιεῖσθαι μελέτας, πολλῶν ἀμείνους. Much to the present purpose is a passage of Joseph. Bell. J. iii. 5, 1, (of the Roman military system,) οὐ γὰρ αὐτοῖς ἀρχὴ τῶν ὅπλων ὁ πόλεμος, οὐδὲ ἐπὶ μόνας τὰς χρείας τῷ χεῖρε κινοῦσιν, ἐν εἰρήνῃ ἀπειρηκότες· ἀλλ', ὥσπερ συμπεφυκότες τοῖς ὅπλοις, οὐδέποτε τῆς ἀσκήσεως λαμβάνουσιν ἐκεχειρίαν, οὐδὲ ἀναμένουσι τοὺς καιρούς. Αἱ μελέται δὲ αὐτοῖς οὐδὲν τῆς κατὰ ἀλήθειαν εὐτονίας ἀποδέουσιν, ἀλλ' ἕκαστος ὁσημέραι στρατιώτης πάσῃ προθυμίᾳ, καθάπερ ἐν πολέμῳ, γυμνάζεται. And then a little further on: καὶ οὐκ ἂν ἁμάρτοι τις εἰπὼν, τὰς μὲν μελέτας αὐτῶν χωρὶς αἵματος παρατάξεις, τὰς παρατάξεις δὲ μεθ' αἵματος μελέτας, which latter passage, evidently written with a view to, forms the best illustration of, the present; in which we have contained a sentiment highly deserving of attention, as bearing upon the question of the superior efficacy of regular troops, arising from their exercises being formed in the midst of danger; by which, therefore, their attention is fixed, and, consequently, skill far more rapidly and effectually attained.

Ch. XIX. 1. Καὶ οἱ μὲν Λακεδαιμόνιοι, &c.] This sketch of the comparative policy of the two great rivals, is further enlarged on in the course of Book i. and elsewhere.

οὐχ ὑποτελεῖς — ἡγοῦντο] The accus. τοὺς ξυμμάχους here, as at ch. 76, and iii. 55, belongs to ἔχοντες, which has the force of the Latin gerund, or subjunctive with ut. (Goell.)

κατ' ὀλιγαρχίαν δὲ] The construction is either θεραπεύοντες δὲ (αὐτοὺς) ὅπως πολιτεύσωσι ἐπιτηδείως σφίσιν αὐτοῖς μόνον, κατ' ὀλιγαρχίαν: or, rather (taking the μόνον as transposed), θεραπεύοντες (τοῦτο) μόνον, ὅπως πολ. Comp. a kindred passage at i. 76, Ὑμεῖς γοῦν, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, τὰς ἐν τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ πόλεις ἐπὶ τὸ ὑμῖν ὠφέλιμον καταστησάμενοι. In the above sense θεραπεύω occurs at ii. 65. iii. 56. vi. 61. vii. 70.

ὅπως πολιτεύσωσι] 'that they might be governed.' So iii. 62. vi. 18. Ἐπιτηδείως σφίσιν αὐτοῖς, 'subserviently to themselves,' 'for their own advantage.' So i. 144, σφίσιν ἐπιτηδείως αὐτονομεῖσθαι: and v. 81 & 82. Pausan. vii. 10, 2. 13, 1. Κατ' ὀλιγαρχίαν means, 'conformably to oligarchy.'

Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ — φέρειν] Render: 'the Athenians, on the contrary, so administered rule, as in time to get possession of the ships of the allied states,—except those of the Chians and Lesbians,—and to impose on all a certain rate of contribution,' a certain sum of money, as a contribution levied from the states against the common enemy. So infra c. 96, ἔταξαν ἅς τε ἔδει παρέχειν τῶν πόλεων χρήματα πρὸς τὸν βάρβαρον, καὶ ἃς ναῦς. The money was in lieu of the rated quota of shipping.

2. μείζων] Namely, in respect of revenue.

ἢ ὡς τὰ κράτιστα, &c.] The ὡς may, indeed, be construed with τὰ κράτιστα, since superlatives often have ὡς prefixed; which serves to convey an intensity of sense. And such is the view of the words adopted by Port. and Gottleb. Yet thus the sense arising will only be (what is any thing but an appropriate one), 'as greatly as possible.' Hence I prefer, with the Schol. and Reiske, to take the ὡς as standing for ὅταν, by which the sense will be, 'than when they once most flourished with the alliance fresh and unbroken,' τὰ κράτιστα having the force of optimè in Latin. See Born. on Xen. Apol. § 18. Sup. οὔσης after ἀκραιφνοῦς, in which word we have an abbreviation of ἀκεραιοφανὴς, the φανης answering to our like, or ly, in terminations

XX. Τὰ μὲν οὖν παλαιὰ τοιαῦτα εὗρον, χαλεπὰ ὄντα παντὶ ἐξῆς τεκμηρίῳ πιστεῦσαι· οἱ γὰρ ἄνθρωποι τὰς ἀκοὰς τῶν προγεγενημένων, καὶ ἢν ἐπιχώρια σφίσιν ᾖ, ὁμοίως ἀβασανίστως παρ' ἀλλήλων δέχονται. 2. Ἀθηναίων γοῦν τὸ πλῆθος Ἵππαρχον οἴονται such as likely, &c. The term signifies, 'what is entirely uninjured,' lit. 'without a vestige of hurt,' quite unhurt. So in Soph. Œd. Col. 1147, we have: ζώσας, ἀκραιφνεῖς τῶν κατηπειλημένων. Ἀκραιφνὴς is a pure Attic term, (used also by Eurip. and especially by those writers who have imitated our author; as Dio Cass., Procop., Joseph., and Dion. Hal., as Ant. 1071,13, βοήθεια ἀκρ.) and here has allusion to those ruinous contests of the Athenians with their allies (see infra iii. 11, 3), which they had to maintain, in order to keep them in subjection, and whereby the strength of those allies must have been considerably impaired. So inf. iii. 46, 3, it is said: καὶ ἢν ἕλωμεν πόλιν, ἐφθαρμένην παραλαβεῖν.

Finally, ἀνθέω must be taken (as floreo in Latin, and our flourish) in a figurative acceptation, 'to be in a prosperous state,' to make a figure. So in Aristoph. Nub. 962, we have: ὅτ' ἐγὼ τὰ δίκαια λέγων ἤνθουν. Plut. Sert. 18, ἤνθει πρὸς δόξαν.

Ch. XX. 1. τὰ μὲν οὖν—πιστ.] Of this obscurely expressed passage, the sense may be laid down as follows: 'Such, then, I have found to be the state of affairs in ancient times, however hardly it may find credit, even when established on a regular chain of proofs.' The difficulty, I would observe, hinges on the expression πιστεῦσαι, which has been variously explained. Some take it as standing for πιστῶσαι, while others would read, for πιστεῦσαι, πιστῶσαι—methods both alike precarious. And to take the term in the above sense, is forbidden by the words following, which would thus be irrelevant. The method which may be said to involve the least difficulty, is to take πιστεῦσαι (as does Bauer) for πιστευθῆναι, by a certain idiom of the infin. active for passive after adjectives denoting facility or the reverse, frequent in the best writers, and treated on at large by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 535. Of examples, besides two occurring in our author, infra vii. 15, χαλεπὴ ἄρξαι, and vii. 51, χαλεπωτέρους εἶναι προσπολεμεῖν, we have other classical writers: Xen. Mem. i. 6, 9, χ. εὑρεῖν, and Demosth. χαλ. λαβεῖν. So also in Latin we have verbs active used for passive after the term difficilis, as Cic. de Or. i. 58, res difficiles perdiscere: Plin. Hist. xxii. 13, res difficiles ad credendum, for creditu: and Livy iii. 5 (in a passage evidently written with a view to the present) difficile ad fidem est, in tam antiquâ re, quot cecide-runt exacto affirmare numero. And so it is said by Synes. Epist. 148, cited by Steph. Thes. χαλεπὸν εἰς πίστιν τὸ ἑκάστοις ἀπότροφον (peregrinum), and Aristot. de Anima, i. says: χαλ. λαβεῖν πίστιν. Accordingly in the present passage πιστεῦσαι may be rendered, 'to obtain or find credit, approve themselves to one's belief.' Goeller, however, recognises here a sort of grammatical attraction for τοιαῦτα εὗρον, ὥστε πᾶν ἐξῆς τεκμήριον αὐτῶν χαλεπὸν εἶναι πιστεῦσαι: and Arnold regards the words as standing for περὶ ὧν χαλεπόν ἐστι πιστεῦσαι. Be that as it may, by παντὶ τεκμηρίῳ seems meant, every argument necessary to proof: and ἐξῆς (as Goell. shows) has reference to the chain of ratiocination sometimes necessary to draw forth long-buried truth. Our author then proceeds to show how it is that these arguments are hard to obtain credit, by adverting to the carelessness (arising from selfish indifference as to what does not concern themselves) of men in examining the antiquities even of their own country, their prejudices, and that supineness which makes them decline the labour of searching after truth, and hence makes them disposed rather to acquiesce in opinions ready-made to their hands. Accordingly the words at § 2, Ἀθηναίων γοῦν—ἐπὶ τὰ ἕτοιμα μᾶλλον τρέπονται, are digressive, and intended to be illustrative of the proneness of the multitude to acquiesce in commonly received opinions, and their carelessness in the investigation of truth: of which the same complaint is made by Pausan. i. 3, 2.

οἱ γὰρ ἄνθρωποι, &c.] Render: 'For men take up from each other the reports of past events — even though they be those of their own country—alike without scrutiny or examination, adopting readily the opinions and prejudices of the persons with whom they mix in society.' Of ὁμοίως the full meaning is, 'just as if they were foreign.' Corresponding to ἀβασανίστως here, is ἀνεπισκέπτως in Herodot. i. 45. Evidently imitated from the present are the following passages of Dionys. Hal. p. 13, περὶ πραγμάτων παλαιῶν ἀβασανίστως τὰ λεγόμενα δέχεσθαι, and Heracl. Pont. p. 411, ἀβασανίστως αὐτοῖς ἢ τῆς ἀληθείας.

2. Ἀθηναίων γοῦν — ἀποθανεῖν] The ὑφ' Ἁρμοδίου καὶ Ἀριστογείτονος, τύραννον ὄντα, ἀποθανεῖν· καὶ οὐκ ἴσασιν, ὅτι Ἱππίας μὲν πρεσβύτατος ὢν ἦρχε τῶν Πεισιστράτου υἱέων, Ἵππαρχος δὲ καὶ Θεσσαλὸς ἀδελφοὶ ἦσαν αὐτοῦ· ὑποτοπήσαντες δέ τι ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ καὶ παραχρῆμα Ἁρμόδιος καὶ Ἀριστογείτων ἐκ τῶν ξυνειδότων σφίσιν Ἱππίᾳ μεμηνῦσθαι, τοῦ μὲν ἀπέσχοντο, ὡς προειδότος, βουλόμενοι δὲ, πρὶν ξυλληφθῆναι, δράσαντές τι καὶ κινδυνεῦσαι, τῷ Ἱππάρχῳ περιτυχόντες περὶ τὸ Λεωκόριον καλούμενον, τὴν Παναθηναϊκὴν πομπὴν διακοσμοῦντι, ἀπέκτειναν. 3. πολλὰ δὲ καὶ ἄλλα ἔτι καὶ νῦν ὄντα, καὶ οὐ χρόνῳ ἀμνηστούμενα, καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι Ἕλληνες οὐκ ὀρθῶς οἴονται· ὥσπερ τούς τε Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλέας μὴ μιᾷ ψήφῳ προστίθεσθαι ἑκάτερον, ἀλλὰ δυοῖν· καὶ τὸν Πιτανάτην λόχον αὐτοῖς εἶναι, ὃς οὐδ' ἐγένετο πώποτε. 4. οὕτως ἀταλαίπωρος τοῖς πολλοῖς ἡ ζήτησις τῆς ἀληθείας, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ ἕτοιμα μᾶλλον τρέπονται. XXI. ἐκ δὲ τῶν εἰρηsense may be thus expressed: 'The Athenian multitude, for instance, fancy that Hipparchus, as being the tyrant, was slain by Harmodius,' &c.

ὑποτοπήσαντες] for ὑποπτεύσαντες. An idiom frequent in Thucyd. and the writers by whom he has been imitated, as Dio Cass., Procop., Joseph., and Arrian, but also not rare in Herodotus.

ἐκ. τῇ ἡμ.] 'on that very day,' i. e. the day fixed on for the attempt.

καὶ παραχρῆμα] 'immediately on the crisis,' just as they were about to perpetrate the deed. The construction is: ὑποτοπήσαντες δὲ Ἁρμ. καὶ Ἀρ. ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρα καὶ παραχρῆμά τι μεμηνῦσθαι ἐκ τῶν συνειδότων σφίσιν Ἱππίᾳ.

προειδότος] 'foreknowing the plot (and therefore prepared).' So the proverb, 'forewarned, forearmed.'

βουλόμενοι—καὶ κινδυνεῦσαι] There is something not a little unusual in the use of the καὶ here, to which Poppo assigns the sense dummodo, rendering the passage: 'dummodo prius aliquid egissent, adeo pericula non detrectabant.' But of καὶ in this sense no sufficient evidence exists; nor, indeed, can the word bear such a signification. It has here rather the sense even, as in Pindar Nem. iv. 52 (probably had in mind by our author), Ἐπεὶ ῥέζοντά τι καὶ παθεῖν ἔοικεν (convenit). And such, we may observe, is the sense of the word in a passage of St. Paul's epistle to the Romans, v. 7, ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ τάχα τις καὶ τολμᾷ ἀποθανεῖν. The participle may in both passages be rendered, 'by doing or achieving something,' meaning, by a frequent idiom, something considerable, and even worth the risk of life. So infra iii. 53, 3, we have, εἰπόντας τι κιν., 'to run a hazard (venture our lives) by saying something.'

Λεωκόριον] This was a chapel erected to commemorate the sacrifice of two virgins, the daughters of a certain Leos, whom he gave up to avert a famine.

3. χρόνῳ ἀμνηστούμενα] lit. 'obliterated, effaced, clouded in the oblivion of time.' Ἀμνηστέω is a very rare word, which, besides this passage, I have only met with in Soph. El. 482. Arat. Deos. 115.

μὴ μιᾷ ψήφῳ προστίθεσθαι ἑκάτερον, ἀλλὰ δυοῖν] 'give their vote, not with one stone, but with two.' The term προστίθ. was employed to denote the giving of a vote or opinion.

4. οὕτως ἀταλαίπωρος τοῖς πολλοῖς ἡ ζήτησις τῆς ἀληθείας] The sense is: 'So indiligent, unlaborious to the multitude, is the search after truth' (i. e. so impatient are they of labour therein), and so much more readily do they resort to opinions ready at hand, and requiring no labour or research. So Hom. Il. xxiv. 627, οἱ δ' ἐπ' ὀνείαθ' ἑτοῖμα χεῖρας ἴαλλον. The sentiment in question (a much admired one) has been borrowed by several of the later classical writers, as Procop., Arrian, and Ælian. Finally, Tacitus seems to have had this passage of our author in mind, when complaining, Hist. iv. 49, of the 'vulgi indiligentiam veri;' and our author himself may have had the sentiment suggested to him by a passage of Aristoph. Dan. οὕτως αὐτοῖς ἀταλαίπωρος ἡ ποίησις διάκειται.

Ch. XXI. 1. ἐκ δὲ τῶν εἰρημένων—ἀποχρώντως] Of this intricate passage μένων τεκμηρίων ὅμως τοιαῦτα ἄν τις νομίζων μάλιστα, ἃ διῆλθον, οὐχ ἁμαρτάνοι· καὶ οὔτε ὡς ποιηταὶ ὑμνήκασι περὶ αὐτῶν, ἐπὶ τὸ μεῖζον κοσμοῦντες, μᾶλλον πιστεύων, οὔτε ὡς λογογράφοι ξυνέθεσαν ἐπὶ τὸ προσαγωγότερον τῇ ἀκροάσει ἢ ἀληθέστερον, ὄντα ἀνεξέλεγκτα καὶ τὰ πολλὰ ὑπὸ χρόνου αὐτῶν ἀπίστως ἐπὶ τὸ μυθῶδες ἐκνενικη-

the following appears to be the true sense: 'He, however, who, from the proofs above detailed, shall account the matters which I have narrated to be, upon the whole, such as I have represented them, and shall not give credence rather to what poets have sung of them, or to what early historians have narrated, — forming accounts rather attractive to the ear than agreeable to truth, — (especially as the things recounted admit not of refutation, but most of them, from length of time, have passed into myths entitled to no credit,) he, I say, who accounts them to be such, and, considering their remote antiquity, to be, on the clearest evidence, sufficiently well made out, will not err in his judgment.'

At ἐκ δὲ τῶν εἰρημένων τ. there is, as the ὅμως serves to indicate, a return to the assertion supra ch. 20, 1, τὰ μὲν οὖν παλαιὰ — πιστεῦσαι, interrupted by the digressive portion before mentioned; q. d. 'Notwithstanding the difficulty for things so far back to find credit, yet,' &c. At τοιαῦτα supply οἷα διῆλθον, implied, though not expressed, in ἃ διῆλθον. Of διέρχομαι, in the somewhat rare sense enarrare, an example is found in Pol. i. 10, 13.

Moreover, with οὐκ ἂν ἁμαρτάνοι agrees not only νομίζων, but also πιστεύων and ἡγησάμενος. Render: 'he would not err in his judgment, would not miss the truth, would form no mistaken notion concerning the early state of Greece.' An elegant litotes for, 'he would attain to truth.' By the expression ποιηταὶ, is especially to be understood Homer; but including those earliest of historians who are supposed to have written in verse. Similarly it is said by Livy, Præf. Hist. (doubtless in imitation of our author,) 'Quæ ante conditam urbem poeticis magis decora fabulis—traduntur.' And also by Plutarch de Isid. et Osir. c. 20, (p. 357, F.) ὅτι δ' οὐκ ἔοικε ταῦτα κομιδῇ μυθεύμασιν ἀραιοῖς καὶ διακένοις πλάσμασιν, οἷα ποιηταὶ καὶ λογογράφοι, καθάπερ οἱ ἀράχναι γεννῶντες ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν, scil. ὑμνήκασι. So also in Isocr. de Phil. 153, we have: οὔτε ποιητῶν οὔτε λογοποιῶν. It is plain that our author uses in the bad sense λογογρ., not ξυγγρ., which term is uniformly used by him and other writers in a good sense. So Sextus Emp. Adv. Math. p. 59, D. (with this passage of Thucydides evidently in mind,) opposes to οἱ ποιηταὶ,—those whose sole purpose it is ψυχαγωγεῖν,—οἱ συγγραφεῖς, those whose aim is truth and utility. And the same distinction is recognised in Pind. Olymp. i. 44, καί που τι καὶ βροτῶν φρένας Ὑπὲρ τὸν ἀληθῆ λόγον Δεδαιδαλμένοι ψεύδεσι ποικίλοις Ἐξαπατῶντι μῦθοι, meaning poetic fables, especially those of Homer, of whom he says, Nem. vii. 33, Ἐπεὶ ψευδέεσσιν οἱ — Σεμνὸν ἔπεστί τι· σοφία δὲ κλέπτει παράγοισα μύθοις.

Finally, of these two terms, ποιηταὶ and λογογράφοι, the latter was an appellation first given to historians. See supra i. 1, and note.

In the term ξυνέθεσαν, we have an implied notion of what is made up, fictitious, false, unreal. And such is its import in Demosth. p. 277, λόγους εὐπροσώπους καὶ μύθους συνθείς. Antiph. p. 717, ἐξ ἐπιβουλῆς συνέθεσαν ταῦτα. Plut. vi. 573. Æschyl. Prom. 689, συνθέτους (fictos) λόγους. And so in Latin we have: componere mendacia, &c. Finally, by an evident imitation of our author, Lucian, t. ii. 54, 11, has: πρὸς τὸ μυθῶδες τὰ πλεῖστα συγγεγραφότι.

In προσαγωγότερον and ἀληθέστερον, we have the idiom comparat. for positive προσαγ. and ἀληθὲς, or μᾶλλον ἀληθές. Of which use of the double comparative, examples occur in Herodot. iii. 65, ταχύτερα ἢ σοφώτερα, for τάχεα μᾶλλον ἢ σοφά. Æsch. C. Ctes. p. 459, ἀναγκαιοτέραν ἢ καλλίω. The term προσαγ. has here, and also in certain passages of Dion. Hal., Lucian, and others, the sense seductive, alluring, being used of the more usual ἐπαγωγ. elsewhere used by our author, as infra iv. 88. v. 88. vi. 8, and Joseph. Ant. viii. 2, 8, (a passage formed on the present,) μηδὲν ἔξω τῆς ἀληθείας λέγομεν, μηδὲ πιθανοῖς τισι καὶ πρὸς ἀπάτην καὶ τέρψιν ἐπαγωγοῖς τὴν ἱστορίαν διαλαμβάνοντες, &c.

Of ἀνεξέλεγκτα the sense is, either 'which cannot be convicted of falsehood,' or, 'can neither be proved nor disproved' to have existed. So (by an evident imitation of our author) Dio Cass. 714, 11, has: ἀλλὰ ἀνεξέλεγκτά γε ὄντα ἀπιστεῖται.

Of ἀπίστως the sense, as Goell. says, κότα· εὑρῆσθαι δὲ ἡγησάμενος ἐκ τῶν ἐπιφανεστάτων σημείων, ὡς παλαιὰ εἶναι, ἀποχρώντως· 2. καὶ ὁ πόλεμος οὗτος,—καίπερ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἐν ᾧ μὲν ἂν πολεμῶσι, τὸν παρόντα ἀεὶ μέγιστον κρινόντων, παυσαμένων δὲ, τὰ ἀρχαῖα μᾶλλον θαυμαζόντων,—ἀπ' αὐτῶν τῶν ἔργων σκοποῦσι δηλώσει ὅμως μείζων γεγενημένος αὐτῶν. XXII. Καὶ ὅσα μὲν λόγῳ εἶπον ἕκαστοι, ἢ μέλλοντες πολεμήσειν, ἢ ἐν αὐτῷ ἤδη ὄντες, χαλεπὸν τὴν ἀκρίβειαν αὐτὴν τῶν λεχθέντων διαμνημονεῦσαι ἦν, ἐμοί τε ὧν αὐτὸς ἤκουσα, καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοθέν ποθεν ἐμοὶ ἀπαγγέλλουσιν· ὡς δ' ἂν ἐδόκουν ἐμοὶ ἕκαστοι περὶ τῶν ἀεὶ παρόντων τὰ δέοντα μάλιστα εἰπεῖν, ἐχομένῳ ὅτι ἐγγύτατα τῆς has to be expressed by circumlocution, 'ita ut nulla fides iis habeatur.' And, indeed, of such a use of an adverb for a whole clause, examples are not unfrequent in Thucyd. (see i. 140. ii. 64) and other writers of close brevity.

With the phrase here, ἐπὶ τὸ μυθῶδες ἐκνικῆσαι, in fabulas abire, the commentators compare the expression supra x. 3, οὐκ ἠδύνατο ἅπασιν ἐκνικῆσαι. More aptly might they have adduced the following passages: Dio Cass. p. 122, 25, ὥστε καὶ ἐς παῤῥησίαν τῆς νομίσεως ἐκνικῆσαι. Eunap. p. 153, ἐς τοῦτο ἐκνικήσας ὥστε. Heliod. t. ii. 57, C. ὁ δὲ ἄνεμος τέλος ἐς γαλήνην ἐξενικήθη, where read ἐξένικησε.

Finally, in the expression ὡς παλαιὰ εἶναι, we must suppose to be comprehended two idioms, one that by which ὡς has a limitative sense (as infra iv. 84, ἦν δὲ οὐδὲ ἀδύνατος, ὡς Λακεδαιμόνια, εἰπεῖν, besides other examples which may be seen in Matth. Gr. § 628, 3); and the other, that by which there is a pleonasm (or what is so considered) of εἶναι, as in the phrase of our author infra ii. 89. See Matth. Gr. § 545. Here there is a commixture of both; of which examples are not unfrequent, as Herodot. iv. 81, καὶ ὀλίγους, ὡς Σκύθας εἶναι. ii. 185, μεγάλα ἐκτήσατο χρήματα, ὡς ἂν εἶναι Ῥοδώπιος. Of ὡς the sense is, quantum fieri potest.

2. καὶ ὁ πόλεμος οὗτος—αὐτῶν] Render: 'And although men fancy the present war, while they are engaged in it, the greatest, but when they have retired from military service, admire the old most; yet this war will, to those who judge from facts themselves, manifestly appear to be greater than the ancient wars. At παυσαμένων supply ἀπὸ τοῦ πολεμεῖν, from πολεμῶσι; and at τὰ ἀρχαῖα, πράγματα, in the sense of war, as further on. With the sentiment of τὰ ἀρχ. μᾶλ. θαυμ. comp. Tacit. Annal. ii. 88, Vetera extollimus recentium incuriosi. Τὸν ἀεὶ παρόντα is 'what is at any time present.' At δηλώσει γεγενημένος, 'will show itself to be without,' Goell. compares Soph. Aj. 852, ὠνὴρ οὐδαμοῦ δηλοῖ φανείς.

Ch. XXII. 1. ὅσα μὲν λόγῳ εἶπον, &c.] The sense appears to be this: 'And as to the several speeches that were delivered in orations on each side, either when about to enter on the war, or when engaged therein, it were indeed difficult both to myself when an eye-witness, and to others from whose information I received the account, to remember the exact words which were employed; but as the orators on either side might seem to me to speak most to the purpose on each successive matter under consideration, so I expressed it; adhering as closely as possible to the general sense of what was really spoken.

The expression λόγῳ εἶπον has reference to regular set speeches, or orations. At αὐτῷ sup. τῷ πολέμῳ, to be taken from πολεμεῖν. Τὴν ἀκρίβειαν αὐτὴν τῶν λεχθέντων διαμνημονεῦσαι, for ταῦτα τὰ λεχθέντα ἀκριβῶς διαμ. Compare infra iv. 26.

ὡς δ' ἂν ἐδόκουν—εἰπεῖν] The construction is: ὡς ἐδόκουν ἐμοὶ ἕκαστοι ἂν εἰπεῖν. The words are freely, but not unfaithfully, rendered by Arnold: 'according to my notions of what was fitting for the several persons to have spoken on each successive occasion.'

The scope of this chapter seems to be, to pre-occupy some objections, which might be made to the history, both on the score of words, and actions, the speeches recorded, and the actions narrated. 'The speeches, it might be objected, cannot be genuine, because it would have been impossible to preserve in the memory the exact words spoken.' To which it is replied, that this were indeed difficult; but that it is more than the historian fully undertakes, though he would of course do his best to overcome the difficulty. All that he professes to do, is to record such as he considers the most pertinent observations on the points under consideration, ξυμπάσης γνώμης τῶν ἀληθῶς λεχθέντων, οὕτως εἴρηται. 2. τὰ δ' ἔργα τῶν πραχθέντων ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ οὐκ ἐκ τοῦ παρατυχόντος πυνθανόμενος ἠξίωσα γράφειν, οὐδ' ὡς ἐμοὶ ἐδόκει, ἀλλ' οἷς τε αὐτὸς παρῆν, καὶ παρὰ τῶν ἄλλων, ὅσον δυνατὸν ἀκριβείᾳ περὶ ἑκάστου ἐπεξελθών. 3. ἐπιπόνως δὲ εὑρίσκετο, διότι οἱ παρόντες τοῖς ἔργοις ἑκάστοις οὐ ταὐτὰ περὶ τῶν αὐτῶν ἔλεγον, ἀλλ' ὡς ἑκατέρων τις and to clothe them in his own words, only keeping close to the general purport of the sentiments really uttered. Thus the writer brings forward no sentiment but what was really spoken; though he does not undertake to record all that was spoken, but only what seemed to him appropriate to the occasion, and suitable to the occasion and the parties; the substance of the arguments used on both sides. He only professes occasionally to furnish the words; and that from the difficulty of remembering the exact expressions of the speaker; although the cast of thought and the colourings of style are altogether his own: as also, in a great measure, the general moulding and form of the matter; nevertheless due regard is had to the characteristics of the speaker; and in some cases the intent of the writer was (to use the words of Livy, xlv. 25) 'præstare atque conservare simulacrum eloquentiæ virorum clarissimorum.'

2. τὰ δ' ἔργα — ἐπεξελθών] Render: 'But with respect to matters of fact, the deeds done in the war, I thought it were unfit to narrate what I had heard only by random reports of others, or mere notions of my own, but only such as I was myself personally conversant with, or had heard from others so circumstanced, investigating as accurately as possible [the evidence for] each circumstance.' Or, in other words, as Arnold expresses it, 'In my own case I have written not from my opinions, but from my personal knowledge of the events described: and where I have been obliged to rely on the authority of others, their testimony has not been carelessly admitted, but scrupulously weighed and examined.'

In the words τὰ ἔργα τῶν πραχθέντων, we have a very peculiar mode of expression, which has been but imperfectly and unsatisfactorily treated on by commentators. First, I would observe, this is not a mere pleonasm, like λέκτρον εὐνῆς, &c., for τὰ ἔργα: nor is it quite equiv. to τὰ ἔργα τὰ πραχθέντα: but something more is meant, either, as is pointed out by Hermann on Soph. Trach. 229, 'id quod verè factum est;' or the meaning may be, by an especial intensity of sense, 'the exploits achieved in the war.' Or, again, ἔργα may simply denote what is in Latin not unfrequently expressed by acta and actus, and so the sense be, 'res gloriose gestæ.' In which view we may compare an expression adduced by Goell. from Maneth. iii. 373, πρήξιες ἔργων. Similarly, too, in Pind. Ol. 29, we have τῶν δὲ πεπραγμένων—ἔργων τέλος, for τὰ πεπραγμένα. If it be asked, what is the exact force of the genit. here, I answer simply that of reference, as denoted by quod attinet ad. So in Polæn. Strateg. vi. procem. we have: ἀλλὰ τῶν πάλαι γεγονότων ἀλήθειαν προσθήσω. And we have what is an exact parallel to the expression of our author in the strikingly similar one, actum rei, of Quintil. x. 1, 31, where it is said: 'Historia scribitur—non ad actum rei pugnamque præsentem, sed ad memoriam posteritatis.'

Of the phrase ἐκ τοῦ παρατυχόντος (signifying, 'from any one whom it might chance'), an example occurs in a passage of Athenæus, p. 2, B. (evidently written in imitation of the present,) οὐκ ἀβασανίστως, οὐδ' ἐκ τοῦ παρατυχόντος τὰς ζητήσεις ποιούμενος.

Of the words following, ἀλλ' οἷς τε αὐτὸς παρῆν—ἐπεξελθών, an evident imitation may be recognised in a passage of Lucian, Tox. 12, ἢ αὐτὸς εἰδὼς, ἢ παρὰ ἄλλων, ὁπόσον οἷόν τε ἦν δι' ἀκριβείας.

3. ἀλλ' ὡς ἑκατέρων—ἔχοι] Bekk. from several MSS. edits ἑκατέρῳ. But it is to be observed, that our author is not speaking of two men, but of the two states or parties. Hence I have thought proper, with Haack, Pop., and Goell., to retain the common reading, of which the sense is: 'but [spoke] as each might stand affected in respect of partiality, or prejudice towards either party (according as they were inclined to favour either of the two parties), or in respect of memory,' i. e. as memory might serve them. It is truly remarked by Goell. that had the dative been used, it should have been ἑκατέροις rather than ἑκατέρῳ: also that εὔνοιά τινος is the same as πρός τινα. On this use of the gen. (also found infra vii. 57, Ἀθηναίων εὐνοίᾳ,) see Matth. Gr. § 313, and on the use of ἔχειν with a gen. see Matth. Gr. § 315. Similarly in Arr. An. vii. 14, εὐνοίας ἢ μνήμης ἔχοι. 4. καὶ ἐς μὲν ἀκρόασιν ἴσως τὸ μὴ μυθώδες αὐτῶν ἀτερπέστερον φανεῖται· ὅσοι δὲ βουλήσονται τῶν τε γενομένων τὸ σαφὲς σκοπεῖν καὶ τῶν μελλόντων ποτὲ αὖθις, κατὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπειον, τοιούτων καὶ παραπλησίων ἔσεσθαι, ὠφέλιμα κρίνειν αὐτὰ ἀρκούντως ἕξει. κτῆμά τε ἐς ἀεὶ, μᾶλλον ἢ ἀγώνισμα ἐς τὸ παραχρῆμα ἀκούειν, ξύγκειται.

we have: ὡς ἕκαστος ἢ εὐνοίας πρὸς Ἡφ. ἢ φθόνου εἶχε: and in Dio Cass. p. 78, 39, ὡς που τις εὐνοίας ἑκατέρῳ αὐτῶν εἶχε.

4. ἐς μὲν ἀκρόασιν, &c.] 'as far as regards the ear,' meaning its gratification. Comp. supra i. 21, and infra iii. 43. By an evident imitation of our author, Herodian, in the Preface to his History, has: εἰ μὲν τὸ μυθώδες λέγοιεν, τὸ μὲν ἡδὺ τῆς ἀκροάσεως αὐτοῦ καρπώσονται, τὸ δ' ἀκριβὲς, &c.

ὅσοι δὲ βουλήσονται, &c.] Of this passage, which is one of no little difficulty and perplexity, the general sense may be thus expressed: 'But for such as shall desire to have a clear view both of past events, and [indeed] of future ones (such and similar being, according to the natural course of human affairs, again to occur); for such persons, I say, to esteem them useful, will be sufficient to answer every purpose I have in view: and I have composed them, not for an ambitious subject of temporary display, and gratification for the ear, but for an EVERLASTING POSSESSION.' Thus the sentiment of our author amounts to the well-known saying, that 'history is philosophy teaching by example.'

Having thus stated the sense of the passage at large, it remains to notice certain points as to the phraseology in particular. And first I would notice, the construction and sense of the passage will be found cleared of a certain perplexity and obscurity by cancelling, as I have done, in conjunction with all the recent editors, ὄντων after τοιούτων, which, though found in the common text, has no place in many good MSS., and is not recognised by Dionysius.

With the phrase κατὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπειον, 'after the course of human affairs,' compare similar ones in Terent. Heaut. iii. 2, 40, si quid hujus simile fortè aliquando evenerit, ut sunt humana. Herodot. i. 86, οὐδέν τι μᾶλλον ἐς ἑαυτοῦ λέγων, ἢ ἐς ἅπαν τὸ ἀνθρωπήϊον. Jos. Ant. xviii. 1, 3. οὐδὲ τοῦ ἀνθρωπείου τὸ βουλόμενον. At the words ὠφέλιμα κρινειν αὐτὰ ἀρκούντως ἕξει (on which no little difference of opinion exists among commentators), it is unquestionably best to supply, not, with some, τούτοις, but, with others, τούτους. Nothing, indeed, can be more harsh than the former method; the context and sense evidently, at ἀρκούντως ἕξει, requiring us to understand ἐμοί, which word may very well be supposed here (as not unfrequently in the writings of St. Paul) omitted dignitatis gratiâ.

Of the phrase ἀρκούντως ἕξει, an example occurs in Æschyl. Choëph. 879, τῷδε δ' ἀρκ. ἔχει. And similar is another, ἀποχρώντως ἔχειν, occurring in Polyb. xiii. 7, 5. Soph. Aj. 343, and Dionys. Hal. Procem. Ant. p. 7, 33, ἵνα καὶ τοῖς περὶ—ἀποχρώντως ἔχουσα φαίνηται, from which passage may be emended another of the same writer, Ant. i. 380, 19, Sylb. οὔτε πλήθει αὐτοὶ ἀποχρώντως ἐσμὲν, where, for ἐσμὲν, read ἔχομεν.

At ἐς ἀεὶ, after κτῆμα supply χρόνον, which word is expressed in a passage of Eurip. Phœn. 1540. Though in another passage of the same author, Suppl. 374, and in one of Pind. Ol. ii. 10, we have, as here, the elliptical phrase ἐς ἀεὶ, with which may be compared our old English for aye. By the term κτῆμα is meant to be denoted 'something adapted for USE,' as distinguished from what will only furnish matter for words. The nearest parallel to which use is an expression I have noted in Dionys. Hal. de Struct. p. 4, κτῆμα δέ σοι πρὸς ἅπασας ἐν βίῳ χρείας: and another in Eurip. Erecth. Frag. ii. 4, παραίνεσαι κειμήλια ἐσθλὰ, καὶ νέοισι χρήσιμα, monita salubria; in imitation of which expression, Ælian, in the preface to his Hist. Anim., has κειμήλιον οὐκ ἀσπούδαστον ἐκπονῆσαι πεπίστευκα.

Of the phrase ἀγώνισμα ἐς τὸ παραχρῆμα, the full sense is, 'a field for temporary display,' εἰς ἐπίδειξιν, as the Schol. explains. The term ἀγώνισμα denotes, 1. any contest, whether gymnastic or musical (as we should say, literary), especially such as were publicly engaged in for a prize: 2. as here, the work itself so engaged in for public display. The words of Thucyd. in this whole passage are well illustrated by those of Quintil. Inst. Or.

XXIII. Τῶν δὲ πρότερον ἔργων μέγιστον ἐπράχθη τὸ Μηδικόν· καὶ τοῦτο ὅμως δυεῖν ναυμαχίαιν καὶ πεζομαχίαιν ταχεῖαν τὴν κρίσιν ἔσχε· τούτου δὲ τοῦ πολέμου μῆκός τε μέγα προὔβη, παθήματά τε ξυνηνέχθη γενέσθαι ἐν αὐτῷ τῇ Ἑλλάδι οἷα οὐχ ἕτερα ἐν ἴσῳ χρόνῳ. 2. οὔτε γὰρ πόλεις τοσαίδε ληφθεῖσαι ἠρημώθησαν, αἱ μὲν ὑπὸ βαρβάρων αἱ δ' ὑπὸ σφῶν αὐτῶν ἀντιπολεμούντων, (εἰσὶ δὲ αἳ καὶ οἰκήτορας μετέβαλον ἁλισκόμεναι,) οὔτε φυγαὶ τοσαίδε ἀνθρώπων καὶ φόνος, ὁ μὲν κατ' αὐτὸν τὸν πόλεμον ὁ δὲ διὰ τὸ στασιάζειν. 3. τά τε πρότερον ἀκοῇ μὲν λεγόμενα, ἔργῳ δὲ σπανιώτερον βεβαιούμενα, οὐκ ἄπιστα κατέστη, σεισμῶν τε πέρι, οἳ ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἅμα μέρος γῆς, καὶ ἰσχυρότατοι οἱ αὐτοὶ, ἐπέσχον· ἡλίου τε ἐκλείψεις, αἳ πυκνότεραι παρὰ τὰ ἐκ τοῦ πρὶν χρόνου μνημονευόμενα ξυνέβησαν, αὐχμοί τε ἔστι παρ' οἷς μεγάλοι, καὶ ἀπ' αὐτῶν καὶ λιμοὶ, καὶ ἡ οὐχ ἥκιστα βλάψασα, καὶ μέρος τι φθείρασα, ἡ λοιμώδης νόσος· ταῦτα γὰρ πάντα μετὰ τοῦδε τοῦ πολέμου ἅμα ξυνεπέθετο. 4. ἤρξαντο δὲ αὐτοῦ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ Πελοποννήσιοι λύσαντες τὰς τριακοντούτεις σπονδὰς, αἳ αὐτοῖς ἐγένοντο μετὰ Εὐβοίας ἅλωσιν. 5. διότι δ' ἔλυσαν, τὰς αἰτίας προέγραψα πρῶτον καὶ τὰς διαφοράς, τοῦ μή τινα ζητῆσαί ποτε ἐξ ὅτου τοσοῦτος πόλεμος τοῖς Ἕλλησι κατέστη. 6. τὴν μὲν γὰρ ἀληθεστάτην πρόφασιν, ἀφανεστάτην δὲ λόγῳ, τοὺς

x. 1, 31 (evidently written in imitation of them), Historia scribitur ad narrandum, non ad probandum; totumque opus non ad actum rei pugnamque præsentem (ἀγώνισμα), sed ad memoriam posteritatis et ingenii famam (ἐς ἀεὶ) componitur (ξύγκειται). Also by a passage of Polyb. iii. 31, 12, Ἱστορίας γὰρ, ἐὰν ἀφέλῃ τις τὸ διὰ τί, καὶ πῶς, καὶ τίνος χάριν ἐπράχθη, καὶ τὸ πραχθὲν πότερα εὔλογον ἔσχε τὸ τέλος τὸ καταλειπόμενον αὐτῆς, ἀγώνισμα μὲν, μάθημα δ' οὐ γίγνεται.

Ch. XXIII. Here our author again insists more particularly on the superior interest of the Peloponnesian to that of any similar event preceding.

1. μέγιστον ἐπράχθη] i. e. 'was the greatest achieved.' Here πρότερον stands, by an elegant Atticism, for προτέρων: a point which I think proper to notice, by way of showing the futility of Goeller's conjecture, προτέρων. It is strange he should not have remembered that πρότερον is often put between the article and subst., and so stands for an adjective; as Hdot. i. 186, τῶν πρότερον βασιλέων: and ii. 161. vi. 87, τῶν πρότερον ἀδικημάτων. i. 84, et al. The idiom is also found in Plato and Plut., and is of frequent occurrence in Polyb. Nor was it unknown in the plain language of common life. Thus, in the first Epistle of St. Peter, i. 14, we have: μὴ συσχηματιζόμενοι ταῖς πρότερον, ἐν τῇ ἀγνοίᾳ ὑμῶν, ἐπιθυμίαις: a mode of expression with which compare a similar one in Polyb. vi. 9, 2, τῆς πρότερον ἀγνοίας. In this case there is an ellip. of the participle of εἰμί.

Finally, strikingly similar to, and evidently imitated from, this expression of our author, is one in Appian, i. 132, τῶν πρότερον ἔργων κατὰ Θεὸν κρατῆσαι, where it is strange that Stephens (in Thes.) should have proposed to read ἐπὶ τῶν (forgetting the well-known Attic phrase, κρατεῖν τῆς μάχης or τοῦ πολέμου, 'to have the best of or in a battle'); and that Schweigh. there, for πρότερον, should have proposed to read προτέρων, though he must have met with the idiom in question at least twenty times in his author.

δυεῖν] Instead of this, Haack, Pop., and Goell. edit, from a few inferior MSS., δυοῖν. I have, with Bekk., thought proper to retain the former, resting, as it does, on the authority of almost all the best MSS. Δυεῖν is by Phrynichus acknowledged to be a correct form for the genit. though not for the dative. And certainly δυεῖν is here a genit.; the sense being, 'found its decision of two sea-fights,' i. e. consisting of two sea-fights. The idiom of the English language would, indeed, rather require, 'found its decision in two sea-fights.' The art. at κρίσιν stands for the pron. possessive. At ταχεῖαν the article is not wanted, the term being introduced κατ' ἐπανόρθωσιν, to signify, as we should say, 'found its decision—a speedy one—consisting of,' &c.

τούτου δὲ τοῦ—προὔβη] A brief form of expression for τούτου δὲ τοῦ πολέμου [τὸ] μῆκος [ἐπὶ] μέγα [μῆκος] προὔβη. Comp. infra i. 118 2.

ξυνηνέχθη γενέσθαι] 'happened to be,' befel; ξυμφέρεσθαι being, like ξυμφορὰ, almost always used of what is evil. The phrase in question is of frequent occurrence in the writers who have imitated our author, especially Procop. and Agathias.

2. ληφθεῖσαι ἠρημώθησαν] 'were captured and brought to ruin.'

ἀντιπολεμούντων] A rare word, seldom found except in the writers who have imitated our author.

καὶ οἰκήτ. μετέβ. ἁλισκ.] 'even changed their inhabitants,' (had their inhabitants changed) on being taken, as Ægina, Potidæa, and Scione.

φυγαὶ] banishings; for the word has an active sense.

3. ἀκοῇ μὲν λεγόμενα — βεβαιούμενα] 'very rarely confirmed [as to their actual occurrence] by facts.' Similarly in Agath. v. 5, it is said (by an evident imitation of our author), τῷ λόγῳ μὲν ἐπαινούμενα, ἔργῳ δὲ σπανιώτερον βεβαιούμενα.

ἐ. π. μέρος γῆς] 'to a great extent of territory.' A very rare plena locutio. The sense is: 'were most extensively prevalent.'

καὶ ἰσχυρότατοι οἱ αὐτοὶ] scil. ὄντες, 'iidemque violentissimi.'

ἐπέσχον] prævalebant, 'were prevalent;' a somewhat rare sense, but found in Dio Cass. 1140, ἐπὶ πλείους ἡμέρας ὁ σεισμὸς ἐπεῖχε. Polyb. v. 5, 6, τῶν ἐτησίων ἐπεχόντων.

ἐκλείψεις] Supply κατέστησαν. Goell. notices the variation of construction, strict propriety requiring ἐκλειψέων.

αὐχμοὶ] Drought naturally produces famine, which as naturally breeds pestilence. The connexion, indeed, between λιμὸς and λοιμὸς was almost proverbial. So Matt. xxiv. 7, καὶ ἔσονται λιμοὶ καὶ λοιμοί.

ἔστι παρ' οἷς μεγάλοι] On this use of ἔστιν with the relative, for ἔνιοι, see Matth. Gr. § 482. In such cases very rarely is any word, as παρὰ here, interposed; and then it is only a preposition.

μέρος τι] i. e. 'some considerable portion,' as infra vii. 30. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 487, 5.

ἡ λοιμώδης νόσος] for ὁ λοιμὸς, as in Pausan. ix. 5, 2. 28, 2. Niceph. Hist. p. 9. Jos. Hist. xv. 7. Hesychius, too, explains λοιμὴ by λοιμικὴ νόσος.

μετὰ τοῦδε τοῦ πολέμου ἅμα ξυνεπέθετο] We may remark the force imparted to these words by the seemingly pleonastic accumulation of μετὰ, ἅμα, and ξύν: with which may be compared an equally striking one in St. Paul, 1 Thess. iv. 17, ἅμα σὺν αὐτοῖς ἁρπαγησόμεθα. So we have in the following passages, evidently imitated from this of our author: Plut. vii. 25, 15, ἅμα τῷ πολέμῳ καὶ λιμοῦ συνεπιτιθεμένου τοῖς Ῥωμαίοις. Dio Cass. 591, 27, τραύματα—μάλιστα αὐτοῖς συνεπέθετο.

4. Thucydides now details the causes of the Peloponnesian war, both avowed and real;—the former, the disputes that arose out of the affairs of Epidamnus and Potidœa; the latter, the jealousy entertained by Lacedæmon of the power of Athens.

5. προέγ. πρ.] So Haack, Bekk., Goell., and Pop. edit, for the common reading ἔγραψα πρῶτον—rightly, for this is not a pleonasm, but a stronger expression.

6. ἀλ. πρόφ.] 'the truest cause.' This sense the context requires to be assigned to πρόφασις, as it afterwards does to αἰτίαν that of pretext; though, as Goell. remarks, the two might have changed places. And indeed I have noted such a position in Appian i. 228, 6, ἥτις δὲ τῷ Ἀννίβᾳ γέγονε τῆς ἐσβολῆς αἰτία τε (I conj. γε) ἀληθὴς καὶ πρόφασις ἐς τὸ φανερόν. But the term πρόφασις may very well signify the TRUE cause; since that signif. of the word, though rare and scarcely noticed by philologists, is found also infra i. 141, ἐπὶ μεγάλῃ καὶ ἐπὶ βραχείᾳ προφάσει. Dion. Hal. p. 160, 40. 173, 6. Theodoret ap. Stob. Phys. i. 116. So in Eurip. Iph. Aul. 1413, we have: ἔχω, τάλαινα, πρόφασιν, ὥστ' ἀλγεῖν φρένα. Aristoph. Vesp. 339 and 468, τινα πρόφασιν ἔχων. Herodot. i. 29, 30. iv. 145. vii. 139. iii. 36. vi. 94. Eurip. Hec. 344, ἔχεις πρόφασιν: and, finally, not unfrequently in Plato. Indeed, that the word should bear this sense, is no wonder, since such is far nearer to its primitive signification than the other. Now that I believe to be (from προφαίνω) a manifest or apparent cause producing any event, and consequently the only true cause of it. In this sense πρόφασις is used not unfrequently by Hippocrates (see Foësius), namely, to denote such physical causes of disease as are true and real.

Ἀθηναίους ἡγοῦμαι, μεγάλους γιγνομένους καὶ φόβον παρέχοντας τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, ἀναγκάσαι ἐς τὸ πολεμεῖν· αἱ δὲ ἐς τὸ φανερὸν λεγόμεναι αἰτίαι αἵδε ἦσαν ἑκατέρων, ἀφ' ὧν λύσαντες τὰς σπονδὰς ἐς τὸν πόλεμον κατέστησαν.

XXIV. Ἐπίδαμνός ἐστι πόλις ἐν δεξιᾷ ἐσπλέοντι τὸν Ἰόνιον κόλπον· προσοικοῦσι δ' αὐτὴν Ταυλάντιοι, βάρβαροι, Ἰλλυρικὸν ἔθνος. 2. ταύτην ἀπῴκισαν μὲν Κερκυραῖοι, οἰκιστὴς δ' ἐγένετο Φάλιος Ἐρατοκλείδου Κορίνθιος, γένος τῶν ἀφ' Ἡρακλέους, κατὰ δὴ τὸν παλαιὸν νόμον ἐκ τῆς μητροπόλεως κατακληθείς· ξυνῴκισαν

And in two other passages of our author, infra ii. 49, and vi. 76, it means an apparent cause. As, however, what is apparent is not always real, so (by the same use as that by which in Latin apparens and apparuit sometimes denote what is unreal) πρόφασις came to mean, what it most frequently does, an ostensible cause, a pretext, &c. Moreover, the word sometimes bears the modified sense occasion, ansa, ἀφορμή, similarly as causa sometimes in Latin (so in Cic. de Div. ii. 2, we have: 'mihi causam explicandæ philosophiæ attulit gravis casus civitatis):' and occasionally (especially in Herodot.) it is difficult to say which of these two significations is to be assigned. But πρόφασις may well signify the true cause, though rare. It occurs also in Dion. Hal. p. 160, 40. 173, 6. Theodect. ap. Stob. Phys. 1, 116.

αἱ δὲ ἐς τὸ—κατέστησαν] 'but the causes openly avowed by either party, for which they broke the treaty and entered into the war, were these.'

Ch. XXIV. 1. ἐν δεξιᾷ ἐσπλέοντι] 'on the right as one enters.' Hesych. has ἐνδέξια, which Hemsterhus. here prefers, wrongly, I conceive, for it seems to have been a later form. The common reading, the editors observe, is confirmed by all the MSS., and by Dionys. Hal., Demetrius, Max. Tyr., Procop., and the Schol. on Pindar. I would add that it is also used by Herodot. vii. 4, 3, and 21, 7. Xen. Anab. i. 5, 1. xi. 2, 3. Appian, i. 1, 8. Pausan. p. 20, 14. 40, 12, et sæpe. Plutarch, Sert. 7. Alex. 66, and Anton. 41, and especially Pollux xi. 161, ἐν δεξιᾷ εἰσπλέοντι. Strabo, p. 739, 4, ἐν δεξιᾷ εἰσπλέοντι. Also p. 936, 33, and 1180, 17. Aristot. de Mundo, p. 644, A. ἐν δεξιᾷ εἰσπλέοντι τὰς Ἡρακλείους στήλας. Arrian, Peripl. 12, ἐν δεξιᾷ πλέοντι, et sæpe. Lucian, ii. 203, 4, ἐν δεξιᾷ μέν εἰσι ἰόντι. Procop. sæpissime. See Matth. Gr. § 390, C. and Blomfield in loc. For ἐσπλέοντι τὸν, Pop. is strongly inclined to read ἐσπλέοντι ἐς τόν. But not a single MS. countenances the insertion; and although the construction with the prep. is far more frequent,—nay, that without it is unusual,—yet, for that very reason, the reading ought not, without the authority of MSS., to be altered. The above construction, however, is not so rare as to be almost unprecedented. Besides being found in certain passages imitated from the present, (Procop. xvii. 36. 319, 3. Philostr. V. Ap. v. 1. Aristot. de Mundo, 64, A.) it occurs in Eurip. Iph. Taur. 1389, Εὔξεινον πόρον—εἰσεπλεύσαμεν.

τὸν Ἰόνιον κόλπον] This is to be carefully distinguished from Ἰόνιον πόντον, and is confined to that part of it afterwards called the Adriatic, which was bounded on the Illyrian coast by the Acroceraunian promontory. The most ancient and important passage for this appellation is Herodot. vi. 127.

προσοικοῦσι δ' αὐτὴν] The dat. is the usual construction; but the accus. is found in all the MSS., and confirmed by Priscian. Steph. Thes. too gives an example of the accus. from Aristides. To which I add Procopius Gaz. ap. Villois. Anecd. xi. 35, τὴν Κιλικίαν προσοικοῦσι.

Ταυλάντιοι] Two of the best MSS. have Ταλάντιοι. But Ταυλ. is defended by Steph. Byz. Strabo, 474. Ptolemy. Pliny, H. N. iii. 20. Zosim. v. 26, 1. Procop. 92, 36.

2. Κορίνθιος, γένος] So I point, with the Schol. and Bekk., while Ha. and Pop. retain the common punctuation, Κορίνθιος γένος, which is defended by vii. 57, Ἀργεῖοι γένος. At γένος subaud. κατά, and at τῶν, ἐκ, 'by race descended from Hercules, an Heracleid.' The article is not often omitted in Thucyd. before the genitive of an appellative (as here before Ἐρατοκλείδου), unless to avoid unpleasant repetition, in a long list of names. Otherwise the omission arises (as Matthiæ says, Gr. § 273) from this mention of descent being often not so much a precise definition as a customary addition.

κατὰ δὴ τὸν παλαιὸν νόμον, &c.] As to what were the rights due from colonies to the parent states, it may be observed, that the colonists were furnished with arms, utensils, and stores of provisions, by their fellow-citizens, at the public expense. They were also provided with diplomata, called κατοίκια, [constituting them a colony. T.] But, above all, they carried with them their country's gods, and the sacred fire lighted at and taken from the penetrale urbis, and which, if it should chance to be extinguished, had again to be kindled from thence. It was the custom for the colony to annually send deputies to the mother country, to celebrate divine rites in honour of their country's gods. It was also usual for the colony to take its high priests from the parent country. And, moreover, if the colonists should ever choose to plant any where another colony, it was customary for them to ask for a leader of it from the mother country. Duker.

καὶ τοῦ ἄλλου Δωρικοῦ γένους] 'and of the rest (i. e. the other nations) of the Doric race.' So Haack, Pop., Bekk., and Goell. edit, from several MSS., instead of vulg. καὶ ἄλλοι ἐκ τοῦ Δ. γ.

3. στασιάσαντες ἐν ἀλλήλοις] We have here an unusual syntax; the general one being a dat. or accus. with πρός. Yet στασ. ἐν ἀλλήλοις is found in Xen. Cyr. vii. 4, 1, and ἐν ἑαυτοῖς in Hist. i. 5, 5. The words ὡς λέγεται may be referred to what follows, but better to what precedes.

ἀπὸ πολέμου—ἐφθάρησαν] So Haack, Goell., Bekk., and Pop. edit, from nearly all the MSS., for ὑπὸ πολέμου. I cannot, however, agree with Goell. in assigning to the ἀπὸ the sense post, and so placing a comma after βαρβάρων. Besides that the authority for such a signification of ἀπὸ in the early writers is insufficient, the sense so yielded is here little apt. In fact ἀπὸ here (as not unfrequently elsewhere in our author) stands for ὑπὸ, by (an interpretation, it may be observed, confirmed by the old reading above noticed, which was evidently no other than a gloss); and this is the more apparent from its being connected with ἐφθάρησαν, 'were wasted, reduced very low;' a term, this, denoting little less than διαφθείρω. In this sense it frequently occurs in our author; e. g. ii. 30. iii. 85, 92, 93. Hesiod, Opp. 180. They were brought to the brink of ruin by a war with the neighbouring barbarians, which had been, it seems, produced by democratic factions. The Taulantians, regarding the Epidamnians as intruders on their territory, took advantage of their internal dissensions to attack and endeavour to destroy the city.

4. τὰ δὲ τελευταῖα] An adverbial phrase for postremo, at the last, as at viii. 85. iii. 65, ἃ δὲ τελευταῖά φατε ἀδικηθῆναι, supp. κατά. Thus the lexicographers give τελευταῖα and also τὰ τελ. for postremo. So Lucian, i. 868, 89, τὰ τελευταῖα καὶ ἐμνήθη. Ælian, V. H. τὰ τελευταῖα ἀπεσφάγη. Dio Cass. 924, 44.

ἐξεδίωξε] 'drove into exile.' The word in this sense is noticed by Pollux as a Thucydidean term. Scarcely any precedent for it elsewhere is to be found in Steph. Thes. But I have noted it in Dio Cass. 256, 96. 1113, 46. 1288, 39. Lucian, i. 1, 18. Diod. Sic. i. 260, ἐκδ. ἐκ τῆς χώρας. And the word ought also to be restored in a passage of Xen. Ages. iii. 1, τὰ αἰσχρὰ ἐδίωκε, where read, from one MS., ἐξεδ.

Of τοὺς δυνατοὺς the sense is optimates, the oligarchs; and so, on the other hand, by δῆμος is denoted the democratical party. On the form of government in Epidamnus, see Wachsmuth, Antiq. Gr.

5. ὡς μητρόπολιν οὖσαν] See note supra § 2.

τούς τε φεύγοντας ξυναλλάξαι σφίσι, καὶ τὸν τῶν βαρβάρων πόλεμον καταλῦσαι. 6. ταῦτα δὲ ἱκέται καθεζόμενοι ἐς τὸ Ἡραῖον ἐδέοντο. οἱ δὲ Κερκυραῖοι τὴν ἱκετείαν οὐκ ἐδέξαντο, ἀλλ' ἀπράκτους ἀπέπεμψαν.

τοὺς φεύγοντας] the exiles; for ὁ φεύγων came to be almost a substantive.

6. καθεζόμενοι] 'sitting,' the posture of suppliants, from which, also, they arose, on being raised by the person whom they addressed, and who thereby was understood to grant their petition. See i. 126, and note. On this use of ἐς with καθίζεσθαι, Matth. Gr. § 578, observes that καθέζεσθαι, ἵστασθαι (στῆναι) εἰς τόπον τινὰ or εἴς τι stands properly for καθέζεσθαι, ἵστασθαι ἐν τόπῳ ἐλθόντα εἰς αὐτόν.

ἀπράκτους ἀπέπεμψαν] A common formula for denying a request.

Ch. XXV. 1. γνόντες—οὖσαν] for εἶναι, in either case, there is pres. for imperf. Τιμωρίαν is for βοήθειαν, or ἐκδικησιν, scil. κατὰ τῶν ἀδικούντων.

ἐν ἀπόρῳ εἴχοντο] 'they were held in a strait or perplexity, were in hesitation.' So Herodot. ix. 98, ἀπορίῃ εἴχοντο: and iii.129. iv. 131, ἐν ἀπορίῃσιν εἴχετο. Athen. p. 361, B. ἐν ἀπορίᾳ δὲ οἱ Φοίνικες ἐχόμενοι. Dio Cass. p. 626, 99, ἐν ἀπόρῳ ἔσχετο. Procopius often uses the phrase ἔχειν ἐν ἀπόρῳ, as p. 102, ἐν ἀπόρῳ εἶχον τὸ θέσθαι τὸ παρόν: where, considering that the passage is evidently imitated from this of our author, ought, it would seem, to be read εἶχοντο θέσθαι. Yet at p. 134, 37, we have: ἐν ἀπόρῳ εἶχεν ᾗ τὸ παρὸν θέσθαι: and at 226, 16, ἐν ἀπόρῳ εἶχον ᾗ τὸ παρὸν θήσονται: and at p. 126, 34, ἐν ἀπόρῳ εἶλεν ᾗ τὸ παρὸν θέσθαι, where for εἶλεν ought to be read εἶχεν. In such cases ἔχειν stands for εἶναι, as in Latin habeo for esse; e. g. Sallust, Cat. 41, 'in incerto habuere, quidnam consilii caperent.' Finally, of the phrase ἐν ἀπόρῳ εἶναι examples occur in Herodot., Xenoph., Dionys. Hal., and other writers. And of θέσθαι thus used for διαθέσθαι, disponere, componere, we have examples infra i. 31, θ. τὸν πόλεμον, and v. 80. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 70, 31, εὖ θέσθαι τὸ παρόν. Schol. on Pindar Nem. 3, 131, διδάσκει τὸ παρὸν εὖ θέσθαι. Eurip. Iph. T. 1004, τὰ σαυτοῦ θέμενος εὖ. So also Bacch. 49. Andr. 380.

τὸν θεὸν ἐπήροντο] So Haack, Bekk., Goell., and Pop. edit for vulg. ἐπήρωτων, which, however, is defended by i. 118, and iii. 92. Arrian, E. A. vii. 26, 3. Diodor. Sic. ii. 338. iv. 37. Xenoph. sæpe. Yet the authority of MSS. here imperatively demands the former, which is further confirmed by a passage of our author infra iii. 92, and by others in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 63, 9 (Reiske). Dio Cass. 152, 34. 403, 63. 718, 85. Plato, 523, D. 368, D. Aristoph. Lys. 98. Plut. 32. Eurip. frag. Erecth. ii. 1, and especially by Hdot. i. 19, τὸν θεὸν ἐπείρεσθαι.

παραδοῦναι, καὶ ἡγεμόνας ποιεῖσθαι] Thus surrendering the colony to the Corinthians, and transferring their allegiance to Corinth.

2. ἐδέοντό τε] I have, with Bekk. and Pop., placed a colon after δηλοῦντες: for it has been shown by Hermann (Opusc. iii. 156) that ἐδέοντό τε signifies prætereaque orabant. Ἀποδεικνύντες signifies 'having proved.'

3. κατὰ τὸ δίκαιον] 'on account of the justice [of the request].' The words νομίζοντες, &c. are meant to more fully express what was intimated at κατὰ τὸ δίκαιον: and, consequently, in construing, should be brought in between δίκαιον and ὑπεδέξαντος, a nominativus pendens, in the place of the genitive absolute, νομιζόντων αὐτῶν.

ἑαυτῶν] theirs. Observe τε—ἅμα δὲ καὶ, where the apodosis is in καί.

ὅτι παρημέλουν, ὄντες ἄποικοι] 'because, though their colonists, they had treated them with neglect.'

4. πανηγύρεσι ταῖς κοιναῖς] 'public assemblages,' the celebration of the great festivals for the exhibition of games (as the Olympic) and theatrical representations, &c. So in Aristoph. Pers. 342, we have: ἤδη γὰρ ἔξεσται τόθ' ὑμῖν—ἐς πανηγύρεις θεωρεῖν ἑστῶσθαι, &c. On these assemblages see Blomfield on Æschyl. Theb. 206.

Of the nature of the honours and privileges denoted here by γέρα, we can possess but an imperfect knowledge: yet among these we may very well venture to include (with the Schol.) the προεδρία, as also, what Diod. Sic. supposes to be chiefly meant, the sending of choice victims for sacrifice at Corinth.

διδόντες] This and the following participles, προκαταρχόμενοι and περιφρονοῦντες, have no finite verb to which to be referred, and consequently the construction is left incomplete. The best mode of treating the difficulty is, with Poppo and Arnold, to suppose that the writer meant to complete the sentence by repeating at the end of it some verb of similar meaning to παρημέλουν, and then omitted to do so; as if παρημέλουν itself could serve as the verb; notwithstanding that, by inserting γάρ, he had, according to grammatical construction, rendered this impossible. As examples of passages similarly imperfect, Poppo adduces two, infra vii. 74, and viii. 87. And Arnold compares another at vii. 28, where (he observes) the insertion of the γάρ shows that a new sentence was intended to be begun, yet no verb follows; so that the verb must be repeated from the preceding sentence, just as if the γάρ had not been introduced: ἠπίστησεν ἄν τις ἀκούσας· τὸ γὰρ—μήδ' ἀποστῆναι, ἀλλὰ ἐκεῖ Συρακούσας ἀντιπολιορκεῖν,—καὶ τὸν παράλογον τοσοῦτον ποιῆσαι, &c. Here ἠπίστησεν ἄν τις must be repeated, although the insertion of the γάρ shows that the writer had at first a different construction in his mind. Comp. Matth. Gr. § 555. Obs. 1.

οὔτε Κορινθίῳ—ἱερῶν] Of these words the sense certainly cannot be that assigned to them by the Latin and English translators and some commentators, 'began with a Corinthian in the distribution of public sacrifices.' No mention is here made of distribution; and the sense in question would rather require Κορινθίοις ἀνδράσι. The expression Κορινθίῳ ἀνδρὶ can only refer to some one particular Corinthian who had especially to do with the sacrificial rites; namely, as the Schol., Steph., Abresch, and Heilm. are agreed in supposing, the chief priest, who, the Schol. tells us, was customarily sent from parent states to colonies, and whose office on the occasion was to commence the sacrifice by pouring a cup of wine on the head of the victim, sprinkle it with the sacrificial meal, and cut off the hairs from the forehead and throw them into the fire. This view of the sense, I find, Poppo himself has been induced to adopt; confirming it by a similar form of expression in Appian i. 100 (doubtless formed on the present), καὶ εὐθὺς, ὥσπερ αὐτῇ (scil. τῇ ἐλάφῳ) προκαταρχόμενος (scil. τῆς μάχης) ἠκροβολίσατο, &c. 'beginning the battle by or with the stag,' using that as his dux and auspex. Whence (I would observe) may sufficiently be justified this use of the dative which Poppo had needlessly objected to, and which Goeller even denied to be Greek! There may be, as Abresch supposes, an ellip. of ἐν, but perhaps the dative itself has all the force necessary. It would, indeed, have been more agreeable to the norma loquendi, if the author had written ἀπὸ Κορινθίου ἀνδρός. And so in a passage of St. Peter, 1st Epist. iv. 17, we have: ὅτι ὁ καιρὸς τοῦ ἄρξασθαι τὸ κρίμα ἀπὸ τοῦ οἴκου τοῦ Θεοῦ· εἰ δὲ πρῶτον ἀφ' ἡμῶν, &c. where it might have been ἡμῖν: and the version of our English translators there 'at us,' would well represent the sense in the present passage, but still better that of Wakef. 'with us,' which is more accordant with the English idiom. Though we have from so used in a line of Dryden:

'The song began from Jove.'

περιφρονοῦντες δὲ αὐτοὺς] lit. 'looking above them,' despising them. As used in αὐτοὺς, καὶ χρημάτων δυνάμει ὄντες κατ᾽ ἐκεῖνον τὸν χρόνον ὁμοῖα τοῖς Ἑλλήνων πλουσιωτάτοις, καὶ τῇ ἐς πόλεμον παρασκευῇ δυνατώτεροι, ναυτικῷ δὲ καὶ πολὺ προέχειν ἔστιν ὅτε ἐπαιρόμενοι, καὶ κατὰ τὴν τῶν Φαιάκων προενοίκησιν τῆς Κερκύρας κλέος ἐχόντων τὰ περὶ τὰς ναῦς. ᾗ καὶ μᾶλλον ἐξηρτύοντο τὸ ναυτικὸν, καὶ ἦσαν οὐκ ἀδύνατοι· τριήρεις γὰρ εἴκοσι καὶ ἑκατὸν ὑπῆρχον αὐτοῖς ὅτε ἤρχοντο πολεμεῖν. Κερκυραῖοι δὲ ἐπειδὴ ᾔσθοντο τούς τε οἰκήτορας καὶ φρουροὺς ἥκοντας ἐς τὴν Ἐπίδαμνον, τήν τε ἀποικίαν Κορινθίοις δεδομένην, ἐχαλέπαινον· καὶ πλεύσαντες εὐθὺς πέντε καὶ εἴκοσι ναυσὶ, καὶ ὕστερον ἑτέρῳ στόλῳ, τούς τε φεύγοντας ἐκέλευον κατ᾽ ἐπήρειαν δέχεσθαι αὐτοὺς, (ἦλθον

this sense, the term has more usually the syntax with the genit. And so in Plut. Per. we have: αὐθαδείᾳ τινὶ—περιφρονῆσαι τῶν Λακων. Also in a passage of St. Paul, Tit. ii. 5. Yet the accus. is found in Aristoph. Nub. 741, περιφ. τὰ πράγματα, and v. 225, ἀεροβατῶ, καὶ περιφρονῶ τὸν ἥλιον, i. e. 'look above the sun,' and v. 226, τοὺς Θεοὺς ὑπερφρονεῖς. Lucian, iii. 497, 1, περιφ. Καλλιόπην. Jos. Ant. iv. 8, 4, περιφ. τοὺς γονεῖς. Greg. Naz. epitaph on his father: τοῦ κόσμου περιφ. τὸ ἁπατηλὸν, 'lookest above.' Of καταφρονεῖν the sense is, 'to look down upon any thing or person.'

ὄντες—ὁμοῖα τοῖς Ἑλλήνων πλουσιωτάτοις] put (by a use of adv. for adj., on which see Matth. Gr. § 200) for ὄντες πλούσιοι ὁμοῖα τοῖς μάλιστα (πλουσίοις) τῶν Ἑλλήνων, as in Herodot. vii. 116, we have: ἀνὴρ δόκιμος ὁμοῖα τῷ μάλιστα, and iii. 57. Jos. Ant. xix. 1, 18, χρήματα περιβεβλημένος ὁμοῖα τοῖς Ῥωμαίων πλουσιωτάτοις.

δυνατώτεροι] 'an over-match for them,' i. e. the Corinthians.

προέχειν] This depends on ἐπαιρόμενοι, προέχειν ἔστιν ὅτε ἐπαιρόμενοι standing for ἐπαιρ. διὰ τὸ προέχειν, i. e. ὅτι προεῖχον. See Matth. Gr. § 534. Ἔστιν ὅτε, occasionally: for the Corcyreans, it seems, did not always show this pride. Of κατὰ, just after, the sense is propter, as at c. 49.

ᾗ καὶ μᾶλλον] i. e. as the Schol. says, that they might not appear inferior to the Phœnicians.

CH. XXVI. 1. ἄσμενοι] for ἀσμένως, gladly, as infra iii. 84. v. 34, ἄσμενον πρόφασιν λαβόντες. Τὴν ὠφέλειαν stands for τὴν βοήθειαν, 'the aid required.'

οἰκήτορα τὸν βουλόμενον ἰέναι κελεύοντες] Here κελεύοντες must, per dilogiam, be taken in two senses, to denote, 1. as applied to οἰκ. τὸν βουλ. direct; 2. as applied to Ἀμπρακιωτῶν — φρουροὺς, command. And the ἰέναι must be taken twice. Thus there will be no occasion to understand, as the Schol. does, ἔπεμπον.

2. πεζῇ] 'by land.' See my Lex. N. Test. in voc.

μὴ κωλύωνται—περαιούμενοι] Verbs of hindering are among those which take the particip. for infin. See Matth. Gr. § 547, et seq.

3. ᾔσθοντο] This, for vulg. ᾤσθηντο, is edited by Haack, Pop., and Goell., from many of the best MSS.

ἐκέλευον κατ᾽ ἐπήρειαν] On the import here of the term ἐπήρεια, no little difference of opinion exists among commentators. Goell. assigns to it the sense malitiam; while Levêque renders, 'with insulting hauteur;' of which two senses the latter deserves the preference. The word, however, properly denotes 'any injurious treatment' (see Diod. Sic. vii. 140), whether by words, as shown in insult or calumny, or deeds, as shown in violence of any kind (see Jos. Ant. xvii. 5, 5). Sometimes also the sense insult is associated γὰρ ἐς τὴν Κέρκυραν οἱ τῶν Ἐπιδαμνίων φυγάδες, τάφους τε ἀποδεικνύντες καὶ ξυγγένειαν, ἣν προϊσχόμενοι ἐδέοντο σφᾶς κατάγειν,) τούς τε φρουροὺς, οὓς Κορίνθιοι ἔπεμψαν, καὶ τοὺς οἰκήτορας ἀποπέμπειν. 4. οἱ δὲ Ἐπιδάμνιοι οὐδὲν αὐτῶν ὑπήκουσαν. ἀλλὰ στρατεύουσιν ἐπ᾽ αὐτοὺς οἱ Κερκυραῖοι τεσσαράκοντα ναυσὶ μετὰ τῶν φυγάδων, ὡς κατάξοντες, καὶ τοὺς Ἰλλυριοὺς προσλαβόντες. 5. προσκαθεζόμενοι δὲ τὴν πόλιν, προεῖπον Ἐπιδαμνίων τε τὸν βου-

with that of injury, as in Jos. Ant. xvi. 2, 3, 4. Demosth. de Cor. ἐχθροῦ μὲν ἐπήρειαν ἔχει, καὶ ὕβριν καὶ λοιδορίαν καὶ προπηλακισμὸν ὁμοῦ. Whether these two senses are here to be united is doubtful; but supposing the two to be intended, we may render, with Arnold, 'in order to vex or insult them;' for, as he observes, 'they were more anxious to annoy the Epidamnians than to aid the exiles.' This, however, involves no little harshness: and, as the expression in question seems (as in the phrases κατ᾽ ἔχθραν, κατὰ φιλίαν) to refer to inward affection of the mind rather than outward action, the sense intended appears to be, 'insultingly and contumeliously.' So Aristot. Rhet. ii. 2, τρία ἐστὶν ὀλιγωρίας, καταφρόνησίς τε καὶ ἐπηρεασμὸς καὶ ὕβρις, and Polit. iii. 16, πολλὰ πρὸς ἐπήρειαν καὶ χάριν εἰώθασι πράττειν. And such is the force of ἐπηρεάζοντες in Plut. Opp. Mor. 135, D. vexantes per invidiam et contumeliam. Finally, that the word might bear (what Goell. denies it can) the sense threateningly, is sufficiently proved by a passage of Herodot. vi. 9, 22, τάδε λέγετε ἐπηρεάζοντες. And, indeed, it is borne out by the etymology of the word, which may best be derived from ἐπὶ and ἀρειὰ, an Homeric and Pindaric term signifying menace, threatening, and sometimes malediction, imprecation; which, indeed, seems to be the primary sense of the word, and the other only a secondary one by metonymy. And so ἔπαρὰ in Hom. Il. ix. 456, θεοὶ δ᾽ ἐτέλειον ἐπαράς. In fact, ἐπήρεια appears to be a later or Attic form for the earlier ἔπαρὰ, the long a here, as often, being changed into η. Of the phrase itself, κατ᾽ ἐπ., I have met with no examples elsewhere except in Jos. Ant. xvi. 2, 3, 4, and Dio Cass. 169, 31. 714, 33, and there only in the sense injuriously, unjustly, as said of action.

τάφους ἀποδεικνύντες καὶ ξυγγένειαν] There is here a dilogia in ἀποδεικ., q. d. 'pointing out the graves [of their ancestors] and showing kindred.' The art. is not used at τάφ., it being implied. So it is observed by Heyn. Opusc. Acad. i. 316, 'majorum sepulchra in patriâ quam coloni reliquerant, aliaque monumenta pro eâ, quæ erat priscarum gentium summa circa hæc religio, magnam vim ad inflammandos pietatis sensu animos et in obsequio retinendos habere debuerunt.'

ἣν προϊσχόμενοι] 'putting forward which,' namely, as a ground of their request, προτείνοντες. In the word following κατάγειν, 'to bring back,' 'restore,' we have what was a customary term on this subject.

4. οὐδὲν αὐτῶν ὑπήκουσαν] Here οὐδὲν, which is for κατ᾽ οὐδὲν, stands not so much for οὐκ, as it is a stronger expression. It is used by Eurip. Iph. Aul. 521, 1417, and by others of the best writers from Homer downwards; e. g. Il. i. 412, ἄριστον᾽ Ἀχαιῶν οὐδὲν ἔτισε. So the Latin nil. The κατὰ is often expressed.

ἀλλὰ στρατεύουσιν] No single word of Latin or English will express the force of ἀλλά; to perceive which, some words must be supplied, as follows: 'Then the Corcyræans [no longer contented themselves with words] but warred,' &c.

ὡς κατάξοντες] Underst. αὐτοὺς, which was formerly in the text, but cancelled by all the recent editors, on the authority of MSS.

5. προσκαθεζόμενοι τὴν πόλιν] So Pop., Bekk., and Goell. edit, from the best MSS., for vulg. τῇ πόλει, the dat. being, indeed, the common construction, but the accus. that characteristic of our author, though not peculiar to him, since it is found, however rarely, in other writers, especially those of the old Attic dialect; yet only in cases where προσκαθ. has the sense to blockade.

προεῖπον Ε. τὸν βουλόμενον—ἀπιέναι] 'made proclamation, that any Epidamnian who chose, and the foreigners, might quit it unmolested.' The words of a proclamation or message are not unfrequently thus expressed by a construction with an accus. and infin. In the phrase ἀπαθεῖς ἀπιέναι, we have what was a customary form of expression in such cases. Similar to which we have in Arrian, E. A. iii. 30, 4, ἐπεκηρυκεύετο τοῖς βαρβάροις, ἀπαθεῖς σφᾶς ἀπαλλάσσεσθαι, and iv. 5, 3. Pindar, λόμενον καὶ τοὺς ξένους ἀπαθεῖς ἀπιέναι· εἰ δὲ μή, ὡς πολεμίοις ‡ χρήσεσθαι. 6. ὡς δ' οὐκ ἐπείθοντο, οἱ μὲν Κερκυραῖοι (ἔστι δὲ ἰσθμὸς τὸ χωρίον) ἐπολιόρκουν τὴν πόλιν· XXVII. Κορίνθιοι δ', ὡς αὐτοῖς ἐκ τῆς Ἐπιδάμνου ἦλθον ἄγγελοι ὅτι πολιορκοῦνται, παρεσκευάζοντο στρατιὰν, καὶ ἅμα ἀποικίαν ἐς τὴν Ἐπίδαμνον ἐκήρυσσον, ἐπὶ τῇ ἴσῃ καὶ ὁμοίᾳ τὸν βουλόμενον ἰέναι· εἰ δέ τις τὸ ὡς πολεμίοις χρήσεσθαι] Instead of this, χρήσασθαι, which is found in most of the MSS., has been edited by Pop., Bekk. (1st ed.), and Goell. The common reading has, however, been restored by Bekk. in his 2nd ed., and also by Dr. Arnold. Certainly the authority of MSS. in cases like this, of minute, and in MSS. scarcely perceptible, variation, is inconsiderable, and greatly inferior to the authority of grammatical and critical principles. Now here 'the future tense (as Dr. Arnold observes) seems required, because the act spoken of is essentially future, inasmuch as it is contingent upon the actions of the other party.' See Kühner's Gr. § 445, 2. Poppo, too, in his Appendix, is inclined to adopt this reading, observing, 'negari non potest ita melius diversam vim, quam προεῖπον apud ἀπιέναι et apud χρήσ. habet, distingui.' Here, then, though χρήσ. must grammatically depend upon προεῖπον, yet that verb must, per dilogiam, be repeated in another sense, such as is included in proclaim, i. e. declare openly, q. d. 'They told them plainly, that they would treat them as enemies.'

6. ἔστι δὲ ἰσθμὸς τὸ χωρίον] This insertion between the nominative and the verb to us seems awkward; but it is quite Thucydidean; though not confined to our author, being found also in Herodot. See more in note at i. 31, 2. The term ἰσθμὸς here, as supra c. 7, stands for ἰσθμῶδες χωρίον, meaning a peninsula. So infra viii. 25, we have, by a similar parenthesis, στήσαντες δὲ τροπαῖον, τὸν περιτειχισμὸν, ἰσθμώδους (peninsular) ὄντος τοῦ χωρίου, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι παρεσκευάζοντο. In the present passage the parenthetical δὲ is meant to intimate the reason for the action, as founded on its ready practicability. So, in a similar instance, Joh. vi. 10, it is said, ἦν δὲ χόρτος πολὺς ἐν τῷ τόπῳ.

ἐπὶ τῇ ἴσῃ καὶ ὁμοίᾳ] Supply μοίρᾳ, parte, i. e. sorte, conditione; this being a phrase to denote 'on condition of enjoying equal and like rights and privileges.' It occurs also infra i. 140, and often elsewhere in our author; it is also frequently found in Procop. and Appian, and occasionally other writers, e. g. Æschin. 65, 28. The question, however, is whether we are to understand this as meant of equality with the citizens of the old country, or of equality one amongst another. Heyne, Goell., and Wachsm. adopt the former view, supporting it from a passage infra i. 34, where colonists are said to be sent out ἐπὶ τῷ ὁμοίοι τοῖς λειπομένοις (i. e. those of the old country). The latter view, however, is adopted by Drum. and Arnold. 'The Corinthians (say they) guarantee the settlers against being subject to those distinctions of rank or privilege which existed in Corinth.' According to this view (which seems to deserve the preference), they were to enjoy equal political rights and privileges with the old colonists, and equal ones amongst one another, however unequal they might have held them in the mother country. A view which I would observe is strongly confirmed by a passage (evidently imitated from the present) of Procop. 106, 5, ὅσοι οὐκ ἐπὶ τὸ (read τῷ) δοῦλοι εἶναι, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῇ ἴσῃ καὶ τῇ ὁμοίᾳ ἐς τὴν πολιτείαν ἀφίκοιντο: and Herodot. ix. 7, συμμάχους ποιήσασθαι ἐπὶ τῇ ἴσῃ καὶ ὁμοίᾳ. So also Synes. 240, C. μεθέξων καὶ ἡμῶν καὶ τῶν ἡμετέρων ἐπὶ τὰ ἴσα καὶ τὰ ὅμοια, φησὶ τὸ γράμμα τὸ Λακωνικόν: where, for ἐπὶ τὰ ἴσα, and τὰ ὅμοια, read ἐπὶ τᾷ ἴσᾳ and τᾷ ὁμοίᾳ, Doricè; and by γράμμα there, understand a formula fœderis. It may be observed, that the passage infra i. 34, does not bear on the present case, the meaning there being, as Arnold observes, merely this, that 'the colonists intended their colony to be a παραυτίκα μὲν μὴ ἐθέλοι ξυμπλεῖν, μετέχειν δὲ βούλεται τῆς ἀποικίας, πεντήκοντα δραχμὰς καταθέντα Κορινθίας μένειν. ἦσαν δὲ καὶ οἱ πλέοντες πολλοὶ καὶ οἱ ταργύριον καταβάλλοντες. 2. ἐδεήθησαν δὲ καὶ τῶν Μεγαρέων ναυσὶ σφᾶς ξυμπροπέμψειν, εἰ ἄρα κωλύοιντο ὑπὸ Κερκυραίων πλεῖν· οἱ δὲ παρεσκευάζοντο αὐτοῖς ὀκτὼ ναυσὶ ξυμπλεῖν, καὶ Παλῆς Κεφαλλήνων τέσσαρσι. 3. καὶ Ἐπιδαυρίων ἐδεήθησαν, οἳ παρέσχον πέντε, Ἑρμιονῆς δὲ μίαν καὶ Τροιζήνιοι δύο, Λευκάδιοι δὲ δέκα καὶ Ἀμπρακιῶται ὀκτώ. 4. Θηβαίους δὲ χρήματα ᾔτησαν καὶ Φλιασίους, Ἠλείους δὲ ναῦς τε κενὰς καὶ χρήματα. αὐτῶν δὲ Κορινθίων νῆες παρεσκευάζοντο τριάκοντα καὶ τρισχίλιοι ὁπλῖται. XXVIII. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἐπύθοντο οἱ Κερκυραῖοι τὴν παρασκευὴν, ἐλθόντες ἐς Κόρινθον μετὰ Λακεδαιμονίων καὶ Σικυωνίων πρέσβεων, οὓς παρέλαβον, ἐκέλευον Κορινθίους τοὺς ἐν Ἐπιδάμνῳ φρουροὺς τε καὶ οἰκήτορας ἀπάγειν, ὡς οὐ μετὸν αὐτοῖς Ἐπιδάμνου. 2. εἰ δέ τι ἀντιποιοῦνται, δίκας ἤθελον δοῦναι ἐν Πελοποννήσῳ παρὰ πόλεσιν αἷς ἂν ἀμφότεροι ξυμβῶσιν· ὁποτέρων δ' ἂν δικασθῇ εἶναι τὴν ἀποικίαν, τούτους κρατεῖν. 3. ἤθελον δὲ καὶ τῷ ἐν Δελφοῖς μαντείῳ ἐπιτρέψαι. πόλεμον δὲ οὐκ εἴων ποιεῖν· sovereign state, and, so far, the equal of the mother country, instead of being a mere subject dependency.' Such, then, and such alone, can be the sense intended, since what was it that was offered as a boon to induce settlers to go to Epidamnus?—the freedom of the city.

καταθέντα] 'after laying (or putting) down.' Καταβαλόντα would have been the more usual term. Πεντ. δραχμὰς Κορινθίας, meaning the heavy Egyptian drachmæ, each of which was worth ten oboli; so that fifty of these are equivalent to about eighty-three Attic drachmæ. See Boeckh, and Mueller, Dor. ii. 61, 1.

μένειν] scil. ἐν τῇ πόλει, as opposed to ἰέναι before. Thus μένειν here stands for μένειν οἴκοι, or is to be taken in the sense 'to stay [where one is].'

2. ξυμπροπέμψειν] 'that they would forward them on the way,' convoy them. So Pop., Bekk., and Goell. edit, for vulg. ξυμπροπέμψαι. See Matth. Gr. § 506, 6.

Of εἰ ἄρα the sense is, if haply, as in Acts xvii. 27.

Παλῆς] So Bekk., Goell., and Pop., for vulg. Πάλης, rightly; for it has been shown by Buttm. and Matth. that these nouns ought not to have the iota subscript.

4. Θηβαίους δὲ χρήματα ᾔτησαν] On this syntax see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 411, 4.

CH. XXVIII. 1. οὓς παρέλαβον] 'whom they had taken with them,' assumpserant; either, as the Schol. supposes, to be witnesses of what was said, or rather to be mediators of peace between the two parties. See more in the note appended to my Transl.

οὐ μετὸν αὐτοῖς Ἐπιδάμνου] 'as they had no concern with.' Participles in the neuter are not unfrequently used thus as a nominativus pendens. So, besides μετὸν, παρὸν, ἐξὸν, &c. See Matth. Gr. 539.

2. εἰ δέ τι ἀντιποιοῦνται] scil. Ἐπιδάμνου, 'lay claim to:' so iv. 122, ἀντ. τῆς πόλεως. At τι subaud. κατά. The sense is, 'on any ground or pretence.'

δίκας δοῦναι] This phrase (which differs from δίκην δοῦναι, pœnas dare, puniri) signifies 'to submit the quarrel to a fair decision.' Arnold compares the phrase ὅρκον διδόναι, 'to offer to the other party a settling of the matter;' in the one case by the judgment of a third party, in the other by one's clearing oneself by an oath.

π. πόλεσιν αἷς ἂν is for παρὰ πόλ., παρ' αἷς ἂν ξυμβῶσιν ἀμφότ. δοῦναι δίκας.

τούτους κρατεῖν] 'those should hold or occupy it.' The infin. is used as εἶναι and μετέχειν in the last chap.; for the rule applies to proposals as well as proclamations.

3. οὐκ εἴων] dehortabantur, dissuaded it. An idiom of Ionic and old Attic Greek, again occurring infra vi. 72. vii. 48, and which is εἰ δὲ μή, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀναγκασθήσεσθαι ἔφασαν, ἐκείνων βιαζομένων, φίλους ποιεῖσθαι οὓς οὐ βούλονται, ἑτέρους τῶν νῦν ὄντων μᾶλλον, ὠφελείας ἕνεκα. 4. οἱ δὲ Κορίνθιοι ἀπεκρίναντο αὐτοῖς, ἢν τάς τε ναῦς καὶ τοὺς βαρβάρους ἀπὸ Ἐπιδάμνου ἀπαγάγωσι, βουλεύσεσθαι· πρότερον δὲ οὐ καλῶς ἔχειν τοὺς μὲν πολιορκεῖσθαι, αὐτοὺς δὲ δικάζεσθαι. 5. Κερκυραῖοι δὲ ἀντέλεγον, ἢν καὶ ἐκεῖνοι τοὺς ἐν Ἐπιδάμνῳ ἀπαγάγωσι, ποιήσειν ταῦτα· ἑτοῖμοι δὲ εἶναι καὶ ὥστε ἀμφοτέρους μένειν κατὰ χώραν, σπονδὰς †δὲ ποιήσασθαι ἕως ἂν ἡ δίκη γένηται. XXIX. Κορίνθιοι δὲ οὐδὲν τούτων ὑπήκουον, ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ πλήρεις αὐτοῖς ἦσαν αἱ νῆες καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι παρῆσαν, frequent in Herodot.; e. g. ii. 30. v. 96. iv. 203. vi. 109 & 36, οὐκ ἔα M. πόλεμον τῷ βασιλεῖ ἀναιρέεσθαι. It is also found occasionally in Xenoph. (as Hist. ii. 1, 9, οὐκ εἶα ναυμαχεῖν.) Æschyl. Sept. 360, πόρον δ' Ἰσμηνὸν οὐκ ἐᾷ περᾶν ὁ μάντις: and also even in Homer, e. g. Il. viii. 428, οὐκέτ' ἔγωγε Νῶϊ ἐῶ, Διὸς ἄντα, βροτῶν ἕνεκα πτολεμίζειν, and sometimes, I believe, in Euripides. This sense is confined to the pres. and imperf., and does not extend to the aorist: for οὐκ εἴασε means simply non sivit, did not let, as infra vi. 41, 80, et al.

εἰ δὲ μή] Goell. observes, that one should rather have expected εἰ δέ, scil. ποιοῦσιν; whereas εἰ δὲ μὴ signifies sin minus. The sense, however, is: 'but if otherwise, i. e. if it should not be as they wished.' Indeed this comes under the rule in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 617, 6, of negative propositions followed in their antithesis by a negative condition, εἰ δὲ μή, instead of an affirmative. So in Soph. Trach. 586, we have: εἴ τι μὴ δοκῶ πράσσειν μάταιον· εἰ δὲ μή, πεπαύσεται. See Heinsdorf ad Plat. Hipp. p. 134.

φίλους ποιεῖσθαι] 'gain friends,' lit. 'attach persons to themselves as friends.' Equiv. to the ordinary Greek expression, found in Luke xvi. 9, ποιήσατε ἑαυτοῖς φίλους, &c.

ἑτέρους τῶν νῦν ὄντων] 'other than,' of a very different nature from, 'their present [associates],' the exiles from Epidamnus. A somewhat rare syntax, at which the commentators would not have stumbled, had they remembered a similar form of expression in Æschyl. Choëph. 213, μὴ μάτευ' ἐμοῦ μᾶλλον φίλον: whence it is plain that the present unusual phraseology is formed on a blending of two modes of expression, φίλους π. ἑτέρους τῶν νῦν ὄντων, (where ἑτ. would carry the genit. from the comparison implied therein. See Matth. Gr. Gr. 366, a.) and φίλους π. μᾶλλον τῶν νῦν ὄντων. Consequently the construction is φίλους π. ἑτέρους μᾶλλον τῶν ν. ὄ.

4. πρότερον δὲ—δικάζεσθαι] The sense is: 'but before that was done, it would not be well that those should be sustaining a siege, while themselves are litigating on the question.' By αὐτοὺς is meant, as Bauer remarks, the two litigant parties, both the Corcyræans and the Corinthians only. Δικάζεσθαι signifies thus: 'to be impleaded, to be at issue in a suit:' as i. 77. iii. 44.

σπονδὰς δὲ ποιήσασθαι] The δὲ is bracketed by Haack and Pop., and cancelled by Goell., on the ground that it is not good Greek to say ἑτοῖμοι εἶναι ὥστε μένειν. But the use in question may, as Dr. Arnold notices, be classed with those odd, and almost unaccountable, uses of ὥστε after certain verbs treated on by Herm. on Viger. Addend. xii., who, after instancing passages of Soph. Phil. 656, and Eurip. Iph. T. 1379, subjoins this of our author, as also another infra viii. 86, ἐπαγγελλόμενοι ὥστε βοηθεῖν. And, indeed, as Dr. A. well observes, ἑτοῖμοι δὲ εἶναι is nearly the same with ἐπαγγελλόμενοι, 'professing their readiness.' Yet this will not, I apprehend, defend the δὲ, which will still be so little suitable, that we may suspect it to be corrupt, and conjecture the true reading to be τε. Certainly the δὲ καὶ must be construed together, whichever construction be adopted. If the δὲ be cancelled, the construction will be: ἑτοῖμοι δὲ καὶ εἶναι σπονδὰς ποιήσασθαι, ἕως ἂν ἡ δίκη γένηται, ὥστε ('hac conditione ut,' see Matth. Gr. Gr. 479) ἀμφοτέρους μένειν κατὰ χώραν. As, however, this would involve no little harshness, and not a single MS. is without the δὲ, it is better to acquiesce in the first-mentioned construction.

CH. XXIX. 1. οὐδὲν τούτων ὑπήκουον] See note supra, cap. 26, 4.

προπέμψαντες κήρυκα πρότερον πόλεμον προερροῦντα Κερκυραίοις, ἄραντες ἑβδομήκοντα νανσὶ καὶ πέντε, δισχιλίοις τε ὁπλίταις, ἔπλεον ἐπὶ τὴν Ἐπίδαμνον, Κερκυραίοις ἐναντία πολεμήσοντες. 2. ἐστρατήγει δὲ τῶν μὲν νεῶν Ἀριστεὺς ὁ Πελλίχου, καὶ Καλλικράτης ὁ Καλλίου, καὶ Τιμάνωρ ὁ Τιμάνθους· τοῦ δὲ πεζοῦ Ἀρχέτιμός τε ὁ Εὐρυτίμου, καὶ Ἰσαρχίδας ὁ Ἰσάρχου. 3. ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἐγένοντο ἐν Ἀκτίῳ τῆς Ἀνακτορίας γῆς, οὗ τὸ ἱερὸν τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνός ἐστιν, ἐπὶ τῷ στόματι τοῦ Ἀμπρακικοῦ κόλπου, οἱ Κερκυραῖοι κήρυκά τε προέπεμψαν αὐτοῖς ἐν ἀκατίῳ, ἀπερροῦντα μὴ πλεῖν ἐπὶ σφᾶς, καὶ τὰς ναῦς ἅμα ἐπλήρουν, ζεύξαντές τε τὰς παλαιὰς, ὥστε προπέμψαντες κήρυκα πρότερον] 'first sending forward;' for there is no pleonasm, as Gottl. supposes. On κήρυκα the Schol. remarks: Κήρυξ ἐν πολέμῳ, πρέσβεις ἐν εἰρήνῃ.

Κερκυραίοις ἐναντία πολεμήσοντες] A remarkable phrase, occurring also at iii. 55; found in Xen. Hist. iii. 5, 8. Lucian, t. i. 667. Arrian, E. A. i. 16, 10, and 29, 9. iv. 27, 4. Eurip. Orest. 534 & 915. Ion 373. Dio Cass. 1003, 24.

3. ζεύξαντες—τὰς παλαιὰς] Of these words the general sense is plainly this: 'having repaired and made seaworthy the old ones.' But to show how that sense arises, is far from easy. The difficulty hinges on the expression ζεύξαντες, which, from its being, what it is styled by Doxop. Rhet. ii. 245, 'a technical sea-term,' must, from our imperfect acquaintance with the arts, especially nautical, of the ancients, be necessarily involved in some obscurity, and require light to be sought from every quarter; and most may be expected from the ancient lexicographers. Now in Pollux, i. 125, on the subject of nautical terms, we have, evidently with reference to this passage, and at least one other: τὰς δὲ πεπονηκυίας κεκακωμένας (scil. ναῦς) ἔστι θεραπεῦσαι, ἐπισκευάσαι, ἐπισκευάσασθαι, ζεῦξαι, ζεύξασθαι. And in Greg. Corinth. Schol. on Hermog. 889, we have, with the same reference, yet more precise information, as follows: τὸ ζεύξαντες τὰς παλαιὰς ναῦς ἀντὶ τοῦ ζυγώματα κρατύναντες κεῖται· ζυγώματα δὲ καλοῦνται τὰ ξύλα τὰ ἀπὸ τοῦ (insert ἑνὸς, which word is indispensable, as will appear by comparing a similar mode of expression in Matt. vi. 24) τοίχου τῆς νεὼς πρὸς τὸν ἕτερον διατείνοντα τοῖχον· ἀφ' οὗ τὴν ναῦν σφίγξαι καὶ συναγαγεῖν, ἵνα μὴ χαυνωθῇ· ἢ, or, (i. e. according to another interpretation,) ζυγώματα τὰ ξύλα τὰ ἐμβαλλόμενα ταῖς σανίσιν, ὥστε συζεῦξαι τὰς σανίδας τὰς διῳρημένας ἐστιν ὅτε, where ζυγ. is explained wooden wedges. In this latter sense, too, one of the Scholiasts, on this passage of our author, explains by ζυγώματα αὐταῖς ἐνθέντες εἰς τὸ συνέχεσθαι. And again: τὰς μὲν ἔζευξαν διαλελυμένας οὔσας, καὶ ζυγωμάτων προσδεηθείσας εἰς συνοχήν. But what is meant by the very rare term ζυγώματα, we have yet to more fully ascertain. Now though the lexicons only inform us that it signifies the lintel of a door, it also, we may be sure, denoted what is called in Exod. xii. 7, the upper door-post: and, accordingly, it might very well be applied to signify, in the former sense, those inner beams and stays by which the frame-work of ships is held together, and which need to be repaired or renewed when they are refitted. I am not, indeed, enabled to adduce any other passage in which the word bears that sense; but that such was the acceptation of the primitive ζυγὸν, is plain from Theog. Admon. 513, where he thus addresses, in nautical figure, a broken-down seaman, who had applied to him for relief: νηός τοι πλευρῇσιν ὑπὸ ζυγὰ θήσομεν ἡμεῖς, 'we will clap [fresh] inner stays to your ribs,' i. e. will support and strengthen your inside with food. A mode of expression with which we compare a similar one in Ps. civ. 15, Sept. καὶ ἄρτος (ὃς) καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου στηρίζει. And we have in our own tongue a not dissimilar metaphor in the language of common life. Indeed ζυγὸν is not unfrequent in the sense beam, plank. The question, however, is, to which of the foregoing uses of the term ζυγώματα we may suppose ζεύξ. here to refer. The former mode of taking it is preferable; for, besides that there is greater authority for it, difficult is it to see how these wooden wedges could ever be introduced into the planking of a rickety ship: they could only have been used at the first building of a vessel: whereas, in the other sense, beams or stays, they might

easily be applied, and the vessel be effectually held together by a sort of inner belting. By Goell. and Arn., however, the expression ζεύξ. is supposed to allude to the practice, not only ancient but modern, of passing a cable under the keel of a vessel, to prevent the planks from starting. An allusion to which they trace in Hor. Od. i. 14, 6, Sine funibus Vix durare carinæ Possint imperiosius æquor. Also in Plato, Repub. x. p. 616, εἶναι γὰρ τοῦτο τὸ φῶς ξύνδεσμον τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, οἷον τὰ ὑποζώματα τῶν τριήρων, οὕτω πᾶσαν ξυνέχων τὴν περιφοράν: and Acts xxvii. 17, ὑποζ. τὸ πλοῖον. They might have adduced a stronger proof, supplied by a passage of Apoll. Rhod. i. 367, Νῆα δ' ἐπικρατέως, Ἄργου ὑποθημοσύνῃσιν, Ἔζωσαν πάμπρωτον ἐϋστρεφεῖ ἐνδοθεν ὅπλῳ, Τεινάμενοι ἑκάτερθεν, ἵν' εὖ ἀραροίατο γόμφοις Δούρατα, καὶ ῥοθίοιο βίην (imperiosi æquoris vim) ἔχοι ἀντιόωσαν· where, for ἔνδοθεν, read ἔκτοθεν. The sense of ἵν' εὖ ἀραροίατο γόμφοις is, 'in order that the planks may be well fitted in, so as to meet the γόμφοι.' Yet so rude a mode of keeping a vessel together would surely never be deliberately contrived, but only resorted to on the spur of the occasion, and from necessity. More to the purpose were it to refer the passages of Plato and Horace, and that of the Acts, to the practice of the Athenians (as, indeed, of the ancients generally), of providing ships with certain articles of ship-gear, called ὑποζώματα, made of very strong cable-roping, of a length sufficient to be drawn across the hull of the ship, so that the ends should meet at the bent part of the poop. In the above passage of Plato we have an evident reference to these ὑποζώματα, as not mere cable-ropes, but rope-gear of the kind just mentioned; and indeed the two are distinguished in another passage of the same writer, de Legg. xii. p. 945, τόνους (cables), τε καὶ ὑποζώματα. Mention of the ὑποζώματα is also made in Athen. p. 204, where we learn that the gigantic ship of Ptolemy Philopator had provided for use twelve ὑποζώματα, each 600 cubits long; from which it appears that these ὑποζώματα were applied from stem to stern: for the whole ship was 280 cubits long, and 38 wide, from πάροδος to πάροδος—consequently, allowing for the curve, the length would be not less than 600. To these an allusion is found in Aristoph. Eq. 277, Mitch. Τουτονὶ τὸν ἄνδρ' ἐγὼ 'νδείκνυμι (I inform against) καὶ φήμ' ἐξάγειν (export) ταῖσι Πελοποννησίων τριήρεσι ζωμεύματα: where we have a play upon words, with allusion to these ὑποζώματα, which, from that passage, we learn, were,—together with ship timber, and naval stores in general,—among the articles prohibited to be exported. These ὑποζώματα are also mentioned in Plut. Vit. Romul. ch. 7, and also in an inscription of the age of Demosthenes, formerly fixed up in the arsenal at Athens; which has been lately discovered and edited, with learned illustrations, by Boeckh. In that inscription, which contains a minute detail of the state of the Athenian navy, and of the stores of all kinds provided for the ships, these ὑποζώματα are brought under the class κρεμαστὰ, or hanging-gear, namely, rope-gear; and thence we learn, too, that three or four of these were given out, as stores from the arsenal, to every ship of war going out on actual service. And this account is confirmed by a very ancient bas-relief of a ship, preserved in the Museum at Berlin, and of which a plate has been published by Boeckh, where four ὑποζώματα are distinctly visible, passing horizontally around the ship fore and aft (and not across the middle of the ship), as it is plain they must, from the above passages of Plato and Athenæus, and also from the two following adduced by Boeckh: Vitruv. x. 15, 6, A capite autem ad imam calcem tigni contenti fuerunt funes quatuor crassitudine digitorum octo, ita religati, quemadmodum navis a puppi ad proram continetur; and Isidore Orig. xix. 4, 4, Tormentum, funis in navibus longus, qui a prora ad puppim extenditur, quo magis constringantur, sc. naves. There is also reference to these ὑποζώματα in Polyb. xxxvii. 3, 3, καὶ μ' ναῦς συμβουλεύσας τοῖς Ῥοδίοις ὑποζωννύειν, ἵνα, ἐάν τις ἐκ τῶν καιρῶν γένηται χρεία, μή ποτε παρασκευάζωνται, ἀλλ' ἑτοίμως διακείμενοι πράττωσι τὸ κριθὲν ἑξαυτῆς· the sense being there, 'to gird up by applying ὑποζώματα:' whence it is clear that in the passage of Acts xxvii. 17, the term ὑποζωννύντες must have the same sense; which, I would observe, is further confirmed by Appian, ii. 832, 10, ἐκ τῶν δυνατῶν διαζωννυμένους (for διαζωννύντας) τὰ σκάφη. As to the scarcely less obscure and disputed expression in the passage of the Acts, βοηθείαις ἐχρῶντο, that is certainly not to be explained (as it has been by some) of calling in the aid of the soldiers αὐτοῖς ἐπεπλήρωντο οὖσαι ὀγδοήκοντα, (τεσσαράκοντα γὰρ Ἐπίδαμνον ἐπολιόρκουν,) ἀνταναγόμενοι καὶ παραταξάμενοι ἐναυμάχησαν· καὶ ἐνίκησαν οἱ Κερκυραῖοι παρὰ πολύ, καὶ ναῦς πεντεκαίδεκα διέφθειραν τῶν Κορινθίων. 5. τῇ δὲ αὐτῇ ἡμέρᾳ αὐτοῖς ξυνέβη καὶ τοὺς τὴν Ἐπίδαμνον πολιορκοῦντας παραστήσασθαι ὁμολογίᾳ, ὥστε τοὺς μὲν ἐπήλυδας ἀποδόσθαι, Κορινθίους δὲ δήσαντας ἔχειν, ἕως ἂν ἄλλο τι δόξῃ. XXX. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν ναυμαχίαν οἱ Κερκυραῖοι τροπαῖον στήσαντες ἐπὶ τῇ Λευκίμνῃ τῆς Κερκύρας ἀκρωτηρίῳ, τοὺς μὲν ἄλλους οὓς ἔλαβον αἰχμαλώτους ἀπέκτειναν, Κορινθίους δὲ δήσαντες εἶχον. 2. ὕστερον δὲ, ἐπειδὴ and passengers to help them in the operations; still less is it to be understood (as it has been by others) of chains, hooks, &c. by which assistance is rendered to a ship in rough weather; for in such a case as the present, hooks or chains can render no aid. Indeed, according to either of these views, instead of the words as they now stand, βοηθείαις ἐχρῶντο ὑποζωννύντες τὸ πλοῖον, there ought to have been written, ὑπεζώννυσαν τὸ πλοῖον βοηθείαις χρώμενοι. Taken, then, as they now stand, in the words βοηθ. ἐχρῶντο we have presented the principal idea, and in ὑποζ. τὸ πλοῖον, that which is accessory; and accordingly the full sense is this: 'they used the means of aiding the vessel in her distress; in order thereto, undergirding her by the application of the ὑποζώματα:' as to the term βοηθείαις, it is used with reference to these ὑποζώματα. The question, however, is whether ζεύξαντες here is to be taken for ὑποζώννυντες, i. e. ὑποζώμασι χρώμενοι. I think not. Ζεύξ. cannot be taken for ὑποζ., since it is only applicable to carpenters' work, which we call joinery,—and the sense intended to be conveyed is either a strengthening of the ship's sides by the application of the above ζυγώματα as stays, or, supposing no allusion to ζυγ., but merely a reference to the general sense of ζεύγνυμι, a patching up of the ship's timbers, by joining and fitting in new planks in the place of old and decayed ones,—introducing them by mortising; a sense of ζεύγνυμι, though very rare, yet found in Hom. Il. xviii. 275, σανίδες τ' ἐπὶ τῇς (scil. πύλαις) ἀραρυῖαι — ἐζευγμέναι εἰρύσονται, where σαν. ἐζ. means, 'planks let into each other by mortising or panelling.'

ἐπισκευάσαντες] Of this term the sense cannot be, repairing, refitting (for the vessels are, by implication, supposed to be new ones); but rather 'furnishing with all necessary σκεύη, equipments,' (see infra vii. 24, and note; and Acts xxvii. 19,) armamenta, ship-gear of all kinds, such as were only furnished when the ships were sent forth to sea,—as masts, yards, sails, rigging, cables, benches, oars, &c.—a use of the word, indeed, nowhere else found, but not very different from that by which ἐπισκευάζειν is elsewhere employed to denote the equipping of a horse with all sorts of horse-harness.

4. ἀπήγγειλεν οὐδὲν εἰρηναῖον] 'had brought no pacific answer.' This is evidently imitated by Dio Cass. 267, 37, πυθόμενοι τὸν Καίσαρα μηκέτι εἰρηναῖον ἐν τοῖς πρέσβεσιν ἀποκεκρίσθαι, (where I would emend μηδέν τι εἰρ. τοῖς—so, μηδείς τις. Palæph. 167; see Fisch.) and Appian, t. ii. 399, 8, οὔτε τινὸς παρὰ τοῦ δήμου σφίσιν εἰρηναίου φανέντος.

5. παραστήσ. ὁμολογίᾳ] 'brought it to a capitulation.' Compare κατεστ. ὁμ. i. 114, 2, where see note. The brief expression παραστ., 'to subdue,' is far more frequent.

ἐπήλυδας] the new comers, called before ξένους. The word is Ionic, old Attic, and poetic, used by Herodot., Æschyl., Soph., Eurip., and Plato. Finally, hither may be referred the gloss of Hesych. ἐπήλυδας, ἐπιλέκτους, where read ἐπικλήτους.

δήσαντας ἔχειν] lit. 'after having bound them, to keep them in bonds.'

CH. XXX. 1. τῇ Λευκίμνῃ] Goell. and Pop. edit Λευκίμμῃ, while Bekk. retains the vulg. Λευκίμνῃ. The MSS. favour the latter, though in so minute a point they are of slender authority, and analogy is our best guide. Now there is perhaps but one word in Greek ending in ιμμος,—and no adjective,—namely, τρίμμος, while there are several in ιμνος. However, the chief reason why I have retained the common reading is, that the rough form Λευκίμνη (scil. ἄκρα, i. e. the white promontory) would naturally, in use, be softened down to Λευκίμμη (whence the present name Leukimmo); whereas Λευκίμμη, if it had been the original spelling, could not have become Λευκίμνη.

οἱ Κορίνθιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, ἠσσημένοι ταῖς ναυσὶν, ἀνεχώρησαν ἐπ᾽ οἴκου, τῆς θαλάσσης ἁπάσης ἐκράτουν τῆς κατ᾽ ἐκεῖνα τὰ χωρία οἱ Κερκυραῖοι, καὶ πλεύσαντες ἐς Λευκάδα τὴν Κορινθίων ἀποικίαν, τῆς γῆς ἔτεμον, καὶ Κυλλήνην τὸ Ἠλείων ἐπίνειον ἐνέπρησαν, ὅτι ναῦς καὶ χρήματα παρέσχον Κορινθίοις. 3. τοῦ τε χρόνου τὸν πλεῖστον μετὰ τὴν ναυμαχίαν ‡ἐκράτουν τῆς θαλάσσης, καὶ τοὺς τῶν Κορινθίων ξυμμάχους ἐπιπλέοντες ἔφθειρον, μέχρι οὗ Κορίνθιοι ‡περιόντι τῷ θέρει πέμψαντες ναῦς καὶ στρατιὰν,

2. τῆς γῆς ἔτεμον] Observe the partitive use of the genitive. See Matth. Gr. 323, 6.

3. ἐκράτουν] So Bekk., Goell., and Pop. edit, from some MSS., for vulg. ἐπεκράτουν, which, however, is defended by Herodot. i. 17, τῆς θαλάσσης οἱ Μιλήσιοι ἐπεκράτουν. Arrian, Exp. Alex. i. 9, 5, and 23, 12, ἐπικρατέω τῆς θαλάσσης. Yet κρατ. is confirmed by ii. 13, 117. vii. 57. Polyb. i. 11, 10. Xen. Hist. vii. 1.

περιόντι] There has been here no little doubt as to the reading, and also, as depending thereon, the interpretation. All the MSS. except one or two have περιόντι, which had place in all the editions down to that of Gottl., where περιόντι was adopted from the conjecture of Reiske, confirmed by one of the best of the MSS., by the Schol., and Valla. In a case like this, of very minute difference, and respecting words frequently confounded by the copyists, the external testimony of MSS. is of far less weight than internal evidence, as to what is suitable to, or forbidden by, the context. Now if the reading περιόντι be tried by this test, it must, I think, be rejected, as admitting of no sense suitable to the context. It has been rendered superante adhuc æstate, i. e. cum superesset etiam tum pars æstatis. But that sense, surely, would rather require περιόντος τοῦ θέρους: for the dative θέρει is not used absolutely, so as to be equivalent to θέρους περιόντος, but it serves to denote the time at which the thing was done. Nor can the sense be, 'reliquâ æstatis parte,' for then the author should have written either τῷ περιόντι τοῦ θέρους, or τῷ θέρει τῷ περιόντι. Indeed, as Goell. observes, it could only mean, 'in the remnant of the summer,' τῷ θέρει, ὃ περιῆν, 'during that part of the summer which remained.' In short, such a form of expression could not denote the time at which the thing was done, namely, the taking up of the encampment at Actium. On all these accounts περιόντι must be rejected, and περιόντι adopted in preference, as it has been by Goell. and Arnold; though Poppo and Bekk. have retained the vulg. περιόντι. No easy matter, however, is it to determine for a certainty what is to be understood by the expression περιόντι. According to the usual import of the word, it might signify,—as the Schol. and Valla take it,—'when the summer had come round;' and then, as Arnold observes, τὸ θέρος τοῦτο at the end of the Chapter will refer to the year after the battle, and τὸν πλεῖστον τοῦ χρόνου, μετὰ τὴν ναυμαχίαν will denote the long period which elapsed between the battle and the subsequent spring, when the Corinthians again ventured to put to sea. But, as Goell. and Arn. point out, the concluding words of this Chapter, and the commencing ones of the next, show that the winter spoken of was the first, and not the second, after the battle; and that the summer here spoken of must be the same as that in which the battle between the Corinthians and Corcyræans had been fought. See Arn. and Goell., of whom the latter well remarks: 'primo pugnæ navalis exitum narravit, deinde quid æstate post pugnam factum sit; hinc Corcyræos et hostes eorum ingruente hieme stationes utrosque suas reliquisse, quas post pugnam habuerant; denique addit, quid anno proximo et altero post pugnam egerint.'

All these things considered, I must finally acquiesce in the interpretation propounded by Goell. and Arnold, 'when the summer was drawing to a close,' 'when completing, but not having completed its course.' Or rather, according to the more literal sense, 'when it was coming round to winter.' Goell. aptly compares a passage of Xen. Hist. iii. 2, 25, where the words περιόντι τῷ ἐνιαυτῷ must, as he shows, mean, 'as the year was drawing to a close;' so in Herodot. vii. 20, by πέμπτῳ ἔτει ἀνομένῳ is meant, 'when the fifth year was finishing,' but not finished. Other passages also I have myself noted, serving to illustrate the present, namely, Xen. Cyr. viii. 8, 19, ἐπεὶ δὲ περιῆλθεν ὁ ἐνιαυτὸς, 'when the year had past away,' lit. 'had come round to the next.' (And so the phrase χρόνου περιόντος, circumacto tempore, at ii. 121 and 133. iv. 45.) Arat. Dios. 1145, ὡσεὶ δ᾽ ἂν περιόντος ἐνιαυτοῦ ἀριθμοίης σήματα. Herodotus, ii. 4, ὁ κύκλος τῶν ὡρέων ἐς τὠυτὸ περι�itών. And so circumagi in Latin, e. g. Livy, xxvi. 40, magna parte anni circumacta; and ix. 33, circumactis (for peractis) mensibus; xxiii. 39, prius se æstas circumegit (περιῆν ὁ θέρος) quam, &c.; xxvii. 30, vixdum induciarum tempore circumacto, for peracto, exeunte, as Ernesti explains.

Finally, as Goell. observes, by the participle being put first, it is meant to be denoted that the thing was done at that part of the summer in which summer was verging to winter; the year being said περι-ἰέναι when verging to its close. The sea-fight took place, we may suppose, at the end of spring or the beginning of summer, during the greater part of which the Corcyræans were masters of the sea along those coasts,—until, towards the close of the summer, the Corinthians sent fresh forces; which, taking up a station at Actium and Thespis, held the Corcyræans in check for the remainder of the summer, and when winter came on, both the belligerent parties returned home.

Mr. Burges here proposes to remove all difficulty by reading προϊόντι τῷ χρόνῳ. But that would give a wrong sense, namely, 'as the summer advanced,' instead of 'as the summer drew to a close.' Besides, the term in question never occurs but in the genit., as προϊόντος χρόνου. In like manner I. Voss, at Herodot. iv. 155, χρόνου περιόντος, proposed to read προϊόντος—a conjecture rejected by Wess. as unnecessary: not as though the sense thus arising were the same, which is far from being the case; for χρόνου περιόντος there means, 'when the time had come round for Phronima to be delivered, ἐξεγένετο οἱ παῖς, there was born to him (Polymnestus) a son.' Comp. Luke i. 57.

1. ὀργῇ φέροντες τὸν πρὸς Κ. πόλεμον] Of this somewhat obscure form of expression, the sense is by the recent commentators generally explained: 'carrying on the war with spirit and energy.' In support of which version they adduce another phrase infra v. 80, τὰ ἄλλα θυμῷ ἔφερον, 'impetu administrabant.' But that passage, as we shall have occasion to observe further on, is not quite of the same kind as the present; and though examples of ὀργὴ as used for ὁρμὴ are found both in Thucyd. and other of the best writers, yet that sense is here forbidden by the context, since during the two years after the battle the war was not carried on at all, much less ex animo, but only preparations were made on a great scale for carrying it on. Not to say that the phrase πόλεμον φέρειν, in the sense bellum gerere, is such as is found neither in our author, nor in any pure Greek writer. In a passage, indeed, of Herodot. ix. 18 and 40, we have προθύμως φέρειν τὸν πόλεμον: but there the sense is allowed to be perferre, sustinere bellum, i. e. labores belli. And though our author uses the expression διαφέρειν πόλεμον supra i. 11, and διαφ. τοὺς πολέμους infra vi. 54, yet it is only for ὑπέμειναν and διήνυον. As to the expression at v. 80, τὰ ἄλλα θυμῷ ἔφερον, it is quite of the same kind as those above noticed in Herodot. and that of our author, infra viii. 62, τὸ πᾶν τοῦ πολέμου φέρουσιν αἱ νῆες. Accordingly the interpretation of the Schol., Portus, Steph., Abr. and Bauer, 'ægre, iniquo animo, ferentes,' is decidedly preferable, especially from its being strongly confirmed by two passages (evidently imitated from our author) of Dio Cass. 201, 33, ὀργῇ τὴν ἐναντίωσιν αὐτοῦ φέρων: and 44, 45, ταῦτα δὲ ἐποίησαν θυμῷ φέροντες, (the latter, I would observe, imitated from the words of our author infra v. 80.) And of the phrase ὀργῇ φέρειν, examples are found in Dionys. Hal. Similarly we find used οἴκτῳ φέρειν in Eurip. Androm. 144, Οἴκτῳ φέρουσα τυγχάνω. It is scarcely necessary to observe, that ὀργῇ here stands for ἐν ὀργῇ, equiv. to δι᾽ ὀργῆς, and answering to the adverb ὀργίλως, as in Herodot. iii. 35, ὀργῇ λέγειν: and i. 114, ὀργῇ

ἐναυπηγοῦντο καὶ παρεσκευάζοντο τὰ κράτιστα νεῶν στόλον, ἔκ τε αὐτῆς Πελοποννήσου ἀγείροντες καὶ τῆς ἄλλης Ἑλλάδος ἐρέτας, μισθῷ πείθοντες. 2. πυνθανόμενοι δὲ οἱ Κερκυραῖοι τὴν παρασκευὴν αὐτῶν ἐφοβοῦντο, καὶ (ἦσαν γὰρ οὐδενὸς Ἑλλήνων ἔνσπονδοι, οὐδὲ ἐσεγράψαντο ἑαυτοὺς οὔτε ἐς τὰς Ἀθηναίων σπονδὰς οὔτε ἐς τὰς Λακεδαιμονίων,) ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς, ἐλθοῦσιν ὡς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, ξυμμάχους γενέσθαι, καὶ ὠφέλειάν τινα πειρᾶσθαι ἀπ' αὐτῶν εὑρίσκεσθαι. 3. οἱ δὲ Κορίνθιοι, πυθόμενοι ταῦτα, ἦλθον καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας πρεσβευσόμενοι, ὅπως μὴ σφίσι πρὸς τῷ Κερκυραίων ναυτικῷ τὸ Ἀττικὸν προσγενόμενον ἐμπόδιον γένηται θέσθαι τὸν πόλεμον ᾗ βούλονται. 4. καταστάσης δὲ ἐκκλησίας ἐς ἀντιλογίαν ἦλθον, καὶ οἱ μὲν Κερκυραῖοι ἔλεξαν τοιάδε.

ἐλθών. Finally, of φέρω, as used in the sense ferre, sustinere, with certain adverbs such as χαλεπῶς, δεινῶς, βαρέως, ῥᾳδίως, examples abound. The sense, then, here intended is, 'being indignant at, taking in dudgeon the war,' meaning the events of it.

ἐναυπηγοῦντο] Mid. form with mid. sense, 'built themselves ships.' So in Herodot. ii. 96, we have: κοψάμενοι ξύλα συντιθεῖσι, ναυπηγεύμενοι τρόπον τοιοῦτον. And so just after, παρεσκευάζοντο is to be taken for sibi parabant; as in another passage infra ii. 56, and also in Æschyl. Prom. 922, τοῖον παλαιστὴν νῦν παρασκευάζεται ἐπ' αὐτὸς αὐτῷ. The term also occurs foll. by an accus., as ναῦς or σκάφη, in Hdot. ii. 9. Of the somewhat rare phrase, νεῶν στόλον, 'a fleet of ships,' examples are found in Diod. Sic. i. 64, and Philo Jud. p. 757, and not unfrequently στόλος occurs in this sense without νεῶν, though only when that word may be understood from the context; for στόλος of itself denotes an armament, whether by land or sea.

μισθῷ πείθοντες] scil. αὐτοὺς, lit. 'inducing them [to serve, ξυμπολεμεῖν, as it is said infra iii. 31] by an offer of pay,' Engl. 'taking them into pay.' So infra vii. 57, 9, we have μισθῷ πεισθέντες, and in Herodot. ix. 33, μισθῷ πείθοντες αὐτόν.

2. καὶ (ἦσαν γὰρ, &c.) ἔδοξεν] This parenthetical interposition between the noun and its verb of a whole sentence, serving to show the cause or reason of any thing, is, though harsh, by no means unusual in our author. See infra i. 104, 135, 137. And the same is observable in Herodot. and other of the best writers. See Matth. Gr. § 630. In οὐδενὸς ἔνσπονδοι the syntax is unusual. Ἔνσπονδος is properly an adjective, and carries a dative by virtue of the ἐν: but it is here considered as a subst., and may thus take the genitive.

ἐσεγράψαντο] 'had inscribed (i. e. entered themselves).' So Pop., Bekk., and Goell. very properly edit, from several of the best MSS., instead of vulg. ἐπεγρ. Though the reading ἐνεγρ., found in one of the best, may not be undeserving of attention, and indeed was preferred by Porson: but it may justly be suspected to be no other than a gloss on the unusual term ἐσεγρ., which on the very account of its uncommonness ought to be retained. The word signifies properly 'to inscribe one's name on a tablet,' whether of wood or metal: and there may be in the present case an allusion to the metallic tablets, on which the names of the various states of any alliance were inscribed, and hung up in the most public place of the capital of each state. So in Soph. Trach. 1164, we have: ἃ (scil. μαντεῖα) εἰσεγραψάμην πρὸς τῆς πατρῴας καὶ πολυγλώσσου δρυός. The word is occasionally found in Procop.

ὠφέλειαν—εὑρίσκεσθαι] It is proper to observe the force of the middle voice here, 'find for themselves, obtain,' as v. 32. Xen. Anab. ii. 1, 6 and 7. i. 20.

3. ὅπως μὴ] On this syntax (of subj. for optat.) see Hermann on Viger, p. 851.

θέσθαι τὸν πόλεμον] for διαθέσθαι, disponere, order, bring to an issue. So i. 25, θ. τὸ παρόν. The term is usually accompanied with εὖ, or καλῶς, as iv. 17 and 59. But here that sense is implied in ᾗ βούλονται.

4. καταστάσης] This is to be taken in a passive sense for κατασταθείσης. And so the second aor. of ἵστημι is always intransitive.

ἐς ἀντιλ. ἦλθον] A rare phrase, but occurring in Appian, i. 521.

τοιάδε] 'to this purport;' for the historian does not profess to record the very words.

Ch. XXXII. 1. Δίκαιον, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, τοὺς, &c.] The construction is: δίκαιον τοὺς ἥκοντας παρὰ τοὺς πέλας, ὥσπερ καὶ ἡμεῖς νῦν, δεησομένους ἐπικουρίας, μήτε εὐεργεσίας — προοφειλομένης, ἀναδιδάξαι, &c. I have, with Pop. and Goell., edited, from many MSS., προοφειλ., instead of vulg. προὐφ., which is retained by Bekk. It is strange that Portus and Abresch should have expressed doubt as to whether προοφείλω was in use, and felt inclined to read προσοφ., a word which would here yield no suitable sense, whereas that arising from προυφ. is as good a one as can be desired, namely, 'previously due.' The word, indeed, is found in Hdot., Eurip., Aristoph., and Aristid., and its use here is not a little confirmed by a similar expression (imitated, we may suppose, from hence) of Pausanias, i. 12, 2, προϋπαρχούσας ἐς αὐτὸν εὐεργεσίας, and a strikingly similar one in Hdot. v. 82, ἡ ἔχθρα ἡ προοφειλομένη ἐς Ἀθηναίους.

The exordium to this oration (with the whole of which compare that to the Campanians in Livy, vii. 30) has been closely imitated by Procop. and Sallust, Bell. Jug.

τοὺς πέλας] This simply denotes others, 'those with whom we have to do,' as πλησίον does in the later and Hellenistic Greek. See my Lex. N. T. in voc.

ἀναδιδάξαι] 'make it clearly appear;' as iii. 97, and viii. 86.

ὅτι γε] The ὅτι belongs to δέονται, which is to be repeated from the preceding member, and γε means at least.

ὡς καὶ τὴν χάριν βέβαιον ἕξ.] The Schol. well explains χάριν by ἀντίχαριν, meaning the kindness or grateful complaisance reciprocally felt, and due from the persons who have received the favour. See Schol. on Pind. Ol. vii. 1, διὰ τοῦ δώρου ὀφειλομένην χάριν ἀπέσωσας, and comp. Æschyl. Ag. 345, χάρις πόνων, 'the return due for one's labours.' So at c. 33, we have: μετ' ἀειμνήστου μαρτυρίου τὴν χάριν καταθεῖσθε. And, by an imitation of our author, Livy, vii. 30, has 'beneficium acceptum colamus oportet.'

σαφὲς καταστήσουσι] shall make clear; for σ. παρέξουσι, as ii. 42, φανερὸν καθ. Hence in Themist. p. 84, C. τοῦτο αὐτὸ δεῖ σοφώτερον καταστῆσαι, read σαφέστερον.

2. Κερκυραῖοι δὲ—ἡμᾶς] The construction is: K. ἀπέστειλαν ἡμᾶς, πιστεύοντες, μετὰ τῆς αἰτήσεως τῆς ξυμμαχίας, παρέξεσθαι ταῦτα ἐχυρὰ ὑμῖν, 'trusting that while we ask this alliance, we shall make these points sure.' Παρέχειν here signifies præstare, as in Xen. Cyr. iv. 1, 2, where it is interchanged with ἀποδεικνύναι.

3. τετύχηκε δὲ—ἀξύμφορον] I would render: 'So, however, it has happened.' 'It is our fortune, that the selfsame custom, or practice, of ours turns out to be, as concerns you, inconsistent with our petition, and in respect of our present business disadvantageous' or prejudicial. So infra ii. 92, we have ἀξύμφορον δρῶντες (where see note), and comp. iii. 40. v. 80. Ἐπιτήδευμα signifies, 'custom, practice, line of conduct;' namely, that of keeping ourselves apart from others, minding our own interest, and forming alliance with none. The πρὸς and ἐς are synonymous, each signifying quod attinet ad. By χρείαν understand 'necessary business or affair,' namely, that of entreating succour. So in Plut. Arat. 34, we have: ὑπήντησε τῇ πόλει πρὸς τὴν χρείαν. Of ἄλογον the sense is irrational, inconsistent with reason, and thus depriving them of all reason for asking a favour. So in Dionys. Hal. Ant. i. 83, we have: τῆς ἀλόγου προάτητος ὑποψίᾳ, and so often elsewhere. Here the particip. ὄν is supposed to be elliptically left understood; in which view commentators refer to c. 36. But the word may have formerly been there, and afterwards been absorbed by the ον preceding.

ἡμέτερα αὐτῶν ἐν τῷ παρόντι ἀξύμφορον. 4. ξύμμαχοί τε γὰρ οὐδενός πω ἐν τῷ πρὸ τοῦ ἑκούσιοι γενόμενοι, νῦν ἄλλων τοῦτο δεησόμενοι ἥκομεν, καὶ ἅμα ἐς τὸν παρόντα πόλεμον Κορινθίων ἔρημοι δι' αὐτὸ καθέσταμεν· καὶ περιέστηκεν ἡ δοκοῦσα ἡμῶν πρότερον σωφροσύνη,—τὸ μὴ ἐν ἀλλοτρίᾳ ξυμμαχίᾳ τῇ τοῦ πέλας γνώμῃ ξυγκινδυνεύειν,—νῦν ἀβουλία καὶ ἀσθένεια φαινομένη. 5. τὴν μὲν οὖν γενομένην ναυμαχίαν αὐτοὶ κατὰ μόνας ἀπεωσάμεθα Κορινθίους· ἐπειδὴ δὲ μείζονι παρασκευῇ ἀπὸ Πελοποννήσου καὶ τῆς ἄλλης Ἑλλάδος ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ὥρμηνται, καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀδύνατοι ὁρῶμεν ὄντες τῇ οἰκείᾳ μόνον δυνάμει περιγενέσθαι,—καὶ ἅμα μέγας ὁ κίνδυνος εἰ ἐσόμεθα ὑπ' αὐτοῖς,—ἀνάγκη καὶ ὑμῶν καὶ ἄλλου παντὸς ἐπικουρίας δεῖσθαι· καὶ ξυγγνώμη εἰ, μὴ μετὰ κακίας δόξης δὲ μᾶλλον ἁμαρτίᾳ, τῇ πρότερον ἀπραγμοσύνῃ ἐναντία τολμῶμεν. XXXIII. Γενήσεται

4. ξύμμαχοί τε γὰρ, &c.] This sentence is explanatory of the preceding, as is intimated by the γάρ. The general sense is well represented by Arnold as follows: 'Inconsistent ye will deem it, that we who heretofore refused every man's alliance, are now beggars for that very thing; and inexpedient we have found it, as it has left us, in our actual war with the Corinthians, friendless and destitute.'

ἐν τῷ πρὸ τοῦ] 'aforetime,' sc. χρόνῳ, which was formerly in the text, but thrown out by the recent editors, on MS. authority; otherwise it is occasionally found in Thucyd.

ἄλλων τοῦτο δεησ.] scil. τὸ ξύμμαχοι εἶναι. The construction is the complete one in verbs of entreating: i. e. an accus. of thing, and gen. of person. Moreover, as δέομαι takes the accus. of a neuter pronoun, as in this chapter (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 355, 2), so does it take adjectives neuter.

καθέσταμεν] So Bekk., Goell., and Pop. very properly edit, for vulg. καθέστημεν, which may be pronounced a mere barbarism. As confirmatory of the above reading, I would notice the following similar expressions in Soph. Œd. Col. 23, δεῦ' ἄξαι — ὅποι καθέσταμεν. Eurip. Or. 1330, ἀνάγκης εἰς ζυγὸν καθέσταμεν: and Iph. Aul. 719, ἐπὶ ταύτῃ καθέσταμεν τύχῃ.

καὶ περιέστηκεν ἡ δοκοῦσα—φαινομένη] Render: 'And thus our former seeming prudence, in not engaging in alliance with others,—that we might not, at their discretion, come into danger,—has turned out to have been arrant folly and weakness.' Σωφροσύνη here is well explained by Pop. after Dukas, 'prudent moderation.'

Of the present passage, evident imitations are found in Dionys. Hal. i. 268, 3. 453, 46. 461, 38. (Sylb.) Procop. 256, 15. 216, 4.

5. τὴν μὲν οὖν—ναυμαχίαν] Sub. κατά. Μὲν οὖν is generally confirmative accordingly.

ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ὥρμηνται] 'they are rushing upon us,' 'are bent on attacking.' The pret. tense is used as if the thing were already commenced.

καὶ ἅμα μέγας ὁ κίνδυνος — αὐτοῖς] 'and, moreover, that great will be the danger, should we be subjugated by them.' By 'the danger,' Portus thinks, is meant the danger to Greece at large. But it rather denotes the danger to such states as might fear the increase of Corinthian power; for instance, Athens. This argument is here only intimated, but further on it is prominently brought forward.

δεῖσθαι] 'to entreat,' as δεησόμενοι a little before. Καὶ ξυγγνώμη, scil. ἔστιν ἡμῖν, 'we are excusable.' Εἰ μὴ μετὰ κακίας, &c. 'if not through evil intention.' See my note on Rom. i. 29. Εἰ here, as often, stands for ὅτι. Δόξης ἁμαρτίᾳ, 'through error of judgment.' So in Æschyl. Agam. 485, we have: φρενῶν ἁμαρτίαν. See my note on Joh. viii. 46. The error was that of thinking they could live quite as safe by themselves, without entering into any alliance.

τῇ πρότερον ἀπραγμοσύνῃ ἐναντία τολμῶμεν] 'we venture on a daring course, contrary to our former inactivity,' i. e. low, creeping course of action. So in Liban. Or. 214, we have: τῆς ἄγαν ἀπραγ. Thus ἐναντία is to be taken adverbially, as τἀνάντια infra vi. 79. v. 76, et al. And such is the view adopted by Goell. To this, however, Pop. in his Suppl., perhaps not without reason, objects, and would retain the adjectival sense. According to this view the sense will be, 'if we dare

δὲ ὑμῖν πειθομένοις καλὴ ἡ ξυντυχία κατὰ πολλὰ τῆς ἡμετέρας χρείας· πρῶτον μέν, ὅτι ἀδικουμένοις, καὶ οὐχ ἑτέρους βλάπτουσι, τὴν ἐπικουρίαν ποιήσεσθε· ἔπειτα, περὶ τῶν μεγίστων κινδυνεύοντας δεξάμενοι, ὡς ἂν μάλιστα μετ' ἀειμνήστου μαρτυρίου τὴν χάριν

(viz. to do) things contrary to,' &c., i. e. to entreat the alliance of others. Τολμᾶν, with an accus. in the sense to venture on, is of frequent occurrence in the best writers from Homer downwards.

Here, however, the great difficulty is to decide whether the words μὴ μετὰ—ἁμαρτίᾳ are to be construed with τολμῶμεν, or with τῇ πρότ. ἀπραγμοσύνῃ. The context and the historical circumstances are much in favour of the latter; for, as Dr. Arnold observes, 'it was their former keeping out of all alliances which their enemies charged upon them as having been done with bad intentions, and which they themselves wished to represent as an honest error.' See c. 37, τὸ δ' ἐπὶ κακουργίᾳ καὶ οὐκ ἀρετῇ ἐπετήδευσαν. Yet this would require us to suppose the unprecedentedly harsh construction, εἰ τῇ μετὰ κακίας δόξης δὲ μᾶλλον ἁμαρτίᾳ, πρότερον ἀπραγμοσύνῃ ἐναντία τολμῶμεν. Nay, it would require the words to be in some way or other altered. Now the natural connection of the words in question is with τολμῶμεν, and that must be preserved in spite of any difficulty it may occasion, if we would wish to arrive at the truth. Retaining it, we must suppose, with Pop. and Goell. in his 2nd ed., that the sense intended is, that 'the step which the Corinthians were now taking was to be ascribed to no evil intention, but was the consequence of their former mistaken system, which had proved so fatal to them that they had been obliged to abandon it.' Poppo takes it as a brief mode of expression for ξυγγνώμη, εἰ (ὅτι) τῇ πρότερον ἀπραγμοσύνῃ ἐναντία δρῶμεν, εἴπερ τοῦτο ποιοῦμεν μὴ μετὰ κακίας, s. κακοὶ ὄντες, δόξης δὲ μᾶλλον ἁμαρτίᾳ, s ἀλλ' ὅτι δόξης ἡμάρτομεν.

CH. XXXIII. 1. γενήσεται δὲ ὑμῖν, &c.] Of these words the interpretation will depend upon the sense assigned to the terms ξυντυχία and χρείας — a matter, this, of no easy determination. One thing is certain (though Bauer strongly denies it), that ξυντυχία must be construed with χρείας. And I was myself formerly of opinion, that the sense intended is, 'the meeting of our need,' viz. by the aid we entreat. In which view we may compare the use of subvenire alicui in Latin, and our phrase 'to meet any one's wishes.' And this view of the sense might seem further confirmed by an expression in Plut. Arat. 34, ὑπήντησε τῇ πόλει πρὸς τὴν χρείαν, which may stand for ὑπήντησε τῇ χρείᾳ τῆς πόλεως. Yet so great a harshness would thus be involved, that we may rather suppose the sense there to be, 'he met the city upon the important affair in question,' namely, the restoration of the Athenians to freedom. But to return to the case under present consideration, from the insufficient evidence existing for the above sense, I now prefer to adopt that sense which the term bears infra iii. 112 (where we have ξυντυχία τοῦ ἔργου), occurrence; confirmed as it is by a passage evidently imitated from this of our author, in Plut. T. Gracch. 6, ἠσθέντες τῇ ξυντυχίᾳ τῆς χρείας, 'the occurrence of this need [of their aid].' So also in Plut. de Garrul. 12, we have: καὶ περιχαρὴς γενόμενος συντυχίᾳ τῆς χρείας. Here ἡ ξυντυχία τῆς ἡμετέρας χρείας is (as Stephens well points out) for ἡ συντετυχηκυῖα ἡμῖν χρεία, 'that it happened to us to [thus] need your aid,' that it so fell out. Arnold, indeed, renders the term χρεία, request, as he does also supra 32, and infra 136. But so doing, he errs in all these three instances: indeed I cannot find that χρεία ever had that sense.

Of the term καλὴ here, the sense is simply good as to its effects, namely, in honour and profit. So Matt. xvii. 4, we have: καλόν ἐστιν ὧδε εἶναι. Render: 'it will in many respects redound to your honour and especial advantage.' The advantage being (as it is well expressed by Thirlwall, Grec. Hist.) such as would be obtained without any breach of faith or justice, by an honourable interposition in behalf of an injured people.

τὴν ἐπικουρίαν ποιήσεσθε] The full sense is: 'you will render the succour entreated.' At ἔπειτα the ὅτι of the preceding clause must be repeated.

περὶ τῶν μεγίστων κινδυνεύοντας] 'those whose dearest interests are in peril;' an expression akin to the not unusual phrases κινδυνεύειν περὶ ψυχῆς, βίου, or σωτηρίας.

ὡς ἂν μάλιστα—καταθεῖσθε] Render: 'You would lay up the favour with a pledge, as far as possible, of everlasting remembrance.' Here I read, with Bekk. and Goell., for vulg. καταθῆσθε (which is a mere barbarism) καταθεῖσθε. And though the authority of MSS. for this reading is but slender, yet much is not requisite in so slight a variation.

There is here, as Goell. and Pop. point out, a brevity of expression for καταθεῖσθε ἂν ὡς ἂν μάλιστα καταθεῖσθε. Or if καταθήσεσθε be read, from the conjecture of Fritzch (which better answers to ποιήσεσθε) then the words will stand for καταθήσεσθε ὡς ἂν μάλιστα καταθεῖσθε, as infra vi. 57, ὡς ἂν μάλιστα δι' ὀργῆς ἔτυπτον, i. e. ἔτυπτον ὡς ἂν μάλιστα δι' ὀργῆς τύπτοιεν ἄν. This latter view seems preferable to the former; for otherwise the optat. will be without an ἄν, unless the ἂν be taken twice, which were not a little harsh. In καταθ. we have, as Goell. observes, a metaphor taken from laying up money in a bank, to be afterwards drawn out with interest, as Herodot. vi. 41, δοκέοντες χάριν μεγάλην κατατίθεσθαι τῷ βασιλεῖ. Eurip. Med. 184, σοὶ τὴν χάριν καταθήσω, and often in the later writers, as Dio Cass., Herodian, Appian, Lucian, and Diod. Sic. And so in Acts xxiv. 27, where see my note.

2. εἰ ἦν, &c.] Before the εἰ Reiske conjectured ἢ, which word as it is countenanced by one MS. and formerly, as I find on collation, had place in the excellent Cod. Clarend., I have therefore inserted, though in a smaller character. Certainly the εἰ cannot stand for ἢ εἰ, for the ellipsis of that word is not uncommon (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 450), yet when it has place, it is under quite different circumstances. And to suppose, with Matth., that it is adapted to the sense, and that the interrogative here is equivalent to a negation, is any thing but satisfactory. If there be an ellipse at all, it must be rather that of ταύτης, like that of τούτου before an infinit., as in Eurip. Alc. 896, τί γὰρ ἀνδρὶ κακὸν μεῖζον, ἁμαρτεῖν πιστῆς ἀλόχου; But, in fact, there the ellipse is rather that of τοῦ before ἁμαρτεῖν. Though τούτου is found expressed in a similar passage at Æschyl. Ag. 585, τί γὰρ Γυναικὶ τούτου φέγγος ἥδιον δρακεῖν, — πύλας ἀνοῖξαι. Plato, Gorg. 500, οὐ τίς ἂν μᾶλλον σπουδάσειέ τις — ἢ τοῦτο, ὅντινα χρὴ τρόπον ζῆν. Crit. 44, καίτοι τίς ἂν αἰσχίων εἴη ταύτης δόξα, ἢ δοκεῖν χρήματα περὶ πλείονος ποιεῖσθαι ἢ φίλους. As, however, a decisive example of the ellipsis, and that under the same circumstances, is necessary to be adduced, I am inclined to think that ἢ εἰ is here the true reading: and how easily ἢ might formerly have place before the εἰ, is obvious. That ἢ εἰ is used after a comparative, and in an interrogation, is certain from the words of our author infra iii. 39, καίτοι δεινότερόν ἐστιν ἢ εἰ, &c. (where, it may be observed, the ἢ is in one MS. omitted,) and from Xenoph. Cyr. vii. 1, 5, ἔτι κάκιον, ἢ εἰ κατὰ κέρας προσῄεσαν, and i. 6, 19, οὕτως ἦγε ἀνθρωπίνη σοφία οὐδὲν μᾶλλον οἶδε τὸ ἄριστον αἱρεῖσθαι, ἢ εἰ κληρούμενος ὅτι λάχοι, τοῦτό τις πράττοι. Finally, of this passage evident imitations are found in Aristid. Panath. i. 231, καίτοι τίς προθυμία λαμπροτέρα, τίς εὐψυχία φανερωτέρα; where I conj., for φανερωτέρα, σπανιωτέρα. And so at ii. 155, we have: οὗ σπανιώτερον οὐδὲν ἐστιν εὐτύχημα. Polyb. iv. 16, 3, πονηρία σπ. Appian, i. 260, νίκην σπ. Plato, Phæd. 90, A. οἶει τι σπανιώτερον εἶναι ἢ, &c. By the same elegant use of the term to denote rarest, most to be prized, we have at vii. 68, κινδύνων οὗτοι σπανιώτατοι, i. e. τιμιώτατοι.

πρὸ πολλῶν χρημάτων, &c.] Of this passage evident imitations exist in Isocrat. contra Soph. § 6, p. 507, πρὸ πολλῶν ἂν χρημάτων ἐτιμησάμην, &c. Joseph. p. 817, πρὸ πολλῶν ἂν ἐτίμησαν χρημάτων τὸ ἐπαληθεῦσαι τῶν λόγων, where, for ἐτίμησαν, read, from Cod. Busb. ἐτιμήσαντο. The whole passage is almost transcribed by Agathias, p. 79. Finally, with the words of our author here, compare those infra vi. 10, and a similar form of expression in Hdot. i. 86, τὸν ἂν ἐγὼ πᾶσι τυράννοισι προετίμησα μεγάλων χρημάτων ἐς λόγους ἐλθεῖν, and also in Virg. Æn. ii. 104, Hoc Ithacus velit, et magno mercentur Atridæ.

αὐτεπάγγελτος] An elegant term, of which examples might be adduced from Procop., Pausan., Aristid., Max. Tyr., and other writers.

ἀρετὴν] Meaning the praise of virtue,

ἰσχύν· ἃ ἐν τῷ παντὶ χρόνῳ ὀλίγοις δὴ ἅμα πάντα ξυνέβη, καὶ ὀλίγοι ξυμμαχίας δεόμενοι οἷς ἐπικαλοῦνται ἀσφάλειαν καὶ κόσμον οὐχ ἧσσον διδόντες ἢ ληψόμενοι παραγίγνονται. 3. τὸν δὲ πόλεμον, δι' ὅπερ χρήσιμοι ἂν εἴημεν, εἴ τις ὑμῶν μὴ οἴεται ἔσεσθαι, γνώμης ἁμαρτάνει, καὶ οὐκ αἰσθάνεται τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους φόβῳ τῷ ὑμετέρῳ πολεμησείοντας, καὶ τοὺς Κορινθίους δυναμένους παρ' αὐτοῖς καὶ ὑμῖν ἐχθροὺς ὄντας καὶ προκαταλαμβάνοντας ἡμᾶς νῦν ἐς τὴν ὑμετέραν ἐπιχείρησιν, ἵνα μὴ τῷ κοινῷ ἔχθει κατ' αὐτῶν μετ' ἀλλήλων στῶμεν, μηδὲ δυοῖν, φθάσαι, ἁμάρτωσιν, ἢ κακῶσαι ἡμᾶς ἢ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς βεβαιώσασθαι. 4. ἡμέτερον δ' αὖ ἔργον προτερῆσαι, τῶν that which causes the reputation thereof to exist (and so standing for ἀξίωσιν, εὐδοξίαν), as infra i. 123. ii. 45, et al. This causative force of the word Schoemann ap. Pop. has illustrated by several examples of other terms denoting merit or demerit; e. g. Virg. Æn. vi. 807. By τοὺς πολλοὺς seems meant the Greek states at large, as opposed to the Corcyræans; though Schoem. and Pop. explain it of the vulgus, the people at large.

ἐν τῷ παντὶ χρόνῳ] 'ex omni temporum memoria, omni tempore.' As to the reading παρόντι, though supported by the best MSS., it deserves no attention, and seems to have arisen from a mistake of παντὶ for an abbreviation of παρόντι. Παντὶ is confirmed by Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 162, 31.

καὶ ὀλίγοι] 'yea few.'

3. γνώμης ἁμαρτάνει] 'he misses, errs in his judgment.' A metaphor taken from archery, as v. 79. So Herodot. iii. 81, γνώμης ἀρίστης ἁμαρτάνει: imitated by Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 435, 37, γνώμης ἁμαρτοῦσι τῆς ἀρίστης περὶ τὰ μέγιστα. Herodot. i. 207, ἢν μὴ γνώμης ἁμάρτω. Eurip. Alc. 339, φρενῶν ἁμ. Æschyl. Agam. 1654, σώφρονος γνώμης δ' ἁμαρτάνειν. Hence in Herodot. vii. 139, οὐκ ἂν ἁμαρτάνοι τἀληθὲς, read τοὐληθοῦς, which is confirmed by Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 133, 9, ἁμ. τοῦ ἀληθοῦς.

φόβῳ τῷ ὑμετέρῳ] 'through fear of you.' An example of the possessive pronoun for the genitive of the personal put objectively. See Viger, p. 164 and 727, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 466, 2.

πολεμησείοντας] These verbs desiderative in —ειω, frequent in the Attic writers, especially Thucyd. and his imitators, are like the Latin verbs in —urio. See Matth. and Buttm.

δυναμένους παρ' αὐτοῖς] 'having much influence with them,' i. e. the Lacedæmonians. Δύναμαι for μέγας εἶναι, as in i. 138.

προκαταλαμβάνοντας ἡμᾶς] 'seize us first.'

κατ' αὐτῶν μετ' ἀλλήλων στῶμεν] 'may mutually withstand them.'

μηδὲ δυοῖν φθάσαι—βεβαιώσασθαι] The best explanation of this too brief and awkwardly worded clause seems to be that of Hermann de Ellip. et Pleon. p. 142, who takes the words as put for ἢ τοῦ φθάσαι ἡμᾶς κακῶσαι, ἢ τοῦ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς κακῶσαι. Φθάσαι he thinks was put once in the preceding clause, to avoid the repetition. The sense is, 'that they may not miss of two objects (i. e. may obtain one or the other), so as to be beforehand with us, either by humbling us, or confirming their own power.' The construction is as follows: μηδὲ ἁμαρτῶσι δυοῖν, ὥστε φθάσαι ἢ κακῶσαι ἡμᾶς, &c. Herm. compares a passage of similar construction in Soph. El. 1320, οὐκ ἂν δυοῖν ἥμαρτον, ἢ γὰρ ἂν καλῶς ἔσωσ' ἐμαυτὴν, ἢ καλῶς ἀπωλόμην.

4. ἡμέτερον δὲ—ἀντεπιβουλεύειν] Render: 'our business, then, it must be to anticipate them, and, by mutually interchanging engagements of alliance, to foreplot rather than counterplot their machinations.' Similarly in Justin. xvi. 1, we have: priorem se petitum ab Alexandro adlegat; nec fecisse se, sed occupasse insidias.

On this phrase ἡμέτερον ἔργον, see Vig. p. 88, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 264, 3, and Valck. on Eurip. Phœn. 447. Similarly in Hdian. iii. 12, 13, we have: ὑμέτερον ἤδη ἔργον εὑρεῖν τὴν ἀλήθειαν, and i. 5, 19.

Προτερῆσαι is a term of rare occurrence (at least in the sense prævenire, præoccupare), as is also προεπιβουλεύειν, though found in Joseph. Ant. xviii. 6, 9. Dio Cass. 45, 87. Appian, i. 161, 20. Liban. Or. 207, B.

Similar as to the sentiment is a passage of Soph. Œd. T. 617, ὅταν ταχύς τις ὀυπι-μὲν διδόντων, ὑμῶν δὲ δεξαμένων τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, καὶ προεπιβουλεύειν αὐτοῖς μᾶλλον ἢ ἀντεπιβουλεύειν. XXXIV. Ἣν δὲ λέγωσιν ὡς οὐ δίκαιον τοὺς σφετέρους ἀποίκους ὑμᾶς δέχεσθαι, μαθέτωσαν ὡς πᾶσα ἀποικία, εὖ μὲν πάσχουσα, τιμᾷ τὴν μητρόπολιν, ἀδικουμένη δὲ, ἀλλοτριοῦται· οὐ γὰρ ἐπὶ τῷ δοῦλοι, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῷ ὁμοῖοι τοῖς λειπομένοις εἶναι ἐκπέμπονται. 2. ὡς δὲ ἠδίκουν σαφές ἐστι· προκληθέντες γὰρ περὶ Ἐπιδάμνου ἐς κρίσιν, πολέμῳ μᾶλλον ἢ τῷ ἴσῳ ἐβουλήθησαν τὰ ἐγκλήματα μετελθεῖν. 3. καὶ ὑμῖν ἔστω τι τεκμήριον ἃ πρὸς ἡμᾶς τοὺς ξυγγενεῖς δρῶσιν, ὥστε ἀπάτῃ τε μὴ παράγεσθαι ὑπ' αὐτῶν, δεομένοις τε ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος μὴ ὑπουργεῖν· ὁ γὰρ ἐλαχίστας βουλεύων λάθρα χωρῇ, ταχὺν δεῖ κἀμὲ βουλεύειν πάλιν, for ἀντεπιβ. It is well observed by A. Gell. vii. 5, Beneficia promissa opperiri oportet, neque ante remunerare quam facta sunt. Injurias autem imminentes præcavisse justum est magis quam expectavisse.

Ch. XXXIV. 1. μαθέτωσαν] 'let them learn,' what, it seems, they knew not and are loth to learn. A brevity of expression such as occurs in 1 Tim. v. 4, μανθανέτωσαν, where see my note. There (as in Herodot. vi. 51, καταδουλουμένους τὴν μ., and Soph. Œd. Col. 707, ἄλλον δ' αἶνον ἔχω ματροπόλει τᾷδε) the article is necessary, though occasionally the scribes stumble at it, and editors have not always removed their errors. Thus at Dion. Hal. Ant. p. 23, 44, διασώζουσι τῆς μητροπόλεως γῆς μηνύματα, the editors should cancel γῆς, which is plainly from the margin.

ἐπὶ τῷ δοῦλοι—εἶναι] Ἐπὶ with the dative often denotes condition. So iv. 114, οὐ γὰρ ἐπὶ δουλείᾳ ὧραισαι τοῦτο. The whole sentence is closely imitated by Procop. 106, 4, and Liban. Orat. 221, C.

2. ὡς δὲ ἠδίκουν σαφές ἐστι] 'Now that they did wrong us, is plain.' The orator means to prove that the alienation is not without good cause.

προκληθέντες ἐς κρίσιν] 'when invited to a judicial determination of differences.' This is nearly the same with the law phrase προκαλεῖσθαι δίκην, or εἰς δίκην, provocare judicio.

τὰ ἐγκλήματα μετελθεῖν] 'to follow up, to urge their charges.' So Æschyl. Choëph. 975, ὡς τόνδ' ἐγὼ μετῆλθον ἐνδίκως μόρον τὸν μητρός. Dio Cass. 349, 2, ὅσους μηδενὶ ἀξιοχρέῳ ἐγκλήματι μετελθεῖν ἐδύνατο.

3. ὥστε ἀπάτῃ — αὐτῶν] The word ἀπάτη is here employed by way of explanation, and stands for καὶ ἀπατᾶσθαι. The sense being: 'So that ye may not be led astray by their sophistry.' In the same manner we may understand the words of 2 Pet. iii. 17, τῇ τῶν ἀθέσμων πλάνῃ συναπαχθέντες.

δεομένοις τε ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος μὴ ὑπουργεῖν] The difficulty here turns upon the sense to be assigned to the phrase ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος, which has been variously explained by commentators. Heilm., Kistem., Goell., Pop., and Arn. connect ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος with δεομένοις, and regard the whole phrase δεομένοις ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος as antithetical to ἀπάτῃ just before, so as to signify, 'whether they cloke their object under any false pretence,' or, 'whether they prefer their request openly and in a direct way.' And this sense openly, ἄντικρυς, is confirmed by the words of our author infra iii. 43, where to ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐθέος λέγειν we have opposed ἀπάτῃ παράγεσθαι τὸ πλῆθος, as in Pausan. viii. 8, 2, where we have δι' αἰνιγμάτων opposed to ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος λέγειν. Heliod. ii. 241, 2, ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος (for so we should read, instead of vulg. εὐθέως) λοιδορεῖσθαι. Aristid. ii. 325, ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος εἰπεῖν, et al. Arrian, E. A. i. 6, 12. iii. 16, 3. v. 27, 1, ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος ἀντιλέγειν.

After all, however, the antithesis of which commentators speak, though plainly to be recognised at the passage infra iii. 43, is here far from discernible. And the sense thus arising is not a little forced and feeble. Accordingly I agree with the Schol., Stephens, Reiske, and Gottleb., that ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος is to be joined, not with δεομ., but with μὴ ὑπουργεῖν, in the sense statim, sine hæsitatione vel morâ. So in Pausan. vii. 14, 4, we have: ἀνέπεισε (αὐτοὺς) Ῥωμαίους ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος πόλεμον ἄρασθαι, and vii. 14, 4, τὰ μὲν δὴ πρῶτα ἀναβολαῖς καὶ ἀπάταις ἐχρῆτο ἐς τὴν δόσιν· μετὰ δὲ οὐ πολὺ ἐτόλμησεν ἀποστερεῖν ἐκ τοῦ εὐθέος. And so Herodot. ii. 161, ἀπέστησαν ἐκ τῆς ἰθείης, and iii. 127. ix. 37. As to the objection urged by Pop. to the above interpretation, on the ground that the Corcyræans desired the Athenians 'non solum non illico, verum omnino non obtemperari Corinthiis,' that has no weight, the particular in question being evidently implied. In short, the μὴ must be closely connected with ὑπουργεῖν, as forming with it only one idea, such as we see in οὐ φημὶ, nego, οὐκ ἐάω, veto. Here, then, the sense is, 'to at once, or flatly, refuse their request.' So in Pind. Nem. v. 60, we have, εὐθὺς δ' ἀπαναίνατο νύμφαν, 'unhesitatingly refused her [request].' And vain is it to urge, as Poppo does, that thus οὐ would be required, not μὴ, since our author (as observes Stephens in his Thes. on this phrase) 'suo more a loquendi generibus quæ ceteris usitata sunt recedit;' or, in the words of Marcellinus, ἐν πάσῃ φεύγει τὴν συνήθειαν.

τὰς μεταμελείας ἐκ τοῦ χαρίζεσθαι τοῖς ἐναντίοις λαμβάνων ἀσφαλέστατος ἂν διατελοίη. XXXV. Λύσετε δὲ οὐδὲ τὰς Λακεδαιμονίων σπονδὰς δεχόμενοι ἡμᾶς, μηδετέρων ὄντας ξυμμάχους· εἴρηται γὰρ ἐν αὐταῖς, τῶν Ἑλληνίδων πόλεων ἥτις μηδαμοῦ ξυμμαχεῖ, ἐξεῖναι παρ' ὁποτέρους ἂν ἀρέσκηται ἐλθεῖν. 2. καὶ δεινὸν, εἰ τοῖσδε μὲν ἀπό τε τῶν ἐνσπόνδων ἔσται πληροῦν τὰς ναῦς, καὶ προσέτι καὶ ἐκ τῆς ἄλλης Ἑλλάδος, καὶ οὐχ ἥκιστα ἀπὸ τῶν ὑμετέρων ὑπηκόων· ἡμᾶς δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς προκειμένης τε ξυμμαχίας εἴρξουσι, καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ἄλλοθέν ποθεν ὠφελείας· εἶτα ἐν ἀδικήματι θήσονται, πεισθέντων ὑμῶν ἃ δεόμεθα· 3. πολὺ δὲ ἐν πλείονι αἰτίᾳ ἡμεῖς, μὴ πείσαντες, ὑμᾶς ἕξομεν· ἡμᾶς μὲν γὰρ κινδυνεύοντας, καὶ οὐκ ἐχθροὺς ὄντας, ἀπώσεσθε· τῶνδε δὲ οὐχ ὅπως κωλυταὶ ἐχθρῶν ὄντων καὶ ἐπιόντων

ὁ τὰς μεταμελείας — λαμβάνων] for ἐκεῖνος ὃς μεταμελεῖται. With this just and pithy sentiment compare one in Dion. Hal. Ant. 782, 14, Sylb. κρείσσων πρόνοια τῆς μεταμελείας.

At ἂν διατελοίη understand βίον, which word is expressed in a passage of Isocrat. cited by Steph. Thes. in voc. εὐδαιμόνως τὸν βίον διατελοῖμεν, and in Xen. Cyr. i. 5, 4.

Ch. XXXV. 1. τὰς Λακεδαιμονίων σπονδὰς] 'the treaty with the Lacedæmonians.' A brief mode of expression, like τὸν πόλεμον τῶν Πελοποννησίων.

2. τῶν ἐνσπόνδων] Those were called οἱ ἔνσπονδοι between whom a treaty, confirmed by σπονδαὶ or religious libations, subsisted.

ἀπὸ τῆς προκειμένης] Render not præsenti, as Portus does; but propositâ, proposed—meaning that which is now the object aimed at. So in a passage of Gregor. ap. Steph. Thes. in voc. we have, οὐκ ἀπὸ σκότου τῆς προκειμένης φιλοσοφίας: and in Polyb. ii. 38, 8, καθικνεῖτο τῆς πρ. ἐπιβολῆς.

ἄλλοθέν ποθεν] aliunde cunque, as in Xen. Cyr. i. 6, 19. iv. 5, 18, and vi. 1, 6. Eurip. Med. 573. Xen. Mem. iii. 3, 12.

εἶτα ἐν ἀδικήματι — δεόμεθα] I would here point as above, and render: 'What then—they will, forsooth, account it an injustice if you be induced to grant our suit!' The εἶτα has the force treated on by Hoogev. de Part. p. 211, 8, quid enim! Poppo, too, I find, approves this mode of taking the passage; though he would prefer regarding the εἶτα as introducing an indignant interrogative, in the sense itane? But there is, we may observe, more of exclamation than interrogation in this idiom, which is one quite Attic, and of frequent occurrence in the best writers, especially the dramatic ones. The force of the idiom is thus ably explained by Valckn. on a passage of Eurip. Phœn. 556, εἶθ' ἥλιος — ἀπονεμεῖς. Quando scilicet apud Atticos initio sententiæ positum interrogat εἶτα cum effectu pronunciandum vel indignantis est, vel admirantis, vel ridentis, sic tamen ut risum expresserit indignatio: Latine sæpius reddi potest Itane? Siccine vero? Ergo? And the learned writer adduces several examples from the Attic comic drama: though, indeed, the use in question was not confined to the poets, being found also in Lucian, Ælian, and especially Arrian.

In ἐν ἀδικήματι θήσονται we have one of those many phrases formed by τίθεσθαι and a noun with ἐν, as ἐν ἐπαίνῳ, ψόγῳ, αἰσχρῷ, καλῷ, &c.

3. οὐχ ὅπως] for οὐχ ὅπως οὐ, non γενήσεσθε, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ὑμετέρας ἀρχῆς δύναμιν προσλαβεῖν περιόψεσθε, ἢν οὐ δίκαιον· ἀλλ', ἢ κἀκείνων κωλύειν τοὺς ἐκ τῆς ὑμετέρας μισθοφόρους, ἢ καὶ ἡμῖν πέμπειν, καθ' ὅ, τι ἂν πεισθῆτε, ὠφέλειαν, μάλιστα δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ προφανοῦς δεξαμένους βοηθεῖν. 4. πολλὰ δὲ, ὥσπερ ἐν ἀρχῇ ὑπείπομεν, τὰ ξυμφέροντα ἀποδείκνυμεν· καὶ μέγιστον, ὅτι οἵ τε αὐτοὶ πολέμιοι ἡμῖν †ἦσαν,—ὅπερ σαφεστάτη πίστις,—καὶ οὗτοι οὐκ ἀσθενεῖς, ἀλλ' ἱκανοὶ τοὺς μεταστάντας βλάψαι· καὶ ναυτικῆς καὶ οὐκ ἠπειρώτιδος τῆς ξυμμαχίας διδοmodo non. See Hermann on Vig. and Matth. Gr. Gr. 790, 253.

καὶ ἐπιόντων] These words, though not found in three of the best MSS., are, however, required by the antithesis here existing between κινδυνεύοντας καὶ οὐκ ἐχθροὺς ὄντας and ἐχθρῶν ὄντων καὶ ἐπιόντων, the opposition being between those who are themselves in danger (and therefore not likely to attack others without compulsion), and those who are the voluntary assailants of others. So infra iii. 56, we have, ἑτέροις ὑμεῖς ἐπέρχεσθε δεινοί.

3. ἢν οὐ δίκαιον] Supply προσλαβεῖν Κορινθίους. At ἀλλ', further on, understand, from the preceding, δίκαιόν ἐστι.

ἀπὸ τοῦ προφανοῦς] Alluding to the indirect, secret way of rendering assistance, adverted to in the words καθ' ὅ, τι ἂν πεισθῆτε.

4. πολλὰ δὲ — τὰ ξυμφέροντα ἀποδ.] Here πολλὰ is the predicate; and the present is used of what is to be, can be done; q. d. 'We have to show that many are the advantages, namely, of thus receiving us.'

ὅτι οἵ τε αὐτοὶ πολέμιοι ἡμῖν ἦσαν] i. e. 'that the same persons are enemies to us [both],' 'we have the same persons as enemies.' Some difficulty, however, here exists, and that as concerns ἦσαν. Nor is this to be removed by taking the word, with Kistemacher and others, as standing for ἦσαν ἄν—any more than regarding it, with Goeller, as a caustic and laconic form of expression for what would have been more explicit, erant? nonne etiamnum sunt? A view this, which involves something most far-fetched and frigid. And to suppose, with Poppo, a union of past and present, 'were and are;' or, that, as the imperf. denotes continuity of action or time past, so continuity in time present is implied, that is not a little precarious. The most satisfactory mode of solving the difficulty is to suppose, with Bauer, that ἦσαν is to be referred, not to the thing itself, as if past, but to that which the Corcyræan ambassadors had before shown to be true. In short, the imperf. here (as I have already shown in the note to my translation) is used with reference to what went before, namely, at c. 33, τοὺς Κορινθίους—ὑμῖν ἐχθροὺς ὄντας καὶ προκαταλαμβάνοντας ἡμᾶς νῦν ἐς τὴν ὑμετέραν ἐπιχείρησιν. This reference is, however, made by a sort of mediate reference to ὑπείπομεν just before. Such is also, I find, the view adopted by Dr. Arnold, who observes that 'in repeating what had been before said, the use of the past seems easily accounted for. The orator intended this sense: 'We say, as we said before, that we have both the same enemies.' But our author has expressed the thing somewhat differently, thus: 'We say what we said before, that both had the same enemies.' Supposing this view to be correct, we have here a remarkable instance of the brevity of expression characteristic of our author.'

σαφεστάτη πίστις] 'a pledge of faith the most to be depended upon;' the term σαφὴς having here, by a meton. of effect for cause, the not unfrequent signification certus. So in a passage of Philo adduced by Steph. in Thes. we have σαφὴς πίστις, and in Eurip. Or. 1154, and Iph. T. 919, and Xen. Mem. ii. 4, 1, φίλος σαφής. Of πίστις in this sense, bond, pledge, examples occur elsewhere in our author, infra iv. 74 and 86, and not unfrequently in Xenoph. and Dio Cass.

τοὺς μεταστάντας] 'seceders' or deserters. It must be remembered that alliance, or confederacy, then implied the subserviency, if not subjection, of several small states to the leading member of a league. Now any withdrawal from this was tantamount to a shaking off of subjection; and as the retiring member must pass over to another and perhaps hostile confederacy, it almost necessarily involved enmity.

καὶ ναυτικῆς — διδομένης] The force of the article here will be perceived by noticing the construction, which is: καὶ τῆς ξυμμαχίας (τῆς) διδομένης ναυτικῆς (οὔσης) καὶ οὐκ ἠπειρώτιδος, 'it being μένης οὐχ ὁμοία ἡ ἀλλοτρίωσις· ἀλλὰ μάλιστα μὲν, εἰ δύνασθε, μηδένα ἄλλον ἐᾶν κεκτῆσθαι ναῦς, εἰ δὲ μὴ, ὅστις ἐχυρώτατος, τοῦτον φίλον ἔχειν. XXXVI. Καὶ ὅτῳ τάδε ξυμφέροντα μὲν δοκεῖ λέγεσθαι, φοβεῖται δὲ μὴ, δι' αὐτὰ πειθόμενος, τὰς σπονδὰς λύσῃ, γνώτω τὸ μὲν δεδιὸς αὐτοῦ, ἰσχὺν ἔχον, τοὺς ἐναντίους μᾶλλον φοβῆσον· τὸ δὲ θαρσοῦν, μὴ δεξαμένου, ἀσθενὲς ὂν πρὸς ἰσχύοντας τοὺς ἐχθροὺς ἀδεέστερον ἐσόμενον· καὶ ἅμα οὐ περὶ τῆς Κερκύρας νῦν τὸ πλέον ἢ καὶ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν βουλευόμενος, καὶ οὐ τὰ κράτιστα αὐταῖς προνοῶν, ὅταν ἐς τὸν μέλλοντα καὶ ὅσον οὐ παρόντα πόλεμον, τὸ αὐτίκα περισκοπῶν, ἐνδοιάζῃ χωρίον the alliance of a maritime, not an inland, power, that is offered you.'

οὐχ ὁμοία ἡ ἀλλοτρίωσις] 'the consequence of alienation and deprivation is not the same thing to you.' In the next words, ἀλλὰ μάλιστα—ἔχειν, the two infinitives, as Haack shows, depend upon, what is to be supplied from that implied in the preceding οὐχ ὁμοία, namely, διαφέρει: and οὐχ ὁμ. is, as Arn. observes, equivalent to οὐχ ὁμοίως ξυμφέρει, from whence the verb ξυμφέρει is to be tacitly repeated with what follows. Thus we may render: 'Nay, it is for your especial interest to allow, as far as in you lies, no one else to possess any ships at all; and if this cannot be, whoever may be the strongest in ships, him to have as your friend.'

μηδένα ἄλλον] 'no other state.' This use of the masculine, by which a state is considered as an individual person, is frequent in Thucyd.

CH. XXXVI. In this chapter the argument is, that even if such aid as is desired should involve a violation of the treaty between Athens and the Peloponnesian confederacy, the object, namely, of securing so favourably situated and powerful an ally, ought to outweigh every other consideration.

1. γνώτω τὸ μὲν δεδιὸς—ἐσόμενον] The chief difficulty in this obscure sentence centres in the words τὸ μὲν δεδιὸς αὐτοῦ, ἰσχὺν ἔχον, and the best mode of removing it will be to consider those words in conjunction with the antithetical ones, τὸ δὲ θαρσοῦν, μὴ δεξαμένου, ἀσθενὲς ὄν. In the latter, the words μὴ δεξαμένου are explanatory, and meant to disclose the latent sense, concealed under the expressed. The construction is: τὸ δὲ θαρσοῦν (αὐτοῦ) μὴ δεξαμένου (αὐτοῦ ἡμᾶς), 'his confidence, if he does not receive us.' The sense of the words is thus apparent; and the only way to make the antithetical ones clear also, is to express some similar explanatory words, which being left to be understood, have caused the difficulty. Now these, I apprehend, are δεξαμένου ἡμᾶς, which being supplied make all plain, and might be omitted because they seem implied in the words following, ἰσχὺν ἔχον, i. e. 'if it have [the] strength [resulting from receiving us].' In τὸ δεδιὸς and τὸ θαρσοῦν we have participles for infinitives (with which use comp. similar ones infra i. 142. iii. 43. v. 7, 9,) the sense being literally, 'his being afraid,' and, 'his being confident.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 570. Both the words are used by Dio Cass. and other writers who have imitated Thucyd. The fear here spoken of is, lest the treaty should be broken and war ensue; and the confidence that it would not. Thus in the counter-speech, ch. 42, we have: καὶ τὸ μέλλον τοῦ πολέμου ᾧ φοβοῦντες ὑμᾶς Κερκυραῖοι κελεύουσιν ἀδικεῖν, ἐν ἀφανεῖ ἔτι κεῖται. It is well observed by Poppo: 'Hæc igitur confidentia poterat facere, ut Corcyræorum fœdus spernerent, et ita infirmiores facti a Lacedæmoniis contemnerentur; contra si Athenienses timebant quidem fœdera rumpere, at nihilominus Corcyræos sibi adjungebant (aut si timebant, ne, etiamsi ipsi fœdera non læsissent, ab hostibus violarentur, ch. 44, et propterea Corcyræos recipiebant), eorum metus cum opibus conjunctus hostes magis terrere, et sic ad pacem servandam incitare poterat.' That ἀδεέστερον must mean nimis formidandum, is plain from the opposite words, τοὺς ἐναντίους μᾶλλον φοβῆσον, but the sense is one so rare, that I have not met with a single example of it elsewhere. We may, however, compare a similar use of the term φοβερός. See Poppo. Finally, the confidence here spoken of might well be called weak, as being productive of less strength, and therefore less the object of apprehension.

ὅσον οὐ παρόντα] 'all but present.' An elegant Atticism frequent in Thucyd., and on which see Viger, p. 131.

τὸ αὐτίκα—προσλαβεῖν] The construcπροσλαβεῖν, ὃ μετὰ μεγίστων καιρῶν οἰκειοῦταί τε καὶ πολεμοῦται. 2. τῆς τε γὰρ Ἰταλίας καὶ Σικελίας καλῶς παράπλου κεῖται, ὥστε μήτε ἐκεῖθεν ναυτικὸν ἐᾶσαι Πελοποννησίοις ἐπελθεῖν, τό τε ἐνθένδε πρὸς τἀκεῖ παραπέμψαι, καὶ ἐς τἆλλα ξυμφορώτατόν ἐστι. 3. βραχυτάτῳ δ' ἂν κεφαλαίῳ, τοῖς τε ξύμπασι καὶ καθ' ἕκαστον, τῷδ' ἂν μὴ προέσθαι ἡμᾶς μάθοιτε τρία μὲν ὄντα λόγου ἄξια τοῖς Ἕλλησι ναυτικά, τὸ παρ' ὑμῖν καὶ τὸ ἡμέτερον καὶ τὸ Κορινθίων, τούτων [δ'] εἰ περιώψεσθε τὰ δύο ἐς ταὐτὸν ἐλθεῖν, καὶ Κορίνθιοι ἡμᾶς προκαταλήψονται, Κερκυραίοις τε καὶ Πελοποννησίοις ἅμα ναυμαχήσετε· δεξάμενοι δὲ ἡμᾶς, ἔξετε πρὸς αὐτοὺς πλείοσι tion is: ὅταν τὸ αὐτίκα περισκοπῶν, ἐνδοιάζῃ χ. π. 'when, through circumspection as regards the present, he hesitates,' &c.

ὃ μετὰ—πολεμοῦται] 'whose friendship or whose enmity is exceedingly critical,' namely, as involving a crisis, or turn of affairs, momentous for good or for evil. Οἰκειοῦται, 'ad amicitiam adjungitur.' In this sense the term occurs not unfrequently in Plato, Aristotle, and especially Dio Cass. Πολεμοῦται, 'is made an enemy;' a sense of πολεμόω found also infra ch. 57.

2. τῆς Ἰταλίας—καλῶς παράπλου κεῖται] 'is well situated for the passage to Italy and Sicily;' as infra ch. 42. So in Xen. Hist. vi. 2, 9 (on the subject also of Corcyra) we have: κεῖσθαι ἐν καλλίστῳ τοῦ εἰς Πελοπόννησον ἀπὸ Σικελίας παράπλου. The expression has been in not a few instances imitated by Dio Cass., Procop., and Dion. Hal.

The adverb καλῶς belongs to the subst. παράπλου. So, by a similar use, we have infra iii. 92, τῆς ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης παρόδου χρησίμως ἔξειν, and Menand. Hist. ἐπιτηδείως ἔχουσα θέσεως. Finally, it may be observed, the term παράπ. is employed because the voyage to Italy, and generally to Sicily, was made by coasting along Greece as far as the promontory of Iapygia, and then crossing to Taras.

τό τε ἐνθένδε — παραπέμψαι] 'set on its way,' 'convoy.' By ἐνθένδε is meant Greece at large, though with especial reference to Athens. And at τὸ understand ναυτικόν.

3. τοῖς τε ξύμπασι κ. κ. ἕ.] 'both as to generals and particulars:' for the words are to be referred, not to persons, but to things. So one of our great poets has, 'To sum the whole, the close of all.' Κεφάλαιον in this sense, to denote a summary, occurs also in a passage of Appian, i. 426, 2 (evidently formed on this passage), βραχεῖ τε λόγῳ μάθοιτ' ἂν, &c. Not unfrequently we have ἐν κεφ. without βραχεῖ, as Æschin. p. 42, 36, ἐν κεφαλαίῳ περὶ πάντων εἰπών. Sometimes, too, the ἐν is omitted, as in Eurip. Suppl. 566, βούλει συνάψω μῦθον ἐν βραχεῖ, which passage, and others like it, afforded a handle for witty allusion to the great comic dramatic writer, Ran. 854, ἵνα μὴ κεφαλαίῳ τὸν κρόταφόν σου ῥήματι θένων ὑπ' ὀργῆς. The datives here are datives of object; and in καθ' ἕκαστον we have an adverbial phrase.

τρία μὲν ὄντα — τούτων δ' εἰ] The general sense here is plain, but the construction doubtful. Some would join ὄντα with λόγου ἄξια, and suppose ἔστι understood: a method, this, quite inadmissible. Others suppose the conjunction δὲ to be placed in the apodosis of the sentence, q. d. 'As there are [but] three navies in Greece of any account, of these you allow two of three to be united together,' &c. Pop. and Goell. would supply ἴστε, from μάθοιτε. Of these several modes of taking the words, this last is far too precarious to be safely acquiesced in. The second may be considered deserving of the preference. I suspect, however, that the δ' before εἰ had originally no place, and crept into the text from the margin, being a mere gloss proceeding on a misconception of the true construction. This word, then, being removed, all will be plain.

The τῶν before Κορινθίων, found in many MSS., has been, on competent authority, cancelled by later editors. And for vulg. τὸ αὐτὸ, they have, from several of the best MSS., substituted ταὐτόν.

δεξάμενοι—ἀγωνίζεσθαι] I have, with Pop. and Goell., here edited, from nearly all the MSS., ἡμετέραις. The other reading, edited by Bekk. and Arnold, ὑμετέραις, besides being forbidden by the article ταῖς, yields a sense not a little frigid, 'superior in numbers on your side.' The purpose of the speaker is, we may suppose, not to declare that, after the addition of the Corcyræan fleet, they would have more ships than before wherewith to fight against the Corinthians, but that they ναυσὶ, ταῖς ἡμετέραις, ἀγωνίζεσθαι. Τοιαῦτα μὲν οἱ Κερκυραῖοι εἶπον· οἱ δὲ Κορίνθιοι μετ' αὐτοὺς τοιάδε.

XXXVII. Ἀναγκαῖον, Κερκυραίων τῶνδε οὐ μόνον περὶ τοῦ δέξασθαι σφᾶς τὸν λόγον ποιησαμένων, ἀλλ' ὡς καὶ ἡμεῖς τε ἀδικούμεν καὶ αὐτοὶ οὐκ εἰκότως πολεμοῦνται, μνησθέντας πρῶτον καὶ ἡμᾶς περὶ ἀμφοτέρων, οὕτω καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν ἄλλον λόγον ἰέναι, ἵνα τὴν ἀφ' ἡμῶν τε ἀξίωσιν ἀσφαλέστερον προειδῆτε, καὶ τὴν τῶνδε χρείαν μὴ ἀλογίστως ἀπώσησθε. 2. φασὶ δὲ ξυμμαχίαν διὰ τὸ σῶφρον οὐδενός πω δέξασθαι· τὸ δὲ ἐπὶ κακουργίᾳ καὶ οὐκ ἀρετῇ ἐπετήδευσαν, ξύμμαχόν τε οὐδένα βουλόμενοι πρὸς ταδικήματα οὐδὲ μάρτυρα ἔχειν, οὔτε παρακαλοῦντες αἰσχύνεσθαι. 3. καὶ ἡ πόλις αὐτῶν ἅμα, would have a superiority of force on their side. Thus at πλείοσι ναυσὶ we must supply, from the preceding, τῶν Πελοποννησίων. By substituting Peloponnesians for Corinthians, the speaker, we see, takes for granted that the Athenians will also be at war with the Peloponnesians. Moreover, ταῖς ἡμετέραις is by Bake (a German critic cited by Poppo) said to be here put by way of explanation, and consequently to be in apposition with πλείοσι ναυσί: whereas Goell. makes it depend on πλείοσι, as πολλῷ does in the phrase πολλῷ πλείονες. Of which two methods the latter may be pronounced totally erroneous; and the former is scarcely defensible, inasmuch as the assertion would thus be untrue. It is best to consider the dative as standing apart from the immediately preceding datives, and as used in the sense by — 'You will have to contend against them with more ships by ours.' So we say, 'more by twenty, thirty,' &c.

As serving to illustrate the present passage, I would here compare one of a similar kind in Soph. Elect. 1370, where the Pædagogue thus addresses Electra and Orestes, instigating them to the murder of Clytæmnestra: Νῦν καιρὸς ἕρδειν· νῦν Κλυταιμνήστρα μόνη· Νῦν οὔ τις ἀνδρῶν ἔνδον· εἰ δ' ἐφέξετον (ye wait), Φροντίζεθ' ὡς τούτοις τε, καὶ σοφωτέροις Ἄλλοισι τούτων πλείοσιν μαχούμενοι.

Ch. XXXVII. The Corinthian speakers, in their reply to the Corcyræans, commence (namely, at chap. 37 and 38) by endeavouring to raise a distrust of, and aversion to, the Corcyræans, by ascribing their neutrality to unworthy, and even base motives, and even to deprive them of all claim on the assistance of any one; and also by charging them with injurious, or at any rate undutiful, conduct towards the mother country.

1. Κερκυραίων τῶνδε] This use of the demonstrative pronoun, like iste in Latin, mostly implies contempt.

τὸν λόγον ποιησαμένων] 'having made their harangue,' 'having harangued you on their part.' Ἀλλ' ὡς καὶ, for ἀλλὰ καὶ ὡς. In ὡς καὶ ἡμεῖς the καὶ is transposed, as Pop. remarks, who compares a similar transposition in Pind. Olymp. i. 51, λέγοντι δ' ἐν καὶ θαλάσσᾳ.

ἵνα τὴν ἀφ' ἡμῶν τε ἀξίωσιν ἀσφαλέστερον προειδῆτε] Ἀσφ. is used adverbially. Render: 'that you may with more certainty know before the request proceeding from us,' or know what it is, i. e. its grounds. Similarly in Luke i. 4, we have: ἵνα ἐπιγνῷς περὶ ὧν κατηχήθης λόγων τὴν ἀσφάλειαν. Of these two terms ἀξίωσις and χρεία, the former, as Bredow observes, signifies a request of right and equity; the latter, a petition of necessity. Of ἀξίωσις in this rare sense, examples are found in Dio Cass. 683, 77. Appian, ii. 191.

2. τὸ σῶφρον] Equiv. to σωφροσύνη supra 32, 4, and denoting a prudent moderation.

τὸ δὲ] for τοῦτο δὲ, the art. standing for the demonstr. pron.; on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 86. Construe this with ἐπετήδευσαν a little after, and render: 'Whereas they pursued this course.' The term ἐπιτηδεύειν signifies properly 'to do any thing of purpose or habit,' 'to practise it.' It is generally used of what is good (as infra vi. 54, ἐπετ. ἀρετὴν) though sometimes of evil, as here and Hdot. ii. 129, and also in the Attic drama. In the present case, however, the primary sense of purpose seems intended to be included. By the term κακουργία is meant to be denoted 'arrant or utter wickedness,' villany, according to its use in Plato, p. 434, μεγίστη τε βλάβη τῇ πόλει καὶ ὀρθότατ' ἂν προσαγορεύοιτο μάλιστα κακουργία.

αὐτάρκη θέσιν κειμένη, παρέχει αὐτοὺς δικαστὰς ὧν βλάπτουσί τινα, μᾶλλον ἢ κατὰ ξυνθήκας γίγνεσθαι, διὰ τὸ ἥκιστα ἐπὶ τοὺς πέλας ἐκπλέοντας, μάλιστα τοὺς ἄλλους, ἀνάγκῃ καταίροντας, δέχεσθαι. 4. κἀν τούτῳ τὸ εὐπρεπὲς ἄσπονδον, οὐχ ἵνα μὴ ξυναδικήσωσιν ἑτέροις, προβέβληνται, ἀλλ' ὅπως κατὰ μόνας ἀδικῶσι, καὶ ὅπως ἐν ᾧ μὲν ἂν κρατῶσι βιάζωνται, οὗ δ' ἂν λάθωσι πλέον ἔχωσιν, ἢν δέ πού τι προσλάβωσιν, ἀναισχυντῶσι. 5. καίτοι εἰ ἦσαν ἄνδρες, ὥσπερ φασὶν, ἀγαθοὶ, ὅσῳ ἀληπτότεροι ἦσαν τοῖς πέλας, τοσῷδε φανερωτέραν ἐξῆν αὐτοῖς τὴν ἀρετὴν, διδοῦσι καὶ δεχομένοις τὰ δίκαια, δεικνύναι. XXXVIII. Ἀλλ' οὔτε πρὸς τοὺς ἄλλους οὔτε ἐς ἡμᾶς τοιοίδε εἰσίν· ἄποικοι δὲ ὄντες, ἀφεστᾶσί τε διὰ παντὸς καὶ νῦν πολεμοῦσι, λέγοντες ὡς οὐκ ἐπὶ τῷ κακῶς πάσχειν ἐκπεμφθείησαν. 2. ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐδ' αὐτοί φαμεν ἐπὶ τῷ ὑπὸ τούτων ὑβρίζεσθαι κατοικίσαι, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῷ ἡγεμόνες τε εἶναι, καὶ τὰ εἰκότα

this obscure form of expression the sense will best appear by taking it in connexion with the whole sentence, which may be thus rendered: 'They aver, that it was through a prudent moderation that they received no one's alliance; whereas this was their practice, not from a good, but from a bad, motive; as wishing to have no one auxiliary to, nor [consequently] witness of, their evil deeds, and not to be made to blush at calling them in [to a communion in evil].' The construction is: οὔτε [βουλόμενοι] αἰσχύνεσθαι παρακαλοῦντες [τινα εἰς ξυμμαχίαν τῶν ἀδικημάτων]. The words εἰς ξυμμαχίαν τῶν ἀδικημάτων are to be supplied from the preceding context, and from the term ξύμαχον here, which in the present instance denotes communion, or what is otherwise expressed by κοινωνία. And indeed the term παρακαλοῦντες may very well suggest this idea, παρακαλεῖν τινα εἰς ξυμμαχίαν being a not unfrequent phrase. So Herodot. vii. 158, ἐτολμήσατε ἐμὲ σύμμαχον παρακαλέοντες ἑλθεῖν. Xen. Œcon. iii. 7, παρεκάλεσεν εἰς ἔργον. The same ellipsis is observable in a passage of our author infra l. iii. τοὺς δούλους παρακαλοῦντές τε καὶ ἐλευθερίαν ὑπισχνούμενοι.

Adopting this view of the sense, Goell. paraphrases: 'Nolunt sociis quasi onerari, ne pudore suffundantur, si eos hortentur in communionem turpium consiliorum suorum venire,' i. e. so as to be συγκοινωνοὶ τῶν ἀδικημάτων. Finally, as serving to illustrate this peculiar expression, παρακαλοῦντες αἰσχύνεσθαι, I would here compare a passage of Joseph. Bell. i. 14, 1 (evidently formed on the present), τῷ δὲ ὄντι προαιρούμενος κατασχεῖν τὰ Ἀντιπάτρου χρέα, καὶ μηδὲν, εἰς τὰς ἐκείνου δωρεὰς, ἀντιπαρασχεῖν χρῄζουσι τοῖς τέκνοις δυσωπεῖσθαι, where I doubt not the true reading is, καὶ μὴ, μηδὲν—τέκνοις, δυσωπεῖσθαι. As further illustrative of the expression, I have also noted a passage of Eurip. Hipp. 1001, Ἐπίσταμαί τε—φίλοις χρῆσθαι μὴ δικεῖν πειρωμένοις, Ἀλλ' οἷσιν αἰδὼς μήτ' ἀπαγγέλλειν κακὰ (petere inhonesta) μήτ' ἀνθυπουργεῖν αἰσχρὰ τοῖσι χρωμένοις.

3. αὐταρκῆ θέσιν κειμένη] Here we may supply κατὰ or πρὸς, which word is expressed in a similar passage of Aristot. de Part. Anim. iii. κεῖται γὰρ οὐδαμῶς πρὸς ἀρχοειδῆ θέσιν. Perhaps, however, there is here no ellipsis at all, and the accus. may be referred to the rule of Matth. Gr. Gr. 408, by which verbs intransitive take a subst. of kindred signification in the accus. Of αὐταρκῆ the sense is 'self-sufficient [to its wants and purposes],' so as not to need the aid of others, as infra ii. 36. Dio Cass. 174, 90, and Polyb. v. 55, 8.

μᾶλλον ἢ κατὰ ξυνθήκας γίγνεσθαι] Of these difficult words various have been the modes of explanation proposed: but the true sense appears to be that assigned by Pop. and Goell. 'rather than that judges should be appointed by both parties;' the word δικαστὰς being, as they observe, to be taken twice, thus: παρέχει αὐτοῖς δικαστὰς μᾶλλον ἢ κατὰ ξυνθήκας γίγνεσθαι τοὺς δικαστάς. By ξυνθ., as Goell. observes, is meant not 'pacta civitatum de commercio juris inter cives privatos dandi et repetendi' (δίκας ἀπὸ ξυμβόλων), but 'pacta de litibus inter civitates per arbitros dirimendis.' Thus the article has here its full force. Of such ξυνθῆκαι the main principle was διδόναι καὶ δέχεσθαι τὰ δίκαια (see the concluding portion of the chapter), that the differences to each litigant state should be settled by friendly arbitration.

ἀνάγκῃ καταίροντας] 'touching there,' compelled by stress of weather. Δέχεσθαι, for ὑποδέχ. See the Schol. on Pind. Ol. viii. 28.

4. κἀν τούτῳ—ἀναισχυντῶσι] Of this involved sentence Goell. traces the construction and natural order as follows: κἀν τούτῳ προβέβληνται τὸ ἄσπονδον εὐπρεπὲς, ὅπως κατὰ μόνας ἀδικῶσι, καὶ ὅπως—βιάζωνται—πλέον ἔχωσιν—ἀναισχυντῶσιν, οὐχ ἵνα μὴ ξυναδικήσωσιν ἑτέροις. According to the above statement, ἐν τούτῳ is for διὰ τοῦτο, 'for this.' By Poppo, however, it is taken for 'in this consists' (in eo situm est, ἔνεστιν). The difficulty may, indeed, be effectually removed by considering this as in effect a blending of two modes of expression, i. e. 'in this consists,' and 'for this they hold out,' this specious non-alliance. On this use of προβέβληνται, prætendunt, (pass. for act.) see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 496, 6, and Blomf. on Æschyl. Ag. 252. Τὸ εὐπρεπὲς ἄσπονδον, for τὸ ἄσπονδον τὸ εὐπρεπὲς, 'this specious fair showing non-alliance,' (adj. for subst. abstr.) see Matth. Gr.

Of the words ὅπως ἐν ᾧ μὲν — ἀναισχυντῶσι, the sense is well expressed by Goell. 'utque, ubi viribus prævalent, vi agant; ubi latent, fraude suam rem augeant; ubi quid acquisiverint, impudentes sint.' Πλέον ἔχωσιν stands for πλεονεκτῶσιν, as in Plato, p. 343, 349, 483, 488, 574. Xen. Hist. vii. 5, 27. And of the words ἢν δέ πού τι προσλάβωσιν, the sense is literally, 'whenever they may have added any thing to their stores [by fresh acquisitions].' The term ἀναισχυντῶσι has, indeed, been somewhat differently explained by different commentators; some assigning to it the sense, 'may impudently deny [their possession of the thing];' others, 'may impudently retain what they have got by rapine.' As, however, the general import of the term ἀναισχυντεῖν is 'to comport oneself impudently,' whether by words or actions, both those senses may be here supposed to have place. The Corcyræans, it seems, as occasion served, would either impudently deny the act of rapine, or, admitting it, as impudently brave it out, setting all justice at defiance. As confirmatory of this view, it may suffice to adduce a passage of Heliod. viii. (in which the expression of our author has been imitated by that writer,) λανθάνειν μὲν οἰόμενοι καὶ ἐρυθριῶσιν ('even blush'), ἁλισκόμενοι δὲ ἀπαναισχυντῶσι, 'may brave it out.' Also another in Jos. Ant. iv. 8, 26, οἱ δὲ λαβόντες—ἂν ἀναισχυντῶσι περὶ τὴν ἀπόδοσιν, i. e. by denying the deposit, or refusing to restore it. In this sense, too, to brave out, the word occurs in Aristoph. Thesm. 708, τοιαῦτα ποιῶν οὐδ' ἀναισχυντεῖ, as also in Plato and other writers whom I have cited in the note on this passage appended to my translation. Having, then, this sense, ἀναισχυντεῖν will thus be equiv. to ἀπερυθριάζειν: and accordingly in Suidas' Lex. we have ἀπερυθριάσαι explained by ἀναισχυντῆσαι.

5. ἀληπτότεροι] lit. 'the more inaccessible,' namely, to those who should attempt to compel them to do justice; and that, from their occupying so commanding a situation. Of this rare term ἄληπτος, I have found examples only in Dio Cass. 296, 2, and Joseph. Ant. v. 7.

Ch. XXXVIII. The Corinthians now proceed to represent that the Corcyræans, agreeably to their previous conduct towards the parent country, and towards other states, were in the wrong as to the present case.

1. ἀφεστᾶσι διὰ παντὸς] 'have always held off from alliance.' See what was said supra ch. xxv. 4. This particular, διὰ παντὸς, always, is meant to pre-occupy the argument that they are only now hostile because they had been of late ill-treated. The expression is illustrated by a passage of Herodot. iii. 49, Νῦν δὲ ἀεὶ ἐπειτεν ἔκτισαν τὴν νῆσον, εἰσὶ ἀλλήλοισι διάφοροι, ἐόντες (though they are) ἐωϋτοῖς συγγενέες.

λέγοντες] 'alleging.' The next words, ὡς οὐκ ἐπὶ τῷ κακῶς πάσχειν ἐκπεμφθείησαν, have reference to those supra ch. xxxiv. 1, οὐ γὰρ ἐπὶ τῷ δοῦλοι, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῷ ὁμοῖοι τοῖς λειπομένοις εἶναι ἐκπέμπονται.

θαυμάζεσθαι. 3. αἱ γοῦν ἄλλαι ἀποικίαι τιμῶσιν ἡμᾶς, καὶ μάλιστα ὑπὸ ἀποίκων στεργόμεθα. 4. καὶ δῆλον ὅτι, εἰ τοῖς πλέουσιν ἀρέσκοντές ἐσμεν, τοῖσδ' ἂν μόνοις οὐκ ὀρθῶς ἀπαρέσκοιμεν, οὐδ' ἐπιστρατεύομεν ἐκπρεπῶς, μὴ καὶ διαφερόντως τι ἀδικούμενοι. 5. καλὸν δ' ἦν, εἰ καὶ ἡμαρτάνομεν, τοῖσδε μὲν εἶξαι τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ ὀργῇ, ἡμῖν δὲ αἰσχρὸν βιάσασθαι τὴν τούτων μετριότητα. 6. ὕβρει δὲ καὶ ἐξουσίᾳ πλούτου πολλὰ ἐς ἡμᾶς ἄλλα τε ἡμαρτήκασι, καὶ Ἐπίδαμνον, ἡμετέραν οὖσαν, κακουμένην μὲν οὐ προσεποιοῦντο, ἐλθόντων δὲ ἡμῶν ἐπὶ τιμωρίᾳ, ἑλόντες βίᾳ ἔχουσι. 400, 419. Joseph. 809, 9, τὰ εἰκ. τιμῆς φέρεσθαι, and 853, 11. Zos. i. 59. Liban. Or. p. 721, τὰ εἰκότα τιμηθέντες. Epist. 527, 803, 1286, 1819. Lucian, iii. 621. ii. 378. So Suidas in v. Θεαγένης has, Ἐθεράπευσε τὰ εἰκ. τὸν Θ.

3. στεργόμεθα] Στέργω is a stronger term than ἀγαπάω or φιλέω.

4. τοῖσδ' ἂν—ἀπαρέσκοιμεν] 'we should not, ought not, with reason, to be unacceptable to these,' i. e. there could be no good reason for such disaffection.

οὐδ' ἐπιστρατεύομεν ἐκπρεπῶς] So I have edited, for the vulg. ἐπιστρατεύοιμεν εὐπρεπῶς, which reading, though it might be defended, is too deficient in authority to be safely adopted. The sense is well expressed by Pop. and Goell. 'Neque solemus bellum inferre, indigno majori patriæ modo, nisi insigni injuria cogimur.' And so Arnold, 'Nor do we attack them (i. e. our colonies) unbecomingly, without having received from them a signal injury.' The word ἐκπρεπῶς is properly equiv. to ἔξω τοῦ πρέποντος, as infra iii. 55, ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ οὐδὲν ἐκπρεπέστερον (indignius, iniquius) ὑπὸ ἡμῶν οὔτε ἐπάθετε οὔτε ἐμελλήσατε. But it may, as here, be taken in the milder sense insigniter.

ἀδικούμενοι] Here, as observes Herm. on Soph. Elect. 47, we have indicated a permanent effect of a past action.

6. ὕβρει καὶ ἐξουσίᾳ πλούτου] 'through insolence and the power, or license, of wealth,' which enables men to gratify their appetites and passions. So Tacit. Agric. 7, ex paternâ fortunâ tantam licentiam usurpante. Similarly in a passage of Procop. Arc. Hist. 36, 34, we have, ἐξουσίᾳ πλούτου, and 153, 11, τῆς ἀρχῆς ἐξουσίᾳ ἐπιχρώμενος. Demosth. contra Mid. p. 99, Tayl. ἐπ' ἐξουσίας καὶ πλούτου ὑβριστὴν, where, for ἐπ' ἐξουσίας, &c., I conjecture ἀπ' or ὑπ' ἐξ. καὶ π. ὑ., there being here an hendiadys. So in Max. Tyr. Diss. xxvi. 7, we have, ὑπ' ἀκολάστου ἐξουσίας ὑβριζούσης. And in Procop. Arc. Hist. p. 94, ἡ τῆς δυνάμεως ἐξουσία: and a little further on, ἡ πονηρία τῇ τῆς παρουσίας ἐξουσίᾳ ἐς τὸ λυμαίνεσθαι τοῖς παραπίπτουσιν ἐξαγομένη, where for παρουσίας, I conj. περιουσίᾳ as used for πλούτῳ. Finally, I would here compare a passage of Arist. Rhet. p. 53, συμβέβηκε τοῖς μὲν πένησι, διὰ τὴν ἔνδειαν, ἐπιθυμεῖν χρημάτων· τοῖς δὲ πλουσίοις, διὰ τὴν ἐξουσίαν (scil. τοῦ πλούτου) ἐπιθυμεῖν τῶν μὴ ἀναγκαίων ἡδονῶν.

ἐπὶ τιμωρίᾳ] 'to its aid.' In the words ἑλόντες βίᾳ ἔχουσι, we have two clauses combined into one, which otherwise would have stood thus: 'they seized, and after seizing still retain.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 559, 6.

Ch. XXXIX. The argument now adduced against the Athenians helping them, is, that it were unreasonable for them to expect aid to save them from merited punishment now in their adversity, considering that in their prosperity they had stood aloof from all alliances.

1. φασὶ δή] 'they say forsooth.' Of δίκῃ κρίνεσθαι the sense is, 'to be impleaded in a legal process.' So in a passage of St. Matthew, v. 40, we have, τῷ θέλοντί σοι κριθῆναι.

ἦν γε οὐ τὸν προὔχοντα—καθιστάντα] For the true reading and interpretation here, we are indebted to the labours of Bredow and Pop., who have shown that τηρεῖν, found in the common text after δεῖ, is a mere gloss, and indeed in most of the MSS. has no place. This eye-sore, then, being removed, the words admit of a ready construction; and we may, with Goell., regard them as though they stood thus: ἦν γε τὸν ἐς ἴσον τά τε ἔργα ὁμοίως καὶ τοὺς λόγους, πρὶν διαγωνίζεσθαι, καθιστάντα λέγειν τι δοκεῖν δεῖ προκαλούμενον, ἀλλ' οὐ τὸν προκαλούμενον προὔχοντα καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ἀσφαλοῦς. Or thus: ἀλλ' οὐ τὸν

καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ἀσφαλοῦς προκαλούμενον λέγειν τι δοκεῖν δεῖ, ἀλλὰ τὸν ἐς ἴσον τά τε ἔργα ὁμοίως καὶ τοὺς λόγους, πρὶν διαγωνίζεσθαι, καθιστάντα. 2. οὗτοι δ' οὐ πρὶν πολιορκεῖν τὸ χωρίον, ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ ἡγήσαντο ἡμᾶς οὐ περιόψεσθαι, τότε καὶ τὸ εὐπρεπὲς τῆς δίκης παρέσχοντο· καὶ δεῦρο ἥκουσιν, οὐ τἀκεῖ μόνον αὐτοὶ ἁμαρτόντες, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὑμᾶς νῦν ἀξιοῦντες οὐ ξυμμαχεῖν ἀλλὰ ξυναδικεῖν, καὶ, διαφόρους ὄντας ἡμῖν, δέχεσθαι σφᾶς. 3. οὓς χρῆν, ὅτε ἀσφαλέστατοι ἦσαν, τότε προσίεναι, καὶ μὴ ἐν ᾧ ἡμεῖς μὲν ἠδικήμεθα, οὗτοι δὲ κινδυνεύουσι, μηδ' ἐν ᾧ ὑμεῖς τῆς τε δυνάμεως αὐτῶν τότε οὐ μεταλαβόντες, τῆς ὠφελείας νῦν μεταδώσετε, καὶ τῶν ἁμαρτημάτων ἀπογενόμενοι τῆς ἀφ' ἡμῶν αἰτίας τὸ ἴσον ἕξετε· πάλαι δὲ

But, to discuss the phraseology briefly in detail, ἦν γε is, as Pop. observes, to be resolved into ἀλλὰ ταύτην γε, scil. δίκη (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 477), and the accus. depends on προκαλούμενον. So infra ii. 72, 73, 74, ἃ προκαλεῖται, and v. 37, προκαλούμενοι τὰ εἰρημένα. Moreover, as Goell. remarks, the article τὸν before προὔχοντα belongs to προκαλούμενον, and προὔχοντα and ἐκ τοῦ ἀσφαλοῦς are put juxta se. Of this use of the phrase ἐκ τοῦ ἀσφαλοῦς for adv. ἀσφαλῶς, examples occur in Xen. Hippag. iv. 16. viii. 15. Hdian. i. 12, 17, and 15, 5. More frequently, however, the phrase is found without the article.

Of λέγειν τι the sense is, 'to say any thing of moment,' 'to the purpose.' (See Viger, p. 152, b.) And the general meaning intended is: 'But he who calls another [to judicial decision], having himself the upper hand [and being sure of his purpose], ought not to be thought to say any thing worth attention,' i. e. his words ought to be reckoned to go for nothing. For an offer to refer any thing to arbitration that has already been forcibly seized, and is still forcibly retained, may well seem 'saying nothing to the purpose;' especially when, as in the present instance, superiority of power may enable the possessor to resist the decision if it should be unfavourable. Comp. infra iii. 82, 8, and note. In διαγωνίζεσθαι we have a forensic term for δικάζεσθαι, and which has reference to the sort of contest carried on between the two pleaders.

Of the words following, ἀλλὰ τὸν ἐς ἴσον τά τε ἔργα ὁμοίως καὶ τοὺς λόγους, πρὶν διαγωνίζεσθαι, καθιστάντα, the sense is, 'But he [may be thought to speak and act to the purpose] who, before proceeding to combat, makes his deeds tally with his words,' namely, by relinquishing the object in dispute, pending the time of arbitration. So infra ii. 72, ἦν ποιῆτε (scil. ἔργα) ὁμοῖα τοῖς λόγοις.

2. οὗτοι δ' οὐ—παρέσχοντο] Here we have, as Goell. points out, an application, to the particular case of the Corcyræans, of the general truth inculcated in the preceding sentence, πρὶν διαγωνίζεσθαι, &c. 'Orator dicit Corcyræos prius aliter egisse, scil. πολιορκῆσαι, aliter nunc loqui, δικάζεσθαι.' Of τὸ εὐπρεπὲς τῆς δίκης παρέσχοντο, the sense is well explained by Goell. 'conditionem ferebant speciosam causæ per arbitros disceptandæ.' And he observes, that παρέχεσθαι signifies 'to offer by words;' παρέχειν, 'to offer by things.' By τὸ εὐπρεπὲς τῆς δίκης is meant, 'the specious pretence of justice,' i. e. of being willing to abide by judicial decision. Of the words οὐ ξυμμαχεῖν ἀλλὰ ξυναδικεῖν, the sense is literally, '[I do not say] to be their comrades, but their comrogues,' their companions in iniquity. In this absolute use ξυναδικέω occurs also in Dionys. Hal. A. vii. 56, 1442, Reiske, τὸν βουλόμενον συννοσεῖν καὶ συναδικεῖν, where ought undoubtedly to be restored the old reading συναινεῖν, by Reiske altered, on conjecture, to συννοσεῖν. So in a passage of Philo Jud., cited by Steph. Thes., we have, ὡς συναινεῖν καὶ ἑτοίμως ἕπεσθαι. It is quite evident that Dionysius had this passage of our author in mind: and as evidently is it imitated by Plutarch de Discr. 34, συνεργεῖν δεῖ τῷ φίλῳ, μὴ συμπανουργεῖν—καὶ συνατυχεῖν, νὴ Δία, μὴ συναδικεῖν.

3. μὴ ἐν ᾧ ὑμεῖς—κινδυνεύουσι] This passage seems to have been in the mind of Livy, iv. 24, 'Nec adversarum rerum quærere socios, cum quibus spem integram communicati non sint.'

κοινώσαντας τὴν δύναμιν, κοινὰ καὶ τὰ ἀποβαίνοντα ἔχειν. [ἐγκλημάτων δὲ μόνων ἀμετόχους, οὕτω τῶν μετὰ τὰς πράξεις τούτων μὴ κοινωνεῖν.] XL. Ὡς μὲν οὖν αὐτοί τε μετὰ προσηκόντων ἐγκλημάτων ἐρχόμεθα, καὶ οἵδε βίαιοι καὶ πλεονέκται εἰσί, δεδήλωται· ὡς δὲ οὐκ ἂν δικαίως αὐτοὺς δέχοισθε, μαθεῖν χρή. 2. εἰ γὰρ εἴρηται ἐν ταῖς σπονδαῖς, 'ἐξεῖναι παρ' ὁποτέρους τις τῶν ἀγράφων πόλεων βούλεται ἐλθεῖν,' οὐ τοῖς ἐπὶ βλάβῃ ἑτέρων ἰοῦσιν ἡ ξυνθήκη ἐστὶν, ἀλλ' ὅστις μὴ ἄλλου αὐτὸν ἀποστερῶν, ἀσφαλείας δεῖται, καὶ ὅστις though apart from.' There is no occasion to read, with some critics, ἄπο γεν.; the common reading is sufficiently defended by Herodot. ix. 69, τοῖς ἀπογενομένοισι τῆς μάχης.

ἐγκλημάτων δὲ—κοινωνεῖν] This sentence, notwithstanding that it is cancelled by Bekk. and Goell., I have thought proper to retain, within brackets; though, upon reconsidering the whole question as to its authenticity, for this second edition, I am now disposed to more than question the authenticity of the passage, and have little doubt that it came from the margin, where we may, with Dr. Arnold, suppose that 'it had been put down as an extract from some other writer, containing a sentiment coincident with that in the text.' The portion may, however, be proved to be as ancient as the second century, judging from the following passage, evidently imitated from the present, in Dio Cass. xli. 30, p. 282, 35, where Cæsar says to his soldiers, in allusion to certain among them, πᾶς γάρ τις,—ἐς πάντας ἡμᾶς καὶ τὰ τοῖς ὀλίγοις πλημμελούμενα ἀναφέρει· καὶ οὕτω τῶν πλεονεξιῶν οὐ συμμετέχοντες αὐτοῖς, τῶν ἐγκλημάτων τὸ ἴσον φερόμεθα.

CH. XL. It is now urged, that the aid in question would involve a breach of the treaty subsisting with the Peloponnesians.

1. ἐγκλημ.] I have followed all the recent editors in adopting this reading for τῶν τοῦ δικαίου κεφαλαίων ἐς ὑμᾶς, which, however, cannot have originated, as Goell. supposes, in a wish to remove tautology. Neither is it, I conceive, so much a gloss, as an attempt to supply an expression more suitable to προσηκόντων, which term is used with a license truly Thucydidean, while the phraseology of the common reading is neither Thucydidean, nor suitable to the context.

ἐρχόμεθα] 'are come,' 'have come.' Pres. for preterite, as often in ἥκω. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 504, 2. Of the terms following, βίαιοι and πλεονέκται, the former signifies violent and overbearing; the latter, rapacious. So infra i. 95, 1, we have Pausanias characterised as βίαιος, and iii. 36, 6, Cleon is spoken of as βιαιότατος τῶν πολιτῶν. The two terms are similarly united in Xen. Mem. i. 2, 12, where we have, πλεονέκτης καὶ βιαιότατος ἐγένετο. See also Pollux, viii. 7.

2. εἰ γὰρ εἴρηται] 'though it was expressed.' The use of the present tense at βούλεται is properly suitable only to the words of the treaty; but by the use of the infinitive ἐξεῖναι the direct and indirect modes of speaking are here, as often, confounded. The construction is: ἐξεῖναί [τινι] τῶν ἀγράφων πόλεων ἐλθεῖν παρ' ὁποτέρους τις βούλεται.

By τῶν ἀγράφ. πόλ. are meant those cities which had not subscribed their names to either of the two confederations. Greece was then divided into ἔνσπονδος and ἄσπονδος, or ἄγραφος, neutral.

In μὴ ἄλλου αὐτὸν ἀποστερῶν we have a peculiar mode of expression, instead of which we should rather have expected ἄλλον αὐτοῦ, 'depriving another of himself,' (i. e. his support or alliance.) Bauer, Pop., and Goell. explain it, 'withdrawing himself from another,' i. e. from his allegiance or authority. But it may be best to regard this phrase as a blending of two modes of expression, ἄλλον ἑαυτοῦ ἀποστερῶν and ἄλλου ἑαυτὸν ἀφιστῶν: as in Antiph. de cæde Herodot. p. 74, 4, οὐκ ἀποστερῶν γε τῶν εἰς τὴν πόλιν ἑαυτὸν οὐδενός. Of ἀσφαλείας δεῖται the sense is: 'is in need of security by the aid of others.' The force of the parenthetical clause εἰ σωφρονοῦσι (which is of frequent occurrence elsewhere, but is here introduced somewhat abruptly) can only be perceived by repeating with it part of the conditional sentence preceding, but changed into a declarative one, i. e. 'And war it will not be allowed to bring, if they be wise.' Adopting this view, (first propounded by myself in the note appended to Transl.) Dr. Arnold well observes, that 'the words εἰ σωφρονοῦσι have in reality nothing to do with the sentence as it is actually expressed, but rather with another μὴ τοῖς δεξαμένοις (εἰ σωφρονοῦσι) πόλεμον ἀντὶ εἰρήνης ποιήσει· ὃ νῦν ὑμεῖς μὴ πειθόμενοι ἡμῖν πάθοιτε ἄν. 3. οὐ γὰρ τοῖσδε μόνον ἐπίκουροι ἂν γένοισθε, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡμῖν ἀντὶ ἐνσπόνδων πολέμιοι· ἀνάγκη γὰρ, εἰ ἴτε μετ' αὐτῶν, καὶ ἀμύνεσθαι μὴ ἄνευ ὑμῶν τούτους. 4. καίτοι δίκαιοί γ' ἐστὲ, μάλιστα μὲν ἐκποδὼν στῆναι ἀμφοτέροις· εἰ δὲ μή, τοὐναντίον, ἐπὶ τούτους μεθ' ἡμῶν ἰέναι, (Κορινθίοις μέν γε ἔνσπονδοί ἐστε, Κερκυραίοις δὲ οὐδὲ δι' ἀνακωχῆς πώποτ' ἐγένεσθε,) καὶ τὸν νόμον μὴ καθιστάναι, ὥστε τοὺς ἑτέρων ἀφισταμένους δέχεσθαι. 5. οὐδὲ γὰρ ἡμεῖς, Σαμίων ἀποστάντων, ψῆφον προσεθέμεθα ἐναντίαν ὑμῖν, τῶν ἄλλων Πελοποννησίων δίχα ἐψηφισμένων, εἰ χρὴ αὐτοῖς ἀμύνειν, φανερῶς δὲ ἀντείπομεν τοὺς προσήκοντας ξυμμάχους αὐτόν τινα κολάζειν. 6. εἰ γὰρ τοὺς κακόν τι δρῶντας δεχόμενοι τιμωρήσετε, φανεῖται καὶ ἃ τῶν ὑμετέρων οὐκ ἐλάσσω ἡμῖν πρόσεισι, καὶ τὸν νόμον ἐφ' ὑμῖν αὐτοῖς μᾶλλον ἢ ἐφ' ἡμῖν θήσετε. XLI. Δικαιώματα μὲν οὖν τάδε πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἔχομεν, ἱκανὰ sentence which it suggested as it were parenthetically to the writer's mind, but which he did not set down in words.'

ὃ νῦν ὑμεῖς—πάθοιτε ἄν] 'which would now be your lot,' 'you would be placed in this predicament.' So infra iv. 96, we have, τὸ αὐτὸ ἔπαθε. See also vi. 78.

3. εἰ ἴτε μετ' αὐτῶν] 'if ye associate yourselves with them;' as in Isocr. Plat. § 8, and Aristid. ii. 194, 1. At ἀμύνεσθαι μὴ ἄνευ ὑμῶν τούτους we have an elegant Atticism, by which the abruptness of direct assertion is avoided. Otherwise it would have been, ἀμύνεσθαι τούτους μεθ' ὑμῶν, which is found in Dio Cass. 622, 30, Τί λοιπὸν ἄλλο, πλὴν ἀμύνασθαι καὶ τοῦτον μετὰ τῆς Κλεοπάτρας ἡμῖν προσήκει;

4. δίκαιοί γ' ἐστὲ, &c.] for δίκαιόν ἐστιν, ὑμᾶς, &c. By the same idiom (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 297) we have in Herodot. i. 32, δίκαιός ἐστι φέρεσθαι, and in Dionys. Hal. Ant. vii. 32, μάλιστα μὲν οὖν δίκαιοί ἐστε ὑφεῖναι τῆς ὀργῆς,—εἰ δὲ μή, &c. Of the phrase ἐκποδὼν στῆναι, the literal sense is, to 'stand out of the footsteps, or way, of any one,' equiv. to the phrase elsewhere, μηδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων εἶναι. Here, for ἀμφοτέροις, might be conjectured ἀμφοτέρων: but the former is sufficiently defended by imitations of our author in this passage, found in Aristid. t. ii. 156, 201, 319, and 435. Procop. p. 121, 242, 248, 307. Appian, i. 531, 2. Thence may be emended a corrupt passage of Dionys. Hal. 327, 22, Τύρρηνοι δὲ ἀμφοτέροις ἐμποδὼν ἐγίγνοντο, where it is strange the editors should not have seen that ἐκποδὼν, and not ἐμποδὼν, is the true reading. Finally, in the present passage it is observable that our author appears to have had before him the very similar one of Herodot. viii. 22, ἀλλὰ μάλιστα μὲν πρὸς ἡμέων γίνεσθε· εἰ δὲ ὑμῖν ἐστι τοῦτο μὴ δυνατὸν ποιῆσαι, ὑμέες δὲ ἔτι καὶ νῦν ἐκ τοῦ μέσου ἡμῖν ἔζεσθε.

ἀνακωχῆς ἐγένεσθε] The term ἀνακωχὴ signifies properly 'a holding back of the hands from striking' (as infra i. 66), and metaph. 'a suspension of hostility,' and sometimes, as here, a truce. In δι' ἀνακωχῆς γίνεσθαι, to be at truce, we have one of those phrases formed by διὰ and a subst. such as δι' ὄχλου εἶναι, i. 73, διὰ μαχῆς ἐλθεῖν τινι, ii. 11. and others treated of in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 580.

5. δίχα ἐψηφισμένων] 'being divided in their votes,' (namely, as to the question of giving or refusing assistance;) for ψηφίζεσθαι is not a middle verb, but a deponent.

ἀντείπομεν] Of this form of expression, —pregnant in meaning,—the full import is, 'We said no—maintaining that, &c.'

6. φανεῖται—πρόσεισι] lit. 'it will be seen that those who shall come over to us, will not be fewer than yours,' i. e. those who go over to you. In other words, 'there will be found an equal number of your allies, who will come over to us.' The neuter for masc.; which Goell. compares with τὸ Ἑλληνικὸν for οἱ Ἕλληνες.

CH. XLI. 1. Δικαιώματα — νόμους] Render: 'These, then, are the grounds of right (valid according to the institutions of Greece) which we have to allege in respect of you.' This sense of δικαίωμα is required κατὰ τοὺς Ἑλλήνων νόμους· παραίνεσιν δὲ καὶ ἀξίωσιν χάριτος τοιάνδε ἣν οὐκ ἐχθροὶ ὄντες, ὥστε βλάπτειν, οὐδ' αὖ φίλοι, ὥστ' ἐπιχρῆσθαι, ἀντιδοθῆναι ἡμῖν ἐν τῷ παρόντι φαμὲν χρῆναι. 2. νεῶν γὰρ μακρῶν σπανίσαντές ποτε πρὸς τὸν Αἰγινητῶν ὑπὲρ τὰ Μηδικὰ πόλεμον, παρὰ Κορινθίων εἴκοσι ναῦς ἐλάβετε· καὶ ἡ εὐεργεσία αὕτη τε καὶ ἡ ἐς Σαμίους, τὸ δι' ἡμᾶς Πελοποννησίους αὐτοῖς μὴ βοηθῆσαι, παρέσχεν ὑμῖν Αἰγινητῶν μὲν ἐπικράτησιν, Σαμίων δὲ κόλασιν. 3. καὶ ἐν καιροῖς τοιούτοις ἐγένετο οἷς μάλιστα ἄνθρωποι, ἐπ' ἐχθροὺς τοὺς σφετέρους ἰόντες, τῶν πάντων ἀπερίοπτοί εἰσι παρὰ τὸ νικᾶν· φίλον τε γὰρ ἡγοῦνται τὸν ὑπουργοῦντα, ἢν καὶ πρότερον ἐχθρὸς ᾖ, πολέμιόν τε τὸν ἀντιστάντα, ἢν καὶ τύχῃ φίλος ὤν· ἐπεὶ καὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα χεῖρον τίθενται φιλονεικίας ἕνεκα τῆς αὐτίκα.

by the context, as demanded by the antithesis; and is supported by close imitations of the passage, which occur in Procop. p. 306, 42.

Of ἀξίωσιν χάριτος the sense is, 'a request of favour.'

In ἐπιχρῆσθαι the ἐπὶ is not without its force, being intensive, and signifying, 'to much use,' 'to have much mutual intercourse with,' i. e. 'interchange of kindnesses with.' In Herodot. iii. 99, the term bears the sense of ὁμιλεῖν, 'to have intercourse with.'

2. παρέσχεν ἐπικράτησιν] 'gave to you the mastery over.' Ἐπικράτησις is a rare word, which I have met with only elsewhere in Dio Cass. 341, 41. 506, 1. Procop. 162, 22. 166, 38. 237, 31.

3. καὶ ἐν καιροῖς—νικᾶν] This passage has been much imitated by the later Greek writers. This use of παρὰ, præ or propter, 'for the sake of,' is remarkable. I have, however, noted it in a passage, closely imitated from the present, in Procop. p. 306, 42, δικαιώματα μενοῦν πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐς τὴν ξυμμαχίαν ἐπάγωγα ταῦτά ἐστιν ἡμῖν, and Joseph. Ant. xvii. 9, 5, Καίσαρι εἰσπέμψας γράμματα, ἐν οἷς τὰ δικαιώματα προσετίθει, (read προετ.) Dionys. Hal. i. 303, 15, πρόνοιαν οὐδεμίαν τῆς ἑαυτοῦ ψυχῆς παρὰ τὸ νικᾶν ποιούμενος. Procop. 39, 21, μέλει τε αὐτοῖς οὔτε θείων οὔτε ἀνθρωπείων πραγμάτων παρὰ τὸ ἐν τούτοις νικᾶν. See also Xen. Mem. ii. 1, 2, and Hippag. i. 5. Polyb. iii. 103, 2. Ἀπερίοπτος is a word confined to Thucyd. and his imitators, as Joseph. Ant. xix. 1, 11, πάντων ἀπ. Procop. de Ædif. ch. xi. Malchus Rhetor. ap. Corp. H. Byz. i. p. 81, ὑπὸ τῆς ἐκπλήξεως ἀπερίοπτοι πάντων εἰς τὸν τότε καιρὸν ὠφελῆσαι δυνάμεων· where read δυναμένων.

τὸν ὑπουργοῦντα] 'he who has subserved, and been useful to any one's purposes.' On ἢν καὶ πρότερον ἐχθρὸς ᾖ Poppo thinks that unless ᾖ be supposed to be put for γένηται, fuerit, we must read εἰ—ἦν. Yet this does not necessarily follow; for as to the question whether πρότερον can be united to ᾖ (since the idea of former belongs to the past, but that of what should be, to the future) it is well observed by Goell. 'πρότερον, opinor, ita tantum præsens junctum habet, si et quod antea consuetum fuerit, et etiamnum fiat, indicatur; neque secus apud Homerum fit, ut παρὸς et πρότερον possis convertere, von jeher, id quod hoc loco fieri nihil vetat, wenn er auch von jeher ein feind ist.' See Thiersch, Gr. Gr. § 261, 1.

ἐπεὶ καὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα—αὐτίκα] This expression, ἐπεὶ καὶ, stands for καὶ γὰρ καὶ, nam adeo, as serving to draw a consequence. For here is adduced a further proof how entirely the passion for conquest, which occasions men to be regardless of every thing but victory, and the making all things subservient thereto, absorbs their whole attention; insomuch that they very indifferently take care of (are very indifferent care-takers of) their own private interests (or matters of the nearest and dearest import), from their present eagerness and obstinacy of contention. As tending to confirm and illustrate the sense above assigned to τὰ οἰκεῖα, we may notice an evident imitation of this elegance of expression as found in Sallust, Jug. 73, (cited by Pop.) Plebes sic accensa, ut—sua necessaria post illius honorem ducerent.

Of this expression, ἡ φιλονεικία αὐτίκα, another example occurs infra vii. 41. πρὸς τὴν αὐτίκα φιλονεικίαν. Here, then, the argument intimated is, that 'this φιλονεικία injures themselves as much as others.' And hence, in a passage of Herodot. iii. 53,

XLII. Ὧν ἐνθυμηθέντες, καὶ νεώτερός τις παρὰ πρεσβυτέρου αὐτὰ μαθὼν, ἀξιούτω τοῖς ὁμοίοις ἡμᾶς ἀμύνεσθαι· καὶ μὴ νομίσῃ δίκαια μὲν τάδε λέγεσθαι, ξύμφορα δὲ, εἰ πολεμήσει, ἄλλα εἶναι. 2. τό τε γὰρ ξυμφέρον, ἐν ᾧ ἄν τις ἐλάχιστα ἁμαρτάνῃ, μάλιστα ἕπεται· καὶ τὸ μέλλον τοῦ πολέμου,—ᾧ φοβοῦντες ὑμᾶς Κερκυραῖοι κελεύουσιν ἀδικεῖν,—ἐν ἀφανεῖ ἔτι κεῖται· καὶ οὐκ ἄξιον, ἐπαρθέντας αὐτῷ, παῦσαι σεαυτὸν ζημιῶν· φιλοτιμίη κτῆμα σκαιόν. I suspect that, for φιλοτιμίη, ought to be read φιλονεικίη, since while the context absolutely requires the sense obstinacy, such cannot be denoted by φιλοτιμίη (whatever affinity there may exist between the vices of ambition and obstinacy) without supposing a most extraordinary laxity of expression.

Of the present passage an evident imitation exists in Liban. Orat. p. 497, τὰς θυσίας, τὰ μυστήρια, ὧν δεῖ πλείονα ποιεῖσθαι λόγον τούς γε εὐσεβοῦντας τῆς εἰς τὸ παρὸν φιλονεικίας.

CH. XLII. 1. Ὧν ἐνθυμηθέντες] See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 349. Of the words following, ἀξιούτω τοῖς ὁμοίοις ἡμᾶς ἀμύνεσθαι, the sense is, 'let him think it right to requite us with the like.' How ἀμύνεσθαι came to have the sense of ἀμείβεσθαι, will sufficiently appear from what is said in my Lex. N. Test. in voc. In the middle voice the term signifies 'to ward-off from oneself;' and, with an accus. of person or thing, 'to ward-off any one,' i. e. his blows, or to ward-off any blow aimed at one. And as the best way to ward-off such attacks is by returning them, and avenging the injury, so ἀμύνεσθαι came to have the sense 'to avenge an injury received.' So, in Hdian. iii. 6, 9, we have, ἀμ. τὰ προαδικούμενον. And in Xen. An. iii. 3, 23, as used of persons, ἀμύνεσθαί τινα ἀδικοῦντα, 'to wreak vengeance on an injurer.' Now as the avengement is properly no more than a returning of the injury previously suffered, so ἀμύνεσθαι came to be, like our word requite, applied to what the term denotes here and supra iv. 63, 'a return' for good as well as evil. And no wonder; for all words denoting return of any kind cannot but admit of a middle signification, to denote both good and evil. So in Phal. Ep. 45, we have, πολλάκις ὑπ' ἐμοῦ εὖ παθὼν, ἡμᾶς ἀμύνῃ.

δίκαια μὲν τάδε λέγεσθαι] 'hæc justa dici,' for, hæc quæ dicantur justa quidem esse. Πολεμήσει, just after, is for πολεμήσετε, like ἀξιούτω and νομίσῃ a little before; agreeably (as Gottl. observes) to our author's custom of ascribing to one what properly belongs to all, and that because the attention is thus more called forth and fixed. And no wonder, since each individual, (for such is the import of the τις, which stands for πᾶς τις. See Blomf. on Æschyl. Choëph. 53,) whether he be νεώτερος or πρεσβύτερος, has his attention roused by fancying HIMSELF individually addressed. Hence we may here recognise a sort of τέχνη oratorica, which has, if I mistake not, been treated on by Aristotle, Longinus, Cicero de Oratore, and Quintilian Inst. Orat.

2. τὸ ξυμφέρον] lit. 'what is profitable,' 'advantage.' Μάλιστα ἕπεται, 'especially follows [as a consequence].' Before ἐν ᾧ supply πράγματι, the sense being, 'follows as a result on that conduct wherein there is the least of aberration [from rectitude].' So expressing (as Pop. observes) the noble sentiment 'nihil esse utile, quod non sit justum atque honestum,' fully treated on by Plato in his first Alcibiades and elsewhere. Another example of this sense of ἕπομαι occurs in Joseph. Bell. iii. 5, 1, ἕπεται δὲ τὸ κρατεῖν (victory) ἀεὶ κατὰ τῶν οὐχ ὁμοίων βέβαιον, 'is ever sure to follow as a result [when the contest is] against those not on a footing of equality with them,' not ἐξ ἴσου. So in Aristoph. Rhet. ii. we have, ὁμοίους δὲ λέγω—ὅλως τοὺς ἐξ ἴσου. By τὸ μέλλον τοῦ πολέμου is meant 'the eventual occurrence of this war,' or the future contingency thereof, i. e. whether there will be a war or not. Of κελεύουσιν the sense is, 'they counsel you.' Ἐν ἀφανεῖ κεῖται, 'lies hid in the womb of uncertainty.' So in Dion. Hal. i. 440, 11, Sylb. ἐν ἀδήλῳ ἔτι οὔσα. Here a marked antithesis is observable between ἀφανεῖ (which alludes to the latent enmity between the two nations) and φανερὰν, with which I would compare a similar elegance in Eurip. Hipp. 1284, ψευδέσι μύθοις ἀλόχου πεισθεὶς Ἀφανῆ, (i. e. ἀφανῶς καὶ ἀνεξελέγκτως) φανερὰν δ' ἔσχεθες ἄτην. In οὐκ ἄξιον scil. ἐστι, non decet, non oportet, we have a phrase frequent in Plato and Xenophon, usually followed by dat. and infin.; though sometimes, as here, by an accus. and infin. Thus in Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 19, we have, φανερὰν ἔχθραν ἤδη καὶ οὐ μέλλουσαν πρὸς Κορινθίους κτήσασθαι, τῆς δὲ ὑπαρχούσης πρότερον διὰ Μεγαρέας ὑποψίας σῶφρον ὑφελεῖν μᾶλλον. 3. ἡ γὰρ τελευταία χάρις, καιρὸν ἔχουσα, κἂν ἐλάσσων ᾖ, δύναται μεῖζον ἔγκλημα λῦσαι. 4. μηδ' ὅτι ναυτικοῦ ξυμμαχίαν μεγάλην διδόασι, τούτῳ ἐφέλκεσθε· τὸ γὰρ μὴ ἀδικεῖν τοὺς ὁμοίους ἐχυρωτέρα δύναμις, ἢ τῷ αὐτίκα φανερῷ ἐπαρθέντας διὰ κινδύνων τὸ πλέον ἔχειν. XLIII. Ἡμεῖς δὲ, περιπεπτωκότες οἷς ἐν τῇ Λακεδαίμονι αὐτοὶ προείπομεν, τοὺς σφετέρους ξυμμάχους αὐτόν τινα κολάζειν, νῦν παρ' ὑμῶν τὸ αὐτὸ ἀξιοῦμεν κομίζεσθαι, καὶ μὴ τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ ψήφῳ ὠφεληθέντας τῇ ὑμετέρᾳ ἡμᾶς βλάψαι. 2. τὸ δ' ἴσον ἀνταπόδοτε, γνόντες τοῦτον ἐκεῖνον εἶναι τὸν καιρὸν, ἐν ᾧ ὅ τε ὑπουργῶν φίλος μάλιστα, καὶ ὁ ἀντιστὰς ἐχθρός. 3. καὶ Κερκυραίους τούσδε μήτε ξυμμάχους δέχεσθε βίᾳ ἡμῶν μήτε ἀμύνετε αὐτοῖς ἀδικοῦσι. 4. καὶ τάδε ποιοῦντες τά τε προσήκοντά τε δράσετε καὶ τὰ ἄριστα βουλεύσεσθε ὑμῖν αὐτοῖς. Τοιαῦτα δὲ καὶ οἱ Κορίνθιοι εἶπον.

XLIV. Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ ἀκούσαντες ἀμφοτέρων, γενομένης καὶ δὶς ἐκκλησίας, τῇ μὲν προτέρᾳ οὐχ ἧσσον τῶν Κορινθίων ἀπεδέξαντο τοὺς λόγους, ἐν δὲ τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ μετέγνωσαν Κερκυραίοις ξυμμαχίαν οἰκίας σε τυχεῖν ἄξιον: and in Mem. ii. 3, 6, διὰ τοῦτο ἄξιον ἐμὲ μισεῖν αὐτόν. So the Latin non par est, for non consentaneum est.

οὐ μέλλουσαν] 'not future,' i.e. present. Corresponding to these words are those of the Corcyræan speaker supra ch. 36, τὸν μέλλοντα καὶ ὅσον οὐ παρόντα πόλεμον. So Herodian, i. 6, 8, κίνδυνον οὐ μέλλοντα ἀλλὰ παρόντα ἤδη φοβηθείς.

3. The term λῦσαι has here the sense diluere, as in Aristoph. Ran. 691, τὸ παράνομον λῦσαι. Pausan. v. 16, 4, ἐγκλήματα καταλύεσθαι. This pithy saying here has been borrowed by Agath. p. 73, 4, ἐλπίζοντες τῇ τελευταίᾳ πράξει ἐν καιρῷ γιγνομένη τὸ ἔγκλημα διαλῦσαι, and Aristid. t. ii. 137, A. ὥστε Θηβαίους μὲν, εἰ καὶ πλέον εἶχον τῶν ἀδικημάτων, λελυκέναι πάντα ταῖς τελευταίαις εὐεργεσίαις, and 147, C. By the words καιρὸν ἔχουσα it is intimated that the timing well of an obligation is that which renders it peculiarly acceptable.

4. τὸ γὰρ μὴ ἀδικεῖν—ἔχειν] Meaning, 'for not to wrong our equals (lit. those in a like condition) is a surer means of power, than, allured by a momentary glimpse [of interest], to seek aggrandizement amidst perils.' Δύναμις here stands, by meton., for the means of attaining power. By τῷ αὐτίκα φανερῷ is meant 'the advantage immediately presenting itself' of the Corcyræan alliance. At ἐπαρθέντας supply τινας. Πλέον ἔχειν, for πλεονεκτεῖν, as infra iv. 62, 4, and Dionys. Hal. T. i. 73, (Sylb.) ἑκατέρου τὸ πλέον ἔχειν ἀφανῶς διωκομένου.

Ch. XLIII. Such a step, the speaker now proceeds to show, would be alike ungrateful and impolitic.

1. ἡμεῖς δὲ, περιπεπτωκότες οἷς, &c.] Meaning, 'now we, having ourselves fallen into the circumstances, concerning which we openly said at Lacedæmon, that each one should,' &c. Οἷς, for πράγμασι καθ' ἃ, i. e. as Arnold paraphrases, 'having ourselves become fit subjects for the application of the principle in question.' So we have περιπίπτειν εἰς said of a state or condition in Jos. Bell. iii. 9, 8. Diog. Laërt. iv. 5. Pol. i. 76, 8. Of ξυμμάχους κολάζειν the full sense is, 'punish them for defection.'

3. βίᾳ ἡμῶν] 'nobis invitis,' 'against our wishes,' as infra i. 68. A use of βίᾳ not unfrequent in the Attic writers both of prose and poetry.

4. τοιαῦτα δὲ] The δὲ has reference to the μὲν at the close of the oration of the Corcyræans.

Ch. XLIV. 1. καὶ δὶς] 'even twice.' For it was rare for more than one assembly to be held upon any question. Προτέρᾳ is for the later Attic πρωτεραίᾳ. Οὐχ ἧσσον, for μᾶλλον. Μετέγνωσαν, μὲν μὴ ποιήσασθαι ὥστε τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἐχθροὺς καὶ φίλους νομίζειν, (εἰ γὰρ ἐπὶ Κόρινθον ἐκέλευον σφίσιν οἱ Κερκυραῖοι ξυμπλεῖν, ἐλύοντ' ἂν αὐτοῖς αἱ πρὸς Πελοποννησίους σπονδαί,) ἐπιμαχίαν δὲ ἐποιήσαντο, τῇ ἀλλήλων βοηθεῖν, ἐάν τις ἐπὶ Κέρκυραν ἴῃ, ἢ Ἀθήνας, ἢ τοὺς τούτων ξυμμάχους. 2. ἐδόκει γὰρ ὁ πρὸς Πελοποννησίους πόλεμος καὶ ὡς ἔσεσθαι αὐτοῖς, καὶ τὴν Κέρκυραν ἐβούλοντο μὴ προέσθαι Κορινθίοις, ναυτικὸν ἔχουσαν τοσοῦτον, ξυγκρούειν δὲ ὅτι μάλιστα αὐτοὺς ἀλλήλοις, ἵνα ἀσθενεστέροις οὖσιν, ἤν τι δέῃ, Κορινθίοις τε καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ναυτικὸν ἔχουσιν ἐς πόλεμον καθιστῶνται. 3. ἅμα δὲ τῆς τε Ἰταλίας καὶ Σικελίας καλῶς ἐφαίνετο αὐτοῖς ἡ νῆσος ἐν παράπλῳ κεῖσθαι.

XLV. Τοιαύτῃ μὲν γνώμῃ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τοὺς Κερκυραίους προσεδέξαντο, καὶ τῶν Κορινθίων ἀπελθόντων, οὐ πολὺ ὕστερον δέκα ναῦς αὐτοῖς ἀπέστειλαν βοηθούς. 2. ἐστρατήγει δὲ αὐτῶν Λακεδαιμόνιός τε ὁ Κίμωνος καὶ Διότιμος ὁ Στρομβίχου καὶ Πρωτέας ὁ Ἐπικλέους. προεῖπον δὲ αὐτοῖς μὴ ναυμαχεῖν Κορινθίοις, ἢν μὴ ἐπὶ Κέρκυραν πλέωσι, καὶ μέλλωσιν ἀποβαίνειν ἢ ἐς τῶν ἐκείνων τι χωρίων· for μετέγ. καὶ ἔγνωσαν, 'changed their decision, and determined.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 634, 3. As to the distinction between these two terms, ξυμμαχία and ἐπιμαχία, it has been clearly shown by Bauer, that 'properly the former denoted defensive, and the latter, offensive, alliance; but that, in use, ξυμμαχία came to denote the genus, comprehending treaties of every kind, both defensive and offensive; and ἐπιμαχία, the species, or form, q. d. ἐπιβοήθεια, implying an obligation to render succour against an invading enemy, yet not so as to make them at war with the invaders.' The above distinction is certain from v. 27 and 48. In ἐπιμαχία we have a very rare word, which, doubtless, ought to be restored in a passage of Xen. Cyr. iii. 2, 23, καὶ συμμαχίαν δὲ κοινὴν, εἴτις ἀδικοίη ὁποτέρους οὖν. In the words ὥστε τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἐχθροὺς καὶ φίλους νομίζειν, 'on the condition of;' and we have a not unusual mode of expression, occurring also infra iii. 70 & 75, but chiefly found in the singular number. So in Pollux, i. 169, we have: ἐὰν δὲ ἔνσπονδοι γένωνται—ἐπὶ ξυμμαχίᾳ ἐρεῖς, ἐπὶ τῇ ἴσῃ καὶ ὁμοίᾳ, ἐπὶ τῷ τὸν αὐτὸν ἐχθρὸν καὶ φίλον ἔχειν. The word σφίσιν, a little after, is best joined with ξυμπλεῖν, and referred to the Corcyræans.

2. καὶ ὡς] for οὕτως, even thus, namely, even if they did not violate the treaty by receiving the Corcyræans. Of ἐβούλοντο the sense is, as appears by τοιαύτῃ γνώμῃ in the beginning of the next chapter, 'it was their intention,' policy. And by ξυγκρούειν αὐτοὺς ἀλλήλοις is meant, 'to wear them out one against the other.' Ξυγκρούειν, like collidere, signifies 'to dash things one against the other,' and thus to shatter and wear them out. It occurs not unfrequently in Thucyd., and sometimes in other authors. To the examples from Demosth. de Cor. § 163, and Aristid. adduced in Steph. Thes., I add Dio Cass. 479, 73. 452, 30. ξυγκρούειν δὲ αὐτοὺς ἀλλήλοις ἤλπισαν. Agathias, 152, ξυγκρούειν ἐν σφίσι τοὺς πολεμίους. Procop. 9, οὓς δὴ εἰς ἀλλήλους ξυγκρούειν. Joseph. 1170, 40, συγκρούειν τοὺς ἐν τέλει, and 1179, 30, δήμους δήμοις καὶ πόλεις πόλεσι συγκρούειν. Liban. Orat. 888. Theophr. Char. Eth. § 12, fin. παρὼν διαίτῃ συγκρούειν, ἀμφοτέρων βουλομένων διαλῦσθαι. Polyæn. v. 47, τοὺς πένητας καὶ πεζοὺς τοῖς ἐμπόροις (read εὐπόροις) καὶ ἱππεῦσι συνέκρουεν. Lucian, t. ii. 530. Ælian, V. Hist. xii. 43. And so collidere in Latin; e. g. Petronius: Collidunt nos quotidie mille discordiæ causæ.

For τοῖς ἄλλοις ναυτικὸν ἔχουσιν Bek. and Pop. would read τοῖς ἄλλοις τοῖς ν. ἔ. and indeed the article can scarcely be dispensed with at ἔχουσιν. But a milder emendation would be effected by the transposition of τοῖς ἄλλοις to ἄλλοις τοῖς.

3. τῆς Ἰταλίας—ἐν παράπλῳ κεῖσθαι] See note supra chap. xxxvi.

Ch. XLV. 2. ἐς τῶν ἐκείνων τι χωρίων] Construe ἔς τι τῶν χωρίων ἐκείνων, 'to any of their places,' 'any of the places belong-οὕτω δὲ κωλύειν κατὰ δύναμιν. 3. προεῖπον δὲ ταῦτα τοῦ μὴ λύειν ἕνεκα τὰς σπονδάς. αἱ μὲν δὴ νῆες ἀφικνοῦνται ἐς τὴν Κέρκυραν. XLVI. Οἱ δὲ Κορίνθιοι, ἐπειδὴ αὐτοῖς παρεσκεύαστο, ἔπλεον ἐπὶ τὴν Κέρκυραν ναυσὶ πεντήκοντα καὶ ἑκατόν. ἦσαν δὲ Ἠλείων μὲν δέκα, Μεγαρέων δὲ δώδεκα, καὶ Λευκαδίων δέκα, Ἀμπρακιωτῶν δὲ ἑπτὰ καὶ εἴκοσι, καὶ Ἀνακτορίων μία, αὐτῶν δὲ Κορινθίων ἐνενήκοντα. 2. στρατηγοὶ δὲ τούτων ἦσαν μὲν καὶ κατὰ πόλεις ἑκάστων, Κορινθίων δὲ Ξενοκλείδης ὁ Εὐθυκλέους πέμπτος αὐτός. 3. ἐπειδὴ δὲ προσέμιξαν τῇ κατὰ Κέρκυραν ἠπείρῳ, ἀπὸ Λευκάδος πλέοντες, ὁρμίζονται ἐς Χειμέριον τῆς Θεσπρωτίδος γῆς. 4. ἔστι δὲ λιμὴν, καὶ πόλις ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ κεῖται, ἀπὸ θαλάσσης, ἐν τῇ Ἐλαιάτιδι τῆς Θεσπρωτίδος, Ἐφύρη. 5. ἔξεισι δὲ παρ' αὐτὴν Ἀχερουσία

ing to them.' Here we have an instance of that separation of the article from its noun by the governing word, or by another, found chiefly in Ionic writers, as Herodot., but also occasionally in the Attic ones, as infra i. 106, ἐς του χωρίον ἰδιώτου. Compare v. 82. See more in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 278, 4. In τοῦ μὴ λύειν ἕνεκα we have a plena locutio; the word ἕνεκα in such a case being generally omitted. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 278.

Cн. XLVI. 1. ἐπειδὴ αὐτοῖς παρεσκεύαστο] The Schol. and Port. supply τὰ τῆς μάχης. Matth. Gr. Gr. § 296, τὸ ναυτικόν. It is better to consider παρεσκεύαστο as used impersonally, (so in Plat. Menex. p. 248, τούτῳ ἄριστα παρεσκεύασται ζῆν.) in the sense 'preparation was made.' Thus it will fall under Matthiæ's rule, § 296, fin. 'The verb, which should be referred to a subject, is changed into a passive, and is put impersonally, with the dative of the subject.'

ἐνενήκοντα] So all the recent editors read for ἐννενήκοντα here and elsewhere, as also in other derivatives of ἐννέα : and with reason, for such the authority of MSS. requires.

2. ἦσαν κατὰ πόλεις ἑκάστων] 'were of each (state) severally (one).' Κατὰ is often used in distributions. Πέμπτος αὐτὸς, i. e. 'with four others, himself being chief,' at the head of a board of five. This falls under the rule laid down by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 469, 9, that αὐτὸς is used after ordinals, to show that one person with several others, whose number is less by one than the number mentioned, has done something. As an example of which, he adduces a passage of Xen. Hist. ii. 2, 17, ᾑρέθη—δέκατος αὐτός. Instead of this we have infra i. 57, μετ' ἄλλων δέκα στρατηγοῦντος.

3. προσέμιξαν τῇ ἠπείρῳ] 'had made the coast.' This sense of προσμίγ. (i. e. appellere,) is frequent in Thucyd. and the other historians.

ὁρμίζονται] 'come to anchor.' The active ὁρμίζειν signifies 'to bring a ship to anchor or port:' the pass. or mid. ὁρμίζεσθαι, 'to be brought or come to anchor or port.'

For Ἐφύρη Haack, Poppo, and Goeller edit, what the Attic dialect would require, Ἐφύρα. But as there is no authority of MSS. to be adduced in favour of that reading, it is best to retain, as Bekker has done, Ἐφύρη. The city might be of Ionian colonization, and therefore the name would have the Ionic form η for α.

5. ἔξεισι δὲ παρ' αὐτὴν Ἀχερουσία—Χειμέριον] Of this most perplexing passage I offer the following version, as presenting what I conceive to be the true sense: 'Now there is a port, and above it, removed from the sea, is a city called Ephyra, situated in the Elæatis of Thesprotia, alongside of which the Acherusian lake disembogues itself [into the gulph] ; a lake deriving its name from the river Acheron, which, after running through Thesprotia, has its outlet into it. The river also runs [to sea-ward in a parallel direction], dividing Thesprotia and Cestrine ; between which [rivers] the promontory Chimerium juts out.' That the words must have this sense, and not that commonly assigned to them, ('Now it, i. e. Chimerium, is a port,') is plain, because otherwise the words of Thucydides cannot be made to square with facts as to the situation of places, &c. This the commentators would have been better prepared to see, had they discerned the purpose of the writer in this passage, which was,—as I long ago pointed out,—

'to show the situation of Chimerium;' and this he does,—though somewhat obscurely,—by describing it as placed between two rivers; one fixed, by its being the outlet of the Acherusian lake, and having near it the well-known city of antiquity, Ephyra; the other, by its forming the boundary between Thesprotia and Cestrine. In the above view I am supported by the weighty authority of my very learned friend, Colonel Leake ; who, in a communication containing his opinion at large on the point in question, suggests that 'here our author takes occasion to give his readers [as he has done in not a few other instances, and still more frequently Herodotus,] a little geographical information as to a country at that time little known to the Athenians.' Accordingly, while our author simply makes mention of the Thyamis, the Acheron, and Ephyra, as localities tolerably well known to his readers, he has chosen to fix and define the situation of a place little known to them, like the harbour of Chimerium. Hence I entirely acquiesce in the decided opinion of Colonel Leake, that 'the passage before us, ἔστι δὲ λιμὴν — τὸ Χειμέριον, means nothing more than that Chimerium lay between the Acheron and the Thyamis;' which he has fully proved to be no other than the present Calama. Moreover, the same learned writer has, on my representation, abandoned the opinion he had given in his Travels in Northern Greece, vol. iii. p. 6, that the words of Thucyd. here, ἔστι δὲ λιμὴν, referred to Chimerium. He has now come to the conclusion that 'they relate to Ephyra,' by which, of course, he means the port above which Ephyra was situated: and I believe he regards the Glykys Limen of Strabo as that port. But although Strabo mentions the Glykys Limen, in l. vii. as a river-port formed at the outlet of the Acheron, yet the city Ephyra cannot correctly be said to be situate above that port. That would only be true of the port Elæa, (now S. Giovanni,) three miles to the north of Glykys Limen ; insomuch that Strabo, in the above passage, directly assigns it that site, his words being, ὑπερκεῖται δὲ τούτου τοῦ κόλπου (i. e. the gulph of Elæa, of which Port Elæa was the termination) Κίχυρος, ἡ πρότερον Ἐφύρα, πόλις Θεσπρωτῶν, the exact situation of which was first discovered, and since laid down, by Colonel Leake in his Map, as exactly corresponding to the description of Strabo.

Επειτα ἄκρα Χειμέριον, καὶ Γλυκὺς λιμὴν, εἰς ὃν ἐμβάλλει ὁ Ἀχέρων ποταμὸς, ῥέων ἐκ τῆς Ἀχερουσίας λίμνης, καὶ δεχόμενος πλείους ποταμοὺς, ὥστε καὶ γλυκαίνειν τὸν κόλπον· (ῥεῖ δὲ καὶ Θύαμις πλησίον·) ὑπερκεῖται δὲ τούτου μὲν τοῦ κόλπου Κίχυρος, ἡ πρότερον Ἐφύρα, πόλις Θεσπρωτῶν. This Port Elæa is also mentioned by Scylax, p. 11, as follows: ἐνταῦθά (i. e. ἐν τῇ Θεσπρωτίᾳ) ἐστι λιμὴν ᾧ ὄνομα Ἐλεδ, (where, for ΕΛΕΔ, read, not, what Palmer and others propose, ΕΛΑΙΑ, but rather ΕΛΕΑ, another form for Ἐλαία, similarly as some MSS. in Thucyd. have Ἐλεάτιδι for Ἐλαιάτ.) εἰς τοῦτον τὸν λιμένα—ποταμός. It is plain that Scylax, in writing, had this passage of our author before him ; and, if so, that he must have understood λιμὴν according to the view above proposed ; though by the Port Elæa he must mean the Gulph ; for the Acheron issues into the gulph, not the port. I would also observe, that in the passage of Strabo the words ῥεῖ δὲ καὶ Θύαμις πλησίον are so utterly contrary to the truth of facts, and so wholly without purpose, that they may be suspected to have come from the margin ; where they had, we may suppose, been noted down by some semi-eruditus ac male feriatus homo, who, aware that the passage was written with a view to this of Thucyd., thought he should render service by adducing the remaining words of that writer, ῥεῖ δὲ καὶ Θύαμις, adding de suo the word πλησίον, to make up a sense ; perhaps deriving it from some Scholium on Thucyd., and so making the passage of Strabo almost unintelligible. By the gulph, it is plain that Strabo means the gulph Elæa, including the Port in which it terminated.

It yet remains to touch on a still more intricate point, namely, the precise situation of Chimerium. Now it cannot have been (as Arnold supposes) the Glykys Limen of Strabo, because Thucydides describes it as between the two rivers Acheron and Thyamis ; by which we must necessarily understand some situation which, if not equi-distant from those points, shall not be very near to either. Now Parga, which is usually supposed to correspond to Chimerium, would not ill suit as to distance ; and it has a port near it, as we may be sure the promontory Chimerium must have had ; and indeed such is implied in the very term ὁρμίζονται. Yet the port in question is on the wrong side of the promontory for the purpose which the Corinthian fleet had mainly in view,—the watching the motions of the Corcyræan forces at Leucimne and Sybota. I would therefore accede to the decided opinion of Colonel Leake, that the promontory Chimerium corresponded to Cape Varlam in his map; and that because, as he says, 'this is nearly equi-distant between the Acheron and the Thyamis;' and, what is more, 'is the most remarkable promontory on the coast of Thesprotia;' also, because it has on the north a harbour, which had, as ruins testify, formerly a town, and so was well adapted to the purposes of the Corinthian fleet in the transactions related by Thucyd.; being immediately opposite to the southern extremity of Corcyra, and in view of Sybota.

Haack and Goeller edited, from seven MSS. and the early editions, ἐξίησι; while Poppo and Bekk. retain the common reading ἔξεισι, though Poppo acknowledges the correctness of ἐξίησι. This reading I have adopted, not only as being elsewhere found in a kindred passage of Thucyd., but also because it occurs in Scylax, p. 11, who had probably the present passage in view.

6. τῆς ἠπείρου ἐνταῦθα] Adverbs of place, as που, ὅπου, ἐνταῦθα, &c., take a genit., by a construction which is a branch of the partitive. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 357.

Ch. XLVII. 1. Σύβοτα] lit. swine pastures, as being then, or having been formerly, so used. Indeed the Schol. says that in his time they fed many swine. One might compare names of not a few places in our own country commencing with Swine.

2. καὶ Ζακυνθίων—βεβοηθηκότες] Here we must suppose, with the Schol. and Pop., that the Corcyræans had formed an alliance with the Zacynthians about the same time that they sent their embassy to Athens; for, up to that period, they are described as having been in alliance with no Greek state. So it is said supra ch. xxxi. ἦσαν γὰρ οὐδενὸς Ἑλλήνων ἔνσπονδοι.

3. ἦσαν δὲ καὶ τοῖς Κορινθίοις—παραβεβοηθηκότες] The construction is: πολλοὶ δὲ καὶ τῶν βαρβάρων ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ παραβεβοηθηκότες ἦσαν τοῖς Κορ. 'many of the barbarians on the continent [opposite to Sybota] had come to the aid of the Corinthians;' παραβοηθεῖν having here the primary and original sense, 'to run to (παρὰ) the aid' of any one. See Casaub. on Athen. i. 3, and Abresch Auct. Ἀεί ποτε is a somewhat rare form, signifying what happens continually and uninterruptedly.

Ch. XLVIII. 1. ὡς ἐπὶ ναυμαχίαν] So all the recent editors read for ναυμαχίᾳ, which is justified by MS. authority; though the other construction is found, but seldom, in Thucydides. The accus., however, is found infra ii. 85, 86. iv. 13, and, in the best MSS., at ii. 83. And so in Xen. Hist. i. 1, 12, we have, ἀνάγεσθαι ὡς ἐπὶ ναυμαχίαν. Now, in both that passage, and the one under consideration, the accus. is preferable, as being more suitable than the dat.; it being, in the use of the accus., implied that they sail forth with full purpose of battle. In καὶ ἅμα ἕῳ, &c. ἅμα ἕῳ belongs to καθορῶσι, and thus the sense is, 'and they, at dawn of day, descry, while under sail,' &c. Μετεώρους, out at sea, lit. on the high sea; for μετέωρος signifies what is high, aloft. And the sea is, in this and other phrases, (as in the use of ἀνὰ and λους, ἀντιπαρετάσσοντο, ἐπὶ μὲν τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας Κερκυραίων αἱ Ἀττικαὶ νῆες, τὸ δὲ ἄλλο αὐτοὶ ἐπεῖχον τρία τέλη ποιήσαντες τῶν νεῶν, ὧν ἦρχε τριῶν στρατηγῶν ἑκάστου εἷς. οὕτω μὲν Κερκυραῖοι ἐτάξαντο. 3. Κορινθίοις δὲ τὸ μὲν δεξιὸν κέρας αἱ Μεγαρίδες νῆες εἶχον καὶ αἱ Ἀμπρακιώτιδες· κατὰ δὲ τὸ μέσον οἱ ἄλλοι ξύμμαχοι, ὡς ἕκαστοι· εὐώνυμον δὲ κέρας αὐτοὶ οἱ Κορίνθιοι, ταῖς ἄριστα τῶν νεῶν πλεούσαις, κατὰ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους καὶ τὸ δεξιὸν τῶν Κερκυραίων εἶχον. XLIX. Ξυμμίξαντες δὲ, ἐπειδὴ τὰ σημεῖα ἑκατέροις ἤρθη, ἐναυμάχουν, πολλοὺς μὲν ὁπλίτας ἔχοντες ἀμφότεροι ἐπὶ τῶν καταστρωμάτων, πολλοὺς δὲ τοξότας τε καὶ ἀκοντιστὰς, τῷ παλαιῷ τρόπῳ ἀπειρότερον ἔτι παρεσκευασμένοι. 2. ἦν τε ἡ ναυμαχία καρτερὰ, τῇ μὲν τέχνῃ οὐχ ὁμοίως, πεζομαχίᾳ δὲ τὸ πλέον προσφερὴς οὖσα. 3. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ προσβάλοιεν ἀλλήλοις, οὐ ῥᾳδίως ἀπελύοντο, ὑπό τε πλήθους καὶ ὄχλου τῶν νεῶν, καὶ μᾶλλόν τι πιστεύοντες τοῖς ἐπὶ τοῦ καταστρώματος ὁπλίταις ἐς τὴν νίκην, οἳ καταστάντες ἐμά-κατὰ, both by themselves and in composition) considered as higher than the land.

2. At τὸ δὲ ἄλλο subaud. μέρος, 'the rest of the line.'

τέλη] squadrons. Τέλος also denoted a division of land-forces, especially horse. Perhaps a use originating in the significations command or office, and post.

3. κατὰ τὸ μέσον—ὡς ἕκαστοι] Οἱ ἄλλοι ξύμμαχοι here indeed requires some verb; but not, however, ἐτάχθησαν, as Portus says, but rather ἐτάξαντο, (ranged themselves,) to be repeated from § 2; and ὡς ἕκαστοι must be taken separately, and ἐτάξαντο may be again understood. The ellipsis in this phrase is frequent, and must be supplied according to the context. Thus at v. 4, οἱ μὲν ἐπλανήθησαν ὡς ἕκαστοι, must be understood ἔτυχον, which is expressed at iv. 25.

Ch. XLIX. 1. ξυμμίξαντες—ἤρθη] On the phrase σημεῖα ἑκατέροις ἤρθη, comp. c. 63. vii. 34. viii. 95, and see Potter's Antiq. On the term καταστρωμάτων, see note supra i. 14. This passage of our author has been absolutely transcribed by Lucian, Var. Hist. i. 17.

τῷ παλαιῷ τρόπῳ — παρεσκευασμένοι] The full sense is: 'having, even yet, made their preparations for battle in the ancient and somewhat rude manner.' Παρεσκευασμένοι is usually referred to the accoutring of the soldiers. But that was never altered during the whole of the Peloponnesian war; so that the terms ἀπειρότερον ἔτι would thus be unsuitable. Besides, though the participle be put in the masculine, as accommodated to the masculine noun preceding, yet as there the sailors are put for the ships, so here παρεσκ. must be explained suitably thereto, and be understood to refer both to the making and the fitting-up of the ships, and the working and manœuvring of them in action with skill, including the whole of the tactical arrangements.

2. οὐχ ὁμοίως] Repeat καρτερὰ, though accommodated in sense; the meaning being, 'less excellent,' or meritorious. Of the words πεζομαχίᾳ δὲ τὸ πλέον προσφερὴς οὖσα, we have an evident imitation in Procop. 356, ἦν δὲ ναυμαχία—ἰσχυρὰ, πεζομαχία ἐμφερὴς οὖσα. And also Livy, xxx. 10, 12, Erat res minime certamini navali similes; proximè, speciem, &c. Herodian, vii. 2, 4. Aristid. i. 263, ἡ ναυμαχία πεζομαχίᾳ παρισώθη.

3. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ προσβάλοιεν ἀλλήλοις] 'when they had laid close aboard, or alongside of, each other.' So in nautical phraseology we say, 'to lay a ship on board.' The optat. has here, as often, the sense of happening; on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 521. Ὄχλου, 'crowd, throng.'

Of καταστάντες ἐμάχοντο the sense is, maintained a pugna stataria. So Hesych. καταστρώματα τῆς νεὼς μέρος ἐν ᾧ ἑστῶτες ναυμαχοῦσιν. From Plutarch, in his Themist. c. 14, we learn that the number of soldiers on deck in each ship at the battle of Salamis was sixteen, four of which were archers, the rest men at arms. That the number was afterwards increased, we find from his Cimon, c. 12, ναῦς πλατυτέρας ἐποίησεν, καὶ διάβασιν τοῖς καταστρώμασιν ἔδωκεν, ὡς ἂν ἀπὸ πολλῶν ὁπλίτων μαχιμώτεραι προσφέροιντο τοῖς πολεμίοις.

χοντο, ἠσυχαζουσῶν τῶν νεῶν· διέκπλοι δ' οὐκ ἦσαν, ἀλλὰ θυμῷ καὶ ῥώμῃ τὸ πλέον ἐναυμάχουν ἢ ἐπιστήμῃ. 4. πανταχῇ μὲν οὖν πολὺς θόρυβος, καὶ ταραχώδης ἦν ἡ ναυμαχία, ἐν ᾗ αἱ Ἀττικαὶ νῆες παραγιγνόμεναι τοῖς Κερκυραίοις εἴ πῃ πιέζοιντο, φόβον μὲν παρεῖχον τοῖς ἐναντίοις, μάχης δὲ οὐκ ἦρχον, δεδιότες οἱ στρατηγοὶ τὴν πρόῤῥησιν τῶν Ἀθηναίων. 5. μάλιστα δὲ τὸ δεξιὸν κέρας τῶν Κορινθίων ἐπόνει· οἱ γὰρ Κερκυραῖοι εἴκοσι ναυσὶν αὐτοὺς τρεψάμενοι καὶ καταδιώξαντες σποράδας ἐς τὴν ἤπειρον μέχρι τοῦ στρατοπέδου πλεύσαντες αὐτῶν καὶ ἐπεκβάντες, ἐνέπρησάν τε τὰς σκηνὰς ἐρήμους καὶ τὰ χρήματα διήρπασαν. 6. ταύτῃ μὲν οὖν οἱ Κορίνθιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἠσσῶντό τε καὶ οἱ Κερκυραῖοι ἐπεκράτουν· ᾗ δὲ αὐτοὶ ἦσαν οἱ Κορίνθιοι, ἐπὶ τῷ εὐωνύμῳ, πολὺ ἐνίκων, τοῖς Κερκυραίοις τῶν εἴκοσι νεῶν ἀπὸ ἐλάσσονος πλήθους ἐκ τῆς διώξεως οὐ παρουσῶν. 7. οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι ὁρῶντες τοὺς Κερκυραίους πιεζομένους, μᾶλλον ἤδη ἀπροφασίστως ἐπεκούρουν, τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ἀπεχόμενοι ὥστε μὴ ἐμβάλλειν τινί· ἐπεὶ δὲ ἡ τροπὴ ἐγένετο λαμπρῶς, καὶ

By the term ἠσυχαζουσῶν it is meant, that the ships were moored alongside of each other, and not kept in motion by the practice of the ἐμβολή, or διέκπλους, or any other nautical evolution.

διέκπλοι] In the διέκπλους the purpose of the charge was not, as in the former case, to dash away the oars, break in the hull, and disable or sink any one ship; but to cut through the line, and attack it in the rear, and especially to so separate one part from the rest, that it might be attacked in detail, and overpowered. Thus the Schol. on ii. 89, well explains it τὸ ἐμβάλλειν καὶ διασχίζειν τὴν τῶν ἐναντίων τάξιν. And Suidas on the word περιπλεῖν, better, thus: τὸ διεκπλεῖν· τὸ τεμόντα (read ταμόντα) τὴν τάξιν τῶν ἐναντίων, εἰς τοὐπίσω γενέσθαι. The earliest mention I find of this naval manœuvre (revived, and employed with much effect by Rodney, Nelson, and others of our naval heroes) is in Herodot. vi. 12, ὕκως τοῖσι ἐρετῇσι χρήσαιτο διέκπλοον ποιεύμενος τῇσι νανσὶ δι' ἀλλήλων. The substantive διέκπλους occurs in Niceph. p. 35, and the verb διεκπλεῖν frequently in Dio Cass., Xenoph., Arrian, and Appian, ii. 622, 61, περιπλεῖν ἔτι καὶ διεκπλεῖν οὐκ ἐδύναντο. So a little before we have: διέπλεόν (I conj. διεξέπλεόν) τε καὶ περιέπλεον, καὶ ἐπανόδοις ἐχρῶντο.

The above is, I apprehend, the true view of the sense; though Pop., Goell., and Arn. take the expression to merely mean a breaking through the enemy's line, in order, by a rapid turn of the vessel, to strike the enemy's ship on the side or stern, where it was most defenceless, and so to sink it. See infra ii. 83, 89. vii. 36, 70. The interpretation I have proposed includes this, and superadds another sense, which seems to have been chiefly intended, and is evidently alluded to in the passage of Suidas.

θυμῷ καὶ ῥώμῃ] 'with passionate violence and brute force.' So Appian, i. 75, οὐδὲ λογισμῷ ἢ ἐπιστήμῃ τινί, ἀλλὰ θυμῷ χρώμενοι, καθάπερ θηρία. Livy, v. 49, Irâ magis quam consilio in Romanos incurrunt.

4. δεδιότες] On this nomin. see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 562, 1, note.

5. μεχρὶ τοῦ στρατοπέδου] At these words (observes Goell.) begins the apodosis. Of ἐπεκβάντες the sense is, 'disembarking to attack them.' The word is rare, but occurs in Dio Cass. 293, 72. Arrian, E. A. i. 15, 13.

Διαρπάζειν signifies to search through (διὰ) and carry off (ἁρπάζειν) any articles, as infra viii. 31 and 36. By τὰ χρήματα understand the moveables, baggage, &c.

6. In ἠσσῶντό τε there is a transposition; the natural order of the words being, οἵ τε Κορ. καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἠσσ. καὶ, &c.

ἀπὸ ἐλάσσονος πλήθους] 'out of a lesser number.' Such is the primary sense of πλῆθος. See a similar passage of St. Luke, xxiii. 1, and my note there.

7. ἀπροφασίστως] 'without hesitation,' openly. Λαμπρῶς, for φανερῶς, decidedly. So Procop. 174. Zosim. ii. 52, 2, τῶν στρατευμάτων λαμπρῶς φευγόντων. Appian, i. 312, 25, and 573, ἐκράτει λαμπρῶς.

διεκέκριτο οὐδὲν ἔτι] 'there was no longer any distinction,' namely, between friends or foes. Of this unusual expression the only examples that I have met with are, Appian, ii. 773, 22, (where the writer had evidently in view this passage of our author,) οὐδὲ ἦν τι διακεκριμένον ἔτι οὐδ' εὔκριτον. Herodian, iv. 6, 12, οὐκέτι διεκρίνοντο, τίνες ἦσαν οἱ προπετέστερον φθεγξάμενοι, where read, from Suid., οὐκέτι οὐδὲν, and, for διεκρίνοντο, διεκρίνετο, which the evident imitation above adverted to will sufficiently justify: otherwise we might read διακρινόμενοι, which would thus bear the same sense as that which has place in a passage of St. Jude, 22, οὓς μὲν ἐλεεῖτε διακρινόμενοι. A very similar form of expression occurs in St. James, ii. 9, οὐ διεκρίθητε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, where the sense is literally, 'are there no partial distinctions made among you?' And so, as used in the active voice, the word occurs in Acts xv. 9, καὶ οὐδὲν διέκρινε μεταξὺ ἡμῶν καὶ αὐτῶν, and Hdot. viii. 34, ἔφερε καὶ ἦγε πάντας, διακρίνων οὐδένα. So also in Jos. Bell. i. 17, 4, βασιλεὺς Ἡρώδης, διακρίνας τὸ κατὰ τὴν πόλιν πλῆθος, where the full sense is, 'making a distinction between the various persons who composed the population of the city.' Finally, we have here an example of the third person pass. used without a subject, as in the case of itur in Latin. The same may be observed infra i. 93, ὑπῆρκτο τοῦ Πειραιῶς, and in Plato, p. 453, καλῶς ἂν σοι ἀπεκέκριτο. And indeed in this passage of our author the dat. αὐτοῖς is left to be understood from the context.

ξυνέπεσεν] So the recent editors read, for vulg. ξυνέπεσον, which, however, is, after all, probably the true reading, (the authority of MSS., in so minute a point, being but slender.) According to the former, no little harshness is involved; whether, with the Schol., we supply as a nomin. τὰ πράγματα, or, with Pop., suppose the verb to be taken impersonally: whereas if ξυνέπεσον be retained, the nomin. will be οἱ Κορίνθιοι καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι, taken from the words following. If, however, any one should urge that the preceding reading is, from the very harshness it involves, the more likely to be genuine, suo fruatur judicio.

ἐς τοῦτο ἀνάγκης] 'to such [a pitch] of necessity.' So infra iii. 57, ἐς τοῦτο ξυμφορᾶς, and vii. 86, ἐς τοῦτο δυστυχίας. The neuters τοῦτο, τοσοῦτο, τόδε, with a preposition, often take a genit. as a definition, where in Latin eò with the gen. is used. So eò necessitatis adducti sunt, eò dementiæ progressi sunt. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 319, who adduces, in exemplification of this idiom, a passage of Isocr. εἰς τοῦτο ἀνοίας ἐληλύθασιν, ὥστε, &c.

CH. L. 1. οὐχ εἷλκον ἀναδούμενοι] 'they did not lash-to and haul off.' For the two expressions may be almost regarded as forming one word, by an usage not unfrequent, especially in the writers who imitate Thucyd. Thus in Dio Cass. p. 212, 2, we have, καὶ τὰ σκάφη τὰ μὲν ἀνερῥήγνυντο ἐμβαλλόμενα, τὰ δὲ κατεπίμπραντο ὑφαπτόμενα· ἀλλὰ, ἀναδυόμενα,—ὥσπερ κενὰ ἀνδρῶν,—εἵλκοντο, where read ἀναδούμενα, and at 291, 90, for ἀνεδύσαντο, ἀνεδήσαντο. And so also in p. 570, 22. 327, 62. 563, 29. Appian, i. 571. Xen. Hist. i. 6, 15. By the remarkable expression τὰ σκάφη τῶν νεῶν, we have intimated the miserable plight to which the ships had been reduced; these having become, as it were, mere hulls. For such is the sense intended. To which purpose Coray aptly compares from Herodot. vii. 182, τοῦ μὲν σκάφεος (i. e. the hull of the stranded ship) ἐκράτησαν. So in Æschyl. Pers. 425, we have, ὑπτιοῦτο δὲ σκάφη νεῶν, 'subvertebantur, were turned upside down,' hull upwards (with which we may compare what, though in a figurative sense, Galen says most truly, στόμα κακοῖς ὑπτιοῦσθαι τὸν στόμαχον); for the expression in question ought not to be regarded in the light of a mere poetical circumlocution like νεὼς σκάφος, of which several examples occur in Eurip. This is confirmed by Pollux, i. 9, who mentions, among the parts of a ship, κοῖλον σκάφος, ἔδαφος νεώς. And so σκάφος is used by Dio Cass. 212, 2. (above cited,) 629, 69, τὰ σκάφη τὸ πῦρ συνῄρει. Polyæn. iii. 11, 3, καθελὼν τὰ ἱστία, τὰ σκάφη διαζεύξας ἐπέστρεψε. Appian, ii. 850, 16, ἡ κώπας ἀνέκοπτον, ἡ ἀπεχώριζον τὰ σκάφη.

ἃς καταδύσειαν] The true clue to the difficulty which here exists, is that thrown out by the Schol. on ch. 54. He tells us that καταδύειν has here the sense of τιτρώσκειν, i. e. to maim. By being pierced in various parts, and bruised by repeated shocks, they would become so leaky, as to be quite water-logged, and therefore useless; and though they did not absolutely sink to the bottom, and might, if no time were lost, be towed to some near port, yet the peril was so great, that few ventured to remain in them. Sometimes, however, the miserable wretches who could find no boats, nor any thing whereon to commit themselves to the sea, clung to the wreck; as we find from a passage of Xen. Hist. i. 6, 36, (cited by Goell.) where it is proposed by some of the Athenian commanders, after the battle of Arginusæ, πλεῖν ἐπὶ τὰς καταδεδυκυίας ναῦς, καὶ τοὺς ἐπ' αὐτῶν ἀνθρώπους, and Xen. Hist. i. 7, 35. I have also noted a passage well illustrative of this in Hdot. vi. 17, γαύλους δὲ ἐνταῦθα καταδύσας, καὶ χρήματα λαβὼν πολλά, &c., where Wessel. very properly understands καταδύσας of disabling the ships; of which use may also be adduced another example in the same author, viii. 90, (cited by Dr. Arnold,) where it is said that the crew of a ship that had been sunk, as far as it would sink, were still able to throw their javelins from it with such effect, that they cleared the deck of the ship which had sunk them, and actually took her. Finally, the same sense, I would observe, is sometimes found in the cognate term διαφθείρω (as in other passages of our author infra i. 54, and ii. 92) and ἀπόλλυμι in Xen. Hist. i. 1, 7.

The above view of the sense, which was first propounded by me in the note to my Transl., has, I find, since been adopted by Pop., Goell., and Arnold, of whom the commentator last mentioned well observes, that 'the Greek triremes were made so light and shallow, that they would float in a manner under water, or rather with parts of the ship above water.' Finally, it is here proper to observe the force of the subjunctive, as denoting what happens; (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 514, 5, and Kuhner Gr. § 797, 3 and 4,) the sense being, 'such as they might happen to have disabled;' for, as Poppo notices, the expression comes under the rule laid down by Matth., that where the pronoun relative has the signification of quicunque or si quis, the optative, as said of past action, is usually employed.

φονεύειν—ζωγρεῖν] Constr. διεκπλέοντες 'cutting through and through the wrecks,' supplying ὥστε (answering to εἰς τὸ) φονεύειν, &c., as serving to denote the end or object. This passage is evidently imitated by Liban. Orat. p. 173, διώκοντές τε, τοῦ ζωγρεῖν μᾶλλον, ἢ τοῦ φυγεῖν ἐγίγνοντο, 'were occupied;' where, for φυγεῖν, read φονεύειν, and for τοῦ, read τῷ, which is required by ἐγίγνοντο. Of the word διεκπλεῖν,—which is rare, and indeed without any example in Steph. Thes.,—I have noted the occurrence in Dio Cass. 624, 31. Polyæn. vi. 16, 3. Arrian, Ind. 21, 20. 22, 6.

2. ἐπὶ πολὺ τῆς θαλάσσης ἐπεχουσῶν] 'occupying a great extent of sea.' See note supra i. 1, 2, ἐπὶ πλεῖστον. So in Plut. Numa we have ἐπὶ τάξιν.

Ἕλλησι] The dative here is one in which reference is implied, signifying for, and where ὡς usually precedes it, to show that a proposition is affirmed not as generally true, but valid only with respect to a certain person or persons. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 388 and 389.

μεγίστη δή] 'by far the greatest.' For vulg. αὐτῆς, Bekk. and Goell. edit, from almost all the best MSS., ἑαυτῆς. The former, however, is retained by Pop.

3. πρὸς τὰ ναυάγια — ἐτράποντο] 'turned their attention to the disabled vessels [to save them], and to the slain [to remove them for burial].' Thucyd. has not given a description of the scene which followed the battle. It was doubtless such as that so graphically painted by Æschyl. Ag. 643, ὁρῶμεν ἀνθοῦν πέλαγος Αἰγαῖον νεκροῖς Ἀνδρῶν Ἀχαιῶν, ναυτικῶν τ' ἐρειπίων. This passage of our author has been imitated by Lucian, Var.

πλείστων ἐκράτησαν, ὥστε προσκομίσαι πρὸς τὰ Σύβοτα, οἱ αὐτοῖς ὁ κατὰ γῆν στρατὸς τῶν βαρβάρων προσεβεβοηθήκει. ἔστι δὲ τὰ Σύβοτα τῆς Θεσπρωτίδος λιμὴν ἔρημος. 4. τοῦτο δὲ ποιήσαντες, αὖθις ἀθροισθέντες ἐπέπλεον τοῖς Κερκυραίοις· οἱ δὲ ταῖς πλωΐμοις, καὶ ὅσαι ἦσαν λοιπαὶ, μετὰ τῶν Ἀττικῶν νεῶν καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀντέπλεον, δείσαντες μὴ ἐς τὴν γῆν σφῶν πειρῶσιν ἀποβαίνειν. 5. ἤδη δὲ ἦν ὀψὲ, καὶ ἐπεπαιώνιστο αὐτοῖς ὡς ἐς ἐπίπλουν, καὶ οἱ Κορίνθιοι ἐξαπίνης πρύμναν ἐκρούοντο, κατιδόντες εἴκοσι ναῦς Ἀθηναίων προσπλεούσας· ἃς ὕστερον τῶν δέκα βοηθοὺς ἐξέπεμψαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, δείσαντες, ὅπερ ἐγένετο, μὴ νικηθῶσιν οἱ Κερκυραῖοι, καὶ αἱ σφέτεραι δέκα νῆες ὀλίγαι ἀμύνειν ὦσι. LI. Ταύτας οὖν προϊδόντες οἱ λιμὴν ἔρημος] Meaning 'a port without a town:' a circumstance, this, especially noticed, because a port usually had a town, of some size or other. So Colonel Leake (North. Gr. iii. 6) says: 'I have often had occasion to observe, that places noticed in history only as mountains, harbours, or promontories, are proved, by existing ruins, to have been also fortresses;' and consequently, I would add, from the protection thus afforded, towns. Finally, with these words ἔστι δὲ λιμὴν ἔρημος may be compared similar ones in a passage of Acts viii. 26, αὕτη (scil. ὁδὸς) ἐστὶν ἔρημος, meaning, as I have shown in my note there, 'an unfrequented road, carried through a thinly inhabited country.'

Hist. § 42, t. ii. 103, τραπόμενοι πρὸς τὰ ναυάγια, τῶν πλείστων ἐπεκράτησαν καὶ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἀνείλοντο, where the writer had also probably in mind a kindred passage of Herodot. viii. 18, 4, ὡς διακριθέντες ἐκ τῆς ναυμαχίας ἀπηλλάχθησαν, τῶν μὲν νεκρῶν καὶ τῶν ναυηγίων ἐπεκράτεον.

4. ὅσαι ἦσαν λοιπαὶ] Meaning, 'those ten ships which remained of the 120 Corcyræan ships;' for they had begun the battle with 100 sail (see ch. 47), though they had in all 120. See ch. 25.

5. ἐπεπαιώνιστο] 'the pæan had been raised,' i. e. the pæan for the advance (hence called ἐμβατήριος), which was sung before battle, and was addressed to the god Mars: on which see Müller's Dor. ii. 333. There was another pæan sung after battle, addressed to Apollo; and as the former was a hymn of prayer, so this latter was one of praise. See more in Spanheim on Julian, Orat. p. 233, and on Callim. Hym. Ap. v. 98. Boëckh de Metr. Pind. p. 130, 28. Müller's Dor. i. 197, and other authorities adduced by Duker, Poppo, and Goeller.

ὡς ἐς ἐπίπλουν] 'as for the advance.' So all the recent editors read, for vulg. ὡς ἐπίπλουν: and very properly; for not a few are the passages of the best writers from which it may be proved that both ὡς and εἰς are used in this phrase. The latter of these is indispensable, and indeed was often used alone. So in Arrian, E. A. ii. 20, 5, we have, αἱ νῆες εἰς ἔσπλουν ἐξηρτύοντο (where read, from the best MSS., ἐπίπλουν), and 1 Sam. xvii. 20, 'and shouted for the battle.' The former, ὡς, is at once elegant and not devoid of force, as denoting full purpose. See Elmsl. on Soph. Œd. Col. 21, and on Eurip. Iph. T. 1128.

πρύμναν ἐκρούοντο] lit. 'beat or pulled to prow,' rowed sternwards. The expression is elliptical, and we must supply εἰς or ἐπί. The complete phrase occurs in Herodot. viii. 84, οἱ Ἕλλ. ἐπὶ πρύμνην ἀνεκρούοντο, and, a little further on, where for ἔτι πρύμνην ἀνακρούεσθαι read, with Port., ἐπὶ πρύμ.: also in Appian, ii. 866, τὴν ναῦν κρούοντες ἐπὶ πρύμναν, and Onosand. p. 29. The elliptical one is found in Dio Cass. 571, 73. Arrian, Exp. Al. v. 7, 6, and vii. 12. Appian, t. i. 751. Lucian, t. ii. 103.

How this beating was done, appears from the Schol. on Aristoph.: Πρύμναν κρούσασθαι, he says, is used when μετακαθίσαντες οἱ ἐρέται ἐλαύνοιεν ὀπίσω ἐπὶ τὴν πρύμναν, ὡς ὅταν εἰς λιμένα εἰσέρχονται, ἵνα τὴν πρύμναν εἰς γῆν ἔχωσι νεύουσαν: i. e. when the rowers, sitting the contrary way on their benches, row backward; which was done not only on coming to shore, but (as in the present instance) in retreat; whereby, as Bauer observes, the ship itself was not turned, as it turned its back on the enemy, but went backward with front to the enemy.

ὀλίγαι ἀμύνειν] '[too] few to defend them.' Of this idiom (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 448. 1, 6. Wyttenbach on Julian, Orat. p. 217, and Schæf. referred to by Bekk.) an example occurs also in Herodot.

Κορίνθιοι, καὶ ὑποτοπήσαντες ἀπ' Ἀθηνῶν εἶναι οὐχ ὅσας ἑώρων ἀλλὰ πλείους, ὑπανεχώρουν. 2. τοῖς δὲ Κερκυραίοις (ἐπέπλεον γὰρ μᾶλλον ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς) οὐχ ἑωρῶντο, καὶ ἐθαύμαζον τοὺς Κορινθίους πρύμναν κρουομένους, πρίν τινες ἰδόντες εἶπον, ὅτι 'νῆες ἐκεῖναι ἐπιπλέουσι·' τότε δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀνεχώρουν· ξυνεσκόταζε γὰρ ἤδη, καὶ οἱ Κορίνθιοι ἀποτραπόμενοι τὴν διάλυσιν ἐποιήσαντο. 3. οὕτω μὲν ἡ ἀπαλλαγὴ ἐγένετο ἀλλήλων, καὶ ἡ ναυμαχία ἐτελεύτα ἐς νύκτα. 4. τοῖς Κερκυραίοις δὲ στρατοπεδευομένοις ἐπὶ τῇ Λευκίμνῃ αἱ εἴκοσι νῆες αἱ ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν αὗται, ὧν ἦρχε Γλαύκων τε ὁ Λεάγρου καὶ Ἀνδοκίδης ὁ Λεωγόρου, διὰ τῶν νεκρῶν καὶ ναυαγίων προσκομισθεῖσαι, κατέπλεον ἐς τὸ στρατόπεδον, οὐ

vi. 109, ὀλίγους εἶναι, στρατιᾷ τῇ Μήδων συμβαλέειν.

Ch. LI. 1. οὐχ ὅσας ἑώρων] A brief form of expression for οὐ μόνον ὅσας ἑώρων: ὅσος here not increasing, but circumscribing the sense, as in Livy xxiv. 8, Non ea sunt merita in me vestra. (Bauer.)

2. ἐπέπλεον γὰρ μᾶλλον ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς] The full sense is: 'for they had sailed too much out of sight to be seen.' There being here an ellipse of ἢ ἰδεῖν ἐκείνους, which words are expressed in another passage infra iv. 36, ἐκ τοῦ ἀφανοῦς ὁρμήσας, ὥστε μὴ ἰδεῖν ἐκείνους.

νῆες ἐκεῖναι ἐπιπλέουσι] I entirely coincide in the opinion of Pop. and Bauer, that this is one of those cases (treated on by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 471, 12) in which we have demonstrative pronouns used instead of the adverbs here or there; the speaker thus pointing as it were with his finger. So in Hom. Il. ε. 604, we have, καὶ νῦν οἱ πάρα κεῖνος Ἄρης, and φ. 532, ἦ γὰρ Ἀχιλλεὺς ἐγγὺς ὕδε κλονέων, 'Achilles rages there, near the tumult.' And in Xen. An. iii. 5, 9, πολλὰ δὲ ὁρῶ ταῦτα πρόβατα. Poppo, however, does not well render by, 'naves illas adventare dixerunt;' for there is a transition ad orationem directam, as infra i. 137, ἐδήλου δ' ἡ γραφὴ, ὅτι Θεμ. ἥκω παρὰ σέ. And the ὅτι here is a mere mark of quotation, used after verbs of speaking, as in the passage of our author above cited, and another, iv. 92. Xen. An. iii. 1, 8, and elsewhere in the classical writers, as also in the New Testament. (See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 624.) In such a case the ὅτι ought not, in an English translation, to be expressed. Accordingly I would render, 'said, There are ships yonder, making sail towards us,' lit. 'those ships there are making sail towards us.' In such passages grammatical propriety requires that the verb of speaking should have a comma after it.

ξυνεσκόταζε] 'it was growing dark.' This verb is chiefly used impersonally. The phrase ξυνεσκόταζε γὰρ ἤδη occurs also in Appian, ii. 285. (where we have an evident imitation of our author.) Xen. Cyr. iv. 5, 5. vii. 5, 13. Procop. 20 and 228. Arrian, E. A. ii. 11, 8. Pollux, i. 69.

τὴν διάλυσιν ἐποιήσαντο] 'made (i. e. took) their departure,' for διελύθησαν. So, just after, we have ἀπαλλαγὴ ἐγένετο for ἀπηλλάγησαν.

3. ἐτελεύτα ἐς νύκτα] A brief mode of speaking for ἐς νύκτα προελθοῦσα ἐτελεύτα, lit. 'having continued up to, ended at night.' The passage has been evidently imitated in Procop. 115, 16, and Appian, i. 480. ii. 761 and 822.

4. αἱ εἴκοσι νῆες αἱ, &c.] The second αἱ is not found in several of the best MSS., and it is bracketed by Pop., on the ground that, although it is required by strict grammatical propriety, (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 277, and Buttm. § 125,) yet in not a few instances it is omitted, even in our author. The instances, however, to which he alludes, are all of them questionable: nay, that which may be considered the strongest, (namely, a passage infra vi. 55, ὡς ὅ τε βωμὸς σημαίνει καὶ ἡ στήλη περὶ τῆς τῶν τυράννων ἀδικίας,) is far from deciding the point; since there ἡ after στήλη might easily be absorbed, in dictation, by the preceding η, or may have been inadvertently omitted by copyists. Accordingly as such omissions are far more likely to have arisen from the carelessness of scribes, than the negligence of great writers, the external testimony of MSS. is always weaker than the internal evidence which so readily accounts for such omissions. On the other hand, the insertion of the article, in such cases, by scribes, would hardly ever take place; and but rarely by critical correctors.

πολλῷ ὕστερον ἢ ὤφθησαν. 5. οἱ δὲ Κερκυραῖοι (ἦν γὰρ νύξ) ἐφοβήθησαν μὴ πολέμιαι ὦσιν, ἔπειτα δὲ ἔγνωσαν, καὶ ὡρμίσαντο.

LII. Τῇ δὲ ὑστεραίᾳ ἀναγόμεναι αἵ τε Ἀττικαὶ τριάκοντα νῆες καὶ τῶν Κερκυραίων ὅσαι πλῶϊμοι ἦσαν, ἐπέπλευσαν ἐπὶ τὸν ἐν τοῖς Συβότοις λιμένα, ἐν ᾧ οἱ Κορίνθιοι ὥρμουν, βουλόμενοι εἰδέναι εἰ ναυμαχήσουσιν. 2. οἱ δὲ τὰς μὲν ναῦς ἄραντες ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς, καὶ παραταξάμενοι μετεώρους, ἡσύχαζον, ναυμαχίας οὐ διανοούμενοι ἄρχειν ἑκόντες, ὁρῶντες προσγεγενημένας τε ναῦς ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ἀκραιφνεῖς καὶ σφίσι πολλὰ τὰ ἄπορα ξυμβεβηκότα,—αἰχμαλώτων † τε περὶ φυλακῆς, οὓς ἐν ταῖς ναυσὶν εἶχον,—καὶ ἐπισκευὴν οὐκ οὖσαν τῶν νεῶν ἐν χωρίῳ ἐρήμῳ. 3. τοῦ δὲ οἴκαδε πλοῦ μᾶλλον διεσκόπουν ὅπη κομισθήσονται, δεδιότες μὴ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, νομίσαντες καὶ ὡρμίσαντο] Render, 'they, too, came to anchor;' not, as some suppose the sense to be, 'brought them to anchor:' for thus the active would be required, as is found in Hom. Od. iii. 11, τὴν δ' ὥρμισαν. Lycophron, 872, ὁρμίσας σκάφος Herodot. vi. 107, καταγόμενος ἐς τὸν Μ. τὰς νέας ὥρμιζε. Arrian, E. A. vi. 19, 1. The common mode of interpretation is defended alike by the MSS. and the usus loquendi; for I am not aware of any instance of ὁρμίσασθαι in an active sense; whereas it often occurs in a reflected one, with the subaudition of ἑαυτάς. So in a kindred passage of Xen. Hist. i. 1, 15, ἐπειδὴ ὡρμίσαντο: as also in Procop. 116, 13, (a passage evidently imitated from the present,) καὶ ὡρμίσαντο πάντες, and 72, 26, νεῶν ὡρμισαμένων: also Appian, ii. 854 and 855, ὡρμίσαντο. And so in another passage of the same author, i. 479, 9, αἱ νῆες ὡρμήσαντο, it is proper to restore the common reading, wrongly altered by Schweigh., namely, ὡρμίσαντο.

Ch. LII. 2. ναῦς ἄραντες ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς] At ναῦς the commentators stumble, and would read ἀγκύρας. But though that expression is more usual, yet ναῦς may be tolerated; for when in port ships were usually drawn ashore, and thus the operation of launching was performed by boats: so our seamen say to heave ship, as well as to heave anchor. With little reason do the editors object to the article at γῆς, for though in such a case it is more usually omitted, yet it is sometimes expressed, (as in the kindred phrase ἐπαναγαγεῖν ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς, Luke v. 3,) and certainly it is found here in all the MSS. except one.

ἀκραιφνεῖς] 'uninjured, fresh.' See note supra ch. 19. The word is, strangely enough, by Dionys. Hal. termed glossematical and obscure: yet it is used by Eurip., nay, by Dionys. himself, p. 1067, ἀκρ. χαρακτήρ.

αἰχμαλώτων τε περὶ φυλακῆς] There is something not a little perplexed in the construction here; for, supposing the τε here to correspond—as it appears to do—to the καὶ in the next clause, propriety would seem to require that the substantives φυλακὴ and ἐπισκευὴ should be in the same case. And indeed two inferior MSS. have φυλακὴν, yet that would, I apprehend, require us to read καὶ τὴν οὐκ ἐπισκ. But, in fact, the construction at ἐπισκευὴν οὖσαν is quite different from that at περὶ φυλακῆς, the accus. being, as Duker and Poppo very properly observe, dependent on ὁρῶντες. Accordingly the intermediate words, αἰχμαλώτων τε περὶ φυλακῆς, οὓς ἐν ταῖς ναυσὶν εἶχον, form a separate construction, in which, from its very nature, τε can have no place, and instead of that is rather required γε, utique, maximè, on which see Hoogev. Part. 113. And this I have no doubt was originally written by our author. Certain it is that the two words are so perpetually confounded, as to render the authority of MSS. in this case of little weight.

ἐπισκευὴν οὐκ οὖσαν] for εἶναι, scil. ὁρῶντες, 'and seeing that there were no means of refitting the ships.'

3. τοῦ δὲ οἴκαδε πλοῦ διεσκόπουν] 'they turned their thoughts on sailing homeward.' This constr. with the genit. occurs in Dio Cass. 157, 28. 517, 15. On the nature of the genit.,—which does not depend on περὶ understood,—see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 342, 2. Of δὲ here the force is such that, though found alone, it has corresponding to it a μὲν suppressed and left to be understood in the preceding sentence; e. g. Hom. Il. α. 3, πολλὰς δ' ἰφθίμους, where the δὲ corresponds to the μὲν suppressed at μυρί' Ἀχαιοῖς ἄλγε' ἔθηκε. So, in the present instance, the δὲ corresponds to a suppressed μὲν at ἡσύχαζον, ναυμαχίας οὐ διανοούμενοι. So in one of our great English writers (Locke) we have, by a similar mode of expression, 'You pray;—but, it is not that God would bring you to the true religion.' Perhaps, however, in both these cases, the δὲ may be simply adversative, like ἀλλὰ in the sense imo vero.

LIV. Τοιαῦτα τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀποκριναμένων, οἱ μὲν Κορίνθιοι τόν τε πλοῦν τὸν ἐπ' οἴκου παρεσκευάζοντο, καὶ τροπαῖον ἔστησαν ἐν τοῖς ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ Συβότοις· οἱ δὲ Κερκυραῖοι τά τε ναυάγια καὶ

Ch. LIII. 1. κελήτιον] The diminutive of κέλης (a light-horseman), and therefore denoting something very light, and, by use, the light skiff attendant on a ship, like our cock-boat.

ἄνευ κηρυκείου] insigne, or caduceus. This was a straight stick, of wood or of metal, encircled around with two serpents, having their crests opposite to each other, so as to bear the form of the letter Φ. Thus it answered to the caduceus of Mercury. Sometimes, however, instead of serpents, it was encircled by sprigs of olive, indicative of a desire for reconciliation. The not bearing this symbol was, to show they did not consider themselves at war, so as to need its use.

For προπέμψαι Pop., Bekk., and Goell. edit προσπέμψαι, which reading may be confirmed from a passage, imitated from the present, of Appian, i. 362, 10. In the words following, for πέμψαντες one would have rather expected πεμφθέντες, but, in fact, messengers so sent were regarded as merely the mouth-pieces, as it were, for expressing what their senders had to say; and therefore those senders might, as in the present instance, be said to utter what was said.

3. καὶ τὰς σπονδὰς λύετε] One should rather have expected λύειν, but as that has no support from MSS., we may regard λύετε as a negligence of expression, per σύγχυσιν, (as says Pop.) by which λύετε depends on the εἰ at εἰ δ', the sense being, 'and if ye thus (καὶ, for adeoque) break the treaty,' i. e. virtually break it, &c. Of εἴ ποι βουλόμεθα, just before, the sense is, 'wherever ye wish.'

6. οὐ περιοψόμεθα] This verb signifies properly 'to look around, look at, view coolly;' and thence to neglect, to permit.

Ch. LIV. 1. ἐν τοῖς ἐν τῇ ἠπείρῳ Συβότοις] 'at the continental Sybota,' as opposed to the insular.

νεκροὺς ἀνείλοντο τὰ κατὰ σφᾶς, ἐξενεχθέντα ὑπό τε τοῦ ῥοῦ καὶ ἀνέμου, ὃς γενόμενος τῆς νυκτὸς διεσκέδασεν αὐτὰ πανταχῇ, καὶ τροπαῖον ἀντέστησαν ἐν τοῖς ἐν τῇ νήσῳ Συβότοις, ὡς νενικηκότες. 2. γνώμῃ δὲ ἑκάτεροι τοιᾷδε τὴν νίκην προσεποιήσαντο· Κορίνθιοι μέν, κρατήσαντες τῇ ναυμαχίᾳ μέχρι νυκτός, ὥστε καὶ ναυάγια πλεῖστα καὶ νεκροὺς προσκομίσασθαι, καὶ ἄνδρας ἔχοντες αἰχμαλώτους οὐκ ἐλάσσους χιλίων, ναῦς τε καταδύσαντες περὶ ἑβδομήκοντα, ἔστησαν τροπαῖον· Κερκυραῖοι δὲ, τριάκοντα ναῦς μάλιστα διαφθείραντες, καὶ ἐπειδὴ Ἀθηναῖοι ἦλθον, ἀνελόμενοι τὰ κατὰ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ναυάγια καὶ νεκροὺς, καὶ ὅτι αὐτοῖς τῇ τε προτεραίᾳ πρύμναν κρουόμενοι ὑπεχώρησαν οἱ Κορίνθιοι ἰδόντες τὰς Ἀττικὰς ναῦς, καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἦλθον [οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι], οὐκ ἀντέπλεον ἐκ τῶν Συβότων, διὰ ταῦτα ἀνείλοντο] Of this expression the full sense is, 'raised, and took up' the floating corpses and buoyant persons; for we have here a frequent term to denote the taking up of the dead for burial, and also the taking of such of the wrecks of vessels as might yet be serviceable, or parts of those wrecks, or articles, or persons floating about (so we have in Hom. Od. μ. 67, πίνακάς τε νεῶν καὶ σώματα φώτων). Such are denoted in Æschyl. Ag. 643, by the expression ναυτικὰ ἐρείπια, for ναυάγια, with which may be compared that of Soph. Aj. 308, νεκρῶν ἐρείπια. The same expression occurs also infra ii. 92. Of course ἐκ τῆς θαλάσσης is to be here understood, which is expressed in Plato, Menex. 14, οὐκ ἀναιρεθέντες ἐκ τῆς θαλάσσης. The phrase,—but in inverse order,—οἱ νεκροὶ καὶ ναυάγια, occurs in Hdot. viii. 12, and in our author infra vii. 72.

Their being able to obtain possession of the wrecks was, of course, a proof of victory; as the not doing, or not attempting it, was a proof of defeat. See infra i. 63, and note. With the expression τὰ ναυάγια—ἐξενεχθέντα, compare a very similar one in Hdot. viii. 12, οἱ δὲ νεκροὶ καὶ ναυήγια ἐξεφορέοντο ἐς τὰς Ἀφ.

τοῦ ῥοῦ] 'the current, or tide;' as in Hom. Odys. v. 451, we have, παῦσεν ἐὸν ῥόον, ἔσχε δὲ κῦμα.

γενόμενος] The verb γίγνομαι, while it has the general signification sum or fio, yet requires to be rendered variously, according to the subject and context, having the several senses to become, or to take place; also to arise, spring up; both in the fig. sense of the word, as used of origin, to emanate (which is found in Hdot. iii. 48), or to arise, as a report; and likewise the natural one, as said of a wind.

2. προσεποιήσαντο] 'vindicaverant,' 'had claimed.' Ὥστε καὶ ναυάγια πλεῖστα καὶ νεκροὺς προσκομίσασθαι, 'so as to bring to [their station at Sybota] very many wrecks and corpses.' In ch. 50, 3, we have τῶν πλείστων (scil. τῶν ναυαγ. καὶ νεκρῶν), 'the greater part of,' &c. And such may be the sense here. It seems that, after a sea-fight, the taking up of wrecks, &c. was similar to the removing of the dead for burial in a land-engagement; which usually decided which party had been victorious.

ἐπειδὴ ἦλθον] Bekker and Arnold here subjoin, from many good MSS., οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι: and Pop. inserts the words, though within brackets. Goeller, after having, in his 1st edit., strenuously maintained the authenticity of the words, in his 2nd quite abandons them, and comes over to the opinion of Steph. that they are not genuine, and that the true subject of the verb here is Κερκυραῖοι, to be taken from the context. To the argument, that had οἱ Κερκυραῖοι been the subject, our author would have written καὶ ἐρχομένοις αὐτοῖς οἱ Κορ. οὐκ ἀντέπλεον, he well replies, that thus it would have been quite superfluous for the words ἐπειδὴ ἦλθον to have been written, since the words put in the former place, ἐπειδὴ Ἀθηναῖοι ἦλθον, signify nothing else but ἐπειδὴ Ἀθηναῖοι ὡρμίσαντο. And why? because also after the ὅρμισις here mentioned, the Corinthians had finally collected the wrecks and bodies. Dr. Arnold, indeed, strongly contends for the words, urging that ch. 52 decides that they have been rightly inserted, and that the Athenians are the real subject of the verb ἦλθον. But it is there said that the Athenians only made sail for the port of Sybota, not the Athenians and Corcyræans; of whom the latter had nearly thrice the number of ships, and were the principals.

τροπαῖον ἔστησαν. οὕτω μὲν ἑκάτεροι νικᾶν ἠξίουν. LV. Οἱ δὲ Κορίνθιοι ἀποπλέοντες ἐπ᾽ οἴκου, Ἀνακτόριον, ὃ ἐστιν ἐπὶ τῷ στόματι τοῦ Ἀμπρακικοῦ κόλπου, εἶλον ἀπάτῃ· (ἦν δὲ κοινὸν Κερκυραίων καὶ ἐκείνων) καὶ καταστήσαντες ἐν αὐτῷ Κορινθίους οἰκήτορας ἀνεχώρησαν ἐπ᾽ οἴκου· καὶ τῶν Κερκυραίων ὀκτακοσίους μέν,—οἳ ἦσαν δοῦλοι,—ἀπέδοντο, πεντήκοντα δὲ καὶ διακοσίους δήσαντες ἐφύλασσον, καὶ ἐν θεραπείᾳ εἶχον πολλῇ, ὅπως αὐτοῖς τὴν Κέρκυραν ἀναχωρήσαντες προσποιήσειαν· ἐτύγχανον δὲ καὶ δυνάμει αὐτῶν οἱ πλείους πρῶτοι ὄντες τῆς πόλεως. 2. ἡ μὲν οὖν Κέρκυρα οὕτω περιγίγνεται τῷ πολέμῳ τῶν Κορινθίων, καὶ αἱ νῆες τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀνεχώρησαν ἐξ αὐτῆς. 3. αἰτία δὲ αὕτη πρώτη ἐγένετο τοῦ πολέμου Hence Dr. Arnold's 'ground for decision' is no ground at all.

While, then, external testimony, that of MSS., is in favour of the words, internal evidence is quite against them: for, besides their yielding, as we have seen, a very disputable sense, their insertion may the more easily be accounted for from the likelihood of some attempt being made by half-learned sciolists to supply a nominative which seemed to them wanting; and nothing is so probable as that they should take it (as Steph. supposes) from the preceding words, καὶ ἐπειδὴ Ἀθηναῖοι ἦλθον. Accordingly in the Cod. Clar. we have Ἀθηναῖοι without the οἱ. It is, indeed, harsh that two verbs so close together as ἦλθον and ἀντέπλεον should have the subject denoted by the suppressed pronouns, different. Yet such instances not unfrequently occur in our author, and are occasionally found in others of the best ancient writers. And, after all, the harshness involved in retaining ἦλθον without a subst. expressed, is not so very great; since the word may take its subject, not from the remote Κερκυραῖοι δὲ, but from the nearest antecedent αὐτοῖς, which though placed first in the clause preceding, yet, when put in the natural order, in construing, comes last, and is therefore quite near to ἦλθον.

Ch. LV. 1. ἦν δὲ κοινὸν Κερκυραίων] Κοιν. governs the genitive as well as the dative.

οἳ ἦσαν δοῦλοι] From the great disproportion here between the freemen and the slaves, there is reason to think that the Coreyræans chiefly manned their fleet with the latter. Indeed, considering the smallness of their territory, it would not have been possible to man so large a fleet from the freemen only: and there is no doubt that slaves were more or less employed in all the navies of Greece, even the Athenian. So in vii. 13, the Athenian seamen are said ἀνδράποδα Ὑκκαρικὰ ἀντεμβιβάσαι ὑπὲρ σφῶν.

δήσαντες ἐφύλασσον] This is not to be taken as equiv. to δήσαντες εἶχον, 'kept them in bonds;' but the sense is, 'after putting them in bonds, they guarded them,' by committing them to the care of certain individuals, who were responsible to the state for their ransom, if any escaped.

ἐν θεραπείᾳ εἶχον] 'treated with studied attention.' This is one of the many phrases formed by ἔχειν with a subst. and ἐν, both in the classical and scriptural writers. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 577. The phrase in question is found also in Zosim. iv. 56, 1, and the Schol. on Soph. Œd. Col. 457.

ὅπως—προσποιήσειαν] 'in order that, on their return, they might gain over Corcyra to them.' A somewhat rare use of ἀναχωρεῖν, and a Thucydidean one of προσποιέω. So in a passage of our author infra l. ii. we have, φάσκων προσποιήσειν αὐτὴν, οὖσαν πολεμίαν, and elsewhere, τὴν πόλιν Θηβαίοις προσποιήσειν. There is an adjunct notion of subjugation; though of itself the word only signifies facio ut meum sit, adjungere, especially amicitiâ. So Herodot. i. 6, τοὺς δὲ φίλους προσεποιήσατο, and vi. 66, προσποιέεται κίβωνα. This use is, however, confined to the middle voice.

2. περιγίγνεται] 'survived the danger,' was saved. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 402, d. Or rather, as Poppo renders, Corinthios bello superabant. So infra ii. 13, we have, περιέσεσθαι τῷ πολέμῳ, and iii. 45, περ. τῷ ἐπιβουλεύματι. Procop. p. 203 & 207, (cited by Pop.) τῷ πολέμῳ κατὰ κράτος αὐτῶν περιέσεσθαι, and Cantacuz. iii. 35, περιγίγνεσθαι ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ.

3. αὕτη] for τοῦτο, though it is, by attraction, drawn to the same gender with the substantive. Σφίσιν, just after, is used, and not αὐτοῖς, because, as Goeller observes, αἰτία ἐγένετο τοῖ Κορινθίοις is equivalent to αἰτίαν ἔσχον οἱ Κορ. Ἐν σπονδαῖς, vigente fœdere.

τοῖς Κορινθίοις ἐς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, ὅτι σφίσιν ἐν σπονδαῖς μετὰ Κερκυραίων ἐναυμάχουν.

LVI. Μετὰ ταῦτα δ᾽ εὐθὺς καὶ τάδε ξυνέβη γενέσθαι Ἀθηναίοις καὶ Πελοποννησίοις διάφορα ἐς τὸ πολεμεῖν. 2. τῶν γὰρ Κορινθίων πρασσόντων ὅπως ‡τιμωρήσονται αὐτούς, ὑποτοπήσαντες τὴν ἔχθραν αὐτῶν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, Ποτιδαιάτας, οἳ οἰκοῦσιν ἐπὶ τῷ ἰσθμῷ τῆς Παλλήνης, Κορινθίων ἀποίκους, ἑαυτῶν δὲ ξυμμάχους φόρου ὑποτελεῖς, ἐκέλευον τὸ ἐς Παλλήνην τεῖχος καθελεῖν, καὶ ὁμήρους δοῦναι, τούς τε ἐπιδημιουργοὺς ἐκπέμπειν, καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν μὴ δέχεσθαι, οὓς κατὰ ἔτος ἕκαστον Κορίνθιοι ἔπεμπον· δείσαντες μὴ ἀποστῶσιν, ὑπό τε Περδίκκου πειθόμενοι καὶ Κορινθίων, τούς τε ἄλλους τοὺς ἐπὶ Θράκης ξυναποστήσωσι ξυμμάχους. LVII. Ταῦτα δὲ πρὸς τοὺς Ποτιδαιάπρασσόντων] contriving, devising. So i. 132, πράσσειν τι ἐς τοὺς Εἵλωτας. So the old English, to practise and practice.

Ch. LVI. 1. ἐς τὸ πολεμεῖν] 'tending to war.'

2. γὰρ here is inchoative and explicative, and may be rendered nempe, nimirum.

τιμωρήσονται] So Bekker edits, from several of the best MSS., for vulg. ἀποστήσωνται, which has been retained by Pop. and Goell. The question is one not to be determined by MSS., but by philological reasons: yet so uncertain are these in the present case, that we are not enabled to pronounce positively as to the matter in debate.

ξυμμάχους φόρου ὑποτελεῖς] 'tributary allies,' i. e. those who did not furnish troops or ships, but a money payment in lieu. See supra ch. xix. Mitch. on Arist. Vesp. 669, and on the construction Matth. Gr. Gr. § 322, p. 460.

τὸ ἐς Παλλήνην τεῖχος] It is probable there were but two walls; that on the northern or the Thracian side, and the southern or the peninsular; the latter of which must have been meant against the Athenians, and therefore was required to be demolished.

τοὺς ἐπιδημιουργοὺς] From what is said infra v. 47, from Hesych., Etymol. Mag., Livy xxxii. 22. Aristot. Pol. iv. 4, and other writers, it appears that δημιουργοὶ was the name given in the Doric states to the magistrates who transacted public business as procuratores plebis et superiorum magistratuum in salute civitatis curanda administri. So answering to the tribuni of the Greek-Latin colonies, and the demarchi of the Athenians. On which subject, little capable of certain decision, more complete and perhaps precise information may be found in Wachsmuth, Antiq. Gr. i. 1, p. 93, and Müller, Dor. i. 2, 46. Supposing, however, the same magistrates to be here meant, why are they called ἐπιδημιουργοί? To account the ἐπὶ, with an ancient critic cited by the Schol., as superfluous, or to cancel it, with others, is merely cutting the knot. That the word is genuine, is evidenced by two passages plainly written in imitation of the present, of Liban. Or. Potid. p. 491, B. and 493, A. It must, then, be retained, and accounted for as best it may. It may be supposed to refer rather to the officer being sent out ἐπὶ, over, i. e. to govern colonies. I am, however, rather disposed to give the preference to the conjecture (for beyond that we are not able to go) of Goell. in his 2nd edition, who takes it to express an additional or extra δημιουργὸς sent by the mother country to act as a sort of assessor to the demiurgi appointed by the colonists themselves, and thus as a representative of the mother country, to defend her interests and support her authority.

τοὺς ἐπὶ Θράκης] Poppo, from several of the best MSS., cancels the τούς. But, as we may far better account for its omission than its addition by the scribes, it is very properly retained by Bekk. and Goell. Of ξυναποστήσωσι the sense is, 'bring over to revolt with them.' Ἀφίστημι, in the active, signifying to solicit to revolt; in the middle, to revolt.

Ch. LVII. 1. ταῦτα δὲ πρὸς, &c.] The MSS. fluctuate between πρὸς (the common reading) and περὶ, which is found in several MSS., and has been edited by Pop. and Goell.; while the vulg. πρὸς has been retained by Bekk., and, I think, very properly, the other reading being such as τας οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι προπαρεσκευάζοντο εὐθὺς μετὰ τὴν ἐν Κερκύρᾳ ναυμαχίαν· οἵ τε γὰρ Κορίνθιοι φανερῶς ἤδη διάφοροι ἦσαν, Περδίκκας τε ὁ Ἀλεξάνδρου Μακεδόνων βασιλεὺς ἐπεπολέμωτο, ξύμμαχος πρότερον καὶ φίλος ὤν. 2. ἐπολεμώθη δέ, ὅτι Φιλίππῳ τῷ ἑαυτοῦ ἀδελφῷ καὶ Δέρδᾳ, κοινῇ πρὸς αὐτὸν ἐναντιουμένοις, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ξυμμαχίαν ἐποιήσαντο. 3. δεδιώς τε ἔπρασσεν, ἔς τε τὴν Λακεδαίμονα πέμπων, ὅπως πόλεμος γένηται αὐτοῖς πρὸς Πελοποννησίους, καὶ τοὺς Κορινθίους προσεποιεῖτο τῆς Ποτιδαίας ἕνεκα ἀποστάσεως· προσέφερε δὲ λόγους καὶ τοῖς ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης Χαλκιδεῦσι καὶ Βοττιαίοις ξυναποστῆναι, νομίζων, εἰ ξύμμαχα ταῦτα ἔχοι, ὅμορα ὄντα, τὰ χωρία, ῥᾷον ἂν τὸν πόλεμον μετ' αὐτῶν ποιεῖσθαι. 4. ὧν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι αἰσθόμενοι, καὶ βουλόμενοι προκαταλαμβάνειν τῶν πόλεων τὰς ἀποστάσεις (ἔτυχον γὰρ τριάκοντα ναῦς ἀποστέλλοντες καὶ χιλίους ὁπλίτας ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν αὐτοῦ, Ἀρχεστράτου τοῦ Λυκομήδους μετ' ἄλλων δέκα στρατηγοῦντος), ἐπιστέλλουσι τοῖς ἄρχουσι τῶν νεῶν Ποτιδαιατῶν τε ὁμήρους λαβεῖν καὶ τὸ τεῖχος καθελεῖν, τῶν τε πλησίον πόλεων φυλακὴν ἔχειν, ὅπως μὴ ἀποστήσονται.

savours of a mere gloss, or emendation, founded on the view of the sense (since taken by Abresch) according to which the words were supposed to import that the measures pursued by way of preparation for war, were against the Corinthians, not the Potidæans. A distinction, this, rather subtle than well-founded, and which is opposed by the fact, that the Potidæans had already shown unequivocal enmity to Athens. After all, however, the πρὸς is susceptible of the very sense yielded by the περὶ, namely, with reference to, quod spectat, as concerned, touching; of which several examples may be seen in Steph. Thes. and Viger; though περὶ is far more usual in this sense.

ἐπεπολέμωτο] 'had become or was an enemy [to the Athenians].' See Dio Cass. l. xlvii. 6, and note supra ch. xxxvi. 1, and Blomf. on Æschyl. Ag. 131.

2. κοινῇ πρὸς αὐτὸν ἐναντιουμένοις] 'engaged in common hostilities against him.'

3. ἔπρασσεν—ὅπως] See note infra iv. 89. Προσεποιεῖτο, 'brought over,' or, 'was bringing over:' on which sense of the word see Valck. on Herodot. vi. 66. Of προσέφερε λόγους, just after, the sense is, 'was making proposals.'

τοῖς ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης] Meaning simply (by an idiom characteristic of our author) 'at' or 'in Thrace;' not 'Thraceward,' as Dr. Arnold renders. Though by Thrace making proposals is always to be understood that part which alone was occupied with Greek colonies, namely, the coast of the Ægean from Thessaly to the Hellespont. Those parts were called τὰ ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης.

ξύμμαχα] scil. αὐτῷ, which word is expressed infra ii. 29, and in Plato, Epist. vii. The τὰ, a little after, is not found in several of the best MSS., and has been cancelled by Poppo, but, I think, wrongly; for the word was as likely to be absorbed in the τα preceding, as to have originated in a repetition of the τα. This appears, too, from the construction, which is, εἰ ἔχοι ταῦτα τὰ χωρία, ὅμορα ὄντα, ('inasmuch as they were neighbouring') ξύμμαχα [αὐτῷ], ῥᾷον, &c.

4. μετ' ἄλλων δέκα] The number of generals here, eleven, is one so very unusual at Athens at this period, and so suspicious seems the circumstance of such a number being sent with so small a force as a thousand men (especially when it is considered that five other generals were soon sent off with a second army) that Krueger would read eight (i. e. four); a conjecture, this, highly probable. For even if we were to suppose (with Schoemann, Antiq. Jur. Publ. p. 252) that the generals in question were extraordinarii, or over and above the ten state generals properly so called, and employed in separate services independently of them, the number would still appear suspicious, and the conjecture of Krueger not the less estimable.

LVIII. Ποτιδαιᾶται δὲ πέμψαντες μὲν καὶ παρ' Ἀθηναίους πρέσβεις, εἴ πως πείσειαν μὴ σφῶν πέρι νεωτερίζειν μηδέν, ἐλθόντες δὲ καὶ ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα μετὰ Κορινθίων [ἔπρασσον] ὅπως ἑτοιμάσαιντο τιμωρίαν, ἢν δέῃ, ἐπειδὴ ἔκ τε Ἀθηναίων ἐκ πολλοῦ πράσσοντες οὐδὲν εὕροντο ἐπιτήδειον, ἀλλ' αἱ νῆες αἱ ἐπὶ Μακεδονίαν καὶ ἐπὶ σφᾶς ὁμοίως ἔπλεον, καὶ τὰ τέλη τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων ‡ὑπέσχετο

CH. LVIII. 1. εἴ πως πείσειαν] '[to try] whether by any means they could persuade.' This use of εἴ πως is frequent in the best writers, especially Homer and Thucyd. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 526. Of μηδὲν νεωτ. the sense is, 'to introduce no change of polity:' an interpretation confirmed by Liban. Orat. Potid. 493, 6, ἐδέοντο δὲ μηδὲν νεωτερίζειν περὶ τὴν πόλιν· ἐᾷν δὲ τὸν ἔνοντα κόσμον τῆς πολιτείας. The measures in contemplation would really have been a change of the polity of Potidæa. With the σφῶν πέρι νεωτερίζειν we may compare iv. 51, ὑποπτευσάντων ἐς αὐτούς τι νεωτερίζειν: also ii. 73, ἐπισκήπτουσι ὑμῖν μηδὲν νεωτερίζειν περὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν. In all these passages the change in view is a change of polity. This is expressed at i. 115, νεωτερίσαι βουλόμενος τὴν πολιτείαν.

ἔπρασσον] I have followed the recent editors in putting this within brackets. It came doubtless from the margin, and arose from a false punctuation of the words following. For εὕροντο, 'impetrabant,' 'obtained,' (see my Lex. N. T. in v.) Bekk. edits ηὕροντο. But this, as Poppo has shown, is contra morem Thucyd. And εὕροντο, which Goell. adopts, is confirmed by Liban. Orat. p. 493, who closely follows Thucyd.

ἀλλ' αἱ νῆες αἱ—ἔπλεον] The second αἱ depends upon some participle understood: as for instance, ἐκπεμφθεῖσαι, 'bound for,' which is confirmed by Libanius, who supplies ἐξ Ἀθηνῶν. Goell. thinks this is the same as though our author had written αἱ νῆες αἱ ἐπὶ Μακ. πλέουσαι ἐπὶ Μακ. ἔπλεον. And so Gottleb. supplies πλέουσαι. But either of these two views would involve a truism. In the words καὶ ἐπὶ σφᾶς ὁμοίως, 'and alike against them,' there is no little force and meaning.

τὰ τέλη] Meaning the authorities or persons holding public offices of government or magistracy: a use of the word chiefly existing among the Lacedæmonians, to denote their Ephori; though occasionally the term was applied to others, both Greek (as Xen. Hist. vi. 5, 3, τὰ μέγιστα τέλη ἐν ἑκάστῃ πόλει) and barbarian. So Xen. Cyr. vi. 5, 3, Κύρῳ τε καὶ τοῖς Περσῶν τέλεσι. How the word came to have this sense, the learned are not agreed. The best account given of the matter seems to be that of the Scholiast on this passage, namely, that the Lacedæmonians bestowed this appellation on their magistrates, διὰ τὸ τέλος τοῖς πράγμασι τιθέναι. The word τέλος is derived from the 2nd aor. of τέλλω, which signifies to put or settle, to bring to an end, complete, perfect any action, or settle any business. And thus τέλος means a finishing, settling, or settlement of any business. So Hom. Il. xvi. 630, ἐν γὰρ χερσὶ τέλος πολέμου, ἐπέων δ' ἐνὶ βουλῇ, and Odyss. xx. 74, κούρῳσ' αἰτήσουσα τέλος θαλεροῖο γάμοιο. Hence it came to denote the business itself so settled, effected, or transacted, (so Æschyl. Choëph. 749, γναφεὺς τροφεύς τε ταὐτὸν εἰχέτην τέλος, and Agam. 882;) and thence also office, as Æschyl. Eum. 713, ὅσοις δικαστῶν τοῦτ' ἐπέσταλται τέλος, and Agam. 1175, μάντις μ' Ἀπόλλων τῷδ' ἐπέστησεν τέλει, and Pers. 200. Pind. Nem. xi. 10, τέλος δωδεκάμηνον περάσει. And so in the phrase, of frequent occurrence in Thucyd. and the Attic writers generally, οἱ ἐν τέλει, those in office. Moreover, τέλος, by a common metonymy, (such as that found in the term ἀρχὴ, beginning or rule, as used for beginner or ruler,) came to mean an officer, or person who held the office, as a magistrate, or ruler. So in Æsch. c. Sept. 1016, we have, τοιαῦτ' ἔδοξε τῷδε Καδμείων τέλει, the chief magistrate, the archon: in which view we may compare potestas in Latin and podestà in Italian. Hence (I would notice) may be understood the words of Æsch. c. Theb. 149, Διόθεν πολεμόκραντον τέλος ἀγνὸν, which are not ill rendered by Schutz, 'Tuque, o casta Jovis filia, ad bella perficienda constituta præses.' Thus the word came to have the very same force as ἀρχὴ, and no wonder, since the finisher of any business is as much entitled to be called its potestas as its originator or author. And thus are we enabled to discover the full force and propriety of the sublime designation in Hebrews xii. 2, ἀφορῶντες εἰς Ἰησοῦν τὸν τῆς πίστεως ἀρχηγὸν καὶ τελειωτὴν, the Originator and Finisher or Perfector, αὐτοῖς, ἢν ἐπὶ Ποτίδαιαν ἴωσιν Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἐσβαλεῖν, τότε δὴ κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον ἀφίστανται μετὰ Χαλκιδέων καὶ Βοττιαίων, κοινῇ ξυνομόσαντες. 2. καὶ Περδίκκας πείθει Χαλκιδέας, τὰς ἐπὶ θαλάσσῃ πόλεις ἐκλιπόντας καὶ καταβαλόντας, ἀνοικίσασθαι ἐς Ὄλυνθον, μίαν τε πόλιν ταύτην ἰσχυρὰν ποιήσασθαι· τοῖς τε ἐκλιποῦσι τούτοις τῆς ἑαυτοῦ γῆς τῆς Μυγδονίας περὶ τὴν Βόλβην λίμνην ἔδωκε νέμεσθαι, ἕως ἂν ὁ πρὸς Ἀθηναίους πόλεμος ᾖ. 3. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἀνῳκίζοντό τε, καθαιροῦντες τὰς πόλεις, καὶ ἐς πόλεμον παρεσκευάζοντο. LIX. Αἱ δὲ τριάκοντα νῆες τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀφικνοῦνται ἐς τὰ ἐπὶ Θράκης, καὶ καταλαμβάνουσι τὴν Ποτίδαιαν καὶ τἆλλα ἀφεστηκότα. 2. νομίσαντες δὲ οἱ στρατηγοὶ ἀδύνατα εἶναι πρός τε Περδίκκαν πολεμεῖν τῇ παρούσῃ δυνάμει καὶ τὰ ξυναφεστῶτα χωρία, τρέπονται ἐπὶ τὴν Μακεδονίαν,—ἐφ' ὅπερ καὶ τὸ πρότερον ἐξεπέμinitiator et consummator; meaning, the Author and Finisher of all things, as in creation and providence, so in redemption. Similarly, in a passage of Revel. i. 8 & 11, (and elsewhere in that book,) Christ is called τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω, ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος. And so in Orph. Hym. xiv. 7, we have, Ζεῦ, ἀρχὴ πάντων, πάντων τε τελετή.

ὑπέσχετο] So Bekk., Goell., and Pop. edit, from several MSS., for vulg. ὑπέσχοντο, which, however, may, after all, be the true reading; for the rule (see Matth. Gr. Gr. p. 300) according to which the neuter plural must have the verb in the singular, has an especial exception in the case of persons. And that such is the light in which our author regards the τέλη, is certain from another passage, infra iv. 15, where he joins τὰ τέλη with a masculine participle (his words being, τὰ τέλη καταβάντας ἐς τὸ στρατόπεδον). The rule in question is elsewhere observed by our author, infra vii. 57, τοσάδε ἔθνη—ἐστράτευον.

κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον] These words are not properly a pleonasm, because something more is said, as in κοινῇ ξυνομόσαντες just after.

2. ἀνοικίσασθαι] The Schol. explains 'to remove their habitation.' Yet the ἀνα seems also to denote upward; for of ἀνοικίσασθαι, as denoting removal to a higher situation, I have noted not a few examples, as Pausan. iv. 9, 1, τὰ ἐς μεσόγαιαν πάντα ἐκλείπειν, ἐς δὲ τὸ ὄρος ἀνοικίζεσθαι τὴν Ἰθώμην. Appian, i. 419, 9. 426, 10. 474, 20. 852, 41. That Olynthus was situated high, appears from ch. lxiii. And this is also confirmed by the situation assigned to the ruins of Olynthus in Lapie's and Wyld's maps, namely, not on the sea-coast, as in other maps, (namely, at the site of the present Hagio Mamac,) but nearly five miles N. E. of it, upon an eminence, so as to be seen nearly eight miles off.

ἔδωκε νέμεσθαι] 'gave it to them to inhabit, or occupy and cultivate, whether by farming or grazing, and to receive the fruits thereof.' Such is the full import of this phrase, in which, however, is implied not perpetual possession and property, but temporary usufruct, as is here plainly set forth by the limitative words which follow. So Photius says that in Thucyd. the term νέμεσθαι bears the sense λαμβάνειν πρόσοδον. The phrase occurs also infra v. 32, τὴν γῆν Πλαταιεῦσι ἔδοσαν νέμεσθαι (where see note). Compare also Herodot. viii. 112, τῷ ἐκ βασιλῆος ἐδόθη πόλις νέμεσθαι, and iii. 160, τὴν Βαβ. οἱ ἔδωκε ἀτελέα νέμεσθαι. Similarly to περὶ τὴν Βόλβην λίμνην νέμεσθαι here, we have in Hdot. iv. 138, οἱ περὶ τὴν Τριτωνίδα λίμνην νέμοντες.

CH. LIX. 1. ἐς τὰ ἐπὶ Θράκης] scil. χωρία, (which word is expressed in another passage infra ii. 29,) meaning those parts of Thrace (namely, on the sea-coast), which had been colonized by the Greeks. See more in Transl.

καταλαμβάνουσι] deprehendunt; a signification frequent in Thucyd. and the best writers, especially Herod. and Xenophon, and those who have imitated our author; e. g. Arrian, E. A. i. 2, 5. Procop. 55, 16. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 532, 10, Sylb. The idiom in question is confined to the active voice; and hence in a passage of Strabo, p. 404, 10, Falc. οἱ δὲ καταστάλεντες κατελάβοντο τοὺς Ἀχαιοὺς πολεμοῦντας τοῖς βαρβάροις, for κατελάβοντο should be read κατέλαβον, the το there having evidently arisen from the το following.

plish the business] on which they had been first sent.' This idiom, by which a neuter adjective is put after a masculine or feminine noun, occurs also infra vi. 47. And of its use after a masculine noun, Abresch adduces an abundance of examples, but scarcely one after a feminine, which is, indeed, very rare, though I have noted it in Eurip. Bacch. 454, οὐκ ἄμορφος εἶ, ξένε, ὡς εἰς γυναῖκας, ἐφ' ὅπερ εἰς Θήβας πάρει. Zosim. p. 215, s. m. ὁ βασιλεὺς, ἐφ' ὅπερ ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὥρμητο, κατὰ Περσῶν ἐπὶ τὴν ἑῴαν ἐστέλλετο: and iv. 13, 1, Οὐάλης, ἐφ' ὅπερ ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὥρμητο, κατὰ Π. ἐστέλλετο. In this case it is best to regard it as an adverbial phrase answering to our adverb whereunto. There is, indeed, generally supposed to be an ellips. of ἔργον or πρᾶγμα. But we may better suppose, with Poppo (Proleg. p. 105), that 'the neuter is not referred to the near subst., but to an infinitive latent in it, as to the whole sentiment;' and this Goell. here supposes to be ἐπὶ τὸ τρέπεσθαι, or ἐπὶ τὸ πλεῖν. Finally, in the passage of Eurip., though ἔργον, causam, may seem understood, yet as εἰς γυναῖκας is in reality for εἰς τὸ ἐπάγεσθαι γυν. (comp. 2 Tim. iii. 4,) so here τὸ ἀπάγεσθαι may be supplied.

καὶ καταστάντες] scil. ἐκεῖ, 'and [there] taking post,' or 'stationing themselves,' καταστάντες being (by a common Atticism) put for κατασταθέντες.

CH. LX. 1. περὶ τῷ χωρίῳ] 'for the place.' Of this syntax, of a dat. for gen. or accus., the use is confined to Homer and the older Attic writers. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 589.

οἰκεῖον τὸν κίνδυνον ἡγούμενοι] 'regarding the danger as their own,' i. e. as personal to them. So infra iv. 6, we have, νομίζοντες—οἰκεῖον σφίσι τὸ περὶ τὴν Πύλον, and iii. 13, οἰκεῖον κίνδυνον ἔξειν. In this case we must supply ἑαυτῷ, the sense being, 'as one nearly concerning oneself.'

πέμπουσιν—πείσαντες] The construction here is irregular; and, for the words as they now stand, we ought rather,—according to the construction elsewhere in our author,—(see note supra i. 3, 2,) to have had μισθῷ πεισθέντας, standing for ἐμμίσθους or μισθωτούς. As it is, πείσαντες is a nominativus pendens, αὐτοὶ being understood, as also τινας. Moreover, the words καὶ τῶν ἄλλων Πελοποννησίων μισθῷ πείσαντες, are in some measure parenthetical, and serving to modify the idea contained in ἐθελοντὰς, voluntaries, meaning those who served without pay. Of τοὺς πάντας the sense is literally, 'in the whole,' 'in all.'

2. κατὰ φιλίαν αὐτοῦ] 'on account of friendship towards, or for him.' The genit. here is one of object, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 313. Ἐπιτήδειος, 'well affected towards,' 'friendly to,' as infra iv. 78, and in the best Attic writers.

3. ἐπὶ Θράκης] The ἐπὶ has here the same force (namely, at) as in the phrase τὰ ἐπὶ Θράκης. Ὕστερον ἤ, 'after that.' So Pop. and Goell. edit, for vulg. ᾗ, which is quite indefensible, though retained by Bekk.

CH. LXI. 1. ἡ ἀγγελία τῶν πόλεων] 'the news concerning the cities.' A use of the genit. worthy of attention; and by Goell. referred to a sort of grammatical attraction, treated of by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 296.

ὡς ᾔσθοντο—ἐπιπαρόντας] 'as soon as they had heard that the troops under A. had gone to reinforce the garrison.' Such is the full sense of ἐπιπαρόντας, where the ἐπι denotes accession, in addition to, i. e.

ὁπλίτας καὶ τεσσαράκοντα ναῦς πρὸς τὰ ἀφεστῶτα, καὶ Καλλίαν τὸν Καλλιάδου πέμπτον αὐτὸν στρατηγόν· οἳ ἀφικόμενοι ἐς Μακεδονίαν πρῶτον, καταλαμβάνουσι τοὺς προτέρους χιλίους Θέρμην ἄρτι ᾑρηκότας καὶ Πύδναν πολιορκοῦντας. 2. προσκαθεζόμενοι δὲ καὶ αὐτοί, τὴν Πύδναν ἐπολιόρκησαν μὲν, ἔπειτα δὲ ξύμβασιν ποιησάμενοι καὶ ξυμμαχίαν ἀναγκαίαν πρὸς τὸν Περδίκκαν,—ὡς αὐτοὺς κατήπειγεν ἡ Ποτίδαια καὶ ὁ Ἀριστεὺς παρεληλυθὼς,—ἀπανίστανται ἐκ τῆς Μακεδονίας· καὶ ἀφικόμενοι ἐς Βέροιαν, κἀκεῖθεν ἐπιστρέψαντες,—† καὶ πειράσαντες πρῶτον τοῦ χωρίου καὶ οὐχ ἑλόντες,—ἐπορεύοντο κατὰ for the help of. Πέμπτον αὐτὸν σ., 'as general, with four colleagues.' Ἀφικόμενοι—πρῶτον, 'as soon as they arrived,' 'immediately on their arrival.'

2. προσκαθεζόμενοι] See note supra ch. xxv. 1. Ξυμμαχίαν ἀναγκαίαν. The term ἀναγκαῖος is used of what is highly expedient, infra vi. 37, and even necessary, vii. 5, and thus unavoidable. Here, then, the sense is lit. 'what must necessarily be made,' because they could not make a better. So infra vii. 69, we have, οὐχ ἱκανὰ μᾶλλον ἢ ἀναγκαῖα νομίσας παρῃνῆσθαι. A similar use is observable in Eutrop. x. 17, Pacem cum Sapore, necessariam quidem, sed ignobilem fecit. Of κατήπειγε the sense is, 'urgebat et maturare cogebat.' In κατήπειγε we have a stronger term than the simple ἤπειγε. The term, while occasionally used of persons who gently press others to do something, (as Demosth. 894, κατ. αὐτὸν, and Herodot. viii. 126,) is generally used of things that are urgent, and impel any one to action. So Plato, p. 336, D. κατεπείγουσιν ὑμᾶς αἱ τῶν στάσεων διαφοραί· and Epist. 7, ἡ φιλοτιμία κατήπειγεν αὐτόν. Dio Cass. 93, 99. 813, 17. But the accus. is generally omitted. Of ἀπανίστ. ἐκ τῆς Μακ. the sense is, 'they departed from (as we say, evacuated) Macedonia.'

κἀκεῖθεν ἐπιστρέψαντες] The difficulty which has been found here, I endeavoured to remove, in my first edition of the author, by translating the passage thus: 'Having come to Berœa, and, in their way from thence, first turned back on the place, and made an unsuccessful attempt on it, they went forward to Potidæa,' &c. And in the note I suggested the probability that, on their way from Berœa, and at a short distance from it, they, either from sudden thought, or premeditated design and deep-laid plan, turned back upon the city, hoping to surprise it off its guard, and carry it by a coup de main. Yet, on carefully reconsidering this intricate question, it appears to me that the above method is scarcely to be admitted, unless we could suppose πορευθέντες καὶ to have been lost between κἀκεῖθεν and ἐπιστρέψαντες. So improbable, however, is the supposition, and,—unless that be taken for granted,—so inadmissible is the ellipsis, that I am now inclined to think a better solution is to be sought. I entirely agree with Poppo, that ἐπιστρ. has the sense conversi sunt; but I cannot admit the added words mare versus; for, as nothing was before said about the sea, we certainly are not authorized in supplying πρὸς θάλασσαν. I have long thought the reference to be, not to the sea, but rather to the right road of the Athenian army, in their route from Pydna to Potidæa. Now this they had deserted, in making a bend to surprise Berœa, and had to make a turn backward to get into the road, which lay along the coast. So infra ii. 9, ἄφνω ἐπιστρέψαντες τὰς ναῦς, where see note. Indeed the best writers use ἐπιστρέφειν in the neuter sense for convertere gressum, lit. 'to turn one's steps to [the right road] after having forsaken it.' See my Lex. N. T.

The above view has, I find, also occurred to Dr. Arnold, who truly observes, that 'The natural (or rather direct) route from Pydna to Potidæa lay along the coast, and Berœa was quite out of the way, at some distance to the westward, near the fort of the Bermian mountains. But the hope of surprising Berœa induced the Athenians to deviate from their direct line of march; then, after the failure of this treacherous attempt, they returned again to the seacoast, and continued to follow it till they arrived at Gigonus. Thus the words καὶ πειράσαντες πρῶτον τοῦ χωρίου καὶ οὐχ ἑλόντες are a sort of parenthesis, and are intended to tell us that the Athenians, before they returned to the coast, had made a fruitless attempt upon Berœa, which had been the object that first induced them to deviate from their direct road from Pydna.'

Agreeably to this view, I have introduced into the text the marks indicating a hypoparenthesis. But thus so little suitable is the καὶ, that I cannot help suspecting a corruption here in the text. Now by cancelling the καὶ,—which may have easily crept in from a misunderstanding of the true construction,—or by reading, from the conjecture of Thiersch, κατα-πειρ., all will be right. With the expression πειράσαντες τοῦ χωρίου, which stands for ἀπόπειραν ποιησάμενοι τῷ χωρίῳ, compare others at vii. 12, πειρᾶν τῶν τειχῶν, and iv. 70, τῆς Νισαίας πειρᾶν. Hdot. iv. 80, πειρᾶν τοῦ χωρίου, and vi. 82, π. τῆς πόλιος.

χωρὶς δὲ] 'and besides.' A use of χωρὶς found in Hdot. iv. 64, and elsewhere.

CH. LXII. 1. πρὸς Ὀλύνθου] So Pop. and Goell. edit, for vulg. πρὸς Ὀλύνθῳ, which is retained by Bekk. It is true that the above reading is deficient in the authority of MSS.; but, from the very slight difference between this and another reading, πρὸ Ὀλύνθου, it does not need much. It is, moreover, defended by the usage of our author elsewhere, (so infra iii. 21, we have, πρὸς Πλαταιῶν, and iv. 130, πρὸς Σκιώνης,) and is also required by the nature of the thing itself; for, as Poppo observes, the allies were neither encamped in front of Olynthus, πρὸ Ὀλύνθου, nor yet close to Olynthus, πρὸς Ὀλύνθῳ, but under the walls of Potidæa, on the side of the town that looked towards Olynthus; that is, πρὸς Ὀλύνθου. In ἀπέστη we have aorist for pluperf., on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 498.

3. ἔχοντι] So Bekk., Goell., and Pop. edit for ἔχοντα. It is truly observed by Goell., that we have here a constructio ad sensum, the words τοῦ Ἀριστέως γνώμη ἦν being equivalent to τῷ Ἀριστεῖ ἔδοξε. In τὴν διακοσίαν ἵππον the article belongs to ἵππον, not to διακοσ., for no number has preceded. The sense is, 'the horse furnished by Perdiccas, 200 in number.' The use of ἵππος with the feminine article, in the sense cavalry, is common in the historians from Herodotus downwards.

κατὰ νώτου] 'in the rear;' literally, 'at back.' The phrase is frequent in the historians. Ἐν μέσῳ ποιεῖν, 'to place between,' as we say, 'to place an enemy between two fires.'

4. τοὺς Μακεδόνας ἱππέας] So again at ch. 63, we have, οἱ Μακεδόνες ἱππῆς, where Μακεδὼν is not for Μακεδονικὸς, but the appellation is put by apposition, as in ὁ Εὐφράτης ποταμὸς, ὁ Ἑλικὼν ὄρος, &c. So we have οἱ Ἕλληνες πελτασταὶ in Xen. Anab. vi. 5, 26. (Pop.) Εἴργωσι. I have here thought proper, with Bekk. and Goell., to employ the spiritus asper; while Poppo retains the lenis, as in the common reading, which is, indeed, every where supported by the bulk of the MSS.; but the other is more agreeable to analogy. Τοὺς ἐκεῖθεν, by a certain idiom,—on which ἐπιβοηθεῖν, αὐτοὶ δ' ἀναστήσαντες τὸ στρατόπεδον ἐχώρουν ἐπὶ τὴν Ποτίδαιαν. 5. καὶ ἐπειδὴ πρὸς τῷ ἰσθμῷ ἐγένοντο, καὶ εἶδον τοὺς ἐναντίους παρασκευαζομένους ὡς ἐς μάχην, ἀντικαθίσταντο καὶ αὐτοί· καὶ οὐ πολὺ ὕστερον ξυνέμισγον. 6. καὶ αὐτὸ μὲν τὸ τοῦ Ἀριστέως κέρας, καὶ ὅσοι περὶ ἐκεῖνον ἦσαν Κορινθίων τε καὶ τῶν ἄλλων λογάδες, ἔτρεψαν τὸ καθ' ἑαυτούς, καὶ ἐπεξῆλθον διώκοντες ἐπὶ πολύ· τὸ δὲ ἄλλο στρατόπεδον τῶν τε Ποτιδαιατῶν καὶ τῶν Πελοποννησίων ἡσσᾶτο ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων καὶ ἐς τὸ τεῖχος κατέφυγεν.

LXIII. Ἐπαναχωρῶν δὲ ὁ Ἀριστεὺς ἀπὸ τῆς διώξεως, ὡς ὁρᾷ τὸ ἄλλο στράτευμα ἠσσημένον, ἠπόρησε μὲν ὁποτέρωσε διακινδυνεύσῃ χωρήσας, ἢ ἐπὶ τῆς Ὀλύνθου ἢ ἐς τὴν Ποτίδαιαν· ἔδοξε δ' οὖν, ξυναγαγόντι τοὺς μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ ὡς ἐς ἐλάχιστον χωρίον, δρόμῳ βιάσασθαι ἐς τὴν Ποτίδαιαν. καὶ παρῆλθε παρὰ τὴν χηλὴν διὰ τῆς see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 596,—stands for τοὺς ἐκεῖ ἐκεῖθεν, 'to hinder those who were there to sally forth for assistance from thence.' Ἀναστήσαντες τὸ στρατόπεδον, 'having broken up their encampment.'

5. παρασκευαζομένους ὡς ἐς μάχην] The ὡς has more of elegance than force. Yet it is not without meaning, here serving to denote purpose. And such is its use in Dionys. Hal. Ant. i. 164, 26, Sylb. Of ἀντικαθίσταντο καὶ αὐτοί, the sense is, 'they also set themselves in order of battle.' Ξυνέμισγον, conflixerunt. See note infra vii. 6.

6. λογάδες] See note infra ii. 25, 2. Ἔτρεψαν τό. So Bekk., Goell., and Pop. edit for ἐτρέψαντο τό: and very properly; for though our author uses the middle form, in this sense, as well as the act. (supra i. 49, and infra viii. 55,) and the writers who have imitated him,—as Dion. Hal., Dio Cass., Procop., Polyænus, and Plutarch,—adopt this, as more agreeable to the usage of the later Greek from Xenophon downwards—yet Thuc. usually prefers the active, (see ii. 79. iii. 90, 103, 118. vii. 43;) and no wonder; since it is the ancient form, found in Homer, Pindar, and Herodot. i. 63. iv. 128, and was hence likely to be preferred in the old Attic. At τὸ understand κέρας, from the preceding.

ἐπεξῆλθον — πολύ] Constr. ἐπεξ. ἐπὶ πολὺ διώκοντες, 'and went forward to a considerable distance in the pursuit.'

Ch. LXIII. 1. ὁρᾷ] In ὁρᾷ (which has been, on competent authority of MSS., very properly restored by the recent editors, for vulg. ἐώρα) we have the narrative present. Of ὁποτέρωσε διακινδυνεύσῃ χωρήσας, the sense is, lit. 'whither he should venture to go, what course he should pursue, after taking his departure;' for he was, as Dukas observes, ἐκατέρωθεν ἀποκλεισθείς. In the ἢ—ἢ following (whether—or) we have a use very rare, except in the second member of a double question after πότερον, or after ἆρα, or again after εἰ in indirect questions, though no interrogative word has preceded in the first member. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 619, init., where, however, no example is adduced without the εἰ preceding. Of δ' οὖν the sense is, 'however, at least.' See Hoogev. de Part. p. 507, 3.

ξυναγαγόντι ὡς ἐς ἐλάχ. χωρ.] 'after having contracted his forces into the smallest possible space.' Such was the sense long ago assigned by Steph. and Portus; and though it had been set aside by Abresch and Bauer, for another which cannot without violence be assigned to the words, it has since been vindicated from objection, and restored by Pop., who might have adduced as examples tending to establish it, Dionys. Hal. vi. p. 345, εἰς ἓν συνάγουσι τὰς δυνάμεις χωρίον. Arrian, Exp. Alex. vii. 30, 1, εἰς ἓν χωρίον ξυναγαγών. Ὡς and ὅτι, thus added after superlatives, stand for ὡς, or ὅτι, δυνατόν. And here we have a transposition, for εἰς ὡς ἐλάχιστον. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 461. In a passage of Agath. 129, we have the equivalent expression ἐς ὅτι ἐλάχ. Of the phrase βιάσασθαι ἐς, the sense is, 'to force one's way into a place,' as infra vii. 69.

παρὰ τὴν χηλὴν] 'the bottom of the lower pier.' From the Schol. we learn that ἡ χηλὴ (so called from its resemblance to a hoof) was a projecting piece of rough stone-work, on the sea-wall of a pier, and at its extremity, as a break-water to protect it from the surge, (see Casaub. on Strabo, iii. 230. Dorville on Charit. p. 271, and Wesseling on Diod. Sic. vol. ii.

p. 288,) and perhaps also, as Arn. supposes, to narrow the entrance to the harbour.

By διὰ τῆς θαλάσσης, 'through the sea,' we may understand that part where it was fordable, probably at ebb tide. Βαλλόμενος, 'telis petitus,' as in Dionys. Hal. viii. 17, ἐπὶ τὰς πόλεις ἴεται βαλλόμενος, and Appian, ii. 859, ὥδευε—βαλλόμενος καὶ χαλεπῶς, and ii. 674, ἐχεῖτο δρόμῳ καὶ ἀνέβαινε, βαλλόμενός τε καὶ χαλεπῶς, where for the corrupt reading of the old editions, ἐφεῖτο, Schweigh. edited, from one MS., the equally corrupt ἐχεῖτο, though the true reading is plainly ἔθει τε δρόμῳ, 'ran at full speed;' a phrase borrowed from Thucyd. v. 10.

2. διὰ τάχους ἐγίγνετο] An adverbial phrase for ταχέως. Ἱππῆς δ' οὐδετέροις παρεγένοντο: meaning that the cavalry on neither side took part in the engagement.

3. τοὺς νεκροὺς ὑποσπόνδους ἀπέδοσαν] 'gave up the dead, under a truce for that purpose.'

Ch. LXIV. 1. τὸ δ' ἐκ τοῦ ἰσθμοῦ τεῖχος] 'the wall on the side of the isthmus,' or, which faced the isthmus; i. e. the outer wall looking towards Olynthus. So by τὸ ἐκ τῆς Παλλήνης, further on, is denoted 'the wall on the side of Pallene,' or the inner wall, which had before been called τὸ ἐς τὴν Παλλήνην. In both these cases by Παλλ. is to be understood, not, as Goell. supposes, the city so called, but the peninsula. Ἐκ here answers to the Latin a or ab, in a parte, or regione alicujus. Finally, ἀποτειχίσαντες stands for περιτειχίσαντες, 'having circumvallated,' (i. e. drawn a wall of circumvallation around,) as infra vii. 6. viii. 26. Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 3. iii. 2, 7, and Plut. Alc. 30. On the present passage see more in note at iii. 94, and that of Wessel. on Hdot. vi. 366.

ἐφρούρουν] 'garrisoned it.' See note at iii. 21. Ἀτείχιστον, for οὐκ ἀποτείχιστον, as just after we have τειχίζειν for ἀποτειχ. Οὐ γὰρ ἱκανοὶ ἐνόμιζον ε. is for οὐ γὰρ ἐνόμιζον αὐτοὺς ἱκανοὺς εἶναι, as in Xen. Mem. i. 6, 3, ἐνόμιζε κακοδαιμονίας διδάσκαλος εἶναι. Of γιγνομένοις δίχα the sense is, 'si sejungerentur;' of which use of δίχα γίνεσθαι examples have been adduced by Gottleb. from Eurip. Iph. T. 921, and Xen. Cyr. vii. 7, 20; yet with the phrase followed by a genit.; not, as here, used absol. Examples, however, of the latter are found in Hdot. vi. 109, ἐγίνοντο δίχα αἱ γνῶμαι. Aristot. Pol. iv. 3, ἐὰν δίχα ἡ ἐκκλησία γένηται. From the use of this expression, and from a passage of Hdot. viii. 129, it is plain that Potidæa occupied the whole of the isthmus from sea to sea, so as to exclude all access to the peninsula of Pallene by land.

μίωνα τὸν Ἀσωπίου στρατηγόν· ὃς ἀφικόμενος ἐς τὴν Παλλήνην, καὶ ἐξ Ἀφύτιος ὁρμώμενος, προσήγαγε τῇ Ποτιδαίᾳ τὸν στρατὸν, κατὰ βραχὺ προϊὼν καὶ κείρων ἅμα τὴν γῆν· ὡς δὲ οὐδεὶς ἐπεξῄει ἐς μάχην, ἀπετείχισε τὸ ἐκ τῆς Παλλήνης τεῖχος. 3. καὶ οὕτως ἤδη κατὰ κράτος ἡ Ποτίδαια ἀμφοτέρωθεν ἐπολιορκεῖτο, καὶ ἐκ θαλάσσης νausὶν ἅμα ἐφορμούσαις. Ἀριστεὺς δὲ, ἀποτειχισθείσης αὐτῆς,—καὶ ἐλπίδα οὐδεμίαν ἔχων σωτηρίας, ἢν μή τι ἀπὸ Πελοποννήσου ἢ ἄλλο παρὰ λόγον γίγνηται,—ξυνεβούλευε μὲν, πλὴν πεντακοσίων, ἄνεμον τηρήσασι τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐκπλεῦσαι, ὅπως ἐπὶ πλέον ὁ σῖτος ἀντισχῇ· καὶ αὐτὸς ἤθελε τῶν μενόντων εἶναι. 2. ὡς δ' οὐκ ἔπειθε, βουλόμενος τὰ ἐπὶ τούτοις παρασκευάζειν, καὶ ὅπως τὰ ἔξωθεν ἕξει ὡς ἄριστα, ἔκπλουν ποιεῖται λαθὼν τὴν φυλακὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων. 3. καὶ παραμένων ἐν Χαλκιδεῦσι τά τε ἄλλα ξυνεπολέμει καὶ Σερμυλίων λοχήσας πρὸς τῇ wards.' A phrase of frequent occurrence in our author. Of ἐξ Ἀφύτιος ὁρμώμενος, a little after, the sense is, 'making his advances from,' making that his head-quarters (ὁρμητήριον) or seat of war, to sally from. So infra ii. 69, we have, ὁρμώμενος ἐκ N. Κείρων τὴν γῆν. Κείρω properly signifies to cut down trees (as Herodot. v. 63); but it is often used in the historians both in conjunction with the terms λεηλατεῖν, λωβήσασθαι, &c., and without them, as here; denoting such wasting destruction, as lays every thing bare.

3. καὶ οὕτως ἤδη, &c.] The full sense intended is, 'and thus was Potidæa now closely besieged, on both sides, [both on the land side] and also to the seaward by the fleet, which blockaded the place by sea.' Κατὰ κράτος, 'strongly, closely,' acerrimè, as Steph. explains. See my note on Acts xix. 20.

Ch. LXV. 1. ἢν μή τι—γίγνηται] 'unless some force should arrive from Peloponnesus,' 'some favourable occurrence turn up from Peloponnesus, (i. e. by aid sent from thence,) or from something that could not be reasonably calculated on, some other chance of deliverance should turn up.' Instead of ἄλλο, Krueg. observes, that we should rather have expected ἄλλοθεν, but the common reading is defended by a similar use infra v. 80, καὶ ὅποσα ἀλλήλων πολέμῳ ἢ εἴ τι ἄλλο εἶχον. Finally, for παράλογον I have here thought proper, with Pop. and Goell., to edit παρὰ λόγον. For besides that παρὰ λόγον is a more primitive form, it is scarcely to be supposed that our author, in whom we find the substantive παράλογος, would use παράλογος both as a substantive masculine and an adjective. By the something here spoken of seems meant, 'some grievous mishap' befalling the besieging force, whether from pestilence, or the death of the superior officers, or some other unexpected event in what is familiarly called the chapter of accidents. Instead of the dat. τηρήσασι the accus. might here have been expected; but the dative is, by attraction, referred to αὐτοῖς understood after ξυνεβ., and to τοῖς ἄλλοις in apposition to it. The full sense is, 'he counselled them, that all except five hundred should sail out, after watching for a favourable wind.' So infra iii. 22, we have, τηρήσαντες νύκτα χειμέριον. Instead of vulg. ἀντίσχῃ I have thought proper, with Bekk. and Goell., to edit ἀντισχῇ. Pop., indeed, retains the former, deriving the word from ἀντίσχω, like παράσχω, &c. At τῶν μενόντων sub. εἷς. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 357, 7. Render, 'he was willing to be of the number of those that remained;' i. e. 'to share the dangers of those that remained.'

2. τὰ ἐπὶ τούτοις παρασκευάζειν] The expression τὰ ἐπὶ τούτοις, scil. πράγματα, signifies properly, 'matters and affairs which come next in succession to others;' vii. 62; and, figuratively, 'such as are next to be done, are next in importance,' the next best step to be taken. Such is the sense assigned by Haack, Goell., and Arn., of whom the commentator last mentioned aptly compares a passage of Aristot. Eth. ii. 9, τὸ λεγόμενον τὸν δεύτερον πλοῦν.

3. Σερμυλίων] Such is the common reading, which is retained by Pop. and Goell.; while Bekk., from a few ancient MSS.,

πόλει πολλοὺς διέφθειρεν· ἔς τε τὴν Πελοπόννησον ἔπρασσεν ὅπη ὠφέλειά τις γενήσεται. 4. μετὰ δὲ τῆς Ποτιδαίας τὴν ἀποτείχισιν Φορμίων μὲν ἔχων τοὺς ἑξακοσίους καὶ χιλίους τὴν Χαλκιδικὴν καὶ Βοττικὴν ἐδῄου, καὶ ἔστιν ἃ καὶ πολίσματα εἷλε. LXVI. Τοῖς δ' Ἀθηναίοις καὶ Πελοποννησίοις αἰτίαι μὲν αὗται προσγεγένηντο ἐς ἀλλήλους· τοῖς μὲν Κορινθίοις, ὅτι τὴν Ποτίδαιαν, ἑαυτῶν οὖσαν ἀποικίαν, καὶ ἄνδρας Κορινθίων τε καὶ Πελοποννησίων ἐν αὐτῇ ὄντας ἐπολιόρκουν· τοῖς δ' Ἀθηναίοις ἐς τοὺς Πελοποννησίους, ὅτι ἑαυτῶν τε πόλιν ξυμμαχίδα καὶ φόρου ὑποτελῆ ἀπέστησαν, καὶ ἐλθόντες σφίσιν ἀπὸ τοῦ προφανοῦς ἐμάχοντο μετὰ Ποτιδαιατῶν. 2. οὐ μέντοι ὅ γε πόλεμός πω ξυνερράγει, ἀλλ' ἔτι ἀνακωχὴ ἦν· ἰδίᾳ γὰρ ταῦτα οἱ Κορίνθιοι ἔπραξαν. LXVII. πολιορκουμένης δὲ τῆς Ποτιδαίας οὐχ ἡσύχαζον, ἀνδρῶν τε σφίσιν ἐνόντων καὶ ἅμα περὶ τῷ χωρίῳ δεδιότες· παρεκάλουν τε εὐθὺς ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα τοὺς ξυμμάχους, καὶ κατεβόων ἐλθόντες τῶν Ἀθηναίων, ὅτι σπονδάς τε λελυκότες εἶεν καὶ ἀδικοῖεν τὴν Πελοπόννησον. 2. Αἰγινῆταί τε φανερῶς μὲν οὐ πρεσβευόμενοι, δεδιότες τοὺς edits Ἑρμ. Duker discusses the diversity of reading, but does not settle the point, only noticing the remark of Casaubon, that the Σ and spiritus asper are indifferently applied at the beginning of words. I have given the preference to Σερμυλίων, because it is, from its roughness, more likely to be the ancient form,—(and accordingly is found in Herodot. vii. 122. Scylax, p. 26, and Hecatæus ap. Steph. Byz.)—but chiefly from its occurring in an inscription in Boeckh, vol. i. 2, p. 102, referred to by Arn.; and another, i. 302, referred to by Pop.

λοχήσας] 'having laid an ambush.' The construction is, καὶ πολλοὺς [τῶν] Σερμ. διέφθειρε, λοχήσας πρὸς τῇ [ἑαυτῶν] πόλει. In ἔς τε τὴν Πελ. ἔπρασσεν ὅπη, we have a brief mode of expression for ἐς τὴν Πελ. πέμψας ἔπρασσεν ὅτι, 'devised the means whereby,' &c. Βοττικήν. See my note in Transl.

Ch. LXVI. 2. οὐ μέντοι ὅ γε πόλεμός πω ξυνερράγει] 'the war had not yet actually broken out.' The form συρρώσσω, for the more usual συρρήσσω, occurs in Dio Cass. 186, 62. 1247, 53, ὁ πόλεμος συνερρώγει. On ἔτι ἀνακωχὴ ἦν, see note supra, ch. 40. Ἰδίᾳ, 'per se,' non consultis sociis, nec adjuti ab iis.

Ch. LXVII. 1. περὶ τῷ χωρίῳ δεδιότες] A somewhat rare, though Attic, construction, found also supra i. 6, and ii. 5. iv. 71. That with the genit. is the more usual one; but the other is one derived from ancient usage, (being found in Homer and Herodot.) though sometimes, intermingled with the genit., we have, as here, the dat. with περὶ and the genit. absol.

παρεκάλουν ἐς τὴν Λακεδ.] 'invited them [to go] to Lacedæmon,' solicited them; for they could not convoke them; that being the prerogative of the Lacedæmonians alone. The ellipsis here of ἰέναι, is one not unfrequent even without a preposition, as here, denoting motion to a place. See Xen. An. v. 6, 16. Dem. 1265, ult. Ælian, V. H. iii. 37. Also in New Testament, Acts xxviii. 20. Whereas, in the present instance, the use of the preposition serves to suggest the verb.

κατεβόων] 'loudly inveighed against.' On the cause of this exacerbation, see my note in Transl.

ὅτι σπονδάς τε λελυκότες εἶεν καὶ ἀδικοῖεν] The opt. is here used because the verb is in oratione obliquâ. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 529. By σπονδὰς is meant the thirty years' peace.

2. Αἰγινῆταί τε] This, for vulg. Αἰγ. δὲ, Pop., Bekk., and Goell. have edited, on the authority of many of the best MSS.; and very properly, inasmuch as τε is the more suitable word; for, as Haack observes, the Æginetæ are recorded to have done not something different from, but the same as, the Corinthians. Render, then, 'the Æginetæ, too,' &c. On the situation of the Æginetæ at that conjuncture, see my note in Transl. and Arnold in loc.

Ἀθηναίους, κρύφα δὲ οὐχ ἥκιστα μετ' αὐτῶν ἐνῆγον τὸν πόλεμον, λέγοντες οὐκ εἶναι αὐτόνομοι κατὰ τὰς σπονδάς. 3. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, προσπαρακαλέσαντες τῶν ξυμμάχων καὶ εἴ τίς τι ἄλλο ἔφη ἠδικῆσθαι ὑπὸ Ἀθηναίων, ξύλλογον σφῶν αὐτῶν ποιήσαντες τὸν εἰωθότα, λέγειν ἐκέλευον. 4. καὶ ἄλλοι τε παριόντες ἐγκλήματα ἐποιοῦντο ὡς ἕκαστοι, καὶ Μεγαρῆς, δηλοῦντες μὲν καὶ ἕτερα οὐκ ὀλίγα διάφορα, μάλιστα δὲ λιμένων τε εἴργεσθαι τῶν ἐν τῇ Ἀθηναίων ἀρχῇ καὶ τῆς Ἀττικῆς ἀγορᾶς παρὰ τὰς σπονδάς. 5. παρελθόντες δὲ τελευταῖοι Κορίνθιοι, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἐάσαντες πρῶτον παροξῦναι τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους, ἐπεῖπον τοιάδε.

LXVIII. "Τὸ πιστὸν ὑμᾶς, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, τῆς καθ' ὑμᾶς αὐτοὺς πολιτείας καὶ ὁμιλίας ἀπιστοτέρους, ἐς τοὺς ἄλλους ἦν τι λέγωμεν, καθίστησι· καὶ ἀπ' αὐτοῦ σωφροσύνην μὲν ἔχετε, ἀμαθίᾳ δὲ

3. προσπαρακαλέσαντες — λέγειν ἐκέλευον] 'having summoned their confederates, and, besides them, such also of the allies as had any other injury to complain of at the hands of the Athenians,—and having convoked their own accustomed assembly, desired them to speak.'

The conjecture which has here been proposed, τις ἄλλος, for τις τι ἄλλο, is unnecessary, nay, detrimental to the sense; the meaning being, 'any other injury' such as that of which the Corinthians, or the Æginetans, complained. Ξύλλογος, congress, was the usual term to denote the assembly of the people of a city. So in Eurip. Orest. 720, we have ξύλλογον πόλεως ἀκούσας. By τὸν εἰωθότα we may understand the ordinary assembly, composed of all Spartans of thirty years or upwards: on which see Müller and Wachsmuth.

λέγειν ἐκέλευον] So in Eurip. Or. 875, we have, ἐπεὶ δὲ πλήρης ἐγένετ' Ἀργείων ὄχλος, κήρυξ ἀναστὰς εἶπε· τίς χρῄζει λέγειν, &c.

4. ὡς ἕκαστοι] 'respectively,' 'each in succession.'

ἕτερα οὐκ ὀλίγα διάφορα] 'other occasions of difference,' namely, from grievances suffered at the hands of the Athenians.

εἴργεσθαι—ἀγορᾶς] The words import 'an exclusion from all commercial intercourse both by sea and land.' This was effected by a formal ψήφισμα, the words of which are preserved by the Schol. on Aristophanes, Ran. 273, D. as follows: Μεγαρέας μήτ' ἀγορᾶς, μήτε θαλάττης, μητ' ἠπείρου μετέχειν, read and point as follows: Μεγαρέας μή τοι ἀγορᾶς, μήτε θαλάττης μήτε ἠπείρου, μετέχειν. In the present passage, by the term ἀγορᾶς is solely denoted commerce by land, the deprivation of which inflicted great distress on the Megareans, as appears from passages of Aristoph. Ach. 477, 729, 752, 758. See also the Schol. on Aristophanes, p. 400, 6, F. Finally, hence may be illustrated an obscure passage of Anaxandrides ap. Athen. p. 263, C.

Ch. LXVIII. This speech contains a delicate mixture of praise and censure, well adapted to rouse the pride and excite the jealousy of the Spartans against Athens. (Thirlwall.)

1. τὸ πιστὸν ὑμᾶς—καθίστησι] Render, 'The good faith, Lacedæmonians, which characterises your public polity and your private intercourse one towards another, makes you the less disposed to hearken to what may be said to the prejudice of others.' In τὸ πιστὸν we have a neuter adject. with the art. for a subst. (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. 269, 1,) as infra iii. 37; and in a similar passage of Soph. Trach. 398, τὸ πιστὸν, ὦ βασιλεῦ, τῆς ἐς τοὺς ὑπηκόους ὁμιλίας: also Plut. de Vit. Pud. 10, προεμένοι τὸ πιστόν. The passage is almost transcribed by Procop. p. 104, 29. By πολιτεία is here denoted the home 'administration of public affairs,' as opposed to that of the τὰ ἔξω πράγματα, of which we have mention a little further on. Of this use of ἄπιστος in the active sense for μὴ πειθόμενος, incredulous, examples occur elsewhere in the classical writers, (as Æschyl. Theb. 873,) and also in the New Testament.

ἐς τοὺς ἄλλους ἦν τι λέγωμεν] Render, 'if we say any thing of others;' meaning, by implication, to the prejudice of others. A harsh mode of expression, but not greater than many others in our author. Pop. here compares from Dio Cass. φαῦλον δὲ ἐς οὐδένα—ἔλεγε, and gives examples πλέονι πρὸς τὰ ἔξω πράγματα χρῆσθε. 2. πολλάκις γὰρ προαγορευόντων ἡμῶν ἃ ἐμέλλομεν ὑπὸ Ἀθηναίων βλάπτεσθαι, οὐ περὶ ὧν ἐδιδάσκομεν ἑκάστοτε τὴν μάθησιν ἐποιεῖσθε, ἀλλὰ τῶν λεγόντων μᾶλλον ὑπενοεῖτε ὡς ἕνεκεν τῶν αὐτοῖς ἰδίᾳ διαφόρων λέγουσι· καὶ δι' αὐτὸ οὐ πρὶν πάσχειν, ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ ἐσμέν, τοὺς ξυμμάχους τούσδε παρεκαλέσατε, ἐν οἷς προσήκει ἡμᾶς οὐχ ἥκιστα εἰπεῖν, ὅσῳ καὶ μέγιστα ἐγκλήματα ἔχομεν, ὑπὸ μὲν Ἀθηναίων ὑβριζόμενοι, ὑπὸ δὲ ὑμῶν ἀμελούμενοι. 3. καὶ εἰ μὲν ἀφανεῖς που ὄντες ἠδίκουν τὴν Ἑλλάδα, διδασκαλίας ἂν ὡς οὐκ εἰδόσι προσέδει· νῦν δὲ τί δεῖ μακρηγορεῖν, ὧν τοὺς μὲν δεδουλωμένους ὁρᾶτε, τοῖς δ' ἐπιβουλεύοντας αὐτούς,—καὶ οὐχ ἥκιστα τοῖς ἡμετέροις ξυμμάof ἦν thus placed in the middle of a clause from iii. 88. v. 7. The harshness in question might, indeed, be obviated by construing ἐς τοὺς ἄλλους ἀπιστ., which seems the natural construction of the words, and is defended by a passage infra iii. 37, init. διὰ τὸ ἀδεὲς καὶ ἀνεπιβούλευτον πρὸς ἀλλήλους, καὶ ἐς τοὺς ξυμμάχους τὸ αὐτὸ ἔχετε. Yet this, as Pop. and Goell. show, would either destroy the sentiment, or require us to read ἐς ἡμᾶς τοὺς ἄλλους, ἤν τι λέγωμεν: or, ἐς τοὺς ἄλλους, ἤν τι λέγωσι.

To consider the phraseology in detail, by τοὺς ἄλλους are meant the other states of Greece. Σωφροσύνην ἔχετε, 'ye have the reputation of sober-minded moderation.' Compare at ch. 84, 2, σωφροσύνη ἔμφρων. By τὰ ἔξω πράγματα are to be understood, 'the affairs of states foreign' as to Lacedæmon.

2. οὐ — τὴν μάθησιν ἐποιεῖσθε] The force of the article here may be thus expressed: 'you did not make the instruction [you might have done].' Here we have one of the phrases formed by ποιεῖσθαι and a substantive; on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. 421. Obs. 4.

τῶν λεγόντων μᾶλλον ὑπενοεῖτε, &c.] The genit. of person after ὑπονοεῖν is so rare, that Poppo regards it as depending here not upon ὑπενοεῖτε, but upon the whole formula ὡς λέγουσι, as equiv. to τὸ λέγειν, q. d. ἀλλὰ τῶν λεγόντων τὸ λέγειν ἕνεκεν τῶν αὐτοῖς ἰδίᾳ διαφόρων ὑπενοεῖτε: lit. 'you suspected the speakers of speaking from private interest.' And he compares a similar mode of expression in Xen. Cyr. v. 2, 18, ἐπενόησε δὲ αὐτῶν ὡς ἐπηρώτων ἀλλήλους, where ὡς ἐπηρ. is the same as τὸ ἐπερωτῆσαι. He might have adduced a more apposite example from Joseph. Ant. ix. 4, 3, μήδ' ὑπονοεῖν αὐτῶν ὡς πρὸς τὸ ἐχθρὸν αὐτοῦ κατειρηκότων.

In ἰδίᾳ διαφόρων, 'private interest,' we have the use of the adv. for adj., as infra ch. 95. Similar is the expression infra iii. 42, ἢ ἰδίᾳ τι αὐτῷ διαφέρει.

ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ] i. e. 'in the very act of suffering,' equiv. to ἐπειδὴ ἤδη τῷ ὄντι πάσχομεν. By several expositors, indeed, the ἔργῳ is understood in the sense prælio. And so infra ch. 105, we have ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ, and in Xen. Cyr. viii. 104, ἐν ἔργῳ. Here, however, that sense would be little suitable. And with the expression in the present passage, ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ, we may best compare the more explicit one infra iii. 112, ἅμα τοῦ ἔργου τῇ ξυντυχίᾳ, 'at the very occurrence of the affair.' In προσήκει ἡμᾶς οὐχ ἥκιστα εἰπεῖν, 'consentaneum est nos maxime dicere,' we have a somewhat rare construction (noticed by Steph. Thes. col. 4478) for the more usual one with the dative, προσήκει μοι ποιεῖν, or εἰπεῖν ταῦτα. The same is found in the expression of a similar sentiment infra vi. 16, προσήκει μοι μᾶλλον ἑτέρων ἄρχειν. On the formula οὐχ ἥκιστα — ὅσῳ, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 462. The full sense intended is, 'We have the greatest right to speak, inasmuch as we have the heaviest charges to prefer.' So infra ii. 47, ἀλλ' αὐτοὶ μάλιστα ἔθνησκον, ὅσῳ καὶ μάλιστα (vel maximè), and viii. 84, ὅσῳ μάλιστα καὶ—τοσούτῳ καί, &c.

3. ἀφανεῖς ὄντες] for ἐν τῷ ἀφανεῖ or ἀφανῶς, 'in a lurking manner.' Similarly in Dionys. Hal. A. R. p. 150, 24, we have, οὐδὲ εἰς ἀφανές που καταδὺς χωρίον, ἀλλ' ἀναφανδόν. Ὡς, utpote. Νῦν δὲ, 'But [as the case] now [stands],' 'as things now are.' On this use of the particle in antithesis, and as preceded by εἰ, see note infra ch. 122, 3. At τί δεῖ μακρηγορεῖν supply, from the context, ὑμῖν and εἰδόσι, with reference to the sentiment adverted to infra iv. 59, and iv. 77, οὐ δεῖ μακρηγορεῖν ἐν εἰδόσι. The ἄρα after εἴποτε, χοις,—καὶ ἐκ πολλοῦ προπαρεσκευασμένους, εἴποτε ἄρα πολεμήσονται; 4. οὐ γὰρ ἂν Κέρκυράν τε ὑπολαβόντες βίᾳ ἡμῶν εἶχον, καὶ Ποτίδαιαν ἐπολιόρκουν· ὧν τὸ μὲν ἐπικαιρότατον χωρίον πρὸς τὰ ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης ἀποχρῆσθαι, ἡ δὲ ναυτικὸν ἂν μέγιστον παρέσχε Πελοποννησίοις. LXIX. Καὶ τῶνδε ὑμεῖς αἴτιοι, τό τε πρῶτον ἐάσαντες αὐτοὺς τὴν πόλιν μετὰ τὰ Μηδικὰ κρατῦναι, καὶ ὕστερον τὰ μακρὰ στῆσαι τείχη, ἐς τόδε τε ἀεὶ ἀποστεροῦντες οὐ μόνον τοὺς ὑπ' ἐκείνων δεδουλωμένους ἐλευθερίας, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ὑμετέρους ἤδη ξυμμάχους· οὐ γὰρ ὁ δουλωσάμενος, ἀλλ' ὁ δυνάμενος μὲν παῦσαι, though cancelled by Poppo, Goeller, and Bekker, from several MSS. I have thought proper to retain, because the word occurs not unfrequently with πότε, (as Herodian, v. 4, 16, διηπόρουν δέ που πότε ἄρα εἴη. Ælian, V. Hist. ii. 13, μή ποτε ἄρα, and xiii. 1, γνωρίσασα οἵ τινές ποτε ἄρα ἦσαν,) and sometimes with εἴποτε, (as Xen. Cyr. i. 6, 2. See also the commentators on Lucian, ii. 26, and Plut. Moral. i. 445, referred to by Schæf. on Steph. Thes.) and not unfrequently with εἰ and εἴπερ, as 1 Cor. xv. 15. Yet, so little obvious is the force of the word, that it might easily be omitted by a copyist; while small probability is there that it would be inserted. Now here it has no inconsiderable force, as serving to point the sarcasm couched in the words εἴποτε πολεμήσονται, &c. 'if they should even be warred with,' of a long time previously prepared, namely, to vindicate by arms what they have obtained by injustice. Πολεμήσονται, by Atticism for πολεμηθήσονται, on which see Buttm. Gr. Gr. § 113, 15. At προπαρεσκευασμένους supply πολεμεῖν, from πολεμήσονται in the following context.

4. οὐ γὰρ ἄν, &c.] Here, as often after a γὰρ followed by ἄν, we have an ellips. of ἄλλως, such as is not unfrequent in Greek writers generally. In ὑπολαβόντες the ὑπὸ (as Steph. and Duk. point out) has the force of clam, denoting underhand, as opposed to open, hostility. So infra vi. 58, we have, τοῖς ἐπικούροις φράσας τὰ ὅπλα ὑπολαβεῖν. In which, as in the present passage, ὑπολαβεῖν bears the sense of secret and clandestine withdrawal, as infra 143, εἴ τε μισθῷ μείζονι πειρῷντο ἡμῶν ὑπολαβεῖν τοὺς ξένους τῶν ναυτῶν. Accordingly, the full sense of the passage is, 'They would not otherwise (i. e. had they not plotted against the liberty of Greece) have withdrawn Corcyra from us, which was in our confederacy.' Of βίᾳ ἡμῶν the sense is, 'in spite of us.' Finally, here, for vulg. ἐπιχρῆσθαι, I have edited, with Bekk., Pop., and Goell., ἀποχρῆσθαι, this being the more significant and forcible term, and indeed the more Thucydidean, occurring infra vi. 17, and vii. 42. Here the term signifies, not 'to make use of,' (like ἀποζῆν, to live upon,) but, as Bauer and Haack explain, 'multum ac liberè uti aliqua re,' literally, 'to use up or out,' 'use thoroughly.' The infinitive is here put per epexegesin, and there is here an ellipse of ὥστε, the construction being, ὥστε ἀποχρ. πρὸς τὰ ἐπὶ Θρ. [μέρη or χωρία.]

CH. LXIX. These evils of Athenian ambition are now ascribed mainly to the supineness of the Lacedæmonians, in suffering them to rise to the greatest height, before they seriously thought of checking them.

1. στῆσαι] 'to build.' A rare signification. The verb is more frequently used of the erection of statues than of temples. Indeed it is only applied to such vast erections as, like the temples and walls of the ancients, when built are fixed in their places, so as never to be removed.

Ἐς τόδε ἀεὶ stands for μέχρι τοῦδε, scil. τοῦ χρόνου, 'continually up to this period,' 'from that time to this.' From the harshness, however, of such an ellips., I have been led to suspect a corruption, and been inclined to read, from the very ingenious conjecture of Mr. G. Burges, ἐς τὸ δεῦρ' ἀεί, 'continually up to this time.' And certain it is that τὸ δεῦρο is found in a passage of Eurip. Phœn. 273; and δεῦρο τόδε in Hom. Il. xiv. 309; and τὰ δ. in Aristoph. Thesm. 666. Moreover, the conjecture is somewhat confirmed by a passage of Dio Cass. 1163, 79, εἰς δεῦρο ἀεὶ αὐτοῦ μνημονεύειν. Considering, however, that in a passage of Herodot. ix. 73, we have the very idiom in question, and consequently that, though harsh, it is not unprecedented, the above conjecture is not necessary. The words of the passage alluded to are as follows: Τοῖσι δὲ Δεκελεῦσι ἐν Σπάρτῃ ἀπὸ τούτου τοῦ ἔργου ἀτελείη τε καὶ προεδρίη διατελέει ἐς τόδε ἀεὶ ἔτι ἐοῦσα.

περιορῶν δὲ, ἀληθέστερον αὐτὸ δρᾷ· εἴπερ καὶ τὴν ἀξίωσιν τῆς ἀρετῆς ὡς ἐλευθερῶν τὴν Ἑλλάδα φέρεται. 2. μόλις δὲ νῦν ‡ γε ξυνήλθομεν, καὶ οὐδὲ νῦν ἐπὶ φανεροῖς· 3. χρὴν γὰρ οὐκ εἰ ἀδικούμεθα ἔτι σκοπεῖν, ἀλλὰ καθ' ὅτι ἀμυνούμεθα· οἱ γὰρ δρῶντες, βεβουλευμένοι πρὸς οὐ διεγνωκότας ἤδη, καὶ οὐ μέλλοντες, ἐπέρχονται. 4. καὶ ἐπιστάμεθα οἷᾳ ὁδῷ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ ὅτι κατ' ὀλίγον χωροῦσιν ἐπὶ τοὺς πέλας. 5. καὶ λανθάνειν μὲν οἰόμενοι διὰ τὸ ἀναίσθητον ὑμῶν, ἧσσον θαρροῦσι· γνόντες δὲ εἰδότας περιορᾷν, εἴπερ καὶ—φέρεται] 'and especially if he affects (præ se ferat) the praise of virtue, as if he would liberate Greece;' i. e. professing to be a liberator of Greece. On the force of εἴπερ as compared with εἴγε, see Herm. on Viger, note 311. Ἀξίωσιν here stands for ἀξίωμα, existimationem. Of ἀρετὴ in the sense merit, the use is very rare, though found in Jos. Ant. xvi. 8, 4, ὅταν ἐπαινούμενος τύχοι τό τε σῶμα, ὡς εἴη μέγας, καὶ τὴν τοξικὴν εὔστοχος, καὶ τὰ ἄλλα τὰ πρὸς ἀρετὴν ὑπὲρ ἅπαντας. And in like manner infra viii. 68, we have (of Antiphon), ἀνὴρ Ἀθηναίων τῶν καθ' ἑαυτὸν ἀρετῇ τε οὐδενὸς ὕστερος, καὶ κράτιστος ἐνθυμηθῆναι γενόμενος, καὶ ἃ ἂν γνοίη εἰπεῖν.

2. μόλις] 'tardily.' So infra 141, we have χρονίους ξυνιέναι. For vulg. τε, I have, with Poppo, edited γε, on the conjecture of Stephens, confirmed as it is by at least one MS. Bekk. and Goell. retain τε, which, I allow, may possibly be the true reading, as referred to the following καὶ οὐδὲ νῦν: and indeed a similar use is found infra iii. 40, and iv. 95. Supposing it, then, to be the true reading, the reference will thus be to καὶ οὐδὲ νῦν, 'It has both been a difficult matter to bring us together, and even now that we are met, we do not see what we ought to vote about.' This, however, involves something forced and frigid; whereas in γε, as referred to μόλις, we have something neat and elegant. Similarly in Nicand. Ther. 281, we have, μόλις γε μὲν ἔκφυγοι ἦϊσαν. Of ἐπὶ φανεροῖς the sense is, 'for any definite objects.'

3. οἱ δρῶντες—ἐπέρχονται] Render, 'the active, the decided, and the undallying advance against those who are yet unresolved what to do.' Pop. and Goell. well point out the correspondence here existing between the terms βεβουλευμένοι and οὐ διεγνωκότας, as also that between ἤδη and οὐ μέλλοντες: and the latter adds, that 'of these two participles, δρῶντες, βεβουλευμένοι, that which stands first contains, according to the usage of Greek writers, the reason or cause of the other participle;' hence δρῶντες, βεβουλευμένοι is equivalent to 'decided, because up and doing.' Similar is a sentiment in Æschyl. Agam. 1222, σὺ μὲν κατεύχει, τοῖς δ' ἀποκτείνειν μέλει, 'You are praying, while they are taking measures to destroy you.' See on i. 86. Hence may be illustrated an obscure passage of Æschyl. Agam. 1327, χρονίζομεν γάρ, (we delay,) οἱ δὲ τῆς μελλοῦς κλέος Ἥδεσθαι πατοῦντες, οὐ καθεύδουσιν χερί, where Blomfield renders, 'illi vero tarditatis gloriam conculcantes, (aspernati, et celeritatem præferentes,) manu non quiescunt.'

4. καὶ ἐπιστάμεθα] A not unfrequent use of καὶ, by which it is nearly equiv. to ἀλλὰ, imo; the literal sense being, 'and [now],' as in Aristoph. Pac. 402, καί σοι φράσω τι πρᾶγμα δεινὸν καὶ μέγα. See more infra iv. 99, 1. In such a case the word serves to impart earnestness to what is said. Render, 'Yea, we know in what manner, and by what gradual approaches,' &c. In the words following, καὶ ὅτι κατ' ὀλίγον χωροῦσιν, which are exegetical, the καὶ may be rendered, as often, by atque adeo. And so it is used infra vii. 48, 68, and 71. Οἷος, in such a context as the present, generally implies what is wrong. So, on this same subject, to the Athenians is elsewhere applied the opprobrious epithet of ἄδικον ὁδὸν ἰόντων. On the thing itself, compare what is said infra iii. 11.

5. τὸ ἀναίσθητον] for τὴν ἀναισθησίαν, as in Dio Cass. 322, 9. The term properly denotes want of the power of perceiving any thing, (as in Galen, cited by Steph. Thes.) though only as understood of bodily sense. Here it bears the sense of unobservance, inadvertence. And so in Longin. de Subl. § 6, we have, ἀλλοτρίων μὲν ἐλεγκτικώτατος ἁμαρτημάτων, ἀνεπαίσθητος τῶν ἰδίων. The passage of our author is well illustrated by one (evidently written with a view to it) of Dion. Hal. p. 1085, 4, πολλῆς δ' εἶναι μωρίας καὶ ἀναισθησίας ἔργον· οὐ γὰρ δὴ φιλανθρωπίας οὐδὲ μετριότητος.

Of εἰδότας περιορᾷν the sense is, 'know, and permit,' 'knowingly permit.'

ἰσχυρῶς ἐγκείσονται. 6. ἡσυχάζετε γὰρ μόνοι Ἑλλήνων, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, οὐ τῇ δυνάμει τινά, ἀλλὰ τῇ μελλήσει ἀμυνόμενοι, καὶ μόνοι οὐκ ἀρχομένην τὴν αὔξησιν τῶν ἐχθρῶν, διπλασιουμένην δὲ καταλύοντες. 7. καίτοι ἐλέγεσθε ἀσφαλεῖς εἶναι, ὧν ἄρα ὁ λόγος τοῦ ἔργου ἐκράτει. 8. τόν τε γὰρ Μῆδον αὐτοὶ ἴσμεν ἐκ περάτων γῆς πρότερον ἐπὶ τὴν Πελοπόννησον ἐλθόντα, ἢ τὰ παρ' ὑμῶν ἀξίως προαπαντῆσαι· καὶ νῦν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους οὐχ ἑκάς, ὥσπερ ἐκεῖνον, ἀλλ' ἐγγὺς ὄντας, περιορᾶτε· καὶ, ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐπελθεῖν αὐτοί, ἀμύνεσθαι βούλεσθε μᾶλλον ἐπιόντας, καὶ ἐς τύχας πρὸς πολλῷ δυνατωτέρους ἀγωνιζόμενοι καταστῆναι· ἐπιστάμενοι καὶ τὸν βάρβαρον αὐτὸν περὶ αὑτῷ τὰ πλείω σφαλέντα, καὶ πρὸς αὐτοὺς τοὺς οὐκ ἀρχομένην τὴν αὔξ.—διπλασιουμένην δὲ, &c.] 'not the incipient increase, but the doubled strength.' Αὔξησιν the editors have with reason preferred to the reading of not a few MSS., δύναμιν, which is evidently a mere gloss, though a very ancient one, since it is found in a passage, plainly imitated from the present, of Jos. Ant. iii. 2, 1, οἱ δὲ ἀρχομένην δύναμιν ἐχθρῶν πειρώμενοι καταλύειν ἀγαθοὶ συνεῖναι, μᾶλλον ἢ οἱ προκόψασαν μείζω κωλύοντες γενέσθαι. And so in Dionys. Hal. p. 104, 17, we have, οὐκ ἀρχομένην τῶν Ῥωμαίων ἀρχὴν ἐκώλυσαν, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ μέγα προηκούσῃ συμφέρεσθαι ἔμελλον, where, however, for ἀρχήν, the true reading is perhaps αὔξην, an old Attic word for αὔξησις, found in the best writers. Finally, αὔξησιν in the present passage is strongly confirmed by a passage, evidently written in imitation of it, in Plut. Rom. 25, οὐκ ᾤοντο δεῖν περιορᾶν, ἀλλ' ἐνίστασθαι τῇ αὐξήσει καὶ κολούειν τὸν Ῥώμυλον, (which might induce one to conjecture, in the above passage of Dionysius, for ἐκώλυσαν, ἐκόλουσαν, did not the κωλύοντες of the passage of Josephus sufficiently defend it). Also by another in Zonar. Hist. ii. 7, ult. οὐκ ᾤοντο δεῖν περιορᾶν, ἀλλὰ κωλύειν τὴν αὔξησιν.

6. ἡσυχάζετε γάρ, &c.] The γάρ has reference to a clause omitted, '[And no wonder that the Athenians so act,] for ye rest quiet and on the defensive;' as infra vii. 11. Of οὐ τῇ δυνάμει—ἀμυνόμενοι, the sense is, 'repelling an enemy not by arms, but by procrastination,' 'quasi (to apply the words of Livy) cunctando possetis rem restituere,' as it were always delaying and never doing the thing, or being ever about to do, but never doing it; the very characteristic of the Lacedæmonians.

7. καίτοι ἐλέγεσθε] 'and yet ye were said.' For ἐλέγεσθε three MSS. have λέγεσθε, which has been followed by most translators. The imperfect, however, is sufficiently defended by ἐκράτει just after: and to change the two words, in translating, to present tenses, would not a little detract from the point and significancy of the passage; for the repute in question is represented not only as exceeding all just bounds, 'a repute exceeded by the reality,' but as past and gone. Comp. infra ii. 42. Of ἀσφαλεῖς the sense is well represented by our expression, safe and sure. So in Soph. Œd. Tyr. 617, we have, φρονεῖν γὰρ οἱ ταχεῖς οὐκ ἀσφαλεῖς: and Eurip. Phœn. 608, Ἀσφαλὴς γὰρ ἔστ' ἀμείνων ἢ θρασὺς στρατηλάτης. Or we may render, with the Schol., Port., Goell., and Pop., 'cautious and circumspect.'

8. τὸν Μῆδον] Meaning, 'the king of the Medes.' An idiom found not only in the Greek, but also in the Latin language, where we have Romanus and such like terms similarly used. In ἐκ περάτων γῆς we have a somewhat hyperbolical phrase, occurring in the Greek writers generally, to denote a very remote country. Of ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐπελθεῖν, &c. the sense is, 'instead of yourselves advancing upon and attacking them,' as i. 69. iii. 11. iv. 1. With the phrase ἐς τύχας καταστῆναι, 'to be cast upon the dubious chances' of war, compare another similar one infra v. 103, ἐπὶ τὰς ἀφανεῖς ἐλπίδας καθίστανται: and Æschyl. Ag. 1247, ἀπήγαγ' εἰς τοιάσδε θανασίμους τυχάς. The participle ἐπιστάμενοι stands for καίπερ ἐπιστάμενοι. In the phrase περὶ αὐτῷ τὰ πλείω σφαλέντα, we have, not what Arnold recognises, a nautical metaphor, (q. d. being wrecked upon himself; being himself, as it were, the rock upon which his own fortune split,) but rather one derived from a person who, by extreme haste or inadvertence in his steps, lets one foot be in the way of the other, and thus stumbles, or even falls, through his own fault.

The phrase is elsewhere found infra vi. 33, ἦν τε—σφαλῶσι, κἂν περὶ σφίσιν αὐτοῖς τὰ πλείω πταίωσιν. Dionys. Hal. Ant. vii. 4, ὁ μὲν πεζὸς αὐτῶν στρατὸς περὶ ἑαυτῷ σφαλεὶς ἔφυγεν. The phrase, indeed, occurs elsewhere in that writer, and in Dio Cass.

καὶ πρὸς αὐτοὺς — περιγεγενημένους] 'And that we, in our combats with the Athenians, are indebted for our safety more to their blunders, than to any succour from you.' Πολλά, for πολλάκις. At ἐπεί αἵ γε, conjoin ἐπεί and γε, and render for indeed. In ὑμέτεραι ἐλπίδες, 'the hope of you,' i. e. of your assistance, we have pronoun possessive for genit. of personal.

9. καὶ μηδεὶς ὑμῶν ἐπ' ἔχθρᾳ — ἀδικησάντων] Wasse compares a similar passage in Isocr. Paneg. § 36, χρὴ δὲ κατηγορεῖν μὲν ἡγεῖσθαι τοὺς ἐπὶ βλάβῃ τοιαῦτα λέγοντας, νουθετεῖν δὲ τοὺς ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ λοιδοροῦντας. And much to the present purpose is a passage of Plut. Discr. Am. 38, οὔτε γὰρ ὑπ' εὐνοίας ἀλλ' ὑπ' ὀργῆς οἴονται γίνεσθαι τὸν ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ τοῦ λέγοντος γινόμενον λόγον, οὔτε νουθεσίαν, ἀλλὰ μέμψιν εἶναι, where for οὔτε read οὔγε. Compare also Dio Cass. 814, 74. Dionys. Hal. i. 146. So in Clem. Alex. 121, 6, we have ἐπιτίμησις and μέμψις similarly distinguished; as also in Themist. 277, ἐπίπληξις and ὄνειδος.

Ch. LXX. 1. εἴπερ τινὲς καὶ ἄλλοι] In this use of εἴπερ with τις ἄλλος, Matth. Gr. § 608, recognises a superlative force. Perhaps, however, it may rather be regarded as merely a formula of putting oneself on an equality with others. Καὶ ὅσον ὑμῶν καὶ ὡς πᾶν διαφέροντας, 'how widely, nay, how totally different from yourselves!' At πᾶν there is an ellips. of κατὰ or εἰς, which we have supplied in Æsch. Eum. 52 and 83. Ag. 665. Eurip. Her. 575. Similar, too, in expression, is a passage of Æsch. Prom. 997, πολλοῦ γε, καὶ τοῦ παντὸς ἐλλείπει, (where Blomf. cites the Schol. on Plato, 165, ὅλῳ καὶ παντὶ διαφέρειν,) and one of Aristot. οὐ μικρόν τι οὕτως ἢ οὕτως εὐθὺς ἐκ νεῶν ἐθίζεσθαι, μᾶλλον δὲ τὸ πᾶν. Procop. 130, 12, τῷ παντὶ ἄμεινον.

2. Now follows the most remarkable passage in the speech,—in a lengthened and most elaborate contrast, which the speaker proceeds to draw, between the Lacedæmonian and the Athenian character. So celebrated was this among the ancients, that almost every part of it has been, as I shall show, the subject of studied imitation by the Latin classical writers, and the whole by Maximus Tyr. Diss. xx. p. 204, seqq. Reiske.

οἱ μέν γε νεωτεροποιοί, &c.] 'they are continually projectors of novelty; quick to devise, and prompt to carry into execution, their plans; you, content to keep what you already have, devising nothing fresh in plan,—and in execution, not even accomplishing what is barely necessary.' Of the term νεωτεροποιὸς the more usual sense is innovator: here, however, it signifies a projector, ever fruitful in new projects. So Procop. 47, 17, we have, νεωτ. ὢν φύσει. The word is confined to our author and the writers by whom he has been imitated, as Dio Cass., Josephus, Dionys. Hal., and Procop. The sentiment is, I would observe, well illustrated by a passage of Aristoph. Eccles. 578, 588, Ἀλλὰ πέραινε μόνον μήτε δεδραμένα, μήτ' εἰρημένα πω πρότερον. Μισοῦσι γάρ, ἢν τὰ παλαιὰ πολλάκις θεῶνται, Ἀλλ' οὐ μέλλειν, ἀλλ' ἅπτεσθαι καὶ δὴ χρὴ ταῖς διανοίαις, Ὡς τὸ ταχύνειν χαρίτων μετέχει πλεῖστον παρὰ τοῖσι θεαταῖς. ΠΡΑΞ.—Καὶ μὴν ὅτι μὲν χρηστὰ διδάξω πιστεύω τοῦσδε θεατὰς, Εἰ καινοτομεῖν ἐθελήσουσιν, καὶ μὴ τοῖς ἥθεσι λίαν Τοῖς ἀρχαίοις ἐνιατρίβειν· τοῦτ' ἔσθ', ὃ μάλιστα δέδοικα. ΒΑΕΠ.—Περὶ μὲν τοίνυν τοῦ καινοτομεῖν μὴ δείσῃς· τοῦτο γὰρ ἡμῖν Δρᾶν

Ἀθηναίους πολλὰ ἡμᾶς ἤδη τοῖς ἁμαρτήμασιν αὐτῶν μᾶλλον ἢ τῇ ἀφ' ὑμῶν τιμωρίᾳ περιγεγενημένους· ἐπεὶ αἵ γε ὑμέτεραι ἐλπίδες ἤδη τινάς που καὶ ἀπαρασκεύους διὰ τὸ πιστεῦσαι ἔφθειραν. 9. καὶ μηδεὶς ὑμῶν ἐπ' ἔχθρᾳ τὸ πλέον ἢ αἰτίᾳ νομίσῃ τάδε λέγεσθαι. αἰτία μὲν γὰρ φίλων ἀνδρῶν ἐστὶν ἁμαρτανόντων· κατηγορία δὲ ἐχθρῶν ἀδικησάντων. νεωτεροποιοί, καὶ ἐπινοῆσαι ὀξεῖς καὶ ἐπιτελέσαι ἔργῳ ὃ ἂν γνῶσιν· ὑμεῖς δὲ τὰ ὑπάρχοντά τε σώζειν, καὶ ἐπιγνῶναι μηδέν, καὶ ἔργῳ οὐδὲ τἀναγκαῖα ἐξικέσθαι. 3. αὖθις δὲ οἱ μὲν καὶ παρὰ δύναμιν τολμηταί, καὶ παρὰ γνώμην κινδυνευταί, καὶ ‡ἐν τοῖς δεινοῖς εὐέλπιδες· τὸ δὲ ὑμέτερον, τῆς τε δυνάμεως ἐνδεᾶ πρᾶξαι, τῆς τε γνώμης μηδὲ τοῖς βεβαίοις πιστεῦσαι, τῶν τε δεινῶν μηδέποτε οἴεσθαι ἀπολυθήσεσθαι. 4. καὶ μὴν καὶ ἄοκνοι πρὸς ὑμᾶς μελλητάς, καὶ ἀποδημηταὶ πρὸς ἐνδημοτάτους· οἵονται γὰρ οἱ μὲν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ ἄν τι κτᾶσθαι, ὑμεῖς δὲ τῷ ἐπελθεῖν καὶ τὰ ἑτοῖμα ἂν βλάψαι. 5. κρατοῦντές τε τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἐξέρχονται, καὶ νικώμενοι ἐπ' ἐλάχιστον ἀναπίπτουσιν. 6. ἔτι δὲ τοῖς μὲν σώμασιν ἀλλοτριωτάτοις ὑπὲρ τῆς πόλεως χρῶνται, τῇ γνώμῃ δὲ οἰκειοτάτῃ ἐς τὸ πράσσειν τι ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς. 7. καὶ ἃ μὲν ἂν ἐπινοήσαντες μὴ ἐξέλθωσιν, οἰκεῖα στέρεσθαι ἡγοῦνται· ἃ δ' ἂν ἐπελθόντες κτήσωνται, ὀλίγα πρὸς τὰ μέλλοντα τυχεῖν πράξαντες. 8. ἦν δ' ἄρα καὶ του

With the words ἐπιτελέσαι ἔργῳ ὃ ἂν γνῶσιν, compare similar ones (evidently imitated from thence) in Herodian ii. 9, 2, νοῆσαί τε ὀξὺς, καὶ τὸ νοηθὲν ἐπιτελέσαι ταχὺς, and others in Procop. 51, 36, et sæpe al. Of ἐπιγνῶναι μηδέν the sense is, 'to devise nothing new,' lit. 'nothing besides or in addition to the present.' Ἐξικέσθαι here signifies exsequi, as in Soph. Aj. 1043, ἃ δὴ κακοῦργος ἐξίκοιτ' ἀνήρ: and Æschyl. Ag. 272, καί τις τόδ' ἐξίκοιτ' ἂν ἀγγέλων τάχος. Eurip. El. 612. Aristoph. Ran. 1176.

3. αὖθις δὲ οἱ μὲν καὶ παρὰ δύναμιν—ἀπολυθήσεσθαι] 'Again, they are enterprisers even beyond their strength, and venturers beyond the limits of prudence, and in adversity ever full of hope. Your characteristic it is, ever to accomplish what rather falls short of your ability—to distrust even the surest dictates of your reason—and in adversity to fancy there will be no end to your troubles.' That by παρὰ γνώμην is meant 'beyond the dictates of sound judgment,' appears from the antithetical words καὶ τῆς γνώμης μηδὲ τοῖς βεβαίοις πιστεῦσαι. Answering to παρὰ γν. κινδυνευταί here is παρὰ γν. διακινδυνεύειν infra iv. 19. Of the words οἱ μὲν παρὰ δύναμιν — κινδυνευταί, we have evident imitations in Dionys. Hal. 535, 38, παρὰ γνώμην τολμηταὶ γίνονται, καὶ ὑπὲρ δύναμιν μαχηταί. Procop. 123, 25, τολμήσειν μὲν παρὰ γνώμην, κινδυνεύσειν δὲ παρὰ δύναμιν. Similar Livy xlv. 23, Atheniensium populum fama est celerem et supra vires audacem esse ad conandum: Lacedæmoniorum cunctatorem et vix in ea quibus fidit ingredientem. Before τοῖς δεινοῖς I have retained the common reading ἐν, which has been needlessly by the recent editors altered to ἐπὶ, and that not only from the weight of authority derived from MSS., but from there being, in reality, no sanction in classical usage for the latter, while for the former abundantly sufficient exists, as will appear from the following examples in Eurip. Suppl. 727, ἐν τοῖς δεινοῖς ἄλκιμος. Xen. Anab. ii. 6, 7, ἐν τοῖς δεινοῖς φρόνιμος. Themist. p. 126, ἐν τοῖς δεινοῖς τεθαρρηκότες. Procop. p. 259, ἐν τοῖς δεινοῖς εὔελπιν. Dionys. Hal. vi. p. 804. By an evident imitation of these words, τῆς τε δυνάμεως ἐνδεᾶ πρᾶξαι, Plutarch, Solon, has, ἐνδεέστερον τῆς δυνάμεως οὐδὲν ἔπραξε. Similarly, too, we have in a passage of the same writer, Vit. Othon. ἐ. τῆς δόξης ἐστρατήγει: and in Lucian, iii. 540, ὅπερ ἂν ἐνδεέστερον ᾖ τῆς χρείας.

4. καὶ μὴν καὶ ἄοκνοι, &c.] 'Furthermore, they are bustlers, as opposed to you procrastinators — roamers, to you keepers at home: for they think, that by their absence they may gain something more; you imagine that by aiming at further acquisitions, you may endanger your present possessions.' Ἀποδημητὴς is so rare a term, that I have met with no example of it elsewhere. The compound ἀναποδ. is found in Philo Jud. 359, ἀναποδημηταὶ πρὸς ἐνδεδημηκότας, for such (from the words being evidently written in imitation of these of our author) ought undoubtedly to be there read for vulg. ἀναποδήμητοι. To turn from words to things, according to the character here given of the Athenians as ἀποδημηταὶ, gadders abroad, Aristides, t. ii. 174, describes them as φιλέκδημοι. The Lacedæmonians, on the other hand, were proverbially home-stayers: insomuch that, as a symbol of this, they had stamped on their coins the figure of a tortoise. Τῷ ἐπελθεῖν, 'by making attacks on others.'

5. κρατοῦντές τε τῶν—ἀναπίπτουσιν] 'They, when victorious, push their advantages to the utmost, and, when defeated, are the farthest from desponding or desisting.' Ἀναπίπτ. is susceptible of two senses, either to fall back, or to despond. The latter, adopted by Goeller, is the more agreeable to classical usage; while the former is the more suitable to the context. Perhaps, however, the sense may be, 'desist from their attempt.' So the Schol. explains by ἀναπαύεσθαι. And similarly in Liban. Or. 717, we have, ἀναπίπτειν καὶ παύεσθαι opposed to σπονδῇ προστιθέναι. Yet ἐπ' ἐλάχιστον, as opposed to ἐπὶ πλεῖστον, seems to require the physical sense fall back.

6. ἔτι δὲ τοῖς μὲν σώμασιν ἀλλοτριωτάτοις ὑπὲρ τῆς πόλεως χρῶνται] 'their bodies, too, they employ for the state, as if they were any one's else but their own;' equivalent to τοῖς ἑαυτῶν σώμασι χρῶντες ὥσπερ οὖσιν ἀλλοτριωτάτοις. A strikingly bold mode of expression, almost verging on the fault ascribed by Longinus de Subl. to Timæus, namely, that of 'the harsh and frigid,' (nearly answering to the concetto of the Italians,) and which he shows to be not without parallel even in Plato and Herodotus, as when the latter terms handsome women ἀλγηδόνας ὀφθαλμῶν. Yet the present expression, however peculiar, is far from being unprecedented. Thus Abresch and Poppo have adduced passages from Isocrat. and Lysias, where we have ἀλλοτρίας ψυχὰς κεκτῆσθαι to signify, 'animas quasi ad se non pertinentes.' And the same I have noticed in Jos. Bell. v. 14, 4, τὰς ψυχὰς χωρίσαντες ἀπὸ τῶν σωμάτων, ἀμφοτέροις ὡς ἀλλοτρίοις ἐχρῶντο: and Philo Jud. 881, στρεβλούμενοι κεκαινουργημέναις αἰκίαις, ὥσπερ ἀλλότρια ἐπιφερόμενοι σώματα, καταφρονητικῶς ἠλόγουν τῶν φοβερῶν, which passage was probably had in view by Greg. Naz. p. 41, where he says of the martyrs, that they bore all the sufferings inflicted on them with alacrity, ὥσπερ ἐν ἀλλοτρίοις σώμασι.

Of the words following, τῇ γνώμῃ δὲ οἰκειοτάτῃ ἐς τὸ πράσσειν τι ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς, the sense is, 'But their mind (judgment, counsel) they use as the nearest and dearest thing in the world, that they may employ it in her service.' In nearly the same way the words are understood by Goeller and Arnold.

7. καὶ ἃ μὲν ἂν ἐπινοήσαντες—τυχεῖν πράξαντες] 'And as to whatever they, after planning, may not attain to, they think themselves deprived of their own, (or what belonged to them;) but whatever they so pursue as to gain, they esteem trifling compared with what they may chance in future to attain to.' Such is clearly the general sense intended by ὀλίγα πρὸς τὰ μέλλοντα τ. πρ., though the construction is too irregular to be satisfactorily adjusted. The participle πράξαντες is usually supposed to stand for the infin. πρᾶξαι, as dependent on ἡγοῦνται. And so it is viewed by Matthiæ. To this, however, Goell. objects, on the ground that ὀλίγα πρὸς τὰ μέλλοντα τυχεῖν cannot stand for ὀλίγα πρὸς ἐκεῖνα, ὧν μέλλουσι τυχεῖν. Of the same opinion, too, is Pop., who, with Bred., Haack, and Goell., would conjoin τυχεῖν with πράξαντες, and regard the expression as a periphrasis, supposing τυχεῖν to depend on ἡγοῦνται—according to which they lay the sense down as follows: 'quæ (for si quæ) vero aggressi [armis] consecuti fuerint exigua se forte fortuna peregisse judicant, si cum futuris comparentur.' Or, (as Goeller expresses it,) 'Si vero quæ laboribus consecuti perfecerint, perexigua se fortè fortuna peregisse judicant, præquam quæ posthac se consecuturos sperant.' It must, indeed, be confessed that there is something forced and frigid in this sort of expression forte fortuna peregisse; though that may be diminished by supposing (as Dr. Arnold seems to do) that we have here a certain idiom corresponding to that by which in our own language we similarly speak of any one's being so fortunate as to accomplish his object. Be that as it may, we may with the present compare the similar sentiment (also on the subject of the Athenians) infra iv. 55, οἷς τὸ μὴ ἐπιχειρούμενον ἀεὶ ἐλλιπὲς ἦν τῆς δοκήσεώς τι πράξειν. Also a passage closely imitated from this of our author in Pollux vi. 132, ὃς μικρὸν πᾶν, ὃ πεποίηκεν, ἡγεῖται, πρὸς ἃ βούλεται· ὃς ὃ πέπραχε, δοκεῖ μικρότερον οὗ πράξει, i. e. 'greater than what he shall hereafter achieve.' From which it plainly appears that the above writer, in thus expressing the sentiment contained in the present passage, proceeded on the supposition that ἡγοῦνται was there to be repeated from the preceding. And had

the imitation in question been perceived by the editors, it would have spared them the trouble of much needless conjecture.

8. ἢν δ' ἄρα καὶ — χρείαν] Render, 'And if, indeed, they even fail in their endeavour after any object, they make up the deficiency by hoping for and expecting something else in its stead. Evidently imitated from the present are the following passages. Plutarch in Pyrrho, 30, sub init. ταῖς μὲν εὐτυχίαις ἐπ' ἄλλας χρώμενος ἀφορμαῖς, ἃ δὲ ἔπταιεν ἑτέροις βουλόμενος ἀναπληροῦν πράγμασιν. Liban. Orat. 307, B. πόσοι δημεύσεις γενναίως ἐνηνόχασιν ἀντελπίσαντες πλοῦτον ἕτερον. Dio Cass. 571, τὴν φυγὴν τῆς μάχης μᾶλλον φοβηθέντες, καὶ ἐν μὲν ταύτῃ καὶ κρατήσειν ἀντελπίσαντες, κ. τ. λ. Pollux, vi. 133, ὃς δ' ἂν διαμαρτῇ τολμήσας, ὁμοῖον ἐλπίσας. Hence it is well said of the Athenians, by Eubulus ap. Athen. p. 47, 6, κάπτοντες ἄερας, ἐλπίδας σιτούμενοι. And in allusion to this it is said in Aristoph. Vesp. 306, sq. Πόθεν ὠνησόμεθ' ἄριστον; ἔχεις ἐλπίδα χρηστήν τινα νῶν, ἢ πόρον Ἕλλας ἱερόν, ('vectigal Græciæ sacrum;' similar to the Ciceronian 'vectigal est parsimonia.') And so in Max. Tyr. Diss. xxxvi. 2, ἀεὶ δὲ τὸ παρὸν ἐνδεέστερον ἡγούμενοι τοῦ ἀπόντος, καὶ τὸ κτηθὲν ἔλαττον τοῦ προσδοκωμένου.

μονοὶ γὰρ ἔχουσι—γνῶσι] Render, 'for they alone alike both have and hope for what they set their mind upon, (i. e. they place the possession of things present, and the hope of things future, on the same footing,) by reason of their celerity in setting about what they decide on doing.'

9. καὶ ταῦτα μετὰ πόνων, &c.] 'And in this way do they drudge on, with toils and perils, through the whole of their lives.' Of ταῦτα πάντα μοχθοῦσι, &c. the literal sense is, 'all these things do they drudge at.' Of μοχθεῖν thus used with an accus., examples occur in Xen. Mem. ii. 1, 17, τἄλλα πάντα μοχθήσουσι: and Aristoph. Plut. 517, ταῦτα μοχθήσουσι. Much to the present purpose is what Eurip. says of Athens, Suppl. 323, ἐν τοῖς πόνοισιν αὔξεται. Of the words following, καὶ ἀπολαύουσιν ἐλάχιστα τῶν ὑπαρχόντων διὰ τὸ ἀεὶ κτᾶσθαι, the sense is, 'And they least of all men enjoy what they possess, because they are always seeking to acquire something fresh.' In other words, 'with them, between possession and desire, there is no room for enjoyment.' Though, indeed, enjoyment, in a certain sense, they had, even in their labours. So in Eurip. Suppl. 577, it is said of Athens, πονοῦσα πολλά, πολλ' εὐδαιμονεῖ. And such is implied in the words following, μήτε ἑορτὴν ἄλλο τι ἡγεῖσθαι ἢ τὸ τὰ δέοντα πρᾶξαι—a celebrated saying, of which several imitations have been adduced by Abresch, but not one quite to the purpose, and for the most part only serving to illustrate the use of ἑορτὴ in the sense, not of a holyday, but a holiday-feasting and pleasure; for such always accompanied the ἑορτή. And so in Xen. Cyr. i. 5, 1, we have, καὶ εἴποτ' ἐν ἑορτῇ εὐωχία προσγένοιτο. As closely imitated from the present passage, I would notice the following similar ones, in Dio Cass. 179, 17, μήτε εὐδαιμονίαν ἄλλο τι ἢ τὰ δέοντα πράττειν νομίζοντες. Liban. Epist. 580, τῶν πόνων ἀνάπαυλαν αὐτοῖς νομίζων τοὺς πόνους, and Orat. p. 20, D. Wasse here aptly compares from Sallust in Orat. Marii, 'Sudorem, pulverem, et alia talia relinquant nobis, quibus illa epulis jucundiora sunt.' And he might have added a passage of Joseph. Bell. iv. 4, καθάπερ εἰς ἑορτὴν, πρὸς τὰς παρατάξεις ἐπειγόμενον. Finally, not dissimilar is the saying of the Divine Saviour, (Joh. iv. 34,) ἐμὸν βρῶμά ἐστιν ἵνα ποιῶ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ πέμψαντός με.

In the words following, ξυμφορὰν οὐχ ἧσσον ἡσυχίαν ἀπράγμονα ἢ ἀσχολίαν ἐπίπονον, we have what suggests a reason for the foregoing. Render, 'for they deem inactive quietude no less an evil than toilsome occupation,' i. e. they prefer laborious occupation to indolent repose. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Aristid. i. 389, D. (of the Romans,) ὥστε ἅπαντας μὲν ἀργίαν συμφορὰν ἡγεῖσθαι, τὰς δὲ πράξεις ἀφορμὰς ὧν εὔχονται νομίζειν. Compare also Isocr. ad Demon. p. 3. Aristid. ii. 157, B.

10. ὥστε, εἴ τις—εἴποι] 'So that if any one were to sum up the whole by saying, that they were born neither to enjoy rest themselves, nor to let others enjoy it, he would speak the truth.' So in Xen. Mem. ii. 1, 9, we have the Athenians described as βουλόμενοι πολλὰ πράγματα ἔχειν αὐτοῖς τε καὶ ἄλλοις παρέχειν. An evident imitation of this passage may be found in Procop. 47.

φαίη πεφυκέναι ἐπὶ τῷ μήτε αὐτοὺς ἔχειν ἡσυχίαν, μητε τοὺς ἄλλους ἀνθρώπους ἐᾶν, ὀρθῶς ἂν εἴποι. LXXI. Ταύτης μέντοι τοιαύτης ἀντικαθεστηκυίας πόλεως, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, διαμέλλετε· καὶ οἴεσθε τὴν ἡσυχίαν οὐ τούτοις τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἀρκεῖν, οἳ ἂν τῇ μὲν παρασκευῇ δίκαια πράσσωσι, τῇ δὲ γνώμῃ, ἢν ἀδικῶνται, δῆλοι ὦσι μὴ ἐπιτρέψοντες· ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῷ μὴ λυπεῖν τε ἄλλους καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀμυνόμενοι μὴ βλάπτεσθαι τὸ ἴσον νέμετε. 2. μόλις δ' ἂν πόλει

Ch. LXXI. 1. Ταύτης μέντοι—νέμετε] Of this not a little obscure passage, the true sense seems to be as follows: 'And yet, Lacedæmonians, though such a state be arrayed against you, ye go on dallying; and ye deem, not that peace is longest theirs, who while they do what is right and just, yet plainly evince a disposition not to put up with wrong, if it should be offered to them; but ye esteem the equitable to consist in doing no injury to others, and in repelling injury, so as not to be harmed.' To examine the phraseology in detail, διαμέλλω is a word only found in Thucyd. and his imitators, as Dio Cass., Dionys. Hal., Arrian, Joseph., and Pausan. Τὴν ἡσυχίαν, 'a peaceful state,' 'peace,' as infra iii. 9. v. 40, and Herodot. i. 169. Of τούτοις τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἀρκεῖν, the sense is, 'holds out longest to them,' as Xen. Cyr. vi. 2, 31, ἐπὶ πλεῖστον ἀρκεῖ. Of τῇ παρασκευῇ the sense is disputed. The word most frequently, and in our author, chiefly signifies, apparatus belli; as infra ii. 80 and 100, and often in the historians: and so it is here interpreted by Poppo, who supposes that we are to understand persons who, though they have provided themselves with a great apparatus for war, are yet not thereby moved to make aggression on others; as though τῷ ἔργῳ had been written. But why, then, it may be asked, did not our author so write? I must still adhere to the opinion, that by τῇ παρασκευῇ is meant 'in [vitæ] institutione.' And so in a passage of Plato, cited by Steph. Thes., we have the word used in the sense institutio, and often in that of institutum, ratio, e. g. p. 307, περὶ ὅλην τὴν τοῦ ζῆν παρασκευήν. Thus, also, institutio vitæ in Latin, (as Cic. de Off. i. 7, magis ad institutionem vitæ, i. e. the whole ordering, conducting of their lives,) and institutio, to signify conduct. In this manner, too, the Schol. must have taken the word, since he explains it by τῇ διαγωγῇ, meaning thereby manner of life, conduct, vitæ ratione, as in Polyb. xii. 3, 8, and Xen. Hist. vii. 3, 5, αἰσθόμενοι τὴν παρασκευὴν αὐτοῦ.

In δῆλοι ὦσι we have participle for infinitive; on which use see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 548, 5. At μὴ ἐπιτρέψοντες supply τὴν ἀδικίαν from ἀδικῶνται, the literal sense being, 'will not put up with the injury.' Of the words ἐπὶ τῷ μὴ λυπεῖν—τὸ ἴσον νέμετε, the sense is somewhat doubtful. The phrase τὸ ἴσον νέμειν signifies properly, 'to deal out to every one what is fair and equal,' 'to deal (i. e. act) justly.' Accordingly, most expositors here, including Poppo, explain the phrase 'justitiam coletis hac conditione ut,' 'on the principle that,' &c. And so Dr. Arnold paraphrases: 'Other men deal justly with their neighbours, but still they purpose to defend themselves if others do not deal justly with them; you, on the other hand, deal justly, not with any such purpose as this, but rather on the principle, or with the purpose, of neither doing harm, nor yet of suffering harm yourselves by attempting to defend yourselves.' Yet in this there is something so harsh and frigid, that I still prefer the interpretation, long ago propounded by myself, which has since been adopted by Bredow, Müller, and Goeller, 'æquum ponitis in eo, si,' &c.; 'ye make justice consist in,' &c. A sense, this, far more agreeable to the context, though, I admit, less borne out by the usus loquendi; for of this use I am not enabled to adduce any positive and decisive example in Greek; though such certainly exists in the Latin tribuo as used in the phrase tribuere alicui quidpiam, for affirmare de aliquo quod quidpiam in eo sit. See Facciol. Lex. Lat. Nearly allied, however, to this, is the use of νέμω for ἔχω, 'to account any person or thing to be' so or so. Thus in Æschyl. Agam. 75, we have, ἰσχὺν νέμοντες ἐπὶ σκήπτροις. Finally, to advert to the irregularity of ὁμοίᾳ παροικοῦντες ἐτυγχάνετε τούτου· νῦν δ',—ὅπερ καὶ ἄρτι ἐδηλώσαμεν,—ἀρχαιότροπα ὑμῶν τὰ ἐπιτηδεύματα πρὸς αὐτούς ἐστιν. 3. ἀνάγκη δὲ, ὥσπερ τέχνης, ἀεὶ τὰ ἐπιγιγνόμενα κρατεῖν· καὶ ἡσυχαζούσῃ μὲν πόλει τὰ ἀκίνητα νόμιμα ἄριστα, πρὸς πολλὰ δὲ ἀναγκαζομένοις ἰέναι πολλῆς καὶ τῆς ἐπιτεχνήσεως δεῖ. 4. διόπερ καὶ τὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀπὸ τῆς πολυπειρίας ἐπὶ πλέον ὑμῶν κεκαίνωται. 5. μέχρι μὲν οὖν τοῦδε ὡρίσθω ὑμῶν ἡ βραδυτής· νῦν δὲ τοῖς τε ἄλλοις καὶ Ποτιδαιάταις, ὥσπερ ὑπεδέξασθε, βοηθήσατε, κατὰ τάχος ἐσβαλόντες ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν, ἵνα μὴ ἄνδρας τε φίλους καὶ ξυγγενεῖς τοῖς ἐχθίστοις πρόησθε, καὶ ἡμᾶς τοὺς ἄλλους ἀθυμίᾳ πρὸς ἑτέραν τινὰ ξυμμαχίαν τρέψητε. 6. δρῶμεν δ' ἂν ἄδικον οὐδὲν, οὔτε πρὸς θεῶν τῶν ὁρκίων οὔτε πρὸς ἀνθρώπων τῶν αἰσθανομένων· λύουσι γὰρ σπονδὰς οὐχ οἱ δι' ἐρημίαν ἄλλοις προσιόντες, ἀλλ' οἱ μὴ βοηθοῦντες οἷς ἂν ξυνομόσωσι. 7. βουλομένων δὲ ὑμῶν προθύμων εἶναι, μενοῦμεν· οὔτε γὰρ ὅσια ἂν ποιοῖμεν μεταβαλλόμενοι, οὔτε ξυνηθεστέρους ἂν ἄλλους εὕροιμεν. 8. πρὸς τάδε βουλεύεσθε εὖ, καὶ τὴν Πελοπόννησον πειρᾶσθε μὴ ἐλάσσω ἐξηγεῖσθαι ἢ οἱ πατέρες ὑμῖν παρέδοσαν."

LXXII. Τοιαῦτα μὲν οἱ Κορίνθιοι εἶπον· τῶν δὲ Ἀθηναίων ἔτυχε γὰρ πρεσβεία πρότερον ἐν τῇ Λακεδαίμονι περὶ ἄλλων παροῦσα, καὶ construction, (which here tends not a little to obscure the sense,) it is well observed by Poppo, that in strict propriety our author ought to have written ἀλλ' οἳ ἂν νέμωσι, instead of which he says, ἀλλὰ νέμετε, as though in the preceding part of the passage, a negative being joined with οἴεσθε, he had expressed himself by καὶ οὐκ οἴεσθε τὴν ἡσυχίαν τούτοις ἀρκεῖν.

Of λυπεῖν here the sense is to aggrieve; and so the term is equivalent to ἀδικεῖν.

2. ὁμοίᾳ] i. e., as the Schol. explains, τὰ ἴσα ζηλούσῃ, sub. ἐπιτηδεύματα. Ἀρχαιότροπα, antiquated, old-fashioned; namely, in opposition to the novel plans of the Athenians. The word is rare, though found in Procop. de Ædif. p. 53, 8, (a passage evidently imitated from the present,) ἀρχαῖαι δὲ οὖσαι (scil. αἱ πόλεις) καὶ τῶν οἰκητόρων ἀρχαιότροπα τὰ ἐπιτηδεύματα ἔχουσαι. Dio Cass. 55, 67. Vit. Pyth. § 167. In this sense ἀρχαῖος occurs in Æschyl. Prom. 317, ἀρχαῖ' ἴσως σοι φαίνομαι λέγειν τάδε.

3. ὥσπερ τέχνης] Supply διὰ or περί. Render, 'as is the case of an art.' We have here, as Poppo observes, a brevity of expression for ἀνάγκη δὲ ἀεὶ (καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἐπιτηδεύμασι) τὰ ἐπιγιγνόμενα κρατεῖν, ὥσπερ τέχνης ἀεὶ τὰ ἐπιγ. κρατεῖ. At πρὸς πολλὰ δὲ—ἰέναι supply πράγματα, 'going about many undertakings.' The same ellipsis is observable in Plutarch, Themist. c. 3, τῷ Θεμιστοκλεῖ τὸν δῆμον ἐπὶ πολλὰ κινοῦντι, καὶ μεγάλας ἐπιφέροντι καινοτομίας: and Luke x. 41, τυρβάζῃ περὶ πολλά. Of the words following, πολλῆς τῆς ἐπιτεχνήσεως δεῖ, the sense is, 'there is need of much additional contrivance, by many superadded inventions,' nova instituta. Of this passage evident imitations exist in Liban. Epist. 650, οἷα γὰρ ἐν μεγάλῳ πολέμῳ, καὶ μῆκος ἔχοντι, πολλῶν δεῖ τῶν ἐπιτεχνήσεων. Procop. ii. 12, σίβονται μὲν καὶ τεθήπασι τὸν παλαιὸν χρόνον, οὐδὲν δὲ ταῖς ἐπιτεχνήσεσι διδόασι πλέον, (where, for πλέον, read πλέονα.) Joseph. 1315, 28, πολλῆς ἐπιτεχνησέως δεομένην (scil. πολιορκίαν).

4. τῆς πολυπειρίας] 'their being much exercised in business.' Art. for poss. pron. Of this rare word πολυπ. I have noted an example in Diod. Sic. Ἐπὶ πλέον ὑμῶν, for ἐ. π. τῶν ὑμῶν, or ἢ τὰ ὑμῶν. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 453.

5. μέχρι μὲν οὖν τοῦδε ὡρίσθω ὑμῶν ἡ βραδυτής] We have here, as Poppo observes, a brief form of expression for μέχρι τοῦδε προελθοῦσα ἐνταῦθα ὡρίσθω, q. d. 'Enough of this dilatoriness; here let it stop.' So Procop. p. 60, 30, μέχρι τούτου γε, καὶ μὴ περαιτέρω, διαπεπράχθω τὸ ἔγκλημα: and an anonymous writer in Matth. Gr. Gr. μέχρι τούτου πεπαίσθω, with which compare a similar form of expression at 1 Pet. iv. 3. In this idiom we have always implied the words 'and here let it cease.' Sometimes there is a blending of both expressions, as in a passage of Chrysost. t. i. p. 33, 13, ὥστε μέχρι τούτου στῆσαι τὰ τῆς ῥᾳθυμίας. Liban. Or. 608, C. Similarly in a passage of St. Luke, xxii. 51, we have, ἐᾶτε ἕως τούτου.

6. πρὸς θεῶν τῶν ὁρκίων] 'in the sight of the gods, who hold cognizance over oaths.' See note infra vii. 71, 4. In this sense πρὸς is used in a passage of Antipho, t. v. 618, Reiske, δικαιοτέρων καὶ ὁσιωτέρων καὶ πρὸς θεῶν καὶ πρὸς ἀνθρώπων γένοιτο ὑμῖν. Also in Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 20, τρόπον, ὃς μόνος μὲν πρὸς θεῶν ἀσεβὴς, ὃς μόνος μὲν πρὸς ἀνθρώπων αἰσχρός. Such, too, was its use as far back as the time of Homer. So Il. i. 339, τὼ δ' αὐτὼ μάρτυροι ἔστων Πρός τε θεῶν μακάρων, πρός τε θνητῶν ἀνθρώπων. By τῶν αἰσθανομένων understand 'such as are endued with a perception thereof,' i. e. of the sacredness of the obligation involved in the jus jurandum.

7. προθύμων εἶναι] 'to be prompt [to aid us].' A phrase also occurring infra iii. 38, 6, and which may be Latinized by studiosi, (as in Xen. Hist. ii. 3, 18, where it is followed by dat. of pers., and vi. 5, 38, by εἰς and an accus.) or officiosi, as Xen. Ages. vi. 4, πειθόμενος ἑτέροις πρόθυμος ὤν. And in a passage of Hdot. ix. 92, we have the word used, as here, in the absolute sense, to denote the mutual studium of allies one to another: ἡμῖν προθύμους ἔσεσθαι συμμάχους. In the words following, ὅσια ἂν ποιοῖμεν, the term ὅσια signifies, not pia, (i. e. piè,) but is rather equiv. to δίκαια and εὔορκα, which terms are opposed in Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 29, εὔορκοι καὶ ὅσιοί ἐστε. And so we have ὅσιος opposed to οὐ δίκαιος in a passage of our author infra v. 104; and again, it stands for δίκαιος in Book iii., τὸν ἐπιόντα πόλεμον ὅσιον εἶναι ἀμύνεσθαι. Thus, too, it is used, in this very phrase, Herodot. ix. 79, ὅσια μὲν ποιεῖν, ὅσια δὲ λέγειν: and, in the opposite phrase, ὅσια παθεῖν, Eurip. Hec. 788, εἰ μὲν ὅσιά σοι παθεῖν δοκῶ. Jos. Ant. viii. 9, 1, τῶν δικαίων καὶ ὁσίων ἔργων. Dionys. Hal. ii. 697. In such cases, however, ὅσιον does not stand for δίκαιον in the usual acceptation of that word, but in the sense conveyed by the Latin fas, namely, 'what is right or just by divine law and the rules of religion;' whereas the term δίκαιος is most frequently used to denote 'what is right by human laws, and the reciprocal duties of man to man.'

Of μεταβαλλόμενοι the sense is, 'changing sides,' as in Jos. Ant. xvii. 10, 3, καὶ τοῖς μεταβαλλομένοις ἐκέλευον, &c.; and in another passage of our author, adduced by Steph. Thes. in v. ἢν δέ τι ἀντικόπτῃ, εὐθὺς μεταβάλλεσθαι. Ξυνηθεστέρους, 'more congenial,' namely, to our manners and habits, which words are expressed in another passage infra vii. 67, where we have the complete phrase, τῷ ἡμετέρῳ τρόπῳ ξυνήθη ἐστί. Of the word in this sense I have met with but one example elsewhere, Plato, 752, C. ἱκανῶς ξυνήθεις—αὐτοῖς γενόμενοι. Yet this use of it is noticed by Hesych. (though with reference to some other passage, not the present) as follows: Συνήθεις· ὁμοιοτρόπους, ἐν ὁμοιοτρόποις ἤθεσι τεθραμμένους. And rightly; for the words are synonymous. So in Plut. de Discr. Adul. 9, we have, φιλίας ὁμοιότροπον καὶ συνηθείας: and in our author infra iii. 10, εἰ μὴ—πάλλα ὁμοιότροποι, (where see note,) and vii. 55. And such is the exact sense here. The Corinthians and Lacedæmonians were συνήθεις καὶ ὁμοιότροποι, as being alike of Dorian race, and with institutions in many respects agreeing.

8. καὶ τὴν Πελοπόννησον — παρέδοσαν] 'and be it your endeavour that the supremacy over Peloponnesus, transmitted to you from your forefathers, may not, in your hands, suffer diminution.' There is something unusual in the phraseology, which has puzzled the commentators. But the signification ruling or directing in ἐξηγ. is required by the context, and confirmed by kindred passages at i. 76. iii. 93. vi. 85: as also by Plutarch ad Princ. inerud. ὀνειδιζόμενος εἰ τοῖς παισὶν ἐλάττονα παραδώσει τὴν ἀρχήν. Indeed I suspect it to have been a proverbial form of expression, since we find it in the oath sworn to by the Ephebi, as preserved by Lycurg. contra Leocr. p. 203, ἀμυνεῖν τῇ πατρίδι καὶ ἀμείνω παραδώσειν. Finally, ἐλάσσω stands for an adverb, or adverbial phrase, signifying 'in a less complete state.'

Ch. LXXII. 1. τῶν δὲ Ἀθηναίων ἔτυχε γὰρ, &c.] The sense here is clear, but the construction (as in similarly framed sentences elsewhere, i. 115. vii. 48. viii. 30, and Herodot. iv. 149, 200. ix. 109) not a little involved. In the present passage the words, according to the regular construction, (as laid down by Goeller,) would have run thus: τοῖς δὲ Ἀθηναίοις ὡς ᾔσθοντο τῶν λόγων, ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς παριτητέα ἐς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους εἶναι, τῶν μὲν ἐγκλημάτων πέρι μηδὲν ἀπολογησομένους ὧν αἱ πόλεις ἐνεκάλουν, δηλῶσαι δὲ περὶ τοῦ παντὸς, ὡς οὐ ταχέως αὐτοῖς βουλευτέον εἴη, ἀλλ' ἐν πλείονι σκεπτέον. 2. καὶ ἅμα τὴν σφετέραν πόλιν ἐβούλοντο σημῆναι ὅση εἴη δύναμιν, καὶ ὑπόμνησιν ποιήσασθαι τοῖς τε πρεσβυτέροις ὧν ἤδεσαν, καὶ τοῖς νεωτέροις ἐξήγησιν ὧν ἄπειροι ἦσαν· νομίζοντες μᾶλλον ἂν αὐτοὺς ἐκ τῶν λόγων πρὸς τὸ ἡσυχάζειν τραπέσθαι ἢ πρὸς τὸ πολεμεῖν. 3. προσελθόντες οὖν τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, ἔφασαν βούλεσθαι καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐς τὸ πλῆθος αὐτῶν εἰπεῖν, εἴ τι μὴ ἀποκωλύοι. 4. οἱ δ' ἐκέλευόν τε ἐπιέναι, καὶ παρελθόντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἔλεγον τοιάδε.

ἔδοξε παριτητέα ἐς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους εἶναι, ἔτυχε γὰρ αὐτῶν πρεσβεία πρότερον ἐν τῇ Λακεδαίμονι παροῦσα. Or thus: τῶν δὲ Ἀθηναίων τοῖς πρέσβεσι παρατυχοῦσι τότε παρὰ τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, καὶ τῶν λόγων αἰσθομένοις, ἔδοξε παριτητέα εἶναι. The nature of such constructions is discussed at large by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 630, 631; and Goell. in his note here, who thus opens out the principle on which such passages are to be explained: 'Sententia causalis, per γὰρ incipiens, ei, cujus causam complectitur, a Græcis anteponi solet. Primam igitur sedem quum sententiæ causali assignent, fit ut subjectum orationis primarium sententiæ causali adstruatur.' In other words, 'The Greeks always put the subject of a proposition as near the beginning of the sentence as possible, when there is a transition from one subject to another. The new subject being thus placed first, the reason of the predicate immediately follows, before the predicate itself.'

On the words παριτητέα ἐς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους εἶναι—ἀπολογησομένους, Goell. remarks, that the accus. here follows, from the Attic idiom, by which verbal adjectives in τεος are followed not only by a dat., but by an accus., on account of the notion of the word χρὴ or δεῖ tacitly involved in them. Thus, in the present instance, παριτητέα is equivalent to παριέναι δεῖν. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 447, 4, where, among other examples, is adduced a passage infra viii. 65, οὔτε μισθοφορητέον εἴη ἄλλους ἢ τοὺς στρατευομένους. On βουλευτέον see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 447.

2. εἴη] The opt. is here used, from the thing being expressed in oratione obliquâ. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 529. At δύναμιν understand κατά. Here may be applied the rule laid down by Matthiæ, § 295, 3, that 'in dependent propositions the subject is often wanting, because it is construed with the verb of the preceding proposition.' In ὑπόμνησιν ποιήσασθαι we have a circumlocution for ὑπομνῆσαι.

3. εἴ τι μὴ ἀποκωλύοι] Poppo, from a few MSS., edits ἀποκωλύει, and would prefer εἰ μή τι, as more agreeable to the sense; which is not 'si aliquid non impedit,' but 'nisi quid impedit.' And indeed the indic. is found in good writers, as Xen. An. iv. 8, 4, εἰ μή τι κωλύει: and Cyr. vi. 3, 3, εἰ μή τι ἀναγκαῖον ἀποκωλύει. But the optative is equally proper, and is here, from the preponderance of authority from MSS., preferable. As to εἰ μή τι, the change is unnecessary; the sense of the common reading being the very same, though the collocation is far less usual; yet it is occasionally found in our author, as also other similar transpositions of particles that are found in pairs.

Ch. LXXIII. In this address the speaker commences with expatiating on the glorious origin of the Athenian empire, and thence urging the claims of their country on the gratitude and respect of Lacedæmon, from its important services at the time of the Persian invasion. (Ch. 73, 74.) He then proceeds to vindicate at large the conduct of the Athenians towards their allies. The course they had pursued was prescribed, he contends, not so much by ambition as by necessity—a necessity arising in part out of Sparta's unreasonable jealousy and estrangement. Their dominion was fairly gained, and was from self-preservation maintained. (Ch. 75.) He next proceeds to say, that they ought not therefore to be blamed, but praised for having abused their power so little. No other people in the same position would either have shown greater moderation, or τέροις ξυμμάχοις ἐγένετο, ἀλλὰ περὶ ὧν ἡ πόλις ἔπεμψεν· αἰσθόμενοι δὲ καταβοὴν οὐκ ὀλίγην οὖσαν ἡμῶν, παρήλθομεν οὐ τοῖς ἐγκλήμασι τῶν πόλεων ἀντεροῦντες, (οὐ γὰρ παρὰ δικασταῖς ὑμῖν οὔτε ἡμῶν οὔτε τούτων οἱ λόγοι ἂν γίγνοιντο,) ἀλλ' ὅπως μὴ ῥᾳδίως περὶ μεγάλων πραγμάτων, τοῖς ξυμμάχοις πειθόμενοι, χεῖρον βουλεύσησθε· καὶ ἅμα βουλόμενοι περὶ τοῦ παντὸς λόγου τοῦ ἐς ἡμᾶς καθεστῶτος δηλῶσαι, ὡς οὔ τε ἀπεικότως ἔχομεν ἃ κεκτήμεθα, ἥ τε πόλις ἡμῶν ἀξία λόγου ἐστί. 2. καὶ τὰ μὲν πάνυ παλαιὰ τί δεῖ λέγειν, ὧν ἀκοαὶ μᾶλλον λόγων μάρτυρες ἢ ὄψις τῶν ἀκουσομένων; τὰ δὲ Μηδικά, καὶ ὅσα αὐτοὶ ξύνιστε,—εἰ καὶ δι' ὄχλου μᾶλλον ἔσται ἀεὶ προβαλλομένοις,—ἀνάγκη λέγειν· καὶ γὰρ ὅτε ἐδρῶμεν, ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ have governed their subjects more mildly; least of all, the Spartans themselves, whose supremacy was no sooner established, than it was felt to be intolerable. (Chap. 76, 77.) He then bids them, instead of being urged on by their allies to a precipitate commencement of hostilities, to reflect on the uncertainty of war; and proposes that their differences should be decided by arbitration. In the whole speech itself, however able, we have an egregious instance of special pleading.

1. ἡ μὲν πρέσβευσις, &c.] We have a similar commencement to a similar address of the Athenians, infra vi. 82; and in both our author may have had in view a passage of Herodot. ix. 27, Ἐπιστάμεθα μὲν σύνοδον τήνδε μάχης εἵνεκα συλλεγῆναι πρὸς τὸν βάρβαρον, ἀλλ' οὐ λόγων. ἐπεὶ δὲ, κ. τ. λ. The speech of the Athenians, vindicating their right to this honour and priority, throws light on both the speeches in Thucydides. Ἐς ἀντιλογίαν τοῖς ὑμετέροις, for τῶν ὑμ.; the verbal noun taking the case of its verb. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 396. So, just after, καταβοὴν takes the genit., because its verb does, as in Dionys. Hal. i. 428, Sylb. πολλῇ τῇ καταβοῇ τῶν βουλευτῶν ἐχρῶντο, and 483. The word καταβοὴ (which is one of rare occurrence) signifies lit. a vehement outcry against.

οὐ γὰρ — γίγνοιντο] The construction is, οἱ γὰρ λόγοι γίγνοιντο ἂν παρὰ ὑμῖν οὐ δικασταῖς (οὖσιν), οὔτε ἡμῶν οὔτε τούτων: 'for our words would be addressed to you (coram vos), who are not judges either of us or them.' Ἀξία λόγου, for ἀξιέπαινα, 'worthy of praise and glory.' So in Isæus, p. 17, we have, οἱ Ξ. τοῦ λόγου ἄξιοι.

2. καὶ τὰ μὲν πάνυ παλαιὰ τί δεῖ λέγειν] Imitated by Joseph. Bell. iv. 3, 10, καὶ τί δεῖ τὰ τῶν προγόνων λέγειν; and Livy, ix. 34, 'Quid ego antiqua repetam?' and xxviii. 42. So in Herodot. ix. 27, we have, παλαιὰ καὶ καινὰ λέγειν. Ἀκοαὶ λόγων we may, with Goeller, explain as standing for λόγοι ἀκουσθέντες: or the genit. may be taken for an adject. 'hearsay reports.' For the vulg. ὄψεις, I have, with Pop. and Goell., edited ὄψις, from several MSS. Bekker, indeed, retains the common reading, but injudiciously, since internal evidence is quite in favour of ὄψις, from its being far more likely that ὄψις would be altered to ὄψεις (as more correspondent to ἀκοαὶ) than the contrary. Of the words, a little after, εἰ καὶ δι' ὄχλου μᾶλλον ἔσται ἀεὶ προβαλλομένοις, the sense is, 'even though it be rather irksome to us to be always bringing them forward—speak of them we must.' Bredow points after ἔσται, not προβαλλομένοις, supposing an ellips. at δι' ὄχλου of ὑμῖν. This, however, at once does violence to the construction, and injures the sense. The common punctuation and the sense above assigned are confirmed by numerous parallel passages and imitations which I have noted, e. g. Aristoph. Conc. 888, κεἰ γὰρ δι' ὄχλου τοῦτ' ἐστὶ τοῖς θεωμένοις: and Philostr. p. 810, fin. τὸ ἀπέριττον καὶ μὴ δι' ὄχλου εἶναι αὐταῖς. Pausan. iv. 4, 5. Dio Cass. 317, 64, et sæpe al. Of προβάλλεσθαι the literal sense is to put forward. Here it signifies fig. properare; similar to which is the sense, proponere, it bears in Dio Cass. 470, 36, ὅτι οὐδὲ ἐκεῖνοί τι τῶν προβληθέντων ὑπ' αὐτοῦ πράξουσι. Also that of commemorare, (though as said of a person,) Hdot. iv. 46, ἔθνος οὐδὲν ἔχομεν προβαλέσθαι περὶ σοφίης. Δι' ὄχλου stands for ὀχλώδες, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. p. 1149. At καὶ γὰρ ὅτε ἐδρῶμεν, &c. the γὰρ has reference to something omitted, q. d. '[And reason is there that we should;] for when we achieved [them].' By ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ is meant not simply, as the words literally import, 'for good or benefit,' but, 'for the common good;' that word being delicately suppressed, in order to avoid an exprobratio beneficii. Of the term ἐκινδυνεύετο the sense is, 'they were accomplished with peril.' In this passive use the word occurs also supra i. 78, and infra ii. 43: as also in Demosth. 432, 25, οἱ πολιτευόμενοι δι' ὧν τὰ μέγιστα κινδυνεύεται τῇ πόλει. Lucian, ii. 593. Arrian, E. A. ii. 6, 7, 8. Pind. Nem. v. 26, αἰδέομαι μεγὰ εἰπεῖν κεκινδυνευμένον.

Of the words ἧς τοῦ μὲν ἔργου—στερισκώμεθα, the sense is disputed. Poppo and Goeller assign the following: 'of the actual doing [of the good], ye have had your share, but we must have ours also of the glory.' Yet, as Arnold observes, 'though such expresses what is true in itself, it would be little to the purpose here had in view, which is to represent the Athenians as having the world themselves, and therefore as being entitled to the gratitude of Greece, thus to allow any share of it to others.' Accordingly he would interpret as follows: 'of the solid fruit of that common benefit ye have had your share; but let us, too, have our share of the credit of it.' Such, indeed, was the very sense long ago propounded by myself in my Translation: and retaining this, I would render, 'of which common benefit, as ye have had your share of the substance, let us not be wholly deprived—if that can do us any good—of the mention,' i. e. by way of gaining credit to ourselves. The term μετέχειν, when followed by μέρος, as here, (and also in a passage of Isocr. p. 116, ἡγοῦμαι περὶ τοῦ πολεμεῖν ἢ μὴ, προσήκειν μάλιστα τούτοις συμβουλεύειν, οἵπερ καὶ τῶν κινδύνων πλεῖστον μέρος μεθέξουσιν,) should be rendered 'to have one's share of any thing with another.'

4. φαμὲν γὰρ Μαραθωνί τε μόνοι προκινδυνεῦσαι] 'for we affirm that at Marathon it was we who adventured alone to commence the combat against the barbarian.' Here, though the προ in προκινδ. might bear the sense of pro in Latin, 'in defence of,' yet the term μόνοι absolutely requires us to assign the sense 'ante alios pugnasse,' (what in Homer we have similarly expressed by πρόμαχοι γενέσθαι:) the very sense, indeed, which is also to be assigned to the famous Demosthenean outburst: Οὐ μὰ τοὺς ἐν Μαραθῶνι προκινδυνεύσαντας τῶν προγόνων! In this manner, too, the term is used by Dio Cass. 176, 59, τοὺς δὲ ἱππέας προεβάλετο προκινδυνεῦσαι σφίσιν. Polyb. vi. 3. Isocr. Paneg. c. 22. In the term μόνοι we have an oratorical hyperbole; for it is well known the Platæans joined the Athenians; but here, from their being only few in number, they are not mentioned. Μαραθῶνι, 'at Marathon.' The preposition ἐν in such cases, while most frequently expressed in the poets, is usually in the prose writers omitted. See Poppo, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 406, 6. By the dative after προκινδυνεῦσαι we have intimated, though not expressed, the sense against, from the idea of fighting being inherent in the term προκινδ.

On the words, a little after, ἐσβάντες ἐς τὰς ναῦς, Pop. cites a passage of Aristid. ii. 440, as noticing the gravity and dignity of the thing, for the Athenians to venture ἐκλείπειν τὴν πόλιν καὶ εἰς τὰς ναῦς ἐκβῆναι. To this, I would notice, an evident reference is had by Plutarch, Themist. 9, in the words ἀναγκαῖον—τὴν πόλιν ἀφέντας ἐμφῦναι ταῖς ναυσὶν, where it is strange the editors should not have seen that the true reading is no other than that preserved in one MS., ἐμβῆναι.

After ὅπερ ἔσχε we have μὴ following; from the term ἔχειν, which here stands for κατέχειν or ἐπέχειν, (as in a similar passage of Herodot. v. 101, τὸ δὲ μὴ λεηλατῆσαι ἑλόντας σφέας τὴν πόλιν ἔσχε τόδε. See also i. 158.) being one of those verbs involving in them an idea of denial. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 534, note 4, 3. Of κατὰ πόλεις the sense is, 'city by city.' Ἀδυνάτων ἂν ὄντων, 'since they would have been unable.' On ἂν with a participle, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 597, 6.

αὐτὸν ἐπιπλέοντα τὴν Πελοπόννησον πορθεῖν, ἀδυνάτων ἂν ὄντων πρὸς ναῦς πολλὰς ἀλλήλοις ἐπιβοηθεῖν. 5. τεκμήριον δὲ μέγιστον αὐτὸς ἐποίησε· νικηθεὶς γὰρ ταῖς ναυσὶν, ὡς οὐκέτι αὐτῷ ὁμοίας οὔσης τῆς δυνάμεως, κατὰ τάχος τῷ πλέονι τοῦ στρατοῦ ἀνεχώρησεν. 5. ὡς οὐκέτι αὐτῷ ὁμοίας οὔσης τῆς δυνάμεως] 'considering his power to be no longer like what it had been before;' as infra ii. 80, ὁ περίπλους οὐκέτι ἔσοιτο ὁμοῖος, i. e. 'would be no longer what it had been before.' Such Goell. and Arn., following Portus, suppose to be the sense intended. Yet so feeble does this appear, that I must still adhere to the opinion propounded by myself in Translation, that ὁμοίας here stands for ἴσης, ἀντιπάλου, paris, equal in force. Render, 'inasmuch as he had no longer a force of equal match [with the Greeks].' Or, if we express the force of the article, 'inasmuch as the force he had was no longer of equal match [with his enemies].' Poppo, indeed, seems to doubt whether the word is ever so used. But that it is, I am enabled to prove by several examples, of which the following must suffice. Herodot. ix. 96, οὐκ ἐδόκεον ὁμοῖοι εἶναι, 'they did not seem a match [for their enemies].' Hom. Od. xix. 240, (of Ulysses,) παῦροι γὰρ Ἀχαίων ἦσαν ὁμοῖοι αὐτῷ, 'few of the Achæans were his match.' So also in Latin we have par non esse hosti, and often par esse simply, without the dat. Remarkably corresponding to the Greek and Latin, is the English idiom 'to be a match for any one,' and, 'to be any one's match;' the word match being derived from A.-Sax. maca, par, æqualis.

Ch. LXXIV. 1. Τοιούτου] i. e. 'such an event as this,' so momentous. Σαφῶς δηλωθέντος, 'it being clearly evinced,' i. e. wherein it was, &c. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 563. Of ἐν ταῖς ναυσὶ τῶν Ἑλλήνων τὰ πράγματα ἐγένετο the sense is, 'that the fortunes of Greece were seated in, rested on, depended on her navy.' The phrase is one of frequent occurrence in Aristides. Ἄνδρα στρατηγόν. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 438. Of ἐς τὰς τετρακοσίας the sense is, 'towards making up the 400.' So difficult is it to justify the number τετρ. (for the exact number, as we learn from Herodotus, was 378,) that Dobree would cancel the words ἐς τὰς τετρακοσίας. But that is merely cutting the knot, which may perhaps admit of being untied.

Bekker and Goeller have done wrong in cancelling the τῶν before δύο μοιρῶν, such being not only defended by the similar use of the article supra i. 104, and infra ii. 10 and 47, and very many passages of other writers which might be adduced; but also required by the nature of the expression in question, in which the art. is indispensable; for, unless by its definite force, no other sense could be contained in the expression but 'two parts;' whereas the sense is evidently, 'the two parts taken from a whole divided into three such parts.' Of αἰτιώτατος ἐγένετο the sense is, 'was the chief cause,' 'was chiefly instrumental.' Αἴτιος is a word, both in our author and other Attic writers, of middle signification. Before ναυμαχῆσαι it might seem that τοῦ should have had place: but the word is generally dispensed with in such a case. See Goell., and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 542, note 1, 6, β. Of ἐν τῷ στενῷ ναυμαχῆσαι the sense is, 'in the strait [of Salamis].' So in Herodot. viii. 60, 22, we have, τὸ γὰρ ἐν στενῷ ναυμαχέειν ἡμέων ἐστὶ, the words of Themistocles; where the article would be as much out of place as it is here in place.

For vulg. σαφέστατα the two best MSS. have σαφῶς. But the former is confirmed by the following passages (evidently written in imitation of the present) in Joseph. Ant. xix. 1, 18, τοῦτο καὶ σαφέστατα ἔσωσε τοὺς ε. κ.τ.λ. Liban. Or. in Julian. § 117, οὗ (read ὃ) δὴ καὶ σαφέστατα σωτὴρ μάλιστα ἐτιμήσατε ἄνδρα ξένον τῶν ὡς ὑμᾶς ἐλθόντων. 2. προθυμίαν δὲ καὶ πολὺ τολμηροτάτην ἐδείξαμεν, οἵ γε, ἐπειδὴ ἡμῖν κατὰ γῆν οὐδεὶς ἐβοήθει,—τῶν ἄλλων ἕδη μέχρι ἡμῶν δουλευόντων,—ἠξιώσαμεν, ἐκλιπόντες τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα διαφθείραντες, μήδ' ὡς τὸ τῶν περιλοίπων ξυμμάχων κοινὸν προλιπεῖν, μηδὲ σκεδασθέντες ἀχρεῖοι αὐτοῖς γενέσθαι, ἀλλ' ἐσβάντες ἐς τὰς ναῦς κινδυνεῦσαι, καὶ μὴ ὀργισθῆναι ὅτι ἡμῖν οὐ πρυετιμωρήσατε. 3. ὥστε φαμὲν οὐχ ἧσσον αὐτοὶ ὠφελῆσαι ὑμᾶς ἢ τυχεῖν τούτου· ὑμεῖς μὲν γὰρ ἀπό τε οἰκουμένων τῶν πόλεων, καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ τὸ λοιπὸν νέμεσθαι, ἐπειδὴ ἐδείσατε ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν καὶ οὐχ ἡμῶν τὸ πλέον, ἐβοηθήσατε· (ὅτε γοῦν ἥμεν ἔτι σῶοι, οὐ παρεγένεσθε) ἡμεῖς δὲ ἀπό τε τῆς οὐκ οὔσης ἔτι ὁρμώμενοι, καὶ ὑπὲρ τῆς ἐν βραχείᾳ ἐλπίδι οὔσης κινδυνεύοντες, ξυνεσώσαμεν ὑμᾶς τε, τὸ μέρος, καὶ ἡμᾶς αὐτούς. 4. εἰ δὲ προσεχωρήσαμεν πρότερον τῷ Μήδῳ, δείσαντες, ὥσπερ καὶ ἄλλοι, περὶ τῇ χώρᾳ, ἢ μὴ ἐτολμήσαμεν ὕστερον ἐσβῆναι ἐς τὰς ναῦς, ὡς διεφθαρμένοι, οὐδὲν ἂν ἔτι ἔδει ὑμᾶς, μὴ ἔχοντας ναῦς ἱκανὰς, ναυμαχεῖν· ἀλλὰ καθ' ἡσυχίαν ἂν αὐτῷ προεχώρησε τὰ πράγματα ᾗ ἐβούλετο.

LXXV. Ἆρ' ἄξιοί ἐσμεν, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, καὶ προθυμίας ἕνεκα τῆς τότε καὶ γνώμης ξυνέσεως, ἀρχῆς γε ἧς ἔχομεν τοῖς Ἕλλησι μὴ οὕτως ἄγαν ἐπιφθόνως διακεῖσθαι; 2. καὶ γὰρ αὐτὴν τήνδε ἐλάἐγένετο τῆς στρατίας. Finally, for vulg. καὶ αὐτὸν διὰ τοῦτο ὑμεῖς, &c., Poppo and Goell. edit, from several of the best MSS., καὶ αὐτοὶ διὰ τοῦτο, &c., which I have adopted, as above. The former is retained by Haack and Bekk., but wrongly; for, first, as to ὑμεῖς, it is evidently from the margin, proceeding from those who thus meant to indicate that ὑμεῖς was to be understood at αὐτοί. And as to αὐτὸν, we may suppose it to have proceeded from those who, as they wanted the subject of the verb ἐτιμήσατε to occupy a more prominent position, did not see the force of the αὐτοί. Moreover, αὐτοί, as Pop. and Goell. point out, has more of force and point, because the Spartans had themselves requited the merits of Themistocles with adequate rewards; for they presented him with a noble chariot and a branch of olive, and sent a deputation of their honourable youths to attend him to the very borders of their country, (see Plut. Them. 17. Plat. Menex. 10. Hdot. viii. 124. Arist. ii. 177,) the greatest mark of honour they had ever shown to a foreigner.

2. ἐκλιπόντες τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα διαφθ.] 'after abandoning their city, and destroying their property;' meaning the immoveable property, what they could not take on board ship. Though from l. ii. we find that they removed even the timber of the houses.

3. τούτου] Supply ὠφελεῖσθαι from ὠφελῆσαι. Ἀπὸ τῶν πόλεων. The art. here is not redundant, but stands for the poss. pron., 'your cities.' Ἐπὶ τῷ τὸ λοιπὸν νέμεσθαι, 'in order that you might possess them hereafter,' continue to possess them: a use of τὸ λοιπὸν frequent in the Attic writers, especially the dramatic ones; and in which an ellips. exists of the preposition ἐς, (which is expressed in Æschyl. Pers. 518. Eum. 678,) and also of χρόνον, which is expressed in a passage of Plato, Epist. ix. p. 358. The plural form, though rare, occurs in Plato, p. 27. Æschyl. Sept. 66. Æschyl. Choëph. 887, Ποῦ δὴ τὰ λοιπὰ Λοξίου μαντεύματα, in which last passage it will not be necessary to adopt the conjecture of Blomf. ποῦ δὴ τά σοι. For if the word λοιπὰ be taken without the τὰ, as grammatical propriety, seldom relaxed but in choral and lyric verse, requires, it may be supposed to stand for τὰ λοιπά, similarly as λοιπὸν does for τὸ λοιπὸν, post hac, of which abundant examples may be seen in Steph. Thes.

In the words ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν καὶ οὐχ ἡμῶν τὸ πλέον, there is, as Matth. Gr. Gr. § 455, 6, has shown, an anacoluthon, (of which he adduces other examples, and among these a passage of our author infra ch. 83, ἔστιν ὁ πόλεμος οὐχ ὅπλων τὸ πλέον, ἀλλὰ δαπάνης,) originating in the circumstance, that a comparison with more implies, too, an opposition, and two modes of speech are combined. Of ἀπὸ τῆς οὐκ οὔσης ἔτι ὁρμώμενοι the sense is, 'sallying forth from what had ceased to be, was no longer in existence,' i. e. was ruined. So infra ii. 44, 3, we have, τῶν οὐκ ὄντων λήθη: and in Herodot. viii. 57, περὶ οὐδεμίης ἐπὶ πατρίδος ναυμαχήσεις. The same idiom has place in Is. xxv. 2, and Matth. ii. 18. Of ὑπὲρ τῆς ἐν βραχείᾳ ἐλπίδι οὔσης κινδυνεύοντες the sense is, 'adventuring for what was suspended on but a slight thread of hope;' meaning, as the Schol. and Didot point out, the city as then contained in the fleet, the sole receptacle of the citizens; which the oracle had intimated by the words ξυλινὸν τεῖχος, thereby representing it as a thing fragile, wherein there was but a slender hope.

ξυνεσώσαμεν ὑμᾶς τε, τὸ μέρος, καὶ ἡμᾶς αὐτούς] Render, 'We at once saved both you, in some measure, and ourselves.' Τὸ μέρος is, indeed, by Poppo and Goeller, explained, pro virili, quantum in nobis erat. And such may be the sense; though I am induced rather to assign the former, from a comparison of two other passages of our author, where τὸ μέρος is similarly used, namely, infra ch. 127, διὰ τὴν ἐκείνου ξυμφοράν, τὸ μέρος, ἔσται ὁ πόλεμος, and ii. 67, ὅπως μὴ—τὴν ἐκείνου πόλιν τὸ μέρος βλάψωσιν, where the expression cannot mean any other than aliqua ex parte. This is further confirmed, too, by the expression being so used in Herodot. ii. 173, εἰ ἐθέλοι κατεσπούδασθαι αἰεὶ, μηδὲ ἐς παιγνίην, τὸ μέρος, ἑωυτὸν ἀνιέναι. Lysias, p. 872, διὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖον σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἡγεῖσθαι εἶναι μετέχειν, τὸ μέρος, τῶν δεινῶν, ὥσπερ καὶ τῶν ἀγαθῶν μετέχουσι, which last passage is adduced by Dr. Arnold in proof of the foregoing sense. He also adduces a passage of Demosth. p. 367. But there the sense may be, pro virili parte, as elsewhere in the same writer. If it be asked, how τὸ μέρος comes to mean this, or rather, what is the force of the article? I answer, that it may be used, according to the opinion of Arnold, note infra i. 127, with a tacit reference to the relative term τὸ ὅλον, (see Plat. Phædr. p. 261,) or τὸ πᾶν, the part as opposed to the whole; or rather, as Pop. explains, in the sense 'pro ratâ portione;' q. d. 'In effecting the common deliverance we saved both you, as regards our fair proportion of aid, and ourselves.' Thus the article is really used in reference, as is plain from the complete expression, which is τὸ ἐπί μοι, σοι, ἡμῖν, &c. εἶναι μέρος, or ἦκον μέρος. See Steph. Thes. 6023, D. Μέρος cannot, indeed, of itself bear this sense: and accordingly in Jos. Ant. xvi. 5, 2, πύργον ἀναστήσας—ἀσφαλείας τε πόλει μ.ηος ὄντα, καὶ μνήμης τῷ τετελευτηκότι, I suspect that τι has been lost after μέρος. The phrase μέρος τι, 'aliqua ex parte,' is found in our author infra ii. 64. iv. 30, et al.

4. ὡς διεφθαρμένοι] Meaning, 'as ruined persons.' Οὐδὲν ἂν ἔτι ἔδει ὑμᾶς, 'it would not have behoved you.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 508, 4, 6. Of the words καθ' ἡσυχίαν ἂν αὐτῷ προεχώρησε τὰ πράγματα ᾗ ἐβούλετο, the sense is, 'but affairs would have quietly taken the very turn which he wished.' Compare Herodot. vii. 139, init. The phrase καθ' ἡσυχίαν signifies 'quietly,' 'without opposition,' as infra vii. 38 & 73. Xen. Anab. ii. 2, 5. Hist. iv. 4, 18. vi. 5, 42. Προεχώρησε τὰ πράγματα means, 'matters would have taken their course,' as in Theophr. Char. Eth. iii. Herodian, vii. 9, 2.

CH. LXXV. 1. Ἆρ' ἄξιοί ἐσμεν—διακεῖσθαι;] So I have edited, with Bekker, Goell., and Pop., while Reiske, Abresch, Gottleb., and Kistem., read ἄρ', and take the sentence declaratively; by which the sense is nearly the same, namely, 'We deserve, then, I think;' where, as Arnold observes, 'the question is conveyed by the tone and manner as completely as though it were put in the direct interrogative form.' To this, however, may be urged one serious objection, which is that the Greeks did not use ἄρα, any more than γάρ, to commence a sentence. Accordingly, the ἄρα being retained, the passage may be thus rendered: 'Do we, then, Lacedæmonians, considering the zeal and intelligence which we then displayed, deserve to labour under such a load of envy from the Greeks, on account of the empire which we hold?' In Herodot. ix. 27, the Athenians, after showing their claims to the post of honour, similarly argue, ἄρ' οὐ δίκαιοί εἰμεν ἔχειν ταύτην τὴν τάξιν; 'are we, then, not worthy to hold this post?'

The phrase ἐπιφθόνως διακεῖσθαι evidently stands for φθονεῖσθαι, and hence carries its syntax, namely, a dat. of person and gen. of thing. Yet how it comes to have that sense (whereas it would, from the general use of the term διακεῖσθαι with adverbs, seem only susceptible of the sense 'to be afflicted with envy,' not 'to be the object of envy') the commentators do not inform us. It seems to arise from this, that as διακεῖσθαι is not unfrequently used for διατεθεῖσθαι, 'to be handled by any pain or disease of body,' (in which sense the word occurs infra vii. 77, ὁρᾶτε δὴ ὡς διάκειμαι ὑπὸ τῆς νόσου,) or by ill-treatment of any kind, (a sense found in Xen. Hist. iv. 1, 15, οὕτω διάκειμαι ὑφ' ὑμῶν, ὥστε, &c. vi. 5, 1. Cyr. v. 3, 15,) so it might be applied to any strong passion of the mind, and thus denote ill-treatment resulting from the being made the object of any bitter feeling, as envy, which pursues its object until reduced to be an object of pity. (Compare infra vii. 77, 2.) Thus the phrase ἐπιφθόνως διακεῖσθαι signifies to be ill-treated as one ἐπίφθονος, to be obnoxious to or an object of envy. In οὕτως ἄγαν we have an elegant Atticism not unfrequent in Eurip. and Soph. See Elmsl. on Soph. Œd. Col. 1695.

2. οὐ βιασάμενοι] 'not seizing it by force.' Τὰ ὑπόλοιπα τοῦ βαρβάρου. Meaning, the remaining πράγματα or actions of the war with the barbarian, as infra iii. 10, παραμεινάντων δὲ ἐκείνων πρὸς τὰ ὑπόλοιπα τῶν ἔργων. So in Aristid. Panath. 239, B. we have, πρὸς τὰ λοιπὰ τοῦ πολέμου: and in Appian, i. 847, 63, ἠσχολεῖτο —ἐς τὰ ὑπόλοιπα τῆς στάσεως, and ii. 124, τοῦ πολέμου τὰ λοιπὰ ἤκμαζεν. Of ἐξ αὐτοῦ τοῦ ἔργου the sense is, 'from the very nature of the matter in question,' namely, rule or dominion. Now that being a thing ever obnoxious to hatred, (and no wonder, since 'man is born a wild ass's colt,' Job xi. 12,) hence he who possesses it has need to secure himself against hatred. Thus by the fear just after spoken of is to be understood such as proceeds from those who might think themselves aggrieved by the Athenians in the exercise of this rule: and by the profit, that arising from the contributions of the allies, which were necessary to support this rule. Ἐς τόδε, 'to this [state in which it is].' So infra vi. 18, we have, ἐς τάδε αἴρειν, 'to bring to this pitch of power.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 341.

3. τοῖς πολλοῖς ἀπηχθημένους] The constr. is, οὐκ ἀσφαλὲς ἔτι ἐδόκει [ἡμᾶς] ἀπηχθ. τοῖς πολλοῖς κινδυνεύειν ἀνέντας, 'seemed not safe for us, who had become odious to most [of the allies], to venture on letting go [our rule],' literally, 'to run hazards by letting go our rule;' letting go the reins of government, relinquishing our rule: for here τὴν ἀρχὴν is to be supplied from the subject-matter. And in the same sense ἀνιέναι occurs in the next chapter, and vi. 18. The words καί τινων—διαφόρων ὄντων are parenthetical; and of καί τινων καὶ ἤδη ἀποστάντων κατεστραμμένων the sense is, 'and some even already having, after revolt, been subdued.' Of ἂν αἱ ἀποστάσεις πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐγίγνοντο the literal sense is, 'the secessions would have been to you,' i. e. 'the revolters from us would have gone over to you.'

4. ἀνεπίφθονον] scil. ἔστι, 'it is no matter of censure or reproach,' ἄμεμπτον. So infra vi. 83, we have, πᾶσι δὲ ἀνεπίφθονον τὴν προσήκουσαν σωτηρίαν ἐκπορίζεσθαι, and vii. 77. viii. 50. And so the term is used in Soph. Trach. 1035. Liban. Or. 702, D. ἀνεπίφθονον δὴ κἀμὲ, &c. See the commentators on Eurip. Hec. 1185, and Lucian, i. 40. Such, too, is the use of ἐπίφθονος, for μεμπτὸς, in the similar phrase οὐκ ἐπίφθονον εἶναι, occurring in Eurip. Hippol. 499, νῦν ἀγὼν μέγας σῶσαι βίον σὸν, κοὐκ ἐπίφθονον τόδε. And hence, in a most perplexing passage of Euripides, Troad. 736, (the only one, says G. Burges, 'in quo vires ingenii nolim facere ludos,') τούτων οὕνεκ' οὐ μάχης ἐρᾷν Οὐδ' αἰσχρὸν οὐδὲν, οὐδ' ἐπίφθονόν σε χρὴ, there was no more occasion for the conjectures of Musgrave and others, than for the alteration proposed by Matthiæ of χρὴ into δρᾷν, by which what seemed to them nonsense, (though not so in effect,) they only thus converted into a frigid truism. All will be intelligible, and to the purpose, if the passage be but pointed thus: Τούτων οὕνεκ' οὐ μάχης ἐρᾷν (Οὐδ' αἰσχρὸν οὐδὲν, οὐδ' ἐπίφθονόν) σε χρή. There is here an ellips. of ἐστί, and the full sense is, 'It is neither any thing base nor censurable [so to do],' i. e. to be not fond of strife.

Ὑμεῖς γοῦν, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, τὰς ἐν τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ πόλεις ἐπὶ τὸ ὑμῖν ὠφέλιμον καταστησάμενοι ἐξηγεῖσθε· καὶ εἰ τότε, ὑπομείναντες διὰ παντὸς, ἀπήχθησθε ἐν τῇ ἡγεμονίᾳ, ὥσπερ ἡμεῖς, εὖ ἴσμεν μὴ ἂν ἧσσον ὑμᾶς λυπηροὺς γενομένους τοῖς ξυμμάχοις, καὶ ἀναγκασθέντας ἂν ἢ ἄρχειν ἐγκρατῶς ἢ αὐτοὺς κινδυνεύειν. 2. οὕτως οὐδ' ἡμεῖς θαυμαστὸν οὐδὲν πεποιήκαμεν, οὐδ' ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀνθρωπείου τρόπου, εἰ ἀρχήν τε διδομένην ἐδεξάμεθα, καὶ ταύτην μὴ ἀνεῖμεν, ὑπὸ τῶν μεγίστων νικηθέντες, τιμῆς καὶ δέους καὶ ὠφελείας· οὐδ' αὖ πρῶτοι τοῦ τοιούτου ὑπάρξαντες, ἀλλ' ἀεὶ καθεστῶτος, 'τὸν ἥσσω ὑπὸ τοῦ δυνατωτέρου κατείργεσθαι·' ἄξιοί

Of τὰ ξυμφέροντα εὖ τίθεσθαι the sense is, 'to well manage (καλῶς οἰκονομεῖν, to put into the best posture) their own interests.' So infra iv. 59, 4, τὰ ἴδια εὖ θέσθαι, where see note. Τῶν μεγίστων πέρι κινδύνων. Render, 'in matters concerning (i. e. which involve) imminent danger.'

Ch. LXXVI. 1. ὑμεῖς γοῦν, &c.] 'You, for instance,' q. d. 'It is not only what you cannot blame in us, but it is no other than what you do yourselves;' by which they retort the charge of holding their allies in subjection upon the Lacedæmonians themselves.

τὰς ἐν τῇ Πελ. πόλεις—καταστησάμενοι] The sense is, 'ye use your rule, or supremacy, by regulating the polities of the Peloponnesian states to such a form, as is advantageous to you:' namely, oligarchy. So supra ch. 19, 1, we have, κατ' ὀλιγαρχίαν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς μόνον ἐπιτηδείως ὅπως πολιτεύσωσι (scil. οἱ ξύμμαχοι) θεραπεύοντες scil. ἡγοῦντο: and i. 144, 4, πόλεσι μὴ σφίσι τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις ἐπιτηδείως αὐτονομεῖσθαι. With respect to the construction here, the accusative πόλεις 'states' is governed not of ἐξηγ., but καταστησάμενοι, there being an ellips. of αὐτῶν after ἐξηγ. Of ὑπομείναντες διὰ παντὸς the sense is, (as Poppo explains,) 'si perseverassetis semper in bello ac principatu.' Ἀπήχθησθε ἐν τῇ ἡγεμονίᾳ, 'had become odious in the exercise of empire.' So infra ii. 64, we have, ἐν τῇ ἀρχῇ ἀπήχθ. Of λυπηροὺς γενομένους τοῖς ξυμμάχοις the sense is, 'become odious to the allies.' Ἄρχειν ἐγκρατῶς, 'to rule rigorously, to hold the reins of government with a strong hand,' as opposed to ἀνέντας, 'letting them go:' a phrase occurring also in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1017, 5, Reiske. App. i. 605, 75. Jos. 603, 21. Dio Cass. 180, 80. 1825, 9. Aristid. i. 362. So also in the similar phrase, found in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 747, 10. 777, 1. 781, 12, ἐγκρατῶς has the sense tenaciter, as in Theocr. Id. xxv. 266, though in the physical acceptation.

2. οὕτως] 'wherefore;' lit. 'and so,' as infra ch. 81, and vi. 92; and Æschyl. Ag. 1600, οὕτω καλὸν δὴ καὶ τὸ κατθανεῖν ἐμοί. Jos. Ant. xvii. 10, 6, οὕτως πολλὴ ἀφροσύνη ἐνεπολιτεύετο τῷ ἔθνει. And in this manner the word is used sometimes in Xenophon. In οὐδ' ἡμεῖς θαυμαστὸν οὐδὲν πεποιήκαμεν, by θαυμ. is implied a mixture of surprise and censure; as in Xen. Œcon. ii. 9, οὐ θαυμαστὸν δοκεῖς τοῦτο ποιεῖν; and Cyr. iv. 6, 2. Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 23, Sylb. οὐδὲν οἰόμεθά σε ποιεῖν θαυμαστὸν, εἰ, &c. Xen. Mem. ii. 7, 13, θ. ποιεῖς, ὃς, &c. And so in Aristoph. Thesm. 466, we have, οὐ θαυμάσιόν ἐστ', οὐδὲ ἐπιζεῖν τὴν χολὴν, 'a strange and shocking thing, enough to make one's bile rise,' one's blood boil. Of ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀνθρωπείου τρόπου the sense is, 'remote from, out of the ordinary course of human action.' So Aristid. t. ii. 48, A. ὅτι δὲ οὐδὲν ἔξω εἰωθότων, οὐδὲ ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνθρωπείας φύσεως ποιεῖν. Ἀνεῖμεν is for ἀφίεμεν.

οὐδ' αὖ πρῶτοι τοῦ τοιούτου ὑπάρξαντες] 'did not originate such a rule;' for at τοιούτου is to be supplied νόμου. So infra v. 105, we have, ἡμεῖς οὔτε θέντες τὸν νόμον, οὔτε κειμένῳ πρῶτοι χρησάμενοι. Many passages to the same effect might be adduced from classical writers,, (as Plato, Demosth., Dionys. Hal., and Aristides,) insomuch that the maxim, founded on that rule of human action, seems to have passed into a proverb. Of τε ἅμα νομίζοντες εἶναι, καὶ ὑμῖν δοκοῦντες μέχρι οὗ τὰ ξυμφέροντα λογιζόμενοι τῷ δικαίῳ λόγῳ νῦν χρῆσθε· ὃν οὐδείς πω, παρατυχὸν ἰσχύϊ τι κτήσασθαι, προθεὶς, τοῦ μὴ πλέον ἔχειν ἀπετράπετο. 3. ἐπαινεῖσθαί τε ἄξιοι οἵτινες χρησάμενοι τῇ ἀνθρωπείᾳ φύσει ὥστε ἑτέρων ἄρχειν, δικαιότεροι ἢ κατὰ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν δύναμιν γεγένηνται. 4. ἄλλους γ' ἂν οὖν οἰόμεθα, τὰ ἡμέτερα λαβόντας, δεῖξαι ἂν μάλιστα εἴ τι μετριάζομεν· ἡμῖν δὲ καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ἐπιεικοῦς ἀδοξία τὸ πλέον ἢ ἔπαινος οὐκ εἰκότως περιέστη. LXXVII. Καὶ ἐλασσούμενοι γὰρ ἐν ταῖς ξυμβολαίαις πρὸς τοὺς ξυμμάχους δίκαις, καὶ παρ' ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς ἐν τοῖς ὁμοίοις νόμοις ποιήσαντες τὰς κρίσεις, φιλοδικεῖν δοκοῦμεν. 2. καὶ οὐδεὶς σκοπεῖ ἄξιοί τε ἅμα νομίζοντες εἶναι the sense is, 'and moreover accounting ourselves worthy [of this rule].' In this sense ἱκανοὶ occurs infra ch. 95. Μέχρι οὗ τὰ ξυμφέροντα—χρῆσθε, 'until now, when, by considerations of interest, ye resort to the argument of justice.' For such is the sense of τὰ ξυμφέροντα λογιζόμενοι, 'utilia spectantes.' Of this expression, which is exceedingly rare, I have met with but one example elsewhere, namely, Lucian, i. 735, ὅμως τῷ δικαίῳ λόγῳ οὐκ ἂν ἔξω εἴης τοῦ ἡμαρτηκέναι. By τῷ δικαίῳ λόγῳ is meant, 'the argument of justice,' namely, 'it is just that the Greeks should be free.'

Of the words following, ὃν οὐδείς πω—ἀπετράπετο, the sense is, 'which no one ever yet, when an opportunity offered of acquiring aught by dint of power, so far preferred, as to be diverted from seeking his advantage.' Προθεὶς, for προκρίνας, or προτιμήσας. On the pleonasm of μὴ, see Matth. Gr. Gr.

3. χρησάμενοι τῇ ἀνθρωπείᾳ φύσει] 'following the [innate dictates of] human nature,' or that feeling implanted in man, which prompts him to seek to rule others. So Gottleb. explains, referring to Hemst. on Callim. Hymn. ad Dian. v. 69. The sense, however, rather seems to be, 'through experience or suffering of the passion natural to man:' a use of χρ. frequent in our author. So infra i. 130, ὀργῇ χρ., vii. 30, πάθει χρ., and vi. 15, ἐπιθυμίαις χρ. Of δικαιότεροι ἢ κατὰ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν δύναμιν γεγένηνται the sense is, 'have been more observant of justice than according to their power [to commit injustice].' So infra vi. 15, ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις μείζοσιν ἢ κατὰ τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν οὐσίαν ἐχρῆτο. This being one of those cases (noticed by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 449) in which it is not a subst. that is compared with another, but the quality of a thing that is considered in proportion to another quality, and compared in degree with it. See infra ii. 50. vii. 45.

4. γ' ἂν οὖν] This particle serves to prove à signo, vel exemplo; as in passages of Xen. and Arist., cited by Hoog. de Part. p. 38, 74, and 144. On the repeated ἂν, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 600. Of εἴ τι μετριάζομεν the sense is, 'whether we use moderation, are μέτριοι:' which was intimated by δικαιότεροι, &c. preceding. Περιέστη, 'has happened to us,' (in which sense the word occurs infra vii. 70,) or (as Arnold explains) 'has come round to us in the course of events.' See infra vi. 24.

Ch. LXXVII. 1. καὶ ἐλασσούμενοι γὰρ] It is well remarked by Goell., that the καὶ is not to be joined with γὰρ, but is to be referred to the words following, καὶ παρ' ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς, &c. By means of the particles καὶ—καὶ, we have here two sentences combined, of which the one contains the cause of the other, (see infra ii. 60,) the sense being, as Goell. explains, 'Etsi enim apud nos ipsos judicia constituimus secundum æquabilitatem juris præbendi et repetendi, tamen litigiosi esse videmur.' Ἐλασσούμενοι may with Goell. and Arn. be explained, 'not standing upon our own right,' i. e. condescending to let our disputes with them be fairly tried, instead of deciding, as we might, by our sovereign power. Of the words καὶ παρ' ἡμῖν—κρίσεις, the sense is, 'and [although] having made the decisions before us ourselves to be according to equal laws, impartially administered to all.' Ποιήσ. here signifies not making, but rather constituentes, 'causing them to be made.' And παρ' ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς signifies coram nobis ipsis, i. e. in cases of appeal. Of the somewhat rare term φιλοδικεῖν, an example occurs in Aristot. Rhet. i. 13, 2, καὶ ὅσα φιλοδικεῖν δόξειεν ἂν ὁ ἐπεξιών. This litigiousness of the Athenians is αὐτῶν τοῖς καὶ ἄλλοθί που ἀρχὴν ἔχουσι, καὶ ἧσσον ἡμῶν πρὸς τοὺς ὑπηκόους μετρίοις οὖσι, διότι τοῦτο οὐκ ὀνειδίζεται· βιάζεσθαι γὰρ οἷς ἂν ἐξῇ, δικάζεσθαι οὐδὲν προσδέονται. 3. οἱ δὲ, εἰθισμένοι πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ὁμιλεῖν, ἤν τι παρὰ τὸ μὴ οἴεσθαι χρῆναι, ἢ γνώμῃ, ἢ δυνάμει τῇ διὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν, καὶ ὁπωσοῦν ἐλασσωθῶσιν, οὐ τοῦ πλέονος μὴ στερισκόμενοι χάριν ἔχουσιν, ἀλλὰ τοῦ ἐνδεοῦς χαλεπώτερον φέρουσιν ἢ εἰ ἀπὸ πρώτης ἀποθέμενοι τὸν νόμον φανερῶς ἐπλεονεκτοῦμεν· ἐκείνως δὲ οὐδ' ἂν αὐτοὶ ἀντέλεγον ὡς οὐ χρεὼν τὸν ἧσσω τῷ κρατοῦντι ὑποχωρεῖν. 4. ἀδικούμενοί τε, ὡς ἔοικεν, οἱ ἄνθρωποι μᾶλλον ὀργίζονται ἢ βιαζόμενοι· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου δοκεῖ, πλεονεκτεῖσθαι, τὸ δ' ἀπὸ τοῦ κρείσσονος, κατseverely satirized by Aristophanes in his Wasps. And so in his Birds, 40, he has this sharp sarcasm: Ἀθηναῖοι δ' ἀεὶ ἐπὶ τῶν δικῶν ᾄδουσι πάντα τὸν βίον.

3. οἱ δὲ, εἰθισμένοι, &c.] 'But they, since they are accustomed;' the art. being here used for the pron. demonstr. Παρὰ τὸ μὴ οἴεσθαι χρῆναι, 'beyond, i. e. otherwise than, they think ought to be done.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 534. Γνώμῃ, 'in any decision at law.' Ἡ δυνάμει τῇ διὰ τὴν ἀρχὴν, lit. 'or by the hand of power,' that supplied by domination. Καὶ ὁπωσοῦν, Goeller remarks, is nearly equivalent to καὶ ὁτιοῦν. The full sense is, 'if they be at all aggrieved in ever so slight a way,' or, what is equivalent, even in ever so slight a point. Indeed the καὶ is intensive, as infra viii. 90, τρόπῳ ὅστις καὶ ὑπωσοῦν ἀνεκτός. For τοῦ ἐνδεοῦς χαλεπώτερον φέρουσιν, Goeller observes, τὸ ἐνδεὲς χαλ. φέρ. would have been more accordant to common usage; but the gen. is elsewhere so found in our author, as infra ii. 62. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 368, a. Ἐνδεοῦς may mean, 'on account of what is wanting,' namely, to their desires, what is withheld; what is wanting to make up their full claims. So Burke said in one of his speeches, in 1774, 'the fewer causes of dissatisfaction are left by any government, the more the subject will be inclined to resist and rebel.' Similar, too, is a saying in Herodian, ii. 3, 19.

ἀποθέμενοι τὸν νόμον] lit. 'making away with law.' Ἐπλεονεκτοῦμεν, 'had acted on a principle of rapacity,' as in Herodot. viii. 12, init. Ἐκείνως δὲ—ὑποχωρεῖν, 'for in that case (i. e. if we had openly acted rapaciously) not even they have denied that it does not behove the inferior in power to yield to the superior.'

4. ἀδικούμενοί τε, ὡς ἔοικεν—βιαζόμενοι] We have here a sort of ἀκριλογία or over-minute distinction, (see Dio Cass. 74, 5,) like that between αἰτίαν and κατηγορίαν supra i. 69, between ἀδικεῖσθαι and βιάζεσθαι, since supra i. 45 and 68, βία stands for ἀδικία, though, as Poppo observes, the idea of injury is inherent in each.

τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου—καταναγκάζεσθαι] Of these words, which involve no little difficulty, the sense has been variously understood. The so-called versions of Gottleb. and Port., adopted by Poppo and Goell., are loose and wordy paraphrases, such as will extract almost any sense from so many given words. And how little the terms themselves will bear the construction thus put on them, is quite certain. Where, I would ask, does ὁ ἴσος ever mean an equal? Heilm. was the first to see that the subject of each member of the sentence is contained in τὸ μὲν and τὸ δὲ, and that all the rest of the words form the predicate. And he might have confirmed his view from a strikingly similar passage infra iv. 86, 6, ἀπάτῃ γὰρ εὐπρεπεῖ αἰσχιον, τοῖς γε ἐν ἀξιώματι πλεονεκτῆσαι ἢ βίᾳ ἐμφανεῖ· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἰσχύος δικαιώσει, ἣν ἡ τύχη ἔδωκεν, ἐπέρχεται, τὸ δὲ γνώμης ἀδίκου ἐπιβουλῇ. And against this, vainly is it urged by Pop. and Goell., that thus ἀπ' ἴσου and ἀπὸ κρείττονος would be required; for ἀπὸ κρείττονος is an expression no where found; nor, I believe, ἀπ' ἴσου, though ἐξ ἴσου does occur. But were it found, it would be equal to ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, which occurs not unfrequently in our author. Supposing the sense assigned by Heilm. to be correct, the words will import, 'for the one seems a defrauding, or over-reaching, on the part of one's equal; that, a compulsion by a stronger than oneself.' But, not to say that the expression ὁ ἴσος never bears this sense 'one's equal,' the usus loquendi rather requires us to take the τοῦ as a neuter; in which case the antithetical ἀπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος must also be so taken; a use this which, though not frequent, is far from being unprecedented. Thus Longin. Sat. xv. ἀεὶ τοῦ κρείττονος ἀκούομεν, 'quod fortius est.' See Jacobs' Anthol. xi. 189. The general meaning may, then, be expressed as follows: 'for what is done in the one case, seems a being overreached on a footing of equal justice; in the other, a being constrained by a force too strong to be opposed.' With this use of ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου πλεονεκτεῖσθαι, I would compare other expressions elsewhere in our author, as infra i. 143, οὐκ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, 'not on an equal footing:' and viii. 89, 3, ἀπὸ τῶν ὁμοίων ἐλασσούμενος: iii. 84, 1, οἵ τε μὴ ἐπὶ πλεονεξίᾳ, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου δὲ ἐπιόντες. So also τὸ ἴσον in Eurip. Phœn. 541, where see Valckn. And similarly in Aristid. i. 307, we have, οὗτός ἐστιν ἀρχῆς θεσμὸς, μὴ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου πρὸς τοὺς ὑπηκόους κρίνεσθαι. Finally, with ἀπὸ τοῦ κρείσσονος compare ἐκ τοῦ κρείσσονος in p. 16 of the Preface to Wolf's Herodian; also Herodot. vii. 236, 3, τοῦ εὐτυχέειν φθονέουσι καὶ τὸ κρεῖσσον στυγέουσι: and Eurip. Phœn. 549, τῷ πλέονι δ' ἀεὶ πολέμιον καθίσταται Τοὖλασσον.

5. γοῦν] 'thus, for instance.' For we have here an exemplification of the above saying, that 'men are less tolerant of injury than of force.' Πάσχοντες ἠνείχοντο, 'they endured suffering.' For verbs of enduring form one among those three classes of verbs mentioned by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 550, which take along with them, not so much an object to which they refer, as the sphere of their activity; and so have this latter in the particip. Of εἰκότως the sense is merito quidem; an elegant use of the particle, which, when thus used at the end of a sentence, stands for a clause; and so requires the punctuation above adopted. This, too, I would observe, is supported by Toup on Longin. p. 284, who adduces two passages, one from Lycurgus, the other from Diodorus Siculus, in which εἰκότως is thus followed by a clause commencing with γάρ. The idiom is one also found in Eurip. Or. 725, where I would point εἰκότως· κακῆς γυναικὸς ἄνδρα γίγνεσθαι κακὸν, for the sentence is left incomplete, being interrupted by the speaker following; and we must there supply, what is left to be understood, οὐδὲν θαυμαστόν ἐστι. By the expression τὸ παρὸν is meant 'the present state of things;' as in Herodot. i. 21, πρὸς τὸ παρὸν βουλεύεσθαι. Here the term is emphatic; there being a tacit comparison of what is present with its contrary, τὸ ἀπὸν, which is fully expressed in Eurip. Hipp. 184, οὐδέ σ' ἀρέσκει τὸ παρὸν, τὸ δ' ἀπὸν φιλότερον ἡγεῖ. So to sick persons the present posture soon becomes irksome, and they seek another, τὸ ἀπόν.

6. ἡμέτερον δέος] Pron. poss. for genit. of personal; as supra i. 69, ὑμ. ἐλπίδες. Οἷα—ὑπεδείξατε, 'ye showed, evinced, displayed such actions as,' &c. Constr. εἴπερ ὁμοια ὑπεδ. οἷα, &c. Γνώσεσθε, 'shall decree, direct.'

7. ἄμικτα γὰρ—ἔχετε] Construe ἔχετε γὰρ τὰ καθ' ὑμᾶς αὐτοὺς νόμιμα ἄμικτα τοῖς ἄλλοις, scil. Græcis. By ἄμικτα is meant, as Duk. explains, σύμφωνα scil. πρὸς τὰ ἔθιμα τῶν ἄλλων Ἑλλήνων ἀσυμβίβαστα, 'institutions and customs which do not amalgamate with those of the other Greeks;' the allusion being to liquids, such as vinegar and oil, which will not mingle together. So Æschyl. Agam. 312, οἶμαι βοὴν ἄμικτον ἐν πόλει πρέπειν (apparere) ὄξος τ' ἄλειφά τ' ἐγχέας ταὐτῷ κύτει (vessel) διχοστατοῦντ' ἄν, οὐ φίλῳ προσεννέπους. Similarly in Joseph. Ant. xi. 6, 5, it is said of the Jews, ἔθνος ἐστιν ἄμικτον, ἀσύμφυλον, οὔτε θρησκείαν τὴν αὐτὴν τοῖς ἄλλοις ἔχον, οὔτε νόμοις χρώμενον ὁμοίοις. In short, there seems a reference, in a general way, to that unsocial, nay anti-social, spirit, which the Lacedæmonians evinced towards other nations, by suffering no foreigners to reside among them, by using peculiar customs, and keeping apart from foreigners, even when sojourning among them. See i. 144 and 124.

ἐξιὼν] The commentators explain 'going out to war.' But the term may rather be supposed to have a general reference to the going out to foreign countries, for government or travel, or other purposes, including war. And the best commentary on this passage is found in the Panathenaic Oration of Isocr. § 82, seqq.; and especially p. 475, init. τῶν νόμων τῶν κοινῶν ἐξεστηκότας, καὶ μηδὲν τῶν αὐτῶν μήτε τοῖς Ἕλλησι, μήτε τοῖς Βαρβάροις γιγνώσκοντας. Of νομίζειν, as employed in the sense, to use, adopt, examples occur infra iii. 82, εὐσεβείᾳ οὐδέτεροι ἐνόμιζον, and ii. 38, ἀγῶσι καὶ θυσίαις νομίζοντες, where see notes.

LXXVIII. Βουλεύεσθε οὖν βραδέως, ὡς οὐ περὶ βραχέων· καὶ μὴ, ἀλλοτρίαις γνώμαις καὶ ἐγκλήμασι πεισθέντες, οἰκεῖον πόνον πρόσθησθε· τοῦ δὲ πολέμου τὸν παράλογον, ὅσος ἐστὶ, πρὶν ἐν αὐτῷ γενέσθαι, προδιάγνωτε· μηκυνόμενος γὰρ φιλεῖ ἐς τύχας τὰ πολλὰ περιίστασθαι, ὧν ἴσον τε ἀπέχομεν, καὶ ὁποτέρως ἔσται ἐν ἀδήλῳ κινδυνεύεται. 2. ἰόντες τε οἱ ἄνθρωποι ἐς τοὺς πολέμους τῶν ἔργων πρότερον ἔχονται, ἃ χρὴν ὕστερον δρᾶν· κακοπαθοῦντες δὲ ἤδη, τῶν λόγων ἅπτονται. 3. ἡμεῖς δὲ ἐν οὐδεμιᾷ πω τοιαύτῃ ἁμαρτίᾳ ὄντες, οὔτ' αὐτοὶ οὔθ' ὑμᾶς ὁρῶντες, λέγομεν ὑμῖν, ἕως ἔτι αὐθαίρετος ἀμφοτέροις ἡ εὐβουλία, σπονδὰς μὴ λύειν μηδὲ παραβαίνειν τοὺς ὅρκους, τὰ δὲ διάφορα δίκῃ λύεσθαι κατὰ τὴν ξυνθήκην· ἢ θεοὺς τοὺς ὁρκίους

Ch. LXXVIII. 1. ὡς οὐ περὶ βραχέων] Supp. βουλευόμενοι, from βουλεύεσθε. Ὡς has here the sense quippe, inasmuch as. Βραχέων, meaning, trifling matters, as i. 140. An evident imitation of this passage is found in Menand. ap. Corp. Byz. p. 134, χρεὼν οὖν ὑμᾶς, ὡς οὐ περὶ βραχέων βουλευομένους. The term προστίθεσθαι has here the somewhat unusual sense accersere, adsciscere, se contrahere, as infra 144, 1, κινδύνους προστίθεσθαι, and elsewhere not unfrequently in Dio Cass. and Arrian: also Eurip. Heracl. 147, ἴδια προσθέσθαι κακά.

τὸν παράλογον] Παράλογος is properly an adjective; but in Thucydides and certain other Attic writers by whom he has been imitated, it is, as here, used substantively, in the sense 'an event contrary to all expectation.' So in Appian, Mithr. 93, (a passage imitated from the present,) we have, ὁ παράλογος τοῦ πολέμου: and in a passage of our author infra iii. 16, πολὺς ὁ παράλογος, the sense is, unexpectedness, q. d. 'Few know the unexpectedness (i. e. tendency to unexpected events) of the war, how great it is.' Of ἐς τύχας τὰ πολλὰ περιίστασθαι the sense is, 'to come round and terminate in some hazardous or eventful crisis:' evidently imitated from which are the words of Procop. 41, 4, τὰ γὰρ τῶν πραγμάτων ὀξύτατα ἐς τὸ τῆς τύχης ὡς τὰ πολλὰ περιΐσταται κράτος: and 137, 25, ἐς ἐπισφαλῆ στενοχωρίαν ὡς τὰ πολλὰ περιΐσταται.

ὁποτέρως ἔσται ἐν ἀδήλῳ κινδυνεύεται] 'and which way soever it (i. e. the catastrophe) [fall out] is suspended on the perilous die of uncertainty.' We have here a blending together of two modes of expression, ἐν ἀδήλῳ ἐστὶ (as in Dionys. Hal. Ant. i. 1377) for ἄδηλόν ἐστι, and κινδυνεύεται, 'is put to hazard.' So infra ii. 43, we have, οἷς ἡ ἐναντία μεταβολὴ ἔτι κινδυνεύεται: and in Demosth. 432, 25, τὰ μέγιστα κινδυνεύεται τῇ πόλει. Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 52, τῇ πόλει δ' οὐδὲν ἕτερον κινδυνεύεται.

2. τῶν λόγων ἅπτονται] 'apply to, have recourse to words,' i. e. counsels, capessere consilia: a use of ἅπτομαι not unfrequent in the Attic writers. So Eurip. Ion, 544, λόγων ἀψώμεθ' ἄλλων: and Alcest. 967, πλεῖστον ἀψάμενος λόγων. Theocr. Id. xxii. 114, ἀπτόμενος—πόνου.

3. ἐν οὐδεμιᾷ—ἁμαρτίᾳ ὄντες] 'who are in no such error.' Schol. ἀβουλίᾳ περὶ τοῦ πολέμου. So supra i. 32, δόξῃς ἁμαρτίᾳ. Of the words following, ἕως ἔτι αὐθαίρετος ἀμφοτέροις ἡ εὐβουλία, the sense is, 'while to consult well is yet at the option of both parties to choose or refuse.' The article here seems to have no place; nor have I found it any where except in Demosth. p. 1416, 7, and there ἡ εὐβ. means 'his sage counsel.' Accordingly I suspect that for ἡ we should read ᾗ, sit. Of τὰ δὲ διάφορα δίκῃ λύεσθαι the sense is, 'but that the differences may be adjusted by judicial discussion:' a phrase of frequent occurrence in our author. Ἤ, or else, as infra i. 121 and 140. Poppo, indeed, from most of the best MSS., edits εἰ δὲ μή, which, however, is an evident gloss. On the ταύτῃ ᾗ ἂν ὑφηγῆσθε] 'in such a way as you may set us the example,' viz. by going before us, and marking out the track for us to follow. There is here an ellips. of ὁδὸν, which is expressed in Plut. Pomp. δαίμων ὑφηγεῖτο τὴν ὁδόν. Ὑφηγ. is a term properly used of a general who leads an army, as a guide. Yet it is not here, as Goeller and other philologists suppose, put simply for προηγεῖσθαι. On the distinction between the two terms, Arn. supposes that by προηγ. it is denoted that the leader is followed; by ὑφηγ., that he is followed closely. But it rather seems that in the former case we have simply denoted the idea of precedence, without the action of following necessarily accompanying it; in the latter, the idea of following generally, and the closeness of the follower after the leader.

Ch. LXXIX. 1. μεταστησάμενοι πάντας] 'making all withdraw,' viz. both the Athenians and the allies. So the Latin phrase semotis omnibus.

2. ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ—ἔφερον] 'bore to the same point,' coincided in the same opinion. So in Latin, mea fert opinio: a metaphor taken from roads that converge to some common point. So Soph. Œd. Col. 1424, ἐς ὀρθὸν ἐμφέρει. Our author seems here to have had in mind a passage in Herodot. viii. 100, πλέον ἔφερέ οἱ ἡ γνώμη κατεργάσασθαι τὴν Ἑλλάδα.

ξυνετὸς δοκῶν εἶναι] 'who had the reputation of being a person of prudence and discretion,' possessed of that practical wisdom necessary to him who governs others. So in Acts xiii. 7, we have, Σεργίῳ ἀνδρὶ συνετῷ. Of this use of δοκέω examples not unfrequently occur in the best writers, especially the Attic one; though editors have often failed to recognise it.

Ch. LXXX. 1. Καὶ αὐτὸς, &c.] Thucyd. seems to have had in mind a very similar exordium to an oration of Themistocles, in Herod. viii. 109, καὶ αὐτὸς ἤδη πολλοῖσι (scil. πράγμασι) παρεγενόμην, καὶ πολλὰ πλέω ἀκήκοα τοιάδε γενέσθαι. And he has himself been imitated by Procop. p. 256, 36. Of the phrase πολλῶν πολέμων ἔμπειρος, examples are frequent in the historical writers. The τοὺς after ὑμῶν is not, as Bauer takes it, for τινας, that use being confined to the genitive and dative. There is an ellips. either of ἐμπείρους, as the Schol. and some commentators suppose; or of ὄντας, in which ἐμπείρους may be regarded as implied. Compare similar passages in Dio Cass. and Dionys. Hal. Ant. 574, 24. Of ἡλικία the sense is, age, time of life, as Xen. Mem. iv. 2, 3. Μήτε ἀπειρίᾳ ἐπιθυμῆσαί τινα τοῦ ἔργου, 'so as not to be eagerly desirous of the work [of war].' So Xen. Cyneg. ii. 4, τῶν ἀρκύων ἐπιθυμ. τοῦ ἔργου: and xii. 1, οἱ ἐπιθυμοῦντες τοῦ ἔργου. The truth of these words is attested by the proverb γλυκὺς ἀπείρῳ πόλεμος. Similar, and doubtless imitated from hence, are the words of Jos. Bell. ii. 16, 4, τινὰς μὲν ἡλικίᾳ (by their time of life) τῶν ἐν πολέμῳ κακῶν ἀπειράστους.

ὅπερ ἂν οἱ πολλοὶ πάθοιεν] In the transition from ἀπειρίᾳ to νομίσαντα we have one of the many forms of the oratio variata, similar to that infra i. 107, νομίσαντες δὲ ἀπορεῖν ὅπη διέλθωσιν ἐπεστράτευσαν αὐτοῖς καί τι καὶ τοῦ δήμου οὗ νῦν βουλεύεσθε, οὐκ ἂν ἐλάχιστον γενόμενον, εἰ σωφρόνως τις αὐτὸν ἐκλογίζοιτο. 3. πρὸς μὲν γὰρ τοὺς Πελοποννησίους καὶ τοὺς ἀστυγείτονας παρόμοιος ἡμῶν ἡ ἀλκή, καὶ διὰ ταχέων οἷόν τε ἐφ' ἕκαστα ἐλθεῖν· πρὸς δὲ ἄνδρας, οἳ γῆν τε ἑκὰς ἔχουσι καὶ προσέτι θαλάσσης ἐμπειρότατοί εἰσι, καὶ τοῖς †ἄλλοις ἅπασιν ἄριστα ἐξήρτυνται, πλούτῳ τε ἰδίῳ καὶ δημοσίῳ, καὶ νανσὶ, καὶ ἵπποις, καὶ ὅπλοις, καὶ ὄχλῳ ὅσος οὐκ ἐν ἄλλῳ ἑνί γε χωρίῳ Ἑλληνικῷ ἐστὶν, ἔτι δὲ καὶ ξυμμάχους πολλοὺς φόρου ὑποτελεῖς ἔχουσι,—πῶς χρὴ πρὸς τούτους ῥᾳδίως πόλεμον ἄρασθαι, καὶ τίνι πιστεύσαντας ἀπαρασκεύους ἐπειχθῆναι; 4. πότερον ταῖς νανσίν; ἀλλ' ἥσσους ἐσμέν· εἰ δὲ μελετήσομεν καὶ ἀντιπαρασκευασόμεθα, χρόνος ἐνέσται.

καταλύσεως ὑποψία: and i. 120, πολλὰ γὰρ κακῶς γνωσθέντα—αἰσχρῶς περιέστη: also iii. 48, fin., where the dat. of subst. and the partic. are used for the same purpose: at the partic. is to be supplied ὡς, 'nor as thinking (i. e. because he thought) it good and safe.'

2. οὐκ ἐλάχιστον] 'non minimum,' for maximum, by the figure litotes, (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 463,) and so corresponding to what our author says of it supra i. 1, μέγαν καὶ ἀξιολογώτατον τῶν προγεγενημένων. Of εἰ σωφρόνως τις αὐτὸν ἐκλογίζοιτο the sense is, 'if any one would soberly weigh out, (subductis rationibus secum perpendeat,) and discover by consideration what it is.' So Hdot. ix. 89, ταῦτα ἐκλ. Pol. iii. 33, 8, φρονίμως ἐκλογιζόμενος τὸ πρᾶγμα. Jos. Ant. xvii. 14, 2, τοὺς σωφρόνως ἐκλογίζεσθαι δυναμένους: and often in Dio Cass. Poppo remarks that τις ἐκλογίζοιτο stands for ἐκλογίζοισθε: and he refers to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 487, 3, on the use of σὺ for τίς. But by neither of these scholars is any thing said as to the principle on which such a change is to be explained. Now this, I apprehend, may be traced to delicacy, whereby any one would avoid bringing too closely home any disagreeable truth; which is thus softened by that which bears some affinity to the figure κοίνωσις.

3. τοὺς ἀστυγείτονας] 'our neighbours,' the neighbouring states; namely, the Argives and Arcadians. Παρόμοιος ἡμῶν ἡ ἀλκὴ, 'nostræ vires sunt prope pares,' 'are a tolerable match for.' At ἐφ' ἕκαστα supply χωρία. For καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἅπασιν, (in which I see not how the ἄλλοις can be tolerated, since no kinds of apparatus for war have been hitherto spoken of,) I suspect that our author wrote καὶ τοῖς ἄλλως, aliter, in other respects; on which see Viger, p. 378. By ὅπλοις, a little after, Poppo supposes to be meant, hoplites: a view which might be correct, if ἵπποις were necessarily to be understood of horse. But that is far from being the case; the idiom in question never, I believe, having place in the plural unaccompanied with the article; as we say, the horse. It is true that in Plut. de Garrul. § 15, we have, ἄμισθός ἐστι προδότης, οὐχ ἵππους, οὐδὲ τείχη προδιδοὺς, ἀλλὰ, &c. But there, I suspect, Plutarch wrote ἱππεῖς. The same error has crept into a passage of Polyb. i. 73, 2, ἐγύμναζον τοὺς πολιτικοὺς ἵππους, where read ἱππεῖς, as i. 75, 2, δόντες—πολιτικοὺς ἱππεῖς καὶ πεζούς. The words, indeed, are often confounded in the MSS. of Xenophon. But to proceed: it may further be urged, that after πλούτῳ there is required something suitable to that idea, namely, something that required wealth to provide it, which is especially the case with horses and arms; for, as to the former, it is well known that horses were seldom bred in Peloponnesus, and consequently they had to be imported from other countries, as Thessaly, Macedonia, Thrace, Italy, Sicily, and Asia Minor; and so fetched a high price. The same remark applies to the latter, arms and armour. Moreover, how, it may be asked, could the term ὄχλος have any such sense as 'the light-armed'? It must surely here, as often elsewhere, signify 'a multitude of persons,' what we express by 'a dense population,' namely, such as were necessary to man fleets, and fill the ranks of armies. So infra vi. 17, 2, we have, ὄχλοις ξυμμίκτοις πολυανδροῦσιν αἱ πόλεις. The wealth mentioned was, we may suppose, obtained by the extensive and lucrative commerce of Athens.

ἑνί γε] 'in any one at least.' So Xen. Anab. i. 9, 12, πλεῖστον ἑνί γε ἄνδρι.

ασόμεθα, χρόνος ἔνεσται] 'if we should employ practising, and set on foot counter-preparations, time will intervene:' χρόνος ἔν. standing for χρον. ἐγγενήσεται, as in the phrase χρόνου ἐγγενομένου, viii. 9, 1, where see note.

5. τούτου] for τούτων. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 439. Ἐν κοινῷ. Supply ταμιείῳ. So Aristot. Pol. ii. 7, 6, οὔτε ἐν τῷ κοινῷ τῆς πόλεως ἔστιν οὐδὲν πολέμους μεγάλους ἀναγκαζομένοις πολεμεῖν. Herodot. vii. 144, 2, ὅτε Ἀθηναίοισι γενομένων χρημάτων μεγάλων ἐν τῷ κοινῷ. Dionys. Hal. p. 1182, οἷς οὔτ' ἰδίᾳ οὔτ' ἐν κοινῷ χρήματα ἔστιν. Of ἐκ τῶν ἰδίων the sense is, 'from our private property.'

Ch. LXXXI. 1. τοῖς ὅπλοις] Poppo explains this as standing for ὁπλίταις: but such a sense of the word is, I apprehend, no where found in our author. The passage at ch. 80 has another application from that at iv. 74, where see note. In the present passage the sense in question would be most harsh; and to understand τῷ πλήθει of the light-armed or of the multitude of the allies, were harsher still. Hence I would take the expression ὁπλ. to signify arms, meaning the use of arms, in which the Lacedæmonians particularly excelled: and by τῷ πλήθει I would understand what we call population, in which the Peloponnesians exceeded the Athenians; so that they could, and did, send a larger army to the field than the Athenians could face in the open plain So infra i. 141, it is said that the Peloponnesians and their allies were able to cope with all the other Greeks.

2. τοῖς δὲ, &c.] Here δὲ stands for the ἀλλὰ discretive and adversative, expressed by the Latin at or sed, and our ay, but.

3. αὖ] 'porro,' 'furthermore.'

4. τίς οὖν ἔσται ἡμῶν ὁ πόλεμος;] 'what sort of a war, then, will this of ours be?' Compare Xen. Anab. vii. 1, 26, οἷος δ' ὁ πόλεμος ἂν γένοιτο;

βλαψόμεθα τὰ πλέω] 'we shall be more injured (than they);' i. e. come off with the worst.

5. οὐδὲ καταλύεσθαι ἔ. κ.] 'it will no longer be honourable to put an end to the war,' by treating for peace. Comp. vi. 13.

7. δέδοικα δὲ, &c.] Here δὲ is, as at § 2, strongly adversative; q. d. On the contrary, I rather fear that, &c. Μὴ καὶ τοῖς παισὶν αὐτὸν ὑπολίπωμεν, 'lest we may bequeath it to our children.' Comp. Hom. Il. iii. 160, Μήδ' ἡμῖν τεκέεσσι τ' ὀπίσσω πῆμα λίποιτο. Dio Cass. p. 47, 67, πόλεμον τῇ πόλει κατέλειπε. Of οὕτως εἰκὸς the sense is, 'so likely is it.' Φρονήματι, 'through their high spirit.' Of μήτε τῇ γῇ δουλεῦσαι the sense is, 'will not be bowed down, or brought to yield, out of regard to that.' So i. 143, τούτων ἕνεκα οὐχ ὑπακούσεσθε. As illustrative of this phrase, the following passages, among many that I have noted, may be not unacceptable: Dio Cass. 525, 13, δουλεύειν τῇ ἀνάγκῃ: Joseph. 165, 5, δ. τῷ κέρδει: Diod. Sic. t. 10, 148, δ. τῇ συνηθείᾳ: J. Chrys. t. 1, 161, δ. ἀριθμῷ: Philostr. V. A. 3, 30, δ. ταῖς τραπέζαις: and Plut. Themist. vi. τὰς μὲν οἰκίας καὶ τὰ τείχη καταλελοίπαμεν, οὐκ ἀξιοῦντες ἀψύχων ἕνεκα δουλεύειν. We may remark the use of the infin. aor. for inf. fut., as often after verbs of supposing and conjecturing. Compare infra i. 121. ii. 3, 11. iii. 46. v. 22.

γῇ δουλεῦσαι, μήτε, ὥσπερ ἀπείρους, καταπλαγῆναι τῷ πολέμῳ. LXXXII. οὐ μὴν οὐδὲ ἀναισθήτως αὐτοὺς κελεύω τοὺς τε ξυμμάχους ἡμῶν ἐᾶν βλάπτειν, καὶ ἐπιβουλεύοντας μὴ καταφωρᾶν, ἀλλὰ ὅπλα μὲν μήπω κινεῖν, πέμπειν δὲ καὶ αἰτιᾶσθαι, μήτε πόλεμον ἄγαν δηλοῦντας μήθ' ὡς ἐπιτρέψομεν· κἀν τούτῳ καὶ τὰ ἡμέτερα αὐτῶν ἐξαρτύεσθαι, ξυμμάχων τε προσαγωγῇ καὶ Ἑλλήνων καὶ βαρβάρων, εἴ ποθέν τινα ἢ ναυτικοῦ ἢ χρημάτων δύναμιν προσληψόμεθα· (ἀνεπίφθονον δὲ ὅσοι, ὥσπερ καὶ ἡμεῖς ὑπ' Ἀθηναίων ἐπιβουλευόμεθα, μὴ Ἕλληνας μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ βαρβάρους προσλαβόντας διασωθῆναι·) καὶ τὰ αὐτῶν ἅμα ἐκποριζώμεθα· 2. καὶ ἢν μὲν ἐσακούσωσί τι πρεσβευομένων ἡμῶν, ταῦτα ἄριστα· ἢν δὲ μὴ, μήτε—πολέμῳ] Render, 'nor that, like new recruits, they will be terrified at the [prospect of] war;' τῷ πολέμῳ standing for the more usual ὑπὸ τοῦ πολέμου.

Ch. LXXXII. 1. οὐ μὴν οὐδὲ] In this formula the repetition of the negative is not without force; the οὐ, as Hoogev. observes, denying simply and generally; the οὐδὲ, particularly. The sense may be thus expressed: 'Yet I do not bid you either (or lit., as in vulgar phraseology with us, neither) to let them,' &c. Or, rendering more freely, 'However, I by no means recommend you,' &c. On this formula see more infra ii. 97, 8. Of ἀναισθήτως αὐτοὺς—ἐᾶν βλάπτειν, the sense is, 'to patiently brook them as if you felt them not.' So ch. 69, med. we have, καὶ λανθάνειν μὲν οἰόμενον διὰ τὸ ἀναίσθητον ὑμῶν ἧσσον θαρσοῦσι, where see note. Μὴ καταφωρᾶν, 'not to detect and expose.' Ὅπλα κινεῖν, 'to take up arms,' as in Dio Cass. 311, 40. 611, 11. Herodian, vii. 4, 2. Of μήτε πόλεμον ἄγαν δηλοῦντας the sense is, 'neither making a too great show of war,' but dissembling our intentions, until we are quite ready. Thus Goeller considers μὴ δηλοῦν here as equivalent to μὴ προσποιεῖσθαι infra iii. 47. The words following, μήθ' ὡς ἐπιτρέψομεν, he supposes to mean, 'nor to let them see that we do not mean to notice their conduct.' But the sense rather appears to be, as Bauer, Pop., and Arn. render, 'neither to threaten war too plainly; and [yet] to show clearly that we shall not let them go on as they do, nor tamely acquiesce in their conduct.' Thus μήθ' ὡς is to be resolved into καί [τοι] ὡς οὐκ ἐπιτρ. Of this sense of μὴ ἐπιτρέπειν, to signify 'not to put up with an injury,' examples occur in the best Attic writers. So Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 11. iii. 2, 5, ἢν ἀδικῶσιν οὐκ ἐπιτρέψουσιν.

τὰ ἡμέτερα αὐτῶν ἐξαρτύεσθαι] 'to set in order, adjust, and consolidate our own affairs.' So vii. 65, τἄλλα ἐξηρτύσαντο: and iv. 107, τὰ περὶ Α. ἐξηρτύετο.

εἴ ποθέν τινα — προσληψόμεθα] Εἴ ποθεν properly means sicunde, 'if from any quarter;' and this sense it often bears in Homer. But it may also signify (as in the frequent idiom εἴτις for ὅστις) 'from whatever quarter,' 'whencesoever:' and so it is used in Homer; as Odyss. i. 414, οὔτ' οὖν ἀγγελίης ἔτι πείθομαι, εἴ ποθεν ἔλθοι: and Soph. Phil. 1204, ξίφος, εἰποθεν, ἢ γέννυ (axe) ἢ βελέων τι, προπέμψατε, where there is an ellips. of ἔλθοι. Here, however, the εἰ is requisite to be construed with προσληψόμεθα, the full sense being, 'to try if we can obtain.' And πόθεν will be quite as applicable as εἰποθεν, since it may likewise mean 'from any quarter,' ὅποθεν, δήποτε. See Hom. Od. xiv. 374, and Il. xviii. 32. Finally, the fut. indic. is here used, and not the opt., because εἰ here bears the sense whether, or rather, 'to try whether,' as in Mark xi. 13, ἰδὼν συκῆν—ἦλθεν, εἰ ἄρα εὑρήσει τι ἐν αὐτῷ, in which case the fut. is best rendered by our can or could.

ἀνεπίφθονον δὲ ὅσοι—διασωθῆναι] We have here a parenthetical remark, suggested by the term εἴ ποθεν just before, and meant to anticipate an objection to the calling in the aid of barbarians. The words following, καὶ τὰ αὐτῶν ἅμα ἐκποριζώμεθα, are not in construction with προσληψ., for that would involve an unprecedented anomaly; nor are they merely a varied mode of expression for καὶ τῶν ἡμετέρων ἐκπορισμῷ, but they form a separate sentence, of which the import is, 'And [withal] we must meanwhile provide ourselves with resources for the war out of our own funds;' for ποριζώμεθα τὰ χρήματα ἐκ τῶν ἑαυτῶν χρημάτων, with reference to χρημάτων before.

2. ταῦτα ἄριστα] scil. εἴη, 'that will be best;' plur. for sing., as in Eurip. Heracl.

διελθόντων ἐτῶν καὶ δύο καὶ τριῶν, ἄμεινον ἤδη, ἢν δοκῇ, πεφραγμένοι ἴμεν ἐπ' αὐτούς. 3. καὶ ἴσως, ὁρῶντες ἡμῶν ἤδη τήν τε παρασκευὴν καὶ τοὺς λόγους αὐτῇ ὁμοῖα ὑποσημαίνοντας, μᾶλλον ἂν εἴκοιεν, καὶ γῆν ἔτι ἄτμητον ἔχοντες, καὶ περὶ παρόντων ἀγαθῶν καὶ οὔπω ἐφθαρμένων βουλευόμενοι. 4. μὴ γὰρ ἄλλο τι νομίσητε τὴν γῆν αὐτῶν ἢ ὅμηρον ἔχειν, καὶ οὐχ ἧσσον ὅσῳ ἄμεινον ἐξείργασται· ἧς φείδεσθαι χρὴ ὡς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον, καὶ μὴ ἐς ἀπόνοιαν καταστήσαντας αὐτοὺς ἀληπτοτέρους ἔχειν. 5. εἰ γὰρ ἀπαράσκευοι, τοῖς τῶν ξυμμάχων ἐγκλήμασιν ἐπειχθέντες, τεμοῦμεν αὐτήν, ὁρᾶτε ὅπως μὴ αἴσχιον καὶ ἀπορώτερον τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ πράξωμεν. 6. ἐγκλήματα μὲν γὰρ καὶ πόλεων καὶ ἰδιωτῶν οἷόν τε καταλῦσαι· πόλεμον δὲ ξύμπαντας ἀραμένους ἕνεκα τῶν ἰδίων, ὃν οὐχ ὑπάρχει εἰδέναι καθ' ὅτι χωρήσει, οὐ ῥᾴδιον εὐπρεπῶς θέσθαι. LXXXIII. Καὶ ἀνανδρία μηδενὶ πολλοὺς μιᾷ πόλει μὴ ταχὺ ἐπελθεῖν δοκείτω εἶναι. εἰσὶ γὰρ καὶ ἐκείνοις οὐκ ἐλάσσους χρήματα φέροντες ξύμμαχοι· καὶ

1021, τὰ λῷστ' ἂν εἴη. Δύο καὶ τριῶν, 'two or three,' as supra ch. 22, and v. 74. Ἄμεινον πεφραγμένοι, 'better fortified,' i.e. prepared, 'for the contest;' 'muniti et instructi ad bellum,' for ἐξηρτυμένοι. The metaphor is taken from a soldier in full armour; as φραχθέντες in Hom. Il. xvii. 268, and Eurip. Or. 1413.

3. τοὺς λόγους αὐτῇ ὁμοῖα ὑποσημαίνοντας] 'and our words speaking the same language as our deeds,' i. e. our preparations. Ὑποσημαίνω signifies 'to give a private σῆμα or intimation of any thing;' subindico, to intimate; (so Aristot. Eth. iv. 2, καθάπερ καὶ τοὔνομα αὐτὸ ὑποσημαίνει:) and also, as here, to signify. Καὶ περὶ παρόντων ἀγαθῶν καὶ οὔπω ἐφθαρμένων βουλευόμενοι, 'while they have their territory yet undevastated, and are consulting about valuable property still in being and not destroyed.'

4. μὴ γὰρ ἄλλο—ὅμηρον ἔχειν] 'For think not their territory aught but as a pledge to hold:' or, 'think not that you hold their territory but as a pledge.' Ἔχειν is for κατέχειν, and ὅμηρον is equiv. to ἐνέχυρον, a pledge; or lit. something held in hand, handsel, as a surety for the fulfilment of any covenant. So to act was a not unfrequent policy with the Lacedæmonians, (see Polyæn. Strat. ii. 1, and Herodot. i. 17,) and even the Romans, as appears from Livy, v. 42, Non omnia concremare tecta, ut pignus, ad flectendos hostium animos, haberent. Οὐχ ἧσσον ὅσῳ is equiv. to τοσούτῳ μᾶλλον ὅσῳ. Ἐξείργασται, 'has been highly cultivated,' 'has had its riches drawn forth by cultivation;' a use of the word found in Hdot. v. 29, εὗρον τοὺς ἀγροὺς εὖ ἐξεργασμένους, and vi. 137, χώρην ἐξεργασμένην εὖ. Xen. Hist. vi. 2, 4, and Œcon. xx. 22 and 23.

5. ἐπειχθέντες] 'urged on.' Of ὁρᾶτε ὅπως—πράξωμεν the full sense is, 'mind, if we shall not occasion to Peloponnesus rather disgrace and difficulty, than honour and advantage.' On the idiom in ὁρᾶτε ὅπως μή, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 519, 7. The phrase πράσσειν αἴσχιον is to be explained from πρ. ἀγαθὸν, &c. In ἀπορώτερον πράξωμεν the compar. stands for the positive with μᾶλλον.

6. πόλεμον δὲ—θέσθαι] The constr. is, Οὐ ῥᾴδιον δὲ [ἡμᾶς] ξυμπ. ἀραμένους ἕνεκα τῶν ἰδίων πόλεμον, ὃν οὐχ ὑπάρχει εἰδέναι καθ' ὅτι χωρήσει, εὐπρ. θέσθαι. Of ἕνεκα τῶν ἰδίων, as opposed to ξύμπαντας, the sense is, 'on account of individual states,' as Corinth and Megara. Καθ' ὅτι χωρήσει, 'what issue it will have.' Εὐπρεπῶς, 'honourably,' lit. 'decently.' Θέσθαι is for ἀποθέσθαι. Evidently imitated from these words are those of Jos. Bell. ii. 16, 4, κινηθέντα δ' ἅπαξ τὸν πόλεμον οὔτ' ἀποθέσθαι ῥᾴδιον δίχα συμφορῶν, οὔτε βαστάσαι.

Ch. LXXXIII. 1. ἐπελθεῖν] 'to advance upon,' as vi. 68.

εἰσὶ γὰρ καὶ ἐκείνοις—ξύμμαχοι] Render, 'for they have allies also, not inferior in number to our own, and that pay them tribute.' The common interpretation is indefensible, since the Lacedæmonian allies did not pay them tribute. See supra, ch. 19, and note.

ὁ πόλεμος οὐχ ὅπλων] On this use of the genit. see Matth. Gr. Gr. Here πρᾶγμα may be understood. The article here might have its usual force, (namely, 'the war in question,') did not the passage rather seem to be a gnome. See note supra ch. 71, 4. So τὸν πόλεμον, ch. 85, 2. Of τὸ πλέον, ἀλλά, just after, the sense is, 'not so much as.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 455, 6. Δι' ἣν τὰ ὅπλα ὠφελεῖ. Render, 'through which alone arms are of any avail;' δι' ἣν standing for δι' ἧς, as infra iii. 13 and 39. Ἠπειρώταις, 'in the case of inlanders:' a sense of the word required by the antithesis. Of this use of the dative another example occurs infra vi. 72, τοῖς πρώτοις—χειροτέχναις.

2. οἵπερ δὲ—προϊδωμεν] The construction is, οἵπερ δὲ ἔχομεν τὸ πλέον τῆς αἰτίας τῶν ἀποβ. ἐπ' ἀμφ.: and the sense, 'let those who are to have the greatest share of the praise or blame resulting from the events, whichsoever way they may turn out, [whether for good or for evil,] let us, I say, leisurely take some forecast for them,' i. e. to consider beforehand which turn they may take. So infra ii. 11, μεγίστην δόξαν οἰόμενοι—ἐπ' ἀμφότερα ἐκ τῶν ἀποβαινόντων. Αἰτία has here its primary sense, being a term of middle signification, denoting the cause of any thing, whether for good or evil; as Æschyl. Choëph. 1018, ἐκτὸς αἰτίας εἶναι. We may notice the change of person in προϊδ., by which a gnome generalis is applied to a particular case.

Ch. LXXXIV. 1. καὶ τὸ βραδὺ—μὴ αἰσχύνεσθε] The passage has been imitated by Philo Jud. 473, 6, and Appian, ii. 683, μηδὲ βραδυτῆτά τις ἡγεῖσθαι τὴν ἐμπειρίαν, ἢ ταχύτητα, which may suggest the following mode of restoring a confessedly corrupt passage. Read there for the above, μηδὲ βρ. τις ἡγ. τὴν [ἀπειρίαν, ἢ τὴν] ἐμπειρίαν ταχύτητα: the words here wanting having been, we may suppose, lost by means of the τὴν—τήν.

Μάλιστα is to be referred to μέμφονται before; the sense being, 'most of all they accuse us of.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 317. In the words following, σπεύδοντές τε γὰρ—ἐγχειρεῖν, we have a sort of adage, applied to the present case, and pointed by the Oxymoron, like the Sophoclean σχολῇ ταχύς. The Lacedæmonians dealt much in these pithy saws, and they used often to adduce them in excuse of that tardiness, which was commonly and justly attributed to them. Of the same kind is the following maxim in Herodot. vii. 10, 60, ἐπειχθῆναι μὲν νῦν πᾶν πρῆγμα τίκτει σφάλματα, ἐκ τῶν ζημίαι μεγάλαι φιλέουσι γίνεσθαι· ἐν δὲ τῷ ἐπισχεῖν ἔνεστι ἀγαθά, εἰ μὴ παραυτίκα δοκέοντα εἶναι, ἀλλ' ἀνὰ χρόνον ἐξεύροι τις ἄν.

καὶ ἅμα] 'and moreover [by this].' Such the context requires to be supplied from the general subject. And so, a little further on, δι' αὐτὸ, with reference to the preceding words, τὸ βραδὺ καὶ μέλλον. Here is adduced another argument why delay is not to be censured, and that deduced from the effect. For the vulg. εὐδοξοτάτην, Goeller, without any authority, edits ἐνδ., merely from the rareness of the word. But how little reason there is for the change, will appear from various examples which occur in Pindar, Herodot., Xen., and Dio Cass., adduced by me in note on Transl. Besides, εὐδ. is a more forcible term than ἐνδ. Δύναται τοῦτ' εἶναι, 'in hoc cadit;' 'in this consists prudent sober-mindedness.' Compare ch. 58, and note.

2. εὐπρ. οὐκ ἐξυβ.] 'we do not, by reason of prosperity, run riot:' imitated by App. i. 594, 91, οὐχ ὑβρίζομεν ταῖς εὐπραξίαις, equiv. to μετριοπαθῶς χρῆσθαι ταῖς εὐπραξίαις, p. 366, 63. Of this use of the dat.

ἐξοτρυνόντων ἡμᾶς ἐπὶ τὰ δεινὰ παρὰ τὸ δοκοῦν ἡμῖν, οὐκ ἐπαιρόμεθα ἡδονῇ, καὶ ἤν τις ἄρα ξὺν κατηγορίᾳ παροξύνῃ, οὐδὲν μᾶλλον ἀχθεσθέντες ἀνεπείσθημεν. 3. πολεμικοί τε καὶ εὔβουλοι διὰ τὸ εὔκοσμον γιγνόμεθα, τὸ μὲν ὅτι αἰδῶς σωφροσύνης πλεῖστον μετέχει, αἰσχύνης δὲ εὐψυχία· εὔβουλοι δὲ ἀμαθέστερον τῶν νόμων τῆς ὑπεροψίας παιδευόμενοι, καὶ ξὺν χαλεπότητι σωφρονέστερον ἢ ὥστε αὐτῶν ἀνηκουστεῖν· καὶ μὴ τὰ ἀχρεῖα ξυνετοὶ ἄγαν ὄντες, τὰς τῶν see other examples in Matth. Gr. § 398, 6. For the vulg. ἐποτρυνόντων I have, with Bekk., Goell., and Pop., edited ἐξοτρ., not only from its being found in eight MSS., but also from its being confirmed by several passages of Dio Cass. which I could adduce. Render, 'if any spur us on by praise to perilous adventures disapproved by our judgment, we are not elevated by pleasure,' meaning the pleasure of having our ears tickled by flattery; ἡδονῇ, ἣν παρέχουσιν οἱ ἐξοτρύνοντες. Of the words following, καὶ ἤν τις—ἀνεπείσθημεν, the sense is, 'and if any one should stimulate us by accusation, the sting of reproach would not be at all more likely to sway our resolves.' Ἀνεπείσθημεν stands for μετεπ., sententiâ aliquem traducere, as in Dio Cass. 249, 99. The words ξὺν κατηγορίᾳ may call to mind the Virgilian: 'Tum dictis virtutem accendit amaris.'

3. πολεμικοί τε καὶ εὔβουλοι—εὐψυχία] The sense is, 'By this orderly sobermindedness, we are both brave in contest and prudent in counsel: that, because sober-mindedness bears a close affinity with sensibility to disgrace, with which a manly courage is intimately connected.' The terms αἰδῶς and αἰσχύνη are, indeed, properly distinguished, like our modesty and bashfulness. See Zonar. Lex.: so Plato, Charm. p. 122, makes a similar distinction between αἰδῶς and σωφροσύνη. Here, however, the two terms,—as also σωφροσύνη and εὐκοσμία,—are used as tantamount in sense. Now on the influence of αἰδῶς in promoting bravery, suffice it to adduce Hom. Il. xv. 561, ἀνέρες ἐστέ, καὶ αἰδῶ θέσθ' ἐνὶ θυμῷ· Ἀλλήλους τ' αἰδεῖσθε κατὰ κρατερὰς ὑσμινάς: and Plut. Cleom. 9, τὴν ἀνδρείαν δέ μοι δοκοῦσι οὐκ ἀφοβίαν, ἀλλὰ φόβον ψόγου καὶ δέος ἀδοξίας οἱ παλαιοὶ ἐνόμιζον. Similar, too, is the use of αἰσχύνεσθαι, infra ii. 43, and v. 9. The general sense, then, here intended, is, as Goeller shows, 'Modesti sumus; ex modestiâ vitandi dedecoris studiosi; ex eo studio fortes.' The phrase πλεῖστον μετέχει recurs infra iii. 83, τὸ εὐηθὲς, οὗ τὸ γενναῖον πλεῖστον μετ., where see note.

Of the words following, εὔβουλοι δὲ ἀμαθέστερον τῶν νόμων τῆς ὑπεροψίας παιδευόμενοι, the general sense is well laid down by Goell. as follows: 'Modestia nostra, quam tarditatem Corinthii dicunt, efficit, ut et bellicosi simus et circumspecti, ac bellicosi quidem, quia modestiam vel maxime pudor et vitandi dedecoris studium sequitur; rursus ex illo pudore nascitur periculorum contemptus et fortitudo. Ita fit, ut bellicosi simus. Circumspecti autem modestia fimus, quia sic instituimur, ut leges non contemnamus, et severitate disciplinæ iis obtemperare discamus; quia sic instituimur, ut inutilia addiscere nolentes non quidem hostium apparatum copiose loquentes reprehendamus, sed tanto alacrius agendo rem ipsam aggrediamur; quia denique sic instituimur, ut persuasum nobis habeamus, consilia hostium similia esse fortunæ casibus, qui ne ipsi quidem callide disserendo ex incertis certi reddi possunt. Quare semper re et voluntate parati sumus ut adversus bene consultos hostes, neque in erroribus, quos illi forsitan commissuri sint, fiduciam ponamus, sed ex hoc spem victoriæ capiamus, quod in omnem eventum semper præparati sumus.' In ἀμαθέστερον παιδευόμενοι we have, as Goeller observes, a varied mode of expression for ὅτι ἀμαθ. παιδευόμεθα. On the partic. παιδευόμενοι depend the adverbs ἀμαθέστερον and σωφρονέστερον. And in the sentence, as depending on those adverbs, there is another variation; for what depends on ἀμαθ. is a subst., namely, τῆς ὑπεροψίας, equiv. to ἢ ὥστε τοὺς νόμους ὑπερορᾶν: while what depends on σωφρονέστερον is a verb, ἢ ὥστε ἀνηκουστεῖν. Moreover, on παιδευόμενοι depend the infinitives ἐπεξιέναι and νομίζειν. The term ἀμαθέστερον is used sarcastically; and the general sentiment is well illustrated by the words of Cleon, infra iii. 37, 2, 3, 4. Eurip. Or. 481, Ἑλληνικόν τοι—τῶν νόμων γε μὴ πρότερον εἶναι θέλειν. Bacch. 846. Plato, p. 555, E. Aristotle, Rhet. p. 78.

The expression ξὺν χαλεπότητι has reference to the ἐπίπονος ἄσκησις, ascribed to the Lacedæmonians, infra ii. 37. By τὰ ἀχρεῖα is to be understood that artificial

eloquence which the Athenians assiduously cultivated, but which the Lacedæmonians neglected, as of little consequence compared with the momentous concerns of action and real life, as opposed to words and empty speculations. Of the words following, ἀνομοίως ἔργῳ ἐπεξιέναι, (scil. λόγον, or τὰ λεχθέντα εἰς μέμψιν τῶν παρασκευῶν τῶν πολεμικῶν,) the sense is thus expressed by Goeller: 'Et quia ita educamur, ut, non, inutilium rerum periti, hostium apparatum pulchris verbis reprehendentes, re ipsa ingeniose dictis congruenter agendo (et hosti reprimendo) impares simus.' The import of νομίζειν δὲ τάς τε διανοίας—διαιρετάς, is difficult to be determined. It may be that laid down by Goell. and Arn. thus: 'We are trained to think that the views and plans of others are very much like the accidents of war which no ingenuity of eloquence can beforehand exactly determine. Therefore we neither calculate on the blunders of our enemies, nor on the favours of fortune; but our reliance is on our own courage and wisdom. Nor, again, should we think, with the Corinthians, that the character of the Athenians so differs from ours, as to make us unfit antagonists to them. One man is practically much the same as another; or if there be any difference, it is, that he who has been taught what is most needful, and has never troubled himself with superfluous accomplishments, is the best and most valuable person.' According to the above view, the words παραπλησίους εἶναι καὶ τὰς προσπιπτούσας τύχας will signify, 'very much like unto the chances which turn up or befal men in war:' a Metaphor taken from dice; also found in Eurip. Hipp. 715. According to either view, the meaning of οὐ λόγῳ διαιρετάς is, 'not to be distinctly unfolded in words [beforehand].' So infra i. 122, πόλεμος οὐκ ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς χώρει.

4. ἀεὶ δὲ ὡς πρὸς εὖ βουλευομένους τοὺς ἐναντίους ἔργῳ παρασκευαζόμεθα] 'We constantly make our preparation against our enemies in deed [not in word], as against men prudently consulting.' Here, though παρασκευαζώμεθα is found in a majority of the best MSS., and has been edited by Haack, Pop., and Goell., yet I have thought proper, with Bekk., to retain vulg. παρασκευαζόμεθα, because this is a case in which the authority of MSS. has far less weight than the internal evidence supplied by suitableness to the context; which is here strongly in favour of the indic.: for, as Arn. observes, 'Archidamus had been stating what the Spartans were, not what he wished them to be, as if they were not such already.' It is true, the next words seem to demand the subjunctive, (and hence, I suppose, such was substituted for the indic. by the ancient critics;) but they will sufficiently cohere with the former, if, with Arn., we regard the phrases ἔχειν δεῖ, and οὐ δεῖ νομίζειν, as a justification on the part of Archidamus of what he had already stated the Spartan character to be, as a matter of fact.' If this view be correct, the sentence constitutes a gnome generalis, founded on the practice of the Spartans. Accordingly I have translated thus: 'By deeds we ever make our preparations against our enemies, as against persons prudently consulting; for we should not rest our hopes on them, as likely to commit blunders, but upon ourselves, as securely forecasting.' The καὶ means adeoque, and so.

5. πολύ τε διαφέρειν οὐ δεῖ νομίζειν ἄνθρωπον ἀνθρώπου] So it is remarked by Professor Sedgwick, in his Treatise on the Studies of the University of Cambridge, that 'however men may differ in the natural strength or the cultivation of their individual powers, there are the same essential elements in all—and, morally speaking, one man seems to be distinguished from another only by the direction and expansion he has given to his innate faculties, and the governing power he has gained over them,' [and, it should be added, his appetites and passions.] Of the words following, κράτιστον δὲ εἶναι ὅστις ἐν τοῖς ἀναγκαιοτάτοις παιδεύεται, the sense may, agreeably to the view of them adopted by the Schol. and Latin translators, be laid down as follows: 'But he who has been trained up in the school of necessity, self-denial, and severe discipline, (alluding to the rigid system of Lycurgus,) is the best and most estimable person:' so presenting a great moral truth, and one well worthy of our author; but whether a truth here meant to be inculcated, I doubt, and am rather inclined to adopt the view of the sense propounded by Goeller, as more agreeable to the context.

LXXXVII. Τοιαῦτα λέξας ἐπεψήφιζεν αὐτὸς, Ἔφορος ὤν, ἐς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων. 2. ὁ δὲ (κρίνουσι γὰρ βοῇ καὶ οὐ ψήφῳ) οὐκ ἔφη διαγιγνώσκειν τὴν βοὴν ὁποτέρα μείζων, ἀλλὰ βουλόμενος αὐτοὺς φανερῶς ἀποδεικνυμένους τὴν γνώμην ἐς τὸ πολεμεῖν μᾶλλον ὁρμῆσαι, ἔλεξεν "Ὅτῳ μὲν ὑμῶν, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, δοκοῦσι λελύσθαι αἱ σπονδαὶ καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀδικεῖν, ἀναστήτω ἐς

Ch. LXXXV. 1. μελέτας] Meaning the institutions of Lycurgus, especially as respects education, and the maintenance of civil subordination; so called, because the persons who held them used them as exercises for the training of man for his duties in society, both those of body and mind. Ὠφελ. ἔχομεν, 'have been benefited by using.' Ἐπειχθέντες, 'using haste,' for adv. hastily. Ἐν βραχεῖ μορίῳ ἡμέρας, imitated by Aristides, ii. 7, μιᾶς ἡμέρας μέρος μικρῷ τὸ πᾶν ἐπιτρέψομεν, and ii. 175, and Liban. Orat. ap. Fabr. Bibl. Græc. vii. 213. And so Soph. Phil. 83, νῦν δ' ἐς ἀναιδὲς, ἡμέρας μέρος βραχὺ, Δός μοι σαυτόν. By σωμάτων καὶ χρημ., which terms have here a near relation, are meant 'persons and property,' with which we have also associated πόλεις, implying states and the fame or reputation they may possess. So Xen. Anab. i. 9, 12, καὶ χρήματα καὶ πόλεις καὶ τὰ ἑαυτῶν σώματα. By μᾶλλον is meant, 'in a greater degree [than others can].' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 454.

2. καὶ πρὸς τοὺς, &c.] The καὶ here, as a little before, (and at vii. 48, 68. viii. 76, and elsewhere,) signifies adeoque. In δίκας δοῦναι we have a forensic phrase, signifying 'to submit a case to judicial trial and decision.' Τὸν διδόντα, i. e. 'the person who commits his cause to judicial decision.'

Ch. LXXXVI. The prudent counsels of Archidamus were too sober to suit the violent temper of the assembly, whose sentiments found their full expression in the ensuing speech (delivered last, in order to give it the greater effect) of the presiding Ephor, Sthenelaidas. The composition has every appearance of genuineness, from its being marked by the peculiar Spartan characteristics of laconic brevity, and that blunt, homely, and business-like mode of address (observable in two similar speeches in Livy, i. 32, and iv. 41, to which the historian applies the epithets incomptus and horridus), by which, coming at once to the point, he proceeds to advert to the injuries suffered by the allies of Sparta—injuries she was bound in honour promptly to avenge, by an immediate declaration of war against the aggressors.

1. τοὺς μὲν λόγους, &c.] 'These many words of the Athenians I know nothing about.' In οὐ γιγνώσκω we have a phrase similar to one in our own language, by which is meant to be conveyed the idea not only that we understand not, but that we approve not. So in a passage of Isæus, cited in my note on Matt. vii. 23, οὐ γινώσκω σε. By ἀντεῖπον is meant contradiction, by refutation, of the charge of having injured the allies. Διπλασίας ζημίας. Compare a similar passage infra iii. 67, 2. The argument urged is, that the better their conduct was in times past, the more they deserved to suffer for present misconduct, as having degenerated from their former virtues.

2. οἱ δ' οὐκέτι—πάσχειν] 'for the injuries they suffer are not delayed, or yet to come, but present and actual:' a play upon the double sense of μέλλω, of which there is an antithesis. Similarly in Dio Cass. 448, 75, we have, πῶς δὲ οὐ δεινὸν ἐκεῖνον μὲν μὴ μελλῆσαι ὑμᾶς ἀδικεῖν, ὑμᾶς δὲ μέλλειν ἀμύνασθαι: and Dion. Hal. Ant. 2012, 11, ἡ μέλλησις τῆς ἀσφαλείας ἄωρος (unseasonable) ἐν οὐ μέλλουσι δεινοῖς: and p. 18, Sylb. ποία δὲ συγγνώμη τῷ χρονισμῷ ἐν οὐ χρονίζουσιν οὐδὲ μέλλουσι δεινοῖς;

3. οὐδὲ δίκαις — βλαπτομένους] 'nor, by words and pleadings, debate the case of those whose wrongs consist not in words, but in deeds.' He means to say that it was not fitting that Sparta should be pleading, while her allies were suffering.

5. καταπροδιδῶμεν] 'betray to their ruin;' for the κατα has an intensive force. Καταπροδιδόναι is a word scarcely noticed by lexicographers, though I have found it in Dio Cass., Dionys. Hal., Procop., Liban., Joseph., Lucian, and other writers.

Ch. LXXXVII. 1. ἐπεψήφιζεν—ἐς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν] 'put the question to vote in the assembly, as being then the presiding Ephor, or Prytanis.' It is observed by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 395, that ἐς τὴν ἐκκλ. stands for τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, and that ἐπιψηφ. is for ψῆφον προθεῖναι, in suffragia mittere; as infra ii. 24. vi. 14; in which view he compares Lucian, Tim. p. 113, ἐπεψήφισε τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ T. See Benwell on Xen. Memor., and Valck. on Herodot. viii. 61.

2. βοῇ] 'by shout;' the rudest but most ancient mode of voting, and therefore still retained among a people who clung to simple and ancient usages. See Plut. Lycurg. 26. Occasionally, indeed, it was in use even down to modern times, especially in tumultuary assemblies, such as the Polish Diet. The particular mode at length adopted by the suggestion of Stheneliadas, was not (as has been supposed) one novel and devised for the nonce; but such had probably been before employed, when that by shout was doubtful; and was now resorted to in order that the disposition of the assembly might be visibly displayed. The same usage, and for the same purpose, is found in Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 9, δείξας δέ τι χωρίον, ἐς τοῦτο ἐκέλευσε φανερὰν φέρειν τὴν ψῆφον: and Dio Cass. 475, 12, ἐκήρυξεν (δείξας τὸ χωρίον) τοὺς μὲν ἐπὶ τάδε, τοὺς δὲ ἐπὶ θάτερα αὐτοῦ ἀπελθεῖν. The custom became afterwards general, and is alluded to in the Latin phrase discedere in sententiam alicujus.

ἐκεῖνο τὸ χωρίον" δείξας τι χωρίον αὐτοῖς· "ὅτῳ δὲ μὴ δοκοῦσιν, ἐς τὰ ἐπὶ θάτερα." 3. ἀναστάντες δὲ †διέστησαν, καὶ πολλῷ πλείους ἐγένοντο οἷς ἐδόκουν αἱ σπονδαὶ λελύσθαι. 4. προσκαλέσαντές τε τοὺς ξυμμάχους, εἶπον ὅτι σφίσι μὲν δοκοῖεν ἀδικεῖν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, βούλεσθαι δὲ καὶ τοὺς πάντας ξυμμάχους παρακαλέσαντες ψῆφον ἐπαγαγεῖν, ὅπως κοινῇ βουλευσάμενοι τὸν πόλεμον ποιῶνται, ἢν δοκῇ. 5. καὶ οἱ μὲν ἀπεχώρησαν ἐπ' οἴκου διαπραξάμενοι ταῦτα, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναίων πρέσβεις ὕστερον, ἐφ' ἅπερ ἦλθον χρηματίσαντες. 6. ἡ δὲ διαγνώμη αὕτη τῆς ἐκκλησίας, τοῦ τὰς σπονδὰς λελύσθαι, ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ τετάρτῳ ἔτει καὶ δεκάτῳ τῶν τριακοντουτίδων σπονδῶν προκεχωρηκυιῶν αἳ ἐγένοντο μετὰ τὰ Εὐβοεικά.

LXXXVIII. Ἐψηφίσαντο δὲ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι τὰς σπονδὰς λελύσθαι, καὶ πολεμητέα εἶναι, οὐ τοσοῦτον τῶν ξυμμάχων πεισθέντες τοῖς λόγοις, ὅσον φοβούμενοι τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, μὴ ἐπὶ μεῖζον δυνηθῶσιν, ὁρῶντες αὐτοῖς τὰ πολλὰ τῆς Ἑλλάδος ὑποχείρια ἤδη ὄντα. LXXXIX. Ἀθηναίων δὲ τὸ κοινὸν, ἐπειδὴ αὐτοῖς οἱ βάρβαροι ἐκ τῆς χώρας ἀπῆλθον, διεκομίζοντο εὐθὺς ὅθεν

3. διέστησαν] So we should say, 'they divided upon the question.'

5. ἐφ' ἅπερ ἦλθον χρηματίσαντες] 'after having despatched the affairs for which they had come:' a use of χρηματίζειν found also in Dionys. Hal., Jos., and other writers who have imitated Thucydides. For this Herodotus uses the middle form χρηματίζεσθαι, and the writers of the middle Attic, πραγματεύεσθαι.

6. Εὐβοεικὰ] So Pop. and Goell. edit (from MSS.) for the common reading Εὐβοϊκὰ, retained by Haack and Bekker, which, Poppo observes, should at least be Εὐβοϊκά.

CH. LXXXIX. Our author now breaks off from his narrative, in order to give (what might supply matter for future illustration to that narrative) a brief notice of the origin and progress of the Athenian dominion in Greece.

1. οἱ γὰρ Ἀθηναῖοι τ. τ. ἦλθον, &c.] Render, 'Now the Athenians had come unto that administration of affairs, whereby they had grown great, in the manner following.'

2. ἐκλιπ. τῶν βαρβ.] 'by the abandonment of the barbarians.'

3. τὸ κοινὸν] the commonwealth; as v. 37, and elsewhere. Ὑπεξέθεντο, 'had deposited them for safety.' Ὑπεκτίθεσθαι signifying 'to place any thing or person in a retired situation (ὑπὸ), out of the reach of harm (ἐκ):' in which sense the word occurs also in Herodot. viii. 4. Aristid. ii. 190. Lys. Epit. § 34, 36. Plut. Themist. Polyæn. p. 728. Lycurg. C. L. 151, 154. This use of ὅθεν for ἐκεῖθεν ὅπου, may be accounted for by considering that ὅθεν does in effect hold a place among relatives. See Matth. Gr. § 473, obs. By κατασκευὴ understand furniture and moveables.

4. βραχέα εἱστήκει] 'but few portions were left standing.' Indeed none, if we may credit Herodot. ix. 13, who says that before Mardonius abandoned the city, he burnt it, and εἴ κού τι ὀρθὸν ἦν τῶν περιβόλων, ἢ οἰκημάτων—πάντα καταβαλὼν καὶ συγχώσας, where συγχ. is a very strong term, and denotes 'a being so utterly demolished, that nothing but rubbish and dust are to be seen.' Yet accounts like these, of the utter destruction of edifices so massy as those of the ancients, are always to be understood cum grano salis: nor is there an exception even in the case of what is said of the prophesied destruction of Jerusalem, Matth. xxiv. 2, where see my note.

ἐσκήνησαν] 'had quartered.' Some MSS., indeed, have ἐσκήνωσαν: and of σκηνόω in this sense we have frequent examples in Xenophon, Polyb., Polyæn., and others; but in ἐσκήνησαν we have probably the old Attic form. See note infra i. 133, 1, and several remarks in my Lex. N. T. in voc. σκηνόω.

CH. XC. 1. ἦλθον πρεσβείᾳ] for ἐς πρεσβείαν, 'went on an embassy.'

ἥδιον] 'more willingly:' a signification not unfrequent in the Attic writers. Compare Xenoph. Mem. ii. 9, 1.

2. ἠξίουν αὐτοὺς μὴ τειχίζειν] 'they desired or required them not to wall [their city]:' a sense, this, of ἀξιόω, arising from the original one, 'to think any thing worthy or right to be done;' then, by metonymy of effect for cause, 'to desire any thing, as being reasonable to ask; or to require or demand any thing of any one, as just and right.'

τὸ βουλόμενον] for τὴν βούλησιν, 'their wish,' (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 269,) as τὸ ὕποπτον, just after, stands for τὴν ὑποψίαν. So we have τὸ βουλ. τῆς γνώμης in Menand. Hist. 101, A. 144, D.

ἀναχώρ. καὶ ἀφορ.] 'a seat of war, whence they might sally, and thither retreat.'

3. ἀπήλλαξαν] 'dismissed them,' for ἀπέλυσαν: as in Plutarch, i. 182, ἀπ. τοὺς συνηθεῖς. For vulg. αἴρωσιν I have edited, with Bekk., though without the authority of MSS., ἄρωσιν: while Goell. and Pop. retain the former. In so small a matter, the authority of MSS. is of less weight than the proprietas linguæ, which is here involved; for ἕως ἂν αἴρωσιν cannot bear the sense here required by the words following, 'until they should have raised.' Ὥστε ἀπομάχεσθαι. This depends upon ἱκανὸν, 'fit to fight from.' Ἐκ τοῦ ἀναγκαιοτάτου ὕψους: meaning, 'such a height as was barely necessary, and lower than which would make the wall useless for the purpose of defence.'

φειδομένους μήτε ἰδίου μήτε δημοσίου οἰκοδομήματος] We are not, from the term δημοσίου, to understand that temples are here included; for that the religious spirit (see Acts xvii. 22) of the Greeks would forbid. Among the public buildings, however, we may include the mausolea and other tombs. So Æschin. p. 87, 31, τὰς δημοσίας ταφὰς ἀνελόντα: and in Diod. we have, οὔτ' οἰκίας οὔτε τάφου φειδομένους.

4. τὰς ἀρχὰς] 'the magistrates or officers of state.' The term is not (what Hobbes accounts it) equiv. to τὸ κοινόν: but of these two terms the latter denoted the common assembly, before addressing which it was necessary to obtain the permission of the ἀρχαί. Thus ἐπέρχεσθαι ἐπὶ τὸ κοινὸν implied the previous προσίεναι πρὸς τὰς ἀρχάς, though, properly speaking, the two were distinct. Διῆγε, scil. τὸν χρόνον, 'procrastinated:' a rare sense, but sometimes occurring in Xenoph. and Dio Cass. Compare Liban. Orat. Par. in Jul. § 142, διῆγε, διέτριβεν, ἀναβαλλόμενος. Philostr. Vit. Ap. vii. 17.

With the phrase here, ἐπέρχ. ἐπὶ τὸ κοινὸν, compare similar ones in Pol. ii. 50, 10, παρελθεῖν εἰς τὸ κοινόν. Herodot. iii. 156, 7, ἦγον ἐπὶ τὰ κοινὰ τῶν B.

CH. XCI. 1. διὰ φιλίαν αὐτοῦ] The gen. is here for the dat. or accus. with a prep. Render, 'friendship towards him.' So James iv. 4, ἡ φιλία τοῦ κόσμου. On the thing itself, compare supra i. 74, 1. In the term κατηγορούντων, 'contradicted,' we have a significatio prægnans, as in Jos. Bell. i. 12, 4, κατηγοροῦντες Φασαήλου καὶ Ἡρώδου—αὐτοὺς κρατεῖν. For ὕψος λαμβάνει many good MSS. have πέρας λ., evidently proceeding from the scribes; who, it may be supposed, were better acquainted with the phrase πέρας λαμβάνειν, which is one of late Grecism, than ὕψος λ. Besides, the common reading is supported not only by Nepos, but also by a passage, evidently imitated from the present, in Jos. Ant. i. 4, 3, ἐλάμβανε δὲ θᾶσσον ὕψος.

2. μὴ λόγοις μᾶλλον παράγεσθαι, ἢ] for μὴ μᾶλλον—ἤ, or rather μὴ τοσοῦτον—ὅσον, or μή—ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον. So in Latin, non magis—quam. Ἄνδρας οἵτινες χρηστοί, 'persons of respectability;' as infra vi. 53, τοὺς πάνυ χρ. τῶν πολιτῶν: a signification, this, peculiar to the old Attic, occurring in Xenophon. The words σφῶν αὐτῶν are to be taken emphatically, with allusion to some who were not so, and from whom the representations had come.

3. Ἀβρώνυχος] The MSS. fluctuate between Ἀβρώνυχος, which is the common reading, Ἀβρώνιχος, which Bekker and Goeller edit, and Ἀβρώνυχος, edited by Poppo, which I have adopted, because the υ and ι are alike supported by the derivation, and the former, as Poppo remarks, by Herodot. viii. 21.

4. ἐνταῦθα δή] 'tum demum.' Adverbs properly of place are occasionally, as here, used of time.

At τὰ κοινὰ repeat ξύμφορα, which is here taken as a substantive. Poppo compares τὸ ξυνηθὲς ἥσυχον at vi. 34. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 433.

5. καὶ ὅσα—βουλεύεσθαι] The Greek writers in the oratio indirecta use the accus. with the infinitive even after the relatives ὅς, ὅσα, οἷα, and after the conjunctions εἰ, ἐπεί, ὡς, &c. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 538. (Goell.)

οὐδενὸς ὕστεροι γ. φ.] 'showed themselves inferior to none.'

6. ἀντιπάλου] for ἀνταξίου.

ὁμοῖόν τι ἢ ἴσον] 'any counsel which should hold an equal balance between all parties, should be honest and impartial.' With the sentiment compare infra ii. 44, οὐ γὰρ οἷόν τε ἴσον τι ἢ δίκαιον βουλεύεσθαι, οἳ ἂν μὴ καί, &c.

7. ἢ πάντας—ἔχειν] 'Either, therefore, (they said,) all the cities of the confederacy should be unwalled, or else they conceived that even this measure was right and proper,' namely, that theirs too should have walls.

CH. XCII. ὀργὴν—ἐποιοῦντο] 'made no show of resentment.' The phrase occurs also in Dionys. Hal. i. 76.

ἐπὶ κωλύμῃ] 'for hindrance.' This is called by Dionys. Hal. a poetical term; yet among the examples which I have noted of this rare word, I find not one poet, but all historians, some having this very phrase.

γνώμης παραινέσει] 'for the suggestion of their opinion.'

δῆθεν] This particle and δή are often used to denote the ostensible, or alleged ἅμα δὲ καὶ προσφιλεῖς ὄντες ἐν τῷ τότε διὰ τὴν ἐς τὸν Μῆδον προθυμίαν τὰ μάλιστα αὐτοῖς ἐτύγχανον·) τῆς μέντοι βουλήσεως ἁμαρτάνοντες ἀδήλως ἤχθοντο. οἵ τε πρέσβεις ἑκατέρων ἀπῆλθον ἐπ' οἴκου ἀνεπικλήτως.

XCIII. Τούτῳ τῷ τρόπῳ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὴν πόλιν ἐτείχισαν ἐν ὀλίγῳ χρόνῳ. 2. καὶ δήλη ἡ οἰκοδομία ἔτι καὶ νῦν ἐστιν ὅτι κατὰ σπουδὴν ἐγένετο· οἱ γὰρ θεμέλιοι παντοίων λίθων ὑπόκεινται, καὶ οὐ ξυνειργασμένων ἔστιν ᾗ, ἀλλ' ὡς ἕκαστοί ποτε προσέφερον· πολλαί τε στῆλαι ἀπὸ σημάτων καὶ λίθοι εἰργασμένοι ἐγκατελέγησαν· μείζων γὰρ ὁ περίβολος πανταχῇ ἐξήχθη τῆς πόλεως, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο πάντα ὁμοίως κινοῦντες ἠπείγοντο. 3. ἔπεισε δὲ καὶ τοῦ Πειραιῶς τὰ λοιπὰ ὁ Θεμιστοκλῆς οἰκοδομεῖν, (ὑπῆρκτο δ' αὐτοῦ πρότερον ἐπὶ τῆς ἐκείνου ἀρχῆς ἧς κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν Ἀθηναίοις ἦρξε,) νομίζων τό τε χωρίον καλὸν εἶναι, λιμένας ἔχον τρεῖς αὐτοφυεῖς, καὶ αὐτοὺς ναυτικοὺς γεγενημένους μέγα προφέρειν ἐς τὸ κτήσασθαι δύναμιν.

παντοίων] 'of all sorts and sizes.' In ὑπόκεινται we have a sort of technical term, (answering to a similar one in our own language, to lay bricks,) of which an example occurs in Xen. Hipp. i. 2, ὥσπερ οἰκίας οὐδὲν ὄφελος ἂν εἴη, εἰ τὰ ἄνω πάνυ καλὰ ἔχοι, μὴ ὑποκειμένων, οἷων δεῖ, θεμελίων. In οὐ ξυνειργασμένων the ξυν has reference to the adjustment which the squaring is intended to effect. Ἐγκατελέγησαν, 'were laid,' or 'wrought in.' In illustration of the expression, the Schol. aptly adduces a passage of Homer, Od. E. 358, in which we have the simple verb λέγω, whence, it may be observed, was derived the compounds καταλέγειν and ἐγκ. From the Greek λέγω also comes our lay; and exactly answering to the Greek λιθολόγος is our word bricklayer. That even the sarcophagi were sometimes so employed, will appear by reference to Lycurg., C. Leocr., and Hesych. Milesius.

μείζων γὰρ—πόλεως] This is, as Poppo observes, 'meant to show how the thing was done, so that sepulchral monuments and hewn stones were interposed among other materials in the walls.' There was, it seems, such a want of materials, especially on account of the circuit of the city walls being carried not farther than before, that almost any that would further the work, were removed and applied to the purpose in question without scruple. In μείζων—ἐξήχθη we have a blending of two forms of expression, μείζων ἦν and ἐξήχθη, the words being equiv. to ἐξήχθη ὁ περίβ. ὥστε μείζων εἶναι.

3. Ἀθηναίοις] 'inter Athenienses.' Or the dative may, as Abresch directs, be taken for the genitive, as in Hom. Il. xvi. 65, ἄρχε δὲ Μυρμιδόνεσσι. Αὐτοφυεῖς, 'natural;' lit. self-formed, not framed by human art and labour. So in Polyb. xxvii. 7, 4, opposed to χειροποιήτου is πέτρας αὐτοφυοῦς: and so Xen. Pol. iv. 2, αὐτοφυεῖς λόφοι. Theocr. Id. ix. 23, κορύναν αὐτοφυᾷ. Artem. Onir. i. 64, λούεσθαι θερμοῖς εἰδέσι, λέγω δὲ αὐτοφυέσι.

καὶ αὐτοὺς ναυτικοὺς — δύναμιν] Of these words the sense has been not a little disputed. Certain early commentators, as Portus and others, have undoubtedly missed of their true import, chiefly from their not attending to the force of the participle and the exact sense of the term προφέρειν. Dr. Arnold, in a long note on these words, strenuously applies himself to show that the meaning intended must be, that 'their having become a naval people would be a great help to their acquiring power.' Yet this sense (according to which, αὐτοὺς forms the subject of the clause) is surely not a little feeble; and far from certain is it, that the words themselves will bear such a sense; the idiom in question being one founded, not on Grecism, but Latinism. Moreover, it does violence to the manifest import of the clause, of which τὸ χωρίον (meaning the Piræus) is evidently the subject: and so far we may approve of the interpretation of Pop. and Goell. 'and the place would advance them greatly towards acquiring power, when they were become a naval people.' Yet surely the Athenians had already become such; and the sense, as required by the context, is, I doubt not, what I long since laid down in my Transl., 'and that, as they had become a naval people, the place would contribute much to their acquirement of power:' the construction being, καὶ μέγα προφέρειν ἐς τὸ αὐτοὺς, ναυτικοὺς γεγενημένους, κτήσασθαι δύναμιν. That προφέρειν has here the sense proficere, adjutare, 'to promote, be conducive to,' was long ago seen by Valla, and has since been pointed out by Schneider and Passow: and though the word in that sense is no where else found in our author, and very rarely elsewhere, yet that it is neither unprecedented, nor contrary to the analogy of the language, is certain from what is said by Schæfer in Steph. Thes. 10,047, D.

4. τὴν ἀρχὴν ξυγκατεσκεύαζε] 'assisted them in attaining its empire;' as in a passage of Plato de Leg. τὸν βίον ἡμῖν συγκατεσκεύασε τέχναις. The word also occurs in Xen. Pol. iv. 48. Lac. viii. 3. On ἀνθεκτέα, just before, see note supra i. 13.

5. ᾠκοδόμησαν—τὸ πάχος τοῦ τείχους, ὅπερ, &c.] By hypallage for 'they built the wall of that thickness which is even still visible:' for though at the time when Thucydides wrote, the walls had been destroyed by the Lacedæmonians, yet Arnold has proved from Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 11, that much more than the foundation must have been remaining; nay, that the destruction was only partial. It may be added, that in not a few passages of ancient writers walls are said to be destroyed, which were only disembattled, and beaten down to a height practicable for a coup de main.

δύο γὰρ — ἐπῆγον] 'for two wains brought stones, passing by each other upon it, and going contrary ways.' Ἅμαξα is used in Homer and Herodotus to signify not only a cart, but a waggon. Those here mentioned were what we call wains, of a peculiar construction for conveying timber and huge stones, of which one only went to each wain, the stones in question being each a wain's load. So in a passage, evidently written with a view to the present, of Dionys. Hal. Ant. iii. 67, p. 581, 3, we have, καὶ τὰ τείχη τῆς πόλεως — ἐδοκίμασε λίθοις ἁμαξιαίοις, εἰργασμένοις πρὸς κανόνα, κατασκευάζειν. It appears, then, that the two wains went in separate tracks, and consequently passed each other. Much of the obscurity existing in this passage has been occasioned by a want of some verb of motion with the adject. ἐναντίαι, and hence such will best be cleared up by reference to cases in which the word here left to be understood, is expressed, as Procop. p. 188, 17, εὖρος δέ ἐστι τῆς ὁδοῦ ταύτης, ὅσον ἁμάξας δύο ἀλλήλαις ἐναντίαις ἰέναι. Such walls Procopius de Ædif. p. 25, calls ἀμαξηλάτους. Indeed, it was, as I have shown, not unusual with the ancients to express the thickness of a wall by the number of carriages which could pass abreast along it, each being understood to require eight feet.

ἐντὸς δὲ οὔτε χάλιξ οὔτε πηλὸς ἦν] 'within there was neither rubble nor clay used.' Similarly Procop. p. 188, 20, οὔτε χαλκὸν ἐντὸς, οὔτε τι ἄλλο, ἐμβεβλημένος, where, for the confessedly corrupt χαλκὸν, read χάλικα. Of the word χάλιξ examples are found elsewhere in that writer, p. 251, 10, and de Ædif. p. 20.

By the term χάλιξ were denoted those fragments necessarily made in quarrying and squaring stone, which were used by the ancients to fill up the interior of very thick walls; (see Pliny, xxxvi. 22, Vitruv. ii. 8, the commentators on Hor. Od. iii. 1, 35, and Virgil's Æn. iv. 711,) in which case the χάλιξ was mixed up with plenty of clay; for that is what is here, as infra ii. 76. iv. 4, meant by the term πηλὸς, or clay-mortar, consisting of clay mixed with water, and well stirred up, which formed a composition that, when set, became almost as hard as stone. So Aristoph., Av. 839, καὶ τοῖσι τειχίζουσι παραδιακόνει, χάλικας παραφόρει, πηλὸν ἀποδὺς ὀργασον. See also Av. 1132, 50.

At ξυνῳκοδομημένοι, &c. supply ἦσαν, from ἦν, and render, 'But there were huge rectangularly cut stones, built together compactly,' i. e. with no interstices left for rubble and mortar. The term ξυνοικ. is used in order to intimate that the work was effected by simply putting together those immense masses of stone nicely fitted together, but entirely without cement: a description, the truth of which is attested by what Col. Leake says of the remains of the walls of Piræus where best preserved. 'We find it (says he) not filled up in the middle with rubble, in the usual manner of the Greeks, but constructed throughout the whole thickness of squared stones cramped together with metal.' So we read in Diod. Sic. t. ii. 228, init. τοὺς δὲ συνειλεομένους λίθους τόρμοις σιδηροῖς διελάμβανε, καὶ τὰς τούτων ἁρμονίας ἐπλήρου μολίβδου ἐντήκουσα, which passage well describes the process here adverted to by our author: and in συνερ. we have an apt allusion to the vast weight of the stones; which had only to be fixed in their places by propping and shoving, and required no cement. Similar is the allusion in a passage of St. Paul, Eph. ii. 22, ἐν ᾧ (scil. ναῷ) καὶ ὑμεῖς συνοικοδομεῖσθε εἰς κατοικητήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, and also in Longin. de Subl. sect. xi. p. 47, Toup, (a passage probably written with a view to the present,) where he remarks that, in their descriptions, judicious writers do not, when adducing the principal circumstances, stuff in any thing futile or mean, to fill up a gap: Λυμαίνεται γὰρ ταῦτα τὸ ὅλον (quite spoil) ὡσανεὶ ψήγματα ἢ ἀραιώματα (ramenta or frustula lapidum) ἐμποιοῦντα μεγέθη, συνοικονομούμενα τῇ τε πρὸς ἄλληλα σχέσει συντετειχισμένα, where, for συνοικον., read, with Ruhnk., συνοικοδομούμενα: and after ἀραιώματα insert τὰ, which has been absorbed by the τα preceding, though the article is indispensable.

For ἐν τομῇ, Poppo and Goeller, after Wyttenb., edit, from MS. Lugd., ἐντομῇ: a reading I have found supported by the Cambridge MSS., and which is countenanced by two passages closely imitated from the present, in Procop. p. 188, 19, and de Ædif. p. 4, 15. I have, however, not ventured to receive it, from the insufficiency of MS. authority, and still more from the circumstance that not one example is, I believe, to be met with of ἐντέμνω or ἐντομὴ in the sense of hewing stone; whereas τέμνω and τομὴ are of frequent occurrence. Thus the latter is found infra ii. 76, where see note. Moreover, the ἐν seems to be as unnecessary in the one case, as it is suitable in the other. The sense will thus be, 'in the cutting,' or as we say, cut.

With respect to the term following, ἐγγώνιοι, though it cannot of itself signify more than angulatus, 'formed in angles,' yet it may, by implication, denote quadrangular, i. e. when the accompanying circumstances, or our certain knowledge of facts, require us to assign such a sense; which is undoubtedly the case here, for the testimony of Col. Leake fully establishes this point; though the word might signify polygonal as well as quadrangular stones. This squared form was, he observes, like the later Greek and Roman style, or like the walls of some of the Etruscan cities. Nor is this sense of ἐγγώνιος unprecedented; since it is found in Jos. Ant. iii. 6, and Procop. 108, 19, and is not unfrequent in Hippocrates. See Foes. Œc. Hipp.

For μολίβδῳ, the reading of the greater part of the MSS., I have thought proper, with Bekk. and Goell., to edit μολύβδῳ, such, there is reason to think, being the manner of writing the word adopted in Homer, Herodot., Aristoph., and other of the early writers. It is true that in the several passages of these authors, one or more MSS. in almost every passage have the ι, but that can very well be accounted for from the prevalence of the ι in Græcitate mediâ et infimâ. Finally, that the υ was more ancient than the ι, may be argued from its broader sound, which would gradually pass into the ι, but not vice versâ.

At τὸ δὲ ὕψος ἥμισυ, &c. there is an ellipsis of μόνον: 'the height was only about half of that which was intended by him.' What that height was, the commentators and antiquaries do not inform us. It was, as I find from Appian, in Mithrid., forty cubits.

6. ἀφιστάναι] Schol. ἀποτροπὴν ποιεῖν. Rather, ἀποτρέπειν or ἀπωθεῖν, arcere, inhibere, 'to keep off:' a very rare sense, of which I have met with only one example elsewhere, Plut. vi. 127, ult. ἀφιστάναι καὶ ἀνακρούειν τὴν πίστιν. This, however, may be said to spring from the primary, ὀλίγων καὶ τῶν ἀχρειοτάτων ἀρκέσειν τὴν φυλακὴν, τοὺς δ' ἄλλους ἐς τὰς ναῦς ἐσβήσεσθαι. 7. ταῖς γὰρ ναυσὶ μάλιστα προσέκειτο, ἰδὼν, ὡς ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ, τῆς βασιλέως στρατιᾶς τὴν κατὰ θάλασσαν ἔφοδον εὐπορωτέραν τῆς κατὰ γῆν οὖσαν· τόν τε Πειραιᾶ ὠφελιμώτερον ἐνόμιζε τῆς ἄνω πόλεως· καὶ πολλάκις τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις παρῄνει, ἢν ἄρα ποτὲ κατὰ γῆν βιασθῶσι, καταβάντας ἐς αὐτὸν ταῖς ναυσὶ πρὸς ἅπαντας ἀνθίστασθαι. 8. XCIV. Παυσανίας δὲ ὁ Κλεομβρότου ἐκ Λακεδαίμονος στρατηγὸς τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἐξεπέμφθη μετὰ εἴκοσι νεῶν ἀπὸ Πελοποννήσου· ξυνέπλεον δὲ καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι τριάκοντα ναυσὶ καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ξυμμάχων πλῆθος. 2. καὶ ἐστράτευσαν ἐς Κύπρον, καὶ αὐτῆς τὰ πολλὰ κατεστρέψαντο, καὶ ὕστερον ἐς Βυζάντιον, Μήδων ἐχόντων, καὶ ἐξεπολιόρκησαν ἐν τῇδε τῇ ἡγεμονίᾳ. abstare facio, which is found in the physical sense, as used of expelling or removing disorders. For vulg. ἐπιβολὰς, Bekk., Goell., and Pop. edit, on strong authority from MSS., ἐπιβουλὰς, 'hostile designs.' As, however, the authority of MSS. is of little weight in the case of words, like ἐπιβολὴ and ἐπιβουλὴ, perpetually confounded, I have preferred retaining the old reading, and that on account of its yielding the more suitable sense; though that, I must maintain, is not what some make it, consilia, or conatus, but (according to the frequent use of the word in Polyb. and Plutarch) either aggressiones, attacks, or incepta, attempts, as infra iii. 45. Supposing, indeed, ἐπιβουλὰς to be the true reading, the term may have been adopted to denote such attempts at carrying a place by coup de main, as are not made openly, but under the cover of night, whereby a place otherwise impregnable may be taken by stratagem, as Gibraltar was by the English.

7. προσέκειτο] incumbebat, 'devoted his attention to,' as infra viii. 89.

8. τἆλλα κατεσκευάζοντο] 'repaired the ruined edifices:' a sense occurring also infra iv. 75, and of which several examples might be adduced from Xenophon, Polyb., Arrian, Lucian, and Diod. Sic.

Ch. XCV. 1. βιαίου] Meaning tyrannical, carrying things by force. So supra i. 40, 1, βίαιοι καὶ πλεονέκται εἰσί: and iii. 36, fin. βιαιότατος τῶν πολιτῶν. Of this use of the word as applied to a person, I know no example elsewhere, except in Plato, 505, D. ὡς βίαιος εἶ.

κατὰ τὸ ξυγγενὲς] 'in virtue of consanguinity.' The words are to be joined with ἠξίουν.

2. προσεῖχον τὴν γνώμην] 'attended to, granted their request:' a phrase occurring also infra vii. 15, and in the best writers. Οὐ περιοψόμενοι, scil. τὴν βίαν. Of τἆλλα καταστησόμενοι ᾗ φαίνοιτο ἄριστα αὐτοῖς the sense is, 'to establish matters on what would seem the best footing for them.' Such, too, is the sense of καθ. also infra vi. 55, τὰ τῆς ἀρχῆς καθ.

3. ἀδικία πολλὴ κατηγορεῖτο αὐτοῦ] 'much of injustice, or criminality, was charged against him.' Of this syntax (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 378) examples occur in Soph. Œd. T. 529. Eurip. H. Fur. 418. Æschyl. Ag. 262.

ἡ] This I have thought proper, with Bekker, to edit, instead of the reading adopted by Poppo, and defended by Bauer and Haack, ἡ. It is true that the latter derives no little support from a passage, almost transcribed from the present, in Choricius, Fun. Or. ap. Fabr. Bibl. Gr. viii. 876, adduced by me in Transl., where it is said of Pausanias, τυραννίδος μίμησις ἦν ἡ στρατηγία: but the former, in the very harshness involved by the omission of the subject, has something more in the manner of our author than the latter.

4. τῷ ἐκείνου ἔχθει] 'through enmity to him.' Μετατάξασθαι, 'ranged themselves on the other side.'

5. ἰδίᾳ] Adv. for adj. ἴδιος, as supra i. 68. Ἀδικημάτων, for ἀδικηθέντων. Εὐθύνθη, 'was found guilty of.' Schol. εὐθύνας ἔδωκε. Τὰ μέγιστα, 'the principal charges.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 421, note 1 and 2. Σαφέστατον, 'a very clear [charge],' i. e. clearly established. By ἐδόκει it is meant that such was the public opinion generally, not that of Pausanias' judges in particular; otherwise they would have found him guilty.

6. ἐφίεσαν τὴν ἡγεμονίαν] 'yielded or granted the guidance of affairs.'

7. χείρους] 'false and unfaithful.' Comparative for positive, as infra iv. 114. vi. 89, 92. Ἀπαλλαξείοντες, 'desiring to get rid of.' On these verbs in ειω, called desideratives, and answering to the Latin ones in urio, see Matth. Gr. Gr. Ἱκανούς. This word, like our sufficient, signifies here, as supra ch. 76, both 'able to take the command,' and 'worthy thereof.' Ἐπιτηδείους, 'friendly, well-affected to.' The term is not unfrequently interchanged with φίλος.

Ch. XCVI. 1. πρόσχημα] for πρόφασις, 'the pretext for this taxing was,' &c.; intimating that the real cause was the ambition and rapacity of the governors. On this sense of πρόσχημα, see note infra iii. 82, 8; and compare Jos. Bell. iv. 3, 6, ἦν δὲ πρόσχημα μὲν τῆς ἐπιβουλῆς, &c. τὸ δ' ἀληθές.

2. Ἑλληνοταμίαι—ἀρχή] 'the office of treasurers of Greece was then first established.' These Ἑλληνοταμίαι were both receivers-general and treasurers. On the office itself, see Boeckh's Œcon. lib. ii. p. 236. Wachsm. ii. 1, et al.

4. αἱ ξύνοδοι] Meaning the common councils of the allies, 'ea concilia, quæ haberi solebant, constituta et legitima.' So in a passage of Diod. Sic., cited by Duk., and at ch. 97, we have, ἀπὸ κοινῶν ξυνόδων βουλευόντων.

Ch. XCVII. 1. αὐτονόμων] This is not so much an adjective to the substantive ξυμμάχων as it is in apposition therewith, with the subaudition of ὡς.

ἀπὸ κοινῶν ξυνόδων] On the force of ἀπὸ here, see note supra 91. Τοσάδε ἐπῆλθον, scil. πράγματα, 'came to the possession of such power.' Schol. τοσαῦτα διεπράξαντο. Διαχειρίσει πραγμάτων, 'by the administration of affairs.' Προστυγχάνοντας, 'intervenientes, interfering with them.'

2. τὴν ἐκβολὴν τοῦ λόγου] 'the digression from the story:' a phrase, this, often used by the later historians; with which may be compared another in Herod. vii. 171, παρενθήκη τοῦ λόγου.

ἐκλιπὲς τοῦτο ἦν τὸ χωρίον] This passage argumentum subjicit, by an idiom found in the later use of the term τόπος, and in the Latin locus. So in Arr. E. A. i. 12, 3, we have, τὸ χωρίον τοῦτο ἐκλιπὲς ἦν.

3. τοῖς χρόνοις] 'the chronology.' So Dionys. Hal. Ant. 234, 22, ἀναγκάζομαι—τὸ ῥᾴθυμον αὐτοῦ περὶ τὴν ἐξέτασιν τῶν χρόνων ἐλέγχειν. Polyæn. v. 23, p. 510, προσέταξεν—σημαίνειν, παραλλάσσοντας τοῖς χρόνοις, &c.

4. ἅμα—ἀπόδειξιν] 'moreover it (i. e. the treatment of the subject) has (i. e. carries with it) a narration,' &c., i. e. of the means by which the Athenian empire was established, κατέστη.

Ch. XCVIII. 1. Ἠιόνα τὴν ἐπὶ Σ.] So called by way of distinction from other places of the same name in Thrace and elsewhere.

3. ξυνέβησαν καθ' ὁμολογίαν] 'agreed (to submit) on terms.'

4. παρεστ.] 'compelled them to surrender:' a phrase also occurring at iii. 35, &c., and in the best authors. We may supply ὁμολογίᾳ or the like, which is expressed supra ch. 29; for the surrender might be either conditional, or unconditional. Yet the place would seem to have been carried by storm, as we may infer from Aristoph. Vesp. 355, ἐεἰς σαυτὸν κατὰ τοῦ τείχους, ὅτε δή γ' ἡ Νάξος ἑάλω.

Ch. XCIX. 1. φόρων καὶ νεῶν ἔκδειαι] The term is well explained by Duker as equiv. to the Latin reliquatio, or 'the not making good one's payments,' by which the whole is not paid, but part continually left in arrear. As referred to the νεῶν, the sense must be, 'the non-payment, or arrears of the money payment,' in lieu of ships, of which mention is made elsewhere. Λειποστράτιον, 'omission of, failure in military service,' namely, by not sending their contingents. Ἀκριβῶς ἔπρασσον, 'rigorously exacted.' Comp. infra viii. 5. Herodot. i. 106. iii. 58. Λυπηροὶ ἦσαν, 'were burdensome.' So Eurip. Suppl. 893, λυπηρὸς οὐκ ἦν — τῇ πόλει, and Hipp. 796, λυπηρὸς ἡμῖν.

προσάγοντες τὰς ἀνάγκας] Προσάγειν signifies properly admovere, and is used either in a physical sense, as in the phrase προσάγειν μηχανὴν, infra iv. 100, and Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 18, or in a metaphorical sense, as here in the phrase προσάγειν ἀνάγκην, 'to bring upon any one a necessity of doing any action; to compel any one from necessity.' Here the meaning intended is, bringing upon persons a necessity of labouring, in order to pay the tribute, who were neither accustomed, nor indeed able, to labour.

2. πως καὶ ἄλλως] lit. 'somehow otherwise,' i. e. in other respects, namely, the carriage, behaviour, &c. Ἐν ἡδονῇ ἦσαν, 'grati et accepti erant.' Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, 'on a footing of equality.' Προσάγεσθαι, 'to bring under,' 'subdue,' as infra ii. 30, and often in the best writers, always in the middle voice.

3. ἀπόκνησιν τῶν στρατειῶν] detractationem, 'a declining to engage in expeditions.'

χρήματα ἐτάξαντο — φέρειν] Construe, ἐτάξαντο χρήματα φέρειν (κατὰ) τὸ ἰκνούμενον ἀνάλωμα ἀντὶ τῶν νεῶν, 'agreed to contribute a certain sum, according to a rated proportion of expense, in lieu of the ships.' Τάξασθαι signifies 'to rate, or bind oneself,' 'agree to render or pay any service or money:' as Herodot. iv. 165, and iii. 13, φόρον τάξ, and elsewhere, Dio Cass., Polyb., Appian, Plato, and other authors; some verb of paying, as φέρειν, or ἀποδοῦναι, being either expressed, as here, or understood. Τὸ ἰκνούμενον signifies lit. 'what any expense comes to:' a sense very rare, but of which I have noted examples in Jos. Ant. iii. 12, 3, and Dio Cass. 592, 45.

ἄπειροι] So Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller edit, from many of the best MSS., for vulg. ἄποροι, the term being thus taken as standing for πολέμου ἄπειροι, which occurs infra ii. 11, and in a passage of Agatharch. ap. Athen. p. 5, 28. So, too, Plutarch evidently read, as appears from a passage of his Cimon, 11. And in Liban. Or. 56, D. οὐκοῦν ἔρημοι μὲν ἰατρῶν οἱ νοσοῦντες, ἄποροι τῆς τέχνης, for the similarly erroneous ἄποροι, read ἄπειροι, standing for ἀπείρατοι. Probably, however, ἄποροι was read by Josephus, since in Antiq. xiv. 6, 1, he has (in imitation, we may suppose, of the expression of our author) τούτους μὲν (namely, the unarmed or ill-armed) ἀπέλυσεν, ἀπόρους ὄντας, meaning thereby inhabiles ad bellum, as in an anonymous writer in Steph. Thes. in voc. ἀπόρους προσμίσγειν, inhabiles ad dimicandum: a sense, this, which would be very suitable in the present passage. Or the expression might signify inopes consilii, at ii. 53, ἄποροι καθεστῶτες, and iii. 53; and in Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 3, ἀπόρων ἐστὶ, καὶ ἀμηχάνων, καὶ ἀνάγκῃ ἐχομένων. Ἄπειροι, however, is here preferable, as being more agreeable to the context: accordingly the full sense will be, 'destitute alike of preparations for war, and of experience therein.'

Ch. C. 1. τὰς πάσας ἐς τὰς διακοσίας] 'amounting, in all, to 200.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 268. Vig. iii. 10. iv. 87, and Herm., note 94, and compare infra viii. 21. Whether the article τὰς should have place before διακ., is a matter of no easy decision. It has been inserted by Bekker from some five MSS., and also by Poppo, though within brackets. By Goeller it is thrown out; whether on sufficient grounds, may be doubted. At any rate the sense of the ἐς is not, as he and Blume make it, circiter, but 'to the number of.' Finally, why the art. should here have been used, may indeed not be obvious; but, considering that it is not unfrequently found in statements of numbers, (as in that of Xen. Hist. iii. 2, 4, ἀμφὶ τοὺς πεντεκαίδεκα,) it seems safest here to retain it; nor is it without its force; for while ἐς διακ. would signify, 'up to 200,' ἐς τὰς διακ. will signify, 'to the number of 200.' At any rate utterly groundless is the supposition of Blume and Goeller, that Thucydides here meant not to give certain numbers, but only such as approximated to the truth: for ἐς in this idiom always signifies 'as many as a certain number,' though with a sort of implication that there might be more; as we say, so many and upwards.

2. ἐμπορίων] 'marts or commercial towns;' on which, and their origin and names, see the note appended to my Transl., and Boeckh, Œcon. 1, 334, seqq. Τοῦ μετάλλου. See Herodot. vi. 46, seq., and Boeckh, ubi supra. Ἐνέμοντο, 'they were in possession.' So in Æschyl. Prom. 419, Ἀσίας ἕδος νέμονται: and 429, οἳ πόλισμα Καυκάσου πέλας νέμονται.

ὑπὸ τῶν Θρακῶν ξυμπάντων] For ξυμπ. Pop. would read ξύμπαντες, and Heilm. ξυστάντων: of which two conjectures the former, though supported by Valla and Died., has, in the feebleness of the sense it yields, what may be considered any thing but suited to the vigorous style of our author. Preferable is the latter, from its greater significancy and suitableness to the context, and from the word in this sense being frequent in our author. See infra vi. 21. iii. 73. vii. 15. Yet thus the article would be almost indispensable: and the common reading is, after all, open to no well-founded objection; for the words οἷς πόλεμιον ἦν τὸ χωρίον αἱ Ἐννέα ὁδοὶ κτιζόμενον, have only to be referred to Θρακῶν, not ξυμπάντων: and ξυμπάντων may signify simply en masse, and so be equivalent to ἀνθρώπων. Notwithstanding what Poppo says, it was, as Arnold observes, very natural that all the tribes of that part of Thrace should combine to destroy a colony attempting to settle itself in so advantageous a situation as Amphipolis: and it is futile to argue against the fact from the testimony of Diodorus, who says that the colonists perished at the hands of the Edones; for the Edones are merely spoken of particularly by the historian, from their being the principals in the transaction, though they had the aid of all the other tribes in this common effort to rid their country of the interlopers. Certainly Diodorus could not mean to ascribe the destruction of the colonists to the Edones alone; for thus his account would be at variance with that of Thucyd., the author whom he so evidently follows.

ἀποστάσεων καὶ μέγισται αἱ τῶν φόρων καὶ νεῶν ἔκδειαι, καὶ λειποστράτιον εἴ τῳ ἐγένετο· οἱ γὰρ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀκριβῶς ἔπρασσον καὶ λυπηροὶ ἦσαν, οὐκ εἰωθόσιν οὐδὲ βουλομένοις ταλαιπωρεῖν προσάγοντες τὰς ἀνάγκας. 2. ἦσαν δέ πως καὶ ἄλλως οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι οὐκέτι ὁμοίως ἐν ἡδονῇ ἄρχοντες, καὶ οὔτε ξυνεστράτευον ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, ῥᾴδιόν τε προσάγεσθαι ἦν αὐτοῖς τοὺς ἀφισταμένους. 3. ὧν αὐτοὶ αἴτιοι ἐγένοντο οἱ ξύμμαχοι· διὰ γὰρ τὴν ἀπόκνησιν ταύτην τῶν στρατειῶν οἱ πλείους αὐτῶν, ἵνα μὴ ἀπ' οἴκου ὦσι, χρήματα ἐτάξαντο ἀντὶ τῶν νεῶν τὸ ἰκνούμενον ἀνάλωμα φέρειν· καὶ τοῖς μὲν Ἀθηναίοις ἠύξετο τὸ ναυτικὸν ἀπὸ τῆς δαπάνης ἣν ἐκεῖνοι ξυμφέροιεν, αὐτοὶ δὲ ὁπότε ἀποσταῖεν, ἀπαράσκευοι καὶ ‡ἄπειροι ἐς τὸν προσάγοντες τὰς ἀνάγκας] Προσάγειν signifies properly admovere, and is used either in a physical sense, as in the phrase προσάγειν μηχανήν, infra iv. 100, and Xen. Hist. ii. 4, 18, or in a metaphorical sense, as here in the phrase προσάγειν ἀνάγκην, 'to bring upon any one a necessity of doing any action; to compel any one from necessity.' Here the meaning intended is, bringing upon persons a necessity of labouring, in order to pay the tribute, who were neither accustomed, nor indeed able, to labour.

Ch. XCIX. 1. φόρων καὶ νεῶν ἔκδειαι] The term is well explained by Duker as equiv. to the Latin reliquatio, or 'the not making good one's payments,' by which the whole is not paid, but part continually left in arrear. As referred to the νεῶν, the sense must be, 'the non-payment, or arrears of the money payment,' in lieu of ships, of which mention is made elsewhere. Λειποστράτιον, 'omission of, failure in military service,' namely, by not sending their contingents. Ἀκριβῶς ἔπρασσον, 'rigorously exacted.' Comp. infra viii. 5. Herodot. i. 106. iii. 58. Λυπηροὶ ἦσαν, 'were burdensome.' So Eurip. Suppl. 893, λυπηρὸς οὐκ ἦν — τῇ πόλει, and Hipp. 796, λυπηρὸς ἡμῖν.

2. πως καὶ ἄλλως] lit. 'somehow otherwise,' i. e. in other respects, namely, the carriage, behaviour, &c. Ἐν ἡδονῇ ἦσαν, 'grati et accepti erant.' Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, 'on a footing of equality.' Προσάγεσθαι, 'to bring under,' 'subdue,' as infra ii. 30, and often in the best writers, always in the middle voice.

χρήματα ἐτάξαντο — φέρειν] Construe, ἐτάξαντο χρήματα φέρειν (κατὰ) τὸ ἰκνούμενον ἀνάλωμα ἀντὶ τῶν νεῶν, 'agreed to contribute a certain sum, according to a rated proportion of expense, in lieu of the ships.' Τάξασθαι signifies 'to rate, or bind oneself,' 'agree to render or pay any service or money:' as Herodot. iv. 165, and iii. 13, φόρον τάξ, and elsewhere, Dio Cass., Polyb., Appian, Plato, and other authors; some verb of paying, as φέρειν, or ἀποδοῦναι, being either expressed, as here, or understood. Τὸ ἰκνούμενον signifies lit. 'what any expense comes to:' a sense very rare, but of which I have noted examples in Jos. Ant. iii. 12, 3, and Dio Cass. 592, 45.

ἄπειροι] So Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller edit, from many of the best MSS., for vulg. ἄποροι, the term being thus taken as standing for πολέμου ἄπειροι, which occurs infra ii. 11, and in a passage of Agatharch. ap. Athen. p. 5, 28. So, too, Plutarch evidently read, as appears from a passage of his Cimon, 11. And in Liban. Or. 56, D. οὐκοῦν ἔρημοι μὲν ἰατρῶν οἱ νοσοῦντες, ἄποροι τῆς τέχνης, for the similarly erroneous ἄποροι, read ἄπειροι, standing for ἀπείρατοι. Probably, however, ἄποροι was read by Josephus, since in Antiq. xiv. 6, 1, he has (in imitation, we may suppose, of the expression of our author) τούτους μὲν (namely, the unarmed or ill-armed) ἀπέλυσεν, ἀπόρους ὄντας, meaning thereby inhabiles ad bellum, as in an anonymous writer in Steph. Thes. in voc. ἀπόρους προσμίσγειν, inhabiles ad dimicandum: a sense, this, which would be very suitable in the present passage. Or the expression might signify inopes consilii, at ii. 53, ἄποροι καθεστῶτες, and iii. 53; and in Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 3, ἀπόρων ἐστὶ, καὶ ἀμηχάνων, καὶ ἀνάγκῃ ἐχομένων. Ἄπειροι, however, is here preferable, as being more agreeable to the context: accordingly the full sense will be, 'destitute alike of preparations for war, and of experience therein.'

Ch. C. 1. τὰς πάσας ἐς τὰς διακοσίας] 'amounting, in all, to 200.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 268. Vig. iii. 10. iv. 87, and Herm., note 94, and compare infra viii. 21. ὑπὸ τῶν Θρᾳκῶν ξυμπάντων] For ξυμπ. Here, as on certain other occasions, he has written carelessly, and with too little regard to precision.

Ch. CI. 1. νικηθέντες μάχαις] Several MSS. have μάχῃ: and as our author has made mention of but one battle, such might seem,—and such I formerly, in conjunction with Poppo and Goeller, concluded to be,—the true reading. I am now, however, induced to alter my opinion; and that from the MSS. in question being amongst the very worst, and the internal evidence being in effect all in favour of the common reading; for while μάχῃ νικᾶσθαι is of frequent occurrence, μάχαις νικᾶσθαι is rarely found. Moreover, though our author has hitherto made mention of but one battle, and yet here adverts to two, we have only to suppose that, besides the sea-fight, there had been a land engagement, on the Athenians disembarking to besiege the city; and on their being defeated in this, the Thasians were, as Thucyd. says, πολιορκούμενοι.

2. καὶ ἔμελλον] 'and were about to do it.' Διεκωλύθησαν. Διακ. is a stronger term than κωλ., and properly signifies 'to hinder by the interposition of some obstacle.'

τοῦ σεισμοῦ] the earthquake. So called κατ' ἐξοχήν, as being the greatest and the most known to all. See the full details brought forward on this subject in the note appended to my Transl. Τοῦ γενομένου σεισμοῦ. Render, 'the earthquake occurring or happening to take place.' So infra v. 45, σεισμοῦ δὲ γενομένου, 'having taken place.' Αὐτοῖς, for αὐτῶν. Τῶν Περιοίκων. See note infra iv. 54. Αἰθαιῆς. So I have edited, with Pop. and Goell., on the authority of Steph. Byz. and Valla, favoured by Cod. Tusan., for vulg. Αἰθεεῖς, which is retained by Bekk., but is indefensible.

3. τότε] This is to be taken emphaticè of that time, well known to all readers, when the event in question took place. Goeller and Poppo have justly rejected the conjecture of Steph. and Müller, πότε, referring to a similar use of τότε at viii. 23, and Demosth. Lept. p. 264. So, I would add, ἐκείνη ἡ ἡμέρα is used by St. Paul at 2 Tim. i. 12, and iv. 18.

χρήματα, ὅσα ἔδει, ἀποδοῦναι αὐτίκα ταξάμενοι] 'quumque sibi injunxissent (sive spopondissent) se pecunias, quas oporteret, et statim numeraturos, et in posterum persoluturos.' (Poppo.)

Ch. CII. [b] A. C. 461. Ol. 79, 4.

1. πλήθει οὐκ ὀλίγῳ] 'accompanied by a no small force.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 405, obs. 2, where it is shown that this use is not unfrequent in the words denoting an army, armament, or the different sorts of forces of which it is composed; in exemplification of which he adduces the present passage and several others of our author, as also two from Herodot. v. 99 and 100. Two examples, however, of the expression with σὺν, he adduces from Xen. Hist. ii. 2, 7, and An. i. 8, 1.

2. τειχομαχεῖν ἐδόκουν δυνατοὶ εἶναι] 'they had the reputation of being skilful in sieges.' So in Herodot. ix. 70, and Pausan. ix. 9, 1, we have this very term τειχομαχεῖν used in the relation of this same circumstance.

εἶναι· τοῖς δὲ, πολιορκίας μακρᾶς καθεστηκυίας, τούτου ἐνδεᾶ ἐφαίνετο· βίᾳ γὰρ ἂν εἷλον τὸ χωρίον. 3. καὶ διαφορὰ ἐκ ταύτης τῆς στρατείας πρῶτον Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ Ἀθηναίοις φανερὰ ἐγένετο· οἱ γὰρ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἐπειδὴ τὸ χωρίον βίᾳ οὐχ ἡλίσκετο, δείσαντες τῶν Ἀθηναίων τὸ τολμηρὸν καὶ τὴν νεωτεροποιΐαν,—καὶ ἀλλοφύλους ἅμα ἡγησάμενοι,—μή τι, ἢν παραμείνωσιν, ὑπὸ τῶν ἐν Ἰθώμῃ πεισθέντες νεωτερίσωσι, μόνους τῶν ξυμμάχων ἀπέπεμψαν, τὴν μὲν ὑποψίαν οὐ δηλοῦντες, εἰπόντες δὲ ὅτι οὐδὲν προσδέονται αὐτῶν ἔτι. 4. οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι ἔγνωσαν οὐκ ἐπὶ τῷ βελτίονι λόγῳ ἀποπεμπόμενοι, ἀλλά τινος ὑπόπτου γενομένου· καὶ δεινὸν ποιησάμενοι, καὶ οὐκ ἀξιώσαντες ὑπὸ Λακεδαιμονίων τοῦτο παθεῖν, εὐθὺς ἐπειδὴ ἀνεχώρησαν, ἀφέντες τὴν γενομένην ἐπὶ τῷ Μήδῳ ξυμμαχίαν πρὸς αὐτοὺς, Ἀργείοις τοῖς ἐκείνων πολεμίοις ξύμμαχοι ἐγένοντο· καὶ πρὸς Θεσσαλοὺς ἅμα ἀμφοτέροις οἱ αὐτοὶ ὅρκοι καὶ ξυμμαχία κατέστη. τοῖς δὲ, πολιορκίας μακρᾶς καθεστηκυίας, τούτου ἐνδεᾶ ἐφαίνετο] I have here, with Bekk. and Goell., retained vulg. τοῖς δὲ, though Haack and Pop. adopt the reading of several MSS., τῆς δὲ, because the art. seems to be required. But, as Arnold observes, 'τοῖς δὲ, referring to the Lacedæmonians, is naturally inserted to denote the change of the subject, the last words of the preceding clause having related to the Athenians. And the omission here of the article seems to confirm, and be confirmed by, the similar omission of it, i. 10, οὔτε ξυνοικισθείσης πόλεως.' At ἐνδεᾶ there may be an ellipsis of πράγματα, the sense being, 'when affairs seemed deficient in this;' τούτου, scil. τοῦ τειχομαχεῖν, meaning the art or skill of taking fortified places: or, rather, it may be regarded as put for the impersonal phrase, 'there seemed a deficiency of,' even in them. The next words, βίᾳ γὰρ ἂν εἷλον τὸ χωρίον, (which are to be referred not to the Athenians, but to the Lacedæmonians,) serve to prove the thing by example. Render, 'for [otherwise] they would have taken the place by assault;' where the expression βίᾳ is tacitly opposed to the τέχνῃ implied in the δύναμις πολιορκητικὴ ascribed to the Athenians.

3. τὸ τολμηρὸν καὶ τὴν νεωτεροποιΐαν] Meaning the daring and innovating spirit prone, from a spirit of adventure, to form new plans. See supra ch. 70. The plan here alluded to is that of taking part with the Helots, and restoring Messenia to its independence.

4. ἔγνωσαν — ἀποπεμπόμενοι] On the construction here, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 530, 2. 549, 3, Οὐκ ἐπὶ τῷ βελτίονι λόγῳ ἀποπεμπόμενοι, 'non optima de causa,' 'on no good ground,' (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 457,) but from a mere plausible pretext. Δεινὸν ποιησάμενοι, scil. τὸ πρᾶγμα, 'accounting this bad usage.' In οὐκ ἀξιώσαντες we have a certain elegant use by which the negative, instead of following, precedes.

Ch. CIII. [a] A. C. 455. Ol. 81, 2.

1. ἐφ' ᾧ τε ἐξίασιν] 'on condition that (for ἐπὶ τούτῳ, ὥστε) they should emigrate.' So iii. 114, ἐπὶ τοῖσδε, ὥστε, &c. See Viger, p. 618, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 479, a, the latter of whom gives examples both of the elliptical and complete phrase. A more apposite one of the latter is found in Herodot. vii. 158, ἐπὶ δὲ λόγῳ τοιῷδε τάδε ὑπίσχομαι, ἐφ' ᾧ, &c.

2. πρὸ τοῦ] scil. χρόνου. Sometimes written conjointly, as we do aforetime, for at fore time. Διὸς τοῦ Ἰθωμήτα. Referring to some temple of Jupiter on Ithome; for the Grecian temples were usually situated on some conspicuous and lofty site.

The reading of the Scholiast, Ἰθωμάτα, is confirmed by Pausan. p. 110, l. 123, 19. 1, 29, 51, and many other places, especially l. 4, 24, 3, which gives us some words following, of the oracle: ἢ μὴ εἶναί σφισι δίκην ἁμαρτοῦσιν ἐς τὸ Διὸς τοῦ Ἰθωμάτα τὸν ἱκέτην.

3. κατ' ἔχθος τὸ Λακεδαιμονίων] So infra iv. 1, we have κατ' ἔχθ. τὸ Ῥηγ., and vii. 57. The genit. here denotes the object.

4. περὶ γῆς ὅρων] 'on account of the borders of their respective territories,' περὶ χώρας ὁμόρου, as says Diodorus. Πολέμῳ κατεῖχον, 'hard-pressed them with war:' a very rare sense, and only to be paralleled by the Latin phrase bello premere.

Ch. CIV. 1. Ψαμμητίχου] The common reading and some MSS. have Ψαμμιτίχου. But I agree with the recent editors in preferring the former, not so much from its being found in Herodot., Diod., and other authors, (for even there the reading varies,) but because the best MSS. in Thucyd. have this reading, and it occupies the text of those other writers.

ὁρμώμενος] 'making it his seat of war, or place to sally forth from and retreat to.' See supra 64, 2, and infra 144. For Ἀρταξέρξου Bekk. and Goell. edit Ἀρτοξ.: but though this reading be countenanced by a passage of Plutarch, and such might be the original and more correct spelling of the name, yet for the former we have the sanction of general usage, which must, after all, be preferred before speculative propriety. Hence I have, with Poppo, retained the vulg. Ἀρταξ. (as Schweigh. has done in a passage of Herodot. vi. 98,) especially from the Hebrew form of the name being in favour of it.

2. ἀναπλεύσαντες ἐς τὸν Ν.] sursum navigantes, as Dio Cass. 330, 83 and 92. Herodot. ii. 4 and 8: and so ἀναπλώειν, Herodot. viii. 70. Τῶν δύο μερῶν, 'two of the three quarters or divisions,' of which two were on the west, and one on the east. The former, no doubt, were those occupied by the Athenians; and the latter,—the Λευκὸν τεῖχος, the White Castle,—occupied by the Persians, being the head-quarters of their troops in Egypt, and probably that which contained the palace. In Λευκὸν τεῖχος the article is omitted, as in the νέον τεῖχος of Herodot. i. 149, because when such designations become appellatives, they may very well dispense with it. So in Herodot. iii. 91, Περσέων τοῖσι ἐν τῷ Λευκῷ τείχεϊ τῷ ἐν Μέμφι κατοικημένοισι, the article is used, because the word is not considered as yet become an appellative. This quarter was doubtless so called by way of distinction from the others, which were walled with brick; whereas the one in question was of free-stone. Whence may be illustrated an obscure oracle in Herodot. iii. 57, Ἀλλ' ὅταν ἐν Σίφνῳ πρυτανηΐα λεῦκα γένηται, Λευκοφρύς τ' ἀγορή, i. e. built of the white Parian stone, of which Herodotus proceeds to say the Prytaneum and Agora were

Ch. CV. 1. Ἁλιᾶς] So I have thought proper, with Pop., to edit, for vulg. Ἁλιὰς, which, though found in all the MSS., cannot be defended; whereas Ἁλιᾶς, contr. for Ἁλιεῖς, is confirmed by the name given to the place by Xen. Hist. vi. 2, 3. Steph. Byz. in v. Diod. Sic. l. xi. 78. Strabo, viii. 6, 12, (which coincides with the name of the people, Ἁλιεῖς,) and especially by an inscription in Boeckh, P. ii. 3, inscr. 165, who preserves the name of those that died in battle, ἐν Ἁλιεῦσιν. They were probably so called, as Arn. observes, 'because they lived only in scattered villages, and thus formed a tribe, not a city; like the Ætolian tribes, and those of ancient Gaul in the time of Cæsar, before the name of the people was transferred to the town, to which they emigrated when society was in a more advanced state.' The territory was called Ἁλιὰς, and it is thought by Arn. to have occupied the coast of Argolis, from Hermione, round the Scyllæan promontory, to the neighbourhood of Trœzen. This, however, is at variance with the only tolerably exact account that the ancients afford us, namely, that of Scylax, p. 20, who describes it as at the mouth of the Argolic gulf.

4. πρότερον — ἐπικούρους] 'who had before been auxiliaries,' &c. These were probably hired auxiliaries of the Arcadians, who were the Swiss of Greece. Indeed ἐπίκουροι is the name usually given in Herod. and Thucyd. to paid troops.

Γερανείας] Poppo, from three MSS., Plutarch, and Pausanias, edits Γερανίας. In Thucyd., however, MS. authority is too slender to justify a change; and therefore I have, with Bekk. and Goell., retained the ει, which is, moreover, found in other authors, as Lysias, p. 119. Geranéa was a chain of hills stretching across the isthmus, so called from its bearing some resemblance to a crane's neck.

5. τῶν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως] 'those of the city.' Οἵ τε πρεσβύτατοι καὶ οἱ νεώτατοι. See Wachsm. vol. ii. 1, p. 395, seq.

6. μάχης γεν. ἰσορρόπου] 'after an indecisive engagement.' So vii. 71, ναυμαχίας ἰσορ. Herodian, i. 11, 5, μάχης ἰσορ. Eurip. Suppl. 706, ἰσόρ. ἀγών. Æsch. Pers. 352, οὐκ ἰσορρόπῳ τύχῃ, where see Blomf.

ἐνόμισαν αὐτοὶ ἑκάτεροι—ἔργῳ] Comp. vii. 34, ὡς αὐτοὺς ἑκατέρους νικᾶν.

8. ἐκβοηθήσαντες] So I read, with all the recent editors, for ἐκβοήσ., since I have not met with a single example of ἐκβοάω in the sense sally forth, which is here required.

Ch. CVI. 1. προσβιασθὲν] adactum, 'forced,' for βιασθὲν πρὸς αὐτὸ, i. e. τὸ ἐσελθεῖν ἐς του χωρίον ἰδιώτου. Ἐσέπεσεν ἐς. This is not well rendered 'incidit in;' though the word bears that sense in Xen. Cynag. iii. 5, εἰσπίπτουσιν εἰς ἴχνη. Rather, 'irruit in;' 'magno cum impetu irruit.' So infra ii. 4, 5, ἐσπίπτουσιν ἐς οἴκημα. Pol. iv. 70, 11, ἡ βοήθεια εἰσπέπτωκε εἰς τὴν πόλιν, and often in Xen. Of χωρίον here the sense is, according to the primary signification of the word, field or close: though, indeed, the word sometimes denotes (as in the New Testament) a large parcel of inclosed ground, or farm. And such may be the sense here, which is countenanced by this spot having had a name, as appears from Diod. Sic., who, when he says the battle was fought, ἐν τῇ λεγομένῃ Κιμωλίᾳ, means, no doubt, this χωρίον. That names were anciently given to farms, we find from Ps. xlix. 11, 'And they call the lands after their own names.' So infra ch. 108, we have Œnophyta. Yet this χωρίον seems to have been only one field, and that not more than two sling-shot in breadth, otherwise the stoning could not have been accomplished. Yet even fields had a name, as we find by Aceldama, Acts i. 19. and the fuller's field, 2 Kings xviii. 17. See also 2 Sam. ii. 16. Ἰδιώτης here signifies a private person, or individual. So Pausan. i. 29, 2, Ἀκαδημία, χωρίον ποτὲ ἀνδρὸς ἰδιώτου: Appian, i. 470, ἐς δέ τινος ἰδιώτου πύργον: with a view, doubtless, to this passage of Thucydides, and also a kindred one of Herodot. iv. 164, τινας τῶν Κορινθίων ἐς πύργον καταφυγόντας ἰδιωτικόν.

2. εἶργον] Schol. ἐκώλυον ἐξελθεῖν. Κατέλευσαν, i. e. 'slew them by the stones' from the slingers: for the light-armed here mentioned were chiefly such. Τὸ δὲ πλῆθος, scil. τὸ σωθὲν τῶν Κορινθίων.

Ch. CVII. 2. Δωριᾶς] Here (as in the case of Ἀλιᾶς, supra ch. 105, where see note) the name of the inhabitants is used as the name of the country: an idiom, this, frequent in the Latin writers; e. g. in Sequanos, in Æduos, &c. Μητρόπολιν, 'mother country.' Comp. Hdot. viii. 31, 5, where he describes this tract (Dryopis), characterising it as μητρόπολις Δωριέων τῶν ἐν Πελοποννήσῳ. Of the name Ἐρινεὸν the nomin. is not, what almost all the maps make it, Ἐρινεὸν, but Ἐρινεὸς, as appears from Steph. Byz. and Tzetz. on Lycoph.; of whom the latter, as also the Etym. Mag., derives the name from a sort of wild fig grown there, and there only. In like manner Olynthus derived its appellation from the same cause.

ὑπὲρ—βασιλέως] 'in the place of, i. e. as regent.' Βασιλ. must be joined with Πλειστ.

3. Κρισαίου] So Bekk., Goell., and Pop. edit for Κρισσ., because (as Pop. remarks) the Attics preferred the σ to the σσ in proper names; thus Λάρισα, Ἔρεσος, &c. Yet as the σσ is very frequently found, nothing but MSS. and the usage of the best authors can decide the point. Now the σ is found in Hom., Pind., Herod., Æschyl., and Isocr., and was read here by Aristid., Diodor. Sic., Steph. Byz., Hesych., and Eustath.; so that it is doubtless the true spelling.

4. δύσοδος] 'difficult to be passed.' The word is thought rare, though I have noticed it in Joseph. p. 539 and 696. Procop. p. 70, 7. 87, 20. 139, 16. Malch. Rh. ap. Corp. Byz. i. 81, and Pollux, 3, 96, and 9, 22. For ἡ Γεράνεια I would conjecture ἣν Γεράνεια.

5. περιμείνασι] The term must here, by a frequent idiom, be taken in two cognate significations, 'watching' (i. e. a place) and awaiting the season (καιρὸν) for action. The καιρὸν is expressed in Dionys. Hal. xxx. 9, 14.

6. τὸ δέ τι καὶ] 'partim etiam.' See Vig. p. 13. Ἐπῆγον. This is usually interpreted accersebant: yet as that signification of the word (frequent in Thucyd. and the best writers) is confined to the middle voice, we may not without reason suspect some error here to exist: and I formerly conjectured ἐπήγοντ'. Since, however, the elision may be thought doubtful, I should now prefer ἐνῆγον, 'instabant [ad movendum]:' a sense, this, of ἐνάγειν, occurring infra iv. 21, 24, and elsewhere. But, after all, no alteration is necessary; for ἐπῆγον may bear the sense urgebant eos, or solicitabant, 'urged them [to take this step].' So infra ii. 85, ἐπῆγε δὲ (scil. τοῦτο) χαριζόμενος.

δῆμον καταπαύσειν] 'to put down democracy:' a signification of δῆμος frequent in Thucyd. and Herodot. Καταπ. must be taken in a double sense; for in the other member of the sentence it must mean put a stop to, of which there are many examples.

7. ἐβοήθησαν ἐπ' αὐτοὺς] 'they proceeded against them.' Ὡς ἕκαστοι. See supra i. 3 and 67, and infra 113.

8. καί τι καὶ] 'and partly:' an Attic phrase occurring also infra ii. 15, 17, 93. iv. 4, 14, 121. Soph. Phil. 274, 308. Plut. Sert. 13. App. i. 46, 18. Arrian, E. A. i. 29, 2. Pausan. iii. 6, 3. Of τοῦ δήμου καταλύσεως ὑποψίᾳ, the sense is, 'by or through suspicion of an [intended] abolition of democracy:' a variation of construction, with which Pop. compares i. 80, ὥστε μήτε ἀπειρίᾳ — νομίσαντα. Tacit. Annal. i. 52.

9. μετέστ.] for μετετάξαντο, 'changed sides.' Ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ, 'in the engagement.' Imitated by Procop. p. 122, ὡμολόγουν ἐπειδὰν ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ ἔργῳ γίνωνται, ἐπὶ τὸ τρέπεσθαι. Arrian, E. A. ii. 11, 3. Compare Hdot. viii. 22, 10, ὑμεῖς γε ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ, ἐπεὰν συμμίσγωμεν, ἐθελοκακέετε.

Ch. CVIII. 1. μάχης ἐν Τανάγρᾳ] On this battle see my note in Transl. Many circumstances respecting it, not elsewhere recorded, may be found in Pausan. i. 29, 7.

2. δενδροτομήσαντες] A rare word, of which another example is found in Diod. Sic. t. v. 448. Δενδροκοπέω is far more frequent. The term is used to denote the cutting down of fruit-trees, as olives, vines, &c.—a practice in war common in ancient times, and which has continued down to the present day in Turkey and the East.

ἐν Οἰνοφύτοις] This was not a town, but a plot of ground forming one farm, planted with olive-trees. Indeed the whole of the country in the vicinity of Tanagra was, as appears from Dicearchus, ἐλαιόφυτος, καὶ οἴνῳ τῷ γενομένῳ κατὰ Βοιωτίαν πρωτεύουσα. Περιεῖλον, dismantled: namely, by removing the battlements of the wall, and lowering the wall to a height practicable to be scaled by an invading force. Comp. infra i. 133, 1. iv. 51, 1. Xen. Hist. ii. 2, 13. iii. 2, 21. Pol. xix. 1, 1, et al.; and especially Herodot. iii. 159, σφέων τὸ τεῖχος περιεῖλε, καὶ τὰς πύλας κατέσπασε. Hence may be defended and illustrated the authorized version, in a much-disputed and somewhat obscure passage of Jeremiah, v. 10, 'Go ye up upon her walls, and destroy; but make not a full end: take away her battlements [only]; for they are not the Lord's.' Ἑκατὸν ἄνδρας — ἔλαβον. Probably, as Boeckh thinks, an hundred persons of the hundred families of the nobles, in whose hands the government was placed. See Pol. xii. 5.

Ch. CIX. 1. ἐπέμενον] Sub. αὐτοῖς, which word is expressed in a passage of Acts xv. 34. xxi. 4. Of the words following, πολλαὶ ἰδέαι πολέμων κατέστησαν, the sense is, 'vario modo et variâ fortunâ bella gesta sunt ab illis.' Ἰδέα here is, as often in our author, used as equiv. to εἶδος or τρόπος. See note infra iii. 81.

2. ἄνδρα Πέρσην] No easy matter is it to determine whether ἄνδρα Πέρσην is Ἀττικὴν ἐσβαλεῖν πεισθέντων τῶν Πελοποννησίων, ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου ἀπαγάγοι Ἀθηναίους. 3. ὡς δὲ αὐτῷ οὐ προυχώρει, καὶ τὰ χρήματα ἄλλως ἀναλοῦτο, ὁ μὲν Μεγάβαζος καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ τῶν χρημάτων πάλιν ἐς τὴν Ἀσίαν ἐκομίσθη, Μεγάβυζον δὲ τὸν Ζωπύρου πέμπει, ἄνδρα Πέρσην, μετὰ στρατιᾶς πολλῆς· ὃς ἀφικόμενος κατὰ γῆν, τούς [τε] Αἰγυπτίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους μάχῃ ἐκράτησε, καὶ ἐκ τῆς Μέμφιδος ἐξήλασε τοὺς Ἕλληνας, καὶ τέλος ἐς Προσωπίτιδα τὴν νῆσον κατέκλῃσε· καὶ ἐπολιόρκει ἐν αὐτῇ ἐνιαυτὸν καὶ ἓξ μῆνας μέχρι οὗ ξηράνας τὴν διώρυχα καὶ παρατρέψας ἄλλῃ τὸ ὕδωρ, τάς τε ναῦς ἐπὶ τοῦ ξηροῦ ἐποίησε καὶ τῆς νήσου τὰ πολλὰ ἤπειρον, καὶ διαβὰς εἷλε τὴν νῆσον πεζῇ. CX. Οὕτω μὲν τὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων πράγματα ἐφθάρη, ἓξ ἔτη πολεμήσαντα· καὶ ὀλίγοι ἀπὸ πολλῶν, πορευόμενοι διὰ τῆς Λιβύης, ἐς Κυρήνην ἐσώθησαν, οἱ δὲ πλεῖστοι ἀπώλοντο. 2. Αἴγυπτος δὲ πάλιν ὑπὸ βασιλέα ἐγένετο, πλὴν Ἀμυρταίου τοῦ ἐν τοῖς ἕλεσι βασιλέως· τοῦτον δὲ διὰ μέγεθός τε τοῦ an appellation of dignity or distinction, or otherwise. There are passages of Herodot. (as iv. 143, 144) which give countenance to the former view: and this is also supported by the authority of the Schol. As a parallel case, we may notice that in like manner the Norman gentry, who accompanied Duke William in his invasion and conquest of England, and settled there, used to add to their Christian name the *sur*name, as a title of distinction, Norman.

3. οὐ προὐχώρει] scil. πρᾶγμα or ἔργον, expressed in Theophr. Char. 3, and Pausan. ii. 1. Hdot. v. 62, οὐ προεχώρεε ἡ κάτοδος. Of ἄλλως the sense here is in vain; lit. 'otherwise than [for any good].' Προσωπίτιδα τὴν νῆσον. So called, to distinguish it from the nome, or province, of that name. This island was probably formed by the Nile and a wide and deep canal (διώρυξ), situated somewhere on the branch of the Nile called the Agathos Dæmon.

For vulg. Μεγάβαζον, I have, with Bekk., Goell., and Pop., edited, from the best MSS., confirmed by Herodot., Ctesias, Diod., Aristoph., and the ancient grammarians, (see also Appian, ii. 723, and Athen. p. 248, A.) Μεγάβυζον. Now Μεγάβυζος, in Persian, was originally an ecclesiastical dignity, signifying Præfectus Magorum, or of the priests in general; but afterwards it denoted civil, and even military office; till at length it became simply a proper name. See Theophyl. Sim. p. 19, D.

Of the words a little after, τὰς ναῦς ἐπὶ τοῦ ξηροῦ ἐποίησε, the sense is, 'made the ships to be on dry ground,' ἐποίησε here standing for ἔθηκε, an use of which I know no other example. Compare with the present similar phrases in Arrian, E. A. vi. 1, ἐπὶ ξηροῦ ἀπελείφθησαν αἱ νῆες. Dio Cass. 227, 9, and 762, 94, ναῦς ἐπὶ ξηροῦ ἱστάμενοι. Arrian, Ind. 37, 5, ἐν τῷ ξηρῷ ἐσχέθησαν, sc. αἱ ναῦς. Theocr. Id. v. 1, ἐπὶ ξηροῖσι καθίζῃ (collocarit).

Ch. CX. 1. τὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων—πολεμήσαντα] It is well remarked by Abresch, that τὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων πράγ. stands, per periphrasin and by πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον, for οἱ Ἕλληνες, wherein the construction is wont to be accommodated to the thing circumscribed. Ἑλλήνων would properly require πολεμησάντων: but sometimes an accommodation is made to the word which serves to this periphrasis, as here πράγματα. Haack compares iii. 82, and Pind. Pyth. i. 39, where ἰδὼν stands for ἰδόντων. With the expression here, τὰ πράγματα ἐφθάρη, compare Herodot. vi. 17, ἔπειτεν ἔμαθε τῶν Ἰώνων τὰ πράγματα διεφθαρμένα, and vi. 89. Pausan. viii. 101, Ἴωσι τὰ πράγματα ἐφθάρη. Procop. 259, 25, τὰ πράγματα διεφθάρη Ῥωμαίοις.

2. ἐν τοῖς ἕλεσι] Sometimes called the βουκόλια. We, elsewhere, read of 'the marshes of the Nile,' and 'the marshes of Egypt.' Hesych., in Σάρις, places them between the Tanic and Pelusiac mouths of the Nile. That name was also given to the part of lower Egypt included between the Bolbitine and Sebennytic mouths. (Gottleb.) It is probable that the tract extended from the Canopic to the Tanitic mouth. How far it may have extended upland, is uncertain; but that it stretched to a considerable distance, we find from what follows. We are not, however, to suppose that it was absolutely all marsh, but that it consisted principally of very low grounds occupied with pasturage, and capable of being inundated at pleasure; much resembling the lowest parts of Holland and Flanders, and our own Marsh-land in Norfolk, Holland in Lincolnshire, and the Isle of Ely in Cambridgeshire.

CXI. Ἐκ δὲ Θεσσαλίας Ὀρέστης ὁ Ἐχεκρατίδου υἱὸς τοῦ Θεσσαλῶν βασιλέως φεύγων, ἔπεισεν Ἀθηναίους ἑαυτὸν κατάγειν· καὶ παραλαβόντες Βοιωτοὺς καὶ Φωκέας, ὄντας ξυμμάχους, Ἀθηναῖοι ἐστράτευσαν τῆς Θεσσαλίας ἐπὶ Φάρσαλον. 2. καὶ τῆς μὲν γῆς ἐκράτουν ὅσα μὴ προϊόντες πολὺ ἐκ τῶν ὅπλων (οἱ γὰρ ἱππῆς τῶν Θεσσαλῶν εἶργον), τὴν δὲ πόλιν οὐχ εἷλον, οὐδ' ἄλλο προύχώρει αὐτοῖς οὐδὲν ὧν ἕνεκα ἐστράτευσαν· ἀλλ ἀπεχώρησαν πάλιν, Ὀρέστην ἔχοντες, ἄπρακτοι. 3. μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον χίλιοι Ἀθηναίων ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς τὰς ἐν Πηγαῖς ἐπιβάντες (εἶχον δ' αὐτοὶ τὰς Πηγὰς), παρέπλευσαν ἐς Σικυῶνα, Περικλέους τοῦ Ξανθίππου στρατηγοῦντος, καὶ ἀποβάντες Σικυωνίων τοὺς προσμίξαντας μάχῃ ἐκράτησαν. 4. καὶ εὐθὺς παραλαβόντες Ἀχαιοὺς καὶ διαπλεύσαντες πέραν, τῆς Ἀκαρνανίας ἐς Οἰνιάδας ἐστράτευσαν,

The inhabitants were not only occupied in grazing vast herds of cattle, but, in such parts as chiefly consisted of water, lived mostly in boats, and supported themselves by fishing: nay, they were skilful mariners; and it seems that this tract of country was very populous; for Æschyl. Pers. 39, speaks of them thus: Ἑλειοβάται, ναῶν ἐρέται Δεινοί, πλῆθός τ' ἀνάριθμοι, where Bp. Blomfield refers to Heliod. 1, 2, where is given a graphic description of the manners of these marshlanders, which, it may be observed, in many respects bear a striking resemblance to those of the fishermen now living in that country, about what is now called the Lake Burullas, or Bourlous; but which was probably, in ancient times, only the fenniest part of the tract in question.

4. ἔσχον κατὰ] 'put in, came to shore at.' By τὸ Μενδήσιον κέρας is meant the Mendesian branch or arm of the Nile. So Pind. frag. 84, ἔσχατον Νείλου κέρας.

Ch. CXI. 2. ὅσα μὴ προϊόντες πολὺ] i. e. ὅσα κρατεῖν τῆς γῆς ἐδύναντο μὴ προϊόντες πολύ. For ὅσα μή, (also occurring infra iv. 16,) ὅσον μὴ is more usual.

ἐκ τῶν ὅπλων] e castris. So Herodot. i. 13, αὐλίζεσθαι ἀπὸ τῶν ὅπλων, and Xen. sæpiss.

3. Σικυωνίων τοὺς προσμίξαντας] The genitive is put partitively. Sometimes, however, an ἐκ is supplied. In προσμ., which signifies confligere, we have an usual nautical term.

4. τῆς Ἀκαρνανίας ἐς Οἰν.] 'With the names of cities or other places accompanied by the name of the country in which they lie, the latter, as the whole, is in the genitive, and almost always first.' Matth. Gr. Gr. § 354. In Οἰνιάδας (a derivative of Οἰνίας) we have a name (like Œnophyta) given from the wine there made. The plural form was employed with reference to the inhabitants of the tract in question, but was afterwards confined to the city itself; which (as in other cases, such as we have seen) had a name properly denoting only the inhabitants. Moreover, we have added τῆς Ἀκαρνανίας, because there was another Œniadæ in Œtæa. This city was situated (as Col. Leake shows, North. Gr. vol. iii. 556) on the right bank of the Achelous, and about 6 miles from its mouth, and is now called Trigardo castro; which agrees with the situation assigned to it by Polyb. v. 65. It occupied, as Col. Leake observes, an extensive insulated eminence, walled around with walls of great thickness, and of an admirable workmanship. With respect to the plan of the place, he well points out that 'its position comprehended the chief requisites of a Greek city—a plain and lake abounding in the necessaries and luxuries of life, with a height strengthened by that lake, by marshes and two rivers, which afforded an easy communication with two points of the coast, at a distance to leave no fear of surprise from the sea.'

Ch. CXII. [a] A. C. 450. Ol. 82, 3.

1. διαλιπόντων] 'having intervened.'

2. Ἑλληνικοῦ πολέμου ἔσχον] for ἀπέσχον, 'desisted from,' there being here an ellipsis of ἑαυτούς. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 353, 3.

4. [b] A. C. 449. Ol. 82, 4.

ὑπὲρ Σαλαμῖνος] 'off Salamis.'

5. πόλεμον ἐστράτευσαν] Some MSS. have πόλ. ἐπολέμησαν, a phrase frequent in the best writers: but the former, however unusual, is quite Thucydidean. So supra i. 5, we have πύστεις ἐρωτᾶν, and in Æschyl. Pers. 303, πήδημα ἀφῆλατο.

Ch. CXIII. [c] A. C. 447. Ol. 83, 2.

1. ἄττα] for ἄτινα. The two best MSS. have ἅττα: and Herm. on Viger, 711, gives this rule, that where ἅττα has manifestly the signification of ἅτινα, the (') is used, otherwise the (᾽). This is generally the case where the a is conjoined with an adjective; when, in fact, it has only the signification of τινα.

ὡς ἑκάστοις] 'with the quotas pertaining to each.'

καὶ ἀνδραποδίσαντες] These words are bracketed by Bekker, and cancelled by Goeller and Poppo; but without reason; for it is more probable that they should have been inadvertently omitted per homœoteleuton, than that they should have been foisted into half of the MSS. from i. 98, or elsewhere. By a still greater carelessness, the words ἀπεχώρουν, φυλακὴν καταστήσαντες, are in two of the best MSS. left out, as well as καὶ ἀνδραποδίσαντες. The words probably formed a line in the ancient archetype; and as the preceding ended with ἑλόντες, the CXIV. [a] Μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον Εὔβοια ἀπέστη ἀπὸ Ἀθηναίων· καὶ ἐς αὐτὴν διαβεβηκότος ἤδη Περικλέους στρατιᾷ Ἀθηναίων, ἠγγέλθη αὐτῷ ὅτι Μέγαρα ἀφέστηκε, καὶ Πελοποννήσιοι μέλλουσιν ἐσβαλεῖν ἐς τὴν Ἀττικήν, καὶ οἱ φρουροὶ Ἀθηναίων διεφθαρμένοι εἰσὶν ὑπὸ Μεγαρέων, πλὴν ὅσοι ἐς Νίσαιαν ἀπέφυγον. 2. ἐπαγαγόμενοι δὲ Κορινθίους καὶ Σικυωνίους καὶ Ἐπιδαυρίους ἀπέστησαν οἱ Μεγαρῆς. 3. ὁ δὲ Περικλῆς πάλιν κατὰ τάχος ἐκόμιζε τὴν στρατιὰν ἐκ τῆς Εὐβοίας. 4. καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι τῆς Ἀττικῆς ἐς Ἐλευσῖνα καὶ Θριῶζε ἐσβαλόντες, ἐδῄωσαν Πλειστοάνακτος τοῦ Παυσανίου βασιλέως Λακεδαιμονίων ἡγουμένου, καὶ τὸ πλέον οὐκέτι προελθόντες, ἀπεχώρησαν ἐπ' οἴκου. 5. καὶ Ἀθηναῖοι πάλιν ἐς Εὔβοιαν διαβάντες, Περικλέους στρατηγοῦντος, κατεστρέψαντο πᾶσαν· καὶ τὴν μὲν ἄλλην ὁμολογίᾳ κατεστήσαντο, Ἑστιαιᾶς δὲ ἐξοικίσαντες αὐτοὶ τὴν γῆν ἔσχον. CXV. Ἀναχωρήσαντες δὲ ἀπὸ Εὐβοίας, οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον σπονδὰς ἐποιήσαντο πρὸς Λακεδαιμονίους καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους τριακοντούτεις, ἀποδόντες Νίσαιαν, καὶ Πηγάς, καὶ Τροιζῆνα, καὶ Ἀχαΐαν· ταῦτα γὰρ εἶχον Ἀθηναῖοι Πελοποννησίων.

Ch. CXIV. [a] A. C. 445. Ol. 83, 3.

5. ὁμολογίᾳ κατεστήσαντο] composuerunt, 'settled, or pacified it, by treaty.' So infra iii. 35, καθίστατο τὰ περὶ τὴν Μυτ. See the Schol. and Poppo. It is well remarked by Arnold, that 'they did not recover the island by treaty, but by arms; then when it was reduced, it was mostly brought into a settled state by renewing something like the former terms of its alliance with Athens.'

Ch. CXV. 1. Ἀχαΐαν] This word has occasioned some perplexity to the editors in general. To understand it of the province is, they conceive, preposterous: and they suppose it must be some town that is here meant, which the Athenians had taken during the war. They fail, however, in proposing any conjecture deserving of attention: and indeed after all that has been urged by Pop., Müller, and Goell., there is, I must still, as before, maintain, no well-founded objection to understanding Ἀχαΐαν of the province. From ch. 3 it appears that Achæa was then one of the subject allies of Athens; and no wonder; for, as Arn. observes, 'the connexion was natural, from the Achæans being alienated from Lacedæmon by difference of race as well as form of government.' Utterly without weight are the objections advanced by Goell., to understanding Achaia of the province. The only plausible argument brought forward is, that the expression ἀποδοῦναι Ἀχαΐαν is inapplicable to a country which did not belong to Lacedæmon. But, as Dr. Arnold observes, 'the explanation is to be found in the words ταῦτα γὰρ εἶχον Ἀθηναῖοι Πελοποννησίων.' 'Sparta,' adds he, 'looked upon Peloponnesus as a country with which the Athenians had no concern, and in which they could not establish themselves without interfering with her old supremacy. She therefore called upon Athens to give up every thing which she had in Peloponnesus; and a country united with Athens by the tie of a dependent alliance, was virtually become a part of the Athenian dominion; so that to renounce such an alliance, was like ceding a part of her own territory.'

On these grounds I have retained the common reading, confirmed as it is by the occurrence of the same words infra iv. 2, and especially from such being, I find, the reading of Aristides. See t. iii. 247. ii. 69. i. 295. ii. 40, which several passages also, I would observe, support the position of Ἀχαΐαν that I have, from the best MSS., adopted.

2. [a] Ἕκτῳ δὲ ἔτει Σαμίοις καὶ Μιλησίοις πόλεμος ἐγένετο περὶ Πριήνης· καὶ οἱ Μιλήσιοι, ἐλασσούμενοι τῷ πολέμῳ, παρ' Ἀθηναίους ἐλθόντες κατεβόων τῶν Σαμίων. 3. ξυνεπελαμβάνοντο δὲ καὶ ἐξ αὐτῆς τῆς Σάμου ἄνδρες ἰδιῶται νεωτερίσαι βουλόμενοι τὴν πολιτείαν. 4. πλεύσαντες οὖν Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς Σάμον ναυσὶ τεσσαράκοντα, δημοκρατίαν κατέστησαν, καὶ ὁμήρους ἔλαβον τῶν Σαμίων πεντήκοντα μὲν παῖδας, ἴσους δὲ ἄνδρας, καὶ κατέθεντο ἐς Λῆμνον· καὶ φρουρὰν ἐγκαταλιπόντες ἀνεχώρησαν. 5. τῶν δὲ Σαμίων—ἦσαν γάρ τινες οἳ οὐχ ὑπέμενον, ἀλλ' ἔφυγον ἐς τὴν ἤπειρον—ξυνθέμενοι τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει τοῖς δυνατωτάτοις καὶ Πισσούθνῃ τῷ Ὑστάσπου ξυμμαχίαν, ὃς εἶχε Σάρδεις τότε, ἐπικούρους τε ξυλλέξαντες ἐς ἑπτακοσίους, διέβησαν ὑπὸ νύκτα ἐς τὴν Σάμον· καὶ πρῶτον μὲν τῷ δήμῳ ἐπανέστησαν, καὶ ἐκράτησαν τῶν πλείστων· ἔπειτα τοὺς ὁμήρους κλέψαντες ἐκ Λήμνου τοὺς αὐτῶν, ἀπέστησαν καὶ τοὺς φρουροὺς τοὺς Ἀθηναίων, καὶ τοὺς ἄρχοντας, οἳ ἦσαν παρὰ σφίσιν, ἐξέδοσαν Πισσούθνῃ, ἔπί τε Μίλητον εὐθὺς παρεσκευάζοντο στρατεύειν. ξυναπέστησαν δὲ αὐτοῖς καὶ Βυζάντιοι. CXVI. Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ ὡς ᾔσθοντο, πλεύσαντες ναυσὶν ἑξήκοντα ἐπὶ Σάμου, ταῖς μὲν ἑκκαίδεκα τῶν νεῶν οὐκ ἐχρήσαντο (ἔτυχον γὰρ αἱ μὲν ἐπὶ Καρίας ἐς προσκοπὴν τῶν Φοινισσῶν νεῶν οἰχόμεναι, αἱ δ' ἐπὶ Χίου καὶ Λέσβου περιαγγέλλουσαι βοηθεῖν), τεσσαράκοντα δὲ ναυσὶ καὶ τέσσαρσι, Περικλέους δεκάτου αὐτοῦ στρατηγοῦντος, ἐναυμάχησαν πρὸς Τραγίᾳ τῇ νήσῳ Σαμίων ναυσὶν ἑβδομήκοντα, ὧν ἦσαν αἱ εἴκοσι στρατιώτιδες· (ἔτυχον δὲ αἱ πᾶσαι ἀπὸ Μιλήτου πλέουσαι·) καὶ ἐνίκων Ἀθηναῖοι. 2. ὕστερον δὲ αὐτοῖς ἐβοήθησαν ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν νῆες τεσσαράκοντα, καὶ Χίων καὶ Λεσβίων πέντε καὶ εἴκοσι· καὶ ἀποβάντες καὶ κρατοῦντες τῷ πεζῷ, ἐπολιόρκουν τρισὶ τείχεσι τὴν πόλιν, καὶ ἐκ θαλάσσης ἅμα.

Ch. CXVI. 1. ἐπὶ Σάμου] The difference between the use of the gen. and the accus. is the same as that between our to and towards. But by a popular idiom, especially applicable to nautical affairs, the latter is regarded as equiv. to the former. So we say, 'to sail for a place.' By ταῖς ἑκκαίδεκα τῶν νεῶν are to be understood the 16 remaining, after deducting the 44 just afterwards mentioned, from the whole number 60. So also, a little after, we have αἱ εἴκοσι, meaning the 20 remaining after deducting 50 from the total 70. Ἐς προσκοπὴν, 'for a reconnoitring.' Περιαγγέλλουσαι βοηθεῖν, 'carrying round messages, or summonses;' περιαγγέλλειν being a term appropriated to the calling forth the quotas to be furnished by subject allies. See note infra ii. 10.

2. τείχεσι] This I formerly understood,

3. Περικλῆς δὲ, λαβὼν ἑξήκοντα ναῦς ἀπὸ τῶν ἐφορμουσῶν, ᾤχετο κατὰ τάχος ἐπὶ Καύνου καὶ Καρίας, ἐσαγγελθέντων ὅτι Φοίνισσαι νῆες ἐπ' αὐτοὺς πλέουσιν· ᾤχετο γὰρ καὶ ἐκ τῆς Σάμου πέντε ναυσὶ Στησαγόρας καὶ ἄλλοι ἐπὶ τὰς Φοινίσσας. CXVII. Ἐν τούτῳ δὲ οἱ Σάμιοι ἐξαπιναίως ἔκπλουν ποιησάμενοι, ἀφράκτῳ τῷ στρατοπέδῳ ἐπιπεσόντες, τάς τε προφυλακίδας ναῦς διέφθειραν, καὶ ναυμαχοῦντες τὰς ἀνταναγομένας ἐνίκησαν, καὶ τῆς θαλάσσης τῆς καθ' ἑαυτοὺς ἐκράτησαν ἡμέρας περὶ τεσσαρασκαίδεκα, καὶ ἐσεκομίσαντο καὶ ἐξεκομίσαντο ἃ ἐβούλοντο. 2. ἐλθόντος δὲ Περικλέους, πάλιν ταῖς ναυσὶ κατεκλήσθησαν· καὶ ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ὕστερον προσεβοήθησαν τεσσαράκοντα μὲν αἱ μετὰ Θουκυδίδου καὶ Ἄγνωνος καὶ Φορμίωνος νῆες, εἴκοσι δὲ αἱ μετὰ Τληπολέμου καὶ Ἀντικλέους, ἐκ δὲ Χίου καὶ Λέσβου τριάκοντα. 3. καὶ ναυμαχίαν μέν τινα βραχεῖαν ἐποιήσαντο οἱ Σάμιοι· ἀδύνατοι δὲ ὄντες ἀντισχεῖν, ἐξεπολιορκήθησαν ἐνάτῳ μηνὶ, καὶ προσεχώρησαν ὁμολογίᾳ, τεῖχός τε καθελόντες καὶ ὁμήρους δόντες, καὶ ναῦς παραδόντες, καὶ χρήματα τὰ ἀναλωθέντα κατὰ χρόνους ταξάμενοι ἀποδοῦναι. ξυνέβησαν δὲ καὶ Βυζάντιοι, ὥσπερ καὶ πρότερον ὑπήκοοι εἶναι.

CXVIII. Μετὰ ταῦτα δὲ ἤδη γίγνεται οὐ πολλοῖς ἔτεσιν ὕστερον τὰ προειρημένα, τά τε Κερκυραϊκὰ καὶ τὰ Ποτιδαιατικὰ, καὶ ὅσα πρόφασις τοῦδε τοῦ πολέμου κατέστη. 2. ταῦτα δὲ ξύμπαντα ὅσα with the commentators in general, of three walls; two of circumvallation, and one of contravallation. But since, as Poppo observes, it is impossible to imagine the use of the third, when two, as in the case of Platæa, would suffice, hence I would, with Casaub., Bredow, and Pop., explain τείχεσι of forts (τειχίσμασι, as the Schol. explains), or rather fortified camps, commanding the approaches to the city on the land side.

3. ἐπὶ Καύνου καὶ Καρίας] A hendiadys for ἐπὶ Καύνου ἐν Καρίᾳ, Caunus being situated in Caria. (Goell.) See note supra 16, on the expression Κῦρος καὶ ἡ Περσ. βασ., and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 432, 3. In the words following, ἐσαγγελθέντων ὅτι Φοίνισσαι νῆες ἐπ' αὐτοὺς πλέουσιν, we have, as Arnold observes, a confused sentence for what ought to have run thus: ἐσαγγελθέντος ὅτι—πλέουσιν, or ἐσαγγελθεισῶν—νεῶν, ὅτι πλέουσιν. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 563.

ᾤχετο γὰρ—ἐπὶ τὰς Φοινίσσας] 'had gone after the Phœnician fleet,' viz. to bring it up to the aid of the Samians. On this sense of ἐπὶ, see note infra iv. 13. Καὶ ἄλλοι. Meaning, 'and others [with him].'

Ch. CXVII. 1. ἀφράκτῳ τῷ στρατοπέδῳ] By στρατ. is meant, as Poppo and Arnold explain, the naval camp, pitched on the sea-shore, which was the constant accompaniment of the naval expeditions of the Greeks; 'the ships (as observes Arn.) being drawn up on the beach in front of this camp, and the fleet protected against surprise, by having a certain number of ships moored afloat and ready manned, which lay off the camp as a sort of look-out or guard; and sometimes also a stockade was made in the sea, in front of the ships drawn up on the beach; or they were defended by a palisade, or some similar fortification, raised on the shore itself.'

3. καθελόντες] The participle here, as often, denotes condition. In the words following, καὶ χρήματα τὰ ἀναλωθέντα κατὰ χρόνους ταξάμενοι ἀποδοῦναι, of which the sense is, 'and engaging to pay back the expenses [of the war] at certain times,' viz. by instalments, we have a very rare idiom, of which scarcely any other example is found. Comp. similar expressions in Dio Cass. 226, 56, φόρον ἐτήσιον ταξάμενοι, and Pollux, i. 169, χρήματα ταξάμενοι.

Ch. CXVIII. The thread of the history is now resumed from ch. 88.

1. πρόφασις] Meaning simply cause or *ἔπραξαν οἱ Ἕλληνες πρός τε ἀλλήλους καὶ τὸν βάρβαρον, ἐγένετο ἐν ἔτεσι πεντήκοντα μάλιστα μεταξὺ τῆς Ξέρξου ἀναχωρήσεως καὶ τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦδε τοῦ πολέμου· ἐν οἷς Ἀθηναῖοι τήν τε ἀρχὴν ἐγκρατεστέραν κατεστήσαντο, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐπὶ μέγα ἐχώρησαν δυνάμεως· οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι αἰσθόμενοι οὔ τε ἐκώλυον, εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ βραχὺ, ἡσύχαζόν τε τὸ πλέον τοῦ χρόνου,—ὄντες μὲν καὶ πρὸ τοῦ μὴ ταχεῖς ἰέναι ἐς τοὺς πολέμους, εἰ μὴ ἀναγκάζοιντο, τὸ δέ τι καὶ πολέμοις οἰκείοις ἐξειργόμενοι,—πρὶν δὴ ἡ δύναμις τῶν Ἀθηναίων σαφῶς ᾔρετο, καὶ τῆς ξυμμαχίας αὐτῶν ἥπτοντο. 3. τότε δὲ οὐκέτι ἀνασχετὸν ἐποιοῦντο, ἀλλ' ἐπιχειρητέα ἐδόκει εἶναι πάσῃ προθυμίᾳ, καὶ καθαιρετέα ἡ ἰσχὺς, ἣν δύνωνται, ἀραμένοις τόνδε τὸν πόλεμον. 4. [a]αὐτοῖς μὲν οὖν τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις διέγνωστο λελύσθαι τε τὰς σπονδὰς καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἀδικεῖν· πέμψαντες δὲ ἐς Δελφοὺς ἐπηρώτων τὸν θεὸν "εἰ πολεμοῦσιν ἄμεινον ἔσται" ὁ δὲ ἀνεῖλεν αὐτοῖς, ὡς λέγεται, "κατὰ κράτος πολεμοῦσι νίκην ἕσεσθαι, καὶ αὐτὸς ἔφη ξυλλήψεσθαι καὶ παρακαλούμενος καὶ ἄκλητος." CXIX. Αὖθις δὲ τοὺς occasion; a sense of the word found elsewhere in our author, and not unfrequently in Herodot. So σκῆψις is used in Æschyl. Agam. 859.

2. ἀρχὴν ἐγκρατεστέραν κατεστ.] 'had made their rule [over the allies] stronger; had drawn tighter the reins of rule.' So Isocr. Archid. § 17, ἐγκρατεστέραν τὴν ἀρχὴν τῶν πολιτῶν κατεστήσατο: and Aristot. Polit. iii. ἐπεὶ γὰρ ἐγκ. ἔσχον τὴν ἀρχὴν Ἀθηναῖοι ἐταπείνωσαν τοὺς Σαμίους. So infra vii. 6, ἄρχειν ἐγκρατῶς. At τὸ πλέον supply μέρος. With μὴ ταχεῖς ἰέναι ἐς τοὺς πολέμους, compare supra ch. 69, 4. Τὸ δέ τι καὶ, 'quodammodo etiam.' Πολέμοις οἰκείοις ἐξειργόμενοι, 'hindered or prevented by wars at home.' So Herodot. ix. 111, ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου ἐξεργόμενος, 'prevented by the law [from doing otherwise].' Τῆς ξυμμαχίας αὐτῶν, 'their confederation,' for τῆς ξυμμαχίδος, as infra iv. 118. v. 33, or for τῶν ξυμμάχων, as ii. 10. vi. 72.

3. οὐκέτι ἀνασχετὸν ἐποιοῦντο] In this phrase (occurring also infra ii. 21) supply τὸ πρᾶγμα, which is expressed in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 52, 36, οὐκ ἀνασχετὸν ἡγησάμενος τὸ πρᾶγμα. Similarly in Herodot. vii. 163, we have, οὐκ ἀνασχετὸν ποιησάμενος: and in Hdian. vi. 3, 1, οὐκ ἀνασχετὰ ἡγούμενος. Ἀραμένοις, a little after, depends upon αὐτοῖς, understood; which is implied in ἐδόκει.

εἰ πολεμοῦσιν ἄμεινον ἔσται] 'whether it would be proper for them to go to war [or not].' Partic. for infinit. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 555, note 2. Ἄμεινον is for the positive; and was indeed a usual term employed by either those who consulted oracles, or those who delivered the responses, especially in the trite ὡς καὶ ἄμεινον, or τὼς γὰρ ἄμ. So also Hesiod, Opp. ii. 368, μήδ' ἀκινήτοισι καθίζειν, οὐ γὰρ ἄμεινον. Plut. de Def. Or. οὐκ ἄμεινον εἴη βαδίζειν. Æschines, c. Ctes. 46, οὐκ ἄμεινον εἴη βουλεύσασθαι. Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 70, οὐκ ἄμεινον εἴη, &c.

κατὰ κράτος πολεμοῦσι νίκην ἕσεσθαι] 'that victory would attend them, if they carried on the war vigorously.' Such, at least, was the sense in which the Lacedæmonians understood the response. But perhaps we may discern here the usual artifice of the priests to save their credit, whichever way events should fall out; something being evidently meant to be supplied at πολεμοῦσι. If αὐτοῖς, then it would refer to the Lacedæmonians; but if the art. τοῖς, then it would be a sententia generalis, which might very well apply to any,—and therefore to the Athenians, if they should prove victorious. Of the phrase κατὰ κράτος πολεμεῖν, an example occurs infra iv. 23. In the latter part of the response, καὶ αὐτὸς ἔφη ξυλλήψεσθαι καὶ παρακαλούμενος καὶ ἄκλητος, we have a not unfrequent form of promising prompt and unfailing support. Compare Dio Cass. 852, 63, καὶ παρακαλούμενος ὑπ' αὐτῶν καὶ ἀπαράκλητος. And so in Horat. Od. ii. 18, fin., we have, 'Hic levare functum Pauperem laboribus, Vocatus atque non vocatus audit,' i. e. whether invoked or uninvoked.

ξυμμάχους παρακαλέσαντες, ψῆφον ἐβούλοντο ἐπαγαγεῖν, εἰ χρὴ πολεμεῖν. 2. καὶ ἐλθόντων τῶν πρέσβεων ἀπὸ τῆς ξυμμαχίας, καὶ ξυνόδου γενομένης, οἵ τε ἄλλοι εἶπον ἃ ἐβούλοντο, κατηγοροῦντες οἱ πλείους τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ τὸν πόλεμον ἀξιοῦντες γενέσθαι· καὶ οἱ Κορίνθιοι, δεηθέντες μὲν καὶ κατὰ πόλεις πρότερον ἑκάστων ἰδίᾳ ὥστε ψηφίσασθαι τὸν πόλεμον, δεδιότες περὶ τῇ Ποτιδαίᾳ μὴ προδιαφθαρῇ, παρόντες δὲ καὶ τότε, καὶ τελευταῖοι ἐπελθόντες, ἔλεγον τοιάδε.

CXX. "Τοὺς μὲν Λακεδαιμονίους, ὦ ἄνδρες ξύμμαχοι, οὐκ ἂν ἔτι αἰτιασαίμεθα, ὡς οὐ καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐψηφισμένοι τὸν πόλεμόν εἰσι, καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐς τοῦτο νῦν ξυνήγαγον. 2. χρὴ γὰρ τοὺς ἡγεμόνας, τὰ ἴδια ἐξ ἴσου νέμοντας τὰ κοινὰ προσκοπεῖν, ὥσπερ καὶ ἐν ἄλλοις ἐκ πάντων προτιμῶνται. 3. ἡμῶν δὲ ὅσοι μὲν Ἀθηναίοις ἤδη ἐνηλλάγησαν, οὐχὶ διδαχῆς δέονται ὥστε φυλάξασθαι αὐτούς· τοὺς δὲ τὴν μεσόγειαν μᾶλλον, καὶ μὴ ἐν πόρῳ, κατῳκημένους εἰδέναι χρὴ ὅτι τοῖς κάτω ἢν μὴ ἀμύνωσι, χαλεπωτέραν ἕξουσι τὴν κατακομιδὴν τῶν

Ch. CXX. 1. τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους—ξυνήγαγον] Render, 'we can no longer censure the Lacedæmonians, as if they had not both themselves resolved on the war, and now convoked us for that very purpose.' The form ὡς οὐ is here used in a very uncommon manner, in which the ὡς has reference to the sense of saying which is included in censuring. So Arnold observes, that by ὡς οὐ after αἰτιασαίμεθα we have the same sense yielded as if the words had stood thus, καὶ γὰρ αὐτοὶ ἐψηφισμένοι—εἰσι, καὶ—νῦν ξυνήγαγον, 'We cannot blame them for not having voted for war themselves, and for not now calling us together; for they have done both the one and the other.'

2. χρὴ γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ, as Bauer observes, refers to a clause suppressed, [Et hoc rectè, sive hac re officio suo functi sunt,] nam qui præsunt, &c.; or, as Arnold supplies, 'We cannot now blame them; but had they acted differently, we should have had a right to blame them; for those who command others, should provide for the welfare of others.' Of τὰ ἴδια ἐξ ἴσου νέμοντας, the full sense is, 'disposing, i. e. conducting, their private affairs on [no more than] a footing of equality [with the rest];' there being here an ellipsis of μόνον. The general sense is very well represented by the otherwise too paraphrastic version of Pop. and Goell. 'qui præsunt aliis, hos non decet in suis rebus præ aliis sibi quidquam tribuere.' By the words ὥσπερ καὶ ἐν ἄλλοις ἐκ πάντων προτιμῶνται, we have represented the ground of duty, namely, that 'præstant reliquis honore.' Ἐκ πάντων. This is well explained by the Schol. ὑπὲρ πάντας, q. d. as among others they are especially honoured. There is here, as Abresch points out, an evident allusion to the words of Sarpedon, Hom. Il. xii. 310, Γλαῦκε, τίη δὴ νῶϊ τετιμήμεσθα μάλιστα Ἔδρῃ τε, &c.—τῷ νῦν χρὴ — ἀντιβολῆσαι. Compare Xen. Anab. i. 3. i. 37, Ὑμεῖς γάρ ἐστε στρατηγοί,—καὶ ὅτε εἰρήνη ἦν, ὑμεῖς καὶ χρήμασι καὶ τιμαῖς τούτων ἐπλεονεκτεῖτε· καὶ νῦν τοίνυν. ἐπεὶ πόλεμός ἐστιν, ἀξιοῦν δεῖ ὑμᾶς αὐτοὺς ἀμείνους τε τοῦ πλήθους εἶναι, καὶ προβουλεύειν τούτων καὶ προπονεῖν, ἥν που δέῃ. Finally, in προσκοπεῖν and προτιμῶνται we have a paronomasia, such as is frequent in our author.

3. ἐνηλλάγησαν] 'have had intercourse with;' lit. 'have been engaged in dealings with.' For, as Arnold observes, 'the word is applied properly to things exchanged between merchants in the course of trade; and is thence applied [figuratively] to the dealings and intercourse of men [in general].' We may compare the Latin commercium habere. Ἐν πόρῳ, 'in a place of passage and traffic,' like Corinth. So infra vi. 48, ἐν πόρῳ καὶ προσβολῇ εἶναι τῆς Σικελίας. In κατῳκημένους, 'those who are situated,' 'who inhabit,' we have an idiom found also i. 99, and iii. 34. Herodot. i. 202. iv. 8, ἔξω τοῦ Πόντου κατοικημένον. Plut. Æmil. P. 9, Γαλάτας τοὺς περὶ τὸν Ἴστρον ᾠκημένους. Procop. p. 111. At τοῖς κάτω supply οἰκοῦντας, the meaning being, 'those on the coast,' as opposed to those ἄνω. See my note on Acts xix. 1. Κατακομιδὴν, 'conveyance down to the sea-coast for exportation:' a word, this, peculiar to Thucydides; though καταγωγὴ is used in the same sense by the Schol. on Pind. Ol. v. 18. Of the verb κατακομίζω, as used in the sense 'to bring down from inland regions to the sea-coast,' similar examples occur infra vi. 88, and in Herodian, viii. 2, 7. Appian, i. 475. By τῶν ὡραίων are meant the fruits of any season, agricultural produce in general. See Lex. Xen. and Müller, D. r. i. 75. Ἀντίληψις, in the sense 'receiving back,' is rare; though examples occur in Appian, i. 427, (a passage evidently imitated from the present,) τὴν τῶν ὡραίων ἐπάθεσιν καὶ ἀντίληψιν, and ii. 262, 15. Compare Livy, v. 54, 'flumen quo ex mediterraneis locis vages devehantur, quo maritimi commeatus accipiantur.' And hence may be illustrated a passage of Euripides, Suppl. 209, where, among the benefits imparted to men by the gods, Theseus recounts, Πόντου δὲ ναυστολήμαθ', ὡς διαλλαγὰς ἔχοιμεν ἀλλήλοισιν, ὧν πένοιτο γῆ, permutationes inter utrosque earum rerum quibus terra indigeret. In the words ὧν ἡ θάλασσα τῇ ἠπείρῳ δίδωσι, there is a sort of poetic character, similarly observable in a passage of Liban. Or. 496, A. ἐξέτασις καὶ κρισις γίγνεται ὧν ἥ τε γῆ καὶ θάλαττα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις δίδωσι.

κακοὺς] ἰσμαντος, indiligentes, 'careless, indifferent, unaffected;' namely, (as Goell. explains,) because they think it involves no interest of theirs, whichever way the matter may be judged. Similarly in Eurip. El. 374, we have πονηρῷ χρήσεται κριτῇ. Hence in Dionys. Hal. Ant. iii. 11, πρὸς ἀντιπάλους ὄντας ὑμᾶς, τοὺς δικαίους κριτὰς παύσομαι λέγων: for τοὺς δικ. read τοὺς ἀδίκους.

προσδέχισθαι δὲ ποτὲ—προελθεῖν] 'but to expect that if they betray the interests of the maritime states, the danger will some time come even to themselves.' At οὐχ ἧσσον supply ἡμῶν, the sense being, 'as well as for us,' according to the maxim of Horace, 'Tua res agitur, paries cum proximus ardet.'

4. μὴ ὀκνεῖν] 'non dubitare,' 'not to hesitate.' So, in like manner followed by an infin., Xen. Ag. iii. 2. Hist. iii. 1, 19. Τὸν πόλεμον ἀντ' εἰρήνης μεταλαμβάνειν, 'to take up war instead of peace,' 'to exchange one for the other,' there being here a metaphor derived from the taking up of one garment instead of another; in which sense the word occurs in Xen. Cyrop. iv. 5, 2. Pol. iii. 78, 3, and sometimes in Plato. Evidently imitated from the present, is the following in Herodian, viii. 2, 11, πόλεων μετειληφυιῶν ἀντὶ πολέμων εἰρήνην. At iv. 20, we have the plainer expression ἀντὶ πολέμου εἰρήνην ἐλώμεθα. Ἀδικουμένους is for ἀδικουμένων, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 535. Ἐξ εἰρήνης. So, just after, ἐκ πολέμου. Render, 'from a state of peace, or of war,' after laying it aside. Εὖ δὲ παρασχὸν, 'when a good opportunity offers.' This falls under the rule of Matth. Gr. Gr. § 564, that 'impersonal verbs, which have no subject, when construed as participles, are not put in the genit., but the accus.' Examples of the phrase occur in Menand. Hist. ap. Corp. Byz. i. 175, and Dexippus, Corp. Byz. p. 8: and such may be supposed to be the true reading in Dio Cass. 432, 95. Hence in Liban. Or. 722, D. ἂν μὲν εὖ παρασχὼν, I propose to read, even without authority from MSS., παρασχόν.

With the expression τῷ ἡσυχίῳ τῆς εἰρήνης, compare Hom. Il. xxi. 598, and Pind. Pyth. ix. 40, ἡσύχιον εἰρήνην, and Pind. Pyth. viii. 1—6. Ἡδόμενον, 'by being pleased,' for τῇ ἡδονῇ, which would have better corresponded with τῇ εὐτυχίᾳ just before; but our author is accustomed to vary his phraseology. Of ἀδικεῖσθαι the sense is, 'to endure being wronged,' as 1 Cor. vi. 7. So ἐλασσοῦσθαι, supra ch. 77, 1, and πολιορκεῖσθαι, iii. 52, init.

5. ῥᾳστώνης] 'inertiæ.' In this sense τερπνὸν, δι' ὅπερ ὀκνεῖ, εἰ ἡσυχάζοι· ὅ τε ἐν πολέμῳ εὐτυχίᾳ πλεονάζων οὐκ ἐντεθύμηται θράσει ἀπίστῳ ἐπαιρόμενος. 6. πολλὰ γὰρ κακῶς γνωσθέντα, ἀβουλοτέρων τῶν ἐναντίων τυχόντων, κατωρθώθη· καὶ ἔτι πλέω ἃ, καλῶς δοκοῦντα βουλευθῆναι, ἐς τοὐναντίον αἰσχρῶς περιέστη. 7. ἐνθυμεῖται γὰρ οὐδεὶς †ὁμοῖα τῇ πίστει καὶ ἔργῳ ἐπεξέρχεται· ἀλλὰ μετ' ἀσφαλείας μὲν δοξάζομεν, μετὰ δέους δὲ ἐν

(which is rare) the word occurs also in Lucian, iii. 618, ῥᾳστ. τοῦ βίου, and ii. 377. Demosth. 133, 12, ῥαστώνη καὶ ῥᾳθυμία. The phrase itself occurs in Dexippus, p. 16, referred to by Pop. Εὐτυχίᾳ πλεονάζων, 'is elevated, grows insolent, and is puffed up with success.' In this sense πλεονάζειν occurs in Dio Cass. 281, 96, and 1170, 76, and Dionys. Hal. Ant. i. 10, οὔτε ἐν τοῖς ἰδίοις μέλλων πλεονάζειν ἐπαίνοις. Of οὐκ ἐντεθύμηται θράσει ἀπίστῳ ἐπαιρόμενος, the sense is, 'reflects not that he is buoyed up with a treacherous confidence.' So Dexippus, p. 14, (cited by Pop.) γνώτω οὐ βεβαίῳ πράγματι θρασυνόμενος.

6. τυχόντων] So I have thought proper to edit, with Poppo and Bekker, from one half of the MSS., for vulg. τυχόντα, found in at least the other half of the MSS. and the Schol., and retained by Haack and Goell.; for though the construction be thus harsh, yet is it more in the manner of our author: and we may compare a similar one supra i. 32, 3, τετύχηκεν ἄλογον, where ὂν is omitted, as here ὄντων. Again, the sense thus arising, 'when their enemies have chanced to be more ill-advised than themselves,' is one every way worthy of the author; whereas that yielded by the other reading, 'when they (i. e. the ill-concerted measures) have chanced on enemies,' &c. borders on nonsense. On the sentiment, compare infra v. 102. Pind. Pyth. viii. 103—9. Herodot. vii. 4.

καὶ ἔτι πλέω ἃ, &c.] In order to avoid a certain awkwardness attaching to the words as they thus stand, some would, on the authority of several MSS., cancel the ἃ, but injudiciously: for the MSS. in question are of the worst kind, and the reading itself is one evidently originating in critical conjecture, and introduced for the purpose of removing a difficulty; which, after all, is more apparent than real; for, as Poppo observes, and Goeller admits, "ἐστι may here be supplied; such an omission of ἐστι, (where it is not the logical copula, but corresponds to our 'there is,') however rare, being not unexampled:" and he refers to Soph. Ant. 955, seq. If this be thought inadmissible, we may, for ἔτι, read ἔστι.

ἐς τοὐναντίον αἰσχρῶς περιέστη] See note supra ch. 32, 3. Similarly in Liban. Or. 310, D. we have, περιΐσταταί μοι τοὐναντίον ὁ ποιητής.

7. ἐνθυμεῖται γὰρ—ἐπεξέρχεται] Poppo and Goeller here, from the conjecture of Reiske, edit, for ὁμοῖα, ὁμοίᾳ, thus assigning as the sense, 'nemo eâdem animi fiduciâ res gerendas exsequitur, quâ in ipsâ consultatione de his deliberat.' By reading ὁμοῖα, Goeller observes, a false antithesis arises, by which πίστει and ἔργῳ, ἐνθυμεῖται and ἐπεξ., will severally correspond; whereas πίστει does not well admit of being put in opposition with ἔργῳ, because as in deliberating, so in acting 'quæ πίστις exhibeatur dicendum est:' reasons these, so cogent, that I see not how the common reading can be defended, unless we take it, with Matthiæ, Haack, and Goell., as an adverb for ὁμοίως. Thus ὁμοῖα καὶ will mean pariter ac, as ὁμοίως καὶ infra vii. 28, and thus the sense will be the same as if ὁμοίᾳ were read, only less delicate and pointed; yet it cannot be denied, that such an adverbial use is no where found in Attic prose: and if we take ὁμοῖα as an adjective, then the same false antithesis rests on πίστει and ἔργῳ as before; for then the sense will be, 'Nemo eadem ob fiduciam in deliberando sibi proponit, quæ facto exsequitur.' Adopting, then, the reading ὁμοίᾳ, (which I have only not edited for want of authority from MSS.) the sense will be, 'For no one deliberates with the same (lit. the like) confidence as he in action carries them into execution:' and, as Goell. remarks, οὐδεὶς ὁμοίᾳ—καὶ ἔργῳ ἐπεξ. is nothing else than ἕκαστος μείζονι τῇ πίστει ἐνθυμεῖται, ἢ ἔργῳ ἐπεξ., the form of expression and sentiment being the same as infra i. 140 (compared with ii. 11), and Hdot. vii. 49: or, regarding the words as put in inverse order, but to be changed in construing, we may, with Poppo, render, 'nemo enim in rebus exsequendis æquè magnam atque in consiliis capiendis fiduciam demonstrat,' which rendering will be equally suitable if ὁμοῖα be retained and regarded as an adverb for ὁμοίως. The next clause is exegetical or illustrative of the foregoing, and may be rendered, 'but we form, indeed, our opinions and plans amidst security; while in carrying them into effect, we, through fear, fall short of τῷ ἔργῳ ἐλλείπομεν. CXXI. Ἡμεῖς δὲ νῦν καὶ ἀδικούμενοι τὸν πόλεμον ἐγείρομεν, καὶ ἱκανὰ ἔχοντες ἐγκλήματα· καὶ ὅταν ἀμυνώμεθα Ἀθηναίους, καταθησόμεθα αὐτὸν ἐν καιρῷ. 2. κατὰ πολλὰ δὲ ἡμᾶς εἰκὸς ἐπικρατῆσαι, πρῶτον μὲν πλήθει προὔχοντας καὶ ἐμπειρίᾳ πολεμικῇ, ἔπειτα ὁμοίως πάντας ἐς τὰ παραγγελλόμενα ἰόντας. 3. ναυτικόν τε, ᾧ ἰσχύουσιν, ἀπὸ τῆς ὑπαρχούσης τε ἑκάστοις οὐσίας ἐξαρτυσόμεθα, καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐν Δελφοῖς καὶ Ὀλυμπίᾳ χρημάτων· δάνεισμα γὰρ ποιησάμενοι ὑπολαβεῖν οἷοί τε ἐσμὲν μισθῷ μείζονι τοὺς ξένους αὐτῶν ναυβάτας. 4. ὠνητὴ γὰρ Ἀθηναίων ἡ δύναμις μᾶλλον ἢ οἰκεία· ἡ δὲ ἡμετέρα ἧσσον ἂν τοῦτο πάθοι, τοῖς

[our previous confidence].' At ἐλλείπομεν supply, from the context, ὧν ἐνθυμούμεθα. A similar absolute use of ἐλλ. occurs infra v. 113.

CH. CXXI. The speaker now proceeds to animate the timid, by showing that their prospects of success in the proposed undertaking were encouraging; that the power of the enemy, formidable as it seemed, rested on an insecure foundation, and might easily be overthrown, if their own confidence once put forth its strength; that a navy might be raised, capable of coping with that of Athens, since practice would enable them to rival the Athenians in naval skill; and if their own means, which would readily be drawn forth for their common interest, should prove insufficient to defray the expenses of forming a navy, the treasures of Delphi and Olympia might be borrowed for such a purpose. (Thirlwall.)

1. ἡμεῖς δὲ] 'now as to ourselves.' The particip. ἀδικούμενοι stands for a verb and particle, showing the ground of action; q. d. 'It is from having been aggrieved, that we now rouse up the war.' The words καὶ ἱκανὰ ἔχοντες ἐγκλήματα serve to further unfold the sense contained in ἀδικούμενοι. There is something poetic in the phrase τὸν πόλεμον ἐγείρειν, (with which comp. Hom. Il. xi. 213, ἔγειρε δὲ φύλοπιν αἰνήν;) yet such is occasionally found in plain prose. Thus I have noted it in Pol. xv. 1, 2, ἐγείρειν τὸν πόλεμον, and several times in Xen. with the pass. ἐγείρεσθαι: as also in Zosim. v. 50. Similarly in Plato, 856, D. we have στάσιν ἐγείρειν.

2. Having set forth τὸ δίκαιον, the speaker now considers τὸ δυνατόν. (Pop.) Κατὰ πολλὰ, 'on many accounts,' as ch. 123. Ὁμοίως πάντας ἐς τὰ παραγγελλόμενα ἰόντας, 'as yielding an uniform obedience to orders,' i. e. an obedience which extends alike to all [ranks]. That such is the sense of the phrase ἴέναι ἐς τὰ παραγγελλόμενα, is clear from iii. 55, ἴέναι δὲ ἐς τὰ παραγγελλόμενα εἰκὸς ἦν προθύμως. And so in Appian, ii. 80, 24, we have, παρῆνεσεν ἑτοίμοις ἐς τὸ παραγγελλόμενον εἶναι: and ii. 246, 11, ὀξέως ἐς τὰ παραγγελλόμενα χωροῦντες. The best commentary on this ill-understood passage is a similar one infra ii. 11, κάλλιστον γὰρ τόδε καὶ ἀσφαλέστατον, πολλοὺς ὄντας ἑνὶ κόσμῳ χρωμένους φαίνεσθαι.

3. τῶν ἐν Δελφοῖς καὶ Ὀλυμπίᾳ χρημάτων· δάνεισμα γὰρ ποιησάμενοι, &c.] The temples were, as it were, the great national banks of Greece, where alone money, or valuable property, could be deposited in safety, and from whence it was allowed for the guardian nation of each to take what was indispensably necessary for urgent occasions, so that the money, or value, were faithfully repaid. Such appears both from the present passage, and especially from 2, 13, where Pericles, enumerating the ways and means (as we term it) of the state, reckons up even the ἀναθήματα and the ἱερὰ σκεύη, the χρήματα ἱερῶν and even the gold about the colossal statue of Minerva. Then he uses expressions which show the occasions and conditions of this application of sacred property; namely, χρησαμένους δὲ ἐπὶ σωτηρίᾳ χρῆναι, μὴ ἐλάσσω ἀντικαταστῆσαι πάλιν.

Ὑπολαβεῖν, here and infra ch. 121, stands for ὑφαιρεῖν, subtrahere, with an implied idea of surreptitiousness.

4. ὠνητὴ] 'conductitia,' 'hired.' Their own troops, indeed, were paid; but they were not enlisted on hire, being taken only by way of conscription. Οἰκεία, for ἰδία, native, self-derived. Ἧσσον ἂν τοῦτο πάθοι, 'would less suffer,' 'be less liable to,' this disadvantage, namely, of having one's forces drawn away by the enemy. Σώμασι, persons, (compare ch. 85,) opposed to χρήμασι, property, as supra i. 141.

σώμασι τὸ πλέον ἰσχύουσα ἢ τοῖς χρήμασι. 5. μιᾷ τε νίκῃ ναυμαχίας κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς ἁλίσκονται· εἰ δ' ἀντίσχοιεν, μελετήσομεν καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐν πλέονι χρόνῳ τὰ ναυτικά· καὶ ὅταν τὴν ἐπιστήμην ἐς τὸ ἴσον καταστήσωμεν, τῇ γε εὐψυχίᾳ δήπου περιεσόμεθα. 6. ὃ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἔχομεν φύσει ἀγαθὸν, ἐκείνοις οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο διδαχῇ· ὃ δὲ ἐκεῖνοι ἐπιστήμῃ προὔχουσι, καθαιρετέον ἡμῖν ἐστι μελέτῃ. 7. χρήματα δ' ὥστ' ἔχειν ἐς αὐτὰ, οἴσομεν· ἢ δεινὸν ἂν εἴη, εἰ οἱ μὲν ἐκείνων ξύμμαχοι ἐπὶ δουλείᾳ τῇ αὐτῶν φέροντες οὐκ ἀπεροῦσιν, ἡμεῖς δ' ἐπὶ τῷ τιμωρούμενοι τοὺς ἐχθροὺς καὶ αὐτοὶ ἅμα σώζεσθαι οὐκ ἄρα δαπανήσομεν, καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ μὴ ὑπ' ἐκείνων αὐτὰ ἀφαιρεθέντες αὐτοῖς τούτοις κακῶς πάσχειν. CXXII. Ὑπάρχουσι δὲ καὶ ἄλλαι ὁδοὶ πολέμου ἡμῖν, ξυμμάχων τε ἀπόστασις,—μάλιστα παραίρεσις οὖσα τῶν προσόδων αἷς ἰσχύουσι,—καὶ ἐπιτειχισμὸς τῇ χώρᾳ,

5. νίκῃ ναυμαχίας] 'defeat in a sea-fight:' a rare expression. Ἁλίσκονται, 'expugnantur,' 'they are utterly defeated,' 'are ruined:' a metaphor derived from a city taken by storm; as in Plut. p. 253, ἁλίσκεται ὁ αἱρεθείς, and Xen. Hist. iv. 8, 3, φοβηθέντες μὴ κατὰ κράτος ἁλῶναι. The present tense is here used instead of the future, by way of denoting the speedy occurrence of the thing. Ἀντίσχοιεν, 'if they should hold out,' i. e. continue the contest [even after one defeat]. Τὴν ἐπιστήμην ἐς τὸ ἴσον καταστήσωμεν, 'when we shall have placed our skill upon an equality with theirs.' The articles stand for possessive pronouns. Comp. infra vi. 72. Δήπου, 'utique opinor.' See Hoogev. Part. i. p. 158, seq.

7. ἢ] for 'alioqui,' or 'else.' Δεινὸν ἂν εἴη, 'it would be hard.' See note on i. 35, 3. With the sentiment contained in the words following, compare the kindred one infra viii. 45, τὰς δ' ἄλλας πόλεις ἔφη ἀδικεῖν, αἳ ἐς Ἀθηναίους πρότερον ἢ ἀποστῆναι ἀνάλουν, εἰ μὴ καὶ νῦν τοσαῦτα, καὶ ἔτι πλείω, ὑπὲρ σφῶν αὐτῶν ἐθελήσουσιν ἐσφέρειν. With the phrase φέροντες οὐκ ἀπεροῦσιν, 'shall not be backward,' 'refuse to furnish [the funds],' compare the following in Demosth. ap. Steph. Thes. ἀπειρηκότων χρήμασι. Pausan. iv. 9, 1, δαπάνῃ—ἀπειρήκεσαν. Dion. Hal. p. 572, 28, ἀπειρηκότων ταῖς εἰσφοραῖς.

ἡμεῖς δ' ἐπὶ τῷ τιμωρούμενοι—δαπανήσομεν] Render, 'and [if] we should indeed be backward in furnishing friends to be avenged on our enemies, and withal to be ourselves preserved.' The words following suggest an additional reason for contributing; but one which, as being founded on a certain perhaps over-wrought refinement, is somewhat obscurely intimated; the sense being, 'And in order that we may not, while deprived by them of these things, (i. e. our monies,) suffer grievously in these very things,' i. e. as Arnold paraphrases, 'in that very part in which we are most sensitive, our property, by suffering them to become our masters.'

CH. CXXII. The speaker now proceeds to say, that there is still a mode of assailing and bringing down the Athenian power abroad, by exciting its subjects to revolt, and thus stopping the sources of its revenue at home, by occupying a permanent post in their territory. To effect this grand object, they must unite firmly, resolutely, and perseveringly; and no longer, as they had heretofore done, suffer it to increase without interposing to avert their final ruin.

1. ὁδοὶ πολέμου] Schol. πορισμοὶ, 'ways and means,' 'expedients for carrying on war.' So in Tacit. Ann. ii. 5, (cited by Gottleb.) we have, 'præliorum vias, quas tractasse Germanicus dicitur.' The common text has τοῦ before πολέμου, which was cancelled, from three of the best MSS., by Bekk. and Goell., but retained by Pop., the sense being, as he thinks, 'the war impending.' Yet, besides that the correctness of the Greek is questionable, the sense thus yielded may be pronounced forced and frigid. Ξυμμάχων ἀπόστασις, 'solicitation of the allies to revolt;' for ἀπόστ. is to be taken in an active sense, as ἀφιστάναι ξυμμ. at ch. 81. Of the noun in the active sense, examples are rare; though I have noted one in Jos. Bell. i. 4, 5, ἐπειρῶντο τῶν παρ' ἀλλήλοιν ἀποστάσεων. The next words, μάλιστα—ἰσχύουσι, are parenthetical, showing the effect or result of the first-mentioned ὁδός. Παραίρεσις, 'withdrawal,' i. e. of the means thereof: a rare

ἄλλα τε ὅσα οὐκ ἄν τις νῦν προΐδοι. 2. ἥκιστα γὰρ πόλεμος ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς χωρεῖ, αὐτὸς δὲ ἀφ' αὑτοῦ τὰ πολλὰ τεχνᾶται πρὸς τὸ παρατυγχάνον· ἐν ᾧ ὁ μὲν εὐοργήτως αὐτῷ προσομιλήσας βεβαιότερος, ὁ δὲ ὀργισθεὶς περὶ αὐτὸν οὐκ ἐλάσσω πταίει. 3. ἐνθυμώμεθα δὲ καὶ ὅτι, εἰ μὲν ἦσαν ἡμῶν ἑκάστοις πρὸς ἀντιπάλους περὶ γῆς ὅρων word, of which an example occurs in Dio Cass. 632, 38, ἐξουσίας παραίρεσις. Ἐπιτειχισμὸς τῇ χώρᾳ, for τειχισμὸς ἐπὶ τῇ χώρᾳ. On the force of ἐπιτειχισμὸς, see Abresch, and Hemst. on Lucian, Nigrin. 23.

ὅσα οὐκ ἄν τις νῦν προΐδοι] 'such as no one could now foresee.' So Livy, xxviii. 44, 'multa quæ nunc ex intervallo non apparent, bellum aperiet:' and Tacit. Ann. ii. 77, 'At multa, quæ provideri non possint, fortuito in melius casura.'

2. ἥκιστα γὰρ πόλεμος — παρατυγχάνον] In tracing the sense of these somewhat obscure words, the difficulty hinges on the expression ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς, which Goell. thinks ought to be referred to those ὁδοὶ τοῦ πολέμου, the ways or means of diminishing the enemy's funds, of increasing their own, which can neither be determined beforehand, nor is it necessary that they should, since war must support itself, as Crobylus said ὁ πόλεμος τεταγμένα οὐ σιτεῖται. But, as Pop. observes, had this only, of the many 'ways of war' above adverted to, been meant, that ought to have been expressed in more explicit terms. Ῥητοῖς is well explained by the Schol. ὡρισμένοις, and the sense of the passage may be expressed as follows: 'For least of all does war proceed on any [pre]determined plans; but rather, of itself, for the most part devises (i. e. suggests contrivances) according to what chances may turn up,' meaning, as Poppo paraphrases, 'consilia et rationes belli, quas excogitavimus et sequi constituimus, sæpe spernere cogimur.' And this view of the sense is confirmed by certain passages, evidently imitated from the present, of Procopius, p. 78, 12, ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς ἐδόκει χωρεῖν. Menand. Hist. ap. Byz. i. 116, ἐν νῷ βαλέσθαι τὸν πόλεμον οὔτε (read οὔ γε) ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς εἰωθότα χωρεῖν. Agathias: καὶ τίς ἀγνώσειεν ἄν, ὡς τὰς πολέμων τροφὰς (read τροπὰς) οὐκ ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς, ἀνάγκης συμβαίνειν; read ῥητοῖς, ἀνάγκῃ (necessarily) συμβαίνειν. The sentiment is nearly that of Livy: 'Eventus nusquam minus respondent, quam in bellis.' So Onosand. Strat. p. 99, Schweb. ἡ τῶν ἀποβαινόντων ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς ὄψις ἐπιζητεῖ τὰς ἐκ τῶν καιρῶν ἐπινοίας, ἃς ἡ ἀνάγκη τῆς τύχης, μᾶλλον ἢ ἡ μνήμη τῆς ἐμπειρίας, ὑποβάλλει. See also Theoph. Sim. p. 35, A. And such is the use of ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς in Aristid. iii. 420, A. Thus the sense of ῥητοῖς is, 'præfinitis, adeoque certis,' (as supra i. 13, ἐπὶ ῥητοῖς γέρασι,) as said of a settled and determinate rule of action.

ἐν ᾧ ὁ μὲν εὐοργήτως — πταίει] The speaker had before (ch. 120, fin.) been influenced by passion in urging war against Athens: he now repeats his protest against the admission of anger [rather, passion] into their deliberations; q. d. 'Let them not begin the war under the influence of passion, but coolly; for they have causes for hostility sufficient to prevail on them, even when considered with the coolest temper.' (Arnold.) In εὐοργήτως and ὀργισθεὶς the idea intended is not so much, what Portus and Haack suppose, that of anger, but rather passionateness, or the ill-regulation of the temper. So the former term is well explained by the Schol. εὐτρόπως. And of ὀργὴ, as used in the sense of τρόπος, examples are frequent in Thucyd. and other of the best writers. The term εὐόργητος is by Hesych. explained ὁ τῇ ὀργῇ (i. e. τῷ τρόπῳ) εὖ χρώμενος: and in Eurip. Bacch. 641, and Hipp. 1042, the subst. εὐοργησία is there explained by the Schol. πραότης: and the adj. εὐόργητος by πρᾷος. Thus ὁ ὀργισθεὶς means, he who is passionate or hot-headed; like προπετὴς in 2 Tim. iii. 4.

Βεβαιότερος, seil. ἔστι, 'is surer [of success].' Περὶ αὐτὸν is not to be construed with ὀργ., as it is by Elmsl., Haack, and Arn., but with πταίει: and I have followed Dobree and Bekk. (2nd ed.) in editing, as propriety of language requires, for αὐτὸν, αὐτόν. Vain is it to urge, as does Arnold, that the dat. is commonly used; since the accus. is sometimes found, and our author is accustomed to prefer what is least hacknied. Οὐκ ἐλάσσω stands, by the figure μείωσις, for μᾶλλον.

3. In this section the speaker adduces a strong argument for using united and strenuous efforts in order to their common preservation; namely, that the power of the enemy is truly formidable, it being an overmatch for them singly, and fully able to cope with them conjointly; so that united counsels and combined efforts can alone save them from subjugation.

differences to each of us against equally-matched adversaries concerning boundaries of territory, that would have been a thing tolerable.' In this sense ἀντίπαλος occurs infra i. 142, and elsewhere; and οἱστόν ἐστι in Synes. ap. Steph. Thes. and Lucian, i. 91: and in a passage of our author infra vii. 75, we have οἰστὸν φαίνεσθαι. The next words, νῦν δὲ, &c., serve to draw the inference. Render, 'But as things now are,' 'as the case now stands,' &c.; a use also found supra i. 68, 3, (where see note,) and iii. 43, 5. iv. 126, and not unfrequent in the best writers. In this manner, too, nunc is occasionally used in Latin to introduce a clause, when the preceding one has begun with si; e. g. Cic. ad Verr. vi. 67, and de Div. 30. Of κατὰ πόλιν the sense is, 'each state singly,' as opposed to ξύμπαντας. See note on i. 3. At ἕκαστον supply καθ', from the preceding κατά. Both are exegetical of ἀθρόοι, namely, an army formed by states and cities. Μιᾷ γνώμῃ, 'with one consent.' Δίχα ὄντας, for διαχωρισθέντας.

4. In this section the speaker excites them to action from a consideration of the consequences of defeat, and the disgrace which would attach to them for being worsted by one city.

εἰ δεινόν τῳ ἀκοῦσαι] 'though it be terrible to one even to hear.' Δεινὸν here, as often in Hdot. and other good writers, has the sense grave, durum, (i. e. dicere,) indignum, non ferendum. So Herodot. vii. 10, καί τοι καὶ λόγῳ ἀκοῦσαι δεινόν. A similar elegance is observable in Theoph. Sim. p. 124, D. τὸ νικᾶν ὑπερίνδοξον· καὶ τὸ τῆς δευτέρας (read ἑτέρας) τύχης (meaning τῆς ἥσσης) βαρὺ καὶ λεγόμενον. Hence is illustrated a passage of Soph. Trach. 250, τοῦ λόγου δ' οὐ χρὴ φθονεῖν—προσεῖναι.

οὐκ ἄλλο τι φέρουσαν ἢ ἄντικρυς δουλείαν] Similar is the expression infra viii. 64, τὴν ἀντ. ἐλευθερίαν, and Plut. C. Gracch. 8, ἀντ. ἔχθραν. And closely imitated from the words of our author here, are those of Joseph. Ant. xviii. 1, 1, τὴν δὲ ἀποτίμησιν οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ ἄντικρυς δουλείαν ἐπιφέρειν λέγοντες. In all which passages ἀντικρὺς signifies downright; the metaphor being (as Arn. observes) taken from an arrow proceeding straightforward, and penetrating to its object.

ὃ καὶ λόγῳ ἐνδοιασθῆναι αἰσχρὸν] 'which thing (the suffering defeat) even to be brought into doubt in words, were disgraceful;' where καὶ λόγῳ has an implied reference to the thing happening ἔργῳ, in deed, by the actual evil befalling them. On this use of ὃ see note infra ii. 40. The next words, καὶ πόλεις τοσάσδε ὑπὸ μιᾶς κακοπαθεῖν, as Poppo observes, do not connect with ὃ, but simply with αἰσχρόν ἐστι, ('and shameful it is, that,' &c.) their purpose being, as Arn. observes, to aggravate the thing; q. d. 'It were a disgrace that so many states should suffer injury from one;' or, rather, suffer defeat from one. So infra ii. 41, 3, we have, ὑφ' οἵων κακοπαθῶ.

5. In this section are intimated the consequences which this yielding would carry with it; namely, that either they would be thought to have suffered, what they had, justly, or to have put up with it through cowardice; and, consequently, would show themselves degenerated from their forefathers, who gave liberty to Greece. In this sense ἀνέχεσθαι occurs infra v. 69, and in Ælian, V. H. i. 16. Jos. Ant. xvi. 9, 4, and Bell. Jud. iv. 3, 10; and also in Scripture, as Job xxi. 3. 1 Cor. iv. 12. 2 Cor. xi. 4 and 20. The next words set forth the foulness of the disgrace they would incur, by contrasting their conduct with that of their forefathers; q. d. 'Whereas we do not even secure it (meaning the thing implied by the term ἐλευθερία, namely, the being free, ἐλευθερῶσθαι. See other examples of this idiom in Pop. Proleg. p. 105) to ourselves, but we suffer τύραννον δὲ ἐῶμεν ἐγκαθεστάναι πόλιν, τοὺς δ' ἐν μιᾷ μονάρχους ἀξιοῦμεν καταλύειν. 6. καὶ οὐκ ἴσμεν ὅπως τάδε τριῶν τῶν μεγίστων ξυμφορῶν ἀπήλλακται, ἀξυνεσίας, ἢ μαλακίας, ἢ ἀμελείας. 7. οὐ γὰρ δὴ πεφευγότες ταῦτα, ἐπὶ τὴν πλείστους δὴ βλάψασαν καταφρόνησιν κεχωρήκατε· ἢ, ἐκ τοῦ πολλοὺς σφάλλειν, τὸ ἐναντίον ὄνομα ἀφροσύνη μετωνόμασται. CXXIII. Τὰ μὲν οὖν προ-

a tyrant state to establish itself (take part) among us.'

6. In this section the speaker dissuades them from the tame submission to a tyrant state, by pointing out its perniciousness, in its carrying with it an imputation of one or other of the three most calamitous vices: for such is the full sense contained, either expressly or by implication, in the words οὐκ ἴσμεν—ἀμελείας. Render, 'Now we are at a loss to comprehend how such conduct can be cleared from an imputation of three of the most fatal faults, folly (lit. stupidity), or cowardice, or carelessness.' Evidently imitated from the present, is a passage of Aristid. ii. 68, Cant. τριῶν τῶν χειρίστων δόξαν εἰσόμεθα, ἀπιστίας, ὠμότητος, ἀβουλίας: and ii. 219, τριῶν αἰσχίστων δόξαν λαβεῖν, — σκαιότητος. πλεονεξίας, ἀχρηστίας. Of this sort of distribution not a few instances, as Wasse observes, occur in our author: thus it is found supra i. 74 & 76, and iii. 40 & 66. It is, indeed, observable in the best writers, (see examples in Wasse,) and has place in the scriptural ones, as Prov. xxv. 3. 1 Cor. xiii. 13. Ξυμφορῶν, as the Schol. observes, stands for κακιῶν, vices or faults; so called because they are productive of the greatest calamities. Ἀξυνεσίας, i. e. folly in not perceiving the tendency of Athenian encroachment, nearly equiv. to τὸ ἀναίσθητον supra ch. 69. And such is the very sense of ἀξυν. infra vi. 34, namely, want of the power of perception.

7. Here the scope of the speaker is to show that the charge just made is true; since the evil dispositions in question are nearly allied to another under which they manifestly labour, and which implies two at least of these. Render, 'for assuredly you have not escaped falling into these, (i. e. one or other of these,) since you have proceeded to the disposition of mind that hath injured very many indeed, contempt [of your enemy]; which, from having ruined numbers, hath received the opposite appellation of madness.' That such must be the sense intended, is plain from the context, for the term καταφρόνησις can have no other import; and so it is used in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 286, 39, Sylb. σωφρονέστερον ἡγοῦνται διὰ κενῆς φοβηθέντας αὐτὴν φυλάξασθαι, μᾶλλον ἢ καταφρονήσει ἐπιτρέψαντας ἀνατραπῆναι. The phrase here, τὸ ἐναντίον ὄνομα ἀφροσύνη μετονομάζεσθαι, is founded on the usual one, ὀνομάζειν τινὰ ὄνομα: and the sense of μετωνόμασται is transnominatur, mutato nomine appellatur. So in Athen. p. 576, we have, πρότερον Μιλτὼ καλουμένην Ἀσπασίαν μετονομασθῆναι, where the word ὄνομα, expressed in this passage of our author, is left to be understood: as also in Herodot. i. 94, fin. ἀντὶ Λυδῶν μετονομασθῆναι—Τυρσηνούς, and viii. 44. App. i. 613, 11, μετονομάσαντες δὴ Φίλιππον ἀντὶ Ἀριδαίου: all which passages will serve to account for and illustrate the phrase ὄνομα ἀφροσύνη μετ. It remains, however, to consider what involves most of the difficulty here; and that is how the term ἐναντίον is to be understood. Now by the commentators in general it is explained contrary, or opposite. But in what the contrariety consists, they have not attempted to show. The word seems here to have a very peculiar sense, namely, commutation, which signification the word bears from its radical ἀντι, instead of. In short, it is the same as if our author had written ἢ—ὄνομα ἀφροσύνη, ἀντὶ καταφρονήσεως, μετων. Accordingly the term is not meant to be opposite, but distinctive. Finally, ἀφροσύνη does not merely mean folly, but that sort of frenzy which arises from a want of the right use of reason; so answering to the term ἄνοια, and the Latin amentia, as in Cic. Tusc. Disp. v. 3, 'Animi affectionem lumine mentis carentem, nominaverunt amentiam.' Tracing, then, the logical bearing of the passage, the words are meant to anticipate an objection that it is not from want of perception or carelessness (much less cowardice) that they have suffered the Athenians to go on so, but merely from contempt of their enemy. To which the answer here intimated is, that the very admission of this argues the justice of the charge, since such contempt is itself the extremest folly and a sort of mental alienation. The paronomasia here between καταφρόνησιν and ἀφροσύνη is not capable of being preserved in translation, and per-γεγενημένα τί δεῖ μακρότερον, ἢ ἐς ὅσον τοῖς νῦν ξυμφέρει, αἰτιᾶσθαι; περὶ δὲ τῶν ἔπειτα μελλόντων τοῖς παροῦσι βοηθοῦντας χρὴ ἐπιταλαιπωρεῖν· πάτριον γὰρ ἡμῖν ἐκ τῶν πόνων τὰς ἀρετὰς κτᾶσθαι· καὶ μὴ μεταβάλλειν τὸ ἔθος, εἰ ἄρα πλούτῳ τε νῦν καὶ ἐξουσίᾳ ὀλίγον προφέρετε (οὐ γὰρ δίκαιον, ἃ τῇ ἀπορίᾳ ἐκτήθη, τῇ περιουσίᾳ ἀπολέσθαι)· ἀλλὰ θαρσοῦντας ἰέναι κατὰ πολλὰ ἐς τὸν πόλεμον, τοῦ τε θεοῦ χρήσαντος καὶ αὐτοῦ ὑποσχομένου ξυλλήψεσθαι, καὶ τῆς ἄλλης Ἑλλάδος πάσης ξυναγωνιουμένης, τὰ μὲν φόβῳ τὰ δὲ ὠφελείᾳ. 2. σπονδάς τε οὐ λύσετε πρότεροι, (ἅς γε καὶ ὁ θεὸς, κελεύων πολεμεῖν, νομίζει παραβεβάσθαι,) ἠδικημέναις δὲ μᾶλλον βοηθήσετε· λύουσι γὰρ οὐχ οἱ ἀμυνόμενοι, ἀλλ' οἱ πρότεροι ἐπιόντες. CXXIV. Ὥστε πανταχόθεν καλῶς ὑπάρχον ὑμῖν πολεμεῖν, καὶ ἡμῶν τάδε κοινῇ παραινούντων, εἴπερ βεβαιότατον τὸ ταῦτα ξυμφέροντα καὶ πόλεσι καὶ ἰδιώταις εἶναι, μὴ μέλλετε Ποτιδαιάταις haps would not be worth the trouble if it could.

Ch. CXXIII. The speaker now subjoins a word of exhortation; proceeding to say, that to further blame or regret the past were useless; but the wants of the present must be provided for, and no change made from their ancestors' manners: and, as to the future, they might enter upon the war in full confidence; the oracle promising them the aid of the gods, and the rest of Greece being, from motives of fear or hope, about to fight on their side.

1. περὶ δὲ τῶν—ἐπιταλαιπωρεῖν] 'Our duty is to labour for the future, by giving aid to the present;' since (as Haack explains) from the future having its origin in the present, it behoves us to give our aid to them, that they may be a good state. Ἐπιταλαιπωρεῖν stands for ἐπιπονεῖν or ἐπικάμνειν (for so I would read in Hesych. for the corrupt ἐπικαταμύειν). The force of ἐπι here is that of profit or benefit.

πάτριον γὰρ ἡμῖν] 'mos est patrius,' 'this is a custom of our country.' Of this phrase, followed by an infinitive, expressed or understood, examples occur also infra iv. 86 & 92, and are frequent in the best writers. Τὰς ἀρετὰς, for δόξας ἀρετῶν, like δόξ. ἀρετῆς at ch. 11: and so i. 33, ἀρετὴν stands for τὴν ἀξίωσιν τῆς ἀρετῆς; or it may be regarded as standing, by hendiad., for δόξ. καὶ ἀρετάς. And so infra ii. 45, we have, ἀρετῆς πέρι ἢ ψόγου. Προφέρετε is for διαφέρετε or προέχετε.

ἃ τῇ ἀπορίᾳ ἐκτήθη] scil. χρήματα, 'wealth that was acquired by penury,' i. e. struggling with want. Τῇ περιουσίᾳ ἀπολέσθαι, 'should be lost by superfluity,' i. e. by giving way to superfluous expense, or, what is the same thing, tamely letting others draw off our superabundance. Of the aorist of a deponent verb thus used, as ἐκτήθη here, in a passive sense, several examples are adduced by Poppo, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 496. Κατὰ πολλὰ, 'on many accounts,' i. e. as we are on many accounts justified in doing.

2. ἠδικημέναις—βοηθ.] 'ye will come to the aid of their infraction.' This use of βοηθέω, as applied to things, occurs also at ii. 63, τῷ τιμωμένῳ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἄρχειν βοηθεῖν: as also in Æschines and Isocr. ap. Steph. Thes.

λύουσι γὰρ—πρότεροι ἐπιόντες] Imitated from this is a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 435, εἰ δὲ δέος εἰσέρχεται, μὴ δόξωμεν λύειν τὰς ὁμολογίας πρότεροι, γνώτωσαν ὅτι οὐκ ἄρχοντες ἀδικεῖν, ἀλλὰ τοὺς ἄρχοντας ἀμύνεσθαι: for so the passage should be read, from the MS. Gelen.

Ch. CXXIV. The speaker, in conclusion, urges, that 'if even there were less ground for confidence, and more to be feared and sacrificed, all ought to be risked for their common preservation; that the common danger calls for united efforts, seeing that permanent peace can alone be secured by immediate war.'

1. ὑπάρχον ὑμῖν] 'quum liceat vobis;' a use like that of ἐξὸν and other such like phrases. See note infra ii. 62. Ταῦτα. Reiske would read ταὐτὸ, by which the sentiment is made general, and not relating to the Peloponnesians: and so I myself formerly read: but I am now of opinion that the change is not sufficiently borne out by the authority of MSS., and indeed that it is unnecessary; since we may, with Pop., refer the τάδε, just before, to πολεμεῖν; and ταῦτα, to the words which follow, i. e. τὸ ποιεῖσθαι τιμωρίαν, and τὸ μετελθεῖν τὴν ἐλευθερίαν. Or ταῦτα may be referred to τάδε preceding, which relates to the warlike measures just recommended. The εἴπερ, just after, may, as Goeller supposes, serve to explain why they are exhorted to these things; but I am still, as heretofore, of opinion, that it expresses what Hoogev. de Part. p. 190, calls the conditio sine qua non, and signifies literally, 'if indeed, as is the case;' assuming the proposition to be true. See Herm. on Vig., and my Lex. N. T. in voc. Render, 'if it be, as it is, the most stable of all dependencies for matters like these to be alike for the benefit of states and individuals.' Μετελθεῖν, 'to vindicate,' as infra ii. 39. Οὐκ ἐνδέχεται means, non consentaneum est, 'it is not fitting or proper.' With respect to the construction here, περιμένοντας is, as Goeller observes, the accusative of subject; and what is first understood as a whole, (the Peloponnesians and their allies, the Potidæans, &c.) is then put ex parte. The sentence may be rendered, 'Since it is not fitting that those should be suffering injury while waiting [for assistance], and these (if we shall be known to have met together, and not ventured to avenge ourselves) should, ere long, experience the same fate.' For οὐ τολμῶντες many good MSS. have ἀτολμῶντες, meaning doubtless ἀτολμοῦντες, which is contained in one MS. But the common reading has been retained by all the editors; and very properly; this being strongly confirmed by a passage, evidently imitated from the present, in Jos. Ant. xix. 1, 14, ὡς οὐ τολμῶντας ἠνάγκασε τοὺς πάτας: and more agreeable is it to the early Attic custom of speech.

ἐς ἀνάγκην ἀφῖχθαι] scil. τὸ πρᾶγμα, 'that affairs are brought to extremity.' I have here, with Poppo and Goeller, edited, from the best MSS., ἐς, for ἐπ', which is retained by Bekk. The former is defended by several passages from Demosth., Eurip., and Isocr., cited in Steph. Thes. 1990, A. and so read Dio Cass., as appears from an imitation at 234, 85. Of ἐπ' I have not remarked one example. Ἐκ πολέμου stands for μετὰ τὸν πόλεμον, inito bello. Ἀφ' ἡσυχίας, 'propter otium, in otii amore motam.' In οὐχ ὁμοίως ἀκίνδυνον, 'is not equally removed from danger,' we have a refined way of saying 'it is more dangerous.' With the sentiment contained in these words, compare a similar one, ch. 71 and 120; and the following in Cic. Phil. vii. 6, 'Si pace frui volumus, bellum gerendum est; si bellum omittimus, pace nunquam fruemur.'

2. διανοεῖσθαι] Repeat ἄρχειν. Παραστησώμεθα ἐπελθόντες, 'let us go forth and down with it.' Παρασ*τ*. not unfrequently bears this sense to subdue, (lit. bring down,) as iii. 35. iv. 79. Herodot. iii. 155, and elsewhere in the best writers: and so prosternere in Latin, e. g. Cic. Philipp. hostem prostravit, fudit, occidit. With the words καὶ αὐτοὶ ἀκινδύνως τὸ λοιπὸν οἰκῶμεν, compare infra iv. 64, 5, τάδε ποιοῦντες — ἐς τὸ ἔπειτα ἐλευθέραν νεμούμεθα (Σικελίαν) καὶ ὑπὸ ἄλλων ἧσσον ἐπιβουλευομένην.

CXXVI. Ἐν τούτῳ δὲ ἐπρεσβεύοντο τῷ χρόνῳ πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἐγκλήματα ποιούμενοι, ὅπως σφίσιν ὅτι μεγίστη πρόφασις εἴη τοῦ πολεμεῖν, ἢν μή τι ἐσακούωσι. 2. καὶ πρῶτον μὲν πρέσβεις πέμψαντες οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐκέλευον τοὺς Ἀθηναίους τὸ ἄγος ἐλαύνειν τῆς θεοῦ· τὸ δὲ ἄγος ἦν τοιόνδε. 3. [a]Κύλων ἦν Ὀλυμπιονίκης, ἀνὴρ Ἀθηναῖος, τῶν πάλαι εὐγενής τε καὶ δυνατός· ἐγεγαμήκει δὲ θυγατέρα Θεαγένους Μεγαρέως ἀνδρὸς, ὃς κατ' ἐκεῖνον τὸν χρόνον ἐτυράννει Μεγάρων. 4. χρωμένῳ δὲ τῷ Κύλωνι ἐν Δελφοῖς ἀνεῖλεν ὁ θεὸς, "ἐν τῇ τοῦ Διὸς τῇ μεγίστῃ ἑορτῇ καταλαβεῖν τὴν Ἀθηναίων ἀκρόπολιν." 5. ὁ δὲ παρά τε τοῦ Θεαγένους δύναμιν λαβὼν, καὶ τοὺς φίλους ἀναπείσας, ἐπειδὴ ἐπῆλθεν Ὀλύμπια all.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 373. Γνώμην, for ἀπόφασιν, sententiam. Ψῆφον ἐπήγαγον τοῖς ξυμμάχοις, i. e. ἐπέτρεπον ψῆφον τοῖς ξυμμ., for the simple ψηφίζειν. See supra i. 87. infra vi. 14, and note. Parallel to this is the Latin phrase, sententiam dare judicibus. Τὸ πλῆθος, 'the bulk, or majority,' as v. 30, and elsewhere.

2. δεδογμένον] 'quum videretur.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 564. Ἐκπορίζεσθαι—ἃ πρόσφορα ἦν, 'to provide themselves with what was necessary.' So Herodot. vii. 20, ἐκπ. τὰ πρόσφορα τῇ στρατιῇ. So also τὰ πρόσφορα in Æschyl. Choëph. 699. The formula ὅμως δὲ corresponds to εὐθὺς μὲν, and the intermediate words are in some measure parenthetical. I have pointed accordingly. The full sense is, 'Though it was indeed impossible for them immediately to make the attack, for want of due preparation, yet the preparation was not long; [for] a year was not consumed by them in arranging what was necessary; but it was less [than that period] before they made an irruption into Athens.' Thus there is no occasion, with Poppo, to resort to critical conjecture. Of the phrase καθισταμένοις ὧν ἔδει, the literal sense is, 'putting affairs upon a footing necessary for the purpose in view.'

Ch. CXXVI. 'While these preparations for war were making, the two parties assailed each other with mutual criminations to serve as pretexts for war;' and by the Lacedæmonians embassies were sent to Athens with various remonstrances and demands, for the purpose of amusing the Athenians with the prospect of peace, and of raising up pretexts for war: and to give their cause a better colour, and work on the passions of the multitude, an attempt was made to revive the popular dread of the curse that had been supposed to hang over the Alcmeonids. The Athenians were called upon in the name of the gods to banish all that remained of that blood-stained race. (Thirlwall.)

2. τὸ ἄγος τῆς θεοῦ] i. e. as the Schol. explains, 'those who had committed the sacrilege occasioned by a pollution of the temple of Minerva,' and which reached to the posterity of those who committed the crime. See Polyæn. ii. 13. Of this term an explanation is then given by a narration of the story of Cylon, on which see Herodot. v. 71, a passage evidently here had in view by our author.

4. χρωμένῳ] 'on consulting the oracle.' See Vig. p. 324.

5. ἐπῆλθεν] Goell. and Pop. edit, from several MSS., ἐπῆλθον, referring to v. 75, Κάρνεια ἐτύγχανον, and noticing, from Pors. on Eurip., that among the Attic writers a neuter plural is joined with a verb singular only when persons are implied by the neuter noun: and though certain passages in our author may seem at variance with this rule, yet many of them, they think, are corrupt. And Poppo is of opinion that a plural verb may be used whenever a masc. or feminine subst. of the same signification may be tacitly substituted in the place of the neuter, as in the present case, Ὀλύμπιοι ἀγῶνες for Ὀλύμπια. But that rule would, as Arn. justly observes, allow of a plural verb in almost every conceivable case. And the canon of Kühner, (Gr. § 424, 2,) that a neuter plural subst. may have a plural verb, when the notion of plurality, or of a whole, made up of several parts, is prominent in the substantive—that, however well founded in itself, does not, as Arn. observes, apply here. Hence I have thought proper, with Bekker, to retain the singular form, supported as it is by the majority of the MSS., and by similar expressions infra v. 49. viii. 10, and elsewhere. The words τὰ ἐν Πελοπ. are added, because there were, as the Schol. notices, other games of the same name elsewhere at Athens, in Macedonia and elsewhere. In ὡς ἐπὶ τυραννίδι, the ὡς is used as supra i. 48, ὡς ἐπὶ ναυμαχίᾳ, and infra vi. 45, ὡς ἐπὶ τούτοις. See Matth. Gr. § 628, 3, where is adduced a passage of Soph. Aj. 44, ἢ καὶ τὸ βούλευμ' ὡς ἐπ' Ἀργείοις τόδ' ἦν; The words ἑαυτῷ τι προσήκειν may be rendered, 'ad sese nonnihil pertinere,' 'had some reference to himself.' And so in Dio Cass. p. 124, (the only example that I have met with at all approaching to this use,) we have, εὑρήσει πάσας αὐτὰς (scil. ἡμέρας) μουσικῶς πως τῇ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ διακοσμήσει προσηκούσας, 'tally or correspond to the celestial order, by a sort of musical harmony,' i. e. as in musical harmony the various parts must, in counterpoint, tally with each other. Exactly parallel to this is the use of the Latin pertinere for convenire, cadere in; e. g. Phædr. Fab. i. 14, 17, 'Hoc pertinere ad illos dixerim,' 'the moral of the fable applies to those.' Of Ὀλύμπια νενικηκότι the sense is, 'as having come off victor in the Olympic games.' The accus. here is well accounted for by Matth. Gr. Gr. 409, 3.

6. οὔ τε ἐκεῖνος ἔτι κατενόησε] 'he had not as yet perceived' or understood. Ἐδήλου, 'made it clear;' the oracle being, as usual,—to save the credit of the god,—worded with studied ambiguity. Διάσια: mentioned by Aristoph. Nub. 407. See Clinton's Fast. 354, seq. Μειλιχίου: a frequent epithet of Jupiter. See Pop. on Xen. An. vii. 8, 4.

ἐν ᾗ πανδημεὶ θύουσι, πολλοὶ οὐχ ἱερεῖα, ἀλλὰ θύματα ἐπιχώρια] Of this perplexed passage, the difficulty may effectually be removed by altering the common punctuation, placing the comma not after πολλοί, but after θύουσι, (as is done by Pop. and Goell.) since the ordinary conjunction of the words πανδημεὶ and πολλοὶ would involve an absurdity. Thus by θύουσι is meant, 'they (i. e. the persons in question, οἱ πολῖται, to be supplied from τῆς πόλεως) sacrifice.' Render, 'On which [festival] the citizens in full concourse offer sacrifices; many of them not living victims, but the old country sacrifices.' By ἱερεῖα are evidently meant the bloody sacrifices. Consequently, from the opposition, θύματα must denote the unbloody, consisting of the fruits of the earth, or some preparations from them. I therefore accede to the explanation offered by the Schol., who takes the θύματα to denote certain cakes, or paste figures, made in the shapes of animals: of which curious but little noticed subject illustrations are afforded by passages of Pausanias, x. 8, 5, and vii. 24, 2, where mention is made of these πέμματα ἐπιχώρια, and especially viii. 2, 1, Δία τε ὠνόμασεν Ὕπατον πρῶτος, καὶ ὅποσα ἔχει ψυχὴν, τούτων μὲν ἠξίωσεν οὐδὲν θῦσαι, πέμματα δὲ ἐπιχώρια ἐπὶ τοῦ βωμοῦ καθήγισεν, ἃ πελάνους καλοῦσιν, ἔτι καὶ ἐς ἡμᾶς, Ἀθηναῖοι. They are also mentioned in other passages, which throw some light on the origin and purpose of this kind of sacrifice. So Herodot. ii. 47, speaking of the sacrifice of swine to Luna and Bacchus, (i. e. the Isis and Osiris of the Egyptians,) says, οἱ δὲ πένητες αὐτῶν ὑπ' ἀσθενείης βίου, σταιτίνας πλάσαντες ὗς, καὶ ὀπτήσαντες ταύτας (after forming certain figures of dough into the shape of swine, and baking them) θύουσι: also Plut. Lucull. 498, οἱ Κυζίκηνοι ἠπόρουν βοὸς, πρὸς τὴν θυσίαν, καὶ σταιτίνην πλάσαντες τῷ βωμῷ παρέστησαν: Appian, i. 752, ἐπελθούσης δὲ τῆς ἑορτῆς, ἐν ᾗ θύουσι βοῦν μέλαιναν, ἐπεχείρησε τῷ ἔργῳ. 7. οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι αἰσθόμενοι, ἐβοήθησάν τε πανδημεὶ ἐκ τῶν ἀγρῶν ἐπ' αὐτούς, καὶ προσκαθεζόμενοι ἐπολιόρκουν. 8. χρόνου δὲ ἐπιγιγνομένου, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, τρυχόμενοι τῇ προσεδρείᾳ, ἀπῆλθον οἱ πολλοὶ, ἐπιτρέψαντες τοῖς ἐννέα Ἄρχουσι τὴν φυλακὴν, καὶ τὸ πᾶν αὐτοκράτορσι διαθεῖναι, ᾗ ἂν ἄριστα διαγιγνώσκωσι· τότε δὲ τὰ πολλὰ τῶν πολιτικῶν οἱ ἐννέα Ἄρχοντες ἔπρασσον. 9. οἱ δὲ μετὰ τοῦ Κύλωνος πολιορκούμενοι φλαύρως εἶχον σίτου τε καὶ ὕδατος ἀπορίᾳ. 10. ὁ μὲν οὖν Κύλων καὶ ὁ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ ἐκδιδράσκουσιν· οἱ δ' ἄλλοι, ὡς ἐπιέζοντο,—καί τινες καὶ ἀπέθνησκον ὑπὸ τοῦ λιμοῦ,—καθίζουσιν ἐπὶ τὸν βωμὸν ἱκέται τὸν ἐν τῇ ἀκροπόλει. 11. ἀναστήσαντες δὲ αὐτοὺς οἱ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπιτετραμμένοι τὴν φυλακὴν, ὡς ἑώρων ἀποθνήσκοντας ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ,

Finally, by ἐπιχώρια is meant, 'such as were customarily used in the country,' for ἐγχώρια: and so the expressions ἐπιχώριος λόγος, ἐπιχώριος ἐσθὴς or στολὴ, ἐπιχ. γλῶσση, &c. These θύματα were offered according to the ancient country custom,—probably introduced into Attica from Egypt by the Cadmean colony,—whereby offerings of the fruits of the earth were allowed to be presented as well as victims. That this was the earliest mode of sacrificing, we have the testimony of Porphyry de Abstin. ii. 6, and Pausan. i. 26. And when bloody sacrifices were afterwards introduced, the unbloody, consisting of fruits of the earth, were not forbidden; the principle being, that every man should, at the common festival, offer according to his means, but always the best kind of food his means enabled him to use as his ordinary fare. Thus while the rich would offer animals, whether oxen or swine, the poorer classes,—to whom even pork was not attainable,—and whose festal sacrifices, as their festal meals, could only consist of that which formed their ordinary living, were accustomed to offer some farinaceous preparation, the form of which was, as the more convenient, that of cakes, and the name given was πέλανοι, explained by Suidas and Hesych. to mean πέμματα, cakes of a round form, made of fine flour, and suited for sacrifice. See Aristoph. Plut. 66. And so Plato de Legg. vi. p. 782, says, θύματα οὖν ἦν τοῖς θεοῖς ζῶα, πέλανοι δὲ καὶ μέλιτι καρποὶ δεδευμένοι, καὶ τοιαῦτα ἄλλα ἁγνὰ θύματα.

3. ἐπιγιγνομένου] For this some MSS. have ἐγγ.: but that rather denotes the intervention than the protraction of time, which appears to be the sense here intended; according to which, Pop. renders 'cum tempus protraheretur.' And so Lucian, t. i. 356, 6, ἐπεὶ δὲ τὸ πρᾶγμα ἐς μήκιστον ἐπεγένετο. Perhaps, however, the term may be best rendered, 'in process of time;' as in Herodot. i. 28, χρόνου δὲ ἐπιγιγνομένου. Of τρυχόμενοι the sense is, worn down, attriti, as persons are by severe labour, or assiduous watchings; which is implied in προσεδρείᾳ. Similar to this is the phrase ἄχθεσθαι προσιδρείᾳ, which is of frequent occurrence in Dio Cass., Procop., and Arrian. Αὐτοκράτορσι. See Wachsmuth, Antiq. i. 242, seq.

10. καθίζουσιν ἐπὶ τὸν βωμὸν] See note infra i. 136. The altar here spoken of was, as we find from Plutarch, that of Minerva.

11. ἀναστήσ. αὐτοὺς] 'having raised them,' i. e. induced them to rise. So the term is used infra ch. 128, and Soph. Œd. Col. 276. Joseph. 355. Arrian, E. A. v. 4, 6. Hdot. v. 71. Arnold remarks, that a person is said ἀναστῆναι ἱκέτην, by offering his hand to the suppliant, and raising him from the ground,—an action which implied that the safety he sought was pledged to him. This may be true as applied to cases in a general way, where no particular agreement can be said to exist; not to such as the present, in which certain conditions have been previously agreed on; as here is implied in ἐφ' ᾧ (on condition that) μηδὲν κακὸν ποιήσουσιν. So Hdot. v. 71, τούτους ἀνιστ. οἱ Πρυτανεῖς τῶν Ναυκράρων — πλὴν θανάτου: meaning that they were held bound to trial and capital punishment.

ἀποθνήσκοντας ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ] And thus needing to be removed from the temple, to avoid its being polluted, and occasioning pollution to the persons who removed them. Comp. ch. 134. In ἀπαγαγόντες we have a usual term to denote leading to execution, as iii. 68. By τῶν σεμνῶν θεῶν understand the Furies, so called κατ' ἀντίφρασιν, or by euphemism, as in Aristoph. Thesm. 224, and often in the Attic writers, chiefly the poetic; but more frequently called Εὐμένιδες. The words ἐν τῇ παρόδῳ connect, not—as they are generally supposed to do—with διεχρήσαντο, but with καθεζομένους. For διεχρήσαντο, ἀπεχρ. is found in two MSS., perhaps for ἀνεχ., which was probably read by Suid., Hesych., Pollux, Zonar., and certainly by Dio Cass., who frequently uses the term: yet, from the word being used by our author infra iii. 36. vi. 61, and by Herodot. i. 24, 110. 167. iii. 167, and other early writers, there is no reason to doubt its genuineness here.

12. ἐναγεῖς καὶ ἀλιτήριοι τῆς θεοῦ] A construction also found in Aristoph. Eq. 445, ἀλιτηρίων — τῆς θεοῦ. Pausan. vii. 25, ἐναγεῖς τῆς θεοῦ, and elsewhere. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 344, 1.

13. ἤλασαν — τοὺς ἐναγεῖς τούτους] 'those persons who were called accursed.' Similarly 1 Cor. v. 13, ἐξαρεῖτε τὸν πονηρὸν ἐξ ὑμῶν.

CH. CXXVII. [a] A. C. 432. Ol. 87, 1.

1. δῆθεν] This is to be joined with τιμωροῦντες, and it bears the sense forsooth, implying pretence. Πρῶτον, ante omnia, 'especially.' Προσεχόμενον αὐτῷ, for ἐνεχόμενον or ἔνοχον ὄντα, 'being obnoxious to it,' i. e. the λόγος. So in Latin, teneri obnoxium esse piaculo: and in this sense the word is used in Pollux, viii. 134, αἵματι προσεχόμενος. [illegible] arises from the physical sense 'to be held by any thing,' as any one bound to a post: whence arises, by implication, the sense adhærere, found in Eurip. Bacch. 755, ὅποσα δ' ἐπ' ὤμοις ἔθεσαν, οὐ δεσμῶν ὕπο Προσείχετο: and Aristoph. Vesp. 105, ὥσπερ λέπας προσεχόμενον τῷ κίονι. The above passage of Pollux is, I believe, the only one, except the present, that supplies an example; for as to another of the same writer, i. 32, ἄγει προσεχόμενοι (so I would read, from two MSS.) μιάσματι ἐνεχόμενοι, there Pollux has evidently this passage of our author in view.

ῥᾷον σφίσι, &c.] 'their business with the Athenians would be more easily brought to a prosperous termination.' So iii. 4, οὐ γὰρ ἐπίστενον τοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων προχωρήσειν: i. 109, and elsewhere.

2. τοῦτο] scil. ἐκβληθῆναι. Διαβολὴν οἴσειν αὐτῷ πρὸς τὴν πόλιν, 'should bring him into obloquy with the Athenians.' Ξυμφορὰ is an expression involving a combined notion of mishap and fault. So supra i. 122, 6, οὐκ ἴσμεν ὅπως τάδε τριῶν—ξυμφορῶν ἀπήλλακται. In this view the Schol. explains by κακιῶν (for which read κακίαν), observing, καὶ αἱ τῆς φύσεως ἐλαττώσεις καὶ διαπτώσεις κακίαι πάντως εἰσί. Thus the term κακία is used sometimes to denote misfortune, and sometimes faultiness in general, though occasioned by natural defect, like vitium in Latin. So Cicero de Senect. 16, 'senectus est naturâ loquacior; ne ab omnibus vitiis videar vindicari.' Hence the sense here is 'faultiness arising from misfortune.'

For τὸ μέρος some would read τι μέρος, quodammodo; but that sense would rather ἑαυτὸν, καὶ ἄγων τὴν πολιτείαν, ἠναντιοῦτο πάντα τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, καὶ οὐκ εἴα ὑπείκειν ἀλλ' ἐς τὸν πόλεμον ὥρμα τοὺς Ἀθηναίους.

require μέρος τι, as infra ii. 64: and indeed no change is necessary, since the sense contained in τὸ μέρος is nearly the same; for the expression is not to be interpreted (as it is by Poppo) pro ratâ parte, (which involves something not a little forced and frigid,) but partly; the article here being, as Arn. observes, 'used with a tacit reference to the relative term τὸ ὅλον or τὸ πᾶν, and denoting the part, as opposed to the whole.'

3. ἄγων τὴν πολιτείαν] Comp. ii. 65, 8. Ὥρμα, 'urged them on.' This transitive use, which is somewhat rare, is found also infra ii. 20.

Ch. CXXVIII. The Athenians now retort the charge, by requiring the Spartans to expiate the pollution they had occasioned by profaning the sanctuary of Tænarus (which they had done by dragging from it some Helots who had taken refuge there) and that of Athena, by putting to death Pausanias: which leads Thucyd. to give an account of the curse of Tænarus and that of Athena; from which latter circumstance he takes occasion to narrate the treason and death of Pausanias (ch. 128—138).

1. ἀπὸ Ταινάρου] 'proceeding from Tænarus,' i. e. occasioned by the affair which took place there; the preposition simply denoting origin, as often in Xenophon and other of the best writers. Yet a little after, ἀπὸ Ταινάρου can only mean 'of,' i. e. at, 'Tænarus;' a use having a near affinity to that by which ἀπὸ means of, or 'pertaining to.'

3. τῆς Χαλκιοίκου] Meaning Athena or Minerva. So C. Nepos, Pausan. 5, 'in ædem Minervæ, quæ Chalcioecus vocatur,' &c.

4. [a] A. C. 478. Ol. 75, 3.

τριήρη Ἑρμιονίδα] 'a trireme of the city of Hermione.' See my note in Transl. At πράγματα πράσσειν the infin. belongs to the foregoing finite verb ἀφικνεῖται, denoting purpose, as at viii. 29, and other passages adduced by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 535, 6. The sense of the phrase is, 'to transact those affairs which he had been transacting with the king.' Ἄπερ would have been more regular; 'which he had before taken in hand.' The term πράσσειν seems here, as often elsewhere, to imply, like our verb 'to practise,' with an adjunct idea of treasonable correspondence.

For ἐπεχείρησεν, Poppo, from several MSS., edits ἐνεχ., as of less frequent occurrence; which it certainly is in Thucyd., but not in the Greek writers in general, the latter using ἐγχ. frequently, ἐπιχ. rarely. The earlier Attic writers almost confine themselves to ἐπιχ., which accordingly is more likely to have been written by our author. Moreover, ἐγχειρεῖν is never, I believe, used in a bad sense; whereas ἐπιχειρεῖν occasionally is. So Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, 41, δῆλον ὅτι δύο ἐστὸν ψυχὰ, καὶ ὅταν μὲν ἡ ἀγαθὴ κρατῇ, τὰ καλὰ πράττεται· ὅταν δὲ ἡ πονηρὰ, τὰ αἰσχρὰ ἐπιχειρεῖται, where, we see, the difference between πράσσειν and ἐπιχειρεῖν is exactly the same as what is found between πράσσειν and ἐργάζεσθαι. So infra iii. 39, τοιαῦτα εἰργάσαντο, and vi 29, 1, εἴ τι τούτων εἰργασμένος ἦν, and iii. 66, εἴργασθε δεινά. Since, then, the bad sense seems to be that here intended, ἐπιχ. is greatly preferable to ἐγχ.

Τοσαῦτα μὲν ἡ γραφὴ ἐδήλου· Ξέρξης δὲ ἥσθη τε τῇ ἐπιστολῇ καὶ ἀποστέλλει Ἀρτάβαζον τὸν Φαρνάκου ἐπὶ θάλασσαν, καὶ κελεύει αὐτὸν τήν τε Δασκυλῖτιν σατραπείαν παραλαβεῖν, Μεγαβάτην ἀπαλλάξαντα, ὃς πρότερον ἦρχε, καὶ παρὰ Παυσανίαν ἐς Βυζάντιον ἐπιστολὴν ἀντεπετίθει αὐτῷ ὡς τάχιστα

5. εὐεργεσίαν ἐς βασιλέα κατέθετο] beneficium apud regem collocavit. Κατατίθεσθαι, in the sense collocare, conferre, is used with a subst. in the accus. denoting favour, as χάριν, εὐεργεσίαν, &c. (see note supra ch. 33, 1, and on ch. 129.) with an implied idea of any one being bound by obligation to return the favour conferred.

6. προτέρᾳ παρουσίᾳ] 'on his first approach thither;' not præsentiâ, as the translators take the term. Of the word in this sense an example occurs in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 405, and others may be seen in Steph. Thes.

προσήκοντες καὶ ξυγγενεῖς] 'relations and kinsfolks.' The former term signifies properly relations by affinity; the latter, by consanguinity. But the latter term may here denote some who were not absolutely relations in either sense; for from Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 27, we learn, that to many great men at the court the title was given by the king as an appellation of honour. In like manner it has been a custom of the British monarchs to bestow the title of cousin on high noblemen, especially those of the privy council.

οἳ ἑάλωσαν ἐν αὐτῷ] Bekk. thinks that οἳ is to be cancelled. But ἑάλωσαν ἐν α. need only be taken, as also τούτους, of the προσήκοντες καὶ ξυγγενεῖς, by which all difficulty will be removed.

ἀπέδρασαν αὐτὸν] 'they had made their escape from him.' Of this idiom with the accus. (neglected by the commentators,) the following are examples: Herodot. ii. 182. Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 13. Procop. p. 11, 24. Jos. Ant. xiv. 6, 4, and often, Dionys. Hal. 70, 5. Philostr. Vit. A. iii. 331. Nymphod. ap. Athen. p. 265, D. Appian, i. 838. ii. 80. Ælian, V. H. 48.

8. ἀνευρέθη] compertum est, 'was found out.' So Plato ap. Steph. Thes. πολλὰ παραδείγματα ἀνευρήσεις. Dio Cass. 234, 7. 751, 12. Xen. Cyr. i. 6, 19. Anab. vii. 4, 10. Mem. ii. 9, 3.

9. καὶ γνώμην ποιοῦμαι] 'it is my intention, I propose;' γνώμ. ποιεῖσθαι being for γν. ἔχειν, which occurs in Thucydides, Herodotus, and the later historians who imitate them. On the change of person, see note supra i. 1.

10. σε ἀρέσκει] This construction is old Attic. So Eur. Or. 204, οὐ γάρ μ' ἀρέσκει, and Hippol. 106 and 184. Aristoph. Plut. 353. Ἐπὶ θάλασσαν, 'to the coast,' i. e. of Asia; meaning to some place previously appointed.

Ch. CXXIX. 1. ἀπαλλάξαντα] 'having dismissed.' Ἐπιστ. ἀντεπετίθει, 'charged him with a letter in answer.' Ἀντ. is a word of rare occurrence, of which I know no other example but Joseph. Ant. xvii. 5, 1. Τὴν σφραγῖδα. Meaning, not the signet itself, but its impression, what is called σφράγισμα in Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 39, and elsewhere. So in Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 39, we have, καὶ ὁ Πέρσης ὁ φέρων τὰ γράμματα, δείξας τὴν βασιλέως σφραγῖδα, ἀνέγνω τὰ γεγραμμένα.

3. ὧδε λέγει βασιλεὺς Ξέρξης] This mode of address—occurring also in Hdot. iii. 40.—is of the most remote antiquity, and such as occurs not unfrequently in the Scriptures of the Old Testament. Κεῖταί σοι εὐεργεσία: equiv. to εὐεργέτης ἀναγραφθήσῃ καὶ κληθήσῃ ἐν τῷ ἡμ. οἴκῳ. Such persons were called εὐεργέται, (in Persian, Orosangæ,) and their names were recorded in the book of Royal Annals. See Herodot. viii. 85. Esth. vi. 1.

4. μήτε νὺξ μήθ' ἡμέρα] i. e. 'no distinction of night from day:' an hyperbolical expression, like that of Herodot. v. 23, ποιήσουσι τοῦτο—καὶ ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτός. See my note ii. 37.

κεκωλύσθω] scil. τι ὧν ἐμοὶ ὑπισχνῇ. The dat. following means by.

Ch. CXXX. 1. ὧν ἐν μεγάλῳ ἀξιώματι ὑ. τ. Ἑ.] So infra vi. 15, ὧν ἐν ἀξιώμ. ὑπὸ τῶν ἀστῶν. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 496, 3, and Goell.

Πλαταιᾶσιν] So, with Poppo, I edit, from the best MSS.; instead of the vulg. Πλαταιάσιν, which, though retained by Bekker, cannot well be defended.

καθεστηκότι] So Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo edit, for vulg. καθεστῶτι, which, however, is more frequent, and is supported by various passages imitated from the present. Yet καθεστηκότι is confirmed by another passage supra i. 98, and Pausan. ii. 9. Σκευὰς Μηδικὰς, 'Median clothes,' or dress; with especial reference, however, as Poppo thinks, to the Median στολὴ frequently mentioned by Xenophon, and properly called κάνδυς. Αὐτὸν ἐδορυφόρουν, 'were his δορυφόροι,' or body-guards. The accus. does not make the passive the object of the action, but the object to which the action has only a reference generally. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 412.

τράπεζαν — παρετίθετο] Παρατίθεσθαι signifies (by the force of the middle verb) 'to have a table set for one,' as Xen. Cyr. 66. Hier. i. 19. Joseph. 1314, 29, τράπεζαν ἄθεσμον παρετίθετο. Τράπεζαν refers not so much to the provisions, as to the apparatus mensæ; a use which occurs in Xen. Hier. xviii. 7.

κατέχειν τὴν διάνοιαν οὐκ ἠδύνατο] 'could not conceal his purposes.' This clause has been almost transcribed by Procop. 103, 13. 105, 18. 126, 26. 174, 19.

τῇ γνώμῃ μειζόνως ἐσέπειτα ἔμελλε πράξειν. 2. δυσπρόσοδόν τε αὐτὸν παρεῖχε, καὶ τῇ ὀργῇ οὕτω χαλεπῇ ἐχρῆτο ἐς πάντας ὁμοίως, ὥστε μηδένα δύνασθαι προσιέναι· διόπερ καὶ πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους οὐχ ἥκιστα ἡ ξυμμαχία μετέστη. CXXXI. Οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι αἰσθόμενοι, τό τε πρῶτον δι' αὐτὰ ταῦτα ‡ ἀνεκαλέσαντο αὐτὸν, καὶ ἐπειδὴ τῇ Ἑρμιονίδι νηὶ τὸ δεύτερον ἐκπλεύσας, οὐ κελευσάντων αὐτῶν, τοιαῦτα ἐφαίνετο ποιῶν, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ Βυζαντίου βίᾳ ὑπ' Ἀθη-ἔργοις βραχέσι] 'in trifling matters,' as dress and mode of living. In this sense βραχ. occurs also supra ch. 14 and 140. Μειζόνως. On such adverbs formed from comparatives, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 262, and Buttm. § 115, 5.

2. δυσπρόσοδόν τε αὐτὸν παρεῖχε] 'showed himself (præbebat) difficult of access.' The word δυσπ. occurs in Eurip. Iph. A. 343, and is put among the epithets of a tyrant by Pollux, i. 42. Similar is the use of the terms δυσπρ. and εὐπρ., δυσπρόσιτος and εὐπρ., δυσπροσήγορος, δυσπροσοιστὸς, δυσόμιλος, ἀπρόσοδος. This whole passage is almost transcribed by Dio Cass. p. 11, 13, and 860, 30; also Joseph. Ant. xviii. 8, 1, (of Herod.) ἀνὴρ ὠμὸς εἰς πάντας ὁμοίως. Hence may be emended another at Ant. xvii. 6, 1, ἐξηγρίωσεν ἀκράτῳ τῇ ὀργῇ καὶ πικρίᾳ εἰς πάντα χρώμενος, where read πάντας. Zonar. Hist., too, t. ii. 15, 33, closely imitates this passage, and Appian, i. 530, 80, σκαιὸς ἐς πάντας ἐγίγνετο.

τῇ ὀργῇ οὕτω χαλεπῇ] 'such a choleric temper.' See Ruhnk. on Xen. Mem. ii. 6, 5. Προσιέναι. Sub. αὐτῷ, 'to wait upon him,' 'adire eum;' namely, for the dispatch of any business. So infra i. 90, προσ. τὰς Ἀρχὰς, and Demosth. πρ. τῇ βουλῇ, and πρ. τῷ δήμῳ: also Jos. Ant. xvi. 2, 2, πολλοὺς τῶν προσιόντων αὐτῷ δεξιούμενοι.

Ch. CXXXI. 1. ἀνεκαλέσαντο αὐτὸν] So Pop. edits, from 3 MSS. and T. Magist., instead of vulg. ἀνεκάλεσαν, alleging that such is the more uncommon expression. This, however, is far from being the case. On the contrary, while ἀνακαλέσασθαι, in the sense to recall, is not unfrequent in the best writers, the term ἀνακαλεῖν in that sense is so rare, that I know of only one example, namely, Xen. Hist. v. 4, 24, οἱ δὲ ἔφοροι ἀνεκάλεσάν τε τὸν Σφοδρίαν. But there, I doubt not, should be read ἀνεκαλέσαντο τὸν Σ. But if the active form in this sense be so rare as to be no where else found, ἀνεκάλεσαν must either be a semel dictum, and ἀνεκαλέσαντο a correction, (which Bekk. and Goell. must suppose, by retaining the common reading,) or else ἀνεκαλέσαντο must be the true reading. And as it is found in 3 good MSS. and in 2 others of the best—Cod. Clarend. and Palat.—had originally a place, I have received it, and more especially because an expression which is only found in one passage, and there involves a violation of the proprietas linguæ, ought not to be received into the text of any eminent author, unless at least all the MSS. unite in it. And that the proprietas linguæ is here violated in ἀνεκάλεσαν, is certain; for the active can only mean 'to call aloud,' hail any one, or call upon him for aid, to invoke: while the sense to recall any one who has been sent out, requires the middle voice; the full sense being, 'to call back to one any person whom we have sent out.' The common reading, I suspect, crept in from the use of the active form in the later Greek; which we may infer from the modern Greek ξανακαλέω, revoco, corrupted from ἀνακαλέω.

τοιαῦτα] 'such things' as have been before mentioned. In ἐκ τοῦ Β. ἐκπολιορκηθεὶς we have not, what some suppose, a strongly figurative expression (like that supra i. 130) to denote forcible expulsion, but rather a blending of two modes of speaking, denoting 'to reduce persons to yield themselves,' and thereby force them out of a place, obsidione captum expugnatumque ejicio; as Stephens explains by τῷ πολιορκεῖν, ἐκβάλλειν ἐκ πόλεως. So Plut. Cim. 6, οἱ ξύμμαχοι — ἐξεπολιόρκησαν αὐτόν· ὁ δὲ ἐκπεσὼν τοῦ Βυζαντίου. Refusing to leave Byzantium, and resisting attempts to force him out, he, it seems, stood a sort of siege in his palace at Byzantium, like that which Charles XII. of Sweden sustained in his house at Bender, from the Turks, who in the end, in like manner, ἐξεπολιόρκησαν αὐτὸν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως.

ναίων ἐκπολιορκηθεὶς, ἐς μὲν τὴν Σπάρτην οὐκ ἐπανεχώρει, ἐς δὲ Κολωνὰς τὰς Τρῳάδας ἱδρυθεὶς, πράσσων τε ἐσηγγέλλετο αὐτοῖς πρὸς τοὺς βαρβάρους, καὶ οὐκ ἐπ᾽ ἀγαθῷ τὴν μονὴν ποιούμενος· οὕτω δὴ οὐκέτι ἐπέσχον, ἀλλὰ πέμψαντες κήρυκα οἱ ἔφοροι καὶ σκυτάλην, εἶπον τοῦ κήρυκος μὴ λείπεσθαι, εἰ δὲ μή, πόλεμον αὐτῷ Σπαρτιάτας προαγορεύειν. 2. ὁ δὲ, βουλόμενος ὡς ἥκιστα ὕποπτος εἶναι, καὶ πιστεύων χρήμασι διαλύσειν τὴν διαβολὴν, ἀνεχώρει τὸ δεύτερον ἐς Σπάρτην. 3. καὶ ἐς μὲν τὴν εἱρκτὴν ἐσπίπτει τὸ πρῶτον ὑπὸ τῶν ἐφόρων, (ἔξεστι δὲ τοῖς ἐφόροις τὸν βασιλέα δρᾶσαι τοῦτο) ἔπειτα, διαπραξάμενος, ὕστερον ἐξῆλθε, καὶ καθίστησιν ἑαυτὸν ἐς κρίσιν τοῖς βουλομένοις περὶ αὐτὸν ἐλέγχειν. CXXXII. Καὶ φανερὸν μὲν εἶχον οὐδὲν οἱ Σπαρτιᾶται σημεῖον, οὔτε οἱ ἐχθροὶ οὔτε ἡ πᾶσα πόλις, ὅτῳ ἂν πιστεύσαντες βεβαίως, ἐτιμωροῦντο ἄνδρα γένους τε τοῦ βασιλείου ὄντα καὶ ἐν τῷ παρόντι τιμὴν ἔχοντα, (Πλείσταρχον γὰρ τὸν Λεωνίδου, ὄντα βασιλέα καὶ νέον ἔτι, ἀνεψιὸς ὢν ἐπετρόπευεν·) 2. ὑποψίας δὲ πολλὰς παρεῖχε, τῇ τε παρανομίᾳ καὶ ζηλώσει τῶν βαρβάρων, μὴ ἴσος βούλεσθαι εἶναι τοῖς παροῦσι, τά τε ἄλλα αὐτοῦ ἀνεσκόπουν, εἴ τι που ἐξεδεδιήτητο τῶν καθεστώτων ἱδρυθεὶς] 'having fixed himself,' 'taken up his abode.' On the construction in πράσσων ἐσηγγέλλετο, 'was accused (as) practising,' see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 555, 2. Οὐκ ἐπ᾽ ἀγαθῷ, i. e. by meiosis, 'for an evil purpose.' So Aristoph. Ran. 1488, πάλιν ἄπεισιν οἴκαδ᾽ αὖθις Ἐπ᾽ ἀγαθῷ μὲν τοῖς πολίταις, &c.

πόλεμον αὐτῷ Σπαρτιάτας προαγορεύειν] This clause depends upon εἶπον, which is to be repeated, thus: 'If not, they said that the Spartans [hereby] declare war against him,' denounce him as a public enemy; namely, for having gone abroad without leave. This phrase is of frequent occurrence in the Latin historians.

3. ἐς τὴν εἱρκτὴν ἐσπίπτει] 'is thrown into prison.' So Dio Cass. 250, 99, and 394, 44, ἐς τὸ οἴκημα ἐσέπεσε. Διαπραξάμενος. Render, 'by managing the affair with the Ephori;' (compare iv. 28. v. 89.) implying underhand, if not corrupt, practice. Ἐξῆλθε, as we say 'got out,' obtained his liberty. Καθίστησιν ἑαυτὸν ἐς κρίσιν, 'puts himself on trial.' Similarly Philostr. Vit. Ap. viii. 7, ἐπειδὴ γὰρ κατέστησεν ἡμᾶς ὁ κατήγορος ἐς τούτονι τὸν ἀγῶνα. Περὶ αὐτὸν ἐλέγχειν, 'to institute a judicial investigation concerning him:' a remarkable use of ἐλέγχω, but on which account the reading αὐτὸν has been with reason preferred by Pop., Bekk., and Goell. to vulg. αὐτῶν, according to which the meaning would be, 'the things he had done;' whereby a certain harshness is involved, and αὐτὸν has to be supplied here from the preceding words.

CH. CXXXII. 1. τιμὴν] This is to be taken κατ᾽ ἐξοχὴν, for imperium, regal dignity, as in Æschyl. Ag. 42. Ἐπετρόπευεν, for ἐπίτροπος ἦν, 'was guardian to:' a somewhat rare construction, but found in Plato Protag. p. 106. These ἐπίτροποι, Plutarch says, were called πρόδικοι, procuratores, 'regent guardians.'

2. τῇ παρανομίᾳ] i. e. 'by his transgression of the institutions, and non-observance of the customs of his country,' as to dress and manner of living, more distinctly adverted to in the words a little after, εἴ τι που ἐξεδεδιήτητο τῶν καθεστώτων νομίμων. Of the next words, ζηλώσει τῶν βαρβάρων, the sense is, 'by his imitation of barbarian customs.'

μὴ ἴσος βούλεσθαι] 'was not disposed to acquiesce in, be content with his present situation,' (meaning that of regent guardian,) but (as is implied in the term ἴσος) affecting to be something greater than it admitted, namely, to be a king in his own right. This use of ἴσος is rare, but nearly paralleled by that infra vi. 16, 4, μὴ ἴσον εἶναι, and Pausan. ii. 9, οὐκ ἀρεσκόμενος τοῖς καθεστηκόσιν. Ἀνεσκόπουν, lit. 'they looked narrowly into,' i. e. attentively considered. In ἐξεδεδιήτητο the ἐξ stands, as often, for ἔξω, νομίμων, καὶ ὅτι ἐπὶ τὸν τρίποδά ποτε τὸν ἐν Δελφοῖς, ὃν ἀνέθεσαν οἱ Ἕλληνες ἀπὸ τῶν Μήδων ἀκροθίνιον, ἠξίωσεν ἐπιγράψασθαι αὐτὸς ἰδίᾳ τὸ ἐλεγεῖον τόδε,

Ἑλλήνων ἀρχηγὸς, ἐπεὶ στρατὸν ὤλεσε Μήδων, Παυσανίας, Φοίβῳ μνῆμ᾽ ἀνέθηκε τόδε.

3. τὸ μὲν οὖν ἐλεγεῖον οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐξεκόλαψαν εὐθὺς τότε ἀπὸ τοῦ τρίποδος τοῦτο, καὶ ἐπέγραψαν ὀνομαστὶ τὰς πόλεις ὅσαι ξυγκαθελοῦσαι τὸν βάρβαρον ἔστησαν τὸ ἀνάθημα· τοῦ μέντοι Παυσανίου ἀδίκημα καὶ τοῦτ᾽ ἐδόκει εἶναι, καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἐν τούτῳ καθειστήκει, πολλῷ μᾶλλον παρόμοιον πραχθῆναι ἐφαίνετο τῇ παρούσῃ διανοίᾳ. 4. ἐπυνθάνοντο δὲ καὶ ἐς τοὺς Εἵλωτας πράσσειν τι αὐτὸν, καὶ ἦν δὲ οὕτως· ἐλευθέρωσίν τε γὰρ ὑπισχνεῖτο αὐτοῖς καὶ πολιτείαν, ἢν ξυνεπαναστῶσι καὶ τὸ πᾶν ξυγκατεργάσωνται. 5. ἀλλ᾽ οὐδ᾽ ὡς, οὐδὲ τῶν Εἱλώτων μηνυταῖς τισι πιστεύσαντες, ἠξίωσαν νεώτερόν τι ποιεῖν ἐς αὐτόν· χρώμενοι τῷ τρόπῳ, ᾧπερ εἰώθασιν ἐς σφᾶς αὐτοὺς, μὴ ταχεῖς εἶναι περὶ ἀνδρὸς Σπαρτιάτου ἄνευ ἀναμφισβητήτων τεκμηρίων βουλεῦσαί τι ἀνήκεστον· πρίν γε δὴ αὐτοῖς, ὡς λέγεται, ὁ μέλλων τὰς τελευταίας βασιλεῖ ἐπιστολὰς πρὸς Ἀρτάβαζον κομιεῖν, ἀνὴρ Ἀργίλιος, παιδικὰ ποτὲ ὢν αὐτοῦ καὶ πιστότατος ἐκείνῳ, μηνυτὴς γίγνεται, δείσας κατὰ ἐνθύμησίν τινα ὅτι οὐδείς πω τῶν πρὸ ἑαυτοῦ ἀγγέλων πάλιν ἀφίκετο, καὶ παραποιησάμενος σφραγῖδα, ἵνα, præter, beyond: and δίαιτα here bears the sense conduct, as in Dio Cass. 555, 71, πολλὰ ἔξω τῶν πατρίων ἐξεδιητήθη. Dion. Hal. 337, ἐ. τῶν πατρίων. Athen. 556, C. εἰς τὰ Ἑλληνικὰ ἔθη ἐκδεδιήτητο. Joseph. 1314 and 1015. Appian, i. 394.

3. ἐξεκόλαψαν] lit. 'beat out,' effaced; the opposite to ἐγκολάπτω, 'to stamp in.' So Herodot. v. 59, 3, γράμματα—ἐπὶ τρίποσί τισι ἐγκεκολαμμένα. Ἔστησαν, 'had fixed' or set up; as in the frequent phrase, στῆσαι τροπαῖον. Ἀδίκημα καὶ τοῦτ᾽ ἐδόκει εἶναι, 'this, too, was thought to be a wrong action of his.' Παρόμοιον—διανοίᾳ, 'appeared to have been done as something nearly assimilated to, of a piece with his present intentions.'

4. πράσσειν] 'was practising' or 'plotting.' Τὸ πᾶν ξυγκατεργάσωνται, 'would join in the accomplishment of the whole project.'

5. νεώτερόν τι ποιεῖν] scil. κακόν. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 457. Ἀναμφισβητήτων. Of this word no example is adduced in Steph. Thes.; but it is found in Xen. Mem. iv. 2, 35. Plato, p. 815. Polyb. iii. 6, 64. Isæus, p. 48 and 50. Of βουλεῦσαί τι ἀνήκεστον the sense is, 'to take such a step as cannot be recalled,' or its evil remedied. So, also, ποιεῖν or παθεῖν ἀνήκεστον; an euphemism, for capital punishment, as infra iii. 45, and Eurip. Hipp. 719, and often in Herodot.

παιδικὰ] The rendering here will depend upon the view we take of the term, whether in a good or in a bad sense. Goell. maintains that the expression bears the former acceptation, so as to denote ἐρώμενος: citing Ælian, V. Hist. iii. 12, Σπαρτιάτης ἔρως αἰσχρὸν οὐκ οἶδεν. I add, Xen. de Rep. Laced. ii. 15, who says that Lycurgus ἐποίησεν ἐν Λακεδαίμονι μηδὲν ἧττον ἐραστὰς παιδικῶν ἀπέχεσθαι, ἢ γονεῖς παιδῶν, ἢ καὶ ἀδελφοὶ ἀδελφῶν εἰς ἀφροδίσια ἀπέχονται. Of the word in the latter sense, for amasius, an example occurs in Xen. Symp. viii. 16, and often elsewhere.

παραποιησάμενος σφραγῖδα] 'having counterfeited the seal of Pausanias;' lit. 'having made a seal near (παρὰ) or like that of Pausanias.' So Dio Cass. 435, 40, παραποιησάμενος τὰ Καίσαρος ὑπομνήματα. Of the various modes by which seals were counterfeited, see a full statement in Lucian, Pseudom.

ἦν ψευσθῇ τῆς δόξης, ἢ καὶ ἐκεῖνός τι μεταγράψαι αἰτήσῃ, μὴ ἐπιγνῷ, λύει τὰς ἐπιστολάς· ἐν αἷς, ὑπονοήσας τι τοιοῦτο προσεπεστάλθαι, καὶ αὐτὸν εὗρεν ἐγγεγραμμένον κτείνειν. CXXXIII. Τότε δὲ οἱ ἔφοροι, δείξαντος αὐτοῦ τὰ γράμματα, μᾶλλον μὲν ἐπίστευσαν, αὐτήκοοι δὲ βουληθέντες ἔτι γενέσθαι αὐτοῦ Παυσανίου τι λέγοντος, ἀπὸ παρασκευῆς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπὶ Ταίναρον ἱκέτου οἰχομένου, καὶ σκηνησαμένου διπλῆν διαφράγματι καλύβην, ἐς ἣν τῶν [τε] ἐφόρων ἐντός τινας ἔκρυψε, καὶ Παυσανίου ὡς αὐτὸν ἐλθόντος καὶ ἐρωτῶντος τὴν πρόφασιν τῆς ἱκετείας, ἤσθοντο πάντα σαφῶς, αἰτιωμένου τοῦ ἀνθρώπου τά τε περὶ αὐτοῦ γραφέντα, καὶ τἄλλ' ἀποφαίνοντος καθ' ἕκαστον, ὡς "οὐδὲν πώποτε αὐτὸν ἐν ταῖς πρὸς βασιλέα διακονίαις παραβάλοιτο, προτιμηθείη δ' ἐν ἴσῳ τοῖς πολλοῖς τῶν διακόνων ἀποθανεῖν·" κἀκείνου αὐτὰ ταῦτα ξυνομολογοῦντος καὶ περὶ τοῦ αὐτὸν εὗρεν ἐγγεγραμμένον κτείνειν] So in a passage, evidently written with a view to the present, Dio Cass. p. 56, we have, ἑαυτοὺς εὕρισκον ἐγγεγραμμένους κτείνεσθαι, by which it seems that Dio Cass. took κτείνειν here for κτείνεσθαι: but wrongly; for we have here merely a brief form of expression, for εὗρεν ἐγγεγραμμένον [αὐτὸν, i. e. Ἀρτάβαζον] καὶ αὐτὸν κτείνειν, 'that Artabazus should put to death him also.' See other examples of this idiom in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 297.

CH. CXXXIII. 1. αὐτήκοοι—γενέσθαι] 'to be ear-witnesses of.' Αὐτήκ. is a rare word: and the genit. of person, not of thing, I have no where else found. Ἀπὸ παρασκευῆς, 'from a plan concerted [between the Argilian and the Ephori].'

σκηνησαμένου διπλ. διαφ. καλ.] 'having framed a hut double, by a partition-wall.' Suppliants did not always take refuge within the walls of a temple, but sometimes chose to rear a hut in the τέμενος, which surrounded the temple, and abutted upon it, and which being supposed to belong to it, (as our church-yards to churches,) was included in the jus asyli. See infra ch. 133. The Argilian, then, contrived to make one of the walls double or hollow, and placed the Ephori in the cavity. So Joseph. Ant. xvii. 1, 13, (in a passage, evidently written with a view to the present,) ἐκ δὲ αὐτῆς τῆς καλύβης, ἐνδοτέρω διαφράγμασιν ἑτέραν ἀπειληφυίαις, where I would read with Ernesti ἑτέρας ἀπειληφυίας. A similar mode of entrapping those strongly suspected to be guilty, is mentioned in a rabbinical writer, cited by Buxtorf, Lex. Talmud. col. 1438. Compare Tacit. Ann. iv. 69.

οὐδὲν παραβάλοιτο] This may mean either, as Duk., Bauer, and Haack render, 'had never deceived him,' or, as Steph., Reiske, Pop., and Goell., 'had never imperilled him,' endangered his safety: of which two senses the former, though apt, is deficient in authority; no example being found of the word so used, except in a passage of Herodot. i. 108, μηδὲ ἐμέ τε παραβάλῃ, καὶ ἄλλους ἐλόμενος: and even there the sense may be, not deceive, but endanger, as infra vii. 10, 8, ἡμέων ἀμφοτέρων παραβαλλομένων τὰ τέκνα: and I would there read ἐμέ γε παραβάλῃ, and point καὶ, ἄλλους, 'and, by taking others [as partakers in the act],' ἐξ ὑστέρης σοι ἑαυτῷ περιπέσῃς, 'at last fall foul of yourself,' 'be the occasion of your own ruin.' Hence the latter interpretation is to be preferred, as yielding a sense equally suitable, and fully authorized, occurring infra ii. 44. iii. 14. 65, and perhaps v. 113, and being found in the best writers from Homer downwards. See Il. ix. 322. Xen. Cyr. ii. 3, 11.

προτιμηθείη] There is here a bitter irony; the sense being, that 'he, like the multitude [of his fellow-servants], should be promoted to die.' The force of the expression will appear, by considering that, for his long and faithful services, the Argilian might justly expect to be promoted to some high honour (see Numb. xxii. 17): but what was the promotion? to the bow-string! So in Prov. iii. 35, 'The wise shall inherit glory; but shame shall be the promotion of fools:' where the Sept. has οἱ δὲ ἀσεβεῖς ὕψωσαν ἀτιμίαν, which borders on nonsense, and destroys the antithesis. Perhaps the true reading there is, ὑψωθησέτωσαν ἀτιμίᾳ, for εἰς ἀτιμίαν, 'shall be promoted to disgrace.'

πίστιν ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ διδόντος τῆς ἀναστάσεως] The constr. here is, διδόν. πίστιν τῆς ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἀναστάσεως, 'pledging his faith for his [safe] departure from the temple,' or that he might safely leave the sanctuary. The term was especially applied to the departure of suppliants from the sanctuary, (see iii. 28,) with allusion to the sitting posture they had adopted while taking sanctuary. And so infra, καθίζεσθαι ἐπὶ τὴν ἑστίαν.

CH. CXXXIV. 1. ἀκούσαντες ἀκριβῶς] scil. τὸ ἀληθὲς, which is implied in ἀκρ. So in a passage of Matth. ii. 8, we have, ἀκριβῶς ἐξετάσατε περὶ τοῦ παιδίου: and in Xen. Cyr. iii. 3, 30, ἀκριβῶς εἰδότες. Thus, just after, βεβαίως εἰδότες.

τὴν ξύλληψιν ἐποιοῦντο] 'were going to apprehend him:' a frequent sense of the imperfect, as infra iii. 24, ἐσπένδοντο, and iv. 76, ἐνεῖδοσαν. viii. 11, ἐπῆγον. Hdot. i. 68.

2. ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ] Meaning, 'in the street [of the city],' as often in Xen.; e. g. Mem. ii. 2, 4. Œcon. xix. 13. Cyr. v. 18, ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς: and in New Test., as Mark x. 52. Luke ix. 57. Ἐφ' ᾧ ἐχώρει, 'the business he was come about.' So Matth. xxvi. 50, ἐφ' ᾧ πάρει; Hence may be emended a passage of Jos. xix. 2, 4, γνωρίσασα ἐφ' ὃ ἐχώρει, where read ᾧ, which is required by the evident imitation of the present passage, and confirmed by the reading of some MS. ἐφ' ὅν.

νεύματι ἀφανεῖ χρησαμένου] 'giving an unobserved or clandestine intimation by nod or beck.' So Xiphil. 1278, 60, νεύματι ἀφανεῖ χρώμενος. Liban. Or. 892, νεύματι χρώμενος. Clem. Alex. 338, D, νεύματι ἀφανεῖ κεχρημένων. See more in my note on St. Luke i. 22 and 62.

τὸ ἱερὸν τῆς Χαλκιοίκου] This temple, called that of the Brazen-house, was the most ancient and venerable at Sparta, and derived its appellation from the circumstance that the fane or chapel, in which the statue of the goddess stood, was of brass. So Livy, xxxv. 36, 'Ætoli circa Chalcicœcon (Minervæ est templum æreum) congregati cæduntur.' See also Pausan. iii. 17, 3. Among other examples of brazen buildings, is that of the temple of Janus, which Procop. p. 204, tells us was ἅπας χαλκοῦς, meaning both the νεὼς, or interior part,—around which the temple at large was built,—and the temple itself. By brazen, however, we are to understand not of solid brass, but coated over on the inside with brass, or rather bronze, plates, like the walls of the Treasury of Atreus at Mycenæ, where are still found, as we learn from Sir W. Gell, in his Argolis, p. 30, 33, 'bronze nails all over the walls of the chamber, which must have served to fasten plates of the same metal to the wall.' So, too, we are informed by Dr. Clarke, Trav. vol. ii. 153, and iii. 734, that 'the Greeks sometimes overlaid buildings with metallic plates:' nay, he affirms that he saw vestiges of them in the ruins of the gymnasium at Alexandria Troas. Finally, from Livy xli. 20, we learn that the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus had not only the roof of gold, but that all the walls were plated with gold; and Procopius, p. 97, 92, says the roof was of brass, richly plated with gold. Vestiges, too, of these thin metal plates, are found in the ruins of Memphis and other Egyptian cities; as also of Persepolis: and hence the fact of brazen chambers and temples may very well be understood and credited. The custom in question seems to have been of oriental origin. Thus Bernier, Trav. into Hindostan, vol. ii. p. 305, mentions a tower at Delphi, covered with plates of gold; as also at Agra, p. 307, two towers with two pillars overlaid with plates of silver. The custom is of the most remote antiquity, having passed to America at a period far beyond the records of history or even tradition. So De Diaz, in his History of Cortez, says that 'the inside walls of the temples of Mexico were cased with silver plates; as also were those of the royal palace in Peru.' This casing was the first expedient adopted to imitate solid metal, for which afterwards gilding, of copper or even wood (answering to what we call plating), was substituted, as appears from the above passage of Procop. p. 97, and the following in Joseph. Ant. xvii. 10, 2, ἥπτετο τοῦ ὀρόφου (i. e. the fire caught the roof,) ἡ δὲ ξύλωσις, παρέχουσα πίσσης τε καὶ κηροῦ πλέον, ἔτι δὲ κηρῷ χρυσὸν ἐπαληλιμμένον.

προκαταφυγεῖν· ἦν δὲ ἐγγὺς τὸ τέμενος. καὶ ἐς οἴκημα οὐ μέγα ὃ ἦν τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἐσελθών, ἵνα μὴ ὑπαίθριος ταλαιπωροίη, ἡσύχαζεν. οἱ δὲ τὸ παραυτίκα μὲν ὑστέρησαν τῇ διώξει, μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο τοῦ τε οἰκήματος τὸν ὄροφον ἀφεῖλον, καὶ τὰς θύρας, ἔνδον ὄντα τηρήσαντες αὐτὸν, καὶ ἀπολαβόντες ἔσω, ἀπῳκοδόμησαν, προσκαθεζόμενοί τε

Of προκαταφυγεῖν the sense is, 'took refuge before [they could overtake him].' A rare word, of which examples are found in Dio Cass. and Diod. Sic. Τὸ τέμενος. This is to be considered as distinct from τὸ ἱερὸν, just before. It is true that the two terms are sometimes used as synonymous, both denoting no more than 'a portion of ground appropriated to sacred use, and consecrated to the worship of some god;' as in Hdot. vi. 79. And such Haack supposes to be the case in the present instance; but without just grounds. The two terms must here, as Pop., Goell., and Arn. are agreed, be taken each in its proper and distinct sense: τέμενος (from τεμνόμενος) denoting primarily ager separatus, 'a piece of ground taken from the rest, and appropriated to some person,' by way of reward or distinction; (so Hom. Il. vi. 194, we have, τέμενος τάμον ἔξοχον ἄλλων, et al.) also, a piece of ground appropriated to some sacred use, by the worship of some god. So it is well observed by Hemsterhus. in Lennep, Etymol. in voc. 'Vetustissimi vero mortales, quum nondum templorum struendorum aut ratio constaret, aut mos invaluisset, deos quoque honorabant istiusmodi τεμένει, i. e. disterminata, et ad cultum divinum consecratâ terræ parte, ubi ara de vivo cespite solebat erigi, suffimentis adoleri.' Thus by τέμενος was denoted the whole glebe or consecrated piece of ground thus set apart: while by ἱερὸν was denoted only the sacred buildings therein, including not only the temple itself, but the cloister, or στοὰ, and the habitations of the priests. See infra iii. 70. iv. 116. vi. 99. Hdot. ii. 12. On the contrary, by ναὸς was denoted that part of the edifice which, like the Sanctum Sanctorum of the Temple at Jerusalem, was supposed to be the especial habitation of the Deity. The three terms are thus accurately distinguished in Pausan. v. 6, Τέμενος, καὶ ἱερὸν, καὶ ναὸν Ἀρτέμιδι ᾠκοδομήσατο.

οἴκημα οὐ μέγα ὃ ἦν τοῦ ἱεροῦ] Poppo thinks it by no means clear whether by οἴκημα we are here to understand an edifice or a room. Goell. supposes the term to denote the latter, as infra ii. 4; comparing a similar use of δωμάτιον in Plut. Brut. 15. Arn. takes it to mean a small ναὸς contiguous to the larger ναὸς or choir, like the side chapels in the aisles of Roman Catholic cathedrals. We may rather, I think, understand a sort of porch at the entrance out of the τέμενος into the ἱερὸν, or sacred close, surrounded by a wall, the entrance to which was by a porch with doors outside and inside. Ὃ ἦν τοῦ ἱεροῦ, 'which appertained to,' lit. formed part of the temple. So infra ii. 4, οἴκημα ὃ ἦν τοῦ τείχους.

ὑπαίθριος] 'exposed to the open air,' or the weather. So Liban. Or. 383, ὑπαίθριον ταλαιπωρεῖν. Philostr. Vit. Ap. vi. 6, ζῶντες ὑπαίθριοι καὶ ὑπὸ τῷ οὐρανῷ αὐτῷ. See more in my Translation. Ταλαιπωροίη, 'suffer annoyance from the weather;' as infra ii. 101, ὑπὸ χειμῶνος ἐταλαιπώρει. Aristoph. Ran. 24, ἵνα μὴ ταλαιπωροῖτο. Greg. Naz. ap. Steph. Thes. ὑπαιθρίοις κρυμοῖς καὶ ὄμβροις ταλαιπωρεῖν.

ὑστέρησαν] 'were too late [to come up with him].'

τὸν ὄροφον — θύρας] Unroofing was a not unfrequent mode of annoyance; and where the immediate destruction of the besieged was sought, missiles were launched. See iv. 48, and compare Xen. An. vi. 5, 9.

ἔνδον ὄντα — ἀπῳκοδόμησαν] Render, 'and having ascertained that he was within, they cut him off from all egress, by blocking up the doorway.' Ἀποικοδομεῖν properly signifies 'to stop any one's road or view,' by raising up a wall, or by building up the entrance to any place: and so it is here explained. But little probable is it that the persons in question would take such unnecessary pains; it being sufficient for their purpose to block up the door-way by earth, logs of wood, stones, &c. And so Nepos well expresses the sense by 'valvas obstruxerunt,' ἀπέφραξαν. Comp. Heracl. de Polit. p. 431, ὅπως μὴ ἀνοικοδομῶσιν αὐτὰς (scil. τὰς ὁδούς). I would read ἀποικ., as also in Xiphil. 1340, 77.

In προσκαθεζόμενοι ἐξεπολιόρκησαν λιμῷ there is a military metaphor, as in Lucian, ἐξεπολιορκησαν λιμῷ. 3. καὶ μέλλοντος αὐτοῦ ἀποψύχειν, ὥσπερ εἶχεν, ἐν τῷ οἰκήματι, αἰσθόμενοί τε ἐξάγουσιν ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἔτι ἔμπνουν ὄντα, καὶ ἐξαχθεὶς ἀπέθανε παραχρῆμα. 4. καὶ αὐτὸν ἐμέλλησαν μὲν ἐς τὸν Καιάδαν, οὗπερ τοὺς κακούργους [εἰώθασιν], ἐμβάλλειν· ἔπειτα ἔδυξε πλησίον που κατορύξαι. ὁ δὲ θεὸς ὁ ἐν Δελφοῖς τόν τε τάφον ὕστερον ἔχρησε τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις μετενεγκεῖν οὗπερ ἀπέθανε, (καὶ νῦν κεῖται ἐν τῷ προτεμενίσματι, ὃ γραφῇ στῆλαι

i. 148, τί δὲ εἰ λιμῷ ἐξεπολιόρκησα τὸν τύραννον; 'starved him out?' and Livy, xxiii. 10, 'obsessos fame expugnabat.' They were justified in so doing; since by the customs of Greece it was thought lawful to exclude traitors to their country from food, drink, bed, and raiment. So Eurip. Herc. Fur. 52, πάντων δὲ χρειοῖ τάσδ' ἕδρας φυλάσσομεν, Σίτων, ποτῶν, ἐσθῆτος, ἀστρώτῳ πέδῳ Πλευρὰς τιθέντες.

3. ὥσπερ εἶχεν] 'just as he was,' αὐτῷ τῷ σχήματι: for although this phrase sometimes means no more than εὐθὺς, as iii. 30, such is not the case here, nor, I conceive, in Herodot. i. 24, ῥίψαι μιν ἐς τὴν θάλασσαν ἐωυτὸν, ὡς εἶχε, σὺν τῇ σκευῇ πάσῃ: where the words σὺν τῇ σκευῇ πάσῃ are exegetical of ὡς εἶχε. And so, too, in Ælian, V. H. xiii. 2, καὶ ἀπολιπὼν τὴν τελετὴν, ὡς εἶχε, σὺν ὀργῇ καὶ θυμῷ εἰσεπήδησεν εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν, καὶ τῷ θύρσῳ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γυναῖκα ἔκτεινε.

4. ἐς τὸν Καιάδαν — ἐμβάλλειν] Such is, I conceive, the true reading of this passage. Καιάδαν, besides having far more authority from MSS. than Κεάδαν, is defended both by a passage of Dio Cass. Chrys. p. 668, and by the cognate words, Καίετον, or Καιετὸς, Caieta, Καίατα, which Hesych. explains ὀρύγματα, ἢ τὰ ὑπὸ σεισμῶν καταῤῥαγέντα χωρία: where I would read ῥώγματα; for Strabo, p. 367, says that Καιετοὶ is the name given to οἱ ἀπὸ τῶν σεισμῶν ῥωχμοί. Καιάδας comes from καίω, cognate with κάω, or χάω, χαίω, whence χάζω and χάσμα. The place had probably been originally a natural fissure, (one of the many caused by the great earthquake,) and was used as a sort of Golgotha, into which the bodies of executed malefactors were tossed; thus answering to the Geminiæ Scalæ at Rome, and the Barathrum at Athens. So Suidas: Βάραθρον· τόπος βαθὺς, ὅπου οἱ κακοῦργοι ἐκβάλλονται Ἀθήνῃσι, καὶ οἱ ἐπὶ θανάτῳ ('those condemned to death') ὥσπερ εἰς τὸν Κεάδαν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι: and not only those condemned to death, but those who had been put to death. So Xen. Hist. i. 7, 10, ἀποθανόντα ἐς τὸ βάραθρον ἐμβληθῆναι. This place is often spoken of in Aristophanes; also in Herodot. viii. 133, ἐς τὸ βάραθρον ἐσβαλόντες, or ἐμβαλόντες.

As to the reading of the rest of the passage, utterly indefensible is the vulg. ἐμβάλλειν εἰώθεσαν, as involving a construction quite anomalous. Considering that the custom in question subsisted in the time of our author, (nay, continued to that of Pausanias. See infra iv. 18,) propriety would rather require εἰώθασιν, which is found in a few MSS., and has been edited by Haack, who, by placing εἰώθασιν before ἐμβάλλειν, (from some MSS.) certainly removes the harshness that attaches to the common reading. After all, however, this variety in the position of the above word, and this variety of readings, εἰώθεσαν and εἰώθασιν, have at length induced me to place εἰώθασιν within brackets; which is better than cancelling it, as Bekk., Pop., and Goell. have done, on the authority of two MSS. We may justly suspect εἰώθεσαν to have been originally a marginal remark, intended to supply what seemed here wanting, and afterwards, when received into the text, altered to εἰώθασιν, for the sake of greater suitableness. The real ellipsis, however, is not εἰώθεσαν, but ἐμβάλλουσι, to be supplied from ἐμβάλλειν.

πλησίον που κατορύξαι] It is not clear what we are to understand by this; whether,—according to the explanation of the Schol.—near to the Cæadas; or, near to the sacred precincts; or, again, near the place where he had died, according to the opinion of Nepos; for though he uses the term procul, that may be understood of distance not very remote. Yet, supposing the person in question to have been buried near the place where he died, it is difficult to see why the Delphian oracle should have ordered the removal of his body. And hence the opinion of the Scholiast seems entitled to the preference.

τὸν τάφον] i. e. the sepulture of the body. Προτεμενίσματι. This obscure term may mean, as Arn. thinks, 'a sort of lodge or entrance to the whole of the τέμενος or sacred ground, like the gateways of our cathedral closes.' 'A dead body,' as he justly observes, 'would not have been buried within the sacred ground, and much less in the actual vestibule of a temple: (Thirlwall, however, remarks that this requires limitation, as appears from the case of Euchidas in Plut. Arist. 20.) but it might have been buried in the precinct of the lodge or gate-house, just on the outside of the entrance.' That the term was not, as the Schol. supposes, the same with προπύλαιον, is certain from Clem. Alex. Pædag. iii. 2, init. κατὰ τοὺς Αἰγυπτίων κόσμους, οἷς ναοὶ καὶ προπύλαια παρ' αὐτοῖς, καὶ προτεμενίσματα ἐξήσκηται: whence it appears, that these προτεμενίσματα were highly-ornamented buildings.

It is by no means easy to see why στῆλαι should here be used, and not στήλη, as said of one person. Probably the pillars were something like the two tables of the Commandments of which we read in Exodus, and which are represented as two, though essentially united together (thus, 𝕄) as but one.

ὡς ἄγος αὐτοῖς ὂν τὸ πεπραγμένον] On this construction with the participle, preceded by the particles ὥστε, ὡς, or such like, (when a reason is given, as contained in the opinion, &c. of another,) see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 568. We have here an example of the use of the accus. absol., as Soph. Œd. T. 101, μίασμα χθονὸς ἐλαύνειν ὡς τήνδ' αἷμα χειμάζον πόλιν. See Hdot. ix. 42.

χαλκοῦς ἀνδριάντας δύο] 'two images of Pausanias.' From Pausan. iii. 17, 7, we learn that these brazen images still remained in his time at the altar of the Brazen-house. By the time, however, of Libanius, they had been destroyed; as appears from his Epist. 1080, τῷ γοῦν τάφῳ τῷ τοῦ Παυσανίου φασὶν οὐκ ἐφεστάναι τοὺς ἀντ' ἐκείνου Παυσανίας (the two Pausanias's) ἀλλ' ἀπελθεῖν εἰς ('have gone to the melting furnace') πῦρ ὑπὸ τῆς σοφίας τῶν τότε ἀρχόντων. There is no reason to doubt the fact; though Libanius, from an error of memory, represents the statues as placed at the tomb; whereas they were placed at the altar of the goddess, and the στῆλαι at the tomb.

CH. CXXXV. 1. ὡς καὶ τοῦ θεοῦ ἄγος κρίναντος] 'since even the god had decided, that a pollution [was incurred].'

2. Now follows what Pop. calls an additamentum, or excursus, on the banishment of Themistocles, which extends to ch. 138 inclusive, and was subjoined because the events therein recorded were closely connected with the narration of the affairs of Pausanias. By τῶν ἐλέγχων are meant, as we learn from Plut. Themist. 23, letters from Themistocles, found among Pausanias's papers.

ξυνεπῃτιῶντο] 'implicated.' A very rare word, which I have found only elsewhere in Plutarch, Pericl. οὓς συνεπῃτιῶντο τοῦ Μηδισμοῦ.

CH. CXXXVI. 1. ὧν αὐτῶν εὐεργέτης] In what respect he had acted as their benefactor, by rendering them some eminent service, namely, as Plutarch says, by his friendly mediation in a dispute with Corinth about the Leucadian peninsula, whereby Corcyra obtained the object she contended for; or, as the Schol. says, by dissuading the Greeks from proclaiming as public enemies those states (including Corcyra) which had refused to co-operate in repelling the Persian invasion.

2. ἔχειν αὐτὸν] 'to have,' i. e. to harbour him; ἔχειν for κατέχειν. The ὥστε

αὐτὸν, ὥστε Λακεδαιμονίοις καὶ Ἀθηναίοις ἀπέχθεσθαι, διακομίζεται ὑπ' αὐτῶν ἐς τὴν ἤπειρον τὴν καταντικρύ. 3. καὶ διωκόμενος ὑπὸ τῶν προστεταγμένων κατὰ πύστιν ᾗ χωροίη, ἀναγκάζεται κατά τι ἄπορον παρὰ Ἄδμητον τὸν Μολοσσῶν βασιλέα, ὄντα αὐτῷ οὐ φίλον, καταλῦσαι. 4. καὶ ὁ μὲν οὐκ ἔτυχεν ἐπιδημῶν· ὁ δὲ, τῆς γυναικὸς ἱκέτης γενόμενος, διδάσκεται ὑπ' αὐτῆς τὸν παῖδα σφῶν λαβὼν καθίζεσθαι ἐπὶ τὴν ἑστίαν. 5. καὶ ἐλθόντος οὐ πολὺ ὕστερον τοῦ Ἀδμήτου, δηλοῖ τε ὅς ἐστι, καὶ οὐκ ἀξιοῖ, εἴ τι ἄρα αὐτὸς ἀντεῖπεν αὐτῷ Ἀθηναίων δεομένῳ, φεύγοντα τιμωρεῖσθαι· καὶ γὰρ ἂν ὑπ' ἐκείνου is to be referred, not to the whole clause δεδιέναι ἔχειν, but solely to ἔχειν, thus: 'they would not keep him among them, so that,' &c., or, whereby they would draw on them the ill-will of the Athenians and Lacedæmonians. See Herm. on Viger, p. 949, and on Soph. Œd. Col. 571. In like manner supra ch. 129, ὥστε has reference solely to ἐπισχέτω. The particle bears the sense ita ut, denoting consequence.

3. κατὰ πύστιν] ex percunctatione, '[directed] by inquiry whither he had gone.' So supra 5, τὰς πύστεις τῶν καταπλεόντων, where see note. The phrase κατὰ πύστιν, with διώκειν and other verbs of motion, is used by Dio Cass. 309, 14. App. ii. 296, 63. Athen. p. 256. Jos. 736, 9; and should, in a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 68, 38, be restored for πίστιν. Κατά τι ἄπορον, 'at some great difficulty,' 'when reduced to a great strait.' Καταλῦσαι, 'to take up his quarters with.' So in Latin, apud aliquem divertere. The metaphor is one taken from travellers unbridling and unsaddling their horses, or loosing them from a carriage for a bait, (so Hom. Od. iv. 28, εἰ σφῶϊν καταλύσομεν ὠκέας ἵππους,) or unloading them for the night; just as the contrary term ἀναζευγνύναι, which signifies properly 'to put the horses to a carriage,' is sometimes figuratively employed to denote departing generally. So Xen. An. i. 8, 1, πλησίον ἦν ὁ σταθμὸς, ἔνθα ἔμελλε καταλύσειν. Also in a general way, 'to take up one's lodging for the night.' So Lucian, Asin. 4, παρ' ἐμοὶ κ., and Plut. Symp. παρ' ἐμοὶ κ. Pop., Goell., and Arn. are wrong in supposing an ellipsis of ὁδὸν, for there is no proof of the existence of the plena locutio. By so doing, they confound this with the similar but different phrase, κατανύω scil. ὁδόν.

4. τῆς γυναικὸς ἱκέτης γενόμενος] i. e. 'by becoming her suppliant;' the phrase being one highly significant. When received as such, Admetus could not but reverence so sacred a claim to protection. So Eurip. Or. 663, ταύτης (scil. τῆς δάμαρτος) ἱκνοῦμαί σε, where the Schol. explains by δεόμαί σου πρὸς ταύτης, 'by her.' Herodot. i. 159, 16, τοὺς ἱκέτας μου κεραΐζεις: and ii. 113, 13, ἱκέται δὲ ἱζόμενοι τοῦ Θεοῦ: and iv. 165, 10, Ἀρυανδέω ἱκέτις ἕζετο. In the present case, the union of the son much strengthened the claim, so as to make the act μέγιστον ἱκέτευμα, i. e. among the Thesprotians. Themistocles besought him by his son. So Soph. Aj. 588, we have, σε πρὸς τοῦ σοῦ τέκνου— ἱκνοῦμαι, μὴ προδοὺς ἡμᾶς γένῃ. There was, too, no little efficacy in the particular place (namely, 'the altar of the hearth,' which was the seat of their family devotions) for such a supplication. So in the Schol. on Soph. Aj. 491, we have, μέγιστον γὰρ δικαίωμα, τὸ τῆς αὐτῆς ἑστίας ἐπιτυχεῖν, ὅποτε καὶ τῶν πολεμίων φειδόμεθα διὰ ταῦτα. Such a suppliant was called ἱκέτης ἑφέστιος. So Æschyl. Eum. 574, ἱκέτης δόμων ἑφέστιος. In evident imitation of the present passage, Plutarch, Coriol. 23, has, παρεισελθὼν ἄφνω πρὸς τὴν ἑστίαν ἐκάθιζε σιωπῇ. And hence may be illustrated the following passages: Euripides, Ion, 1257, ἶζε νῦν πυρᾶς ἔπι. Κἂν θάνῃς γὰρ ἐνθάδ' οὖσα, τοῖς ἀποκτείνασί σε Προστρόπαιον αἷμα θήσεις. and Xen. Anab. vii. 2, 33, ἐκαθεζόμην ἐνδίφριος, αὐτῷ ἱκέτης. Finally, in the term sit, we have here an expression commonly employed in such a case. So Eurip. Heracl. ἱκέται καθεζόμεθα βώμιοι θεῶν: and Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 481, 2, ἱκέτης τοῦ ἀνδρὸς γίγνεται καθεζομένου (read καθεζόμενος) ἐπὶ τῆς ἑστίας.

5. οὐκ ἀξιοῖ] 'entreats him, that he may not,' &c. A position of the οὐκ peculiarly Attic, and which is not unfrequent in the case of verbs of asking, requesting, &c. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 608, 1. Ἀντεῖπεν αὐτῷ, i. e. 'opposed his wish.' A forensic term, also found in Xen. Hist. iii. 3, 3. ii. 2, 13. Or the expression may mean, in a figurative sense, refragatus est, as in Aristoph. Nub. 1417. For vulg. ἀσθενεστέρου, I have, with Dobree and Goell., edited (as being absolutely required by the connexion and grammatical propriety) ἀσθενέστερος. The former, though retained by Bekk. and Pop., admits of no suitable sense; for, as Bauer, Goeller, and Arnold point out, the words can thus only mean, that he was not so reduced as to be liable to injury from one far less powerful than Admetus. A sense most frigid, and involving a very harsh construction, since ἐκείνου must thus be governed of ἀσθενέστερος. On the other hand, highly suitable and significant is the sense yielded by ἀσθενέστερος — namely, that 'he would suffer evil at the hands of Admetus now, when he was at present far his inferior in power,' and unable to defend himself. Of the words following, the full meaning is, 'whereas it were true generosity for equals to avenge themselves [only] on such as were on equal terms, [and to spare a fallen foe].' The literal sense of the phrase ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου τιμωρεῖσθαι is, 'to avenge oneself or seek avengement [only] on a footing of equality;' as infra ii. 89, et al. So equiv. to τοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, scil. ὄντας. Agreeable to which is the definition in Aristot. Rhet. ii., where it is said that by οἱ ὁμοῖοι ('one's equals') is meant, οἱ ὅλως οἱ ἐξ ἴσου.

καὶ ἅμα—ἐναντιωθῆναι] 'and moreover, that he had thwarted him [in a matter] of interest [only], and not in that which respected the person (or life) being preserved.' Χρεία has here the sense interest, as in a passage of Plutarch cited in Steph. Thes. κοινωνίας ἐπὶ χρείᾳ συνισταμένης. And at the genit. is to be supplied περὶ, as in Xen. An. vii. 6, 5, ἐναντιώσεται τῆς ἀναγωγῆς: on which construction see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 368. Pop. and Goell. are agreed that the τὸ is to be taken as if put twice, with σῶμα and with σώζεσθαι, the article, in such a case, being very rarely repeated. Thus it is equiv. to καὶ οὐκ ἐς τὴν τοῦ σώματος σωτηρίαν: the ἐς being used as at Hebrews xi. 7, εἰς σωτηρίαν τοῦ οἴκου αὐτοῦ. On the repetition of ἂν,—found both before and after the parenthesis,—see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 600, and note on ii. 44. Finally, by σωτηρίας τῆς ψυχῆς, understand the means of preservation. Compare Hebrews x. 39, εἰς περιποίησιν ψυχῆς.

CH. CXXXVII. 1. ἀνίστησί τε αὐτὸν] A form of granting the request. Ὥσπερ ἐκαθέζετο, i. e. 'in the very way that he had sat himself down,' namely, with hands joined: or, as Poppo explains, 'ut puerum tenens sederat, ita cum puero surgere eum jussit.' I have here followed Poppo and Goell. in making ch. 137 to commence at Ὁ δὲ ἀκούσας, not at καὶ ὕστερον, since the καὶ is in apodosis with the τε preceding, and consequently ought not to be separated by the commencement of a new chapter.

μέγιστον] Meaning the greatest among the Molossians. So Plutarch says, ταύτην μεγίστην καὶ μόνην σχεδὸν ἀναντίῤῥητον ἡγουμένων τῶν Μολοσσῶν. By τὴν ἑτέραν θάλασσαν understand the Ægean sea. So Acts xvii. 14, we have, τὸν Παῦλον ἐξαπέστειλαν, πορεύεσθαι ὡς ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν, where see my note. Πεζῇ, 'by land.'

2. ὁλκάδος τυχὼν ἀναγομένης] See a similar but more circumstantial narrative in Jonas i. 3; and compare others less similar in Liban. Epist. 1435. Heliod. i. 160. Plut. Mar. 35. Jos. Vit. 18. Polyæn. i. 30, 7.

Τῷ ναυκλήρῳ, 'the ship-master.' Plutarch adds καὶ κυβερνήτῃ. And so in Acts xxvii. 11, we have, τῷ κυβερνήτῃ καὶ τῷ ναυκλήρῳ. Properly, however, the two terms were distinct; the former denoting the master, or pilot — the latter the owner, or supercargo. But it was only large merchant-ships that carried both. Smaller ones had but one, who was then called, not κυβερνήτης, but ναύκληρος. So Aristoph. Av. 711, καὶ πηδάλιον τότε ναυκλήρῳ φράζει κρεμάσαντι καθεύδειν. Thus we read of a ναύκληρος discharging the duties of a κυβερνήτης in Æschyl. Theb. 649. Soph. Ant. 944. Eurip. Hippol. 1219.

The article before ἀσφάλειαν stands for the possessive pronoun, 'their safety.' In μέχρι πλοῦς γένηται the term πλοῦς stands for εὔπλοια or καλὸς πλοῦς, by a use also found infra iii. 3, and elsewhere; as Xen. Anab. vi. 1, 22, αὔριον ἐὰν πλοῦς ᾖ. Hdot. Vit. Hom. 19, ὁ πλοῦς ὑμῖν ἔσται. Also Eurip. Her. 892. Polyb. iv. 57, 2. In χάριν ἀπομνήσεσθαι ἀξίαν, we have a brief mode of expression for χάριν ἀποδώσεσθαι μνησθέντα, 'he would remember to repay the favour with a due return.' So Hes. Theog. 503, οἵ οἱ ἀπεμνήσαντο χάριν εὐεργεσιάων. Eurip. Alc. 311, χάριν ἀπομνημονεύειν τινί. Thus, we see, Themistocles adroitly worked alike upon his hopes, by large promises, and upon his fears, by threatening to denounce him, as having knowingly harboured an outlaw. So we read in Appian, ii. 594, ὁ δὲ, οἷόν τι καὶ Θεμιστοκλῆς φεύγων ἐποίησεν, ἀντηπείλει, μηνύσειν ὅ τι αὐτὸν ἐπὶ χρήμασιν ἄγοι.

3. ἀποσαλεύσας] lit. 'having lain off at sea,' namely, at anchor; for ἐπ' ἀγκύρᾳ, or ἐπ' ἀγκύρας, or ἀγκυρῶν, is always in this expression implied, and not unfrequently expressed. By σάλος, as implied in ἀποσαλεύσας, is meant (as at Soph. Phil. 271) the high sea, as opposed to a port or roadstead. Ὑπὲρ, 'off,' as supra i. 112, where see note.

4. ἐθεράπευσε χρημάτων δόσει] pecuniis gratificatus est, 'he requited him with a present of money.' Of this phrase examples occur in Hdian. ii. 2, 20, τό τε βάρβαρον οὐ χρήμασιν ἔτι θεραπεύσομεν: and iii. 15, 10, δώροις τοὺς—ἐθεράπευεν. Zos. i. 3, 3, χρήμασι τὰς δυνάμεις θεραπεύων. Jos. Bell. i. 12, 2, τεθεραπευκότα χρήμασιν.

ἦλθε] scil. τὰ χρήματα, 'came, was brought,' transmittebatur, missa veniebat; as we say, 'came to hand.' A rare use; the expression being principally employed of letters, or presents, (as often in Xen.) and also of goods which come to hand, as imported from foreign parts. See Xen. Cyr. vi. 2, 8, and Œcon. iii. 15. The only example besides the present, of the term as used of money, is in Hdot. viii. 5, ἀλλ' ἠπιστέατο οἱ μεταλαβόντες τούτων τῶν χρημάτων, ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐλθεῖν—τὰ χρήματα, where, for Ἀθηναίων, I conj. Ἀθηνέων, the former being not unfrequently in that author erroneously put for the latter. See Schweigh. Lex. Herod. And though in the genit. the article is generally omitted, yet it not unfrequently is found, as supra i. 51, 4, αἱ νῆες αἱ ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν.

For vulg. εἰς βασιλέα, I have edited, with Pop. and Goell., ἐς βασιλέα. As to the reading of one MS. (edited by Bekk.) ὡς, and that of several MSS., πρὸς—the latter is evidently a mere gloss; and as to the former, I have not ventured to receive it, from its being so deficient in authority; having, indeed, every appearance of being a mere error of the scribe for ἐς. I have the less scrupled to admit the reading ἐς, since the deviation it involves from the usus loquendi is more apparent than real; ἐς βασ. being here (as Poppo observes) equivalent to 'in palatium sive conclave regis.'

χρόνον τὸν σὸν πατέρα ἐπιόντα ἐμοὶ ἀνάγκῃ ἠμυνόμην· πολὺ δ' ἔτι πλείω ἀγαθὰ, ἐπειδὴ ἐν τῷ ἀσφαλεῖ μὲν ἐμοὶ, ἐκείνῳ δὲ ἐν ἐπικινδύνῳ πάλιν ἡ ἀποκομιδὴ ἐγίγνετο. 6. καί μοι εὐεργεσία ὀφείλεται, (γράψας τὴν ἐκ Σαλαμῖνος προάγγελσιν τῆς ἀναχωρήσεως, καὶ τὴν τῶν γεφυρῶν,—ἣν ψευδῶς προσεποιήσατο,—τότε δι' αὐτὸν οὐ διάλυσιν,) καὶ νῦν ἔχων σε μεγάλα ἀγαθὰ δρᾶσαι πάρειμι, διωκόμενος ὑπὸ τῶν Ἑλλήνων διὰ τὴν σὴν φιλίαν· βούλομαι δ', ἐνιαυτὸν ἐπισχών, αὐτός σοι περὶ ὧν ἥκω δηλῶσαι." CXXXVIII. Βασι-

5. ἐν τῷ ἀσφαλεῖ—ἐγίγνετο] A certain difficulty here exists; for if, with Steph., we suppose a regular antithesis, needing nothing to be supplied, we obtain a sense bordering on nonsense; it being impossible to see how ἀποκομιδὴ can be applicable to Themistocles. To remove this difficulty, Pop. and Goell. would regard the words ἐν τῷ ἀσφαλεῖ ἐμοὶ ἐγίγνετο as standing for the impersonal phrase ἀσφαλὲς ἐμοὶ ἐγίγνετο. But that such a phrase existed, has yet to be proved; for as to the examples adduced by Pop. from passages of our author infra iii. 33, ἐν καταλήψει ἐφαίνετο, and vi. 60, ἐν παύλῃ ἐφαίνετο, they are any thing but decisive; the passages in question being of another kind to the present. Hence it is better to adopt the more simple mode pursued by the Schol., and suppose an ellipsis of πράγματα; though not, as he does, also of ἦσαν; since ἐγίγνετο may be taken with the former as well as the latter member of the clausula bimembris. The same ellipsis has place supra i. 102, 2, τούτου ἐνδεᾶ ἐφαίνετο. At least there the expression may be regarded as standing for the impersonal phrase, 'there seemed a need of,' (though, in effect, there is merely a power of interchanging the former for the latter,) while here it would involve an intolerable harshness. Of ἐν τῷ ἀσφαλεῖ the sense is simply 'in security.' Render, 'since my affairs were in security, while his retreat back to his own country was perilous.' Thus ἐμοὶ is tantamount to τὰ ἐμά, which not unfrequently carries the ellipsis of πράγματα. So Eurip. Heracl. 999, τοιαῦτα δρῶντι, τἄμ' ἐγίγνετ' ἀσφαλῆ. The phrase γίγνεσθαι ἐν ἀσφαλεῖ occurs also in Xen. Ag. ii. 13, and εἶναι ἐν ἀσφαλεῖ is frequent in Xenophon. We may compare, too, the Latin phrase in tuto esse.

6. εὐεργεσία is for ἀντίχαρις. Προάγγελσιν τῆς ἀναχωρήσεως, 'the previous information of the retreat.' The words are, as Goell. observes, not to be referred to Xerxes' flight, but bear the same sense as those of C. Nepos, Them. 4, 'noctu de servis suis quem habuit fidelissimum ad regem misit, ut ei nuntiaret suis verbis, adversarios ejus in fuga esse: qui si discessissent, majore cum labore et longinquiore tempore bellum confecturum, quum singulos consectari cogeretur: quos si statim aggrederetur, brevi universos oppressurum.' Goeller remarks: 'Duo igitur Xerxi in memoriam revocat: alterum, quod ante pugnam Salaminiam (quare dicit ἐκ Σαλαμῖνος) regem certiorem fecerit, Græcos in fuga esse, (conf. Herodot. viii. 75,) alterum, quod rege fugiente non dissolvendi pontis Hellespontii Græcis auctor fuerit.' Vide C. Nep. c. v. Herodot. viii. 108.

τὴν τῶν γεφυρῶν — οὐ διάλυσιν] 'the non-demolition of the bridges.' So infra iii. 95, ἡ οὐ περιτείχισις, 'the non-blockading;' and v. 50, ἡ οὐκ ἐξουσία, 'non-permission;' and vii. 34: in which use of a negative particle with subst., the negative and subst. form together one idea, (as in οὐ φημι, nego, οὐκ ἐάω, veto, &c.) and consequently the hyphen, used in the old editions, were better retained. On which idiom see more in Duker's note, and in the critics cited by him; who have, however, passed over the very rare use of μὴ for οὐ in this idiom; of which I know no other example than the following: Aristoph. Concion. 115, δεινὸν δ' ἐστιν ἡ μὴ 'μπειρία: Aristot. Anal. Port. ii. 14, ἡ μὴ ὑπομονή. As to Eurip. Bacch. 1288, ἐν οὐ καιρῷ πάρει, the οὐ may belong to πάρει: or the sense may be, 'at a no-time,' i. e. no good time. So Themist. 262, C, πονηρὸν ἀνθρώπιον ἦν, καὶ ἐπὶ οὐκ ἔργῳ εἰς τὰς οἰκίας περιερχόμενον, where ἐπ' οὐκ ἀγαθῷ would have been better Greek, as Xen. Hist. v. 2, 25, ἐπ' οὐδενὶ ἀγαθῷ. The idiom with οὐ, and a subst. without the art., is of frequent occurrence in the Sept., and is occasionally found in the New Testament.

τὴν σὴν φιλίαν] The poss. pron. is here used objectively, 'thy friendship for them.' So Plato, p. 486, εὐνοίᾳ γὰρ ἐρῶ τῇ σῇ. Soph. Œd. Col. 332, σῇ προμηθίᾳ, 'from care for thee.' The idiom may be traced as far back as Homer, Od. xi. 201, σός τε πόθος, σά τε μήδεα.

λεὺς δὲ, ὡς λέγεται, ἐθαύμασέ τε αὐτοῦ τὴν διάνοιαν, καὶ ‡ ἐκέλευε ποιεῖν οὕτως. 2. ὁ δ' ἐν τῷ χρόνῳ ὃν ἐπέσχε, τῆς Περσίδος γλώσσης ὅσα ἠδύνατο κατενόησε καὶ τῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων τῆς χώρας. 3. ἀφικόμενος δὲ μετὰ τὸν ἐνιαυτὸν, γίγνεται παρ' αὐτῷ μέγας, καὶ ὅσος οὐδείς πω Ἑλλήνων, διά τε τὴν προϋπάρχουσαν ἀξίωσιν καὶ τοῦ Ἑλληνικοῦ ἐλπίδα, ἣν ὑπετίθει αὐτῷ δουλώσειν, μάλιστα δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ, πεῖραν διδοὺς, ξυνετὸς φαίνεσθαι. 4. ἦν γὰρ ὁ Θεμιστοκλῆς βεβαιότατα δὴ φύσεως ἰσχὺν δηλώσας, καὶ διαφερόντως τι ἐς αὐτὸ

CH. CXXXVIII. 1. ἐθαύμασε—αὐτοῦ τὴν διάνοιαν] 'held in admiration his counsel.' A sense of θαυμάζειν not unfrequent in Xenophon and other good authors. See Steph. Thes. Ἐκέλευε ποιεῖν οὕτως, 'bid him do as he said.' I have here followed Bekk. and Goell. in editing, for vulg. ἐκέλευσε, ἐκέλευε; the latter being supported both by external authority (almost all the MSS. presenting it) and by internal evidence; since after ἐθαύμασε one would naturally expect ἐκέλευσε, and accordingly that change might, even from inadvertence, arise; whereas the other would be almost unaccountable. The difficulty, indeed, is how to defend ἐκέλευε, which Arn. regards as 'little else than an absolute solecism,' not to be justified by the alleged examples of imperf. for aor. in Hdot. viii. 58 and 61. He has, however, chosen to retain the word, regarding it as 'a carelessness of expression, which has escaped our author.' Yet this is surely pronouncing too magisterially on a point whereon our imperfect knowledge of Greek idiom will not warrant us in being so positive. Certain it is that the same solecism, or carelessness of expression, occurs elsewhere in our author; e. g. iii. 112, 4, προὔταξε καὶ—ἐκέλευε (where three MSS. have ἐκέλευσεν), and ii. 90, παρεκελεύετο, where some MSS. have παρεκελεύσατο. And so i. 119, we have ἔλεγον, and i. 79 and 124. From all which we may conclude that the idiom in question is not to be accounted as a solecism or carelessness of expression, but regarded as one of the cases in which the imperf. is used where we should expect the aorist—namely, cases, as Poppo, on i. 119, remarks, 'of verbs of speaking, exhorting, and ordering; and not only as ushering in a somewhat long speech, but even a very short address;' where Poppo maintains that there is no distinction between the tenses, but that either is used indiscriminately. I know, indeed, no other instance in which the two tenses are so closely connected, as here, by the use of τε—καὶ, which seems to involve such an impropriety, that I cannot help suspecting the τε to be corrupt, and I believe the true reading to be γε—these two words being perpetually confounded. Certainly γε would be here highly suitable, since it would have its corroborative or intensive force; making the word to which it is attached not a little significant and emphatic. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 602, and Herm. on Vig. 623.

2. τῆς Περσίδος γλώσσης—κατενόησε] 'made himself acquainted with what he could of the Persian language;' not, 'learned what could be learned,' as Portus renders. So in a passage of Plutarch we have ἀποχρώντως ἐκμαθών. Of this rare signification of κατανοέω, I have not met with any example elsewhere, except in Diod. Sic. iii. 398. Polyb. ii. 15, 4. ii. 24, 17, and Joseph. Ant. Præf. 4.

3. γίγνεται παρ' αὐτῷ μέγας] for μέγα δυνάμενος. So Herodot. vi. 30, ἵνα μὴ διαφυγὼν, αὖτις μέγας παρὰ βασιλέϊ γένηται. 2 Kings v. 1, ἀνὴρ μέγας ἐνώπιον τοῦ κυρίου αὐτοῦ.

τοῦ Ἑλληνικοῦ ἐλπίδα—δουλώσειν] 'In his verbis est illud attractionis genus, quod frequentius cernitur in subjecto enuntiationis secundariæ naturam objecti primarii induente. Vid. Matth. § 296, 3. Sed objecti quoque attractionem fieri docent exempla, iii. 59, οἴκτῳ σώφρονι λαβόντας, and v. 15, τῶν ἀνδρῶν κομισασθαι.' (Poppo.) On the construction of ὑποτίθημι, see note infra iv. 65. Of the words just after, πεῖραν διδοὺς, the sense is, 'inasmuch as he gave proof thereof' on trial: a phrase occurring also in Hdot. v. 5, 11, ἀπόντος αὐτοῦ πεῖραν δοθῆναι. Polyæn. v. 2, 11, πεῖραν πίστεως δεδωκότες. Jos. Bell. ii. 8, 7, ἐπειδὰν δὲ πεῖραν δῶ. Of this use of the participle in the nomin., as referring to a noun in the nomin. expressed, or, as here, understood (αὐτὸς), examples may be seen in Pop. Proleg. ch. ix. There is something similar in Pind. Pyth. iv. 150, Τάχα δ', εὐθὺς ἰὼν, σφετέρας Ἐστάθη γνώμας ἀταρβάτοιο, πειρώμενος (experimentum dans) Ἐν ἀγορᾷ πλήθοντος ὄχλου.

4. φύσεως ἰσχὺν] i. e. strength of natural

genius. So Dio Cass. p. 407, of Cæsar: τῆς φύσεως ἰσχύϊ θαυμαστῇ ἐκέχρητο. At ἐς αὐτὸ supply ἐς τὸ τῆς φύσεως ἰσχὺν δηλοῦν. On the phrase ἄξιος θαυμάσαι, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 535, 6. Οἰκείᾳ ξυνέσει, 'his native talent;' what we call mother-wit. So Pausan. iv. 35, συνέσει γὰρ οἰκείᾳ τὸ Ἑλληνικὸν ὑπερεβάλλοντο. Now such is chiefly evinced in ἀγχίνοια, of which Aristotle says, Analyt. Prior, ch. 34, ἡ δὲ ἀγχίνοιά ἐστιν εὐστοχία τις ἐν ἀσκέπτῳ χρόνῳ τοῦ μέσου. Of the next words, οὔτε προμαθὼν ἐς αὐτὴν οὐδὲν οὔτ' ἐπιμαθὼν (which are explanatory of the foregoing), the sense is, 'without the aids of early culture,' (before he came to public offices,) 'or after-study,' (meaning, after he had undertaken public affairs), effecting every thing by the innate felicity of his genius. So Aristoph. Vesp. 1281, ὕντινα—μαθόντα παρὰ μηδενὸς, Ἀλλ' ἀπὸ σοφῆς φύσεος αὐτόματον ἐκμαθεῖν, &c.

τῶν παραχρῆμα — εἰκαστής] Render: 'he was the best judge, and with least deliberation, of things present (instantibus); and of the future, even far forward, he was the best conjecturer.' The construction here being τῶν μελλόντων ἄριστος εἰκαστὴς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον τοῦ γενησομένου. Τῶν παραχρῆμα, instantia, 'things at hand,' and immediately before one, which call for action, and admit of little time for deliberation. Γνώμων, for κριτὴς, a rare use, of which I have met with only two examples elsewhere (Plut. x. 115, 15, bis), but which has been paralleled in the name of certain magistrates at Athens, called γνώμονες, umpires. The term seems properly an adj., derived from the verb ἔγνωμαι, a vulgar Greek form for ἔγνωσμαι, perf. pass. of γινώσκω; and which denotes properly, as said of persons to whom any thing is quite known, knowing, συνετὸς, as Hesych. explains; or rather κριτικὸς, the term used in Hebrews iv. 12, κριτικὸς ἐνθυμήσεων καὶ ἐννοιῶν καρδίας. Indeed γνώμων is used as an adj. in Xen. Mem. i. 4, 5, τούτων γν. ἐνειργάσθη. Æschyl. Ag. 1099, θεσφάτων γνώμων ἄκρος. With the expression τῶν μελλόντων εἰκαστὴς, compare that of Dion. Hal. Ant. 462, κακὸς εἰκαστὴς τῶν ἐσομένων. The sentiment is well illustrated by Dio Cass. p. 32, 77, where it is similarly said of Scipio, ἄριστος μὲν ἦν ἐκ πλείονος τὸ δέον ἐκφροντίζειν, ἄριστος δὲ καὶ ἐκ τοῦ παραχρῆμα τὸ κατεπεῖγον ἐρευνῆσαι. Comp. Cic. Off. i. 23, 'Ingenii magni est præcipere cogitatione futura, et aliquanto ante constituere quid accidere possit in utramque partem; et quidquid agendum sit cum quid evenerit; nec committere, ut aliquando dicendum sit — non putâram.' Terent. Ad. iii. 3, 32, 'Illud est sapere, non quod ante pedes modo 'st Videre, sed etiam illa quæ futura sunt prospicere.'

5. ἃ μὲν μετὰ χεῖρας ἔχοι—οὐκ ἀπήλλακτο] Meaning, 'whatever business he might have in hand, be engaged in, he was able also to discuss its merits; and even in matters that were out of the line of his own experience, he was at no loss to form a competent judgment.' Of this phrase μετὰ χεῖρας ἔχειν, examples occur in Hdot. i. 35. vii. 5 and 16. And answering to it is the Latin inter manus habere, and our 'to have under one's hands.' The expression is indeed equiv. to μεταχειρίζοιτο. Of ἐξηγήσασθαι the sense is not, as Wyttenb. and Arn. explain, 'to conduct [matters] to their issue;' nor is there any proof that the term ever bore that signification. It can mean no other than orationem exponere; a sense here highly suitable, since the statesmen of old were expected to be (what our author describes Pericles as having been, i. 139) λέγειν τε καὶ πράττειν ἱκανώτατος.

In οὐκ ἀπήλλακτο, 'was not destitute of,' we have an elegant idiom, such as is found in the best writers. So Lucian, ii. 289, οὐκ ἀπήλλακται γραφικῆς. Aristid. iii. 358, οὔτε συγγνώμης ἀπήλλακτο. Jos. Ant. xvii. 11, 2, τὰ πολλὰ, καὶ φύσει τῇ αὐτοῦ, (his natural genius,) προσκαινουργεῖν οὐκ ἀπηλλαγμένον, and Ant. xix. 3, 1.

6. τό τε ἄμεινον — μάλιστα] The full meaning intended is, 'He looked forward and discerned the better or worse [course to take] in a matter of which the issue was as yet unapparent,' hitherto buried in the womb of uncertain futurity. Evidently imitated from these are the similar words of Arrian, E. A. vii. 28, 4, ξυνιδεῖν δὲ τὸ δέον, ἔτι ἐν τῷ ἀφανεῖ ὄν, δεινότατος, μάλιστα· καὶ, τὸ ξύμπαν εἰπεῖν, φύσεως μὲν δυνάμει μελέτης δὲ βραχύτητι κράτιστος δὴ οὗτος αὐτοσχεδιάζειν τὰ δέοντα ἐγένετο. 7. νοσήσας δὲ τελευτᾷ τὸν βίον· λέγουσι δέ τινες καὶ ἑκούσιον φαρμάκῳ ἀποθανεῖν αὐτὸν, ἀδύνατον νομίσαντα εἶναι ἐπιτελέσαι βασιλεῖ ἃ ὑπέσχετο. 8. μνημεῖον μὲν οὖν αὐτοῦ ἐν Μαγνησίᾳ ἐστὶ τῇ Ἀσιανῇ ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ· ταύτης γὰρ ἦρχε τῆς χώρας, δόντος βασιλέως αὐτῷ Μαγνησίαν μὲν ἄρτον,—ἣ προσέφερε πεντήκοντα τάλαντα τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ,—Λάμψακον δὲ οἶνον, (ἐδόκει γὰρ πολυοινότατον τῶν τότε εἶναι,) Μυοῦντα δὲ ὄψον. 9. τὰ δὲ ὀστᾶ φασι κομισθῆναι αὐτοῦ οἱ and of Dion. Hal. Ant. 394, ὀξὺς τῇ γνώμῃ προϊδεῖν τι τῶν ἐσομένων ἐκ πολλοῦ. On the construction of τὸ ξύμπαν εἰπεῖν, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 54, 5. Of αὐτοσχεδιάζειν τὰ δέοντα the sense is, 'to suggest off-hand what was proper to be done [in any emergency].' So in Isid. Epist. iv. 205, we have αὐτοσχεδιάζειν τὸ δέον, and in Xen. Hist. v. 2, 32, τὰ τοιαῦτα αὐτοσχ., 'ex tempore agere.' By μελέτης βραχύτητι is not denoted (according to the explanation of Arn.) 'scantiness of acquired learning'—for the words are susceptible of no such sense—but the 'shortness of preparation by study' that he needed, for action. Yet the observation of Arnold is not the less true, that 'his wisdom was so little the result of study, that sudden emergencies did not perplex him as they would do those, who, being accustomed to trust wholly to it, are called on at once to act without it.' This passage of our author has been imitated by Agath. p. 22, in depicting the character of Narses.

7. νοσήσας] for νόσῳ, 'by disease,' as opposed to violent death; 'morbo discessit:' for the word is here emphatic. So Pausan. viii. 4, 7, τὸν μὲν νοσήσαντα ἐπιλαμβάνει τὸ χρεών. Isæus: ἐτελεύτησε νοσήσας. The more usual phrase is νόσῳ τελ.

8. Μαγνησίαν μὲν ἄρτον] 'Magnesia for bread.' In this idiom (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 433, obs. 2) we have most frequently the addition of εἰς, which is found in various similar passages adduced by me in note in Transl. On the custom itself of assigning to any one certain cities (meaning the government thereof, and the taxes accruing from thence), I have there treated at large. Suffice it here to say, that it is one of remote antiquity; vestiges of it being found in Homer, where we have Agamemnon offering to Achilles, as the price of reconciliation, seven cities, each possessing some peculiar excellence. And so in like manner, in Athen. p. 30, A, Cyrus is said to have thus presented to his friend seven cities. See also Plut. Anton. 37, and Philostr. Vit. Ap. ii. 31. In those cases, however, the government, as well as the receiving of the taxes, is to be supposed; an allusion to which is found in a passage of St. Luke, xix. 17, ἴσθι ἐξουσίαν ἔχων ἐπάνω δέκα πόλεων: whereas, in the present instance, the receiving of the taxes seems to be that chiefly implied in the purpose subjoined. And so in Athen. 534, D, it is said of Alcibiades: εἰς δὲ τὰς ἀποδημίας ὁπότε στέλλοιτο, τέσσαρσι τῶν συμμαχίδων πόλεων, ὥσπερ θεραπαίναις ἐχρῆτο. Σκηνὴν μὲν γὰρ αὐτῷ Περσικὴν ἔπηξαν Ἐφέσιοι, τρυφὴν δὲ τοῖς ἵπποις αὐτοῦ Χῖοι παρεῖχον· ἱερεῖα δὲ παρίστασαν εἰς τὰς θυσίας καὶ κρεανομίας Κυζικηνοὶ, Λέσβιοι δὲ οἶνον παρεῖχον, καὶ τὰ ἄλλα τὰ πρὸς τὴν καθ' ἡμέραν δίαιταν. And in Herodot. ii. 98, a city in Egypt is said to be given to the queen, to provide her with shoes. Also at i. 192, and in Xen. An. i. 4, 9, mention is made of villages given to the queen-mother, to supply her with jewels for her girdle, and other articles of ornamental costume. And in Athen. p. 33, F, Atylla is said to be given ταῖς γαμεταῖς εἰς ζώνας. The custom, indeed, has continued in the East even unto the present times, Athens having been assigned to the Sultana for pin-money; and Jerusalem to the concubines, for a similar use.

Μυοῦντα δὲ ὄψον] Namely, as having, says Diodorus, θάλατταν εὔιχθυν. And that ὄψον generally means fish, has been sufficiently established. Yet I am inclined to think that this was a later use. The term originally signified, 'whatever was used with bread—the staff of life, as an addition' by way of condiment, whether flesh, or fish, or vegetables, or whatever else gave a seasoning to bread. So Phavorinus says, ὄψα λέγονται τὰ τοῦ σίτου ἡδύσματα. Examples of every one of these uses are frequent in Xenophon. And that the word also denoted fruits, nay even what we call sweetmeats, would appear from Xen. Mem. i. 5, 4, ὄψῳ καὶ προσήκοντες οἴκαδε, κελεύσαντος ἐκείνου, καὶ τεθῆναι κρύφα Ἀθηναίων ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ· οὐ γὰρ ἐξῆν θάπτειν, ὡς ἐπὶ προδοσίᾳ φεύγοντος. 10. τὰ μὲν κατὰ Παυσανίαν τὸν Λακεδαιμόνιον καὶ Θεμιστοκλέα τὸν Ἀθηναῖον, λαμπροτάτους γενομένους τῶν καθ' ἑαυτοὺς Ἑλλήνων, οὕτως ἐτελεύτησεν.

CXXXIX. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ ἐπὶ μὲν τῆς πρώτης πρεσβείας ταῦτα ἐπέταξάν τε καὶ ἀντεκελεύσθησαν περὶ τῶν ἐναγῶν τῆς ἐλάσεως· ὕστερον δὲ φοιτῶντες παρ' Ἀθηναίους Ποτιδαίας τε ἀπανίστασθαι ἐκέλευον καὶ Αἴγιναν αὐτόνομον ἀφιέναι· καὶ μάλιστά γε πάντων καὶ ἐνδηλότατα προὔλεγον, τὸ περὶ Μεγαρέων ψήφισμα καθελοῦσι μὴ ἂν γενέσθαι πόλεμον, ἐν ᾧ εἴρητο αὐτοὺς μὴ χρῆσθαι τοῖς λιμέσι τοῖς ἐν τῇ Ἀθηναίων ἀρχῇ μηδὲ τῇ Ἀττικῇ ἀγορᾷ. 2. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι οὔτε τἆλλα ὑπήκουον οὔτε τὸ ψήφισμα καθῄρουν, ἐπικαλοῦντες ἐπεργασίαν Μεγαρεῦσι τῆς γῆς τῆς ἱερᾶς καὶ τῆς ἀορίστου, οἴνῳ χαίροντα μᾶλλον ἢ τοῖς φίλοις. But in the present instance it seems to merely include flesh and fish, and possibly vegetables.

CH. CXXXIX. Our author now resumes the thread of the story, broken off at ch. 127.

1. προὔλεγον] 'apprised them.' The word is used of any formal notice previously given.

2. ἐπικαλοῦντες ἐπεργασίαν Μεγ.] Such is the full construction of ἐπικαλέω, namely, an accus. of thing and dat. of pers., as in Jos. p. 28, 8, ἐπ. εὐήθειαν τοῖς λεγ., and 864, 12, ἀπιστίαν ἐπ. τῷ πεπραχότι. App. ii. 724, 95, μικρὰ ἐπ. αὐτοῖς. Render, 'charging upon the Megareans a cultivation of the sacred and uninclosed land,' namely, on the frontiers, which (as observes Arnold) 'was consecrated, to prevent its being inclosed; in which case the boundaries might have been made a subject of perpetual disputes between the two nations.' Yet private inclosures could have nothing to do with the borders of the country: and more to the purpose were it to say, that it was consecrated, to prevent it from being appropriated as private property, and consequently inclosed; which, if ploughed and sown, it must have been. Another and principal reason was, that any examples of appropriation of land as private property, might have led to disputes between the two countries, arising out of disputes between the individuals of one with the other. It was therefore kept uninclosed, and only occupied in common as public pasture. Hence it was ἀόριστος, 'not defined, or its boundaries marked out by certain limits or landmarks;' which, as Arn. observes, 'were only placed when land was brought into cultivation, and distributed among particular individuals.' Ἐπεργασίαν here stands for ἐργασίαν, as ἐπεργάζεσθαι for ἐργάζ. in Pausan. i. 36, 3, and x. 15, 1. Diod. Sic. vol. i. 260. Liban. Or. 506. Arrian, E. A. vi. 18, 10. Æschin. p. 69, 28, ἐπειργάζοντο τὸ πεδίον (that being the τέμενος, consecrated to the god). Lucian, Tim. 17, τούτονι τὸν ἀγρὸν ἐπεργαζόμενος. Plato, p. 843, C, ἐπεργ. τὰ τοῦ γείτονος, ὑπερβαίνων τοὺς ὅρους. Perhaps, however, the ἐπι may not be quite pleonastic, but may bear the sense upon, and thus the term may signify to bestow one's labour upon land. The only example besides the present of ἐπεργασία in this sense, is, I believe, one found in Plato, 843, C, περὶ ἐπεξεργασίας ξυμπάσης. Goeller, indeed, supposes our author to have meant to distinguish the sacred territory, meaning that land sacred to the Eleusinian goddesses, Ceres and Proserpine, the glebe-land of the temple at Eleusis, and the debateable, and therefore not marked out by certain limits, but left common to both countries, not, however, to be broken up, but occupied in common pasture. But the land in question could not be the glebe of the temple of Eleusis; for that would be too far off, and the Megareans could have no shadow of right to cultivate it, since it was not on the borders. It was doubtless that strip of border-land between the two countries, which had been consecrated to the gods, in order that it might be kept uninclosed and unappropriated. Finally, the use of the article at ἀορίστου by no means compels us to adopt the view proposed by Goell.; and utterly opposed to it καὶ ἀνδραπόδων ὑποδοχὴν τῶν ἀφισταμένων. 3. τέλος δὲ ἀφικομένων τῶν τελευταίων πρέσβεων ἐκ Λακεδαίμονος, Ῥαμφίου τε καὶ Μελησίππου καὶ Ἀγησάνδρου, καὶ λεγόντων ἄλλο μὲν οὐδὲν ὧν πρότερον εἰώθεσαν, αὐτὰ δὲ τάδε, ὅτι "Λακεδαιμόνιοι βούλονται τὴν εἰρήνην εἶναι· εἴη δ' ἄν, εἰ τοὺς Ἕλληνας αὐτονόμους ἀφεῖτε" ποιήσαντες ἐκκλησίαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, γνώμας σφίσιν αὐτοῖς προὐτίθεσαν, καὶ ἐδόκει ἅπαξ, περὶ ἁπάντων βουλευσαμένους, ἀποκρίνασθαι. 4. καὶ παριόντες ἄλλοι τε πολλοὶ ἔλεγον, ἐπ' ἀμφότερα γιγνόμενοι ταῖς γνώμαις, καὶ ὡς χρὴ πολεμεῖν καὶ ὡς μὴ ἐμπόδιον εἶναι τὸ ψήφισμα εἰρήνης, ἀλλὰ καθελεῖν· καὶ παρελθὼν Περικλῆς ὁ Ξανθίππου, ἀνὴρ κατ' ἐκεῖνον τὸν χρόνον πρῶτος Ἀθηναίων, λέγειν τε καὶ πράσσειν δυνατώτατος, παρῄνει τοιάδε.

CXL. "Τῆς μὲν γνώμης, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἀεὶ τῆς αὐτῆς ἔχομαι, μὴ εἴκειν Πελοποννησίοις, καίπερ εἰδὼς τοὺς ἀνθρώπους οὐ τῇ αὐτῇ ὀργῇ is the passage he cites in support of it from Helladius, iv. ὀργάδα δὲ ἰδίως ἐκάλουν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὴν ταῖν θεαῖν ἀνειμένην, τῆς Ἀττικῆς μεταξὺ καὶ τῆς Μεγαρίδος, for the sacred glebe could not be between the two countries, but must have been five or six miles within the territory of Attica.

3. γνώμας σφίσιν αὐτοῖς προὐτίθεσαν] An unusual phrase, for which other writers have γνώμας, or λόγον προτιθέναι, or ποιεῖσθαι, (see on iii. 38, 1,) without the addition here found; which, however, may be accounted for from the verb in question including in itself an idea of giving. On the thing itself, see Schœm. de Comit. Athen. p. 104. Ἅπαξ, 'once for all:' in which sense the word is used by Liban. Or. p. 228. Herodian, vii. 10, 3. Appian, i. 150, 38. Ælian, Var. Hist. xiii. 24. Ps. lxii. 11, and lxxxix. 35. Hebr. ix. 97. We may best construe it with βουλευσαμένους: but it may be meant for both βουλ. and ἀποκρίνασθαι.

4. ἐπ' ἀμφότερα γιγνόμενοι ταῖς γνώμαις] Supply μέρη. The phrase is one so unusual, that I know of no other example except one in a passage, evidently imitated from the present, of Dio Cass. p. 65, ἐπ' ἀμφότερα ταῖς γνώμαις γενόμεναι. Of the phrase ἐπ' ἀμφότερα frequent examples occur; e. g. infra ii. 11. iv. 58. vii. 48. vi. 60, and Herodot. iii. 87. viii. 22.

ὁ Ξανθίππου] That the father of Pericles was a person of no ordinary merit, we may infer from what is said of him by Timocreon ap. Plut. Them. ch. 21, Ἀλλ' εἰ τύ γε Παυσανίαν, ἢ καὶ τύ γε Ξάνθιππον αἰνεῖς, ἢ τύγε Λευτυχίδαν· ἐγὼ δ' Ἀριστείδαν ἐπαινῶ.

λέγειν τε καὶ πράσσειν δυνατώτατος] i. e. both an orator and a statesman. See supra ch. 138, 3, and my note on Acts vii. 22.

CH. CXL. In this able address Pericles endeavours to rouse the Athenians to determined resistance; first, by strongly appealing to their pride, and at the same time showing them that there was nothing to be gained by concession, since compliance with present demands would only call forth future ones, until independence itself would be yielded up: in short, that they had only to choose between unconditional submission and uncompromising resistance. In section 1 we have the Proeme of the oration.

1. ἔχομαι] 'I adhere to.' The term ἔχεσθαι properly signifies, 'to entwine oneself about any thing or person,' (as Eurip. Hec. 402, ὅμοια, κισσὸς ἕρνος ὅπως. τῆσδ' ἕξομαι,) and thence, by implication, 'to lay fast hold of,' and 'to keep fast hold of,' as Xen. An. vi. 3, 17, κοινῇ τῆς σωτηρίας ἔχεσθαι. Stob. p. 373, τοῦ κερδαίνειν ἔχεσθαι. Hence, also, it signifies 'to stick to, keep to any thing;' and, as said of an opinion or purpose—here and infra viii. 81—to persevere in it. Accordingly it is a stronger expression than τῇ γνώμῃ or τῆς αὐτῆς γνώμης εἶναι.

ὀργῇ] This may mean, as the Schol. explains, τρόπῳ, 'disposition of mind,' (on which sense see Blomf. on Æsch. Prom. 368,) but, from the want of evidence for such a signification in Thucydides, I prefer to take it in the sense,—not unfrequent in our author, and found in Soph. El. 1010. Æsch. Suppl. 1770,—impetu, animi ardore: a sense, moreover, confirmed by the gloss (for such it is) found in some few MSS., ἀναπειθομένους τε πολεμεῖν καὶ ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ πράσσοντας, πρὸς δὲ τὰς ξυμφορὰς καὶ τὰς γνώμας τρεπομένους. 2. ὁρῶ δὲ καὶ νῦν ὁμοῖα καὶ παραπλήσια ξυμβουλευτέα μοι ὄντα· καὶ τοὺς ἀναπειθομένους ὑμῶν δικαιῶ τοῖς κοινῇ δόξασιν, ἢν ἄρα τι καὶ σφαλλώμεθα, βοηθεῖν· ἢ μηδὲ, κατορθοῦντας, τῆς ξυνέσεως μεταποιεῖσθαι. 3. ἐνδέχεται γὰρ τὰς ξυμφορὰς τῶν πραγμάτων οὐχ ἧσσον ἀμαθῶς χωρῆσαι ἢ ὁρμῇ. See infra v. 70. Render, 'Men do not feel the same ardour when they are persuaded to undertake a war, as when engaged in its actual exercise.' The reason for this difference is, that in the one case the ideas of injury suffered, and of glory to be gained, entirely occupy the mind, to the exclusion of all thoughts of danger (which only present themselves in the war itself): or at least, if they do occur, each thinks his neighbour may fall, not himself: a principle, this, glanced at by Dr. Young, in the well-known words, 'All men think all men mortal but themselves;' and which is touched on with a masterly hand by Euripides, Suppl. 481, Ὅταν γὰρ ἔλθῃ πόλεμος εἰς ψῆφον πόλεως, Οὐδεὶς ἔθ' αὑτοῦ θάνατον ἐκλογίζεται, Τὸ δυστυχὲς δὲ τοῦτ' ἐς ἄλλον ἐκτρέπει.

πρὸς δὲ τὰς ξυμφορὰς καὶ τὰς γνώμας τρεπομένους] The construction is, τρεπομένους δὲ καὶ τὰς γνώμας πρὸς τὰς ξυμφορὰς, 'but that they changed in their mind, according to events;' meaning, as Goeller says, 'homines sensus et cogitationes fortunæ casibus accommodare.' Thus in τὰς ξυμφορὰς we have a term mediæ significationis, (on which see the commentators on Soph. Œd. Tyr. 44,) and consequently equivalent to τὰς ξυμπιπτούσας τύχας, as i. 84, and Eurip. Hipp. 698, πρὸς δὲ τὰς τύχας γὰρ τὰς φρένας κεκτημένος. Similarly in Heliod. t. ii. 251, 12, we have, φιλεῖ γὰρ ἄνθρωπος πρὸς τὰ συμπίπτοντα τρέπειν τὴν γνώμην, 'to change in their minds.'

ὁμοῖα καὶ παραπλήσια] 'the same as, or, nearly the same [as before].' So Demosth. Olynth. 3, ὁμοίως καὶ παραπλησίως. Isocr. Areop. § 35, ὁμοίας καὶ παραπλησίας. Athen. p. 87, A, ex emend. Pors. ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ παραπλησίως. Τοὺς ἀναπειθομένους ὑμῶν, 'those of you who are persuaded that we should go to war.' Τοῖς κοινῇ δόξασιν, 'the common resolves.' Βοηθεῖν is here used as infra ii. 63, τῆς πόλεως τῷ τιμωμένῳ βοηθεῖν.

ἢ μηδὲ, κατορθοῦντας, τῆς ξυνέσεως μεταποιεῖσθαι] 'or else do not, if success attends us, claim to yourselves the praise of cleverness.' The ἢ, else, must mean, 'or if you are not disposed to support the public resolves, should success attend them; or else, not claim the praise of events to which you contributed nothing.' So infra ii. 64, 1, οὐ δικαίως (μισοῦμαι) εἰ μὴ καὶ ὅταν παρὰ λόγον τι εὖ πράξητε ἐμοὶ ἀναθήσετε. The difficulty here centres in κατορθοῦντας, on which Goell. has well treated, explaining, 'Aut manete in sententia communiter adoptata, aut si publice decreta in rebus adversis teneri nolitis, ne tum quidem prudentiam jactate, quum recte processerit, neve vobis tribuite successum consiliorum, quæ minime juveritis, quia sic felices tantum vos jure dicetis, non item prudentes.' And he remarks, 'Quod autem dicit κατορθοῦντας, non intelliguntur jam soli οἱ ἀναπειθόμενοι, sed includuntur etiam cives civium sententiam mutantium, et proinde omnes Athenienses. Nihilominus κατορθοῦντας dixit et non κατορθούντων, quia idem subjectum intelligitur, modo ex parte, modo totum.' Thus κατορθοῦντας, scil. ἡμᾶς, (in which we have the use of the acc. abs., as Acts xxvi. 3, γνώστην ὄντα,) stands for ἡν κατορθῶμεν.

3. ἐνδέχεται γὰρ — αἰτιᾶσθαι] Goeller supposes these words to contain the reason why those who rashly change their mind, even should things turn out well, ought not to claim to themselves the praise of prudence. 'Because even inconsiderate counsels may be favoured by fortune, and yet the counsel itself so taken be not at all the less deserving of blame. And hence those whose expectation is frustrated by the event, in that case, instead of blaming their own counsels, blame the caprice of fortune.' I prefer, however, with Poppo, to suppose here a reason given how it should be, that what was once prudently decided on, should afterwards have an unfavourable issue. The γὰρ will thus have reference to certain words to be supplied from the subject-matter—either, according to Poppo, the following: ['It is indeed no wonder that adverse accidents should fall out,] for the events of human affairs hold their course not less ἀμαθῶς than the thoughts and cogitations of men'—or, according to Arnold, as follows: ['Your minds must be prepared for unexpected reverses;] for events are as little to be surely calculated on as the counsels of men.' Or rather, it may be supposed that we have here a sententia generalis, applied to the present case, and that the words here left to be supplied contain that general sentiment of which the words ἐνδέχεται γὰρ—ἀνθρώπου furnish the reason. Supply, therefore, from the words immediately preceding [χρὴ δὲ μὴ μεταποιεῖσθαι τῆς ξυνέσεως περὶ τῶν πραγμάτων·] ἐνδέχεται γὰρ, 'usu enim venire solet,' &c. as in Aristot. Rhet. i. 2, 7. Διανοίας, consilia, 'designs, plans, purposes.' Ἀμαθῶς, i. e. 'in a manner not to be learnt,' or comprehended, past all comprehension. See note on ἀπίστως, supra i. 21. Τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, man, meaning the species, men; in which sense the art. is generally used by the best writers, though sometimes omitted. In the inferior and later writers it is generally left out (though sometimes expressed), as in a passage of St. Matth. iv. 4, οὐκ ἐπ' ἄρτῳ μόνῳ ζήσεται ἄνθρωπος.

The next words, διόπερ καὶ—αἰτιᾶσθαι, are exegetical of the sentiment contained in ἀμαθῶς χωρῆσαι (namely, that the ξυμφοραὶ τῶν πραγμάτων are not to be calculated upon); q. d. 'Wherefore [or, accordingly] also we are wont to regard fortune as the author of such events as fall out contrary to our expectation;' meaning to intimate (as Arnold observes), that 'by ascribing to fortune whatever happens contrary to reasonable expectation, we admit the existence of a power, in its essence capricious and irregular, whereby we may expect the course of events to proceed in a manner that could not have been beforehand calculated upon.' Of αἰτιᾶσθαι the sense is here, not to accuse, but, according to the primary signification of the word, causam esse dicere or attribuere; of which use see an example, in a passage cited by Steph. Thes. from Demosth. de Cor., where αἰτίαν ἡγεῖσθαι τὴν τύχην and αἰτιᾶσθαι τὴν τύχην are regarded as tantamount in sense. The same also has place in Dio Cass. 147, 82, and not unfrequently in Plato.

4. δῆλοι ἦσαν ἐπιβουλεύοντες] Compare supra ch. 71, δῆλοι ὦσι μὴ ἐπιτρέψοντες. On this idiomatical use of δῆλοι (as in δῆλος ἦν, τοῦτο ποιῶν, ποιῆσαι, and ποιήσων), see Steph. Thes. in voc., and especially Vig. Herm. p. 8. Εἰρημένον, scil. ὄν, 'though it had been said [in the treaty];' nom. absol., on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 564. So infra v. 30, 39, and γεγραμμένον, v. 56, and Aristoph. Lysist. 13. For διαφόρων, six of the best MSS. have διαφορῶν, which has been edited by Haack and Pop., while the vulg. διαφόρων is retained by Bekk. and Goell.; and properly; for our author uses διαφορὰ only in the sense a difference or dispute; τὸ διάφορον chiefly in the sense a disputed point, matter for dispute, a point at issue; as supra i. 78, τὰ δὲ διάφορα δίκῃ λύεσθαι. And so Dio Cass. 311, 51, τοῦ Πτολεμαίου καὶ τῆς Κλεοπάτρας διάφορα διακρίνων: and such seems to be the sense intended here. The common reading and interpretation are alike confirmed by a passage, evidently imitated from the present, in Lucian, Pisc. § 8, δίκῃ δὲ τὰ διάφορα διαλύεσθαι, διδόντας λόγους καὶ δεχομένους. Yet even were the sense intended differences, τὰ διάφορα would as well express this as διαφοραί. And from its being the less common term, it is the more likely here to be genuine, especially as external authority is quite in its favour; and it is, moreover, supported by the above imitation in Lucian.

ἐπιτάσσοντες] 'dictating.' The word is a vox solennis de hac re, as infra τι μεῖζον ἐπιταχθήσεσθε. It rarely occurs in the absolute use; but so Theocr. Id. xv. 90, πασάμενος ἐπίτασσε, quarum dominus sis, iis impera; where Kiessling appositely cites Soph. Œd. Col. 839, μὴ 'πίτασσ' ἃ μὴ κρατεῖς. Eurip. Suppl. 521, εἰ 'πιταξόμεθα δὴ, 'if, forsooth, we shall be dictated to.' Menand. ap. Plut. de Tranq. Anim. 11, γυνὴ κρατεῖ πάντων, ἐπιτάττει.

πάρεισι. 5. Ποτιδαίας τε γὰρ ἀπανίστασθαι κελεύουσι, καὶ Αἴγιναν αὐτόνομον ἀφιέναι καὶ τὸ Μεγαρέων ψήφισμα καθαιρεῖν· οἱ δὲ τελευταῖοι οἵδε ἥκοντες καὶ τοὺς Ἕλληνας προαγορεύουσιν αὐτονόμους ἀφιέναι. 6. ὑμῶν δὲ μηδεὶς νομίσῃ περὶ βραχέος ἂν πολεμεῖν, εἰ τὸ Μεγαρέων ψήφισμα μὴ καθέλοιμεν·—ὅπερ μάλιστα προὔχονται, εἰ καθαιρεθείη, μὴ ἂν γίγνεσθαι τὸν πόλεμον·—μηδ' ἐν ὑμῖν αὐτοῖς αἰτίαν ὑπολίπησθε, ὡς δι' μικρὸν ἐπολεμήσατε. 7. τὸ γὰρ βραχύ τι τοῦτο πᾶσαν ὑμῶν ἔχει τὴν βεβαίωσιν καὶ πεῖραν τῆς γνώμης. 8. οἷς εἰ ξυγχωρήσετε, καὶ ἄλλο τι μεῖζον εὐθὺς ἐπιταχθήσεσθε, ὡς φόβῳ καὶ τοῦτο ὑπακούσαντες· ἀπισχυρισάμενοι δὲ, σαφὲς ἂν ‡ καταστήσαιτε αὐτοῖς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ὑμῖν μᾶλλον προσ-

5. Ποτιδαίας ἀπανίστασθαι] 'to evacuate Potidæa;' implying an abandonment of all claim to it. See note supra ch. 139, 1. With προαγορεύουσι compare προὔλεγον supra i. 139. Either term is stronger than κελεύειν, and signifies 'to order a thing to be done, or beware beforehand' (προ) of the consequences of refusal. So infra iv. 97, fin. προαγορεύειν αὐτούς. Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 12, προηγόρευον (οἱ κήρυκες) ὡς πάντες ἀποθανοῦνται: and Anab. ii. 2, 10. Hist. iv. 8, 6. Mem. i. 2, 35, σοὶ προαγορεύω μὴ ἅπτεσθαί μου.

6. προὔχονται] for προβάλλονται. Of the words following, μηδ' ἐν ὑμῖν αὐτοῖς—ἐπολεμήσατε, the sense is, 'nor leave in your minds aught of reproach, that you have gone to war for a trifling matter.'

7. τὸ γὰρ βραχύ τι—γνώμης] "For this 'trifling matter' contains the entire proof and test of your mind," i. e. how you stand affected towards the Lacedæmonians, whether you fear them or not. By the term βεβαίωσις is denoted properly confirmation; though also, by a metonymy of cause for effect, such a proof as shall furnish confirmation of any thing: or there may be in βεβαίωσιν καὶ πεῖραν a hendiadys to signify proof or trial: and so Rom. v. 4, ἡ δὲ ὑπομονὴ δοκιμὴν (κατεργάζεται), ἡ δὲ δοκιμὴ ἐλπίδα, where δοκιμὴν is equivalent to πεῖραν, proof by test.

8. οἷς] Arn. compares a similar idiom infra iv. 26, 4, οὓς ᾧοντο ἡμερῶν ὀλίγων ἐκπολιορκήσειν, where the relative, in like manner, has no regular antecedent, but is to be resolved into the demonstr. pronoun with such a conjunction as the sense requires. Yet in the present passage, at least, there is an antecedent in the subject of the verb προὔχονται found at section 6, which must be referred to Λακεδαιμόνιοι at section 4. And there is the less harshness here in the remoteness between the relative and antecedent, since the words μηδ' ἐν ὑμῖν—γνώμης are in some measure parenthetical. At εἰ ξυγχωρήσετε supply τοῦτο. Ἐπιταχθήσεσθε is equiv. to ἐπιταχθήσεται ὑμῖν. The words καὶ τοῦτο have reference (as Pop. and Goell. show) not to ἄλλο τι μεῖζον, but to τὸ βραχύ τι τοῦτο at section 7. So Goeller renders, 'aliud majus vobis imperabunt, quasi metu perculsi, in illa re ad speciem leviori morem eis gesseritis;' supporting this sense by a passage, imitated from the present, in Dion. Hal. Ant. 1130, ὥστε, εἰ τὰ πρῶτα συγχωρήσετε, ἕτερόν τι χεῖρον εὐθὺς ἐπιταχθήσεσθε, ὡς φόβῳ ὑπακούσαντες καὶ τὰ πρῶτα.

ἀπισχυρισάμενοι] scil. τοῦτο, 'by stiffly refusing this.' So Plut. x. 383, 8, ταῦτα ἀπισχυρισάμενοι: and Vit. Cleom. xvi. Dio Cass. 153, 90. The word signifies properly, 'to strengthen oneself in warding off any attack, or rejecting any request.' Thus the accus., when it carries one, is governed, not by the verb itself, but by the one implied in ἀπ. Though in Plut. vi. 301, we have prefixed a prepos. to the accus. ἀπισχυρισάμενος πρὸς ἔντευξιν τοῦ, &c.

καταστήσαιτε] So Bekker edits, from several MSS.; while Poppo and Goeller adopt the reading of several of the best MSS., καταστήσετε. I have preferred the former, not only from its being supported by superior external evidence, (and indeed further confirmed by vulg. καταστήσητε, very properly rejected on the ground of being soloecistic,) but from its being also borne out by internal evidence; since it is easy to imagine that the scribes would alter καταστήσαιτε into καταστήσετε, but not vice versâ. Of the phrase σαφὲς ἂν καταστήσαιτε, the sense may be expressed by 'planum ipsis efficietis,' as infra ii. 42, τὴν εὐλογίαν—φανερὰν καθιστάς: and so also in two passages of Isocrates, cited by Steph. in his Thes. in voc. Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου signifies 'on equal terms;' and αὐτοῖς προσφέρεσθαι, 'to deal with them, treat with them.' See my Lex. N. T. in v. iii.

φέρεσθαι. CXLI. Αὐτόθεν δὴ διανοήθητε ἢ ὑπακούειν πρίν τι βλαβῆναι, ἢ, εἰ πολεμήσομεν,—ὡς ἔμοιγε ἄμεινον δοκεῖ εἶναι,—καὶ ἐπὶ μεγάλῃ καὶ ἐπὶ βραχείᾳ ὁμοίως προφάσει μὴ εἴξοντες, μηδὲ ξὺν φόβῳ ἕξοντες ἃ κεκτήμεθα· τὴν γὰρ αὐτὴν δύναται δούλωσιν ἥ τε μεγίστη καὶ ἐλαχίστη δικαίωσις ἀπὸ τῶν ὁμοίων πρὸ δίκης τοῖς πέλας ἐπιτασσομένη. 2. τὰ δὲ τοῦ πολέμου καὶ τῶν ἑκατέροις ὑπαρχόντων ὡς οὐκ ἀσθενέστερα ἕξομεν, γνῶτε καθ' ἕκαστον ἀκούοντες. 3. αὐτουργοί τε γάρ εἰσι Πελοποννήσιοι, καὶ οὔτε ἰδίᾳ προσφέρεσθαι, 'to deal with them, treat with them.' See my Lex. N. T. in v. iii.

Ch. CXLI. 1. αὐτόθεν] 'hence,' for ἐκ τούτων, ex his [igitur]. Διανοήθητε, 'decide, determine:' a sense frequent in our author. Προφάσει means not pretext, but simply cause; the expression being nearly equiv. to our matter. Εἴξοντες and ἕξοντες, a little after, may be regarded as participles for infinitives, εἴξειν and ἕξειν; or from πολεμήσομεν we may supply πολεμεῖν. Goell. supposes that the expression is rather framed ad sensum than ἀπὸ κοινοῦ, and thus that we should repeat from the verb διανοήθητε the term παρασκευάζεσθε: a view, Poppo says, which he should be inclined to adopt, if a verbum cogitandi could be understood. But διανοήθητε,—which must here be repeated from the preceding context,—is in fact such; and, when thus repeated, will admit of the sense (no other, indeed, than the primary signification of the word) 'make up your minds;' thus equivalent to παρασκευάζεσθε μὴ εἴξοντες, or rather, as customary usage would require, παρ. ὡς μὴ εἴξοντες. There is, it is true, something unusual in the omission of the ὡς,—that word being almost always in such a case expressed both in Thucyd. and Xenoph. with participles both aorist and future, as παρασκευάζεσθαι ὡς μαχούμενοι, ὡς ἐξιόντες. Yet of its omission another instance is found in Xen. Hist. iv. 1, 41, παρασκευάζετε πορευσόμενοι. In short, the only real harshness that here exists, is in the use of μὴ before a participle; of which I know of no example elsewhere. But since the use of the participle, with or without ὡς, after verbs of preparing or intending, is found to denote preparation for the future, or intention as to the future, there is nothing objectionable in the use of the participle with μὴ, to denote non-intention as to the future; namely, that we, according to the literal sense here of διανοεῖσθαι, 'have made up our minds not to do a thing.'

δύναται] 'valet.' See Vig. p. 234, and Dobree on lib. v. 20. Δικαίωσις properly signifies a request; but here, demand, requisition. Ἀπὸ τῶν ὁμοίων, 'from equals.' Πρὸ δίκης, 'previous to judicial decision.'

2. The speaker now proceeds to encourage them in this resolution not to yield, by showing, on a contrast of the means and resources of the two confederacies, the advantages which Athens, as sovereign of a powerful empire, and mistress of great wealth, possessed, in the unity of its counsels and the promptness of its measures, over a league, like that of Lacedæmon, composed of many members, all poor; who had each a voice in every deliberation, and were divided alike in their interests and their feelings.

τὰ δὲ τοῦ πολέμου—ὑπαρχόντων] for τὰ δὲ τοῦ πολέμου καὶ τὰ ἑκατέροις ὑπάρχοντα. Compare Lys. Or. Funebr. p. 100, Reiske, ἐπιστάμενοι τὴν μὲν πόλιν ἠρημωμένην, τὴν δὲ χώραν πορθουμένην καὶ μεστὴν τῶν βαρβάρων, ἱερῶν δὲ καιομένων, ἀπάντων δ' ἐγγὺς ὄντων τῶν δεινῶν, i. e. ἱερὰ δὲ καιόμενα, ἅπαντα δ' ἐγγὺς ὄντα τὰ δεινά.

3. αὐτουργοί] Αὐτ. signifies one who does his work himself; as Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 67. But as in Lacedæmon the land was tilled almost entirely by slaves, i. e. the Helots, we must here take αὐτουργοί, as far as it regards the Lacedæmonians, to denote those who in some measure do their own work, by occupying their own land, and superintending the tillage of it, nay, sometimes co-operating in the labour. That the Lacedæmonians did attend to the business of their own farms, is plain from what follows (thus they are called γεωργοί, infra ch. 142): nay, that they did sometimes themselves work, appears from Aristoph. Lys. 1174. It would seem, however, that in what is here said, reference is had chiefly to the Peloponnesian states out of Lacedæmon, in which, there is reason to think, there were very many slaves: a view confirmed by facts which appear further on in this history; for (as Arn. observes) 'we find that the other states of Peloponnesus were very unwilling to undertake any military operations during harvest-time, because their citizens were themselves ordinarily employed at that season in getting in their crops; while to the Lacedæmonians, whose agricultural labours were wholly performed by the Helots, one season of the year was the same as another.' See iii. 15.

οὔτε ἰδίᾳ οὔτε ἐν κοινῷ χρήματά ἐστιν αὐτοῖς] This must be meant chiefly, if not entirely, of the Lacedæmonians, of whom Archidamus says the same thing, supra i. 80, fin. Compare also Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 62. The subject is well illustrated by the following passage of Aristot. Polit. ii. 9, φαύλως δὲ ἔχει καὶ περὶ κοινὰ χρήματα τοῖς Σπαρτιάταις· οὔτε γὰρ ἐν τῷ κοινῷ τῆς πόλεως ἐστὶν οὐδὲν, πολέμους μεγάλους ἀναγκαζομένοις πολεμεῖν, εἰσφέρουσί τε κακῶς· διὰ γὰρ τὸ τῶν Σπαρτιάτων εἶναι τὴν πλείστην γῆν, οὐκ ἐξετάζουσιν ἀλλήλων τὰς εἰσφοράς. From the following chapter of Aristot. it is plain that this εἰσφορὰ was a capitation tax on the male adults. Of διαποντίων the sense is, not maritime, but, as the context requires, transmarine; of which use examples occur in Æschyl. Ch. 346. Suppl. 42. Ag. 404. Pind. Pyth. v. 79: also in Dionys. Hal., Diod. Sic., Plutarch, Max. Tyr., and Polyb. By βραχέως ἐπιφέρειν is meant, 'carry on war only for a short time.'

4. οὔτε ναῦς πληροῦντες — δύνανται] The construction is, οὔτε ναῦς ἐκπέμπειν πληροῦντες οὔτε πεζὰς στρατιὰς πολλάκις [ἐκπέμπειν] δύνανται. At ἰδίων supply πραγμάτων, the sense being, 'absent from their own business.' Ἀπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν δαπανῶντες. Render, 'spending out of their own means;' for the Spartans supported themselves, in war, at their own expense, not, as was the case with the Athenians, the public.

5. αἱ δὲ περιουσίαι—ἀνέχουσι] Render, 'Now it is superabundance of possessions that can alone maintain wars, and not forced contributions [wrung from poverty].' The term βίαιοι may signify not merely forced or compulsory, but also onerous, burdensome, such as bear hard on the payer. So the Schol. says that the Lacedæmonians, from their poverty, βιαίως εἰσέφερον, i. e. βίᾳ, 'by force [alone],' and by implication, with difficulty: and in the passage above cited, εἰσφέρουσι κακῶς, i. e. ignavè, sluggishly, as only from necessity. Closely imitated from the present, are several passages, which I could adduce, of Dio Cass.

σώμασί τε ἑτοιμότεροι—πολεμεῖν] 'they are more ready to carry on a war with their persons than their property.' The next words, τὸ μὲν—προαναλώσειν, contain the reason for this, namely, 'since the one they trust may even survive the danger; the other they are not sure but they may exhaust before [the contest shall come to an end].' Πιστὸν ἔχοντες signifies 'regarding it as credible,' or to be trusted to. In ἐκ τῶν κινδύνων περιγενέσθαι there is a blending of two modes of expression, to survive, and to get out of, dangers. The κἂν has considerable force, as in a passage, evidently imitated from the present, in Dio Cass. 400, 23, ἐν ἐλπίδι κἂν περιγενέσθαι. This fond persuasion arises from each taking for granted that he, at least, shall escape, whatever may be the fate of his fellows. At βέβαιον repeat ἔχοντες. On the idiom in μὴ οὐ προαναλώσειν, see Herm. on Vig. 796, 265, and Matth. Gr. § 609, 3, a. Similarly infra viii. 71, we have, οὐδὲ πάνυ τι πιστεύων μὴ οὐκέτι ταράσσεσθαι αὐτούς. And so Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 62. 1183, 1, οὐδὲ πιστευθήσονται—μὴ οὐχὶ ὅμοια (in like manner) δράσειν (treat) τὴν ὑποδεξαμένην (πατρίδα).

ξύμμαχοι ἀντισχεῖν, πολεμεῖν δὲ † μὴ πρὸς ὁμοίαν ἀντιπαρασκευὴν ἀδύνατοι, ὅτ' ἂν μή τε βουλευτηρίῳ ἑνὶ χρώμενοι παραχρῆμά τι ὀξέως ἐπιτελῶσι, πάντες τε ἰσόψηφοι ὄντες, καὶ οὐχ ὁμόφυλοι, τὸ ἐφ' ἑαυτὸν ἕκαστος σπεύδῃ· ἐξ ὧν φιλεῖ μηδὲν ἐπιτελὲς γίγνεσθαι·—καὶ γὰρ οἱ μὲν ὡς μάλιστα τιμωρήσασθαί τινα βούλονται, οἱ δὲ ὡς ἥκιστα τὰ οἰκεῖα φθεῖραι·—χρόνιοί τε ξυνιόντες, ἐν βραχεῖ μὲν

6. μὴ πρὸς ὁμοίαν ἀντιπαρασκευὴν] Here, as elsewhere in our author (see Pop. Proleg. i. 303), there is a transposition of μὴ, which must, as Pop. shows, be taken with ὁμοίαν, in the sense disparem, of a different, and, by implication, superior kind, or what involves an over-match in combat. In the present case, this over-match on the side of the Athenians consisted in the possession of ships, money, and transmarine territories, secure by their position from any attempt of the Peloponnesians. So understood, the words involve no real difficulty; and the above view of the sense is much confirmed by a passage, evidently imitated from the present, of Jos. Bell. iii. 5, 1, where, speaking of the Roman armies and methods of warfare, as compared with the Jewish, he says, ἕπεται δὲ τὸ κρατεῖν ἀεὶ κατὰ τῶν οὐχ ὁμοίων βέβαιον, 'victory follows, sure [to happen], since the combat is maintained against those who are not on equal footing, as being overmatched by the foe.' I need scarcely remark, that μὴ ὅμοιος, like dissimilis in Latin, may imply either inferiority or superiority; and though the latter is very unusual, it is quite Thucydidean, and by no means so harsh as ἀνομοίαν would have been. The difficulty would here have been less, had our author used the term ἀντίπαλον, as he has done, in a not dissimilar passage at i. 91, οὐ γὰρ οἷόν τ' εἶναι, μὴ ἀπὸ ἀντιπάλου παρασκευῆς (for ἀπὸ μὴ ἀντιπάλου παρασκευῆς), ὁμοῖόν τι ἢ ἴσον ἐς τὸ κοινὸν βουλεύεσθαι. If, however, even this view should be thought, as it may, too harsh to be entirely acquiesced in, I would suggest that the μὴ may possibly be corrupt, and δὴ be the true reading. The words might easily be confounded; and δὲ δὴ is found not unfrequently in Herodot. and Thucyd.; in which case δὴ has, as often, a confirmative sense for sanè, and—as is shown by Hoogev. de Part. 139.—serves to introduce orationem increscentem; and so comes in, as here, in the second member of a sententia bimembris; of which an example is given by Hoogev. from a passage of Demosthenes: οἷς γάρ ἐστιν—πολιτεύεσθαι· ἐὰν δὲ δὴ καὶ πρὸς, &c. Of the above conjecture I am enabled to adduce a strong confirmation, in the fact, that Dio Cass., in a passage, p. 617, 85, evidently written with a view to the present, (because containing a term no where else found, namely, ἀντιπαρασκευή,) seems not to have had μὴ in his copy of Thucyd. His words are, οὔτε πρὸς ὁμοίαν ἡμῖν ἀντιπαρασκευὴν, ἀλλὰ πρὸς πολὺ διάφορον ἠγωνίσαντο. Admitting, then, the above to be the true reading, the sense will be, 'but to maintain a war [in opposition to fighting a single battle] against [even] an equally-matched counter-preparation (i. e. power that has made counter-preparations), they are unable:' it being implied in the emphasis laid on ὁμοίαν, that they are no match against a superior power.

ὅτ' ἂν μή τε βουλευτηρίῳ—ἐπιτελῶσι] The μὴ must be taken twice, with the partic. and with the verb, as supra i. 12, 84, 85: and the sense of the words is well expressed by Pop. 'quum neque uno concilio utentes ex tempore quicquam alacriter peragant, et,' &c.; i. e. quum et, propterea quod non uno concilio utuntur, nihil ex tempore alacriter peragant, et, &c. Βουλευτήριον, as he observes, here denotes a perpetual council (German, Bundesrath), a confederation-council, like that of the Ionians mentioned in Herodot. i. 170, ἓν βουλευτήριον Ἴωνας ἐκτῆσθαι. For the vulg. ἐφ' ἑαυτὸν, Pop. and Goell. edit ἐφ' ἑαυτῶν, from a few MSS.; while Bekk. retains the common reading, very properly, I think; for though ἑαυτῶν may seem confirmed by a passage supra i. 17, τὸ ἐφ' ἑαυτῶν μόνον προορώμενοι: yet here, as the words with which ἑαυτῶν is grammatically connected, are in the singular, there would thus be incurred a harshness unprecedented even in our author. The use of the accus. τὸ ἐπὶ σφᾶς εἶναι, needs no proof; and the use of the singular is confirmed by a passage, imitated from the present, of Livy, x. 20, 'prædæ custodes exire, ignobile agmen, et sua quemque molientem, nullo inter alios consensu.'

χρόνιοί τε ξυνιόντες] cunctabundi convenientes in ξυνόδους. Adjectives denoting time are put adverbially for adjectives or their substantives in the dative. Matth.

Gr. Gr. § 446, 8. At ἐν βραχεῖ μορίῳ supply χρόνου, from χρόνιοι, just before. With the words following, τῷ δὲ πλέονι τὰ οἰκεῖα πράσσουσι, compare similar ones in a passage of Nicocl. p. 30, D, cited by me in Transl. ; also Æschin. p. 15, 29.

7. παρὰ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ἀμέλειαν] 'by reason of, owing to, his own neglect.' Of this sense of παρὰ (which has been thought rare), I have noted examples in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 672, 17. Pol. iii. 103, 2.

μέλειν δέ τινι καὶ ἄλλῳ ὑπὲρ ἑαυτοῦ τι προϊδεῖν] 'that to forecast for him will fall to the care of, be a concern of, some other.' So Dionys. Hal. Ant. 396, 18, οἴεται ἕκαστος ὑμῶν τὸν πλησίον ὑπὲρ τοῦ κοινοῦ λέξειν. Compare also Lycurg. C. Leocr. p. 155, 44. Demosth. de Cor. p. 241, init.

ὥστε τῷ αὐτῷ—φθειρόμενον] 'insomuch that, by this same notion [that others will forecast for his safety], privately entertained by all, the public weal collectively is imperceptibly brought to ruin.' So Aristoph. Eccl. 206, Ἰδίᾳ σκοπεῖθ' ἕκαστος ὅτι τις κερδάνει· (scil. ἐκ τῶν δημοσίων χρημάτων) τὸ δὲ κοινὸν, ὥσπερ Αἴσιμος, κυλίνδεται, 'is trundled away,' as we say, kicked aside.

CH. CXLII. Pericles proceeds to show that Athens had nothing to fear from the Peloponnesians, whether by land or sea. From their want of funds, the utmost they could attempt in Attica, would be to occupy some stronghold, which might enable them to occasion annoyance to the Athenians, but would not prevent them from visiting their sea-coasts with a retaliation, such as would be the more severely felt from their depending entirely on the produce of their own territories ; while Athens drew supplies from numerous transmarine dependencies out of their reach.

ὅτ' ἂν, σχολῇ αὐτὰ ποριζόμενοι, διαμέλλωσι] 'since, by furnishing their contributions slowly and with difficulty, they must procrastinate,' i. e. be dilatory in their measures. Of the word διαμέλλω examples occur in Appian, Arrian, Dionys. Hal., Lucian, and especially Dio Cass. The next words, τοῦ πολέμου οἱ καιροὶ οὐ μενετοί, have the air of an adage, meaning that 'the times and seasons for action dally not,' do not wait till men shall lay hold of them. So Aristoph. Ach. 1620, μενετοὶ θεοὶ, 'the gods are waiting,' 'will wait,' i. e. are long-suffering ; similarly as it is said, 1 Pet. iii. 20, 'when the long-suffering of God waited,' &c. Reference to this adage may be recognised in the words of Demosth. Phil. i. p. 50, οἱ δὲ πραγμάτων καιροὶ οὐ μένουσι τὴν ἡμετέραν βραδύτητα καὶ ῥᾳθυμίαν : evidently imitated from which is a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. 699, fin. οὐ τοῖς πράγμασιν οἱ καιροὶ δουλεύουσιν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς καιροῖς τὰ πράγματα.

2. ἡ ἐπιτείχισις] Said in allusion to the ἐπιτειχισμὸς τῇ χώρᾳ threatened by the Corinthians, supra ch. 122, 1. 'Our author,' as observes Arnold, 'is here distinguishing between two different modes of fortifying (ἐπιτείχισις)—the one, by founding a city (so ἐποικίζειν, infra vii. 27) in the neighbourhood of Athens, strong enough to be a check upon her power, πόλιν ἀντίπαλον, a city equal in power to another (see iii. 9)—the other, by erecting forts in Attica, as strongholds for plundering parties to issue forth from and ravage or alarm the country. Of the former sort of ἐπιτείχισις, instances are found in the case of Megara, founded by the Dorians as a check on the Athenians, and of Heraclea in Trachinia, built to curb the Thessalonians (see infra iii. 92. v. 31) ; of the latter, Decelea forms an example.' It is very properly observed by Arnold, that πόλιν ἀντίπαλον is the accus. case following παρασκευάσασθαι, not going before it, and that the construction is, τὴν μὲν γὰρ (ἐπιτείχισιν) χαλεπὸν καὶ ἐν εἰρήνῃ παρασκευάσασθαι. But then, as every sort of ἐπιτείχισις was not difficult to accomplish, we have here inserted the words πόλιν ἀντίπαλον, as a qualification and explanation of the general statement.

παλον, παρασκευάσασθαι, ἤπου δὴ ἐν πολεμίᾳ τε, καὶ οὐχ ἧσσον ἐκείνοις ἡμῶν ἀντεπιτετειχισμένων· φρούριον δ' εἰ ποιήσονται, τῆς μὲν γῆς βλάπτοιεν ἄν τι μέρος καταδρομαῖς καὶ αὐτομολίαις, οὐ μέντοι ἱκανόν γε ἔσται ἐπιτειχίζειν τε κωλύειν ἡμᾶς πλεύσαντας ἐς τὴν ἐκείνων, καὶ, ᾗπερ ἰσχύομεν, ταῖς ναυσὶν ἀμύνεσθαι. 3. πλέον γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἔχομεν τοῦ κατὰ γῆν ἐκ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ ἐμπειρίας, ἢ ἐκεῖνοι ἐκ τοῦ κατ' ἤπειρον ἐς τὰ ναυτικά. 4. τὸ δὲ τῆς θαλάσσης ἐπιστήμονας γενέσθαι οὐ ῥᾳδίως αὐτοῖς προσγενήσεται. 5. οὐδὲ γὰρ ὑμεῖς, μελετῶντες αὐτὸ εὐθὺς ἀπὸ τῶν Μηδικῶν, ἐξείργασθέ [πω]· πῶς δὴ ἄνδρες γεωργοὶ καὶ οὐ θαλάσσιοι, καὶ προσέτι οὐδὲ μελετῆσαι ἐασόμενοι διὰ τὸ ὑφ' ἡμῶν πολλαῖς ναυσὶν ἀεὶ ἐφορμεῖσθαι, ἄξιον ἄν τι δρᾶσεν ; πρὸς μὲν γὰρ ὀλίγας ἐφορμούσας κἂν διακινδυνεύσειαν, πλήθει τὴν ἀμαθίαν θρασύνοντες· πολλαῖς δὲ εἰργόμενοι ἡσυχάσουσι· καὶ ἐν τῷ μὴ μελετῶντι ἀξυνετώτεροι ἔσονται, ἤπου δὴ] multo magis, scil. χαλεπόν. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 604. The difficulty found in ἀντεπιτετειχισμένων is not to be removed by understanding the term, with Goell., in a figurative sense, of the wooden walls of the fleet ; nor, with Arn., of crippling the power of a rival state. It is better to suppose, with H. Stephens, that the passive form has here a middle or deponent sense. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 493.

αὐτομολίαις] 'by the harbouring of deserters,' or fugitive slaves. The word is of frequent occurrence in Dio Cass.

οὐ μέντοι ἱκανὸν—ἀμύνεσθαι] 'that, however, will not be sufficient to hinder us from sailing to their territory and erecting forts [there] ; also from retaliating upon them with that arm wherewith we are strong, our navy.' The ἐπιτειχ. has reference to such forts for the support of the fleet in its incursions on the coast here, as Pylus, Methone, Budorum, Atalante, &c.

3. πλέον γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἔχομεν—ναυτικά] The scope of this remark seems to be, to encourage them to the kind of warfare in question,—hazardous as it might seem,—by showing that they would here have the vantage-ground over their foes ; q. d. And visit with a severe retaliation we may well do ; for we, from our experience in sea-service, have more skill in land-warfare, than they, from their experience in land-service, have to naval combats : the construction being this : πλέον ἔχομεν ἐμπειρίας τοῦ κατὰ γῆν ἐκ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ, ἢ ἐκεῖνοι ἐκ τοῦ κατ' ἤπειρον ἐς τὰ ναυτικά. In κατ' ἤπειρον we have a phrase for adj. ἠπειρωτικοῦ, as in Arist. iii. 343, τοῖς κατ' ἤπειρον πράγμασι, and 360.

4. τὸ δὲ τῆς θαλάσσης—προσγενήσεται] The scope of the argument is, that the want of skill in naval affairs, implied in what was just said, is a matter of no easy supply. To suppose that they could ever put their navy on a footing of rivalry with that of Athens, was, as Pericles proceeds to show, contrary to experience and probability.

5. οὐδὲ γὰρ ὑμεῖς—πω] 'for not even yourselves, who have been cultivating this skill from the time of the Median war, have yet brought it to perfection.' Of the words following, οὐδὲ μελετῆσαι ἐασόμενοι, the sense is, 'and who, moreover, will not be permitted to cultivate that skill in the face of a practised and superior enemy.' Ἐφορμούσας signifies 'the being blockaded.'

κἂν διακινδυνεύσειαν — θρασύνοντες] 'though they may even hazard a combat, emboldening their [timid] ignorance by numbers.' So Basil ap. Steph. Thes. in v. θρασύνω : θρασύνει δὲ ἄνθρωπον χειρῶν δύναμις. At εἰργόμενοι supply τῆς θαλάσσης, which word is expressed supra ch. 141 and infra ii. 85, and in a passage of Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 8. With sections 3—6 of this chapter, compare the Oration of Pericles in Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 2—11, which will supply several good illustrations of the language of Pericles here. Ἐν τῷ μὴ μελετῶντι, for ἐν τῷ μὴ μελετᾶν, 'by their want of study or practice.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 570, and Hermann on Soph. Trach. 195. Render, 'by their want of practice they will be less expert, and on that account less courageous,' 'have less alacrity to it.' So infra iv. 55, 2, ἐς τὰ πολεμικὰ ὀκνηρότεροι ἐγένοντο : and ii. 89, τῷ δὲ ἑκάτεροί τι ἐμπειρότεροι εἶναι, θρασύτεροί ἐσμεν, and vi. 62, sub fin.

καὶ δι' αὐτὸ καὶ ὀκνηρότεροι. 6. τὸ δὲ ναυτικὸν τέχνης ἐστὶν ὥσπερ καὶ ἄλλο τι, καὶ οὐκ ἐνδέχεται, ὅταν τύχῃ, ἐκ παρέργου μελετᾶσθαι, ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον μηδὲν ἐκείνῳ πάρεργον ἄλλο γίγνεσθαι. CXLIII. Εἴ τε καὶ, κινήσαντες τῶν Ὀλυμπίασιν ἢ Δελφοῖς χρημάτων, μισθῷ μείζονι πειρῷντο ἡμῶν ὑπολαβεῖν τοὺς ξένους τῶν ναυτῶν, μὴ ὄντων μὲν ἡμῶν ἀντιπάλων, ἐσβάντων αὐτῶν τε καὶ τῶν μετοίκων, δεινὸν ἂν ἦν· νῦν δὲ τόδε τε ὑπάρχει, καὶ,—ὅπερ κράτιστον,—κυβερνήτας ἔχομεν πολίτας, καὶ τὴν ἄλλην ὑπηρεσίαν πλείους καὶ ἀμείνους ἢ πᾶσα ἡ ἄλλη Ἑλλάς. 2. καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ κινδύνῳ οὐδεὶς ἂν δέξαιτο τῶν ξένων τήν τε αὐτοῦ φεύγειν, καὶ μετὰ τῆς ἥσσονος ἅμα ἐλπίδος, ὀλίγων ἡμερῶν ἕνεκα μεγάλου μισθοῦ δόσεως,

6. τὸ δὲ ναυτικὸν, &c.] 'for nautical skill is, as much as any other thing, the work of art, and does not admit of being pursued at a chance-time, or by-the-bye; nay, it rather allows not any thing else to be done with it even by-the-bye.' Ὥσπερ καὶ ἄλλο τι is like εἴπερ ἄλλο. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 617, c. The phrase ὅταν τύχῃ signifies, 'as it may happen to be convenient;' it is rare, but found also in Eurip. Iph. T. 722, and El. 1169. Eurip. ap. Plut. de Ser. Num. 2. Of ἐκ παρέργου the sense is, 'in the manner of a πάρεργον or by-work or concern.' Hesych. explains it μικρόν τι τῶν ἀναγκαίων: where I am surprised the editors should not have seen that the true reading is μικρόν τι, τὸ τῶν οὐκ ἀναγκαίων. With ἐκ παρέργου μελετᾶσθαι here, comp. other phrases elsewhere, vii. 27, οὐκ ἐκ παρ. τὸν πόλεμον ποιεῖσθαι: and Pol. iii. 58, 3, ῥητέον δέ τι οὐκ ἐκ παρέργου, ἀλλὰ ἐξ ἐπιστάσεως. Lucian, i. 89, 85, οὐ παρέργως μελετήσεται.

Ch. CXLIII. 1. In this section the speaker concludes the view he had been taking, from ch. 141, 2, of the circumstances in which the Peloponnesians stood for war with Athens; now replying to the argument supra i. 121, 3, that however poor in national wealth, or private property, great funds were within their reach, by confiscating the sacred treasures of Delphi and Olympia. Should they even, he answers, replenish their coffers, they would scarcely allure many foreigners from the service of Athens, which had a hold on them as mistress of their native cities: and that, after all, her best seamen were drawn from her own citizens; so that she would never be at a loss for hands to man her fleets. (Thirlwall.)

δεινὸν ἂν ἦν] 'that would be a reason for fear.' So infra vii. 73, νομίσας δεινὸν εἶναι. Τόδε, i. e. τὸ ἀντιπάλους αὐτοῖς ἡμᾶς εἶναι. Κυβερνήτας ἔχομεν πολίτας, 'we have steersmen [of our own] citizens,' i. e. home-born. Πολ. is meant to be emphatic; such being not the case with the Peloponnesians, who, as we learn from iv. 75, had to procure the steersmen (equivalent to our masters of men-of-war) from foreign parts. Moreover, the Athenian steersman was not only home-born, but very skilful; for the same reason, indeed, that their sailors were,—from previous practice in the merchant-service. So Xen. de Repub. Ath. i. 20, καὶ κυβερνῆται ἀγαθοὶ γίνονται δι' ἐμπειρίαν τε τῶν πλοίων καὶ διὰ μελέτην· ἐμελέτησαν δὲ οἱ μὲν πλοῖον (a bark) κυβερνῶντες, οἱ δὲ ὁλκάδα· οἱ δ' ἐντεῦθεν ἐπὶ τριήρα κατέστησαν, 'are put in charge of a trireme:' for so I would point the passage. Ὑπηρεσίαν stands here, as in Isocr. Paneg. 39, for ὑπηρεσίας, which occurs infra vi. 31, 3, or ὑπηρέτας, meaning the crew at large; who were under the command of the κυβερνήτης, with the exception of the mariners. So Arrian, E. A. vi. 1, αἱ δὲ ὑπηρεσίαι αὐτῷ ἐς τὰς ναῦς ξυνεπληρώθησαν. Comp. vii. 19.

2. καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ κινδύνῳ—ξυναγωνίζεσθαι] 'and, for the danger's sake, no one of the foreigners would bring himself to fly his country.' Δέχεσθαι has here the very rare sense,—often found in the Latin sustinere,—to bring oneself, to bear to do a thing. There is something peculiarly appropriate in the phrase φεύγειν τὴν [γῆν], since the very act of taking service with the enemies of their country (which was in subject-alliance with Athens) would involve exile from that country. The Schol. would seem to have supposed another hold on the foreign seamen, in the circumstance that, if they deserted, their countrymen would be punished for it. But of this no vestige is to be recognised in our author; and indeed the view involves something so far-fetched, and so inconsistent likewise with the words of the Scholiast, which precede, διωχθήσονται ὑπὸ τῶν ναυτῶν, and those which follow, βιαζομένων, πολιορκουμένων ὑπὸ Ἀθηναίων διὰ τὴν ἀπόστασιν τῶν ναυτῶν, that I suspect them to have been inadvertently introduced from the margin, where they had been noted down by some half-learned sciolist. By the hope here spoken of is meant that of personal safety and victory.

3. In the remaining part of this chapter, the circumstances and condition of the Athenians are opposed to those of the Lacedæmonians, and shown to be free from the disadvantages which attached to theirs, and to possess advantages peculiarly their own, if they do not throw them away by meeting the enemy's superior land-forces in the open field, nor—provoked by the ravages their territory might suffer by being laid waste—risk an engagement in which victory would bring them little profit, and defeat might lead to irreparable ruin.

τοιαῦτα καὶ παραπλήσια] 'such or thereabouts.' The καὶ stands for ἤ, as infra i. 22, 140. vii. 78: and Plut. de Sanit. Tuend. 17, ὕδατος προσφέρεσθε καὶ δύο καὶ τρία ποτήρια. So, on the other hand, we have ἤ used for καὶ, et, in another passage of Plut. de San. Tuend. 14, ἀναγινώσκοντας ἢ ἀναφωνοῦντας, where Wyttenb. causelessly for ἤ conjectures καί.

τὰ δὲ ἡμέτερα—ἔχειν] 'our situation, on the contrary, is free from the disadvantages I have noticed in theirs; and possesses other and high advantages, in a far greater degree.' In οὐκ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου μεγάλα, we have a refined mode of expression for μείζονα, with which compare another, infra iv. 87, οὐκ ἴσον, for μεῖζον.

4. ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου] See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 574, and note infra ii. 3. Μέγα γὰρ τὸ τῆς θαλάσσης κράτος. This whole passage was evidently had in view by Aristides, ii. 15, C. iii. 228, C.

5. σκέψασθε δὲ] A formula, as at iii. 58, requesting attention; q. d. 'Consider [what I say].' Similar to this is another occasionally found in the classical writers, σκόπει δέ. In 2 Tim. ii. 7, we have the complete expression, νόει ἃ λέγω· δῴη γάρ, &c.

εἰ γὰρ] Pop., on the authority of several MSS., has between εἰ γὰρ inserted μέν. This, however, I have, with Bekk. and Goell., thought proper not to receive. As to the reason urged by Pop., that such is required by the apodosis, καὶ νῦν for νῦν δέ, in the only passage he has cited, (Lucian, Dial. Nept. viii. 4, καὶ πάλαι μέν—καὶ νῦν,) there exists, in effect, no apodosis, because there is no opposition, the καὶ there corresponding to the καὶ preceding, and the καὶ νῦν having the ordinary sense nunc quoque. In the present passage there is even less approach to opposition; since καὶ νῦν has here a use occasionally found in Aristotle and other argumentative writers, which may be called inferential, serving to draw a conclusion, like the Latin jam vero and our 'now then;' q. d. 'since things are as they are, wherefore,' &c.; a sense, this, also observable in a passage of St. John, xvii. 5, ἐγώ σε ἐδόξασα ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς—καὶ νῦν δόξασόν με σύ, Πάτερ, 'itaque, quare, accordingly.' And, alluding to this use, the Schol. on Eurip. Hec. 996, Σῶσον νῦν αὐτὸν, remarks that the νῦν is συμπερασματικὸν, for δή. This, too, is what Hesych. means when he explains καί νύ κε by καὶ δὴ ἄν, where νὺ is poetic for νῦν, which the Schol. on Eurip. rightly says is the true accentuation of the νυν conclusive; the υ being short, as the metre demands in the above passage of Eurip. If it be asked, How, then, came the μέν to find its way into the present passage? that is, indeed, a question more easily asked than answered. I suspect the εἰ μὲν γὰρ to have arisen from the οἱ μὲν γὰρ a little before, which may be supposed to have been still in the copyist's mind.

τίνες ἂν ἀληπτότεροι ἦσαν;] 'who would have been more unassailable?' On καὶ νῦν χρὴ ὅτι ἐγγύτατα τούτου διανοηθέντας, τὴν μὲν γῆν καὶ οἰκίας ἀφεῖναι, τῆς δὲ θαλάσσης καὶ πόλεως φυλακὴν ἔχειν, καὶ Πελοποννησίοις ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν ὀργισθέντας, πολλῷ πλείοσι μὴ διαμάχεσθαι, (κρατήσαντές τε γὰρ, αὖθις οὐκ ἐλάσσοσι μαχούμεθα, καὶ ἢν σφαλῶμεν, τὰ τῶν ξυμμάχων, ὅθεν ἰσχύομεν, προσαπόλλυται· οὐ γὰρ ἡσυχάσουσι, μὴ ἱκανῶν ἡμῶν ὄντων ἐπ᾽ αὐτοὺς στρατεύειν,) τήν τε ὀλόφυρσιν μὴ οἰκιῶν καὶ γῆς ποιεῖσθαι, ἀλλὰ τῶν σωμάτων· οὐ γὰρ τάδε τοὺς ἄνδρας, ἀλλ᾽ οἱ ἄνδρες ταῦτα κτῶνται. 6. καὶ, εἰ ᾤμην πείσειν ὑμᾶς, αὐτοὺς ἂν ἐξελθόντας ἐκέλευον αὐτὰ δρῶσαι, καὶ δεῖξαι Πελοποννησίοις ὅτι τούτων γε ἕνεκα οὐχ ὑπακούσεσθε.

the term ἀλητ. see note supra i. 37. On the thing itself, compare Xen. de Rep. Ath. ii. 14, εἰ γὰρ νῆσον οἰκοῦντες, θαλασσοκράτορες ἦσαν Ἀθηναῖοι, ὑπῆρχεν ἂν αὐτοῖς ποιεῖν μὲν κακὸν, εἰ ἠβούλοντο, πάσχειν δὲ μηδὲν ἕως τῆς θαλάττης ἦρχον, μηδὲ τμηθῆναι τὴν ἑαυτῶν γῆν, μηδὲ προσδέχεσθαι πολεμίους.

ὅτι ἐγγύτατα τούτου διανοηθέντας] 'bending our thoughts, and framing our plans as near as possible thereto,' viz. to the state of islanders, cultivating their views and dispositions. Compare infra iii. 40. Of the words following, τὴν μὲν γῆν καὶ οἰκίας ἀφεῖναι, &c., the sense is, 'to let go, abandon all care about lands and houses, [as comparatively of no value,] and take care of the city and the sea.' So in the Ranæ of Aristoph., to the question πῶς οὖν τις ἂν σώσειε τοιαύτην πόλιν (namely, as Athens), Æschylus is made to answer, v. 1511, τὴν γῆν ὅταν νομίσωσι τὴν τῶν πολεμίων εἶναι σφετέραν, τὴν δὲ σφετέραν τῶν πολεμίων· Πόρον δὲ τὰς ναῦς, ἀπορίαν δὲ τὸν πόρον.

τὰ τῶν ξυμμάχων, ὅθεν ἰσχύομεν, προσαπόλλυται] 'there will likewise be lost your dominion over the allies.' Pres. for fut. Similar are the following passages of Xen. Mem. iii. 6, 7, ἥττων δὲ ὢν καὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα προσαποβάλοι ἄν. Arrian, Exp. Alex. iv. 23, 11, αὐτός τε ἀπόλλυται καὶ τὴν πόλιν προσαπώλεσεν. Herodot. i. 207, 16, ἐσσωθεὶς μὲν προσαπολλύεις πᾶσαν τὴν ἀρχήν.

τήν τε ὀλόφυρσιν μὴ οἰκιῶν καὶ γῆς ποιεῖσθαι] 'make not your lamentation for,' lit. moaning: for in ὀλόφ. we have a very strong term, of which I know of no example elsewhere except in Liban. Or. p. 509. The genit. has here the force treated of by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 342, 1, on the subject of the genit. put with substantives or verbs, where otherwise περὶ with the genit. is used. The sense, then, is 'lamentation for,' 'on account of.' So Ezek. xxiv. 17, 'make no lamentation for the dead,' Sept. στεναγμὸν αἵματος, luctus mortuorum, as Kimchi explains. By οἰκιῶν are meant both the suburban villas and the granges scattered up and down the country; by γῆς, the farms of which those were the residences. Of τῶν σωμάτων the sense is, 'the persons who possess the things in question,' as opposed to the thing or property. Similarly we have τὰ σώματα and τὰ χρήματα opposed in Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 26, and Mem. i. 9, 7. Pol. iii. 17, 10. Onosand. Strat. p. 106, 2. And in like manner are opposed in our language the two terms lives and property.

οὐ γὰρ τάδε—κτῶνται] 'for these things do not possess the men [who hold them], but men these things:' a pointed and perhaps adagial dictum, intended to show the infinitely greater preciousness of the one as compared with the other, and of a similar character to that infra vii. 77, ἄνδρες γὰρ πόλεις, &c., where see note.

6. καὶ, εἰ ᾤμην, &c.] Of these words the full sense is, 'Nay, if I had thought I should persuade [you], I would have counselled you to go forth, and yourselves destroy them, and [thereby] show to the Peloponnesians that you will not for these [or any such things] submit [to their demands];' thereby evincing their inflexible resolution never to submit.

CH. CXLIV. The speaker now concludes in the language of encouragement and counsel. He tells them that he sees every reason to hope for a favourable issue in the struggle for independence, provided they would not grasp at new acquisitions, but be content with acting on the defensive, and not exposing themselves to unnecessary dangers.

1. ἔχω] 'I have [to say],' which latter word is expressed in a passage of St. Luke, vii. 40. Ἔς ἐλπίδα, 'as to hope.'

μὴ ἐπικτᾶσθαι] i. e. 'not to make fresh acquisitions' of empire. So Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 2, ναυτικὸν ἐπικτᾶσθαι. The force of the ἐπι is 'in addition to,' as in Hdot. ii. 79, οὐδένα ἐπικτ. 'make no additions.' Pol. xvii. 7, 1, ἐκχωρεῖν ὧν ἐπέκτηνται, 'which they had acquired in addition to those they had received from their ancestors.' Of ἅμα πολεμοῦντες the sense is, 'while carrying on the war:' an example, this, of the idiom treated on by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 565, obs. 2, of the participle in definitions of time, joined with adverbs such as αὐτίκα, εὐθὺς, μεταξὺ, and ἅμα. So Herodot. ix. 57, ἅμα καταλαβόντες, and iv. 160, κτίζοντες ἅμα. It occurs not unfrequently in Xenophon, chiefly before the participle both of present and past time; though sometimes after it.

κινδύνους αὐθαιρέτους μὴ προστίθεσθαι] 'and not add (adsciscere, as supra i. 78, οἰκεῖον πόνον πρ.) voluntary perils [to necessary ones].' Διανοίας, 'plans.'

ἐκεῖνο κωλύει ἐν ταῖς σπονδαῖς] The best mode of encountering the difficulty here existing is, with Abresch, Kistem., and Pop., to take κωλύει in a neutral sense for κώλυμά ἐστι, impedimento est; or, with Haack and Goeller, to take it as an impersonal, οὐ κωλύει for οὐδὲν κωλύει. The former method, however, is preferable: and examples of the verb so used occur in Pausan. iv. 25, 8; and Eurip. Phœn. 1004, ἀλλ᾽ εἶα, χώρει· μὴ, τὸ σὸν, κωλυέτω, (for so I point there; and the Schol. well paraphrases, Ὅσον τὸ κατὰ σὲ, μὴ γενέσθω κώλυμα.) Aristoph. Av. 464, ὃν διαμαρτεῖν οὐ κωλύει.

τὰς δὲ] For δὲ, Haack, Pop., and Goell. edit τε, from several of the best MSS., supported by passages of our author infra ii. 70. iii. 46, &c. where we have, answering to μὲν, τε. Yet in those cases there is no apodosis, that being abandoned, by a sort of negligence, found in the best writers. Here an apodosis seems required, and the force of the μὲν and δὲ may be expressed on the one hand—on the other. Accordingly I have, with Bekk., retained the δέ. In the words following, εἰ καὶ αὐτονόμους ἔχοντες ἐσπεισάμεθα there is a sort of hypallage, by which the participle stands for a verb, and the verb for a participle; q. d. εἰ καὶ αὐτονόμους εἴχομεν σπεισάμενοι, 'if we held them on the condition of independence, when we made the [last] treaty.'

μὴ σφίσι τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις ἐπιτηδείως αὐτονομεῖσθαι] 'when they should grant their own states not a nominal but real independence.' One would have expected ἀποδῶσιν αὐτονομίαν, but instead of this we have the more recondite expression, μὴ σφίσιν ἐπιτηδείως αὐτονομεῖσθαι, 'not to have a [so called] independence regulated suitably to their interest,' i. e. with an oligarchical constitution. So supra i. 19, κατ᾽ ὀλιγαρχίαν δὲ σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἐπιτηδείως ὅπως πολιτεύσωσι. See also i. 76, and v. 81 & 82. At αὐτοῖς ἑκάστοις repeat ἐπιτηδείως. The words ὡς βούλονται are explanatory.

δίκας δὲ—ἀμυνούμεθα] Render, 'moreover, that we are willing to refer the differences to impartial judgment; but furthermore, that we will not commence hostilities, but will repel them force by force when begun.' For ἀρχομένους one should, suitably to ἄρξομεν before, have μένους δὲ ἀμυνούμεθα.' ταῦτα γὰρ δίκαια καὶ πρέποντα ἅμα τῇδε τῇ πόλει ἀποκρίνασθαι. 3. εἰδέναι δὲ χρὴ ὅτι ἀνάγκη πολεμεῖν (ἢν δὲ ἑκούσιοι μᾶλλον δεχώμεθα, ἧσσον ἐγκεισομένους τοὺς ἐναντίους ἕξομεν), ἔκ τε τῶν μεγίστων κινδύνων ὅτι καὶ πόλει καὶ ἰδιώτῃ μέγισται τιμαὶ περιγίγνονται. 4. οἱ γοῦν πατέρες ἡμῶν ὑποστάντες Μήδους,—καὶ οὐκ ἀπὸ τοσῶνδε ὁρμώμενοι, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ ὑπάρχοντα ἐκλιπόντες,—γνώμῃ τε πλείονι ἢ τύχῃ, καὶ τόλμῃ μείζονι ἢ δυνάμει, τόν τε βάρβαρον ἀπεώσαντο καὶ ἐς τάδε προήγαγον αὐτά. 5. ὧν οὐ χρὴ λείπεσθαι, ἀλλὰ τούς τε ἐχθροὺς παντὶ τρόπῳ ἀμύνεσθαι, καὶ τοῖς ἐπιγιγνομένοις πειρᾶσθαι αὐτὰ μὴ ἐλάσσω παραδοῦναι."

expected ἄρξοντας, especially as πολέμου ἄρχειν is found supra i. 78 & 81, and ἄρξαι τῆς διαφορᾶς, Dionys. Hal. Ant. iii. 9, and other passages, evidently written in imitation of the present, which may be seen in my note in Transl. Yet ἀρχομένους is sufficiently defended by a passage, closely imitated from this of our author, in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 488, ἂν δὲ ἄρξησθε [τοῦ πολεμεῖν] ἀμυνούμεθα: though, indeed, the expression is found (where we cannot suppose imitation) in Xen. Hist. iii. 5, 4, οὐκ ἤρξαντο πολέμου, ἀλλ' ἀμυνόμενοι ἦλθον. Hence it may have been a customary form of expression. And the propriety of the phrase is well justified by Boeckh ap. Pop. as follows: 'Qui belli initium faciunt, non modo ut ab aliis id continuetur ejus initium faciunt, sed sibi ejus initium faciunt, ut id bellum ipsi continuent, itaque etiam ἀρχομένους dici potuit, hoc est ἐν ἀρχῇ ὄντας.'

3. ἧσσον ἐγκεισομένους τοὺς ἐναντίους ἕξομεν] 'we shall find them less keen or eager [to attack us],' as supra i. 69. v. 43. The term ἔγκειμαι is generally used in the physical sense of pressing on the rear of a retreating army; but sometimes, as here, figuratively.

4. οὐκ ἀπὸ τοσῶνδε ὁρμώμενοι] Meaning, 'not with such means of defence and resources for war as we possess.' Compare Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 58. Pol. i. 3, 7. iv. 31, 4. Γνώμῃ and δυνάμει are datives of means; 'by counsel rather than fortune, by courage rather than strength, did they beat back,' &c.: for τε I conjecture γε. Αὐτά, scil. τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, just before. Render, 'raised the state to what it is.' With the expression here, ἐς τάδε προήγαγον, compare similar ones ii. 36, ἦλθον ἐπ' αὐτά, and vi. 18, ἐς τάδε ἦραν αὐτά.

5. Of λείπεσθαι the sense is, 'to be outdone,' literally, 'left behind,' in the race of honour. On the words a little after, τοῖς ἐπιγιγνομένοις—παραδοῦναι, see note supra ch. 71, fin.

Ch. CXLV. οὐδὲν κελευόμενοι ποιήσειν] 'that they would do nothing upon command.' So Dionys. Hal. Ant. v. 54, μηδὲν, ὧν μὴ βούλεται πράττειν, κελευσθεὶς, and 509, 35, μηδὲν δρᾶσαί ποτε ἐξ ἐπιτάγματος.

Ch. CXLVI. ἐπεμίγνυντο] 'they had intercourse with:' meaning the peaceful intercourse of a limited private communication and public negociation — neither, however, wholly free from distrust: a state of affairs well described by the words of Livy ii. 18, 'Bellum indictum; tacitæ induciæ quietum annum tenuere.'

Ch. I. Καταστάντες, for καταστηθέντες, scil. ἐς πόλεμον, 'being once engaged in the war,' (as i. 32 & 44.)

Ch. II. 1. γὰρ] The particle is here not, as the Schol. supposes it, resumptive, but inchoative. Ἐνέμειναν, 'had continued:' a rare signification, but occurring in Æsch. Prom. 545, ἀλλά μοι τόδ' ἐμμένοι καὶ μήποτ' ἐκτακείη: and occasionally occurs in the Sept. In περὶ πρῶτον ὕπνον, a little after, we have a phrase also found in Plut. Nic. 5, and Lucian, ii. 524, and iii. 57, περὶ πρώτους ὕπνους. Eubul. ap. Bekk. Anecd. p. 111, μετὰ τὸν πρῶτον ὕπνον. Answering to this is the Virgilian primo somno, meaning, in summer, the first watch; in winter, the second.

2. τοὺς σφίσιν ὑπεναντίους] 'their political adversaries:' a rare use, though found in Xen. Cyr. iii. 3, 26. Polyb. i. 11, 14. Of προσποιῆσαι the sense is, 'to bring over,' conciliare, adjungere. So Xen. Hist. iv. 2, 28, Λέσβον πρ. τῇ πόλει. Similarly infra iii. 65, βουλόμενοι ἐς τὰ κοινὰ τῶν πάντων Βοιωτῶν πάτρια καταστῆσαι.

καθεστῶτος, προκαταλαβεῖν· ᾗ καὶ ῥᾷον ἔλαθον ἐσελθόντες, φυλακῆς οὐ προκαθεστηκυίας. 4. θέμενοι δὲ ἐς τὴν ἀγορὰν τὰ ὅπλα, τοῖς μὲν ἐπαγομένοις οὐκ ἐπείθοντο ὥστ' εὐθὺς ἔργου ἔχεσθαι, καὶ ἰέναι ἐς τὰς οἰκίας τῶν ἐχθρῶν· γνώμην δὲ ἐποιοῦντο κηρύγμασί τε χρήσασθαι ἐπιτηδείοις, καὶ ἐς ξύμβασιν μᾶλλον καὶ φιλίαν τὴν πόλιν ἀγαγεῖν, (καὶ ἀνεῖπεν ὁ κήρυξ, εἴ τις βούλεται κατὰ τὰ πάτρια τῶν πάντων Βοιωτῶν ξυμμαχεῖν, τίθεσθαι παρ' αὐτοὺς τὰ ὅπλα,) νομίζοντες σφίσι ῥᾳδίως τούτῳ τῷ τρόπῳ προσχωρήσειν τὴν πόλιν. III. Οἱ δὲ Πλαταιῆς ὡς ᾔσθοντο ἔνδον τε ὄντας τοὺς Θηβαίους καὶ ἐξαπινάιως κατειλημμένην τὴν πόλιν, καταδείσαντες, καὶ νομίσαντες πολλῷ πλείους ἐσεληλυθέναι, (οὐ γὰρ ἐώρων ἐν τῇ νυκτί,) πρὸς ξύμβασιν ἐχώρησαν, καὶ τοὺς λόγους δεξάμενοι ἡσύχαζον, ἄλλως τε καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἐς οὐδένα οὐδὲν ἐνεωτέριζον. 2. πράσσοντες δέ πως ταῦτα κατενόησαν οὐ πολλοὺς τοὺς Θηβαίους ὄντας, καὶ ἐνόμισαν, ἐπιθέμενοι, ῥᾳδίως κρατῆσαι· τῷ γὰρ πλήθει τῶν Πλαταιῶν οὐ βουλομένῳ ἦν τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀφίστασθαι. 3. ἐδόκει οὖν ἐπιχειρητέα εἶναι· καὶ ξυνελέγοντο, διορύσσοντες τοὺς κοινοὺς ἀνεῖπεν] 'proclaimed aloud.' The term includes also a sense of inviting, which is to be supplied at τίθεσθαι. There is, in fact, a blending of the direct and indirect mode of expression. The former would have been ἀνεῖπεν· Εἴ τις βούλεται—ξυμμαχεῖν, τιθέσθω παρ' ἡμῖν τὰ ὅπλα. The import here of the expression τίθεσθαι τὰ ὅπλα is nearly the same as a little before; only in the present case, with the sense of piling arms there is united that of joining arms generally; meaning, that they should come in arms from their houses, and by piling arms along with these, have it understood they were to be taken up and used in the same common cause. Compare infra iv. 68, and a passage of Diod. Sic. xii. 66, p. 524, ἐκήρυξέ τις ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ τοὺς βουλομένους τίθεσθαι τὰ ὅπλα μετὰ Ἀθηναίων καὶ Μεγαρέων. Of κατὰ τὰ πάτρια τῶν πάντων Βοιωτῶν, the sense is well expressed by Poppo, 'ita ut communi omnium Bœotorum consociationi, iis legibus quæ a majoribus inter eos sanctæ essent, adscriberetur.' (See his Proleg. i. 2, p. 11, sq., and p. 292.) The expression in question was used for the purpose of reminding them of their common Ætolian origin with themselves, and to hint that Platæa might again become, what it had been in the time of their fathers, a member of the Bœotian body, and not that of aliens in blood, like the Athenians.

4. θέμενοι—τὰ ὅπλα] 'having piled their arms (spears and shields) in the market-place.' That such is the sense of the disputed expression, θέσθαι τὰ ὅπλα, has been fully shown by Poppo and Arnold, and had been partly pointed out by myself in note in Transl. Only of the two cognate senses, 'to pile arms,' (arma ponere,) and 'to take post at,' 'make any place a place d'armes,' I have there, with Bredow, adopted the latter; whereas I am now of opinion that the former is to be preferred; especially from the sense 'to take part' arising, as I have there shown, from that of piling arms, and here very well admitting of being included. It is well observed by Arnold, that the Greek heavy-armed soldiers, whenever they halted on a march, piled their spears and shields [retaining their swords], and did not resume them till the halt was over. And when they encamped any where, an open space was left for piling the arms; and this naturally served as a parade, or place d'armes.

Of ἔργου ἔχεσθαι the sense is, 'to apply to the work,' namely, of war. So supra i. 49, ἔργου πᾶς εἶχετο.

CH. III. 1. ἐς οὐδένα οὐδὲν ἐνεωτ.] 'they offered no harm to any one.' So elsewhere νεώτερα ποιεῖν, or ποιεῖσθαι ἔς τινα: and Aristoph. Conc. 338, νεώτ. ὁρᾶν.

2. οὐ βουλομένῳ ἦν, &c.] 'it was not to their mind or liking:' an idiom with participles of willing, &c., of which I have adduced several examples in Note Transl. See also Matth. Gr. Gr. § 391, e.

3. διορύσσοντες τοὺς κοινοὺς τοίχους] A matter, this, of no difficult accomplish-τοίχους, παρ' ἀλλήλους, ὅπως μὴ διὰ τῶν ὁδῶν φανεροὶ ὦσιν ἰόντες· ἁμάξας τε ἄνευ τῶν ὑποζυγίων ἐς τὰς ὁδοὺς καθίστασαν, ἵν' ἀντὶ τείχους ᾖ· καὶ τἆλλα ἐξήρτυον ᾗ ἕκαστον ἐφαίνετο πρὸς τὰ παρόντα ξύμφορον ἔσεσθαι. 4. ἐπεὶ δὲ ὡς ἐκ τῶν δυνατῶν ἑτοῖμα ἦν, φυλάξαντες ἔτι νύκτα καὶ αὐτὸ τὸ περίορθρον, ἐχώρουν ἐκ τῶν οἰκιῶν ἐπ' αὐτούς, ὅπως μὴ κατὰ φῶς θαρσαλεωτέροις οὖσι προσφέρωνται, καὶ σφίσιν ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου γίγνωνται, ἀλλ', ἐν νυκτὶ φοβερώτεροι ὄντες, ἧσσους ὦσι τῆς σφετέρας ἐμπειρίας τῆς κατὰ τὴν πόλιν. προσέβαλόν τε εὐθύς, καὶ ἐς χεῖρας ᾖεσαν κατὰ τάχος.

IV. Οἱ δ' ὡς ἔγνωσαν ἠπατημένοι, ξυνεστρέφοντό τε ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς, καὶ τὰς προσβολὰς, ᾗ προσπίπτοιεν, ἀπεωθοῦντο. 2. καὶ δὶς μὲν ἢ τρὶς ἀπεκρούσαντο· ἔπειτα, πολλῷ θορύβῳ αὐτῶν τε προσβαλλόντων, καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν καὶ τῶν οἰκετῶν ἅμα ἀπὸ τῶν οἰκιῶν, ment, from the materials of the walls of private houses in ancient times consisting chiefly of clay, or sun-burnt brick. Hence we not unfrequently read of house-walls being dug through.

ἵν' ἀντὶ τείχους ᾖ] 'that it might be for a rampart' or barricado. So Appian, P. B. vii. 25, ἵνα ἀντὶ τείχους ᾖ. Herodot. viii. 97, ἵνα ἀντὶ σχεδίης ἔωσι καὶ τείχεος. With respect to the construction here, Matth. Gr. Gr. § 302, 2, terms it a schema Pindaricum et Bœoticum, by which, with the plural of the subject masculine and feminine, the verb is put in the singular as with neuters. I prefer, however, with Pop. and Goell., to supply here the words καθιστάναι τὰς ἁμάξας, by the schema πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον; or to suppose that ἅρματα was in the mind of the writer.

4. ὡς ἐκ τῶν δυνατῶν] 'as far as was possible:' so vii. 74, and without ὡς (which is slightly intensive), iv. 51. See Matth. Gr. Gr.

φυλάξαντες—περίορθ.] 'having waited for the time when it was yet night, and the day was just dawning:' a time especially suitable to surprise, as being that when men are most buried in sleep.

ὅπως μὴ κατὰ φῶς θαρσαλεωτέροις οὖσι—γίγνωνται] Here there is reference to the other reason for choosing the dawn, namely, from the dubious light it affords being very embarrassing to those taken by surprise. Render, 'that they (i. e. the Platæans) might engage with them, not by daylight — when they would be the more courageous, and be on a footing of equality [with them] — but in the night when,' &c.

In ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου we have a phrase for adject. ἴσοι. The literal sense of the words καὶ [ὅπως] σφίσιν ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου γίγνωνται, &c., is, 'and in order that they (the Thebans) might not be on a footing of equality with themselves, but that being more timid [as] in the night, they might be in a condition of inferiority, as regarded their own acquaintance with the city.' Pop. takes ἧσσους εἶναι as standing for ἡσσᾶσθαι, 'ut a suâ experientiâ vincerentur.' But that would involve a considerable harshness in the Greek, such as were rather suited to the style of Pindar than of Thucydides. Unless we supposed here an ellipsis of ἀπὸ or περὶ, I should be inclined to think that our author wrote τῇ σφετέρᾳ ἐμπειρίᾳ, as probably Valla had in his copy, from his rendering 'suâ experientiâ.' The ς and the iota adscriptum are perpetually confounded by the scribes. Finally, φοβερώτεροι is to be taken in a neuter sense (like our fearful) to signify 'more timid:' a use, this, found in Arrian, and Xen. Cyr. iii. 3, 19, and Œcon. vii. 25. So also the Latin formidolosus in Tacit. Ann. i. 6.

CH. IV. 1. ξυνεστρέφοντο] 'closed their ranks, threw themselves into close order;' forming what the Greek military writers call a πλινθίον. See Xen. Cyr. vii. 1, 12. So inf. iv. 125, ξυναγαγὼν ἐς τετράγωνον τάξιν τοὺς ὁπλίτας. Of ἀπεωθοῦντο the sense is, 'endeavoured to repulse;' the idea of endeavour being inherent in the imperfect, from its denoting action commenced or contemplated, but not completed.

2. θορύβῳ] The word has not here the usual sense tumult, confusion, but that formerly belonging to our word uproar; namely, a confused noise, clamor cum tumultu, as often in Xenophon, (see Lex. Xen.) though rarely elsewhere.

καὶ τῶν γυναικῶν—βαλλόντων] Render,

'both they making the attack, and the women, and withal the slaves, setting up a shout and halloo, and pelting them with stones and tiling from the roofs:' for in ancient times, among the Greeks, even the weaker sex took an active part on such occasions as the present, and evinced a most daring courage in assailing the enemy by missiles from the house-roofs. See infra iii. 59. Herodot. viii. 12. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 415, 10. 497, 4. 641, 7. Pausan. ii. 20, 8. iv. 21 & 29. Polyæn. viii. 59. Plut. Syll. 9. That ἀπὸ τῶν οἰκιῶν must be construed, not with κραυγῇ τε καὶ ὀλολυγῇ χρωμένων, is certain from iii. 74, 1, γυναῖκες βάλλουσαι ἀπὸ τῶν οἰκιῶν τῷ κεράμῳ. Of the terms κραυγῇ and ὀλολυγῇ, the former is supposed to have reference to the men; the latter, to the women. So ὀλολυγμὸς is used in Æschyl. Theb. 254, and Ag. 27, 570. And Pollux, i. 27, says, ὀλολυγὴ is a term pecularly appropriate to women. Such, too, appears from Synes. Epist. 164, C. ἀνδρῶν οἰμωγὴ, γυναικῶν ὀλολυγή. The word denotes, not a hallooing, but yelling, or howling; what in Latin is expressed by ululatus, a term,—like the one in question,—chiefly used of women. So Virg. Æn. xi. 395, 'Ast aliæ tremulis ululatibus æthera complent.' Here it seems to denote the whoop or war-cry; (so Cæs. Bell. G. v. 36, 'conclamant atque ululatum tollunt:') and if so, the term may have reference alike to the women and the men.

With respect to the term κέραμος, it is,—like our tile and brick,—used in a generic sense to signify tiling or tiles, as in Herodot. vii. 12. Aristoph. Nub. 1127. Xen. Mem., where we have λίθοι καὶ πλίνθοι καὶ κέραμος.

καὶ ὑετοῦ ἅμα διὰ νυκτὸς πολλοῦ ἐπιγενομένου] This cannot mean, what the translators understand, that 'they were incommoded by the rain which fell in the night,' being thus wet to the skin: but the words must have reference to some circumstance that far more increased their present hardship, namely, that 'a beating rain, which had fallen plentifully throughout the night, still continued.' There is here, as often, a blending of two clauses into one. Expressed at full length, the sentence would have run thus: καὶ ὑετοῦ, διὰ νυκτὸς πολλοῦ γενομένου, ἅμα ἐπιγιγνομένου. It is observable that ἐπιγίνεσθαι, when used of rain or wind, always carries with it the idea of what is heavy or violent. So infra iv. 30, πνεύματος ἐπιγενομένου, and iv. 3, χειμὼν ἐπιγενόμενος. Herodot. viii. 13, αὐτοῖς χειμών τε καὶ ὕδωρ ἐπεγένετο. Xen. Hist. i. 6, 20, ὕδωρ ἐπιγενόμενον πολύ. Adopting the above view of the sense, Thirlwall has well expressed what our author seems to have had in mind, by writing, 'a heavy rain [too having] increased the confusion caused by the darkness,' or rather the dubious light of twilight.

The words a little after, ἄπειροι ὄντες, must be construed with τῶν διόδων, as they were plainly done by Dionys. Hal., who in his Ant. p. 952, has δι' ἀπειρίαν τῶν διόδων. The parenthetical words, καὶ γὰρ τελευτῶντος τοῦ μηνὸς, have reference to ἐν σκότῳ. And the sense is, not,—as Hobbes and Smith render,—'at the change of the moon;' but, 'at the waning or decline of the moon,' or the three days during which the moon is in conjunction with the sun, and is therefore invisible.

τοῦ μὴ ἐκφεύγειν] scil. αὐτούς. Poppo remarks, that the infin. here denotes, not, as elsewhere, counsel or purpose, but effect, as in Cantacuz. ii. 35, διέσεισεν αὐτοῦ τοὺς λογισμοὺς τοῦ μὴ οἴεσθαι, &c. Unless (he adds) we prefer to join τοῦ μὴ ἐκφ. with διώκοντας, and so render 'eo consilio ut,' &c. Certainly it would involve a degree of harshness to suppose effect denoted by τοῦ μὴ ἐκφεύγειν, immediately followed, as these words are, by others denoting result. Moreover, in the passage above cited of Cantacuz., τοῦ μὴ simply stands for ὥστε μή; which cannot be the case here. Preferable, therefore, is the latter mode of taking the words. Construe, ἔχοντες ἐμπείρους τοὺς διώκοντας τοῦ μὴ ἐκφεύγειν, 'those who pursued them that they might not escape,' for the purpose of preventing their escape. Thus τοῦ μὴ here, as not unfrequently in our author, stands for ἕνεκα τοῦ μὴ or ὥστε μή, on which idiom see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 540, obs. 1.

3. δὲ] I have thought proper, with τις τὰς πύλας ᾗ ἐσῆλθον,—καὶ αἵπερ ἦσαν ἀνεῳγμέναι μόναι,—ἔκλῃσε, στυρακίῳ ἀκοντίου ἀντὶ βαλάνου χρησάμενος ἐς τὸν μοχλὸν, ὥστε μηδὲ ταύτῃ ἔτι ἔξοδον εἶναι. 4. διωκόμενοί τε κατὰ τὴν πόλιν, οἱ μέν τινες αὐτῶν ἐπὶ τὸ τεῖχος ἀναβάντες ἔρριψαν ἐς τὸ ἔξω σφᾶς αὐτούς, καὶ διεφθάρησαν οἱ πλείους· οἱ δὲ, κατὰ πύλας ἐρήμους, γυναικὸς δούσης πέλεκυν, λαθόντες καὶ διακόψαντες τὸν μοχλὸν, ἐξῆλθον οὐ πολλοὶ, αἴσθησις γὰρ ταχεῖα ἐπεγένετο· ἄλλοι δὲ ἄλλῃ τῆς πόλεως σποράδην ἀπώλλυντο. 5. τὸ δὲ πλεῖστον καὶ ὅσον μάλιστα ἦν ξυνεστραμμένον, ἐσπίπτουσιν ἐς οἴκημα μέγα, οὗ ἦν τοῦ

Bekk. and Goell., to retain the vulg. δέ; for the τε, edited by Pop., from several MSS., would here be little suitable. Στυρακίῳ—μοχλόν. By στυρακίῳ understand an iron spike such as that wherewith the end of a spear was shod, in order to admit of its being fixed to the ground: and by βάλανος, the iron bolt which was inserted into the μοχλὸς, or bar of a gate, (the main instrument of security,) for the purpose of keeping this firmly in its place. Now one end of this bar was firmly fastened to a strong staple driven into one of the door-posts. It was then raised and drawn across the door, or doors, and let into the other post by a niche or groove, made to receive the end of it. Then, from the other side of the post, and exactly opposite to it, was drilled an orifice, which was called the βαλανοδόκη, into which was introduced the βάλανος, which extended to the end of the orifice, and also ran into the end of the bar, which had a hole drilled into it, for the purpose of receiving it. Thus the bar was secured in its place by this bolt, which, moreover, was so deeply let into the orifice, that it could not be drawn out by the fingers, but required a certain instrument called the βαλανάγρα, or catch-bolt, by which it was drawn out.

The above view as to the import of these terms στυράκιον and βάλ., before propounded by me in note in Transl., and 1st ed., has since (I find) been adopted by Goell. and Arn., of whom the latter has thrown some further light upon this somewhat obscure point, namely, as to the mode by which the βάλανος was drawn out. From a passage of Æneas Tact., where a σίφων, or pipe, is mentioned as an essential part of the βαλανάγρα, he shows that the βαλανάγρα was a sort of hollow key, whose pipe exactly corresponded in size to the βάλανος, so as to go round the outside of it, and take a firm hold on it. Hence, he adds, the various tricks mentioned by the above writer, Tact. ch. 18, for taking the measure of the βάλανος, in order to get a false key made to extract it, and for tampering with the hole into which the bolt was inserted so as to prevent it from going quite home. The effect of the person's thrusting this spike in would be, as Arn. observes, 'exactly that of spiking the touch-hole of a cannon; it could not again be extracted, as there was no proper key at hand to fit to it.'

Finally, I would observe, the only remaining obscurity in the words may be removed by supplying, what our author should properly have expressed, καὶ αὐτὸ ἐμβαλὼν before ἐς τὸν μοχλὸν, as in a kindred passage of Aristoph. Vesp. 200, καὶ τὸν βάλανον ἔμβαλλε πάλιν ἐς τὸν μοχλόν.

4. ἐρήμους] 'unguarded;' lit. 'abandoned of guards.' So infra v. 4, πόλιν ἔρημον.

5. οἴκημα μέγα] Meaning, the Schol. thinks, a tower. But surely the term in question is one little suited to express such a sense: not to mention that the term μέγα were in that case little applicable; the size of towers being by no means so considerable as to deserve the epithet great. Again, understanding the expression, with Pollux, to mean the prison, we encounter an equal objection, in the absence of the article, which were in that case indispensable; not to mention that the gates being open, is quite adverse to that view. It is true that infra iv. 47, we have, ἐς οἴκημα μέγα κάθειρξαν, where some take οἴκημα to mean prison; but there the same difficulty recurs, in the absence of the article. It is best, then, to assign the usual sense edifice, though of what kind nothing can be determined. It must have been some public building; it not being usual among the ancients to allow private houses to be built in contiguity with a wall: though, indeed, that was not always forbidden; as appears from Livy, x. 10, 'duo ex oppidanis, quorum erant ædificia juncta muro.' And other passages to the same purpose may be seen in my note on Acts ix. 25.

τείχους, καὶ αἱ πλησίον θύραι ἀνεῳγμέναι ἔτυχον αὐτοῦ, οἰόμενοι πύλας τὰς θύρας τοῦ οἰκήματος εἶναι, καὶ ἄντικρυς δίοδον ἐς τὸ ἔξω. 6. ὁρῶντες δ' αὐτοὺς οἱ Πλαταιῆς ἀπειλημμένους, ἐβουλεύοντο εἴτε κατακαύσωσιν ὥσπερ ἔχουσιν, ἐμπρήσαντες τὸ οἴκημα, εἴτε τι ἄλλο χρήσωνται. 7. τέλος δὲ οὗτοί τε καὶ ὅσοι ἄλλοι τῶν Θηβαίων περιῆσαν, κατὰ τὴν πόλιν πλανώμενοι, ξυνέβησαν τοῖς Πλαταιεῦσι, παραδοῦναι σφᾶς αὐτοὺς καὶ τὰ ὅπλα, χρήσασθαι ὅ τι ἂν βούλωνται. 8. οἱ μὲν δὴ ἐν τῇ Πλαταίᾳ οὕτως ἐπεπράγεσαν. V. Οἱ δὲ ἄλλοι Θηβαῖοι, οὓς ἔδει ἔτι τῆς νυκτὸς παραγενέσθαι πανστρατιᾷ, εἴ τι ἄρα μὴ προχωροίη τοῖς ἐσεληλυθόσι, τῆς ἀγγελίας ἅμα καθ' ὁδὸν αὐτοῖς ῥηθείσης περὶ τῶν γεγενημένων, ἐπεβοήθουν. 2. ἀπέχει δ' ἡ Πλάταια τῶν Θηβῶν σταδίους ἑβδομήκοντα, καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ τὸ γενόμενον τῆς νυκτὸς ἐποίησε βραδύτερον αὐτοὺς ἐλθεῖν· ὁ γὰρ Ἀσωπὸς ποταμὸς ἐῤῥύη μέγας, καὶ οὐ ῥᾳδίως διαβατὸς ἦν. 3. πορευόμενοί τε ἐν ὑετῷ, καὶ τὸν ποταμὸν μόλις διαβάντες, ὕστερον παρεγένοντο, ἤδη τῶν ἀνδρῶν τῶν μὲν διεφθαρμένων, τῶν δὲ ζώντων ἐχομένων. 4. ὡς δ' ἤσθοντο οἱ Θηβαῖοι τὸ γεγενημένον, ἐπεβούλευον τοῖς ἔξω τῆς πόλεως τῶν Πλαταιῶν· (ἦσαν γὰρ καὶ ἄνθρωποι κατὰ τοὺς ἀγροὺς καὶ κατασκευή, οἷα ἀπροσδοκήτου κακοῦ ἐν εἰρήνῃ γενομένου·) ἐβούλοντο γὰρ σφίσιν εἴ τινα λάβοιεν ὑπάρχειν ἀντὶ τῶν ἔνδον, ἢν ἄρα τύχωσί τινες ἐζωγρημένοι.

αἱ πλησίον θύραι] 'Propinquæ januæ, quæ sane in adversa ædificii, quod ad murum pertinebat, parte erant.' (Haack.)

In ἄντικρυς δίοδον ἐς τὸ ἔξω, the term ἀντ. is by Pop. and Goell. explained ex adverso, or recta. The latter sense is preferable. Render, 'supposing that there was a ready passage outside,' 'a passage right outwards.' It may, indeed, be thought that that sense would require ἀντικρύ, (see Lobeck on Phryn. p. 444,) but it has been shown by Blomf. on Æschyl. Choëph. 186, that the distinction made by the grammarians between ἄντικρυς and ἀντικρύ is groundless.

7. χρήσασθαι ὅ τι ἂν βούλωνται] 'to treat them as they choose:' a frequent form of expression to imply surrendering at discretion; as infra iv. 69. vii. 35.

8. οὕτως ἐπεπράγεσαν] 'thus fared they,' 'such was their [miserable] condition:' as often in Herodot. οὕτω ἔπραξαν is used in the sense 'hac fortunâ (i. e. calamitate) usi sunt;' e. g. iii. 25. vi. 44. viii. 129.

CH. V. 1. ἔδει] This verb here, and often elsewhere, imports obligation, resulting from some agreement or preconcerted plan. Προχωροίη, scil. τὰ πράγματα. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 524, 3. Ἐπεβοήθουν, 'came to their aid.'

2. ἐῤῥύη μέγας] 'magnus (i. e. copiosus) fluebat,' 'was running deep.' So Herodot. viii. 138, ποταμὸς ἐῤῥύη μέγας.

3. ἐν ὑετῷ] The term ὑετὸς here bears the sense, not rain, but rather rainy weather, as infra viii. 42, ὑετός τε καὶ τὰ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ξυννέφελα, &c. The expression a little after, ζώντων ἐχομένων, stands for ζωγρηθέντων: for ζωγρεῖν, which properly signifies to take alive, generally denotes to make prisoner.

4. κατασκευὴ] 'moveable property,' here denoting chiefly household furniture and utensils, and implements of husbandry. So in the Pandects cited by Steph. Thes. in voc., we have the phrases ἡ κατασκευὴ τοῦ ἀγροῦ, and ἡ κατ' ἀγρὸν σκευή, used as synonymous.

εἴ τινα λάβοιεν] Matthiæ, Gr. Gr. § 524, remarks on the interchange here between εἰ and ἤν. The reason, he thinks, is that 'the last circumstance, the taking of some Thebans, was just before related as actually happening, and as something that the Thebans had just suffered; while the former was first to happen still, and thus was uncertain.' Arn. expresses the difference by rendering, 'Could they succeed in taking any prisoner; should any happen to have been taken alive.' The opt.,' he adds, 'expresses a doubt as to the power of the agent; as in the passage of Hdot., so well explained by Hermann, (Append. to Viger, sect. xi.) i. 53, ἐπειρωτᾶν τὰ χρηστήρια εἰ στρατεύηται, καὶ εἴ τινα προσθέοιτο φίλον, "to inquire whether he should make war, and whether he could gain any ally."'

5. καὶ οἱ μὲν ταῦτα διενοοῦντο· οἱ δὲ Πλαταιῆς, ἔτι διαβουλευομένων αὐτῶν, ὑποτοπήσαντες τοιοῦτόν τι ἔσεσθαι καὶ δείσαντες περὶ τοῖς ἔξω, κήρυκα ἐξέπεμψαν παρὰ τοὺς Θηβαίους, λέγοντες ὅτι οὔτε τὰ πεποιημένα ὁσίως δράσειαν, ἐν σπονδαῖς σφῶν πειραθέντες καταλαβεῖν τὴν πόλιν, τά τε ἔξω ἔλεγον αὐτοῖς μὴ ἀδικεῖν· εἰ δὲ μή, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἔφασαν αὐτῶν τοὺς ἄνδρας ἀποκτενεῖν οὓς ἔχουσι ζῶντας· ἀναχωρησάντων δὲ πάλιν ἐκ τῆς γῆς, ἀποδώσειν αὐτοῖς τοὺς ἄνδρας. 6. Θηβαῖοι μὲν ταῦτα λέγουσι, καὶ ἐπομόσαι φασὶν αὐτούς· Πλαταιῆς δ' οὐχ ὁμολογοῦσι τοὺς ἄνδρας εὐθὺς ὑποσχέσθαι ἀποδώσειν, ἀλλὰ λόγων πρῶτον γενομένων, ἤν τι ξυμβαίνωσι, καὶ ἐπομόσαι οὔ φασιν. 7. ἐκ δ' οὖν τῆς γῆς ἀνεχώρησαν οἱ Θηβαῖοι οὐδὲν ἀδικήσαντες· οἱ δὲ Πλαταιῆς, ἐπειδὴ τὰ ἐκ τῆς χώρας κατὰ τάχος ἐσεκομίσαντο, ἀπέκτειναν τοὺς ἄνδρας εὐθύς. ἦσαν δὲ ὀγδοήκοντα καὶ ἑκατὸν οἱ ληφθέντες, καὶ Εὐρύμαχος εἷς αὐτῶν ἦν, πρὸς ὃν ἔπραξαν οἱ προδιδόντες. VI. Τοῦτο δὲ ποιήσαντες, ἔς τε τὰς Ἀθήνας ἄγγελον ἔπεμπον, καὶ τοὺς νεκροὺς ὑποσπόνδους ἀπέδοσαν τοῖς Θηβαίοις, τά τ' ἐν τῇ πόλει καθίσταντο πρὸς τὰ παρόντα ᾗ ἐδόκει αὐτοῖς. 2. τοῖς δ' Ἀθηναίοις ἠγγέλθη εὐθὺς τὰ περὶ τῶν Πλαταιῶν γεγενημένα· καὶ Βοιωτῶν τε παραχρῆμα ξυνέλαβον ὅσοι ἦσαν ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ, καὶ ἐς τὴν Πλάταιαν ἔπεμψαν κήρυκα, κελεύοντες εἰπεῖν μηδὲν νεώτερον ποιεῖν περὶ τῶν ἀνδρῶν οὓς ἔχουσι Θηβαίων, πρὶν ἄν τι καὶ αὐτοὶ βουλεύσωσι περὶ αὐτῶν· οὐ γὰρ ἠγγέλθη αὐτοῖς ὅτι τεθνηκότες εἶεν. 3. ἅμα γὰρ τῇ ἐσόδῳ γιγνομένῃ τῶν Θηβαίων ὁ πρῶτος ἄγγελος ἐξῆλθε, ὁ δὲ δεύτερος ἅρτι νενικημένων τε καὶ ξυνειλημμένων· καὶ τῶν ὕστερον οὐδὲν ἤδεσαν. 4. οὕτω δὴ οὐκ εἰδότες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐπέστελλον· ὁ δὲ κήρυξ ἀφικόμενος εὗρε τοὺς ἄνδρας διεφθαρμένους. 5. καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι στρατεύσαντες ἐς Πλάταιαν, σῖτόν τε ἐσήγαγον καὶ φρουροὺς ἐγκατέλιπον, τῶν τε ἀνθρώπων τοὺς ἀχρειοτάτους ξὺν γυναιξὶ καὶ παισὶν ἐξεκόμισαν.

5. λέγοντες ὅτι οὔτε — δράσειαν] On this use of the opt. in oratione obliquâ, i. e. when the words of another are expressed in the third person, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 529.

6. ταῦτα λέγουσι] 'they allege.' Ἐπομόσαι, 'swore [to the observance of].' So Appian, ii. 12, 90, ἐπώμοσαν τῷ νόμῳ. Joseph. 256, 42. Οὔ φασιν, 'they deny it.' In this idiom the negative always comes first. See Viger and Matthiæ, and also Blomfield on Æschyl. Agam. 361.

CH. VI. 1. καθίσταντο αὐτοῖς] 'put affairs on the best footing that present circumstances would permit.'

2. κήρυκα] Non caduceatorem, sed præconem. (Poppo.)

5. σῖτόν τε ἐσήγαγον] 'victualled the place;' i. e. both from the surrounding country, and from Athens. Τοὺς ἀχρειοτάτους, 'least fit for military service.' So supra i. 93. Herodot. i. 192 & 211. Xen. Hist. vii. 2, 18.

VII. Γεγενημένου δὲ τοῦ ἐν Πλαταιαῖς ἔργου, καὶ λελυμένων λαμπρῶς τῶν σπονδῶν, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι παρεσκευάζοντο ὡς πολεμήσοντες, παρεσκευάζοντο δὲ καὶ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι αὐτῶν, πρεσβείας τε μέλλοντες πέμπειν παρὰ βασιλέα καὶ ἄλλοσε ἐς τοὺς βαρβάρους,—εἴποθέν τινα ὠφέλειαν ἤλπιζον ἑκάτεροι προσλήψεσθαι,—πόλεις τε ξυμμαχίδας ποιούμενοι ὅσαι ἦσαν ἐκτὸς τῆς ἑαυτῶν δυνάμεως. 2. καὶ Λακεδαιμονίοις μὲν, πρὸς ταῖς † αὐτοῦ ὑπαρχούσαις, ἐξ Ἰταλίας καὶ Σικελίας τοῖς τἀκείνων ἑλομένοις † ναῦς ἐπετάχθησαν ποιεῖσθαι, κατὰ μέγεθος τῶν πόλεων, ὡς ἐς τὸν πάντα ἀριθμὸν πεντακοσίων νεῶν ἐσομένων· καὶ ἀργύριον ῥητὸν ἑτοιμάζειν, τά τ' ἄλλα ἡσυχάζοντας, καὶ Ἀθηναίους δεχομένους μιᾷ νηῒ ἕως ἂν ταῦτα παρασκευασθῇ. 3. Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ τήν τε ὑπάρχουσαν

Ch. VII. 1. λελυμένων λαμπρῶς τῶν σπονδῶν] 'manifestly, decidedly broken.' Evidently imitated from which are the similar expressions in Choricius ap. Fabric. Bibl. Gr. viii. 868, λελυμένων λαμπρῶς τῶν σπονδῶν, and Procop. p. 52, 12, τὴν εἰρήνην λαμπρῶς ἔλυεν. In the words following, ὡς πολεμήσαντες παρεσκευάζοντο, we have a construction not unfrequent in Thucydides, though rarely found elsewhere. I have noted two examples, in Xen. Cyr. i. 3, 13. Herodot. viii. 6, 13.

2. καὶ Λακεδαιμονίοις — τῶν πόλεων] On a careful re-examination of this very perplexing passage, I am still, as before, decidedly of opinion, that however harsh, and even solœcistic, be the phraseology, the sense may very possibly be as follows: 'And by the Lacedæmonians, in addition to those already there from Italy and Sicily, ships were enjoined on such as espoused their cause, to be built, in proportion to the size of the states.' It is, indeed, objected by Arn., that 'to understand πρὸς ταῖς αὐτοῦ ὑπαρχούσαις ἐξ Ἰταλίας καὶ Σικελίας as meaning "besides the ships already in Peloponnesus from Italy and Sicily," is inconsistent with the whole subsequent history; for not a single Sicilian ship had joined the Peloponnesians till the Athenian invasion of Syracuse obliged the Sicilians to take part in the war.' But surely the furnishing of empty ships by a ship-building people, would be no breach of alliance: and there seems in the present sentence to be a reference to the one preceding, πόλεις τε ξυμμαχίδας ποιούμενοι ὅσαι ἦσαν ἐκτὸς τῆς ἑαυτῶν δυνάμεως, by which must be meant almost solely, the Grecian states in Sicily and Italy. Accordingly I am now of opinion, that the words are, as Poppo directs, to be referred to what follows; though I cannot agree with him in assigning to the words the sense, 'et a Lacedæmoniis quidem socii (Græci) præter eas naves, quæ partes ipsorum in Italia et Sicilia amplexis ibi erant, naves fabricari pro magnitudine civitatium jussi sunt.' No little objection is there to supplying (as Poppo does) the nomin. to ἐπετάχθησαν, from τοῖς τἀκείνων ἑλομένοις: and still more to supplying it, with Goell., from κατὰ μέγεθος τῶν πόλεων. Again, to suppose with Arn., Goell., and Pop., that at αὐτοῦ is to be understood ἐν Ἰταλίᾳ καὶ Σικελίᾳ, from ἐξ Ἰταλίας καὶ Σικελίας, (according to which the sense will be, 'in addition to the ships already on the spot in Sicily and Italy, belonging to the allies of Lacedæmon, they were ordered to build others,') involves the greatest harshness. Far more simple and natural is it to regard ναῦς as being really, what it at first view appears to be, the subject to ἐπετάχθησαν: and if the common Greek form ναῦς as a nomin. be thought inadmissible in so Attic a writer as Thucydides, we may read νῆες. Thus the construction will be, ναῦς ἐπετάχθησαν τοῖς ἐξ Ἰταλίας καὶ Σικ. τἀκείνων ἑλομένοις ποιεῖσθαι. Nor need we stumble at the transposition of the article. See note on vi. 64, fin. Λακεδαιμονίοις stands plainly for ὑπὸ τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, and ἐκείνων for αὐτῶν, as at ii. 13. Finally, by αὐτοῦ understand ἐν Λακεδαίμονι, to be taken from Λακεδαιμονίοις: a harshness indeed, but not greater than what is elsewhere observable in our author.

ἑτοιμάζειν] Supply ἐπετάχθη from the preceding ἐπετάχθησαν. Δεχομένους μιᾷ νηῒ, 'with one ship [only].' See infra vi. 76.

3. τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν ξυμμαχίαν ἐξήτα-

ξυμμαχίαν ἐξήταζον, καὶ ἐς τὰ περὶ Πελοπόννησον μᾶλλον χωρία ἐπρεσβεύοντο, Κέρκυραν, καὶ Κεφαλληνίαν, καὶ Ἀκαρνᾶνας, καὶ Ζάκυνθον· ὁρῶντες, εἰ σφίσι φίλια ταῦτ' εἴη βεβαίως, πέριξ τὴν Πελοπόννησον καταπολεμήσοντες. VIII. Ὀλίγον τε ἐπενόουν οὐδὲν ἀμφότεροι, ἀλλ' ἔῤῥωντο ἐς τὸν πόλεμον· οὐκ ἀπεικότως· ἀρχόμενοι γὰρ πάντες ὀξύτερον ἀντιλαμβάνονται· τότε δὲ καὶ νεότης πολλὴ μὲν οὖσα ἐν τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ, πολλὴ δ' ἐν ταῖς Ἀθήναις, οὐκ ἀκουσίως, ὑπὸ ἀπειρίας, ἥπτετο τοῦ πολέμου, ἥ τε ἄλλη Ἑλλὰς πᾶσα μετέωρος ἦν, ξυνιουσῶν τῶν πρώτων πόλεων. 2. καὶ πολλὰ μὲν λόγια ἐλέγετο, πολλὰ δὲ χρησμολόγοι ἧδον ἔν τε τοῖς μέλλουσι

ζον] 'made a careful survey of the confederacy [already] pertaining to them.' Μᾶλλον, i. e. the more diligently. I have here followed Goell. and Arn. in placing a comma, not, as is usually done, after εἴη, but after βεβαίως: for βεβαίως, while not very suitable to καταπολεμήσοντες, is entirely so to φίλια, as appears from a passage aptly adduced by Goell. infra iii. 10, καλῶς σφίσι φίλιον, where the Scholiast explains καλῶς by βεβαίως. The term is, indeed, one highly applicable, since, as Goeller observes, 'though the states mentioned were already in alliance with Athens, yet the object now was to draw closer the bonds of amity.' With the expression πέριξ τὴν Πελοπόννησον καταπολεμήσοντες, of which the sense is, 'bello circumcirca infestans Peloponnesum,' compare infra vi. 90, τὴν Πελοπόννησον πέριξ πολιορκοῦντες.

Ch. VIII. Thucydides now proceeds to describe the state of the public feeling in Greece, as to the respective claims of Athens and Lacedæmon. The cause of the latter was, he shows, upon the whole, the popular one.

1. ὀλίγον ἐπενόουν οὐδὲν ἀμφότεροι] 'both [parties] meditated nothing lowly or insignificant:' an elegant form of expression found also infra vii. 59, ὀλίγον οὐδὲν—ἐπενόουν: and in Lucian, Nig. 5, μικρὸν οὐκέτι οὐδὲν ἐπινοῶ. Pseud. ii. 214, οὐκέτι μικρὸν οὐδὲν ὑπενόει. Plut. in Eum. C. 12, οὐδὲν ἔτι μικρὸν ἐλπίζων, and Cic. 18, οὐδὲν οὖν ἐπενόει μικρὸν ὁ Λ. ἢ ἄσημον. Appian, i. 536, καὶ μικρὸν οὐδὲν ἐνθυμούμενος, and i. 794, οὐδὲν σμικρὸν διενοεῖτο. Arrian, E. A. 1, 6, οὔτε μικρόν τι καὶ φαῦλον ἐπινοεῖν. Joseph. Ant. xv. 7, 9, μικρὸν οὐδὲν ἐπενόει. Compare Xen. Cyr. vi. 2, 4, παρεσκευάζετο—ὡς δὴ ἀνὴρ οὐδὲν σμικρὸν ἐπινοῶν πράττειν. Zosim. i. 44, 3. Livy, ii. 49, 'Nihil medium, nec spem nec curam, sed immensa omnia volventium animo.' And so Milton, Par. Lost, i. 14, by the same elegant idiom,

'I thence Invoke thy aid to my adventurous song,
That with no middle flight intends to soar

ἔῤῥωντο ἐς τὸν πόλεμον] literally, 'were strengthened for the war,' 'were strengthening themselves for the war,' i. e. put forth all their strength. So Dio Cass. lv. 34, πρὸς τὰς τῶν πολέμων διαχειρίσεις ἐῤῥώσατο. For the simple we have the compound verb infra vii. 2, ἐπεῤῥώθησαν, and vii. 7, ἐπεῤῥωνται: and in Plut. ap. Steph. Thes. followed by πρός: ἐπιῤῥώσας σε πρὸς πόλεμον. And in Xen. Anab. ii. 6, 7, the simple followed by πρός: ἐῤῥωμένον πρὸς τοὺς πολεμίους. Similar to this is the expression in Ps. lii. 7, Aq. ἐκραταιώθη ἐπὶ τῇ ματαιότητι αὐτοῦ. 2 Chron. xvii. 1, and Nehem. ii. 18, ἐκραταιώθησαν αἱ χεῖρες αὐτῶν εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν (scil. ἔργον). The sense, then, is, 'they applied themselves vigorously (lit. 'strengthened themselves') to the war.' In which use of the verbs ῥώννυσθαι and κραταιοῦσθαι we have the use of the passive in a reciprocal sense; on which see Winer, Gr. N. T. p. 240.

οὐκ ἀπεικότως] 'not unreasonably,' 'naturally enough.' See sup. i. 73. Ἀντιλαμβάνονται, for ἀντέχονται, 'apply themselves.' Ὑπὸ ἀπειρίας. Similarly we have in Appian, ii. 267, ἐξ ἀπειρίας. Liban. Or. 732, ἐξ ἀβουλίας. Arrian, E. A. διὰ τὸ ἀπείραστον (read ἀπείρατον). On the sentiment, the Scholiast aptly compares the adage, γλυκὺς ἀπείρῳ πόλεμος.

μετέωρος ἦν] 'stood at gaze,' 'eager with expectation.' Imitated from which is the expression in Joseph. Bell. i. 27, 3, 1108, 31. Philostr. V. Ap. viii. 15 & 21. Ξυνιουσῶν, 'engaging in combat:' a use of the term not unfrequent in the classical writers, as Xen. An. i. 10, 7. Ages. ii. 10. Hist. iv. 3, 10. In Xen. Lacon. xiii. 9, we have the full phrase, εἰς μάχην συνιέναι.

2. λόγια ἐλέγετο] Philologists are not

quite agreed as to the sense here of λόγια and χρησμὸς, as involved in χρησμολόγος. The Schol. regards them as alike denoting oracles; with this difference, however, that the former term was used of those in prose; the latter, of those in verse: a distinction, this, perfectly applicable to the earlier writers, but not to the later ones, in whom we have λόγιον not unfrequently used to denote the prediction of a soothsayer; χρ., the oracular response of a god. Now the former might be either in prose or verse, though generally it was in prose; while the latter was almost invariably in verse. As to the passage before us, Haack and Pop. are of opinion, that by λόγια here are to be understood the auguria vel præsagia vatum; by the χρησμοὶ, oracula deorum: in which explanation of χρησ. I entirely coincide; not, however, in that of λόγιον; for in Herodot., Aristoph., and Xen., the word seldom denotes any other than oraculum responsum or verbum fatidicum rei alicujus. And so Pollux, i. 18, explains λόγιον by φήμη ἐκ Θεοῦ, and 19, ἐκ Θεοῦ ἦκε λόγιον. Accordingly, of the two terms, λόγιον is, as Locella observes on Xen. Ephes. p. 152, the general term; while χρ. is the special one; the former denoting an oracular response, or dictum from a god (θέσφατον) — whether intimating the divine will, or signifying any future event—which was expressed either in prose or in verse; the latter, an oracular response from a god, as given in answer to some inquiry, and usually in verse; to which latter circumstance we have allusion in the expression ᾠδὸν. And so in Eurip. Heracl. 404, seq. we have, χρησμῶν δ' ἀοιδοὺς πάντας εἰς ἓν συναλίσας, Ἠλεγξα καὶ βέβηλα (vulgata) καὶ κεκρυμμένα, Λόγια παλαιὰ, &c.—καὶ τῶν μὲν ἄλλων διάφορ' ἐστὶ θεσφάτων Πόλ'. Compare also Polyb. iii. 112, 8. Appian, ii. 115. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 472, 29. Thus by χρησμολόγος was denoted 'one who pronounced such oracular responses,' whether by an immediate communication from the Deity, or as receiving them from others; or, again, 'one who recited and interpreted the oracles.' Now such were significantly termed χρησμῳδοὶ, or, as in the above passage of Euripides, χρησμῶν ἀοιδοὶ, lit. oracle-singers, because such oracles being in verse, were, we may suppose, chanted. Of these χρησμολόγοι we have frequent mention in Herodot. and Aristoph. See Pax, 1047, 1070, and Aves, 960, seqq. So in Eq. 61 it is said of one, ᾄδει δὲ χρησμούς. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. vii. 68, χρησμοί τ' ᾠδοντο ἐν πολλοῖς χωρίοις, καὶ θειασμοῖς κάτοχοι γυναῖκες οἰκτρὰς ἐμαντεύοντο καὶ δεινὰς τῇ πόλει τύχας. I have here, with Haack and Bekk., retained the vulg. ἐλέγετο, for which Pop. and Goell. edit, from MSS., ἐλέγοντο, but without sufficient reason. Certainly ἐλέγετο was read by Dio Cass., as appears from two passages, evidently imitated from the present, at p. 431, 66, and 273, 64.

3. ἐκινήθη] 'was shaken by an earthquake:' a rare signification, unnoticed in Steph. Thes. The only example besides the present that I have noted, is in Hdot. vi. 98, Δῆλος ἐκινήθη—σεισθεῖσα, which passage was here probably in the mind of our author. On the words a little further on, ἐλέγετο δὲ καὶ ἐδόκει, comp. Herodot. vii. 142, ἠπιώτερα τῶν προτέρων καὶ ἦν καὶ ἐδόκεε—put, by a hysteron proteron, for καὶ ἐδόκεε καὶ ἦν. Σημῆναι, for σημεῖον εἶναι (to be a portent or omen); as in Plut. Themist. 13, πταρμὸς ἐκ τῶν δεξιῶν ἐσήμηνε. Appian, ii. 817, 70, καὶ ἔδοξε τοῦτο ἐς τὰ μέλλοντα σημῆναι. Arrian, E. A. vii. 24, καί τι τοιόνδε πρὸ τῶν μελλόντων σημῆναι λέγει. Livy, iii. 5, 'Cœlum visum est ardere plurimo igni, portentaque alia aut observata oculis, aut vanas exterritis ostentavere species.'

ἀνεζητεῖτο] 'was carefully sifted out and scrutinized.' So Lucian, i. 138, ἀναζ. δυσεύρετον χρῆμα. Aristoph. Lysist. 28, πρᾶγμ' ἀνεζητημένον, πολλαῖσιν ἀγρυπνίαισιν ἐρριπτασμένον.

4. ἐποίει—ἐς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους] lit. 'made for the Lacedæmonians,' i. e. inclined for them. For vulg. ἐπῄει, which I had before edited, with Gottleb. and Haack, at the suggestion of Abresch, Reiske, and Bauer, I have now seen proper to adopt ἐποίει; for the latter, besides being supported by a preponderance of external evidence, has the greater appearance of being the true, from its being the more difficult reading: though not so far such as to involve a violation of the propriety of language, or of the usus loquendi. Thus in Lucian, Dial. D. vi. 6, we have, ἀλλὰ ἡ νεφέλη ἐγὼ εἶναι δόξω, καὶ τὸ αἰσχρὸν ἐπ' ἐμὲ ποιήσει, where, though the idiom may be thought harsh, it would surely be most uncritical to there edit, as has been done by Schmeider, from two MSS., ἥξει; such being plainly a mere gloss. Moreover, the external evidence in favour of ἐποίει is greatly strengthened by various close imitations of the present passage adduced by Abresch and myself from Dio Cass., Appian, Arrian, and Plut., which prove that ἐποίει was in the text of Thucydides when those writers flourished. In all those passages ἐποίει is either found in the text, or has place in the MSS., and ought to have been received by the editors. Indeed, it has yet to be proved that ἐπῄει εἴς τινα is good Greek. It seems to me scarcely good enough for a Scholiast; and arose, I suspect, from a mere mistake of the copyist, arising from what is called itacism, by which οι was pronounced like η.

Προειπόντων is said to stand, by a usual variation of construction, for προειπόντας. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 461. But the word forms with αὐτῶν, to be supplied from the context, genitives absolute, by which arises a stronger sense, namely, 'especially since they professed.' In ἐλευθεροῦσιν, just after, we have the use of the indic., and not, what grammatical propriety would seem rather to require, (ut in re, quæ ex mente et cogitatione cujuspiam refertur,) the opt., because, as Herm. on Vig. 899, observes, the writer, by using the indicative, in a manner represents the Lacedæmonians as present, and saying, τὴν Ἑλλάδα ἐλευθεροῦμεν. As an example of which idiom, Herm. adduces a passage of Hom. Od. xvii. 12, εἵρετο — ἰκόμην, for ἱκοίμην. Moreover, ἐλευθεροῦσιν is regarded by Buttm., Matth., and Herm. as pres. for fut.: in which case it would be equivalent to ὡς ἐλευθερώσοντες τοὺς Ἕλληνας, said in Isocr. Paneg. p. 90, of the Lacedæmonians. Goeller, however, takes it as a pres. indic. for the cognate subst. 'liberators of Greece.' It may suffice to render, 'that are liberating Greece.'

5. ἐῤῥωτό τε πᾶς] Evidently imitated from this is the expression in Appian, ii. 215, ἐῤῥωτο πᾶς ἀνήρ. The Schol. well explains ἐῤῥωτο by προεθυμεῖτο.

ἐν τούτῳ τε — παρέσται] Compare a similar passage infra iv. 14. Evidently imitated from the present are the following of Dionys. Hal. Ant. 618, 16, καὶ τὸ νικᾷν οὐ παρ' ἄλλον τινὰ ἢ παρ' ἑαυτὸν ἕκαστος τιθέμενος: and Livy, xxx. 9, 'In quo quisque cessasset, prodi ab se salutem omnium rebatur.'

6. ὀργῇ] I have here thought proper, with Poppo, to insert (though in smaller character) ἐν, and that because I have never met with a single example of ὀργῇ ἔχειν as used for ἐν ὀργῇ ἔχειν. Dio Cass., indeed, not unfrequently uses the phrase; but it is invariably with an ἐν.

Ch. IX. In this chapter we have a list of the several states and cities which composed the two confederacies; on which see Wachsmuth, Ant. Gr. As regards the Lacedæmonian one, see i. 2, p. 129, and on the Athenian, see p. 69.

2. ἔπειτα δὲ ὕστερον καὶ ἅπαντες] as appears from vii. 34. By the Λοκροὶ are to be understood the Opuntians, not the Ozolæ. See my note in Transl.

Λακεδαιμονίους, ἄλλως τε καὶ προειπόντων ὅτι τὴν Ἑλλάδα ἐλευθεροῦσιν. 5. ἐῤῥωτό τε πᾶς καὶ ἰδιώτης καὶ πόλις, εἴ τι δύναιτο, καὶ λόγῳ καὶ ἔργῳ ξυνεπιλαμβάνειν αὐτοῖς· ἐν τούτῳ τε κεκωλῦσθαι ἐδόκει ἑκάστῳ τὰ πράγματα, ᾧ μή τις αὐτὸς παρέσται. 6. οὕτως ἐν ὀργῇ εἶχον οἱ πλείους τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, οἱ μὲν, τῆς ἀρχῆς ἀπολυθῆναι βουλόμενοι, οἱ δὲ, μὴ ἀρχθῶσι φοβούμενοι. 7. παρασκευῇ μὲν οὖν τοιαύτῃ καὶ γνώμῃ ὥρμηντο.

IX. Πόλεις δ' ἑκάτεροι τάσδ' ἔχοντες ξυμμάχους ἐς τὸν πόλεμον καθίσταντο. 2. Λακεδαιμονίων μὲν οἵδε ξύμμαχοι· Πελοποννήσιοι μὲν οἱ ἐντὸς ἰσθμοῦ πάντες, πλὴν Ἀργείων καὶ Ἀχαιῶν· (τούτοις δ' ἐς ἀμφοτέρους φιλία ἦν· Πελληνῆς δὲ Ἀχαιῶν μόνοι ξυνεπολέμουν τὸ πρῶτον, ἔπειτα δὲ ὕστερον καὶ ἅπαντες·) ἔξω δὲ Πελοποννήσου Μεγαρῆς, Φωκῆς, Λοκροὶ, Βοιωτοὶ, Ἀμπρακιῶται, Λευκάδιοι, Ἀνακτόριοι. 3. τούτων ναυτικὸν παρείχοντο Κορίνθιοι, Μεγαρῆς, Σικυώνιοι, Πελληνῆς, Ἠλεῖοι, Ἀμπρακιῶται, Λευκάδιοι. ἱππέας δὲ Βοιωτοὶ, Φωκῆς, Λοκροί· αἱ δ' ἄλλαι πόλεις πεζὸν παρεῖχον. αὕτη Λακεδαιμονίων ξυμμαχία. 4. Ἀθηναίων δὲ Χῖοι, Λέσβιοι, Πλαταιῆς, Μεσσήνιοι οἱ ἐν Ναυπάκτῳ, Ἀκαρνάνων οἱ πλείους, Κερκυραῖοι, Ζακύνθιοι, καὶ ἄλλαι πόλεις αἱ ὑποτελεῖς οὖσαι ἐν ἔθνεσι τοσοῖσδε, Καρία ἡ ἐπὶ θαλάσσῃ, Δωριῆς Καρσὶ πρόσοικοι, Ἰωνία, Ἑλλήσποντος, τὰ ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης, νῆσοι ὅσαι ἐντὸς Πελοποννήσου καὶ Κρήτης πρὸς ἥλιον ἀνίσχοντα, πᾶσαι αἱ ἄλλαι Κυκλάδες πλὴν Μήλου καὶ Θήρας. 5. τούτων ναυτικὸν παρείχοντο Χῖοι, Λέσβιοι, Κερκυραῖοι, οἱ δ' ἄλλοι πεζὸν καὶ χρήματα. 6. ξυμμαχία μὲν αὕτη ἑκατέρων καὶ παρασκευὴ ἐς τὸν πόλεμον ἦν.

X. Οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, μετὰ τὰ ἐν Πλαταιαῖς εὐθὺς, περιήγγελλον κατὰ τὴν Πελοπόννησον καὶ τὴν ἔξω ξυμμαχίαν στρατιὰν παρασκευάζεσθαι ταῖς πόλεσι τά τε ἐπιτήδεια, οἷα εἰκὸς ἐπὶ ἔξοδον ἔκδημον ἔχειν, ὡς ἐσβαλοῦντες ἐς τὴν Ἀττικήν. 2. ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἑκάστοις ἑτοῖμα γίγνοιτο κατὰ τὸν χρόνον τὸν εἰρημένον, ξυνῆεσαν τὰ δύο μέρη ἀπὸ πόλεως ἑκάστης ἐς τὸν Ἰσθμόν. 3. καὶ ἐπειδὴ πᾶν τὸ στράτευμα ξυνειλεγμένον ἦν, Ἀρχίδαμος ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων, ὅσπερ ἡγεῖτο τῆς ἐξόδου ταύτης, ξυγκαλέσας τοὺς στρατηγοὺς τῶν πόλεων πασῶν, καὶ τοὺς μάλιστα ἐν τέλει καὶ ἀξιολογωτάτους, παρεῖναι, τοιάδε ἔλεξεν.

XI. "Ἄνδρες Πελοποννήσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι, καὶ οἱ πατέρες ἡμῶν πολλὰς στρατείας καὶ ἐν αὐτῇ Πελοποννήσῳ καὶ ἔξω ἐποιήσαντο, καὶ αὐτῶν ἡμῶν οἱ πρεσβύτεροι οὐκ ἄπειροι πολέμων εἰσὶν· ὅμως δὲ

4. πᾶσαι αἱ ἄλλαι Κυκλάδες πλὴν Μήλ.] Render, 'all the other Cyclades but, or except,' &c.; the author not meaning to add another article to the last, but to qualify and define the preceding one. Nothing is more frequent than this pleonastic use of ἄλλος, especially before πλήν. See Steph. Thes. in v. ἄλλος and πλήν, and the critics there cited.

Ch. X. 1. περιήγγελλον] 'sent round messages, or orders,' as Herodot. vii. 1. Xen. Hist. vi. 4, 2. Arrian, E. A. vii. 14, 16, πένθος ποιεῖσθαι περιηγγέλη κατὰ πᾶσαν τὴν χώραν.

Of κατὰ here the sense is over, as said of space traversed. The construction is, περ. ταῖς πόλεσι στρατιὰν τά τε ἐπιτήδεια παρασκ., ὡς ἐσβ.

οἷα εἰκὸς ἐπὶ ἔξοδον ἔκδημον ἔχειν] 'such as it was fit they should have [at going] on a foreign expedition.' See note on i. 15.

2. ἑκάστοις] 'on the part of each.' Τὰ δύο μέρη, 'two parts out of three,' 'two-thirds;' viz. of the males able to bear arms; as infra iii. 47, and iii. 15. See more at i. 74. Of this use of the plena locutio, I have noted only one example elsewhere, Appian, ii. 271, 12, ἐκ τριῶν τὰ δύο μέρη.

3. παρεῖναι] I have placed a comma after ἀξιολ., because I agree with Goell. and Pop., that παρεῖναι is to be taken with ξυγκαλέσας. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 420.

Ch. XI. 1. αὐτῇ] I have, with Pop. and Goell., cancelled the art. after αὐτῇ, (though retained by Bekk.) because, as Goell. remarks, 'it is usual for the article to be thus omitted in proper names where the pronoun αὐτὸς is added.' See i. 31.

τῆσδε οὔπω μείζονα παρασκευὴν ἔχοντες ἐξήλθομεν. ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπὶ πόλιν δυνατωτάτην νῦν ἐρχόμεθα, καὶ αὐτοὶ πλεῖστοι καὶ ἄριστοι στρατεύοντες. 2. δίκαιον οὖν ἡμᾶς μήτε τῶν πατέρων χείρους φαίνεσθαι μήτε ἡμῶν αὐτῶν τῆς δόξης ἐνδεεστέρους. ἡ γὰρ Ἑλλὰς πᾶσα τῇδε τῇ ὁρμῇ ἐπῆρται, καὶ προσέχει τὴν γνώμην, εὔνοιαν ἔχουσα διὰ τὸ Ἀθηναίων ἔχθος, πρᾶξαι ἡμᾶς ἃ ἐπινοοῦμεν. 3. οὔκουν χρὴ, εἴ τῳ καὶ δοκοῦμεν πλήθει ἐπιέναι, καὶ ἀσφάλεια πολλὴ εἶναι μὴ ἂν ἐλθεῖν τοὺς ἐναντίους ἡμῖν διὰ μάχης, τούτου ἕνεκα ἀμελέστερόν τι παρεσκευασμένους χωρεῖν, ἀλλὰ καὶ πόλεως ἑκάστης ἡγεμόνα καὶ στρατιώτην, τὸ καθ' αὑτὸν, ἀεὶ προσδέχεσθαι ἐς κίνδυνόν τινα ἥξειν. 4. ἄδηλα γὰρ τὰ τῶν πολέμων, καὶ ἐξ ὀλίγου τὰ πολλὰ καὶ δι' ὀργῆς αἱ ἐπιχειρήσεις γίγνονται· πολλάκις τε τὸ ἔλασσον πλῆθος δεδιὸς, ἄμεινον ἡμύνατο τοὺς πλέονας, διὰ τὸ καταφρονοῦντας, ἀλλὰ καὶ] This combination of the particles is highly elliptical. The full sense is well expressed by Poppo, 'But as we ourselves have a considerable force, so also are we proceeding against a most puissant state.'

2. δίκαιον] scil. ἐστι, 'it is fitting, suitable, incumbent on:' a use of δίκαιος, however rare, which easily arises from the primary signif. of the word; since what is just for any one to do, it is fitting he should do, as a duty incumbent on him. Of the words following, μήτε ἡμῶν αὐτῶν τῆς δόξης ἐνδεεστέρους, the sense is, lit., 'nor to be inferior to our own glory.' This comparison of persons with things, when the things in question are connected with persons, is not unfrequent in the best ancient writers. The most apposite example I can adduce, is in Plut. Oth. § 6, ap. Steph. Thes. 3153, ἐνδεέστερον τῆς δόξης στρατηγεῖ.

ὁρμῇ] 'movement,' 'expedition,' as the Latin motus for motus bellicus. Ἐπῆρται, 'was erect with expectation,' for μετέωρός ἐστιν, as supra ch. 8. Προσέχει τὴν γνώμην, 'has its attention fixed upon us.'

εὔνοιαν ἔχουσα διὰ τὸ Ἀθηναίων ἔχθος πρᾶξαι ἡμᾶς ἃ ἐπινοοῦμεν] Render, 'which, bearing good-will towards us by its enmity to the Athenians, wishes that we may accomplish what we design.' I cannot agree with those who connect πρᾶξαι ἡμᾶς with προσέχει τὴν γνώμην; but, with Gottleb., I unite the words with εὔνοιαν ἔχουσα; by which they will be equivalent to δι' εὔνοιαν ἐλπίζουσα καὶ ἐπιθυμοῦσα πρᾶξαι ἡμᾶς ἃ ἐπινοοῦμεν. The phrase εὔνοιαν ἔχουσα must be tacitly repeated, per dilogiam, in a cognate sense, with πρᾶξαι, &c.; in the first instance it will signify well-wishing; in the second, simply wishing, or desiring, which is included in the other.

3. ἀσφάλεια πολλὴ εἶναι] Sub. δοκῇ from δοκοῦμεν. On the construction see Schneider on Xen. Cyr. ii. 4, 13, ἐν ἀσφαλεῖ εἶναι τοῦ μή, &c., where must be supplied ἕνεκα, as here ὥστε. The τι before παρεσκευασμένους signifies 'at all,' 'in any respect.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 457. Τὸ καθ' αὑτὸν, scil. μέρος, 'for his own part.' So Plutarch, Pomp. ch. 70, τῶν μὲν πολλῶν ἐπεσκόπει — τὸ ἑκάστης, τὸ καθ' ἑαυτόν. Arrian, E. A. iii. 15, 5.

4. ἐξ ὀλίγου] scil. πράγματος, 'from some trivial circumstance.' Comp. v. 102, and see the commentators on Livy, xxxi. sub init. Δι' ὀργῆς, 'through passion,' i. e. by men falling into a passion. Of the words following, πολλάκις τὸ ἔλασσον—γενέσθαι, the full sense is, 'often, too, has it happened, that the lesser force has better withstood the greater [than the greater might have withstood the lesser], from the circumstance, that these (i. e. those who possess greater force) have, from contempt of their enemy, been unprepared [for the contest].' For want of seeing that a clause has thus to be supplied from the preceding, Dobree — thinking that there was no place for the compar.— proposed to cancel ἄμεινον. But by supplying, as Poppo has done, ἢ οἱ πλείονες τὸ ἔλασσον· πλῆθος, this is quite unnecessary. Δεδιὸς may be rendered 'by fearing,' and καταφρονοῦντας, 'by despising.' At καταφρ. supply αὐτοὺς from the context, as in Jos. Ant. xviii. 9, 2, πολλοὺς κτείναντες αὐτῶν, διὰ τὸ καταφρονοῦντας, ὡς ἐπὶ τὰ ἕτοιμα, χωρεῖν. Finally, the words δεδιὸς and δεδιότας are not to be taken so much of fear, as of that quickly apprehensive caution, which descries danger ἀπαρασκεύους γενέσθαι. 5. χρὴ δὲ ἀεὶ ἐν τῷ πολεμίᾳ, τῇ μὲν γνώμῃ θαρσαλέους στρατεύειν, τῷ δὲ ἔργῳ δεδιότας παρασκευάζεσθαι· οὕτω γὰρ πρός τε τὸ ἐπιέναι τοῖς ἐναντίοις εὐψυχότατοι ἂν εἶεν, πρός τε τὸ ἐπιχειρεῖσθαι ἀσφαλέστατοι. 6. ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐδ' ἐπὶ ἀδύνατον ἀμύνεσθαι οὕτω πόλιν ἐρχόμεθα, ἀλλὰ τοῖς πᾶσιν ἄριστα παρεσκευασμένην· ὥστε χρὴ καὶ πάνυ ἐλπίζειν διὰ μάχης ἰέναι αὐτούς·—εἰ μὴ καὶ νῦν ὥρμηνται, ἐν ᾧ οὔπω πάρεσμεν,—ἀλλ' ὅταν ἐν τῇ γῇ ὁρῶσιν ἡμᾶς δῃοῦντάς τε καὶ τἀκείνων φθείροντας. 7. πᾶσι γὰρ ἐν τοῖς ὄμμασι καὶ ἐν τῷ παραυτίκα ὁρᾶν πάσχοντάς τι ἄηθες ὀργὴ προσπίπτει· καὶ οἱ λογισμῷ ἐλάχιστα χρώμενοι θυμῷ πλεῖστα ἐς ἔργον καθίστανται. 8. Ἀθηναίους δὲ καὶ πλέον τι τῶν ἄλλων εἰκὸς τοῦτο δρᾶσαι, οἳ ἄρχειν τε τῶν ἄλλων ἀξιοῦσι, καὶ ἐπιόντες τὴν τῶν πέλας δῃοῦν μᾶλλον ἢ τὴν ἑαυτῶν ὁρᾶν. 9. ὡς οὖν ἐπὶ τοσαύτην πόλιν afar off, and provides against it. Evidently imitated from the present, is a passage of Herodian, viii. 3, 11, πολλάκις γὰρ καὶ ὀλίγοι πλειόνων περιεγένοντο, καὶ δοκοῦντες ἀσθενέστεροι, καθεῖλον τοὺς ἐν ὑπολήψει ἀνδρείας μείζονος. Similar sentiments may be also seen in our author infra ch. 89, and Eurip. Arch. frag. 10.

5. χρὴ δὲ—παρασκευάζεσθαι] Of γνώμη the sense here is counsel or purpose, by a use of the word not unfrequent, and required here by the antithetical expression τῷ ἔργῳ. Δεδιότας is to be taken like δεδιὼς just before, or as standing for ὡς or ὡσεὶ δεδ.: a view confirmed by the following passage, imitated from the present, of Dio Cass. p. 32, 81, τὰ δὲ πρακτέα ἐν τῷ θαρσοῦντι διεκόπει· καὶ τὴν διαχείρισιν αὐτῶν, ὡς καὶ δεδιὼς, ἐποιεῖτο, which writer has certainly this same passage of our author in view at 316, 21, where we have the two terms δεδιότως and θαρσούντως similarly opposed. Compare, too, the words of Onosand. p. 110, φόβος γὰρ εὔκαιρος, ἀσφάλεια προμηθὴς, καταφρόνησις ἄκαιρος, εὐεπιβούλευτος τόλμα: and also Procop. 359, 3. Hom. Il. xv. 563. Soph. Aj. 1098, and Dexipp. p. 9, B. and 11, C. Corp. Byz. Hist. Our author in this passage seems to have had in mind a similar one of Herodot. vii. 49, ἀνὴρ δὴ οὕτω ἂν εἴη ἄριστος, εἰ βουλευόμενος μὲν ἀρρωδέοι, πᾶν ἐπιλεγόμενος πείσεσθαι χρῆμα, ἐν δὲ τῷ ἔργῳ θρασὺς εἴη.

6. οὐδ' ἐπὶ ἀδύνατον ἀμύνεσθαι οὕτω] The οὕτω is to be joined with ἀδύνατον, being used, like ita and adeo in Latin after negatives, in the sense valde; as Livy, iii. 20, 'non ita civitatem ægram.' This use is of frequent occurrence in Plato, as p. 665, E, πολλούς τε καὶ οὐ φαύλους οὕτω. The expression may be regarded as elliptical for 'so very much,' which word we have expressed in Hom. Od. xiii. 239, οὐδέ τι λίην Οὕτω νώνυμός ἐστι, 'neque usque adeo ignobilis.' Usually, however, there is in these cases a tacit comparison implied; which, if expressed, would be introduced by the corresponding ὡς. Ἐλπίζειν has here the primary sense 'to expect.' Εἰ μὴ καὶ νῦν ὥρμηνται, 'unless they are even now in motion:' on which formula see Schneider on Plato, i. p. 134, seqq. Ἀλλ' ὅταν, 'yet certainly when.'

7. ἐν τοῖς ὄμμασι καὶ ἐν τῷ παραυτίκα ὁρᾶν] This is not a pleonasm, but rather a highly forcible expression, occurring in the best writers from Homer downwards. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 396. The construction here is, πᾶσι γὰρ ὀργὴ προσπίπτει ὁρᾶν ἐν τῷ παραυτίκα πάσχοντάς τι ἄηθες. At ὁρᾶν supply δῃουμένην from the foregoing δῃοῦντας, as was evidently done by Lycophron, who, in his Cassand. 251, has ἅπασα δὲ χθὼν προὐμμάτων (for πρὸ ὀμμάτων) δῃουμένη. In ὁρᾶν we have the use of inf. for partic. ὁρῶσι. And worthy of notice is the use of the accus. πάσχοντας after dat. πᾶσι; as infra vi. 55, and vii. 40. In the term ἄηθες we have superadded to the ordinary idea of what is unusual, that also of insult and disgrace; as in Xen. Ath. iii. 5, ἄηθες ὕβρισμα. A similar use presents itself in our word insolent.

θυμῷ πλεῖστα ἐς ἔργον καθίστανται] Render, 'are the most hurried into action by passion:' alluding to the idea of persons being 'set on to work' by some strong motive of action.

8. καὶ ἐπιόντες—ὁρᾶν] The construction is, καὶ (ἀξιοῦσι, to be repeated from the context) ἐπιόντες δῃοῦν τὴν τῶν πέλας, μᾶλλον ἢ ὁρᾶν τὴν ἑαυτῶν [δῃουμένην, to be taken out of δῃοῦν].

στρατεύοντες, καὶ μεγίστην δόξαν οἰσόμενοι τοῖς τε προγόνοις καὶ ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς ἐπ' ἀμφότερα ἐκ τῶν ἀποβαινόντων, ἕπεσθε ὅπη ἄν τις ἡγῆται, κόσμον καὶ φυλακὴν περὶ παντὸς ποιούμενοι, καὶ τὰ παραγγελλόμενα ὀξέως δεχόμενοι· κάλλιστον γὰρ τόδε καὶ ἀσφαλέστατον, πολλοὺς ὄντας ἐνὶ κόσμῳ χρωμένους φαίνεσθαι."

XII. Τοσαῦτα εἰπὼν καὶ διαλύσας τὸν ξύλλογον ὁ Ἀρχίδαμος, Μελήσιππον πρῶτον ἀποστέλλει ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας τὸν Διακρίτου, ἄνδρα Σπαρτιάτην, εἴ τι ἄρα μᾶλλον ἐνδοῖεν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ὁρῶντες ἤδη σφᾶς ἐν ὁδῷ ὄντας. 2. οἱ δὲ οὐ προσεδέξαντο αὐτὸν ἐς τὴν πόλιν οὐδ' ἐπὶ τὸ κοινόν· ἦν γὰρ Περικλέους γνώμη πρότερον νενικηκυῖα, κήρυκα καὶ πρεσβείαν μὴ προσδέχεσθαι Λακεδαιμονίων ἐξεστρατευμένων· ἀποπέμπουσιν οὖν αὐτὸν πρὶν ἀκοῦσαι, καὶ ἐκέλευον ἐκτὸς ὅρων εἶναι αὐθημερόν, τό τε λοιπὸν ἀναχωρήσαντας ἐπὶ τὰ σφέτερα αὐτῶν, ἤν τι βούλωνται, πρεσβεύεσθαι. 3. ξυμπέμ-

9. μεγίστην δόξαν — ἀποβαινόντων] Render, 'and are about to carry off from the events [of the warfare], as they turn out either way, the greatest honour or disgrace both to our ancestors and to ourselves,' &c. Δόξαν is here a vox mediæ significationis, denoting simply what is thought or said of a person, whether for good or evil. But we have no English word that exactly corresponds. Ἐπ' ἀμφότερα, scil. μέρη, 'in utramque partem,' as infra iv. 58, γνῶμαι ἐλέγοντο ἐπ' ἀμφ., and i. 83, and iv. 88. The expression is here introduced as explanatory of δόξαν. In the not unfrequent military admonition, (on which see Onosand. Strateg. p. 30.) ἕπεσθε ὅπη ἄν τις ἡγῆται, the τις answers to on in French, and our one; as also in Lesbonax, p. 174, 27, χρῆσθε τύχῃ ἀγαθῇ ἐπειδὰν ἡγῆταί τις ἐπὶ τοὺς πολεμίους: in which cases the idiom in question is resorted to by a general, from a feeling of modesty, and to avoid egotism. Thus it is equivalent to 'follow wheresoever ye may be led.' Περὶ παντὸς ποιούμενοι, 'regarding above every thing:' a stronger form of expression than the more usual περὶ πολλοῦ ποιεῖσθαι. Of the words following, τὰ παραγγελλόμενα ὀξέως δεχόμενοι, the full sense is, 'quick to hear, and prompt to obey your orders:' for δεχ. here comprehends (as often ἀκούω) the two notions of hearing and of obeying, to each of which ὀξέως adapts itself. The phrase ὀξέως δέχεσθαι τὰ παραγγ. (which occurs again infra ch. 89.) is also used by Arrian, Tact. p. 17 & 64. For similar expressions see note in Transl.

κάλλιστον γὰρ τόδε — φαίνεσθαι] A pithy apophthegm, of which the sense may be thus expressed: 'for most beautiful (i. e. a beautiful sight) is it, and also the best safeguard, for [armies though] many in number to be seen using one and the same order.' Similarly, in a passage, evidently imitated from the present, of Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 230, Sylb. we have, καλὸν μὲν χρῆμα πολλὰς πόλεις μίᾳ χρώμενοι γνώμῃ.

CH. XII. 1. εἴ τι ἄρα μᾶλλον ἐνδοῖεν] '[to try] whether the Athenians would indeed be at all more disposed to give way.' On this use of εἰ, (which recurs at ch. 67, 1.) involving an ellipsis of πειρώμενος, σκοπῶν, or such like, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 526. The addition of the τι, as infra ch. 18, fin., and of ἄρα, has no little force, as serving to express great doubt; for Archidamus, it seems, cherished but a faint hope of the issue.

2. τὸ κοινόν] 'the public assembly of the people.' See note supra i. 90. Of the words following, ἦν γὰρ Περικλέους γνώμη πρότερον νενικηκυῖα, the sense is, 'for the opinion of Pericles had previously prevailed.' So Æschyl. Choëph. 671, εἴτ' οὖν κομίζειν δόξα νικήσει φίλων, Εἴτ' οὖν κ.τ.λ. imitated from Hom. Od. x. 46, βουλὴ δὲ κακὴ νικήσειν ἑταίρων.

ἐκέλευον—αὐθημερόν] With the expression ἐκτὸς ὅρων may be compared that of Eurip. Med. 274, εἶπον—γῆς ἔξω πέραν, &c. That this kind of order was not unusual, is shown from several passages of the classical writers adduced by me in note on Transl. Εἶναι has here the force of our to be gone, and manere in Latin; as Livy, xxiii. 5, 'missumque lictorem, qui ex urbe educeret eos, atque eo die manere extra fines Rom. juberet.'

πουσί τε τῷ Μελησίππῳ ἀγωγοὺς, ὅπως μηδενὶ ξυγγένηται. 4. ὁ δὲ ἐπειδὴ ἐπὶ τοῖς ὁρίοις ἐγένετο, καὶ ἔμελλε διαλύσεσθαι, τοσόνδε εἰπὼν ἐπορεύετο, ὅτι "Ἥδε ἡ ἡμέρα τοῖς Ἕλλησι μεγάλων κακῶν ἄρξει." 5. ὡς δὲ ἀφίκετο ἐς τὸ στρατόπεδον καὶ ἔγνω ὁ Ἀρχίδαμος ὅτι οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι οὐδέν πω ἐνδώσουσιν, οὕτω δὴ ἅρας τῷ στρατῷ προὐχώρει ἐς τὴν γῆν αὐτῶν. 6. Βοιωτοὶ δὲ μέρος μὲν τὸ σφέτερον, καὶ τοὺς ἱππέας, παρείχοντο Πελοποννησίοις ξυστρατεύειν, τοῖς δὲ λειπομένοις ἐς Πλάταιαν ἐλθόντες τὴν γῆν ἐδῄουν.

XIII. Ἔτι δὲ τῶν Πελοποννησίων ξυλλεγομένων τε ἐς τὸν Ἰσθμὸν καὶ ἐν ὁδῷ ὄντων, πρὶν ἐσβαλεῖν ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν, Περικλῆς ὁ Ξανθίππου, στρατηγὸς ὢν Ἀθηναίων, δέκατος αὐτὸς, ὡς ἔγνω τὴν ἐσβολὴν ἐσομένην, ὑποτοπήσας, ὅτι Ἀρχίδαμος αὐτῷ ξένος ὢν ἐτύγχανε, μὴ, πολλάκις, ἢ αὐτὸς ἰδίᾳ βουλόμενος χαρίζεσθαι, τοὺς ἀγροὺς αὐτοῦ παραλίπῃ καὶ μὴ δῃώσῃ, ἢ καὶ, Λακεδαιμονίων κελευσάντων, ἐπὶ διαβολῇ τῇ ἑαυτοῦ γένηται τοῦτο, (ὥσπερ καὶ τὰ ἄγη ἐλαύνειν προεῖπον ἕνεκα ἐκείνου,) προηγόρευε τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ὅτι Ἀρχίδαμος μέν οἱ ξένος εἴη, οὐ μέντοι ἐπὶ κακῷ γε τῆς πόλεως γένοιτο· τοὺς δ' ἀγροὺς τοὺς ἑαυτοῦ καὶ οἰκίας ἢν ἄρα μὴ

4. ἥδε ἡ ἡμέρα—ἄρξει] A passage, as I have shown in Transl., of which frequent imitations are found in later writers.

5. οὕτω δή] 'then indeed.'

6. μέρος μὲν τὸ σφέτερον, καὶ τοὺς ἱππέας] i. e. their proportion of foot, two-thirds, and the whole of their cavalry.

Ch. XIII. 1. δέκατος αὐτὸς] Meaning one of ten generals (or ministers of war), and himself the chief. See Matth. Gr. Gr. Ξένος ὤν, namely, by a private and peculiar connexion, not that of state-host, denoted by the term πρόξενος, but that expressed by the word ἰδιοξενία, as we find from Suid. in voc. δεδιὼς μὴ διὰ τὴν ἰδιοξενίαν ἣν ἔχει πρὸς τὸν Ἀρχίδαμον.

πολλάκις] Heindorf, Buttm., Pop., and Goell. are agreed that this signifies quemadmodum sæpe accidit. And so ὡς πολλάκις ἔτυχε in Jos. Bell. i. 25, 4. As, however, that would rather require ὡς πολλάκις, preferable is, I conceive, the interpretation of Bauer, sæpe or subinde, but that it is, as Poppo observes, not quite suitable in the present passage; though certainly such is the sense of the word in the above passage of Josephus, and of sæpe in Virg. Æn. i. 148. After all, it should seem that the word πολλάκις is meant to be closely connected with μὴ, as that is with ὑποτοπήσας; thus forming a compound expression, often used in Plato in the sense lest perhaps. This is the only suitable sense the word admits; and as to the evidence which Bauer says is wanting of the word as used of one thing, that is easily furnished by a passage of Plato, 361, C. μὴ πολλάκις ὑμᾶς σφήλῃ, and 424, C. μὴ πολλάκις τὸν ποιητήν τις οἴηται. Aristoph. Conc. 791, σεισμὸς εἰ γένοιτο πολλάκις, ἢ πῦρ ἀπότροπον. In the two verbs with which πολλάκις is connected, παραλίπῃ καὶ μὴ δῃώσῃ, 'should pass by, and not devastate,' there is an hendiadys, denoting, in a general way, the exempting them from the ravages of war. The next words advert to the two motives which might induce Archidamus to such a step: 1. αὐτὸς ἰδίᾳ βουλόμενος χαρίζεσθαι, a desire, of his own accord, to oblige Pericles, on his own private account. Compare infra vii. 48, et al. 2. An order on the part of the Lacedæmonians, proceeding ἐπὶ διαβολῇ τῇ ἑαυτοῦ, 'for the purpose of bringing him into calumny' and suspicion of his being a traitor. By τοὺς ἀγροὺς we may understand 'his estates.' So, further on, we have τοὺς ἀγροὺς τοὺς ἑαυτοῦ καὶ οἰκίας, 'his estates and villas:' a signification of the word frequent in Xenophon. With respect to the thing itself, the same was done by Coriolanus; as also by Hannibal towards Fabius; and indeed it was a not unfrequent piece of generalship. So Tacit. Hist. v. 23, cited by Poppo: 'Sicut Cerialis agros villasque Civilis intactos, nota arte ducum, sinebat.' And he might have added a passage of Livy, ii. 39. xxii. 29.

δῃώσωσιν οἱ πολέμιοι, ὥσπερ καὶ τὰ τῶν ἄλλων, ἀφίησιν αὐτὰ δημόσια εἶναι, καὶ μηδεμίαν οἱ ὑποψίαν κατὰ ταῦτα γίγνεσθαι. 2. παρῄνει δὲ καὶ περὶ τῶν παρόντων, ἅπερ καὶ πρότερον, παρασκευάζεσθαί τε ἐς τὸν πόλεμον, καὶ τὰ ἐκ τῶν ἀγρῶν ἐσκομίζεσθαι, ἔς τε μάχην μὴ ἐπεξιέναι, ἀλλὰ τὴν πόλιν ἐσελθόντας φυλάσσειν, καὶ τὸ ναυτικὸν, ᾗπερ ἰσχύουσιν, ἐξαρτύεσθαι, τά τε τῶν ξυμμάχων διὰ χειρὸς ἔχειν, λέγων τὴν ἰσχὺν αὐτοῖς ἀπὸ τούτων εἶναι τῶν χρημάτων τῆς προσόδου, τὰ δὲ πολλὰ τοῦ πολέμου γνώμῃ καὶ χρημάτων περιουσίᾳ κρατεῖσθαι. 3. θαρσεῖν τε ἐκέλευε, προσιόντων μὲν ἑξακοσίων ταλάντων ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ φόρου κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ἀπὸ τῶν ξυμμάχων τῇ πόλει, ἄνευ τῆς ἄλλης προσόδου, ὑπαρχόντων δὲ ἐν τῇ ἀκροπόλει ἔτι τότε ἀργυρίου ἐπισήμου ἑξακισχιλίων ταλάντων, (τὰ γὰρ πλεῖστα τριακοσίων ἀποδέοντα μύρια ἐγένετο, ἀφ' ὧν ἔς τε τὰ προπύλαια τῆς ἀκροπόλεως καὶ τἆλλα οἰκοδομήματα, καὶ ἐς Ποτίδαιαν ἀπανηλώθη,) χωρὶς δὲ χρυσίου ἀσήμου καὶ ἀργυρίου ἔν τε ἀναθήμασιν ἰδίοις καὶ δημοσίοις, καὶ ὅσα ἱερὰ σκεύη περί τε τὰς πομπὰς καὶ τοὺς ἀγῶνας, καὶ σκῦλα Μηδικὰ καὶ μηδεμίαν οἱ ὑποψίαν κατὰ ταῦτα γίγνεσθαι] This clause is, as Goell. says, dependent on some verb to be supplied from the context, (i. e. ἀφίησιν,) namely, βούλεται or κελεύει.

2. τὰ τῶν ξυμμάχων διὰ χειρὸς ἔχειν] The expression διὰ χειρὸς ἔχειν is best explained by Pop., Haack, and Goell., as equivalent to μὴ ἀφιέναι, or σφόδρα φυλάσσειν, iii. 46, 'to hold in hand, to hold a careful hand over,' that they may not revolt. So we say, to keep a tight hand over. The only difference is, that in the Greek phrase the metaphor is, indeed, one taken from driving; in the English, from horsemanship. Perhaps, however, there is here intended a combined idea of watchfulness and of diligent care; which was certainly had in view by the Scholiast, who, explaining by δι' ἐπιμελείας ἔχειν, evidently uses the term ἐπιμ. in the sense of provident attention, or attentive caution, as in the phrase ἄξιον ἐπιμελείας in Xen. Cyr. v. 4, 17. viii. 2, 7.

λέγων τὴν ἰσχὺν—προσόδου] Render, 'telling [them] that their strength was from the revenue of money paid by these.' Comp. iii. 13, ἔστι δὲ τῶν χρημάτων ἀπὸ τῶν ξυμμάχων ἡ πρόσοδος. See note on i. 122 & 143.

Of κρατεῖν in this sense, 'to obtain, accomplish' (lit. master), I know of no example elsewhere except in two passages of Heb. iv. 14, κρατῶμεν τῆς ὁμολογίας, and vi. 18, κρατῆσαι τῆς ἐλπίδος.

3. προσιόντων] literally, 'coming in,' as we say of revenue. So Aristoph. Conc. 712, τὰ προσιόντα χρήματα. Herodot. iii. 89 and 91. The idiom, indeed, may be traced back as far as to Homer; e. g. Il. ix. 38, Ὅσα [χρήματα] ἐς Ὀρχομενὸν ποτινίσσεται, 'are paid in,' as πρόσοδοι, vectigalia. Τῇ πόλει, a little after, is to be construed with προσιόντων.

ἐπισήμου] lit. having a σημεῖον, stamped, coined, as opposed to ἀσήμου, just afterwards: in which sense the word occurs also in Xen., Appian, Jos., and Ælian. And so signatus in Latin; e. g. Isidor. L. 16, 17, 'Tria sunt genera argenti et auri et æris, signatum, factum, infectum. Signatum est quod in nummis est, factum est quod in vasis et signis, infectum est quod in massis.' And so in the Schol. on our author, ἀσήμου is explained by μὴ ἔχοντος σημεῖον, οἷον μαζία τινὰ, ingots. By ἀναθήμασι understand votive offerings dedicated in the temples. See i. 132. vi. 46. By ἱερὰ σκεύη—ἀγῶνας are meant 'sacred utensils' employed in the celebration of the processions and games. Lists of these, as kept by the treasurers of Minerva, are found in several inscriptions, given by Boeckh in his Corpus Inscriptionum. By σκῦλα Μηδικὰ are meant the Median spoils, of which we read in Demosth. adv. Timocr. p. 741, as preserved in the Acropolis, such as the silver-footed chair of state of Xerxes, the sword of εἴτι τοιουτότροπον, οὐκ ἐλάσσονος [ἦν] ἢ πεντακοσιων ταλάντων. 4. ἔτι δὲ καὶ τὰ ἐκ τῶν ἄλλων ἱερῶν προσετίθει χρήματα, οὐκ ὀλίγα, οἷς χρήσεσθαι αὐτούς, καὶ, ἢν πάνυ ἐξείργωνται πάντων, καὶ αὐτῆς τῆς θεοῦ τοῖς περικειμένοις χρυσίοις· ἀπέφαινε δ' ἔχον τὸ ἄγαλμα τεσσαράκοντα τάλαντα σταθμὸν χρυσίου ἀπέφθου, καὶ περιαιρετὸν εἶναι ἅπαν· χρησαμένους τε ἐπὶ σωτηρίᾳ ἔφη χρῆναι μὴ ἐλάσσω ἀντικαταστῆσαι πάλιν. 5. χρήμασι μὲν οὖν οὕτως ἐθάρσυνεν αὐτούς· ὁπλίτας δὲ τρισχιλίους καὶ μυρίους εἶναι ἄνευ τῶν ἐν τοῖς φρουρίοις καὶ τῶν παρ' ἔπαλξιν ἑξακισχιλίων καὶ μυρίων.

Mardonius, and the sacred shields in the Acropolis.

4. τὰ ἐκ τῶν ἄλλων ἱερῶν προσετίθει χρήματα] 'he subjoined or made a further item of the money from the other temples.' So at least the translators take ἱερῶν. Yet nothing has been before said of temples at all. And since ὅσα ἱερὰ σκεύη and τὰ ἄλλα ἱερὰ correspond one to the other, I am still of opinion (as formerly) that by ἱερὰ are meant sacred things, as vessels, utensils, and whatever of furniture, &c. was dedicated in the temple. Of course by τὰ ἄλλα are to be understood the articles of a minor sort; which, however, made out by their number what they wanted in individual weight, constituting, as Pericles said, χρήματα οὐκ ὀλίγα. I am, I repeat, still of the same opinion as to the words, especially from the view in question having been entirely adopted by Pop. and Goell. Nevertheless I have again reconsidered the point, on finding the old interpretation strongly contended for by Arnold, on the ground that 'it does not appear that ἱερὸν, used as a subst., can signify any thing but temple.' And he adds, that 'the passage cited by me from Appian, proves nothing.' But it would be by no means difficult for me to adduce fifty unexceptionable examples from Plato, Eurip., and Xen., of ἱερὰ (which is all that is here required) used in the sense sacred things of every kind, as victims, sacrifices, or sacred rites. Suffice it to adduce the following passages: Æschyl. Theb. 168, μέλεσθ' ἱερῶν δημίων. Xen. Hist. i. 7, 10, Thiem., where a sacrilegious person is said τὰ ἱερὰ κλέπτειν, meaning the sacred vessels or gifts of the temples. Appian, Civil. iv. 64. ii. 613. (evidently written with a view to the passage of our author,) τά τε κοινὰ ἀπεδίδοντο πάντα· ὅσα εἶχον ἐς πομπὰς, ἢ ἀναθήματα, ἔκοπτον, which at any rate proves that Appian understood ἱερὰ to mean sacred things.

καὶ ἢν πάνυ ἐξείργωνται πάντων] 'and if they should be quite excluded from all,' meaning all such resources as have been mentioned, tributes, and revenues, offerings, ornaments, &c., so as to be reduced to need so extraordinary a supply. By τοῖς περικειμένοις χρυσίοις, understand the golden ornaments which environed the statue of the goddess. So Synes. ap. Steph. Thes. χρυσία περιέκειτο. Hdian. vi. 4, 11, περικ. σκευῆς, and ii. 3, 17, περ. ἐσθῆτας. By τὰ περικ., Bredow thinks, are to be understood what Pausanias calls χιτῶνα ποδήρη. That, however, is quite disproved by a passage of Plut. Pericl. 31, whence it plainly appears, that by περικ. are meant the ægis, or gorgonium, which covered the breast and left arm of the goddess (the shield), the wings of the victory which the goddess held in her hands; as also the basso-relievos of the helmet, the buckler, the buskins, and perhaps the pedestal—all of gold. As to the tunic, it was doubtless chiefly of ivory. See more in Barthelemy's Travels of Anach. vol. i. p. 500, seq. Now all this golden ornamental work was, our author says, περιαιρετὸς, removeable. And so in Pausan. i. 25, 5, it is said of Lacharis, that he removed the golden shields from the Acropolis, καὶ αὐτὸ τὸ τῆς Ἀθήνας τὸ ἄγαλμα τὸν περιαιρετὸν ἀποδύσας κόσμον. The word περιαιρετὸς is also used on this same subject in Diod. and Plut.

ἀπέφθου] 'refined,' or pure; literally, boiled off, cleared from dross. So Herodot. i. 50, ἀπέφθου χρυσοῦ τέσσαρα, &c. Pind. Nem. iv. 133. Lucian, i. 630. Arrian, Ind. viii. 13. The contrary is denoted in Simonid. ap. Plut. de Discr. adul. 35, χρυσὸν ἐφθὸν—ἀκήρατον οὐδὲ μόλυβδον.

5. χρήμασι] Supply ἐπὶ, 'on the score of funds [to carry on the war];' which is what the Scholiast means by ἕνεκα τῶν χρημάτων, 'as regarded money.' Παρ' ἔπαλξιν. Bredow and Poppo explain this ad tutelam: but this merely avoids the difficulty of accounting for the singular where we should expect the plural, which is used by Homer and Eurip., Æschyl.,

6. τοσοῦτοι γὰρ ἐφύλασσον τὸ πρῶτον, ὁπότε οἱ πολέμιοι ἐσβάλοιεν, ἀπό τε τῶν πρεσβυτάτων καὶ τῶν νεωτάτων, καὶ μετοίκων ὅσοι ὁπλῖται ἦσαν. τοῦ τε γὰρ Φαληρικοῦ τείχους σταδιοι ἦσαν πέντε καὶ τριάκοντα πρὸς τὸν κύκλον τοῦ ἄστεος, καὶ αὐτοῦ τοῦ κύκλου τὸ φυλασσόμενον τρεῖς καὶ τεσσαράκοντα· ἔστι δὲ αὐτοῦ ὃ καὶ ἀφύλακτον ἦν, τὸ μεταξὺ τοῦ τε μακροῦ καὶ τοῦ Φαληρικοῦ. 7. τὰ δὲ μακρὰ τείχη πρὸς τὸν Πειραιᾶ τεσσαράκοντα σταδίων, ὧν τὸ ἔξωθεν ἐτηρεῖτο· καὶ τοῦ Πειραιῶς ξὺν Μουνυχίᾳ ἑξήκοντα μὲν σταδίων ὁ ἅπας περίβολος, τὸ δὲ ἐν φυλακῇ ὂν, ἥμισυ τούτου. 8. ἱππέας δ' ἀπέφαινε διακοσίους καὶ χιλίους ξὺν ἱπποτοξόταις, ἑξακοσίους δὲ καὶ χιλίους τοξότας, καὶ τριήρεις τὰς πλωΐμους τριακοσίας. 9. ταῦτα γὰρ ὑπῆρχεν Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ οὐκ ἐλάσσω ἕκαστα τούτων, ὅτε ἡ ἐσβολὴ τὸ πρῶτον ἔμελλε Πελοποννησίων ἔσεσθαι, καὶ ἐς τὸν πόλεμον καθίσταντο. 10. ἔλεγε δὲ καὶ ἄλλα, οἷαπερ εἰώθει, Περικλῆς ἐς ἀπόδειξιν τοῦ περιέσεσθαι τῷ πολέμῳ.

XIV. Οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀκούσαντες ἀνεπείθοντό τε, καὶ ἐσεκομίζοντο ἐκ τῶν ἀγρῶν παῖδας καὶ γυναῖκας, καὶ τὴν ἄλλην κατασκευὴν ᾗ κατ' οἶκον ἐχρῶντο, καὶ αὐτῶν τῶν οἰκιῶν καθαιροῦντες τὴν ξύλωσιν· πρόβατα δὲ καὶ ὑποζύγια ἐς τὴν Εὔβοιαν διεπέμ-

Herodot., Xen., Polyb., and other historians almost exclusively: though the singular also is found in a similar passage of Hom. Il. M. 381, κεῖτο μέγας παρ' ἔπαλξιν, and 397. Eurip. Or. 1203. Aristoph. Ach. 72, παρὰ τὴν ἔπαλξιν ἐν φορυτῷ κατακείμενος. In the present case the singular is used generically for the plural; or we may, with Krueger, suppose it used because, as he says, the 'pinnæ concinnè progredientes bene totum quiddam efficere cogitari possunt.' And so Arn. explains, 'soldiers to line a parapet.' Comp. infra vii. 28.

6. κύκλον] for περίβολον, circumference, without, however, reference to the form (though the wall of Athens was of a round one); for the expression is used by Joseph. 1123, 45, of the Roman camp, which was square.

7. ὃν] The common reading is ὃν ἦν: but ἦν is cancelled by Poppo and Goeller, from most of the MSS. It is retained by Bekker, and ὃν thrown out, from one MS.; somewhat uncritically; for this is disregarding alike MS. authority and experience, which shows how much oftener the verb is foisted in by scribes than the participle.

9. ἐς τὸν πόλεμον καθίσταντο] 'set themselves to (i. e. about) the war.'

10. ἐς ἀπόδειξιν τοῦ περιέσεσθαι τῷ πολέμῳ] Meaning, 'in proof [of his position] that they would be superior in the war,' 'would bring the contest to a successful issue.' See note on i. 55.

CH. XIV. 1. ἐσεκομίζοντο ἐκ τῶν ἀγρῶν — κατασκευὴν] Similarly in Hdot. v. 34, we have, ἐσενείκαντο τὰ ἐκ τῶν ἀγρῶν ἐς τὸ τεῖχος. Ἄλλην, Poppo observes, is used as at i. 143, κυβερνήτας τε καὶ τὴν ἄλλην ὑπηρεσίαν, and ii. 62, οὔτε βασιλεὺς οὔτε ἄλλο οὐδὲν ἔθνος. Xen. An. i. 5, 9, οὐ γὰρ ἦν χόρτος, οὐδὲ ἄλλο δένδρον, in which case the word ἄλλος is taken adverbially for præterea. Κατασκευὴ here, as elsewhere in our author, (see i. 89. ii. 5, 14. vi. 46.) denotes the furniture and moveables of every kind, both in-doors and out-of-doors, including farming utensils. With the phrase ἐσεκομίζοντο κατασκευὴν, compare Aristoph. Pax, 1318, καὶ τὰ σκεύη πάλιν εἰς τὸν ἀγρὸν νυνὶ χρὴ πάντα κομίζειν ὀρχησαμένους.

τῶν οἰκιῶν καθαιροῦντες τὴν ξύλωσιν] Render, 'even taking down the woodwork of the houses themselves.' So infra ii. 75. iv. 96. Ξύλωσις is a word peculiar to our author and the writers who have imitated him, as Jos. and Liban., signifying the wood-work, meaning not only the roof-tree and timbers of the roof and gable, but also a sort of frame-work employed for the walls of inferior houses, such as was much

XV. Ξυνεβεβήκει δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ πάνυ ἀρχαίου ἑτέρων μᾶλλον Ἀθηναίοις τοῦτο. ἐπὶ γὰρ Κέκροπος καὶ τῶν πρώτων βασιλέων ἡ Ἀττικὴ ἐς Θησέα ἀεὶ κατὰ πόλεις ᾠκεῖτο, πρυτανεῖά τε ἔχουσα καὶ ἄρχοντας, καὶ ὁπότε μή τι δείσειαν, οὐ ξυνήεσαν βουλευσόμενοι ὡς τὸν βασιλέα, ἀλλ' αὐτοὶ ἕκαστοι ἐπολιτεύοντο καὶ ἐβουλεύοντο· καί τινες καὶ ἐπολέμησάν ποτε αὐτῶν, ὥσπερ καὶ Ἐλευσίνιοι μετ' Εὐμόλπου πρὸς Ἐρεχθέα. 2. ἐπειδὴ δὲ Θησεὺς ἐβασίλευσε, γενόμενος μετὰ τοῦ ξυνετοῦ καὶ δυνατός, τά τε ἄλλα διεκόσμησε τὴν χώραν, καὶ καταλύσας τῶν ἄλλων πόλεων τά τε βουλευτήρια in use in our own country two or three centuries ago, and is yet found on the continent and in America. This timber-work they removed, not only to save labour in the future construction, but to make huts in Athens. Had they not taken it, the enemy would have destroyed the houses for fire-wood. So Xen. An. ii. 2, 16, διήρπαστο ὑπὸ τοῦ βασιλικοῦ στρατεύματος καὶ αὐτὰ τὰ τῶν οἰκιῶν ξύλα, equivalent to ξύλωσιν.

2. χαλεπῶς—ἐγίγνετο] 'was made with difficulty and irksomeness,' 'was irksome to them.' Ἀνάστασις, removal, migration. The word in this sense is rare; though examples occur in Herodot., Dio Cass., and Appian.

CH. XV. In this chapter and the first words of the next, we have an explanation given why the Athenians, as was said at the end of the last chapter, had been always accustomed to live in the country, and accordingly thought it hard to remove to the city;—namely, because this mode of living had obtained among the Athenians from a period of very remote antiquity: and this is proved and illustrated by a statement of the mode of living in those ancient times, in which we have traced the origin and progress of the present polity; q. d. 'for up to the time of Theseus, Attica had been inhabited in separate townships and independent civil societies; and although these had been politically united into one common state by Theseus, the inhabitants of those townships still mostly resided in them, and regarded them as their homes far more than Athens.'

1. ἐς Θησέα] 'unto Theseus.' Κατὰ πόλεις ᾠκεῖτο, 'was inhabited in [separate] townships' called demi. In the next words, πρυτανεῖά τε ἔχουσα καὶ ἄρχοντας, there is a certain obscurity occasioned by extreme brevity; κατὰ πόλεις having here to be repeated from the preceding words. Render, 'having prytanea and archons in those cities, of which there were twelve.' See Wachsmuth, Antiq. Gr. It is well observed by Arnold, that 'the πρυτανεῖον is mentioned as the mark of a distinct state; for it was the representation of the common home of all the inhabitants of the town, and stood to them collectively in the same sacred relation that each man's particular home did to him individually. It was well called ἑστία πόλεως, 'penetrale urbis,' (Livy, xli. 20.) and here therefore the perpetual fire was burning on the altar of the household gods of the city, as in private houses the domestic altar had its fire burning in the inner court. . . .A πρυτανεῖον (or common hall), with its altar-fire, was a national home to the Greeks, no less essential to every civil society than a domestic home and a domestic altar was essential to every family.' Hence (as says Thirlwall, Hist. of Greece, vol. iii. 122) 'the rural population were attached to the country not merely from having been many of them born and bred there, or from the profit or pleasure of rural pursuits, but by domestic and religious associations; for though the incorporation of the Attic townships had for ages extinguished their political independence, it had not interrupted their religious traditions, or effaced the peculiar features of their local worship.' See Mitchell on Aristoph. Vesp. 408.

2. ἐβασίλευσε] 'had become king.' Γενόμενος μετὰ τοῦ ξυνετοῦ καὶ δυνατὸς, 'inasmuch as he possessed together with talent, power likewise,' viz. to effect his purposes. With the phraseology compare Appian, i. 495, ὡς μετὰ τοῦ δυνατοῦ φιλάνθρωπον. Herodian, i. 6, μετὰ τοῦ ἀπρεποῦς καὶ ἐπισφαλές.

διεκόσμησε τὴν χώραν] 'set in order the country,' i. e. settled its polity and

καὶ τὰς ἀρχὰς, ἐς τὴν νῦν πόλιν οὖσαν, ἐν βουλευτήριον ἀποδείξας καὶ πρυτανεῖον, ξυνῴκισε πάντας· καὶ νεμομένους τὰ αὐτῶν ἕκαστους, ἅπερ καὶ πρὸ τοῦ, ἠνάγκασε μιᾷ πόλει ταύτῃ χρῆσθαι, ἣ ἁπάντων ἤδη ξυντελούντων ἐς αὐτὴν, μεγάλη γενομένη, παρεδόθη ὑπὸ Θησέως τοῖς ἔπειτα· καὶ ξυνοίκια ἐξ ἐκείνου Ἀθηναῖοι ἔτι καὶ νῦν τῇ θεῷ ἑορτὴν δημοτελῆ ποιοῦσι. 3. τὸ δὲ πρὸ τούτου ἡ ἀκρόπολις ἡ νῦν οὖσα πόλις ἦν, καὶ τὸ ὑπ' αὐτὴν πρὸς νότον μάλιστα τετραμμένον. 4. τεκμήριον δέ· τὰ γὰρ ἱερὰ ἐν αὐτῇ τῇ ἀκροπόλει καὶ ἄλλων θεῶν ἐστι, καὶ τὰ ἔξω πρὸς τοῦτο τὸ μέρος τῆς πόλεως μᾶλλον ἵδρυται, τό τε τοῦ Διὸς τοῦ Ὀλυμπίου, καὶ τὸ Πύθιον, καὶ government. So Herodot. i. 100, ἐπεὶ δὲ ταῦτα διεκόσμησε, meaning 'instituta regni.' Dio Cass. 125, 95, τὰ πλείω ἔθνη—νόμοις ἰδίοις καὶ πολιτείαις κατεστήσατο καὶ διεκόσμησε, and 717, 37, τὴν πολιτείαν διεκόσμησε. Plato, p. 685, πόλεις διακοσμ. Finally, Aristotle de Mundo (perhaps with the present passage in mind) similarly says, τὴν τῶν ὅλων σύστασιν, διὰ τῆς τῶν ἐναντιωτάτων ἀρχῶν κράσεως, μιᾷ διακοσμῶν ἁρμονίᾳ.

ἓν βουλευτήριον καὶ πρυτανεῖον] From this passage, and from one evidently founded on it, of Plut. Thes. 24, it appears that the difference between βουλευτήριον and πρυτανεῖον was next to none. Moreover, it appears that by ξυνῴκισε πάντας ἐς τὴν νῦν πόλιν is to be understood, 'made them all together resort thither, as a metropolis, for the purpose of justice, legislature, and government.' The next words, καὶ νεμομένους τὰ αὐτῶν — χρῆσθαι, are meant to intimate the conditions and nature of this political union,—namely, that, as says Bake ap. Goell., 'dum sua singulæ civitates domestica, ut antea, administrarent, hac unà patriâ et communi civitate uterentur.' Of the words νεμομένους τὰ αὐτῶν ἑκάστους, the meaning is (as he adds) 'ut domestica et popularia jura ac sacra domi quisque suæ tuerentur.'

ξυντελούντων ἐς αὐτὴν] It is not agreed whether the meaning here be, contributing to, i. e. paying taxes to it; or, belonging to it. The former use, indeed, is not unfrequent, both with φόρον or ἐσφοράν, and with those words left to be understood, as in Xen. Hist. vii. 4, 12; but the latter is here the more agreeable to the context, and is supported by a passage infra iv. 76, ἐς Ὀρχομενὸν ξυντελεῖν, and another of Isocr. Plat. p. 298, συντελεῖν — ἐς τὰς Θήβας: besides which passages it occurs not unfrequently in Pausan., and sometimes in Josephus. Portus unites both senses, placing the physical sense last, and the metaphorical first: the reverse of which would, I think, be nearer the truth; for if the sense 'belonging to' be considered, as it may, somewhat too limited to suit the words following, μεγάλη γενομένη, we may suppose the sense 'contributing to it' to embrace both the idea of paying taxes to (in which is implied the politically belonging to) and that of dispatching public business, judicial and political. And thus we may understand μεγάλη both of wealth, and of size or population; for it may very well be imagined, that when Athens became the capital of the state, and the centre of business of every kind, many more would in consequence go and settle there as permanent inhabitants. The sense may, however, be expressed in Latin by 'quum omnes contributi essent,' as in Plin. Hist. Nat. iii. 'Colonia Illyrica in eam contribuuntur Icositani:' and so Pausanias often uses συντελεῖς εἰς τινας. Finally, such is the use of the word in Polyb. iv. 77, 10, πόλις συντελοῦσα εἰς Ἀρκαδίαν, and Dio Cass. 107, 89, ἐς τ. Κάππαδον συντελοῦντες. By δημοτελῆ might be meant, as Boeckh explains, and I myself formerly took to be the sense, 'celebrated at the public expense;' and so in Plut. vi. 289, we have δημοτελῆ δεῖπνα. Yet there the sense in question is implied by the substantive δεῖπνα after δημοτελῆ: and as the adjective δημοτελὴς of itself can only signify kept (τελ.) by the public, (hence the phrase τελεῖν τὰ ἱερὰ is found in Demosth. and other writers,) and as the phrase ἑορτὴ or θυσία δημοτ. is used in Herodot., Dion. Hal., Plato, Lucian, Polyb., and Philo, and that only in the sense public,—moreover, as it is impossible that the festival here spoken of would occasion any public expense,—hence I prefer to assign the simple sense public.

3. We have now, to the end of the chapter, another minute digression, suggested by the words μεγάλη γενομένη.

4. τὰ γὰρ ἱερὰ—ἵδρυται] These words

τὸ τῆς Γῆς, καὶ τὸ ἐν Λίμναις Διονύσου, ᾧ τὰ ἀρχαιότερα Διονύσια τῇ δωδεκάτῃ ποιεῖται ἐν μηνὶ Ἀνθεστηριῶνι, ὥσπερ καὶ οἱ ἀπ' Ἀθηναίων Ἴωνες ἔτι καὶ νῦν νομίζουσιν. ἵδρυται δὲ καὶ ἄλλα ἱερὰ ταύτῃ ἀρχαῖα. 5. καὶ τῇ κρήνῃ τῇ νῦν μέν, τῶν τυράννων οὕτω σκευασάντων, Ἐννεακρούνῳ καλουμένῃ, τὸ δὲ πάλαι, φανερῶν τῶν will be best understood by adverting to the purpose of the writer, which was to show that the Acropolis was formerly the city. This he does in three ways, remarking, 1. that the temples are either there or immediately below it to the south: 2. that the fountain Callirrhoe (the only one in the vicinity, as says Pausanias) was there: 3. that it is yet called by the Athenians Πόλις, 'the city.' Render, 'for the temples, even those of the other gods (others besides Minerva), are situated in the Acropolis itself; and those that are outside of it are rather situated towards this part of the city, i. e. the part south of the Acropolis.' Indeed it may be imagined that the city would first extend itself in the direction of the sea, so as to communicate with the port Phalerum. On the temples then specified, see Leake, Hawkins, and others.

νομίζουσι] usu recipiunt. So Aristid. iii. 241, σιδήρῳ νομίζουσι. Soph. Elect. 326, and Dio Cass. often. In this idiom there seems to be an ellipsis of χρῆσθαι, or ἔχειν, the former of which is supplied in Thucyd. just after, and in Herodot. i. 202, ἐσθῆτι δὲ νομίζοντας χρῆσθαι: the latter in Aristot. i. 215, νομίζοντες ἔχειν.

5. τῇ κρήνῃ—Ἐννεακρούνῳ καλουμένῃ] Render, 'the fountain or well-spring, or rather conduit (for it was doubtless a building enclosing a reservoir, from which the water issued by nine pipes), called κρήνη τυκτή, 'constructed fountain,' in Hom. Od. xvii. 205, ἐπὶ κρήνην ἀφίκοντο Τυκτὴν, Καλλίροον, ὅθεν ἰδρεύοντο πολῖται. For σκευασάντων, many good MSS. have κελευσάντων, perhaps a mere error of the scribes for καλεσάντων, which is found in the Schol. on Apthonius. Greatly preferable, however, is the common reading, which is strongly confirmed by a passage of Pausan. i. 14, 2, πλησίον δέ ἐστι κρήνη· καλοῦσι δὲ αὐτὴν Ἐννεάκρουνον, οὕτω κοσμηθεῖσαν ὑπὸ Πεισιστράτου. The work was, it seems, begun by Pisistratus, and finished by his sons Hipparchus and Hippias.

φανερῶν] For this Hemsterh. on T. Mag. p. 568, would read λαμυρῶν, because there Thomas Mag. in v. λαμυρία has, ὅθεν καὶ λαμυρὰ πηγὴ, ἡ καθαρὰ καὶ ἡδεῖα, παρὰ Θουκυδίδῃ. After all, however, there is no certainty that Thomas so read in our author; for it is very possible (as Lobeck on Phryn. p. 292, suggests) that Θουκυδίδῃ there is an error of the scribes: and it is justly observed by Goeller, that the expression λαμυρὰ πηγὴ savours of poetic diction, and may be compared with the loquaces lymphæ of Horace: and similar is the expression of our poet Gray, 'the brook that babbles by.' The passage, then, there alluded to, was, there is every reason to think, that of a poet; though the above learned critics are not prepared to say who. I have no doubt that Thomas, for Θουκυδίδῃ, wrote Φωκυλίδῃ; the two words being so much alike, that one might very easily be mistaken for the other (in which case the more usual name will take place of the other, the less common): and in point of fact the mistake, I remember, is really found more than once in Suidas and Pollux. Indeed other similar mistakes occur not unfrequently in the ancient lexicographers. Thus in Pollux, vi. 38, we have, Θουκυδίδης δὲ ἔφη· εἰς ὀψώνιον ἤτησε τριώβολον, (which words are not found in our author,) where, for Θουκ., read Θουγενίδης, (from the Cod. Valckenburg.) the name of a dramatic poet mentioned by Suidas and Photius. The poetical order may be thus restored: Ἤτησεν εἰς ὀψώνιον τριώβολον, by which the words will form a senarius. In Stephanus de Urb. Θέα πόλις Λακ. Φιλόχορος τρίτῳ, οἱ πολῖται Θεεῖς, ὡς Θουκυδίδης, read, for Θουκ., Φερεκύδης· Also in Suid. in v. αὐτόθεν Θουκυδίδης. χειμὼν ἦν, καὶ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις τὸν πόλεμον αὐτόθεν ποιεῖσθαι οὕτως ἐδόκει, for Θουκ., read Φερεκύδης. And in Etym. Mag. in ἐμποδών, Ἐμποδὼν Θουκυδίδης, ἀντὶ τοῦ προχείρως. φησὶ γάρ· Τὰς ἐμποδὼν αἰτίας μόνον ἐπισκοπεῖν,—Suidas in ἐμποδὼν adds Πορρωτέρω δὲ μηδὲν ἐπορέγεσθαι (to stretch oneself) ταῖς διανοίαις,—read Φερεκύδης, the author of a history of Attica now lost, and of which we have only a few fragments: a writer also frequently referred to by the Schol. on Apollon. Rhod. Finally, the very same mistake has been made by the scribes confounding the name Ἡρώδοτος and Ἡρώδωρος, by which many phrases and passages are erroneously ascribed to Herodotus which were meant for Herodorus, a writer, though πηγῶν οὐσῶν, Καλλιρρόη ὠνομασμένῃ, ἐκείνῃ τε ἐγγὺς οὔσῃ τὰ πλείστου ἄξια ἐχρῶντο, καὶ νῦν ἔτι ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀρχαίου πρό τε γαμικῶν καὶ ἐς ἄλλα τῶν ἱερῶν νομίζεται τῷ ὕδατι χρῆσθαι. 6. καλεῖται δὲ διὰ τὴν παλαιὰν ταύτῃ κατοίκησιν, καὶ ἡ ἀκρόπολις μέχρι τοῦδε ἔτι ὑπὸ Ἀθηναίων Πόλις. XVI. Τῇ τε οὖν ἐπὶ πολὺ κατὰ τὴν χώραν αὐτονόμῳ οἰκήσει μετεῖχον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, frequently quoted in Scholiasts and Eustathius, yet so little known to the scribes, (his works being all of them long since lost,) that it is no wonder they should have mistaken Ἡρώδωρος for Ἡρώδοτος.

Καλλιρρόη] For this, Pop. and Goell. edit, from several MSS. and the editions up to Bauer's, Καλλιρόη; choosing to retain, in an Homeric name, the form suitable to hexameter verse. But surely in a prose writer the regular and analogical form is preferable, which accordingly I have, with Bekk., thought proper here to adopt. For ἐκείνῃ Bekk., in his 2nd edit., gives, solely on conjecture, ἐκεῖνοι; but without sufficient reason; for there is here, as Pop. well points out, merely what is considered a redundancy of the demonstrative pron. after a participle; on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 472, 2. And there is the less of mere redundancy when it comes in, as here, after a long passage which, though not parenthetical, would keep the noun and its governing verb so far asunder, that the pronoun is not without its use, serving, as it were, to resume the subject. At ἐχρῶντο the subject is Ἀθηναῖοι, taken from Ἀθηναίων in the sentence preceding; a sort of harshness, effectually, indeed, but most uncritically, removed by the conjecture of Bekk. The words ἐγγὺς οὖσῃ are meant to strengthen the argument above pointed out. In τὰ πλείστου ἄξια the accus. of thing serves to express the result of the action in the verb ἐχρῶντο. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 409, 6, where we have particularly specified the phrase χρῆσθαί τινί τι, 'to make use of any thing for any purpose,' the τι standing for εἴς τι, though only with the accus. of neuter pronouns or adjectives, as here. Just after, we have the ἐς expressed.

πρὸ γαμικῶν] This use of the water of Callirrhoë is confirmed and illustrated by Eurip. Phœn. 358, Ἀνυμέναια δ' Ἰσμηνὸς ἐκηδεύθη Λουτροφόρου χλιδᾶς. Æschyl. Prom. Vinct. 572, ὅτ' ἀμφὶ λουτρὰ καὶ λέχος σὸν ὑμεναίων: and hence light is thrown on a passage of Aristoph. Lysistr. 378, λουτρὸν (scil. e fonte Callirrhoë) ἐγὼ παρέξω — καὶ ταῦτα νυμφικόν γε. The Scholiast on Euripides says, it was customary with the ancients to wash and sprinkle themselves with the water of their country rivers and springs; meaning thereby symbolically to pray for offspring. It may rather, however, be supposed that the water was symbolical of purity: a view strongly confirmed by the circumstance of its being used ἐς ἄλλα τῶν ἱερῶν. Thus, as Pollux says, it was used to wash or sprinkle virgins who died before marriage.

νομίζεται τῷ ὕδατι χρῆσθαι] 'it is customary to use the water.' So Xen. An. vii. 3, 18, ἔλεγεν ὅτι νομίζοιτο—δωρεῖσθαι. Dio Cass. 104, 16, νενομίσθαι τινῶν λεγόντων—ἑκάτερον γίγνεσθαι.

6. Πόλις] City; thus making it almost a proper name, which, as observes Hemsterhus. on Aristoph. Plut. p. 260, is not unfrequently the case in the public inscriptions. See a passage of our author infra v. 18, 23, and Plut. Pelop. 18. Pausan. i. 26, 7. In like manner the most ancient parts of Paris and London (as being of old solely the city) are called by the name of the City.

CH. XVI. 1. τῇ — αὐτονόμῳ οἰκήσει μετεῖχον] There is a difficulty in the construction, to remove which, Matth. Gr. Gr. § 359, obs. 2, supposes that τῆς χώρας should be understood; and that the dat. is to be taken to express not the object shared, but the manner in which it was shared. This, however, Pop. shows, would lead to a very inept sense. Arn. supposes the dative to be used where the genitive is commonly employed, on the same principle as we say indifferently either 'to partake in or to partake of.' The example, however, is far from apposite, and supplies no proof. Pop. attempts to justify the construction with the dative, by adducing two passages of Demosth. (de Fals. Leg. § 334, οὐχὶ κοινωνεῖ ταῖς εὐθύναις; and pro Cor. 18, § 58, κοινωνεῖν τοῖς πεπολιτευμένοις.) Now κοινωνεῖν and μετέχειν, he argues, are words so similar, that what is allowable for one of them may be allowed for the other. This reasoning, however, is rather ingenious than conclusive. Of the two passages of Demosth. above cited, the latter is not to the purpose: and while in the former the sense of participation is very strong, in the present it is very weak, or next to nothing. Hence it is better to have recourse to that mode of removing the difficulty proposed by me in my note in Transl. and smaller edition. Considering that the notions of participation and of use are cognate, and as μετέχειν is found to have the sense of frui and even simply uti, (so Xen. Œcon. xvii. 6, κράτιστον, παντὸς μετέχειν τοῦ σπόρου, where μετ. stands for χρῆσθαι, used just before,) hence it would seem that in such cases it loses the sense of participation, and simply retains that of using, and may therefore take the construction of χρῆσθαι. How readily, indeed, the two ideas amalgamate, will appear from the line of Dryden: 'Partake and use my kingdom as your own.' Finally, that the word is here nearly devoid of any notion of participation, was long ago seen by Steph. in his Thes. in v., who well renders 'usurpabant.' Of κατὰ τὴν χώραν the sense is, 'in the territory,' as Jos. Bell. i. 7, 6. Arrian, E. A. i. 16, 8, nearly equiv. to ἐν τοῖς ἀγροῖς just after.

καὶ ἐπειδὴ ξυνῳκίσθησαν, διὰ τὸ ἔθος, ἐν τοῖς ἀγροῖς ὅμως οἱ πλείους τῶν τε ἀρχαίων καὶ τῶν ὕστερον μέχρι τοῦδε τοῦ πολέμου πανοικησίᾳ γενόμενοί τε καὶ οἰκήσαντες οὐ ῥᾳδίως τὰς μεταναστάσεις ἐποιοῦντο, ἄλλως τε καὶ ἄρτι ἀνειληφότες τὰς κατασκευὰς μετὰ τὰ Μηδικά· 2. ἐβαρύνοντο δὲ καὶ χαλεπῶς ἔφερον οἰκίας τε καταλιπόντες καὶ ἱερά, ἃ διὰ παντὸς ἦν αὐτοῖς ἐκ τῆς κατὰ τὸ ἀρχαῖον πολιτείας πάτρια, δίαιτάν τε μέλλοντες μεταβάλλειν, καὶ οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ πόλιν τὴν αὑτοῦ ἀπολείπων ἕκαστος. XVII. Ἐπειδή τε ἀφίκοντο ἐς τὸ ἄστυ, ὀλίγοις μέν τισιν ὑπῆρχον οἰκήσεις, καὶ παρὰ φίλων τινὰς ἢ οἰκείων καταφυγή· οἱ δὲ πολλοὶ τά τε ἔρημα τῆς πόλεως ᾤκησαν, καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ καὶ τὰ ἡρῷα πάντα, πλὴν τῆς ἀκροπόλεως καὶ τοῦ Ἐλευσινίου καὶ εἴτι ἄλλο βεβαίως

πανοικησίᾳ] 'cum omni familiâ et re familiari. Verbis γενόμενοι, &c. et οἰκήσαντες scriptor videtur eos discernere, qui nullas domos Athenis habentes πανοικησίᾳ ruri vivebant, i. e. cum toto, quidquid possidebant, iique vel nati rure, vel eo habitatum concesserant (οἰκήσαντες).' (Goell.) Οὐ ῥᾳδίως, 'with difficulty,' as vii. 73, namely, as loath to do the thing, 'reluctantly.' Μεταναστάσεις, 'migrations from country to town.' Evidently imitated from this, is a passage of Lucian, iii. 233, ῥᾳδίως ποιοῦνται μεταναστάσεις. In ἀνειληφότες there is a combined sense of rebuilding and repairing, as appears by the extent of signification in the term with which it is associated, κατασκευὰς, which denotes not only habitations, as at i. 10, and in several passages cited by Schneider on Xen. An. iii. 2, 25, but also the fitting up of every kind, both within and without the houses, (or rather villas and granges,) as verandas, garden-houses, &c. So ii. 65, οἰκοδομίαις τε καὶ κατασκευαῖς: and so Isocr. Areop. ch. 20, we have, ὥστε καλλίους καὶ πολυτελεστέρας τὰς οἰκήσεις καὶ τὰς ἐπισκευὰς τὰς ἐπὶ τῶν ἀγρῶν, ἢ τὰς ἐντὸς τείχους.

2. ἐβαρύνοντο καὶ χαλεπῶς ἔφερον] 'they bore it hardly, and thought it hard.' In the next words we have set forth the grounds of this reluctance—and these were both political and religious, inasmuch as they had to abandon both their houses and ἱερὰ τὰ πάτρια, 'the temples where their forefathers had worshipped' from the foundation of the old polity downwards; and where they themselves had, on that account, worshipped with a deeper interest than any other place could raise.

δίαιτάν τε μέλλοντες μεταβάλλειν, &c.] These words are meant to further enlarge on the idea contained in οἰκίας καταλιπόντες, showing the pang they must have felt in not only being torn from their homes, but in having to change their mode of life and daily habits from childhood. Καὶ οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ πόλιν τὴν αὑτοῦ ἀπολείπων ἕκαστος, 'each, in leaving his house, doing nought but abandon, as it were, his city,' what was such to him. On this use of οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 488, 11.

Ch. XVII. 1. τὰ ἔρημα τῆς πόλεως] 'the vacant spaces.' See i. 2. Τὰ ἡρῷα, i. e. 'chapels erected to the honour of heroes.' On the words a little after, ἐπάρατον ἦν μὴ οἰκεῖν, see the rule in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 534, on infinitives with an ellipsis of ὥστε in the sense of consequence, or as put by way of epexegesis. Ἀκροτελεύτιον, 'a verse-end.' Examples of this word (which is rare) may be found in Dio Cass. 1033, and 1307. Aristid. iii. 202: and in Stob. Eclog. Phys. 164, A, the word ought undoubtedly to be restored for ἀκροτελευταῖον. In ἐξῳκήθη, 'was built up,' 'filled with buildings,' the ἐκ is intensive; as in Soph. Œd. Col. 27, τόπος ἐξοικήσιμος: and so ἐξοικοδομέω in Arrian, E. A. v. 29, 5. vii. 21, 11. Xen. Œcon. xx. 29.

2. γενέσθαι] Supply μοι δοκοῦσι from the preceding δοκεῖ: and at ἡ ἀνάγκη τῆς οἰκήσεως repeat μοι δοκεῖ γενέσθαι.

ὃν οὐκ ὀνομάζον τὸ μαντεῖον — κατοικισθησομένων] The scope of these words is to overturn any idea of credit belonging to the oracle,—and that from the consideration, that the person who uttered it might easily foresee that a place which had been solemnly pronounced 'accursed and not to be inhabited,' would never be inhabited for any good, but solely through dire necessity. Here the term μαντεῖον must in construing be taken twice, with the participle and with the verb. Render, 'which though the oracle did not name it, (i. e. per τὸ σημαινόμενον the circumstance,) the utterer of the oracle knew,' &c.

3. κατεσκευάσαντο] i. e. as the Schol. explains, 'made themselves κατασκευὰς, or habitations, such as they were, being mere huts.' On this sense of the word, see note on i. 10, 11, 16. Even less commodious dwellings are adverted to in the words following, καὶ ὡς ἕκαστός που ἐδύνατο, q. d. 'any hole or corner they could find.' To all these we have allusion in Aristoph. Eq. 771, as follows: Καὶ πῶς σὺ φιλεῖς, ὃς τοῦτον ὁρῶν οἰκοῦντ' ἐν ταῖς πιθάκναισι Καὶ γυπαρίοις καὶ πυργιδίοις ἔτος ὀγδόον οὐκ ἐλεαίρεις; where πιθ. signifies a tub, and γυπ. holes and corners, such as birds of prey make their nests in, (so Jerem. xlviii. 28, 'the dove makes her nest in the sides of holes,') or beasts their dens. So Jerem. xvi. 16, 'they shall hunt them—from the holes of the rocks.' In ὕστερον δὴ the δὴ stands for ἤδη.

4. τῶν πρὸς τὸν πόλεμον ἤπτοντο] There is here an ellipsis of πραγμάτων or ἔργων, which is filled up in Dio Cass. 262, 60. Of ἅπτεσθαι here the sense is, capessere, 'to apply oneself to,' as v. 61. viii. 11, and often in the best writers. Ἑκατὸν νεῶν ἐπίπλουν, 'a fleet of 100 sail;' as ii. 56. Ἐν τούτῳ παρασκευῆς, 'in this state or degree of preparation:' a phrase also occurring in Appian, i. 557, and on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 341.

Ch. XVIII. 1. ᾗπερ ἔμελλον ἐσβαλεῖν] 'where they were about (i. e. intended) to make their irruption or invasion;' as iv. 2, and elsewhere.

ἔζοντο, προσβολὰς παρεσκευάζοντο τῷ τείχει ποιησόμενοι μηχαναῖς τε καὶ ἄλλῳ τρόπῳ· ἡ γὰρ Οἰνόη οὖσα ἐν μεθορίοις τῆς Ἀττικῆς καὶ Βοιωτίας ἐτετείχιστο, καὶ αὐτῷ φρουρίῳ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐχρῶντο, ὁπότε πόλεμος καταλάβοι. 3. τάς τε οὖν προσβολὰς εὐτρεπίζοντο, καὶ ἄλλως ἐνδιέτριψαν χρόνον περὶ αὐτήν. 4. αἰτίαν τε οὐκ ἐλαχίστην Ἀρχίδαμος ἔλαβεν ἀπ᾽ αὐτοῦ, δυκῶν καὶ ἐν τῇ ξυναγωγῇ τοῦ πολέμου μαλακὸς εἶναι, καὶ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐπιτήδειος, οὐ παραινῶν προθύμως πολεμεῖν· ἐπειδή τε ξυνελέγετο ὁ στρατός, ἥ τε ἐν τῷ Ἰσθμῷ ἐπιμονὴ γενομένη καὶ κατὰ τὴν ἄλλην πορείαν ἡ σχολαιότης διέβαλεν αὐτόν, μάλιστα δὲ ἡ ἐν τῇ Οἰνόῃ ἐπίσχεσις. 5. οἱ γὰρ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐσεκομίζοντο ἐν τῷ χρόνῳ τούτῳ, καὶ ἐδόκουν οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι ἐπελθόντες, ἂν διὰ τάχους πάντα ἔτι ἔξω καταλαβεῖν, εἰ μὴ διὰ τὴν ἐκείνου μέλλησιν. 6. ἐν τοιαύτῃ μὲν ὀργῇ ὁ στρατὸς τὸν Ἀρχίδαμον ἐν τῇ καθέδρᾳ εἶχεν. 7. ὁ δὲ προσδεχόμενος, ὡς λέγεται, τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, τῆς γῆς ἔτι ἀκεραίου οὔσης, ἐνδώσειν τι καὶ κατοκνήσειν περιϊδεῖν αὐτὴν τμηθεῖσαν, ἀνεῖχεν. 2. παρεσκευάζοντο τῷ τείχει ποιησόμενοι] Of this construction with the future (which is rare), an example occurs in Xen. Cyr. i. 3, 11. The future with ὡς, as at ii. 7, and iii. 74, is more frequent. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 555, 2. Καταλάβοι, 'should befal.' Καταλαμβάνω is used of what overtakes; and as things which overtake us usually come before they are expected or wished, so the term is always used of what befals for evil: and in this acceptation it occurs not unfrequently in Herodot., and occasionally in Pausan. Of the use with πόλεμος, I know of no other example but Diog. Laërt. i. 53, καὶ ἢ ὁ πόλ. ἡμᾶς καταλάβῃ.

3. εὐτρεπίζοντο] So I read, with Pop. and Goell., for ἠὐτρ., which is retained by Bekk.; for it has been shown by Pop., Proleg. i. 227, and Buttm. Gr. Gr. § 86, 2, that, in verbs beginning with εὐ, Thucyd. does not use the augment. Render, 'made preparations for carrying the place by assault.' Ἄλλως may here have the sense assigned to it by Hobbes and Smith, 'otherwise:' but that of 'in vain,' 'to no purpose,' found elsewhere in Thucyd., is more agreeable to the context, and is confirmed by a passage, evidently imitated from the present, of Dio Cass. 217, 8, μάτην ἐνδιατρίψαι.

4. αἰτίαν] criminationem. Ἐν τῇ ξυναγωγῇ τοῦ πολέμου. Meaning, 'in the assembly or congress [of the allies] held for the purpose of considering respecting the war.' Μαλακὸς, 'faint-hearted.' Οὐ παραινῶν, 'by not heartily advising them to go to war.'

5. ἂν] This belongs to καταλαβεῖν, not to ἐπελθόντες: I have pointed accordingly. Εἰ μὴ διὰ τὴν ἐκείνου μέλλησιν, 'unless (i. e. but for) this delay of his.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 580.

6. καθέδρᾳ] 'stoppage:' a rare signif., though I have noted it in Dion. Hal. iii. 4, and Jos. Ant. v. 2, 6.

7. ἀκεραίου] 'unhurt,' 'not ravaged.' So Xen. Cyr. vi. 2, 11, εἰς ἀκέραια, scil. loca. Hdot. iii. 146, ἀκ. τὴν πόλιν. Demosth. p. 17, 13, τῆς οἰκείας ἀκεραίου. The τι, nonnihil, after ἐνδώσειν, is used as often elsewh. Of κατοκνήσειν the sense is, 'would be loath:' a strong term, often used by Dio Cass. Ἀνεῖχεν, scil. ἑαυτὸν, as we say, 'kept himself quiet.' Comp. infra viii. 94, and Xen. Hist. i. 6, 14, τὴν οὖν ἡμέραν οὕτως ἀνεῖχον: this being one of those compounds of ἔχειν with a prep. where ἑαυτὸν is understood. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 496.

Ch. XIX. 1. πᾶσαν ἰδέαν πειράσαντες] Pop. thinks it doubtful whether πᾶσαν ἰδέαν be an accus. to be taken like πάντα τρόπον, in which case it will be necessary at πειρ. to supply αὐτῆς (τῆς Οἰνόης); or whether it depends on πειράσαντες, as we say πεῖραν πειρᾶν. Of these two modes of explanation, the former tends not a little to weaken the sense. The latter may be considered the only true view, and is confirmed by a passage, evidently imitated from the present, in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 316, 3, Sylb. κριοὺς προσέφερον, καὶ κλίμακας προσῆγε, καὶ πάσης πολιορκίας ἐχρῆτο ἰδέαις, where, had the editors perceived the imitation, they would have seen that the true reading in undoubtedly πάσαν—ἰδέᾳ. The writer there, we see, expresses the word πολιορκίας, no doubt supposing it understood in the passage of our author; and not without reason; for to supply, with Pop., τοῦ προσβάλλειν (or rather προσβολῆς) would lead to a sense not a little jejune. We may, indeed, here supply, from the context, some term denoting siege-operation; as the πολιορκίας of Dionys. Hal. But it would rather seem that ἰδέα has in this instance a sense peculiar to our author, and which has alone been seen by Steph. Thes. in voc., who renders, 'et omni commenti genere usi,' i. e. artis, artificii, artis genere, Angl. device. Thus the sense is not ill expressed by Thirlwall, 'they exhausted all the resources of their military art.' The same idiom has place in the cognate term εἶδος infra viii. 56, init., where we have τρέπεται ἐπὶ τοιόνδε εἶδος, 'ad hujusmodi fraudis genus se convertit.' Οὕτω δή, 'then indeed,' as in Herodot. vii. 174. viii. 61, and often in Plato. Ὁρμήσαντες. The word has here, as infra iii. 24. iv. 36. vii. 19, the neuter sense of proceeding.

μετὰ τὰ, &c.] Connect μετὰ τὰ ἐν Π. γενόμενα τῶν ἐσελθ. Θ. Here we may, with Matth. Gr. Gr. § 379, 2, suppose that the particip. being used for a subst., as such takes the genit. Τοῦ σίτου ἀκμάζοντος. On this and other expressions by which our author notes the time of year at which any event takes place, see Pop. and Goell.

2. τοὺς Ῥείτους] From Pausan. i. 38, and ii. 24, we learn, that there were two rivulets of salt-water issuing from the same source under ground, and forming two lakes, on the margin of the sea, at the south-east extremity of the Thriasian plain. Salt springs are found elsewhere in Attica. See Gell's Itin. p. 33. Dodwell, Class. Tour, ii. 171, and Mueller in v. Attica, p. 217, b.

χῶρον] So I read, with Haack, Pop., and Goell. 2nd ed., from all the best MSS., for vulg. χωρίον, which is retained by Bekk. on the ground that the word is found in Homer, Pind., Herodot., Eurip., and the earlier writers; and our author is much accustomed to employ antique words. By χῶρον, however, I would understand, with Goell., not the town of Acharnæ, but the whole of the Acharnanian district or township: a view required by the expression just after, καθεζόμενοι ἐς, 'taking post' or 'encamping at;' for that necessarily supposes the country, not the town.

δήμων] oppidorum vel curiarum. 'When the people from different villages united together, either voluntarily or compulsorily, into one town, then these villages were called δῆμοι, and the inhabitants of them,—all having, as it were, their own senate,—were styled curiales and δημόται. All these towns had not only their own particular sacred rites, but also their magistrates, and their δῆμος or popular form of government.' Valck. on Herodot. iii. 55. On the proper difference (sufficiently apparent from Herodot. i. 170, and Pausan. i. 29) between πόλις and δῆμος, see Mueller, Dor. ii. p. 70.

τάς τε νεότητι πολλῇ, καὶ παρεσκευασμένους ἐς πόλεμον ὡς οὔπω πρότερον, ἴσως ἂν ἐπεξελθεῖν, καὶ τὴν γῆν οὐκ ἂν περιϊδεῖν τμηθῆναι. 3. ἐπειδὴ οὖν αὐτῷ ἐς Ἐλευσῖνα καὶ τὸ Θριάσιον πεδίον οὐκ ἀπήντησαν, πεῖραν ἐποιεῖτο, περὶ τὰς Ἀχαρνὰς καθήμενος, εἰ ἐπεξίασιν· ἅμα μὲν γὰρ αὐτῷ ὁ χῶρος ἐπιτήδειος ἐφαίνετο ἐνστρατοπεδεῦσαι, ἅμα δὲ καὶ οἱ Ἀχαρνῆς, μέγα μέρος ὄντες τῆς πόλεως, (τρισχίλιοι γὰρ ὁπλῖται ἐγένοντο,) οὐ περιόψεσθαι ἐδόκουν τὰ σφέτερα διαφθαρέντα, ἀλλ' ὁρμήσειν καὶ τοὺς πάντας ἐς μάχην. 4. εἴ τε καὶ μὴ ἐπεξέλθοιεν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἐσβολῇ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἀδεέστερον ἤδη ἐς τὸ ὕστερον τὸ πεδίον τεμεῖν, καὶ πρὸς αὐτὴν τὴν πόλιν χωρήσεσθαι· τοὺς γὰρ Ἀχαρνέας, ἐστερημένους τῶν σφετέρων, οὐχ ὁμοίως προθύμους ἔσεσθαι ὑπὲρ τῆς τῶν ἄλλων κινδυνεύειν, στάσιν δὲ ἐνέσεσθαι τῇ γνώμῃ. 5. τοιαύτῃ μὲν διανοίᾳ ὁ Ἀρχίδαμος περὶ τὰς Ἀχαρνὰς ἦν.

Ch. XX. 3. εἰ ἐπεξίασιν] 'whether they would go forth and meet him in the field.' Ἐπιτήδειος ἐνστρατοπεδεῦσαι, 'commodious to encamp in.' So Herodot. ix. 7, Θριάσιον πεδίον ἐπιτηδειότατον ἐμμαχέσασθαι. Eurip. Bacch. 508, ἐνδυστυχῆσαι τοὔνομα ἐπιτήδειος εἶ.

μέγα μέρος ὄντες τῆς πόλεως] 'who formed a considerable portion of the state.' So Herodot. i. 146, μοῖρα τῆς Ἑλλάδος οὐκ ἐλαχίστη: also i. 104. vii. 157, and often in Pausan. and Jos.

4. στάσιν ἐνέσεσθαι τῇ γνώμῃ] 'that there would be dissension in their minds' or counsels, for στάσιν ἔσεσθαι ἐν τῇ γνώμῃ: as in Plato, p. 502, D, τίνα τρόπον ἡμῖν—οἱ σωτῆρες ἐνέσονται τῆς πολιτείας, and 428, E, where this very form ἐνέσεσθαι (somewhat rare) is found. So also inesse in Latin; as Ovid, Fast. ii. 658, 'nec digitis annulus ullus inest;' and Her. Ep. 17, 130, 'tarda solet magnis rebus inesse pedes:' in both which cases εἶναι and esse have something more than the sense simply 'to be,' and such as must be determined by the context.

Ch. XXI. 1. καί τινα ἐλπίδα εἶχον] Poppo thinks that the apodosis of the sentence is not contained in these words, but is omitted, and has to be supplied from the corresponding clause which follows it, thus: μέχρι μέν τινα ἐλπίδα εἶχον ἀνασχετὸν ἐποιοῦντο: a method quite unnecessary: not only is it wholly uncalled for, but it involves a no slight impropriety; for who ever heard of such a phrase as ἀνασχετὸν ποιεῖσθαι? while of οὐκ ἀνασχ. π. examples are frequent. I cannot, however, agree with Goell., that any apodosis commences at καί τινα ἐλπίδα; nor that the words are equivalent to this, 'that the thing seemed to be tolerable.' Thucyd. might, indeed, have written μέχρι—στρατὸς ἦν ἀνεκτὸν ἐποιοῦντο: but he did not so write. As the passage now stands, there is certainly no apodosis in these words, which indeed belong to the protasis; the sense being, 'they had even some hope as to their not proceeding nearer [to them]:' but, though there is no apodosis here, and it is suspended for some distance, yet there is, as Poppo seems inclined to think, a sort of irregular apodosis at ἐπειδὴ δὲ—οὐκέτι ἀνασχετὸν ἐποιοῦντο: as in Hom. Od. xx. 83, Ἀλλὰ τὸ μὲν καὶ ἀνεκτὸν ἔχει κακὸν, ὁπότε κέν τις Ἤματα μὲν κλαίῃ πυκινῶς ἀκαχήμενος ἦτορ, Νύκτας δ' ὕπνος ἔχῃσιν—Αὐτὰρ ἐμοὶ, &c.

In ἐς τὸ ἐγγυτέρω we have a use of ἐς τὸ by no means common: and hence the words are in some MSS. not found; being, we may imagine, cancelled by certain half-learned critics. They are, however, sufficiently defended by the expression ἐς τὸ πλέον just after, where πλ. stands for περαιτέρω: a use also rare.

μεμνημένοι—ὅτε] for ὅτι, as in Hom. Il. xv. 18, οὐ μέμνῃ ὅτε, &c., and often elsewhere. So in Latin, memini quum. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 624.

δαιμονίων βασιλέα, ὅτε ἐσβαλὼν τῆς Ἀττικῆς ἐς Ἐλευσῖνα καὶ Θρίωζε στρατῷ Πελοποννησίων, πρὸ τοῦδε τοῦ πολέμου τέσσαρσι καὶ δέκα ἔτεσιν, ἀνεχώρησε πάλιν, ἐς τὸ πλέον οὐκέτι προελθών· (διὸ δὴ καὶ ἡ φυγὴ αὐτῷ ἐγένετο ἐκ Σπάρτης, δόξαντι χρήμασι πεισθῆναι τὴν ἀναχώρησιν·) 2. ἐπειδὴ δὲ περὶ Ἀχαρνὰς εἶδον τὸν στρατὸν ἐξήκοντα σταδίους τῆς πόλεως ἀπέχοντα, οὐκέτι ἀνασχετὸν ἐποιοῦντο· ἀλλ' αὐτοῖς, ὡς εἰκὸς, γῆς τεμνομένης ἐν τῷ ἐμφανεῖ, (ὃ οὔπω ἑωράκεσαν οἵ γε νεώτεροι, οὐδ' οἱ πρεσβύτεροι πλὴν τὰ Μηδικά,) δεινὸν ἐφαίνετο· καὶ ἐδόκει τοῖς τε ἄλλοις, καὶ μάλιστα τῇ νεότητι, ἐπεξιέναι καὶ μὴ περιορᾶν. 3. κατὰ ξυστάσεις τε γιγνόμενοι, ἐν πολλῇ ἔριδι ἦσαν, οἱ μὲν κελεύοντες ἐξιέναι, οἱ δέ τινες οὐκ ἐῶντες. 4. χρησμολύγοι τε ἦδον χρησμοὺς παντοίους, ὧν ἀκροᾶσθαι ὡς ἕκαστος ὥργητο. 5. οἵ τε Ἀχαρνῆς οἰόμενοι παρὰ σφίσιν αὐτοῖς οὐκ ἐλαχίστην μοῖραν εἶναι Ἀθηναίων, ὡς αὐτῶν ἡ γῆ ἐτέμνετο, ἐνῆγον τὴν ἔξοδον μάλιστα. 6. παντί τε τρόπῳ ἀνηρέθιστο ἡ πόλις καὶ τὸν Περικλέα ἐν ὀργῇ εἶχον, καὶ ὧν παρῄνεσε πρότερον ἐμέμνηντο οὐδέν, ἀλλ' ἐκάκιζον ὅτι στρατηγὸς ὢν οὐκ ἐπεξάγοι, αἴτιόν τε σφίσιν ἐνόμιζον πάντων ὧν ἔπασχον.

Θρίωζε] The ζε at the end of names of places answers to our ward, meaning toward. It was, however, not confined to names of places. On the syntax in the words a little after, πεισθῆναι τὴν ἀναχώρησιν, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 421, 1.

2. ἐν τῷ ἐμφανεῖ] for ἐμφανῶς, as in Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 4: though ἐκ τοῦ ἐμφανοῦς, found in Herodot., is the more frequent form. At τὰ Μηδικὰ there is generally supposed to be an ellipsis of κατὰ, the expression standing for ἐν τοῖς Μηδικοῖς. It is better, however, to regard this as an elliptical form of expression to be completed from the preceding, and standing for πλὴν ὅσοι γε ἑωράκεσαν τὰ M.

3. κατὰ ξυστάσεις γιγνόμενοι] 'forming themselves into bands or tumultuous groups.' Similar to this is the phrase κατὰ ξυλλόγους γ. infra iii. 27. Imitated from the present are the following passages of Dionys. Hal. p. 358, ult. σύνοδοι ἤδη κατὰ συστροφὰς ἐγίνοντο, and 428, 39. Dio Cass. 672, 29, κατὰ συστάσεις ἐστασιάσαμεν. Appian, ii. 691, κατὰ συστάσεις, and 881, 39. Jos. 1204, 9, κατὰ συστροφὰς οἱ στρατιῶται διελάλουν. Malchus Rhetor ap. Corp. Hist. Byz. 1, 97, B, χαλεπῶς ἔφερον, κατὰ ξυστάσεις τε γινόμενοι. The term ξυστάσεις has also this use in Eurip.

ἐν πολλῇ ἔριδι ἦσαν] And no wonder; since the Acharnians are described by Aristophanes as being very irascible. So Acharn. 180, we have, στιπτοὶ, γέροντες πρίνινοι, Ἀτεράμονες, μαραθωνομάχαι, σφενδάμνινοι. See also 352—5, and 665, seqq.

4. ὧν ἀκροᾶσθαι ὡς ἕκαστος ὥργητο] Of this harsh and anomalously expressed passage, (in which the reading, as it stands in the text, for the vulg. ἠκροᾶτο, is demanded by MS. authority,) the constr. is, as Pop. lays it down, ὧν ἀκροᾶσθαι ὥργητο ὡς ἕκαστος ὥργητο: the finite verb ὥργητο being in sense repeated, (on which see Matth. Gr. p. 1278,) though with a slight modification of sense. Render, 'which they (i. e. men) were eager to listen to, as each was propense to hearken or believe,' since, as Demosthenes says, Olynth. iii. ὃ γὰρ βούλεται, τοῦθ' ἕκαστος καὶ οἴεται: or as Cæsar expresses it, 'fere libenter homines id quod volunt credunt.' It is well observed by Arnold, that ὡς ἕκαστος ὥργητο is added 'because different persons ran to listen to different prophecies, each choosing those which encouraged his own opinions, or accorded with his own feelings.'

5. οἰόμενοι—Ἀθηναίων] Equivalent to οἰόμενοι οὐκ ἐλαχίστη μοῖρα Ἀθηναίων εἶναι, and supra 20, 3, μέγα μέρος ὄντες τῆς πόλεως, where see note. Ἐνῆγον, 'urged on.' The word is properly used of persons, though sometimes, as here, of things, when connected with persons.

6. ἀνηρέθιστο ἡ πόλις] 'was in a state

XXII. Περικλῆς δὲ ὁρῶν μὲν αὐτοὺς πρὸς τὸ παρὸν χαλεπαίνοντας, καὶ οὐ τὰ ἄριστα φρονοῦντας, πιστεύων δὲ ὀρθῶς γιγνώσκειν περὶ τοῦ μὴ ἐπεξιέναι, ἐκκλησίαν τε οὐκ ἐποίει αὐτῶν, οὐδὲ ξύλλογον οὐδένα, τοῦ μὴ ὀργῇ τι μᾶλλον ἢ γνώμῃ ξυνελθόντας ἐξαμαρτεῖν, τήν τε πόλιν ἐφύλασσε, καὶ δι' ἡσυχίας μάλιστα, ὅσον ἐδύνατο, εἶχεν. 2. ἱππέας μέντοι ἐξέπεμπεν ἀεί, τοῦ μὴ προδρόμους ἀπὸ τῆς στρατιᾶς ἐσπίπτοντας ἐς τοὺς ἀγροὺς τοὺς ἐγγὺς τῆς πόλεως κακουργεῖν· καὶ ἱππομαχία τις ἐνεγένετο βραχεῖα ἐν Φρυγίοις τῶν τε Ἀθηναίων τέλει ἑνὶ τῶν ἱππέων καὶ Θεσσαλοῖς μετ' αὐτῶν πρὸς τοὺς Βοιωτῶν ἱππέας, ἐν ᾗ οὐκ ἔλασσον ἔσχον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ Θεσσαλοί, μέχρι οὗ, προσβοηθησάντων τοῖς Βοιωτοῖς τῶν ὁπλιτῶν, τροπὴ ἐγένετο αὐτῶν, καὶ ἀπέθανον τῶν Θεσσαλῶν καὶ Ἀθηναίων οὐ πολλοί· ἀνείλοντο μέντοι αὐτοὺς αὐθημερὸν ἀσπόνδους. καὶ οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι τροπαῖον τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ ἔστησαν. 3. ἡ δὲ βοήθεια αὕτη τῶν Θεσσαλῶν κατὰ τὸ παλαιὸν of great excitement.' So Joseph. Ant. iv. 2, 3, ἀνηρέθιστο πλῆθος. Xen. Anab. vi. 6, 6. Mem. iii. 5, 7. The city at large (ἡ πόλις) had this feeling; for (as Thirlwall expresses it) 'even those who had no definite hopes, fears, or wishes, shared the general excitement on the eve of a great crisis.' Ἐκάκιζον ὅτι, 'they angrily reproached him.' So Hesych. explains by ἠτιῶντο, ἐμέμφοντο. There is, however, meant to be conveyed a mixed idea of blame and reproach.

Ch. XXII. 1. πρὸς τὸ παρὸν χαλεπαίνοντας] 'irritated at the present posture of affairs.' So πρὸς τὸ παρὸν is used infra iv. 80, 2, and v. 14, 3. vi. 41. In οὐ τὰ ἄριστα φρονοῦντας there is a meiosis for κακῶς φρ., occurring infra vi. 36, fin., the consequence of irritation being necessarily misjudging. Ὀρθῶς γιγνώσκειν, 'recte judicare ac decernere,' as in Hdian. iii. 7, 4.

ἐκκλησίαν τε οὐκ ἐποίει αὐτῶν, οὐδὲ ξύλλογον] These two terms are also combined in Plato, Gorg. p. 456, λόγῳ διαγωνίζεσθαι ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ ἢ ἐν ἄλλῳ τινὶ ξυλλόγῳ: but though there, as here, the two are evidently distinguished, commentators are by no means agreed as to the nature of the distinction. Bredow, Pop., and Arn. take the former to denote the regular assembly of the people (comitia); the latter, any sort of meeting which might have been called under these extraordinary circumstances. Dukas and Goeller are of opinion that ξύλλ. denotes a council of some part of the members of the body politic, as of certain magistrates, στρατηγῶν, φυλῶν, δήμων. This view, however, requires evidence to bear it out; and better is it to leave to the term its more extensive sense.

ἐξαμαρτεῖν] literally, 'to run out into a blunder,' 'make a false step.' So Aristoph. Lysist. 1277, εὐλαβώμεθα Τὸ λοιπὸν αὖθις μὴ ἐξαμαρτάνειν ἔτι: a use of the word also found in Xen., Plato, Isocr., and Dio Cass.

2. προδρόμους] 'the light-armed scouts.' Κακουργεῖν, 'to ravage.' Ἐνεγένετο, contigit, 'there happened,' 'took place:' a use, though unnoticed by Steph. in his Thes., found in Herodot. v. 3. viii. 83. Appian, i. 191, 597. ii. 450. Dio Cass. 300, 85. 381, 36. 554, 2. Plato, 642, 6. 341, 6. Xen. Hist. vi. 3, 6, which passages I have adduced by way of confirming the reading adopted, for the vulg. ἐγένετο, by Pop., Bekk., and Goell.

τέλει] It is difficult to ascertain the number which composed the τέλος in the age of the Peloponnesian war. The word often occurs in Herodot.; but never so as to convey any notion of its amount; except that it appears to have been a large body, probably answering to the ἱππαρχία of Ælian, which corresponds to our regiment; and that is, perhaps, what the Scholiast means by τάγματι. See Wessel. on Herodot. i. 103, and Wachsm. Ant. Gr. i. 1, p. 327.

ἀνείλοντο] See note supra i. 54, 1. By thus carrying off the bodies ἄσπονδοι, they meant to have it understood that they were on an equal footing, having lost no honour in the battle: in which case there was a sort of tacit truce. So Livy, xxiii. 46, 'posteram diem induciis tacitis sepeliendo utrimque cæsos in acie consumpserunt.'

ξυμμαχικὸν ἐγένετο τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις· καὶ ἀφίκοντο παρ' αὐτοὺς Λαρισαῖοι, Φαρσάλιοι, † Παράσιοι, Κρανώνιοι, ‡ Πυράσιοι, Γυρτώνιοι, Φεραῖοι. 4. ἡγοῦντο δὲ αὐτῶν ἐκ μὲν Λαρίσης Πολυμήδης καὶ Ἀριστόνους, ἀπὸ τῆς στάσεως ἑκάτερος, ἐκ δὲ Φαρσάλου Μένων· ἦσαν δὲ καὶ τῶν ἄλλων κατὰ πόλεις ἄρχοντες.

XXIII. Οἱ δὲ Πελοποννήσιοι, ἐπειδὴ οὐκ ἐπεξῆεσαν αὐτοῖς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς μάχην, ἄραντες ἐκ τῶν Ἀχαρνῶν, ἐδῄουν τῶν δήμων τινὰς ἄλλους τῶν μεταξὺ Πάρνηθος καὶ Βριλήσσου ὄρους. 2. ὄντων δὲ αὐτῶν ἐν τῇ γῇ, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἀπέστειλαν τὰς ἑκατὸν ναῦς περὶ Πελοπόννησον ἅσπερ παρεσκευάζοντο, καὶ χιλίους ὁπλίτας ἐπ'

3. κατὰ τὸ παλαιὸν ξυμμαχικὸν] 'according to the terms of the ancient alliance between Thessaly and Athens.' The expression κατὰ τὸ ξυμμαχικὸν, which occurs also at vii. 20, and v. 6, is so rare out of Thucyd., that I have only noted it in Dio Cass. 1339, 70, κατὰ τὸ ξυμμ. πεμφθέντες.

Λαρισαῖοι] So Pop. and Goell. edit, from a few of the best MSS.; while Bekk. retains the common reading, Λαρισσαῖοι; but wrongly, for Thucyd. and the old Attic writers prefer the σ to the σσ in proper names.

Παράσιοι] This word cannot be right; there being, in point of fact, no such people in Thessaly. Hence Poppo, Goeller, and Dobree propose to read instead of it Παράλιοι, or to cancel the word, as a var. lect. of Πυράσιοι, just after: of which two methods the latter is greatly preferable. I still, however, suspect, with Heringa, that the true reading is Πειράσιοι, which the Schol. seems to have had in his copy, and the scribe of the Cod. Vatic. in his original; his reading Πειράσιοι being certainly nearer Πειρ. than Παρ.: and that there was a people of that name in Thessaly, is probable from the words of Steph. Byz.: *Πειρασία· (*for which read Πειράσιοι) πόλις Μαγνησίας. The old reading just after, Πειράσιοι for Πυρ., certainly confirms the opinion that Πειρ. should have place among these names; though here Πυρ. is edited, from two of the best MSS., by Pop. and Goell.; while Πειράσιοι is retained by Bekk., wrongly, I think; since that would altogether exclude a tribe that formed part of the same group with the others here mentioned, being the inhabitants of a seaport called Πύρασος, mentioned by Strabo, ix. 5, § 14, p. 435, as situate at the mouth of a small river, and forming the port to the Thessalian Thebæ.

4. ἀπὸ τῆς στάσεως ἑκάτερος] 'each from his own political party,' lit. 'the party [to which he belonged]:' for the art. is here (as infra ch. 93, λαβόντα τῶν ναυτῶν ἕκαστον τὴν κώπην, and elsewhere) for the pron. poss.; so that it is, as Vall. points out, equiv. to ἀπὸ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ, or ἰδίας ἑκάτερος: not that we are to suppose, with the Schol., that each party sent forces and a general to the Athenians; for then it would be difficult to imagine how the oligarchical faction could be brought to take up arms for a democratical nation against an oligarchical. Now, Arnold observes, 'we do not know that the Larissæan factions were simply aristocratical and democratical; they may have been connected with family jealousies.' The family jealousies he speaks of were probably those occasioned by the adherents to, or the opponents of, the powerful family of the Aleuadæ, the ancient royal family of Thessaly; so that, after all, the factions in question must have been aristocratical and democratical; and from iv. 78, it is plain that the people at large of Thessaly were attached to Athens. Hence it would seem that the democratical party at Larissa was strong enough to force the aristocratical one to consent that a general should be appointed of their own party, conjointly with the one of the opposite party: just as the plebeian party, among the Romans, obtained that one of the two consuls should be plebeian.

Ch. XXIII. 1. ἄραντες] 'having struck tents,' 'decamped:' a use frequent in the historians; in which there is allusion to the tent-poles, &c. which are raised on dislodging.

2. ἅσπερ παρεσκευάζοντο] 'which they had got ready,' or, 'been getting ready.' Considering, however, that this use of the imperf. for pluperf., except in the case of εἶμι, is of questionable authority, Goell. and Pop. read ὥσπερ παρ., from one MS.; confirmed, they think, by a similar expression infra iv. 129, ἐξέπλευσαν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, αὐτῶν, καὶ τοξότας τετρακοσίους· ἐστρατήγει δὲ Καρκῖνός τε ὁ Ξενοτίμου, καὶ Πρωτέας ὁ Ἐπικλέους, καὶ Σωκράτης ὁ Ἀντιγένους. 3. καὶ οἱ μέν, ἅραντες τῇ παρασκευῇ ταύτῃ, περιέπλεον· οἱ δὲ Πελοποννήσιοι, χρόνον ἐμμείναντες ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ ὅσου εἶχον τὰ ἐπιτήδεια, ἀνεχώρησαν διὰ Βοιωτῶν, οὐχ ᾗπερ ἐσέβαλον· παριόντες δὲ Ὠρωπόν, τὴν γῆν τὴν ‡ Περαϊκὴν καλουμένην,—ἣν νέμονται Ὠρώπιοι Ἀθηναίων ὑπήκοοι,—ἐδῄωσαν. 4. ἀφικόμενοι δὲ ἐς Πελοπόννησον, διελύθησαν κατὰ πόλεις ἕκαστοι.

ὥσπερ παρεσκευάζοντο, ναυσὶ μέν, &c. That passage, however, is not of the same kind; the sense there being, 'as they were prepared,' which here would not be to the purpose; and moreover ἅσπερ is required by the τὰς ναῦς just before, to which it evidently refers. The common reading must, then, be retained; and if the pluperf. sense be thought objectionable, we may render, 'which they prepared or got ready,' agreeably to the decision of the assembly.

3. Περαϊκὴν] In my smaller edition I followed Pop. and Goell. in editing Γραϊκὴν, on the authority of Steph. Byz. in v. Ὠρωπός: a reading which had already been preferred by Casaub. and other eminent earlier scholars. I have, however, thought proper to recal the old reading, (which was retained by Bekk.) because the new one Γραϊκὴν is liable to no little objection; and as to the arguments of Peyron and Arnold, though some of them are forcible, yet upon the whole they are such as must occasion some doubt as to the truth of the reading Γρ., especially when it is considered that the whole of the MSS. unite in the reading Πειραϊκήν. In short, the circumstances of the case oblige us to admit Πειρ., unless it can be proved to be corrupt and utterly incapable of being accounted for; which is far from being the case. It cannot mean, as Arn. in his 1st ed. thinks, 'the country over the border;' the march or border country. We may rather suppose, as he suggests in his 2nd edition, that Πειραϊκὴ (of the same origin as Πειραιεὺς, the port of Athens) is connected with the expression ἡ πέραν γῆ, which is applied to the same district of Oropus, infra iii. 91. 'Those terms,' he adds, 'have reference to the opposite coast of Eubœa in the one case, and to that of Peloponnesus, or perhaps merely of Salamis, in the other. The later form was undoubtedly Perœa, which was the well-known name of the opposite coast of Asia Minor with respect to Rhodes, and of the opposite side of the Jordan with respect to Judæa.' I would further observe, that such was the opinion very long ago adopted by Palmer. Moreover, as Pirœus meant the ferry-port as to Peloponnesus, so another port in Corinthia, exactly opposite to it, was also so called, as the ferry-port in respect to Attica. So I doubt not but the Portus Sacer was formerly called Pirœus, and its districts Πειραϊκή. And the authority of Steph. Byz. is confirmed by iii. 91, where this district is called τῆς πέραν γῆς: though as the words make almost nonsense, there can be no doubt that the true reading is Περαϊκῆς or Πειραικῆς. Yet Γραϊκὴν may possibly, after all, be the original reading; for that a territory between Tanagra and the Portus Sacer had the name Γραϊκὴ, is certain. Thus Strabo says, Ἡ Γραῖα δ' ἐστὶ τόπος Ὠρωποῦ πλησίον: adding, that it was not, as some said, Tanagra. Steph. Byz., too, (yet more precisely,) in v. Ὠρωπὸς, says, Ἡ δὲ Γραῖα, τόπος τῆς Ὠρωπίας, πρὸς τῇ θαλάσσῃ καὶ Ἐρετρίας καὶ Εὐβοίας κειμένη: where the manifest corruption there existing may sufficiently be removed by reading, τόπος τῆς Ὠρωπίας πρὸς τῇ θαλάσσῃ, καὶ Ἐρετρίᾳ τῆς Εὐβοίας κειμένη: situated near to the sea and to Eretria in Eubœa; for it lies over against it, and only four miles across, certainly the nearest of Eubœa to this Graia; which was, it seems, a strip of territory on the left bank of the Asopus, lying between Oropus and Tanagra, and occupying the site of the old Graia of Homer, of which this Γραϊκὴ formed the territory; but whether it extended along the Asopus to the Portus Sacer is uncertain. Probably, however, it did: indeed there is little doubt that Γραϊκὴ and ἡ Πειραϊκὴ were only two names by which the territory in question was indifferently called; though probably Γραῖα was the more ancient one; which is confirmed by Steph. Byz. in Τάναγρα, where he says, Τὴν δὲ Γραῖαν ἔνιοι λέγουσι τὸ νῦν τῆς Θηβαϊκῆς καλούμενον ἔδος (regionem); where, for the manifestly corrupt Θηβ., read Πειραϊκῆς. Now Π and Θ are often confounded; as also are ει and η, and ρ and β.

XXIV. Ἀναχωρησάντων δὲ αὐτῶν, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι φυλακὰς κατεστήσαντο κατὰ γῆν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν, ὥσπερ δὴ ἔμελλον διὰ παντὸς τοῦ πολέμου φυλάξειν· καὶ χίλια τάλαντα ἀπὸ τῶν ἐν τῇ ἀκροπόλει χρημάτων ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς, ἐξαίρετα ποιησαμένοις, χωρὶς θέσθαι, καὶ μὴ ἀναλοῦν, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῶν ἄλλων πολεμεῖν· ἢν δέ τις εἴπῃ ἢ ἐπιψηφίσῃ κινεῖν τὰ χρήματα ταῦτα ἐς ἄλλο τι, ἢν μὴ οἱ πολέμιοι νηΐτῃ στρατῷ ἐπιπλέωσι τῇ πόλει, καὶ δέῃ ἀμύνασθαι, θάνατον ζημίαν ἐπέθεντο. 2. τριήρεις τε μετ' αὐτῶν ἑκατὸν ἐξαιρέτους ἐποιήσαντο, κατὰ τὸν ἐνιαυτὸν ἕκαστον τὰς βελτίστας, καὶ τριηράρχους αὐταῖς· ὧν μὴ χρῆσθαι μηδεμιᾷ ἐς ἄλλο τι ἢ μετὰ τῶν χρημάτων περὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ κινδύνου, ἢν δέῃ.

XXV. Οἱ δ' ἐν ταῖς ἑκατὸν ναυσὶ περὶ Πελοπόννησον Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ Κερκυραῖοι μετ' αὐτῶν, πεντήκοντα ναυσὶ προσβεβοηθηκότες, καὶ ἄλλοι τινες τῶν ἐκεῖ ξυμμάχων, ἄλλα τε ἐκάκουν περιπλέοντες, καὶ ἐς Μεθώνην τῆς Λακωνικῆς ἀποβάντες, τῷ τείχει προσέβαλον ὄντι ἀσθενεῖ, καὶ ἀνθρώπων οὐκ ἐνόντων. 2. ἔτυχε δὲ περὶ τοὺς εἴπῃ ἢ ἐπιψηφίσῃ, &c.] 'should move or put the question;' for, as observes Arn., though any one of the assembly might move a resolution, only one of the ten proëdri, namely, the president for the day, could put the question to vote. Compare i. 87. vi. 14, and Schoemann de Comit. Ath. p. 90. At κινεῖν τὰ χρήματα ταῦτα ἐς ἄλλο τι, there is a blending of two senses in the verb κινεῖν: 1. that of removing what has been laid up as not to be disturbed; and 2. that of applying it to another use or purpose. The second is here suggested by the ἐς following: an idiom, this, imitated in Appian, ii. 230, 42, τῶν τε ἀψαύστων ἐκίνει χρημάτων· ἃ φασιν ἐπὶ Κελτοῖς πάλαι σὺν ἀρᾷ δημοσίᾳ τεθῆναι μὴ σαλεύειν εἰς μηδέν, εἰ μὴ Κελτικὸς πόλεμος ἐπίοι. At iv. 98, 5, ὕδωρ τε ἐν τῇ ἀνάγκῃ κινῆσαι, the two senses of removing, and applying to one's own use, are united without any adjunct.

Ch. XXIV. 1. φυλακὰς κατεστήσαντο, &c.] The full sense is, 'they established corps de garde by land, and guardas costas by sea.' Ἐξαίρετα ποιησαμένοις χωρὶς θέσθαι, i. e. selecta seponere. Compare ἐξελέσθαι at iii. 50.

νηΐτῃ στρατῷ] 'with a naval force.' Νηΐτης is old Attic for the Ionic and common ναυτικός. Thus the phrase ναυτικὸς στρατὸς is frequent in Herodot. iii. 19. Νηΐτης στ. occurs also in Max. Tyr. Diss. vi. 7, while Ælian, Procop., Arrian, and Apoll. Rhod. have ν. στόλος: and Eurip. ναῖον στρατοῦ.

2. ἐξαιρέτους ἐπ.] This does not mean (as almost all the commentators suppose) that the triremes were then selected; for that is inconsistent with the words following. Thucyd. (as Goell. has seen) is speaking of what was to be done every year; the sense being, as Krueger and Goell. point out, 'The Athenians decreed that of the ships which they should any year have ready, an hundred should be selected and put aside, the best that could be found, each year.' The infin. χρῆσθαι depends on ἔδοξεν, used in the earlier part of the chapter. At τριηράρχους the verb must be repeated with accommodation.

Ch. XXV. 1. ἐκάκουν] This word, like κακουργεῖν, is used by the historians in the sense to devastate, plunder, ravage. Ἄλλα, alia loca, namely, both in town and country, and especially, as we learn from Diod., the Argolic Acte, which they devastated with fire and sword. Περιπλέοντες has the same sense as a little before, i. e. 'cruising about.' Μεθώνην τῆς Λακ.: so called by way of distinction from another Methone in Thrace. Thucydides might, indeed, have said Μεσσηνίας, as infra iv. 3, ἐν τῇ Μεσσηνίᾳ ποτὲ οὔσῃ γῇ: but he says Λακ. because Μεσσ. formed part of the Lacedæmonian territory.

ἀνθρώπων οὐκ ἐνόντων] By ἀνθρώπων is evidently meant soldiers, as often in Xenoph. Since, however, from what follows, it appears that there were troops in χώρους τούτους Βρασίδας ὁ Τέλλιδος, ἀνὴρ Σπαρτιάτης, φρουρὰν ἔχων· καὶ αἰσθόμενος, ἐβοήθει τοῖς ἐν τῷ χωρίῳ μετὰ ὁπλιτῶν ἑκατόν. 3. διαδραμὼν δὲ τὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων στρατόπεδον, ἐσκεδασμένον κατὰ τὴν χώραν καὶ πρὸς τὸ τεῖχος τετραμμένον, ἐσπίπτει ἐς τὴν Μεθώνην, καὶ ὀλίγους τινὰς ἐν τῇ ἐσδρομῇ ἀπολέσας τῶν μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ, τήν τε πόλιν περιεποίησε, καὶ ἀπὸ τούτου τοῦ τολμήματος πρῶτος τῶν κατὰ τὸν πόλεμον ἐπηνέθη ἐν Σπάρτῃ. 4. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι ἄραντες παρέπλεον, καὶ σχόντες τῆς Ἠλείας ἐς Φειὰν, ἐδήουν τὴν γῆν ἐπὶ δύο ἡμέρας· καὶ προσβοηθήσαντας τῶν ἐκ τῆς κοίλης Ἤλιδος τριακοσίους λογάδας, καὶ τῶν αὐτόθεν ἐκ τῆς περιοικίδος

the place, the meaning must be, as Goell. and Arnold suggest, that 'there was no regular garrison,' none of that portion of the Spartan military force which had been left at home for the defence of the country, when two-thirds of it had gone on foreign service in Attica. This I am enabled to confirm from a very similar passage in Pausan. iv. 5, 3, καὶ τό τε πόλισμα αἱροῦσι, πυλῶν ἀνεῳγμένων καὶ φυλακῆς (garrison) οὐκ ἐνούσης· καὶ τῶν Μεσσηνίων τοὺς ἐγκαταλειφθέντας, (read, from the Cod. Aimas, ἐγκαταληφθ) φονεύουσι: where by the persons there found in the place and slain, understand the ordinary male inhabitants of the place, trained to arms, but not in the discharge of garrison duties.

3. ἐσκεδασμένον κατὰ τὴν χώραν] 'scattered over the country [around Methone].' Of πρὸς τὸ τεῖχος τετραμμένον the meaning seems chiefly to be, that they 'had their faces turned to the town-wall [and therefore were taken in the rear by Brasidas].' It may also, however, mean, that 'their attention was directed thither.' So infra vi. 51, we have, καὶ τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει πρὸς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τετραμμένων.

ἐπηνέθη ἐν Σπάρτῃ] publico, ut videtur, decreto. Decretum apud Plut. Vit. 10. Rhet. p. 851, sq. Ἀγαθῇ τύχῃ δεδόχθαι τῷ δήμῳ ἐπαινέσαι μὲν Λυκοῦργον — ἀρετῆς ἕνεκα καὶ δικαιοσύνης, &c. Ἐπαινεῖν in publicis decretis, quod ego quidem sciam, de ea laude dicitur, quæ erat civitatis tanquam gratiarum actio erga civem, qui munere aliquo in commodum reipublicæ bene functus erat. De quo honoris genere exposui in Comment. de publicis Atheniens. honoribus, ac præmiis. (Westerm. Quæst. Demosth. P. ii. p. 26.)

4. σχόντες τῆς Ἠλείας ἐς Φειὰν] Our historian now narrates the next, and more successful, attempt of the Athenians on the Peloponnesus, in an attack on the coast of Elis. Here, however, some obscurity overhangs the narration, partly from a want of clearness in the composition, and partly owing to a deficiency of correct information as to the topography of this part of the coast of Peloponnesus. It can hardly be doubted, but that by Φειὰν is meant the peninsular promontory of which ὁ Ἰχθὺς, now Catacolo, forms the cape or ness; and by τὴν Φειάν, the city, or town of that name, which seems to have been situated not on the coast, but above the peninsula, and a little inland; about the spot where Pondico-castro is now situated. By τὸν ἐν τῇ Φειᾷ λιμένα, we are to understand, 'the port in the [district of] Pheia,' probably occupying the place assigned, wrongly, in the maps to Pheia itself. Thus, all will be sufficiently clear to the reader, especially by the following brief recital in Thirlwall, Hist. vol. iii. p. 128:—'The Athenians landed near the isthmus, which connects the rocky peninsula, called Ichthys, with the main land, close to the town of Pheia, ravaged the country for two days, and defeated the first body of troops which was sent to protect it; and when the fleet was forced to take shelter from a sudden gale in the port of Pheia, on the other side of the isthmus, the Messenians, who had been left on shore with a few comrades, in the hurry of the embarkation, made themselves masters of Pheia itself, while the fleet was doubling the cape.' At σχόντες, there is an ellipsis of ναῦς, which word is expressed in Herodot. vi. 95, παρὰ τὴν ἤπ. ἔσχον τὰς νέας. In ἐπὶ δύο ἡμέρας, the preposition has the rare sense, per.

λογάδας] 'picked men.' Λογάδες, as a subst., occurs not unfrequently in our author, and is found in Herodot. viii. 124. And so λογάδες νεανέες, Herodot. i. 36 and 43. By these are merely to be understood picked troops, or troops chosen for some particular duty. They are not to be confounded with the οἱ λογάδες, infra v. 67, which did not differ from the regular soldiers of modern times. By τῆς περιοικίδος Ἠλείων, Pop. thinks is meant the Pisatis. On the Perioeci of the Eleans, see Clinton's Fasti Hell., p. 428.

5. ἀνέμου κατιόντος] So Plut. ap. Steph. Thes. ἀνέμου κατιόντος ἐν πελάγει. Pausan. ii. 34, 3, κατιόντος ἔτι τοῦ πνεύματος. Aristid. iii. 349, κατιόντος τοῦ πνεύματος. The κατὰ has reference to the fact, that the stormy gusts of wind in the Mediterranean, by our sailors called Levanters, seem, when they arise off at sea, to come down perpendicularly from the sky; and, when this occurs off a mountainous coast, seem to sweep down from the mountains. So, in Luke viii. 23, we have κατέβη λαῖλαψ ἀνέμου εἰς τὴν λίμνην. Hence the term is sometimes used of stormy gusts of wind by land, or even stiff winds that set in. So Arat. Phæn. 241, βορειάου κατιόντος.

CH. XXVI. 1. περὶ τὴν Λοκρίδα] circa Locr., i. e. 'to cruise around Locris.' So supra ch. 23, περὶ Πελοπ. At φυλακὴν no preposition is necessary to be supplied, since the word is in apposition with ναῦς: this being one of those many instances in which apposition serves not so much to explain the former substantive, as to show the design or purpose, as in Hom. Il. iv. 155, θάνατόν νύ τοι ὅρκι' ἔταμνον, 'for thy death.' See other examples in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 433, obs. 3. Here the only difficulty is occasioned by the oratio variata.

CH. XXVII. 1. ἀνέστησαν] 'expelled,' 'expatriated,' as often in our author, and in Herodot. ix. 73. Of the words following, ἐπικαλέσαντες—εἶναι, the sense is, 'accusing them [as being] the cause to themselves of the war.'

ἐποίκους] I would here, with Goell., adopt the distinction made by Krueg., that colonists are called ἄποικοι, in respect of the place whence they are sent; ἔποικοι, in respect of that to which they are going: so that the former may be rendered immigrants, or settlers; the latter, emigrants.

2. ἔδοσαν—οἰκεῖν καὶ τὴν γῆν νέμεσθαι] These words are meant to limit ἔδοσαν, and to denote occupation for a time, as distinguished from permanent property.

Ἠλείων, μάχῃ ἐκράτησαν. 5. ἀνέμου δὲ κατιόντος μεγάλου, χειμαζόμενοι ἐν ἀλιμένῳ χωρίῳ, οἱ μὲν πολλοὶ ἐπέβησαν ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς, καὶ περιέπλεον τὸν Ἰχθὺν καλούμενον τὴν ἄκραν ἐς τὸν ἐν τῇ Φειᾷ λιμένα· οἱ δὲ Μεσσήνιοι ἐν τούτῳ, καὶ ἄλλοι τινὲς οἱ οὐ δυνάμενοι ἐπιβῆναι, κατὰ γῆν χωρήσαντες, τὴν Φειὰν αἱροῦσι. 6. καὶ ὕστερον αἵ τε νῆες περιπλεύσασαι ἀναλαμβάνουσιν αὐτοὺς, καὶ ἐξανάγονται ἐκλιπόντες Φειάν· καὶ τῶν Ἠλείων ἡ πολλὴ ἤδη στρατιὰ προσεβεβοηθήκει. 7. παραπλεύσαντες δὲ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐπὶ ἄλλα χωρία, ἐδήουν.

XXVI. Ὑπὸ δὲ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον τοῦτον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τριάκοντα ναῦς ἐξέπεμψαν περὶ τὴν Λοκρίδα, καὶ Εὐβοίας ἅμα φυλακήν· ἐστρατήγει δὲ αὐτῶν Κλεόπομπος ὁ Κλεινίου. 2. καὶ ἀποβάσεις ποιησάμενος, τῆς τε παραθαλασσίου ἔστιν ἃ ἐδήωσε, καὶ Θρόνιον εἷλεν, ὁμήρους τε ἔλαβεν αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐν Ἀλόπῃ τοὺς βοηθήσαντας Λοκρῶν μάχῃ ἐκράτησεν.

XXVII. Ἀνέστησαν δὲ καὶ Αἰγινήτας τῷ αὐτῷ θέρει τούτῳ ἐξ Αἰγίνης Ἀθηναῖοι, αὐτούς τε καὶ παῖδας καὶ γυναῖκας, ἐπικαλέσαντες οὐχ ἥκιστα τοῦ πολέμου σφίσιν αἰτίους εἶναι· καὶ τὴν Αἴγιναν ἀσφαλέστερον ἐφαίνετο, τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ ἐπικειμένην, αὐτῶν πέμψαντας ἐποίκους, ἔχειν· καὶ ἐξέπεμψαν ὕστερον οὐ πολλῷ ἐς αὐτὴν τοὺς οἰκήτορας. 2. ἐκπεσοῦσι δὲ τοῖς Αἰγινήταις οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἔδοσαν Θυρέαν οἰκεῖν καὶ τὴν γῆν νέμεσθαι, κατά τε τὸ

Ἀθηναίων διάφορον, καὶ ὅτι σφῶν εὐεργέται ἦσαν ὑπὸ τὸν σεισμὸν καὶ τῶν Εἱλώτων τὴν ἐπανάστασιν. 3. ἡ δὲ Θυρεᾶτις γῆ μεθορία τῆς Ἀργείας καὶ Λακωνικῆς ἐστὶν, ἐπὶ θάλασσαν καθήκουσα. 4. καὶ οἱ μὲν αὐτῶν ἐνταῦθα ᾤκησαν, οἱ δ' ἐσπάρησαν κατὰ τὴν ἄλλην Ἑλλάδα.

XXVIII. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους νουμηνίᾳ κατὰ σελήνην,—ὥσπερ καὶ μόνον δοκεῖ εἶναι γίγνεσθαι δυνατὸν,—ὁ ἥλιος ἐξέλιπε μετὰ μεσημβρίαν, καὶ πάλιν ἀνεπληρώθη, γενόμενος μηνοειδὴς καὶ ἀστέρων τινῶν ἐκφανέντων.

XXIX. Καὶ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ θέρει Νυμφόδωρον τὸν Πύθεω, ἄνδρα Ἀβδηρίτην, οὗ εἶχε τὴν ἀδελφὴν Σιτάλκης, δυνάμενον παρ' αὐτῷ μέγα, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, πρότερον πολέμιον νομίζοντες, πρόξενον ἐποιήσαντο καὶ μετεπέμψαντο, βουλόμενοι Σιτάλκην σφίσι τὸν Τήρεω, Θρᾳκῶν βασιλέα, ξύμμαχον γενέσθαι. 2. ὁ δὲ Τήρης οὗτος, ὁ τοῦ Σιτάλκου πατὴρ, πρῶτος Ὀδρύσαις τὴν μεγάλην βασιλείαν ἐπὶ πλεῖον τῆς ἄλλης Θρᾴκης ἐποίησε· πολὺ γὰρ μέρος καὶ αὐτόνομόν ἐστι Θρᾳκῶν. 3. Τηρεῖ δὲ τῷ Πρόκνην τὴν Πανδίονος ἀπ' Ἀθηνῶν σχόντι γυναῖκα προσήκει ὁ Τήρης οὗτος οὐδὲν, οὐδὲ τῆς αὐτῆς Θρᾴκης ἐγένοντο· ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν ἐν Δαυλίᾳ τῆς Φωκίδος νῦν καλουμένης γῆς ὁ Τηρεὺς ᾤκει, τότε ὑπὸ Θρᾳκῶν οἰκουμένης· (καὶ τὸ ἔργον τὸ περὶ τὸν Ἴτυν αἱ γυναῖκες ἐν τῇ γῇ ταύτῃ ἔπραξαν· πολλοῖς δὲ καὶ τῶν ποιητῶν ἐν ἀηδόνος μνήμῃ Δαυλιὰς ἡ ὄρνις ἐπωνόμασται· εἰκὸς δὲ καὶ τὸ κῆδος Πανδίονα ξυνάψασθαι τῆς θυγατρὸς διὰ τοσούτου, ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ τῇ πρὸς ἀλλήλους, μᾶλλον ἢ

Ch. XXVIII. 1. νουμηνίᾳ κατὰ σελήνην] 'the day of the conjunction of the sun and moon,' 'the interlunary day.' Κατὰ σελ., as Goell. observes, is added, because the νουμηνία πολιτικὴ of the Metonic cycle did not always fall upon the true νουμηνία: for, owing to the defective calculations of those days, the beginning of the natural lunar month did not exactly correspond with the beginning of the civil lunar month. Ἀνεπληρώθη, 'was filled up,' i. e. 'in full phasis.' Γενόμενος μηνοειδὴς, 'after having been of the form of a crescent.' So Xen. Hist. v. 3, 10, ὁ ἥλιος μηνοειδὴς ἔδοξε φανῆναι.

καὶ ἀστέρων τινῶν ἐκφανέντων] 'insomuch that certain stars appeared.' These stars, we learn from Heis. de Eclipsibus belli Peloponn., p. 6 and 9, were the planets Venus and Mars. The ἐκ in ἐκφαν. is intensive. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Dio Cass. 996, 13, ὥστε καὶ ἀστέρας ἐκφῆναι, where read ἐκφανῆναι.

Ch. XXIX. 1. πολέμιον νομίζοντες] 'regarding him as a public enemy.'

πρόξενον] 'public host,' namely, one who used to receive and entertain all envoys from the state, to which he was πρόξενος, and discharged most of the offices of what is now called consul. He was always a citizen, not of the state to which he acted as πρόξενος, but of that in which he performed the duties of his office.

2. πρῶτος—ἐποίησε] Constr. πρῶτος ἐποίησε τὴν βασιλείαν Ὀδρύσαις μεγάλην ἐπὶ πλεῖον [μέρος] τῆς ἄλλης Θ., 'on a larger scale than,' &c.

3. προσήκει—οὐδὲν] 'has nothing to do with,' 'has no relation to.' Τῆς αὐτῆς Θρᾴκης, 'the same [part] of Thrace.' Of κῆδος—ξυνάψασθαι τῆς θυγατρὸς, the sense is, 'contracted affinity by his daughter,' 'matched his daughter.' So Lucian i. 834, ξυν. γάμον. Eurip. Andr. 621, κῆδος συναψ. See Mitch. in Aristoph. Ach. 625.

διὰ πολλῶν ἡμερῶν ἐς Ὀδρύσας ὁδοῦ.) 4. Τήρης δὲ οὔτε τὸ αὐτὸ ὄνομα ἔχων, βασιλεύς τε πρῶτος ἐν κράτει Ὀδρυσῶν ἐγένετο. 5. οὗ δὴ ὄντα τὸν Σιτάλκην οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ξύμμαχον ἐποιήσαντο, βουλόμενοι σφίσι τὰ ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης χωρία καὶ Περδίκκαν ξυνεξελεῖν αὐτόν. 6. ἐλθών τε ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας ὁ Νυμφόδωρος, τήν τε τοῦ Σιτάλκου ξυμμαχίαν ἐποίησε, καὶ Σάδοκον τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ Ἀθηναῖον, τόν τε ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης πόλεμον ὑπεδέχετο καταλύσειν· πείσειν γὰρ Σιτάλκην πέμψειν στρατιὰν Θρᾳκίαν Ἀθηναίοις ἱππέων τε καὶ πελταστῶν. 7. ξυνεβίβασε δὲ καὶ τὸν Περδίκκαν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ Θέρμην αὐτῷ ἔπεισεν ἀποδοῦναι· ξυνεστράτευσέ τ' εὐθὺς Περδίκκας ἐπὶ Χαλκιδέας μετ' Ἀθηναίων καὶ Φορμίωνος. 8. οὕτω μὲν Σιτάλκης τε ὁ Τήρεω Θρᾳκῶν βασιλεὺς ξύμμαχος ἐγένετο Ἀθηναίοις, καὶ Περδίκκας ὁ Ἀλεξάνδρου Μακεδόνων βασιλεύς.

XXX. Οἱ δ' ἐν ταῖς ἑκατὸν ναυσὶν Ἀθηναῖοι, ἔτι ὄντες περὶ Πελοπόννησον, Σόλλιόν τε Κορινθίων πόλισμα αἱροῦσι, καὶ παραδιδόασι Παλαιρεῦσιν Ἀκαρνάνων μόνοις τὴν γῆν καὶ πόλιν νέμεσθαι· καὶ Ἄστακον, ἧς Εὔαρχος ἐτυράννει, λαβόντες κατὰ κράτος, καὶ ἐξελάσαντες αὐτὸν, τὸ χωρίον ἐς τὴν ξυμμαχίαν προσεποιήσαντο. 2. ἐπί τε Κεφαλληνίαν τὴν νῆσον πλεύσαντες προσηγάγοντο ἄνευ μάχης. 3. κεῖται δὲ ἡ Κεφαλληνία κατὰ Ἀκαρνανίαν καὶ Λευκάδα, διὰ πολλῶν ἡμερῶν ἐς Ὀδρύσας ὁδοῦ] The full sense is, 'rather than with one who resided many days' journey off at Odrysæ.'

4. Τήρης δὲ οὔτε τὸ αὐτὸ ὄνομα ἔχων] There is a considerable harshness here in the construction, wherein the ἔχων is regarded as a verb (εἶχε), by a subaudition of ἦν, from ἐγένετο just after.

βασιλεὺς πρῶτος ἐν κράτει Ὀδρυσῶν ἐγένετο] 'primus rex fuit Odrysarum, qui opibus valeret,' by κράτει being meant power, as connected with wealth, and arising from revenue, as we find a little after.

5. ξυνεξελεῖν] So I read, with Pop. and Goell., from several MSS., for ξυνελεῖν, which is retained by Bekk., perhaps because the term ξυνεξ. would seem, from Steph. Thes., to be destitute of authority. Yet the many examples adduced by me in note on Transl. show that it is used by the best writers, not only the later ones, as Plut., Pausan., and Jos. and Polyb., but also Eurip. and Xen., and that followed either by names of persons, or of places, and denoting expugnare simul ac devincere.

6. τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ Ἀθηναῖον] Repeat ἐποίησε, 'procured him to be made.' A rare phrase, of which, however, examples are found in Dinarch., p. 95, 45, τὸν δὴ Θεσπιέα τε ἐποίησε. Pausan. i. 352, γενόμενον—Ἀθηναῖον.

πείσειν γὰρ Σιτάλκην πέμψειν] So, for vulg. πείσειν—πέμπειν, Pop., Bekk., and Goell. edit., from almost all the best MSS., agreeably to Attic use, by which, (as observes Hermann de Præc. quib. Attic. p. xiv.) when there is in the principal verb a signification of future, it is customary to adjoin an infin. in the fut. On the tense of the infin. mood, when following other verbs, see Lobeck on Phryn., p. 745, seqq.

7. ξυνεβίβασε] 'reconciled him to.' See my Lex. N. T. in v. The word in this sense is somewhat rare; though I have seen it so used in Dio Cass.

Ch. XXX. 2. προσηγάγοντο] Not, subdued, as the Schol., Port., Hobbes, and Smith render, but 'brought it over to their alliance,' as Diodor. rightly understood the word.

3. κεῖται δὲ—Λευκάδα] As illustrative of this, compare a most exact description of the situation of Cephallenia, in Polyb. v. 3, 4. On the names of the four cities or states, see my note in Transl. With τετράπολις οὖσα, Παλῆς, Κράνιοι, Σαμαῖοι, Προναῖοι. 4. ὕστερον δ' οὐ πολλῷ ἀνεχώρησαν αἱ νῆες ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας.

XXXI. Περὶ δὲ τὸ φθινόπωρον τοῦ θέρους τούτου Ἀθηναῖοι πανδημεί, αὐτοὶ καὶ οἱ μέτοικοι, ἐσέβαλον ἐς τὴν Μεγαρίδα, Περικλέους τοῦ Ξανθίππου στρατηγοῦντος. 2. καὶ οἱ περὶ Πελοπόννησον Ἀθηναῖοι ἐν ταῖς ἑκατὸν ναυσὶν, (ἔτυχον γὰρ ἤδη ἐν Αἰγίνῃ ὄντες ἐπ' οἴκου ἀνακομιζόμενοι,) ὡς ᾔσθοντο τοὺς ἐκ τῆς πόλεως πανστρατιᾷ ἐν Μεγάροις ὄντας, ἔπλευσαν παρ' αὐτοὺς καὶ ξυνεμίχθησαν. 3. στρατόπεδόν τε μέγιστον δὴ τοῦτο ἀθρόον Ἀθηναίων ἐγένετο, ἀκμαζούσης ἔτι τῆς πόλεως καὶ οὔπω νενοσηκυίας· μυρίων γὰρ ὁπλιτῶν οὐκ ἐλάσσους ἦσαν αὐτοὶ Ἀθηναῖοι, (χωρὶς δὲ αὐτοῖς οἱ ἐν Ποτιδαίᾳ τρισχίλιοι ἦσαν,) μέτοικοι δὲ ξυνεσέβαλον οὐκ ἐλάσσους τρισχιλίων ὁπλιτῶν, χωρὶς δὲ ὁ ἄλλος ὅμιλος ψιλῶν οὐκ ὀλίγος· δῃώσαντες δὲ τὰ πολλὰ τῆς γῆς ἀνεχώρησαν. 4. ἐγένοντο δὲ καὶ ἄλλαι ὕστερον ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ κατὰ ἔτος ἕκαστον ἐσβολαὶ Ἀθηναίων ἐς τὴν Μεγαρίδα, καὶ ἱππέων καὶ πανστρατιᾷ, μέχρι οὗ Νίσαια ἑάλω ὑπ' Ἀθηναίων.

respect to the etymology of the name Κράνιοι, it is, I apprehend, derived from κρᾶνον, a skull; the form of the mountain, under which Cranii was situated, being probably that of a skull. Indeed, the island itself, Cephallenia, seems to have derived its name from the word κεφαλή. So Buondelmont (cited by Palmer, Ant. Gr. p. 524) says, that 'to sailors approaching it from the south, the island has the form of a man's hand.' As to the origin of the name Προναῖοι, that was doubtless given with reference to the situation of the place, in respect to Peloponnesus and Acarnania, as above described: for Προναῖος seems to come from πρόνος, the same word with the Latin pronus, 'bending forward,' and equiv. to προκείμενος. So in Colum. iii. 2, we have, 'loca Aquiloni prona.' And πρόνος was equiv. to προβλής. So Strabo, lib. viii. treating of Elis, says, καθ' ἣν ἀντίπορθμός ἐστι ἥ τε Ἀκαρνανία, καὶ προκείμεναι νῆσοι Ζάκυνθος καὶ Κεφαλληνία. If to the derivation above proposed, it be objected that this does not account for the ην in Κεφαλληνία, I would say, that the name was probably derived from what is no other that a derivative of κεφαλή, namely, κεφαλῆνος, the name of a fish, by us called the sea-mullet, and by the Romans, capito; both these names κεφαλῆνος and capito having reference to the peculiar form of the fish, which is as it were all head. (See Hesych. in v. and Athen. 306, F.) Hence, from κεφαλῆνος, would come the adj. κεφαλήνιος, and so Κεφαλληνία would mean ἡ Κεφαληνία νῆσος, the island that was of the form of the fish in question.

Ch. XXXIII. 1. κατελθεῖν] 'to be restored,' lit. 'to come back.'

πλεύσαντας, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐπικούρους τινὰς προσεμισθώσατο· ἦρχον δὲ τῆς στρατιᾶς Εὐφαμίδας τε ὁ Ἀριστωνύμου καὶ Τιμόξενος ὁ Τιμοκράτους καὶ Εὔμαχος ὁ Χρύσιδος. 2. καὶ πλεύσαντες κατήγαγον· καὶ τῆς ἄλλης Ἀκαρνανίας τῆς περὶ θάλασσαν ἔστιν ἃ χωρία βουλόμενοι προσποιήσασθαι, καὶ πειραθέντες, ὡς οὐκ ἠδύναντο, ἀπέπλεον ἐπ' οἴκου. 3. σχόντες δ' ἐν τῷ παράπλῳ ἐς Κεφαλληνίαν, καὶ ἀπόβασιν ποιησάμενοι ἐς τὴν Κρανίων γῆν, ἀπατηθέντες ὑπ' αὐτῶν ἐξ ὁμολογίας τινὸς, ἄνδρας τε ἀποβάλλουσι σφῶν αὐτῶν, ἐπιθεμένων ἀπροσδοκήτοις τῶν Κρανίων, καὶ βιαιότερον ἀναγαγόμενοι, ἐκομίσθησαν ἐπ' οἴκου.

3. βιαιότερον ἀναγαγόμενοι] 'after embarking in a somewhat compulsory and precipitate manner,' forcedly, as infra, v. 73. So the expression ἀποχώρησις β. at iv. 3, with which we may compare our phrase, 'a forced march,' and 'a forced retreat;' Lat. effusa fuga; Gr. φυγὴ βιαιοτέρα. Indeed, βίαιος, in the sense coactus, as opposed to voluntary, occurs in Eurip. Ion, 445, βιαίων γάμων. Xen. Hist. vii. 6, τὰ ἀφροδίσια τὰ βίαια: and often in Plato. Finally, this view of the sense (which has escaped the commentators) is confirmed by a passage in Arrian, E. A. iv. 27, 13, (evidently imitated from the present,) ξυμφυγόντες βεβαιότερον ἤδη εἵργοντο τῆς χώρας, where it is strange the editors should not have seen that for βεβαιότερον ought to be read βιαιότερον. The two words are, indeed, often confounded.

Ch. XXXIV. From this chapter to c. 46, inclusive, we have an account of what took place at the public funeral at Athens, of the citizens who had fallen in battle, in the first summer of the war. The funeral itself is described in this chapter, and the remaining portion is occupied by the funeral oration, which was pronounced on the occasion by Pericles. Which ancient usage, of paying funeral honours to the citizens who had fallen for their country, afforded Pericles, who was again called upon to display the eloquence he had evinced on the like occasion at the close of the Samian war, an opportunity of animating the courage and hopes of his countrymen, and indirectly, of vindicating the policy of his own administration. (Thirlwall.) On the origin of the custom in question, see Wachsmuth Antiq. Gr. ii. 2, p. 82.

1. δημοσίᾳ ταφὰς ἐποιήσαντο] 'solemnized the public funeral of,' &c. The plural is not put for the singular, as in ταφὰς θεῖναι, which occurs in the tragedians; but ταφὰς has reference to the ceremony as appertaining to each, and therefore forming a plural. So ταφὰς ποιεῖσθαι τῶν νεκρῶν occurs in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 551, 44, and 470, 20; and Demosth. p. 499, ταφὰς ποιεῖσθε δημοσίᾳ ἐπὶ τοῖς τελευτήσασι.

2. τὰ ὀστᾶ προτίθενται] On this sense of προτ. (a term usually so applied, like proponere in Latin,) Pop. refers to Pollux viii. 65, the commentators on Dio Cass. p. 875, and Pflugk on Eurip. Hec. 613. By ὀστᾶ are meant the bones after the flesh has been removed by burning; for, subsequently to the cremation, the bones used to be carefully collected, and reserved for interment at a public funeral in the Ceramicus. So we read in Boeckh, Inscrip. vol. i. p. 301, Qui Athenis publice sepeliuntur, eorum ossa lecta deferuntur in Ceramicum. Cremantur cæsi ibi ubi castra sunt, sed justa fiunt cineribus in patriâ. Τῶν ἀπογενομένων. On this term, to express the departed, employed here and at c. 51, see c. 98, and Herodot. ii. 136. Of πρότριτα, the sense is, 'on the third day,' three days before the carrying out to burial, (during which time the bodies as it were lay in state;) and thus only one day intervened between the πρόθεσις and the funeral. Arn. observes, that in ordinary funerals the body was obliged to be carried out the day after it was laid out; referring, in proof of this,

to Demosth. c. Macart. p. 1071, Reiske. That, however, as Pop. points out, is refuted by what we find in Aristoph. Lys. 611, Μῶν ἐγκαλεῖς, ὅτι οὐχὶ προυθέμεσθά σε; Ἀλλ' ἐς τρίτην γε ἡμέραν σοι πρῳ πάνυ Ἥξει παρ' ἡμῶν τὰ τρίτ' ἐπεσκευασμένα. By σκηνήν, understand, not a tent covered all round, (for none such would have been large enough,) but a kind of pavilion, like the tent called the aspek, thus described by Bernier, in his Travels in Hindostan :—'A tent, called the aspek, was pitched outside, larger than the hall, to which it joined by the top. It spread over half the court, and was completely enclosed by a great balustrade, covered with plates of silver. Its supporters were pillars overlaid with silver; three of which were as thick and as high as the mast of a bark, the others smaller.' At ἐπιφέρει τῷ αὐτοῦ, supply νεκρῷ, which word is expressed at ch. 52. By the term ἐπιφ. is denoted the bringing offerings of every kind, as incense, wine, cakes, ointments, and flowers, as tributes of devout affection. So in Aristoph. Lys. 613, just before cited, we have ᾔξει παρ' ἡμῶν τὰ τρίτ' (the third-day offerings) ἐπισκευασμένα, and in Artem. Onir. iv. 22, 1, νοσοῦντι δὲ πονηρὰ τὰ μύρα, διὰ τὸ συνεισφέρεσθαι νεκρῷ.

3. λάρνακας κυπαρισσίνας] 'coffins of cypress-wood;' that being selected, from its property, the longest to resist corruption, and from its being sacred to death; also, perhaps, with some latent allusion to the doctrine of the immortality of the soul; just as the Pythagoreans (says Diog. Laërt. lib. viii.) forbore to use (as was common) a cypress-wood bier, because Jupiter's sceptre is made of that wood; a fable, this, having allusion to the eternity of his dominion. So in Psalm xlv. 6, we have ὁ θρόνος σου, ὁ Θεὸς, εἰς αἰῶνα αἰῶνος.

φυλῆς ἑκάστης μίαν] 'one for each tribe,' lit. 'one belonging to each tribe.' Of the next words, the construction is, Jacobs observes, by resolution, thus, τὰ ὀστᾶ ἑκάστου ἔνεστι τῇ λάρνακι τῆς φυλῆς ἧς ἦν.

4. κλίνη κενὴ] The κλίνη here answers to what is elsewhere called the λέκτρον, or φέρετρον. And of ἐστρωμένη, the sense is, 'covered with a pall;' as Herodot. vi. 58, ἐν κλίνῃ εὖ ἐστρωμένῃ ἐκφέρουσι. Xen. Cyr. viii. 2, 5. For these, then, a cenotaph was erected; and, in illustration of this, Goell. cites a passage of Dorvill. on Charit. p. 415. The genit. ἀφανῶν (of which the words following are exegetical) has the same force as at ἑκάστης, a little before.

5. ξυνεκφέρει] 'accompany the funeral.' The word in this sense, which is rare, occurs also in Dio Cass. 840, 4. 360, 30, and συνθάπτω in Æschyl. Theb. 1035. This honour was not allowed at private funerals.

6. τοὺς ἐκ τῶν πολέμων] Sub. ἀποθανόντας, which is confirmed by Philostr. Vit. Soph. p. 493, ὁ δὲ ἐπιτάφιος εἴρηται ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐκ τῶν πολέμων πεσοῦσιν: and Pausan. i. 29, 4. Plato, p. 32, D, οὐκ ἀνελομένους τοὺς ἐκ τῆς ναυμαχίας, 'those who perished in the sea-fight;' for, as observes Matthiæ Gr. Gr. § 596, 'sometimes the noun with ἐκ or ἀπὸ expresses the place, or the time of the preceding action or situation.'

πλήν γε τοὺς, &c.] πλὴν properly carries a genit., but sometimes, instead of it, takes one dependent on the foregoing words, not only the nomin., but the dat., (as Aristoph. Nub. 120.) or the accus., as here and in Isocr. Panath. πάντας, πλὴν τοὺς μετεσχηκότας.

7. ἐπειδὰν δὲ κρύψωσι γῇ] 'after they have interred them.' A somewhat unusual mode of expression, though found in Dion. Hal. Ant. ii. 56. And so terrâ tegere, in Tacitus. Compare also κρ. ἐν τῇ γῇ πόλεως, ὃς ἂν γνώμῃ τε δοκῇ μὴ ἀξύνετος εἶναι καὶ ἀξιώσει προήκῃ, λέγει ἐπ' αὐτοῖς ἔπαινον τὸν πρέποντα· μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο ἀπέρχονται. 8. ὧδε μὲν θάπτουσι· καὶ διὰ παντὸς τοῦ πολέμου, ὁπότε ξυμβαίη αὐτοῖς, ἐχρῶντο τῷ νόμῳ. 9. ἐπὶ δ' οὖν τοῖς πρώτοις τοῖσδε Περικλῆς ὁ Ξανθίππου ᾑρέθη λέγειν· καὶ ἐπειδὴ καιρὸς ἐλάμβανε, προελθὼν ἀπὸ τοῦ σήματος ἐπὶ βῆμα ὑψηλὸν πεποιημένον, ὅπως ἀκούοιτο ὡς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον τοῦ ὁμίλου, ἔλεγε τοιάδε.

XXXV. "Οἱ μὲν πολλοὶ τῶν ἐνθάδε εἰρηκότων ἤδη ἐπαινοῦσι τὸν

ᾑρημένος ὑπὸ τῆς πόλεως] 'chosen by the state,' meaning, as appears from passages of Plato, Menex., and Aristid., by the senate in the name of the people. See Weber ap. Pop. and Schoemann de Com. Ath. 307. In δοκῇ μὴ ἀξύνετος there is a not unfrequent meiosis. And γνώμη has here its primitive signification, judgment, meaning the faculty thereof. Of δοκῇ, the sense is, 'have the reputation of.' The whole is equivalent to συνετὸς δοκῶν εἶναι καὶ σώφρων, supra i. 79. Ἀξιώσει I have edited with Pop. and Goell., instead of the vulg. ἀξιώματι, which is retained by Bekk., though manifestly a gloss, or the correction of some sciolist; this use of ἀξίωσις, for ἀξίωμα, being confined to Thucyd., and the writers who have imitated him, as Dio Cass., Agathias, Dion. Hal., and Aristid., who use this very phrase, ἀξιώσει προήκειν, and also ἀξιώσει προέχειν, which is, indeed, far more frequent; though προήκειν, however rare, is found not only in this passage, but in several imitated from it, as Dio Cass. and Agath., nay, also, in Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 12, χρήμασι προήκων. And such is the use of anteire in Latin; as in a passage of Cæsar, where we have operibus anteire. Also, of antevenio, 'to surpass, or be surpassing,' as Tacit. Ann. iv. 18, beneficia — ubi antevenere. Indeed, the one is a stronger term than the other, similarly as our surpass is stronger than excel. Of which an example presents itself in a passage of Milton's Parad. Lost, Bk. iv. 32, 'O thou that with surpassing glory crown'd,' &c.

λέγει ἐπ' αὐτοῖς ἔπαινον τὸν πρέπ.] Meaning, a panegyric on the merits of the deceased generally, not those of any individual in particular, which was on such occasions not usual. Thus, (observes Thirlwall,) 'as the public service was the occasion of the ceremony, so its chief end was the honour of the state; and, accordingly, the panegyric bestowed was so turned as to exalt the glory of the country which had given birth to such brave men, and had stimulated their valour by numberless examples of ancient heroism.'

8. διὰ παντὸς τοῦ πολέμου] Ita ii humati sunt, qui Sphacteria expugnata, — qui apud Delium — apud Amphipolim cum Cleone — qui in Sicilia — in Hellesponto — ad Arginusas et in bello civili perierant. Circa annum 400 autem, vix prius, solennia in defunctorum memoriam quotannis celebrari cœpta esse, vel ideo suspicari licet, quod bellum Peloponnesiacum, ut sæpius justa funebria facerent, postulabat. (Weber.)

9. ἐπειδὴ καιρὸς ἐλάμβανε] Bekk., on the authority of a few MSS., has altered the vulg. καιρὸς to καιρὸν, but on insufficient grounds; for, as Hermann ap. Pop. observes, the sense intended is not, 'when he got an opportunity for speaking, (as if it were desirable to do so,) but when the occasion came [upon him],' i. e. as Arn. explains, 'when the speech was to be spoken, whether he liked it or not.' Moreover, the reading καιρὸς is strongly confirmed by a passage, closely imitated from the present, in Dio Cass. 393, 21, ἐπεί τε ὁ καιρὸς ἐλάμβανε, (postquam vero tempus rei agendæ venit,) προσῆλθε, &c.

CH. XXXV. On this admirable composition,—the most celebrated of the speeches of Pericles, and almost unrivalled in the severe style of the early and best ages of Greek oratory,—see the Prolegomena of Poppo, who treats at large on all the topics connected with it. There is every reason to suppose that Thucyd. has given us the substance of the speech with the greatest fidelity. And he has clothed the noblest thoughts in diction not unworthy of one, the greatest orator and statesman the world ever saw; in diction, however, quite Thucydidean. As to the comparative excellence of this προσθέντα τῷ νόμῳ τὸν λόγον τόνδε, ὡς καλὸν ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐκ τῶν πολέμων θαπτομένοις ἀγορεύεσθαι αὐτόν. 2. ἐμοὶ δ' ἀρκοῦν ἂν ἐδόκει εἶναι ἀνδρῶν ἀγαθῶν ἔργῳ γενομένων ἔργῳ καὶ δηλοῦσθαι τὰς τιμάς, (οἷα καὶ νῦν περὶ τὸν τάφον τόνδε δημοσίᾳ παρασκευασθέντα ὁρᾶτε,) καὶ μὴ ἐν ἑνὶ ἀνδρὶ πολλῶν ἀρετὰς κινδυνεύεσθαι, εὖ τε καὶ with the only two other funeral orations that can be classed with it,—those of Lysias and of Plato,—I would say in the words of Synes. p. 37, D, ἑκατέρα θατέρας παρὰ πολὺ καλλίων ἐστὶ, τοῖς οἰκείοις κανόσι κρινομένη. Indeed, they differ from each other, and therefore as little bear comparison with each other as the cathedrals of York and of Lincoln with Salisbury. Moreover, I quite agree with Mr. Thirlwall, that 'Lysias's oration as far surpasses Plato's, as Plato's does the declamation ascribed to Demosthenes.' Finally, what adds to the value of the present speech, — without reference to its surpassing merit as a composition,— is, as observes Thirlwall, that 'among the topics it embraces, there are some which belong to history, as much as any part of the historian's narrative. The mythical glories of Athens (continues he) were slightly touched upon; what she then was, and had become, through the exertions of the existing generation, furnished a far more interesting subject. The orator does not even dwell much on the martial achievements by which she had been raised to such a pitch of greatness: he thinks it more important to observe the institutions, the manners, the national character, which were the true foundation of her power. These, he then shows, were the advantages which entitled Athens to be called the school of Greece, which enabled an Athenian to adapt himself readily to new circumstances, and to execute whatever he undertook with peculiar ease and grace,— which had opened the most distant countries to the Athenian arms, had erected a mighty empire, and ensured an immortal renown, which made the country worthy of all the sacrifices that her sons could offer to her.'

1. οἱ μὲν πολλοὶ τῶν ἐνθάδε] The commencement of this oration has been imitated by Choricius, in a funeral oration in Villois. Anecd. ii. 21, and Aristid. in his oration περὶ ὁμονοίας, t. ii. p. 297.

τὸν προσθέντα τῷ νόμῳ τὸν λόγον τόνδε] Meaning, 'who superadded [to the other observances enjoined by law on this occasion] the oration.' The phrase, προσθέντα τῷ νόμῳ τὸν λόγον τόνδε, is strange, but is defended by the passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. v. 17, ὁψέ ποτε Ἀθηναῖοι προσέθεσαν τὸν ἐπιτάφιον ἔπαινον τῷ νόμῳ, cited by Hudson, and Herodot. ii. 136, προστεθῆναι δὲ ἔτι τούτῳ τῷ νόμῳ τόνδε.

ὡς καλὸν — ἀγορεύεσθαι αὐτὸν] A somewhat anomalous construction. It has some affinity to that of the accus. with the infin. after ὡς or other particles. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 537. But, in fact, καλὸν —αὐτὸν are, with the subaudition of ὄντα, accusatives absolute, accompanied by ὡς or some other particle. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 568, 3. And though there all the examples have the participle expressed, yet it is sometimes understood, as infra viii. 63, καίπερ ἐπαναστάντες αὐτοὶ ἀλλήλοις, ἵνα μὴ ὀλιγαρχῶνται.

ἐκ τῶν πολ. θαπτομένοις] In θαπτ. there is a significatio prægnans, namely, the being 'removed from the field of battle, and brought hither.'

2. ἐμοὶ δ' ἀρκοῦν, &c.] The substance of what is here said, to the end of the chap., is well expressed by Arn., as follows:—'Although, in his own judgment, all words in honour of the dead might well have been forborne; for, either through the fault of the speaker, or the partiality or jealousy of the hearers, it would be hard for any speech, on such an occasion, to give satisfaction; yet still, as the law has so willed it, he will endeavour to satisfy its call.'

καὶ μὴ ἐν ἑνὶ ἀνδρὶ πολλῶν ἀρετὰς κινδυνεύεσθαι] Whatever doubt may exist as to the construction of these words, one thing is certain, that the ἐν,—though not found in several MSS.,—cannot be dispensed with. Its genuineness is, indeed, strongly confirmed by several imitations, or, at least, parallel expressions, which have been adduced by Pop. and myself, from various writers. But, to advert to the construction in πιστευθῆναι, it is best, with Haack and Pop., to regard this as forming, together with the preceding words, εὖ τε καὶ χεῖρον εἰπόντι, a sort of explanation of the idea contained in κινδυνεύεσθαι, by which κινδυν. will have to be taken twice in thought, being repeated with the words εὖ τε καὶ χεῖρον εἰπόντι, καὶ κινδυνεύεσθαι ἐν ἑνὶ ἀνδρὶ πολλῶν

χεῖρον εἰπόντι, πιστευθῆναι. 3. χαλεπὸν γὰρ τὸ μετρίως εἰπεῖν, ἐν ᾧ μόλις καὶ ἡ δόκησις τῆς ἀληθείας βεβαιοῦται. 4. ὅ τε γὰρ ξυνειδὼς καὶ εὔνους ἀκροατὴς τάχ' ἄν τι ἐνδεεστέρως, πρὸς ἃ βούλεταί τε καὶ ἐπίσταται, νομίσειε δηλοῦσθαι· ὅ τε ἄπειρος ἔστιν ἃ καὶ πλεονάζεσθαι, διὰ φθόνον, εἴ τι ὑπὲρ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ φύσιν ἀκούοι. 5. μέχρι γὰρ τοῦδε ἀνεκτοὶ οἱ ἔπαινοί εἰσι περὶ ἑτέρων λεγόμενοι, ἐς ὅσον ἂν καὶ αὐτὸς ἕκαστος οἴηται ἱκανὸς εἶναι δρᾶσαί τι ὧν ἤκουσε· ἀρετὰς, κινδυνεύεσθαι πιστευθῆναι εὖ, &c., 'to run a hazard, by having been entrusted to [him] who has spoken well or ill,' equiv. to, 'alike when he has spoken ill or when well,' &c. Similarly in Joseph. Ant. vi. 13, 4, we have, καὶ λόγος μὲν ἐπ' ἀμφότερα πέφυκεν ἀληθής τε καὶ ψευδὴς, τὰ δ' ἔργα γυμνὴν ὑπ' ὄψει τὴν διάνοιαν τίθησι, where, for ὑπ' ὄψει, read ἐπ' ὄψει, from several of the best MSS., confirmed by a similar expression in Heb. iv. 13, γυμνὰ—τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτοῦ, as also by some passages of Thucyd. which might be adduced. By ἀρετὰς we are to understand, not the actions themselves, but the merits, or fame thereof, as in iii. 53.

3. χαλεπὸν γὰρ—βεβαιοῦται] These words are meant to give a reason why, and how it is, that an orator, who wishes to do his best, and to satisfy his hearers, may speak κακῶς,—and that is, 'because it is difficult to speak on a subject where even manifest truth is hard to be established to the conviction of the hearers.' Μετρίως is, as the Schol. and Phot. explain, equivalent to συμμέτρως, ἀξίως. Ἐν ᾧ, 'in ea re, in qua.' Ἡ δόκησις τῆς ἀληθείας, 'the firm opinion, or well-grounded persuasion, of truth, (i. e. that we speak,) is hardly sustained.' So infra iii. 43, we have τῆς οὐ βεβαίου δυκήσεως τῶν κερδῶν, meaning, 'your ungrounded opinion or persuasion that we are bribed.'

4. In this section, a reason is adduced, why it is hard to impress one's hearers with a persuasion of the truth of what is said. 'For the auditor, who is alike well acquainted with the facts, and well affected to the persons commemorated, may, perhaps, think something treated of in a manner short of what he wishes [had been done] and knows [to be the truth].'

ἐνδεεστέρως πρὸς, &c.] 'short in comparison of,' &c. At ὅ τε ἄπειρος, the Schol. and Goell. supply καὶ μὴ εὔνους, from the preceding: a subaudition at once inadmissible and unnecessary; for here the ἄπειρος ἀκροατὴς is supposed to be neither well nor ill affected, but indifferent; though, through envy, he may think something to be exaggerated, if he hears of any thing beyond the reach of his own natural powers, or capacity for action: for such is the import here of the term φύσις, as in Pind. Nem. vi. 9, προσφέρομέν τι ἀθανάτοις, ἢ μέγαν νόον, ἤ τοι φύσιν. In evident imitation of the present passage, Dr. Bates's (Works, iv. 324.) Funeral Serm. on R. Baxter, says:—'In speaking of him I shall be under a double disadvantage; for those who perfectly knew him, will be apt to think my account of him to fall short and be defective (ἐνδεεστέρως ὀηλοῦσθαι); others, who were unacquainted with (οἱ ἄπειροι) his extraordinary worth, will, from ignorance or envy, be inclined to think his just praises to be excessive (πλευνάζεσθαι).'

5. μέχρι γὰρ τοῦδε—ἀπιστοῦσιν] The only difficulty that here exists, is in the αὐτῶν of this second clause, τῷ δὲ ὑπερβάλλοντι αὐτῶν φθονοῦντες, ἤδη καὶ ἀπιστοῦσιν. This may be taken either in the neuter or in the masculine. If the former, we may best explain it, (as it is done by Pop.) with reference to the preceding words, ἃ ἂν ἕκαστος οἴηται ἱκανὸς εἶναι δρᾶσαι, 'which goes beyond what each may think himself able to accomplish;' a view strongly confirmed by Sallust Catil. 3, Arduum videtur, res gestas scribere; primum quod facta dictis sunt exæquanda, dehinc quia pleraque, quæ delicta reprehenderis, malivolentia et invidia dicta putant: ubi de magna virtute et gloria bonorum memores, quæ sibi quisque facilia factu putat, æquo animo accipit; supra ea, veluti ficta pro falsis ducit. Adopting the latter view, (with Pop.) the meaning will be, 'supra ipsos,' i. e. above their own powers. To which purpose we may cite the words of Rochefouc. Max. 376. 'Les esprits médiocres condamnent d'ordinaire tout ce qui passe leur portée,' possibly written with a view to the present. And so another celebrated writer observes, 'Men do not easily allow that existence of any virtue of which they perceive no traces in their own minds.' In this manner, too, the word was evidently understood by Dio Cass., in a passage imitated from this of our author: πᾶς παντὶ τῷ ὑπερέχοντι (scil. αὐτοῦ) φθονῶν, ἑτοιμότερον ἀπιστεῖ τοῖς ὑπὲρ ἑαυτῶν λεγομένοις, where ἑαυτῶν (misunderstood by Fabricius) means 'supra seipsos,' 'above their capacity [to do]:' and the πᾶς stands for πᾶς τις, as in Herodot. vii. 197. Moreover, ἑαυτῶν is accommodated rather to the sense, (namely, all persons,) than to the grammatical case; the plural being there adopted on account of such being found in the passage of our author there imitated. Hence I have ventured in the present passage to edit αὐτῶν, which Dio Cass. must have had in his copy; as also had Agathias, p. 67, (edit. Plant. 1593,) in a passage imitated from the present: πεφύκαμεν γὰρ ἅπαντες τὰ μὲν καθ' αὑτοὺς, (meaning, proportionate to our own powers,) φίλα ἡγεῖσθαι καὶ καλλιστα, ἀλεείνειν δὲ καὶ ἐκτρέπεσθαι τὸ ὑπερβάλλον. Finally, hence is illustrated the obscure expression in Tacit. Agric. 1, ignorantiam recti ac invidiam. Accordingly, the ἤδη here is to be taken, not with φθον., but with ἀπιστοῦσιν, it being meant, that 'they even now, already, disbelieve.' So, in a passage of St. Matth. iii. 10, we have ἤδη δὲ ἡ ἀξίνη πρὸς τὴν ῥίζαν τῶν δένδρων κεῖται.

τῷ δὲ ὑπερβάλλοντι αὐτῶν φθονοῦντες, ἤδη καὶ ἀπιστοῦσιν. 6. ἐπειδὴ δὲ τοῖς πάλαι οὕτως ἐδοκιμάσθη ταῦτα καλῶς ἔχειν, χρὴ καὶ ἐμὲ, ἑπόμενον τῷ νόμῳ, πειρᾶσθαι ὑμῶν τῆς ἑκάστου βουλήσεώς τε καὶ δόξης τυχεῖν ὡς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον. Ἄρξομαι δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν προγόνων πρῶτον· δίκαιον γὰρ αὐτοῖς, καὶ πρέπον δὲ ἅμα, ἐν τῷ τοιῷδε τὴν τιμὴν ταύτην τῆς μνήμης δίδοσθαι· τὴν γὰρ χώραν ἀεὶ οἱ αὐτοὶ οἰκοῦντες, διαδοχῇ τῶν ἐπιγιγνομένων μέχρι τοῦδε ἐλευθέραν δι' ἀρετὴν παρέδοσαν. 2. καὶ ἐκεῖνοί τε ἄξιοι ἐπαίνου, καὶ ἔτι

6. χρὴ καὶ ἐμὲ—τυχεῖν] 'I must endeavour, as far as possible, to satisfy the wishes, and meet the judgment or opinion of each one of you.' Βουλήσεως here, as the Schol. points out, has reference to the wish of the εὔνους before spoken of § 4. (ὁ εὔνους ἀκροατὴς—πρὸς ἃ βούλεται); and δόξης to the ἄπειρος there, as denoting the judgment they have formed of the deceased, in the due hitting of which (δόξης τυχεῖν) is implied their crediting the truth of what is said. In ὡς ἐπὶ πλεῖστον, we have adverted to the difficulty of this, since, as the Schol. remarks, οὐ δυνατὸν πᾶσιν ὁμοίως ἀρέσκοντα λέγειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ μέσως πως, ἵνα μήτε φθόνον μήτε ψεῦδος δόξῃ λέγειν, where φθόνον stands for φθονερὸν, i. e. ἐπιλήψιμον, 'reprehensive or carping.'

CH. XXXVI. In this chap. the speaker briefly notices their ancestors, and their own immediate fathers, the founders of their empire, in whose path their sons have worthily followed. Yet he will not repeat now the well-known tale of their victories in war, but will rather develope those internal principles of their polity, to which their greatness alike in peace and war was to be ascribed. (Arnold.)

καὶ πρέπον δὲ ἅμα] 'and fitting, too, withal.' Τὴν τιμὴν ταύτην τῆς μνήμης, 'this honour of mention,' lit. the being so mentioned. Of the words following, τὴν γὰρ χώραν ἀεὶ οἱ αὐτοὶ οἰκοῦντες, the sense is, 'by having uninterruptedly and always by the same race,' &c. (comp. supra i. 21.) though there was a foreign admixture, Attica being (as we find from i. 2) the chief point of colonisation.

διαδοχῇ τῶν ἐπιγιγνομένων] These words may be construed either with the preceding οἰκοῦντες, (as they are done by Goell.) and so considered as explanatory of what is meant by οἱ αὐτοὶ οἰκοῦντες: q. d. 'not literally the same persons, but the same by a constant succession of posterity, one after another:' or they may be taken (as they are by Pop.) with the following verb παρέδοσαν, 'handed it down by a succession of generations, (each receiving it from and handing it to,) up to the present time, free through their valour:' a view, this, preferable, as yielding the most natural and suitable sense. Moreover, had the former construction been intended, the words μέχρι τοῦδε would have been unnecessary; while, according to the latter, it has great significancy, as completing the idea. Again, the ἀεὶ οἱ αὐτοὶ οἰκοῦντες was sufficient to suggest all that was meant,—namely, that constant topic of flattery to the orators addressing the Athenians, that they were αὐτόχθονες, μᾶλλον οἱ πατέρες ἡμῶν· κτησάμενοι γὰρ, πρὸς οἷς ἐδέξαντο, ὅσην ἔχομεν ἀρχὴν, οὐκ ἀπόνως, ἡμῖν τοῖς νῦν προσκατέλιπον. 3. τὰ δὲ πλείω αὐτῆς αὐτοὶ ἡμεῖς οἵδε, οἱ νῦν ἔτι ὄντες μάλιστα ἐν τῇ καθεστηκυίᾳ ἡλικίᾳ, ἐπηυξήσαμεν, καὶ τὴν πόλιν τοῖς πᾶσι παρεσκευάσαμεν καὶ ἐς πόλεμον καὶ ἐς εἰρήνην αὐταρκεστάτην. 4. ὧν ἐγὼ τὰ μὲν κατὰ πολέμους ἔργα, οἷς ἕκαστα ἐκτήθη, ἢ εἴ τι αὐτοὶ ἢ οἱ πατέρες ἡμῶν βάρβαρον ἢ Ἕλληνα πόλεμον ἐπιόντα προθύμως ἠμυνάμεθα, μακρηγορεῖν ἐν εἰδόσιν οὐ βουλόμενος, ἐάσω· ἀπὸ δὲ οἵας τε ἐπιτηδεύσεως ἤλθομεν ἐπ' αὐτὰ, καὶ μεθ' οἵας πολιτείας καὶ τρόπων ἐξ οἵων μεγάλα ἐγένετο, ταῦτα δηλώσας πρῶτον, εἶμι καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν τῶνδε ἔπαινον, νομίζων ἐπί τε τῷ παρόντι οὐκ ἂν ἀπρεπῆ οἱ νῦν—ἡλικίᾳ] 'such of us especially as are yet in the maturity of our age.' Ἡλικίᾳ does not signify youth, as Goell. explains, but simply age, time of life, as i. 80: and in both passages it requires some other words in the context to determine the sense as here; καθεστηκυίᾳ, which signifies settled, stayed, denoting, as applied to age, that middle period of maturity when the body has attained its full strength; what Florus calls robusta maturitas: and such formerly was the use of our word stayed. So in Spenser we have, 'of riper years and stronger stay.' Αὐταρκεστάτην, i. e. 'furnished with full resources for its independent well-being.' Imitated from the present is a passage of Agath. iii. 9, τοῖς πᾶσιν ἓς τε πόλεμον καὶ εἰρήνην αὐταρκεστάτην.

&c.: and indeed such they are styled by Lysias, Epitaph. § 17, and Plato, Menex. ch. 6; as also Aristoph. Vesp. 1076, ἐσμὲν ἡμεῖς Ἀττικοὶ, μόνοι δικαίως εὐγενεῖς αὐτόχθονες. Compare also Isocr. Paneg. p. 58, Lang., and Eurip. Erecth. frag. i. 5—10. Pericles, however, contents himself with using the more modest expression οἱ αὐτοὶ ἀεὶ οἰκοῦντες, though even that is not made prominent, but kept in subservience to the nobler sentiment of 'their ancestors having kept and handed the country down to the present time, free by their valour.'

3. αὐτοὶ ἡμεῖς οἵδε] There is here a blending of two phrases, 'we ourselves, and those persons who are here present:' an idiom of which Dukas adduces another example from Synes. de Regno, who borrowed it, he thinks, from Hom. Od. xxi. 207, ἔνδον μὲν δὴ ὅδ' αὐτὸς ἐγώ: and he regards it as a highly emphatic expression.

4. βάρβαρον — ἠμυνάμεθα] 'have repelled impending war, barbarian or Greek.' The phrase πόλεμον ἐπιόντα ἠμυνάμεθα is one of almost lyric boldness. Hence numerous conjectures have been hazarded, alike inadmissible; and of the many parallel passages adduced by the commentators, not one is apposite, all being without ἀμύνασθαι. More to the purpose are the following, from Plutarch, Camill. 23, πόλεμον ἀλλόφυλον ἀπώσασθαι: Liban. Or. 724, C, πόλεμον ἐπιόντα ἀποκρούσασθαι: passages evidently imitated from the present, and sufficient to confirm and justify the common reading here; though the expression itself may seem harsh: and the harshness is increased by the substantives βάρβαρον and Ἕλλ. being used as adjectives. See the notes of Poppo and Goell., from which it appears that βάρβαρος for βαρβαρικὸς is not very unfrequent, and Ἕλλὰς as an adject. with subst. feminine is pretty common; while Ἕλλην as a masc. adj. is so rare, that no example of it has been found. Poppo and Goell., however, adduce the similar expression Σκύθης οἶμος from Æschyl. Prom. 2.

μακρηγορεῖν ἐν εἰδόσιν] The expression recurs at iv. 59: and of the phrase λέγειν ἐν εἰδόσι, frequent examples occur in Dionys. Hal. Here, however, ὑμῖν is to be supplied, which is expressed in a passage, evidently imitated from the present, of Hdian. v. 1, 3, ἐν εἰδόσι μὲν ὑμῖν—περιττὸν νομίζω μακρηγορεῖν. By ἐπιτηδεύσεως, a little after, is meant, as Poppo explains, 'totam vitæ rationem (rather institutionem), quæ efficit et moderatur singula ἐπιτηδεύματα,' i. e. chiefly as regards education and training for the duties of life. The word is occasionally used by Plato, and often by Dio Cass., chiefly in the sense of education or training, as opposed to nature. Finally, at αὐτὰ and μεγάλα understand πράγματα, with an implied sense of ἀρχή.

λεχθῆναι αὐτὰ, καὶ τὸν πάντα ὅμιλον καὶ ἀστῶν καὶ ξένων ξύμφορον εἶναι αὐτῶν ἐπακοῦσαι. XXXVII. Χρώμεθα γὰρ πολιτείᾳ οὐ ζηλούσῃ τοὺς τῶν πέλας νόμους, παράδειγμα δὲ μᾶλλον αὐτοὶ ὄντες τινὶ, ἢ μιμούμενοι ἑτέρους. καὶ ὄνομα μὲν, διὰ τὸ μὴ ἐς ὀλίγους ἀλλ' ἐς πλείονας οἰκεῖν, δημοκρατία κέκληται· μέτεστι δὲ, κατὰ καὶ τὸν πάντα ὅμιλον—ἐπακοῦσαι] The construction is, καὶ ξύμφορον εἶναι τὸν πάντα ὅμιλον—ἐπακοῦσαι. In the words following, the αὐτῶν is, as Heilm., Kistem., and Poppo point out, meant to include the μέτοικοι: and by ξένων are denoted foreigners resident at Athens, and forming part of its population, insomuch that they were obliged to serve in the levy en masse. So infra iv. 90, ἀναστήσας πανδημεὶ αὐτοὺς καὶ τοὺς μετοίκους, καὶ ξένων ὅσοι παρῆσαν: and 94, πανστρατιᾶς ξένων τῶν παρόντων καὶ ἀστῶν γενομένης. Hence in a passage of Acts xvii. 21, (where the interpretation is alike disputed,) Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ πάντες καὶ οἱ ἐπιδημοῦντες ξένοι, I have no doubt that by the expression οἱ ἐπιδ. ξένοι are meant solely strangers resident at Athens, either temporarily or permanently, but without any portion of citizenship; and that the μέτοικοι are not here included, who in a distribution of this kind, consisting of ἀστοὶ and ξένοι, are always reckoned to the ἀστοί: whereas the μέτοικοι are never called ξένοι, or reckoned with them. Moreover, the very term ἐπιδημοῦντες, there associated with ξένοι, determines it to mean 'strange residents' alone. Of this expression, ἐπιδημοῦντες ξένοι, an example elsewhere is found in Xen. Mem. i. 2, 61, Λίχας τοὺς ἐπιδημοῦντας ἐν Λακεδαίμονι ξένους ἐδείπνιζε. Theophr. Char. 8, καὶ ὡς πολλοὶ ἐπιδημοῦσι ξένοι. Lysias in Eratoth. 30, ὅσοι δὲ ξένοι ἐπιδημοῦσιν εἴσονται. Pausan. Lacon. 22, ἐφόνευσε τοὺς ἐπιδημοῦντας τῶν ξένων. Plato, 845, A, ξένος ἐπιδημήσας: and 342, C. Now the μέτοικοι could never be called ξένοι, nor be included among the ξένοι, because they had a sort of half-citizenship, while the ξένοι had none. So Eustath. Il. ι, p. 692, 32, says, ἡ Ἀττικὴ πολιτεία δηλοῖ ἐν ᾗ ξένοι μὲν τὸ μηδὲν σχεδὸν ἦσαν πολιτογραφόμενοι δὲ (meaning the μέτοικοι) ὅμως τῶν ἰθαγενῶν ἐδευτέρευον.

CH. XXXVII. 1. αὐτοὶ ὄντες] Supply ἡμεῖς. An instance of nom. absol. with a participle preceded by a particle, as if the particip. were a verb: of which use (rare and unnoticed in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 562) examples occur in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 454, 31, and Eurip. Æol. frag. 20, in both cases accompanied by γάρ. It is better so to consider the words, than, as Osiander and Klein propose, to resolve the participles into verbs. True it is, that verbs would have been more correct; but as it is, the nominatives absolute, ἡμεῖς ὄντες, are equivalent to ἡμεῖς ἐσμεν, though containing a less direct assertion, in order to avoid what might seem to savour of arrogance; παράδειγμα here having the sense model. Closely imitated from the present, is a passage of Aristid. ii. 76, C, ἀλλὰ [προσήκει] αὐτοὺς μᾶλλον παράδειγμα τοῖς ἄλλοις: and similarly in Lycurg. contr. Leocr. p. 158, 17, we have, τοῦτο γὰρ ἔχει μέγιστον ἡ πόλις ὑμῶν ἀγαθὸν, ὅτι τῶν καλῶν ἔργων παράδειγμα τοῖς Ἕλλησιν γέγονεν.

The speaker then proceeds to touch on this polity, by adverting to its principles, (and on what is said, the reader may with advantage consult a most able sketch on the same subject in Aristid. vol. i. 366, seqq.) namely, as a constitution which, while it placed all the citizens on an equal footing in the sight of the laws, recognised no privilege of birth or wealth, admitted no distinctions but those of capacity and merit in the service of the state.

καὶ ὄνομα μὲν—κέκληται] The reading here is not a little disputed. For οἰκεῖν a few inferior MSS. have ἥκειν, which was edited by Gottl.; while Pop., Bekk., Ha., and Goell. have restored the old reading; and very properly, I think; for the other, however specious, is liable to much objection, and arose either from a marginal scholium, or from critical conjecture. In short, internal evidence is quite against it, and external nearly so; the authority of three of the MSS. being next to nothing. In vain is it to plead for it the authority of the Cod. Clarend.; for on carefully examining it here, in the course of collation, I found that ἥκειν had been altered from οἰκεῖν, though so skilfully, as to have eluded the observation of both Hudson and Arn. In the Cod. Mosq. is ἡκεῖν,—probably from the οἱ in the original having been altered to an ἡ, and the circumflex accent inadvertently left. Retaining, then, as we ought, the reading οἰκεῖν, the question is, how may the difficulty be best obviated? In order to ascertain this point, it may be best to examine the words in detail. First, ὄνομα μὲν must mean 'in name indeed,' as standing for κατ' ὄνομα: verbs of calling, both in the active and passive, being not unfrequently accompanied by ὄνομα in addition to their own case. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 420, 2, b. Thus far the sense will be, 'And in name indeed it (i. e. the polity) is styled democracy.' The words διὰ τὸ μὴ ἐς ὀλίγους ἀλλ' ἐς πλείονας οἰκεῖν are doubtless intended to give the reason why; but the exact sense they are meant to express is not so clear as to admit of being placed beyond dispute. Steph., Gail, Goell. 1st edit., and Arn. take the import of the words to be, 'by reason of the government being administered not for the benefit of the few, but of the many,' &c. But to this view Poppo objects, that no proof has been adduced of such a sense of ἐς, to signify 'for the benefit of.' And, with Goell. 2nd edit., he lays down the sense thus: 'quia non ad paucos, sed ad plures redacto imperio civitas gubernatur;' thus supposing here a condensed form of speaking, which, expressed at full length, would stand thus « ἡ πόλις οὐκ ἐς ὀλίγους κατεχομένη, ἀλλ' ἐς πλείονας ἥκουσα οἰκεῖ, (for οἰκεῖται, i. e. διοικεῖται, as often,) 'by reason of the government not being confined to the few, but extended to the many.' And this sense they confirm and illustrate from the following parallel passages: infra viii. 53, εἰ μὴ πολιτεύσομέν τε σωφρονέστερον καὶ ἐς ὀλίγους μᾶλλον: viii. 38, καὶ τῆς ἄλλης πόλεως κατ' ἀνάγκην ἐς ὀλίγον κατεχομένης: v. 81, ἐς ὀλίγους κατέστησαν τὰ τῶν Σικ.: and viii. 89 and 97. Yet, notwithstanding a certain support which this latter interpretation derives from the passages above adduced, it is, from the somewhat of violence (by resolution, &c) which is required in order to extract the sense in question, far less admissible than the former. As to the objection to that interpretation, on the score of no example having been adduced of ἐς in the sense 'for the benefit of,' that may easily be disposed of: for as ἐς is perpetually employed to mark the purpose, aim, or scope of any action, so it may very well signify 'for the purpose of,' 'for the sake of,' as often in the N. T. with an accus. of thing, (see my Lex. N. T.) and sometimes of person. So 1 Cor. viii. 6, καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς αὐτὸν, 'for him,' i. e. for his honour and glory. Luke vii. 30, τὴν βουλὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς ἑαυτούς: or as ἐς continually denotes object or relation, thus it may mean, as often in N. T., 'on account of.' Now if a state is said οἰκεῖσθαι or διοικεῖσθαι ἐς τινας, with a reference to those persons, if the government were administered on their account, and with respect to them as the end and aim of the whole, what is that but saying that it is carried on for their benefit? Nor is there any thing in the passage above cited that forbids this interpretation; for all of them, except the first, are of another kind: and the first, viii. 53, may have the same sense as the present passage. After all, however, the latter sense seems required by the words of the context following, which being introduced by μέτεστι δὲ, must contain what is in some sense contrary to the ὄνομα μὲν, &c., namely, an indirect assertion that the constitution was in reality an aristocracy, agreeably to what is directly asserted by Plato in his Fun. Or. ch. 8, ἡ γὰρ αὐτὴ πολιτεία καὶ τοῦτο ἦν καὶ νῦν ἀριστοκρατία·—καλεῖ δὲ ὁ μὲν αὐτὴν δημοκρατίαν, ὁ δὲ ἄλλο ᾧ ἂν χαίρῃ: this, the Schol. observes, being said by way of checking the arrogance of the Lacedæmonians, who prided themselves on their aristocracy. Thus the next clause, μέτεστι δὲ—εὐδοκιμεῖ, may be rendered, as it is done by Goell., 'sed quanquam quod ad leges attinet, ad ea, quæ hominibus privatis agenda sunt, omnes æquabilitate fruuntur, tamen quod ad æstimationem attinet, ut quisque aliqua re excellit, ita,' &c.

μέτεστι] 'there is a participation,' as in Aristoph. Conc. 173, 522. By τὰ ἴδια διάφορα are denoted, as Poppo explains, 'omnino singulorum civium lites et contentiones, sive cum civitate, sive inter se, sive de fortunis sive de delictis.' Ἀπὸ μέρους, 'from an exclusive or privileged class, or caste,' i. e. as belonging to it: said with reference to the Lacedæmonians, among whom a certain privileged class of those nominally equal in rank, exercised the government. Of ἔν τῳ εὐδοκιμεῖ the sense is, 'is in estimation for any thing.' Ἐς τὰ κοινὰ προτιμᾶται, 'is preferred to the conduct of public affairs.'

οὐδ' αὖ κατὰ πενίαν—κεκώλυται] It is well remarked by Goell., that κατὰ πενίαν is, by a variation of phrase, equivalent to πενὴς μὲν ὤν, the sense being, 'Nor, again, on account of his poverty, (i. e. though he be poor,) if he be able to do the ἀγαθὸν δρᾶσαι τὴν πόλιν, ἀξιώματος ἀφανείᾳ κεκώλυται. 2. ἐλευθέρως δὲ τά τε πρὸς τὸ κοινὸν πολιτεύομεν καὶ ἐς τὴν πρὸς ἀλλήλους τῶν καθ' ἡμέραν ἐπιτηδευμάτων ὑποψίαν, οὐ δι' ὀργῆς τὸν πέλας, εἰ καθ' ἡδονήν τι δρᾷ, ἔχοντες, οὐδὲ ἀζημίους μὲν λυπηρὰς δὲ τῇ ὄψει ἀχθηδόνας προστιθέμενοι. 3. ἀνεπαχθῶς δὲ τὰ ἴδια προσομιλοῦντες, τὰ δημόσια διὰ δέος μάλιστα οὐ παρανομοῦμεν, τῶν τε state service, is he excluded,' &c. So in Plato, Menex. p. 283, we have, οὔτε ἀσθενείᾳ, οὔτε πενίᾳ, οὐδ' ἀγνωσίᾳ πατέρων ἀπελήλαται οὐδείς, οὐδὲ τοῖς ἐναντίοις τετίμηται, ὥσπερ ἐν ἄλλαις πόλεσιν. The term ἀξίωμα is here to be taken in its most extensive sense, of 'condition in life,' as regards fortune and rank.

2. Here the speaker adverts to that liberality of spirit at Athens, which was in strong contrast to the intolerance and interfering spirit of the Lacedæmonians, which required that every one's manners and habits should be formed after its own model; that carping censoriousness and judging for the worse, which makes no allowance for the frailties of others, but would sit in self-constituted judgment over them.

καὶ ἐς τὴν—ὑποψίαν] In laying down the sense of these words, it is essential to attend to the construction. To supply, as Arn. does, διαιτώμεθα from the context, is quite inadmissible, and indeed unnecessary, since ἐλευθέρως πολιτεύομεν, a little before, must here be repeated; only it is proper to take πολιτ. in a modified sense of 'conducting oneself in private life,' by a use of πολιτεύειν like that of πολιτεύεσθαι in the later Greek writers and the New Testament. Καθ' ἡμέραν has together with the sense daily, that of private, as opposed to κοινόν. Render, 'and also [we carry ourselves liberally] as to jealousy one of another concerning our every-day (i. e. private) habits and pursuits.' The next words, οὐ δι' ὀργῆς—προστιθέμενοι, are meant to further develope the idea contained in the preceding; meaning, (in the words of Thirlw.) that 'there is a freedom in private life from all unnecessary restraints on the tastes and pursuits of individuals, which are viewed without jealousy.' Render, 'not feeling angry with our neighbour should he please himself, (i. e. for pleasing himself,) nor clouding our own countenance with the scowls of censoriousness, which pain though they cannot harm;' the construction being, οὐδὲ προστιθέμενοι τῇ ὄψει ἀχθηδόνας ἀζημίους μὲν λυπηρὰς δέ: literally, 'nor putting on,' i. e. 'casting over our countenance looks of offence or morosity, which pain though they do not injure:' for τῇ ὄψει is to be joined with προστιθ. ἀχθηδόνας (not λυπηρὰς), which surely makes a better sense as well as construction, and is confirmed by ἀχθ. being in the plural, of which I know no other example; and which seems to have reference to the eyes and looks. Λυπηρὸς is taken in an absolute sense, for irksome, troublesome; of which I have given many examples in Transl.

3. ἀνεπαχθῶς δὲ τὰ ἴδια προσομιλοῦντες] 'mixing together in our private intercourse without moroseness.' Sub. κατά. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Jos. Ant. xviii. 7, 8, δεξιότητι τοῦ ὁμιλεῖν ἀνεπαχθὴς ὤν: and xviii. 6, 8, ἀνεπ. ὡμίλησε τοῖς ἀνθρώποις: and to this purpose are the words of Æschyl. Eum. 910, (of the Athenians,) στέργω τὸ—ἀπένθητον γένος, 'I like this light-hearted race of people.' By the words following, διὰ δέος οὐ παρανομοῦμεν, &c., it is meant, that 'this freedom from unnecessary restraint does not run into license, but is tempered by a due respect for the authority of the laws and their administrators; nay, even of the unwritten law, consisting in the principles of justice and honour.' Of διὰ δέος the sense is, 'through fear of offending [against the laws and magistrates].' Παρανομεῖν has here its primitive sense, to transgress the law. In making the principle of fear in producing obedience thus prominent, the speaker here does no more than what is borne out by the example of the greatest Athenian philosophers. So in Soph. Aj. 1073, seqq. (cited by Gail) we have this similar sentiment: Οὐ γάρ ποτ' οὔτ' ἂν ἐν πόλει νόμοι καλῶς Φέροιντ' ἄν, ἔνθα μὴ καθέστηκεν δέος· Οὔτ' ἂν στρατός γε σωφρόνως ἄρχοιτ' ἔτι, Μηδὲν φόβου πρόβλημα μηδ' αἰδοῦς ἔχων. Ἀλλ' ἄνδρα χρὴ, κἂν σῶμα γεννήσῃ μέγα, Δοκεῖν πεσεῖν ἂν, κἂν ἀπὸ σμικροῦ κακοῦ. Δέος γὰρ ᾧ πρόσεστιν αἰσχύνη θ' ὁμοῦ, Σωτηρίαν ἔχοντα τόνδ' ἐπίστασο. Similar to this is the sentiment expressed in Ps. iv. 4, 'Stand in awe, and sin not.' Ἀκροάσει τῶν νόμων, i. e. by obedience to those who are for the time being in the exercise of office. At αὐτῶν ὅσοι the demonstr. pronoun is omitted, and αὐτῶν (ex iis) governed of μάλιστα, 'et ex iis maxime earum.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 469, 7. Ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ τῶν ἀδικουμένων, 'for the benefit (i. e. aid) of the aggrieved.' Κεῖνται, 'are enacted:' a vox sol. de hac re.

ὅσοι ἄγραφοι — φέρουσι] 'and such as, though unwritten, cast a confessed disgrace on the transgressors.' The Schol. well explains ἄγρ. νόμοι by τὰ ἔθη. Similar is the sentiment expressed in Demosth. de Cor. p. 317, φανήσεται ταῦτα πάντα οὐ μόνον ἐν τοῖς νόμοις, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ φύσις αὐτὴ τοῖς ἀγράφοις νομίμοις καὶ τοῖς ἀνθρωπίνοις ἤθεσι διώρικεν. See also Xen. Mem. iv. 4, 19, and Arist. Rhet. i. 14, 5. True is the remark of Rochefouc. Max. 469, 'La bienséance est le moindre de toutes les lois, et la plus suivie.'

Ch. XXXVIII. The speaker, still keeping up the same indirect allusion to the Lacedæmonians, and contrasting the state of things amongst them, here means to say that 'persons at Athens are not, as at Sparta, worked to death by constant toil, but have many recreations from labour provided for the wearied spirits; their life is humanized by a succession of public spectacles, which, while they honour the gods, enliven the aspect of the city, and diffuse a general cheerfulness.'

1. καὶ τῶν πόνων πλείστας ἀναπαύλας τῇ γνώμῃ ἐπορισάμεθα] 'furthermore, we provide for the mind the greatest number of recreations from labour.' Ἀνάπαυλα is an old Attic word used by the tragedians and Aristophanes for ἀνάπαυσις. So the phrase ἀνάπαυσις τῶν πόνων occurs in Aristid. i. 407; and ἀνάπαυλα τῶν πόνων in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 273: and similar is the expression in Eurip. Ion, 1604, ἀναψυχῆς πόνων, 'relief (lit. breathing-time) from labour.' Γνώμῃ is, as the Schol. says, for ψυχῇ.

θυσίαις διετησίοις] 'lasting throughout the year.' This was literally the case; for we find by the Schol. that there were sacrifices on every day of the year except one. See also Aristoph. Nub. 299—310. Here, however, by θυσίαι are to be understood (as Bauer explains) not so much the sacrifices themselves, as the feasts or holydays on which sacrifices were offered up, ending in festivities and recreations. An apt illustration of the present passage may be derived from the following graphic sketch in Dicæarch. Stat. Græc. p. 9, ἑορταὶ παντοδαπαὶ, ψυχῆς ἀπάται καὶ ἀναπαύσεις. φιλοσόφων παντοδαπῶν σχολαὶ πολλαί· θέαι συνεχεῖς.

ἰδίαις κατασκευαῖς εὐπρεπέσιν] Meaning, in a general way, all those private decorations of the city, which consist in houses handsomely embellished and furnished with fine pictures, statues, &c.: on which use of κατασκευὴ see notes on i. 10, and ii. 11. This view of the sense is confirmed and illustrated by a passage, evidently imitated from the present, in Aristid. i. 406, D, where, speaking of his favourite city, Smyrna, he says of her, Ἀεὶ δὲ, ὥσπερ εἰς πομπὴν ἐναύσιον κεκοσμημένη, ταῖς τε ἰδίαις καὶ ταῖς δημοσίαις κατασκευαῖς ὡραΐζεται, 'is decked out;' by an allusion to the idea of a woman splendidly dressed for some holiday, as in Revel. xviii. 16, ἡ πόλις ἡ μεγάλη, ἡ περιβεβλημένη βύσσινον — καὶ κεχρυσωμένη, &c. See also Herodian, ii. 7, 15.

2. Here the speaker intimates, that the means for maintaining this, as it were, festal hilarity and splendour are supplied by those various luxuries, which commerce drew from every part of the world to the port of Athens, the general emporium.

ἐπεισέρχεται] 'are imported.' Neut. for pass., as in the case of εἰσπλέω, ἥκω, and other verbs, when used of importing merchandise. Of course, somewhat of hyperbole exists in ἐκ πάσης γῆς τὰ πάντα, as in similar passages of Jos. Bell. iv. 10, 5, and Isocr. p. 63. See also Xen. de Ath. ii. 11, seqq. The most important passage, however, on this subject, is the following very curious one of Aristoph. Hor. frag. ap. Athen. p. 372, E, Ὄψει δὲ χειμῶνος μέσου σικύους, βότρυς, ὀπώραν, στεφάνους ἴων, κονιορτὸν ἐκτυφλοῦντα, καὶ ξυμβαίνει—ἀνθρώπων] 'And it is our lot to have a no less familiar enjoyment of the commodities of other countries than of our own.' By τὰ αὐτοῦ ἀγαθὰ γιγνόμενα, is meant 'bona quæ hic (i. e. in Attica) provenerunt;' in which sense αὐτοῦ occurs infra vi. 34, init. Comp. Plin. Paneg. 29.

Ch. XXXIX. From the above indirect contrast between the state of things in Athens and Lacedæmon, as to civil affairs, the speaker now draws the same contrast as to military ones.

1. τὴν πόλιν κοινὴν παρέχομεν] 'we make our city as a common resort [to all].' Ξενηλασίαις, 'by the expulsion of strangers,' i. e. the prohibition to them of residing among them. This was a peculiar feature of the Lacedæmonian institutions, on which see my note in Transl.

οὐκ ἔστιν—ὠφεληθείη] 'nor do we ever exclude any one from seeing or learning that, which, being never concealed, any one, even an enemy, may behold, and be benefited.' After θεάματος, propriety requires οὗ, but it is changed, per attractionem, to ὃ: and the construction (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 528, 2) may be thus traced, as it is done by Goell, ὃ εἴ τις ἴδοι μὴ κρυφθὲν, ὠφεληθείη ἄν: q. d. 'Foreigners are not excluded, as at Lacedæmon, from seeing, and, if they please, learning, all that may excite their curiosity.' The μὴ κρυφθὲν intimates, that these and other matters of state-concern are not, as at Lacedæmon, wrapped up in mystery, nor are those that view them regarded as spies of state-secrets. See Aristid. Panath. i. 289, and ii. 287, and Philostr. Vit. Ap. iii. 16. The next words, πιστεύοντες οὐ ταῖς, &c. are meant to show, why the Athenians used this magnanimous openness,—namely, because their reliance was not upon any such precautionary manœuvres or stratagems, but upon their own strength and courage in action. Τῷ ἀφ' ἡμῶν, meaning, that which proceeds from ourselves, is self-derived, ἐξ οἰκείας φύσεως, not proceeding from any other dependence whatever, but our own genius.

καὶ ἐν ταῖς παιδείαις, &c.] The contrast is now drawn from their modes of education, which, in the case of the Athenians, though it called forth a martial spirit, did not subject them to a course of incessant toil and hardship. Τὸ ἀνδρεῖον μετέρχονται, lit. 'go after,' i. e. seek to acquire, cultivate. Ἀνειμένως διαιτώμενοι, 'living unfettered by rigid institutions,' such as those of the severe discipline of Lycurgus. See note on i. 6: for that is what must principally be meant; though there is doubtless also an allusion to that love of pleasure, which distinguished the Athenians. To which purpose are the words of Heraclid. Pont. ap. Athen. p. 512, who says of the Athenians, καὶ οἱ φρονιμώτατοι καὶ μεγίστην δόξαν ἐπὶ σοφίᾳ ἔχοντες, μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν τὴν ἡδονὴν εἶναι νομίζουσι.

ἐπὶ τοὺς ἰσοπαλεῖς κινδύνους χωροῦμεν] 'we readily encounter dangers equally formidable.' Frequent in the writers who have imitated our author, are the examples of the expression ἰσοπαλὴς κίνδυνος (as if ἰσοπαλὴς ἀγών), meaning, lit. dangers where a courage of equal match is required.

2. καθ' ἑκάστους] Pop. and Goell. have shown, that propriety of speech requires καθ' ἑαυτούς, the sense being 'by themselves alone.' Either, therefore, this is a slip of the author, or an error of the scribes. Arnold, indeed, defends the common reading, but not satisfactorily.

3. κρατήσαντες—ἀπεῶσθαι] Ἀπεῶσθαι may be taken, as it is by most expositors, in a passive sense, as at Aristophanes, Ach. 450, and Herodot. v. 69. Yet, thus the symmetry of the sentence will be destroyed; and hence I am now induced to prefer the active sense, inculcated by the Schol. (who explains by ἀποδεδιωκέναι,) and adopted by Poppo. Moreover, the active sense in this form is found infra ii. 4, and often in Dio Cass. It is true that this use is almost confined to the pres. and imperf.: but that the preter. of the pass. was sometimes used in an active sense, there is every reason to suppose. This rare use is noticed by Hesych., who explains ἀπῶσμαι by ὤθησα, (perhaps having in mind Amos v. 21,) and at ἀπέωσται, he explains by ἀπωθεῖτο, to which should be subjoined the next article, as forming a part of this gloss, ἀπηνήνατο, παρῃτήσατο. All, indeed, that the glossographer meant by ἀπωθεῖτο, was to intimate, that ἀπωθεῖτο was the more usual expression. Finally, here the active sense is required by the context: and it appears, that ἀπωθέω was one of those verbs of which the preterite pass. has the sense of the pret. act. So infra v. 83, we have, ἔψευστο τὴν ξυμμαχίαν, on which see Matth. Gr. § 496, 6.

4. καίτοι εἰ ῥᾳθυμίᾳ, &c.] These words, as Dukas well observes, connect with the latter part of § 1, καὶ ἐν ταῖς παιδείαις—χωροῦμεν, and the words following, from τεκμήριον δὲ down to ὑφ' ἁπάντων ἠσσῆσθαι, are parenthetical, and illustrative of what was just before said: the general sense being, as Thirlwall expresses it, 'so that Athens, divided as her forces were, could defy the united efforts of the Peloponnesian confederates, and could successfully attack them on her own ground:' render, 'and yet, if under a relaxed or careless mode of life, rather than by one exercised in labours, (we are willing to encounter dangers) if, with a courage arising not so much from institutions, as dispositions and manners, we are ready to meet dangers,—there accrues to us this advantage, that we labour not over future troubles by anticipation; and when they overtake us, we approve ourselves not less courageous than those who are ever toiling.' The course of argument being, as Arn. well points out, 'if we are as brave as our rivals, and yet do not take (rather, expend) so much pains to become so, we gain the united advantages of escaping toil and hardship by anticipation, and of being equally daring when the trial comes.' Yet περιγίγνεται does not, as Arn. supposes, 'denote result, or consequence, that result happening to be favourable.' The verb, in this use, answers to the Latin redire, and our accrue, redound, as in a passage, I think, of Diog. Laërt., cited by Budæus in his Comment., where Aristippus is said to have asked, τί αὐτῷ περιγέγονεν ἐκ φιλοσοφίας; 'what advantage had accrued or redounded to him from philosophy?' Ῥᾳθυμία here, like ἀνειμένως διαιτεῖσθαι, supra § 1, denotes, properly, the leading a kind of holiday-life; and quite without reason is it that Goell. here resorts to so many nice distinctions, since the terms in question rather denoted what the Lacedæmonians called such, than what was in reality such. So infra vi. 17, we have, ἡ ἐμὴ ἄνοια. Had Goell. seen this, he would probably not have battled so hard for the vulg. ἐθέλοιμεν, which is quite indefensible, and was very properly altered, from two of the best MSS., by Bekk., to ἐθέλομεν. Finally, though external evidence in favour of ἐθέλομεν be but slender, the internal is considerable; the word having every appearance of being an altered reading, proceeding from certain sciolists, who stumbled at ῥᾳθυμίᾳ, and thought that ἐθέλοιμεν would soften the harshness; which, after all, is imaginary.

νοῖς μὴ προκάμνειν, καὶ ἐς αὐτὰ ἐλθοῦσι, μὴ ἀτολμοτέρους τῶν ἀεὶ μεχθούντων φαίνεσθαι· καὶ ἔν τε τούτοις τὴν πόλιν ἀξίαν εἶναι θαυμάζεσθαι, καὶ ἔτι ἐν ἄλλοις. XL. Φιλοκαλοῦμεν γὰρ μετ' εὐτελείας, καὶ φιλοσοφοῦμεν ἄνευ μαλακίας· πλούτῳ τε ἔργου μᾶλλον

This passage has been the subject of frequent imitation by the later writers, suffice it here to adduce two passages of considerable importance, not less for the sentiment than for the phraseology; namely, Ælian, V. H. xiv. 6, where Aristippus is recorded to have said, (probably in answer to a question put to him, 'how happiness could be best attained or preserved,' Μήτε τοῖς παρελθοῦσιν ἐπικάμνειν (not to labour again over past troubles) μήτε τῶν ἐπιόντων προκάμνειν (nor to labour beforehand about future troubles). Also, Æschyl. Ag. 243, τὸ μέλλον δ' Ἐπεὶ οὐ γένοιτ' ἂν λύσις, προχαιρέτω· Ἴσον δὲ τῷ προστένειν, futura vero sciscitari, quandoquidem horum nullum est effugium, valeat! est enim ante diem gemere. Hence may be illustrated an obscure and ill-understood passage of Æschyl. Eum. 74, φεῦγε, μηδὲ μαλθακὸς γένῃ—καὶ (and yet) μὴ πρόκαμνε, τόνδε βουκολούμενος πόνον, scil. χρησταῖς ἐλπίσι. See Hesych.

καὶ ἔν τε τούτοις—ἄλλοις] These words are by Pop. properly thrown to the 39th chap., as being, in construction, suspended on περιγίγνεται: for the sense is, 'nay, that another advantage accrues, (namely, from the city being on this account the theme of admiration,) as well as on other accounts,' which others the speaker then proceeds to point out. And the words καὶ ἔτι ἐν ἄλλοις are, as it were, the vinculum, to unite the two thoughts. In the γὰρ, after φιλοκαλοῦμεν, it seems implied, that the above combination places within their reach enjoyments in taste and philosophy, to which their rivals were wholly strangers.

CH. XL. 1. φιλοκαλοῦμεν—μαλακίας] 'we study elegance combined with frugality, and we cultivate philosophy without effeminacy.' In illustration of this, Goeller adduces two passages of Demosthenes, in which we have contrasted the simplicity of the private houses at Athens with the magnificence of their public edifices. The meaning of the expression is plainly this, that 'they cultivated an elegant simplicity, not only in building, but in their mode of life generally; using their wealth for purposes which combined elegance with simplicity, and consequently economy.' Nor is there any thing inconsistent with this in the passage at chap. 38, κατασκευαὶ εὐπρεπεῖς. Finally, this view of the sense is also required by the scope of the passage, which, as the Schol. long ago pointed out, is to tacitly encounter the false notion entertained and fostered by the Lacedæmonians concerning the Athenians, that they were luxurious and effeminate. The Spartans were accustomed to say, τῇ φιλοκαλίᾳ τὸ ἄσωτον (extravagance) ἕπεται, τῇ δὲ φιλοσοφίᾳ τὸ μαλακὸν καὶ ἀνιμένον. Pericles allows that his countrymen are fond of elegance, but an elegance combined with frugality. The same applies to καὶ φιλοσοφοῦμεν ἄνευ μαλακίας: he allows that they cultivate intellectual studies of every kind, but it is without effeminacy or inertness. Such is the full sense intended; φιλοσ. denoting literary pursuits generally, (see Gottlieb. and Pop.); and μαλακία, having here the combined idea of segnities and mollities, namely, that 'indisposition to the active duties of life, and that want of courage,' which the ignorant, in every age, have attributed to literary pursuits.

πλούτῳ τε—χρώμεθα] Render, 'and wealth we use rather as an opportunity of action, than as a boast of words.' Of the expression, καιρὸς ἔργου, other examples occur, infra c. 43, and in Liban. Epist. 165, and so in Orat. p. 75, we have, τοῦ καιροῦ τῶν ἔργων ἥκοντος, a passage probably imitated from Æschyl. Choëph. 813, σὺ δὲ θαρσῶν, ὅταν ἥκῃ Μέρος ἔργων, a recondite mode of expression for καιρὸς ἔργων. And so Philostr. Epist. 59, σοφίαν ἐπὶ καιροῦ (I conj. καιρῷ) τῶν ἔργων ἔχουσα, a passage merely adduced by way of defending the reading and construction here introduced by Pop. and Goell. In the λόγου κόμπῳ we have (as Arn. observes,) the exact opposite to the φιλοκαλοῦμεν μετ' εὐτελείας, and this is described by Aristotle, Eth. iv. 2, as making what he calls βανανσία καὶ ἀπειροκαλία, or magnificence degenerated into ostentation; which, he says, ἐν τοῖς μικροῖς τῶν δαπανημάτων πολλὰ ἀναλίσκει οὐ τοῦ καλοῦ ἕνεκα, ἀλλὰ τὸν πλοῦτον ἐπιδεικνυμένη. Of the phrase λόγου κόμπῳ in this very sense, examples are found elsewhere in Plut. Mar. 9, and Arrian, Ex. Al. iv. 28, 4, and γλώσσης κόμποι occurs in Eurip. Hec. 627. Soph. Ant. 127, from whence may be confirmed the common reading, ἐπέων καύχας, in a difficult

καιρῷ, ἢ λόγου κόμπῳ χρώμεθα· καὶ τὸ πένεσθαι οὐχ ὁμολογεῖν τινι αἰσχρὸν, ἀλλὰ μὴ διαφεύγειν ἔργῳ αἴσχιον. 2. ἔνι τε τοῖς αὐτοῖς οἰκείων ἅμα καὶ πολιτικῶν ἐπιμέλεια, καὶ ἑτέροις πρὸς ἔργα τετραμμένοις τὰ πολιτικὰ μὴ ἐνδεῶς γνῶναι· μόνοι γὰρ τόν τε μηδὲν τῶνδε μετέχοντα οὐκ ἀπράγμονα, ἀλλ' ἀχρεῖον νομίζομεν· καὶ αὐτοὶ passage of Pind. Nem. ix. 16, 3. Finally, hence may be emended a corrupt passage of Dio Cass. 838, 41, οὐδὲ γὰρ ἄλλως κόμπου τινὸς, ἐν ἑτέροις τοῖς περὶ αὐτοῦ, λόγον· where, for κόμπου τινὸς, read κόμπῳ τινὶ, and for λόγον, λόγου: and take ἄλλως in the sense in vain, meaning, by a vain boast of words. Here, again, Pericles glances, by indirect contrast, at their rivals, the Lacedæmonians; the χρώμεθα being evidently emphatical; q. d. 'We use our riches as opportunity serves, in the exercise of elegance with simplicity and economy: we do not use them for ostentation, or, as the Lacedæmonians, let them serve only for a boast, that we can despise their use.'

καὶ τὸ πένεσθαι—αἴσχιον] 'to confess poverty, is no disgrace to any one; but not to escape it by active exertion, were disgrace indeed.' In this manner αἴσχιον is used also infra iii. 63. viii. 27.

2. ἔνι τε τοῖς—ἐπιμέλεια] By the τοῖς αὐτοῖς cannot be meant, according to the explanation of the Schol., artizans or agricultural labourers, because such persons were prevented, by their daily occupations, from taking part in public affairs; not to say, that of these we have mention afterwards. It has ever appeared to me, that the persons here to be understood are those who, by their situation in life, could take some care of public affairs, namely, the more opulent and respectable persons of the community; by ἐπιμέλεια being meant a regular attendance in the ἐκκλησία, and the discharge of various offices in the state, judicial and otherwise. Now of one such person, Lysias says, οὐ μόνον τῶν ἰδίων, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν κοινῶν ἐβούλετο ἐπιμελεῖσθαι. In the next words there are other persons adverted to (meaning those in a very different station, who could not take this double care), and especially those πρὸς ἔργα τετραμμένοι, i. e. those who devoted their attention to handlabour of every kind, both agricultural and manufactural, including the θῆτες, or hired servants. So in Joseph. Ant. xviii. 1, 5, we have ἐπὶ γεωργίᾳ τετραμμένοι, where for γεωργίᾳ read γεωργίαν, as in a passage of our author, l. i. 11, § 1. See also 2 Macc. x. 3. The origin of the phrase is to be traced as far back as to Hom. Il. iii. 422, Ἀμφίπολοι μὲν ἔπειτα θοῶς ἐπὶ ἔργα τράποντο. Of such a person it is said in Eurip. Orest. 910, αὐτουργὸς—ξυνετὸς δὲ, χωρεῖν ὁμόσε τοῖς λόγοις θέλων, 'clever when he chooses to grapple with words.'

To these persons, then, we have ascribed, not indeed an ἐπιμέλεια πολιτικῶν, but a sort of γνῶσις πολ., as denoted by the words τὰ πολιτικὰ μὴ ἐνδεῶς γνῶναι, 'to have some competent knowledge of public affairs,' namely, sufficient for the state-duties they were called upon to fulfil, something more than what Thirlwall expresses, by the having an intelligent interest in public affairs,—namely, the forming an opinion as to the interests of his country. And here again, there is conveyed a tacit contrast to the Lacedæmonians, among whom, few indeed were found attentive both to the public business and to their own private affairs, partly from that being inconsistent with aristocracy, and partly from the want of that versatility of character further on adverted to, by which the Athenians could attend at once to great and to little things.

μόνοι γὰρ τόν τε μηδὲν, &c.] Render, 'for we alone account him, who takes no part in these matters, not so much an intermeddler in nothing, as one good for nothing.' Μηδὲν signifies 'in no respect,' namely, neither by ἐπιμέλεια nor by γνῶσις. By the term ἀπράγμων is denoted a good, easy, quiet person, who does not trouble his head about politics; alluding to the Lacedæmonians, who were generally such. With the turn at οὐκ ἀπράγμονα, ἀλλ', &c., non tam—quam, &c., compare a similar one in Eurip. Med. 302, Σκαιοῖσι μὲν γὰρ καινὰ προσφέρων σοφὰ, Δόξεις ἀχρεῖος, κοὐ σοφὸς, πεφυκέναι: and Lycurg. c. Leocr. p. 148, 11, τὸν ὑπὲρ τῶν κοινῶν ἀπεχθανόμενον οὐ φιλόπολιν, ἀλλὰ φιλοπράγμονα δοκεῖν εἶναι.

The next words, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἤτοι—πράγματα, are meant to further develope the idea contained in the preceding ἔνι τε τοῖς αὐτοῖς—γνῶναι: being especially intended to show that the persons in question are not unfit to exercise this ἐπιμέλεια, and to form a tolerable judgment of public affairs, inasmuch as habits of reflection and discussion are cultivated. The full sense, ἤτοι κρίνομέν γε ἢ ἐνθυμούμεθα ὀρθῶς τὰ πράγματα, οὐ τοὺς λόγους τοῖς ἔργοις βλάβην ἡγούμενοι, ἀλλὰ μὴ προδιδαχθῆναι μᾶλλον λόγῳ πρότερον ἢ ἐπὶ ἃ δεῖ ἔργῳ ἐλθεῖν. 3. διαφερόντως γὰρ δὴ καὶ τόδε ἔχομεν, ὥστε τολμᾶν τε οἱ αὐτοὶ μάλιστα, καὶ περὶ ὧν ἐπιχειρήσομεν ἐκλογίζεσθαι· ὃ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἀμαθία μὲν θράσος, λογισμὸς then, is, 'We, too, ourselves (i. e. of ourselves, without the aid of others, whether statesmen or orators) assuredly can either at least judge of matters that have been proposed by others, or can rightly exercise thought thereupon.' The Schol. aptly adduces a passage of Hesiod, Opp. et D. 293, οὗτος μὲν πανάριστος, ὃς αὐτὸς πάντα νοήσῃ· Ἐσθλὸς δ' αὖ κἀκεῖνος, ὃς εὖ εἰπόντι πίθηται· Ὃς δέ κε μήτ' αὐτὸς νοέῃ, μήτ' ἄλλου ἀκούων Ἐν θυμῷ βάλληται, ὁ δ' αὖτ' ἀχρήϊος ἀνήρ. The term ἐνθυμούμεθα has reference to that 'revolving and turning over in mind,' which is so essential in the exercise of judgment. This use of γε in the formula ἤτοι—ἤ is of rare occurrence, but is also found in Plato, Apol. Socr. p. 27, τοὺς δὲ δαίμονας οὐχὶ ἤτοι θεούς γε ἡγούμεθα εἶναι, ἢ θεῶν παῖδας; The τοι has here its confirmative force sanè. The γε refers to the contrary supposition. 'We can, at any rate, judge of the measures [proposed by others], or can rightly exercise the powers of mental reflection thereupon [if we cannot ourselves originate those measures].'

οὐ τοὺς λόγους τοῖς ἔργοις βλάβην ἡγούμενοι] These words glance at the Spartan dislike of long speeches. See i. 86, 1. Ἀλλὰ μὴ προδιδαχθῆναι, &c.; 'but that the hindrance rather consists in the not being informed by words, previously to setting about in deed what is to be done.'

3. διαφερόντως γὰρ δὴ—ἐκλογίζεσθαι] These words are meant to anticipate an objection,—namely, that all this attention to words serves to damp the courage, and unfit men for action,—a point on which the Spartans particularly prided themselves. In answer to this it is said, that,—so far from such being the case,—these habits of reflection and discussion prepared them to meet danger on all fit occasions, as was proved by facts. For (says the speaker) 'we assuredly possess, in an eminent degree, this endowment—that we both at once evince a most daring spirit, and yet weigh well the things we are about to take in hand.' At διαφερόντως supply ἄλλων. So infra viii. 68, πάντων διαφερόντως προθυμότατος. Of ἐκλογίζεσθαι the sense is properly to count up and reckon out, and thence to weigh well.

ὃ τοῖς ἄλλοις—φέρει] Of these words the general meaning is clear: but a certain difficulty presents itself,—namely, as Arn. says, how to explain, with the least violation of the rules of the Greek language, the anomalous use of the relative ὅ. Now the earlier editors consider it as an accus. case governed of κατὰ understood; while the later ones take it as a nomin., and supply τοὐναντίον γίγνεται: regarding the words following, ἀμαθία μὲν—φέρει, as an explanation of τοὐναντίον, substituted here in the place of it. That is, (as Arn. says,) in other words, we must consider the clause ἀμαθία—φέρει as a single logical term, which is predicated of ὃ τοῖς ἄλλοις: ὃ τοῖς ἄλλοις signifying, 'the relations of reflection and enterprise to each other, in the case of other men:' of which relations it is stated, that they have this character, 'Ignorance makes men bold, but reflection makes them cowards.' Grammatically speaking, then, we must supply some such verb as ἔχει ὧδε to the relative ὅ, and consider the next clause as an explanation of the word ὧδε: or rather perhaps we should say that there is no grammatical construction; that the verb which should have followed ὅ has been omitted, and another construction substituted in its place, which is irreconcilable with the former construction, and which requires, instead of the nominative ὅ, the conjunction ὅπου, 'whereas.'

In support of this latter view of the sense, (which is the same as that propounded in my note in Transl.) I am enabled to adduce a passage of Eurip. Ion, 248, ed. Matth., ὃ πάντες ἄλλοι, γύαλα λεύσσοντες θεοῦ, Χαίρουσιν, ἐνταῦθ' ὄμμα σὸν δακρυρρόοτ: where, had Matthiæ been aware of the true import of the ὅ, he would not have altered it, on the conjecture of Pierson, to οὗ. Wakefield, indeed, there very properly defended the common reading; but did not seize the right sense, when explaining secundum quod,—deceived, like the rest of the editors, by ignorance of the construction, which is, ὃ πάντες ἄλλοι χαίρουσι λεύσσοντες γύαλα θεοῦ, ἐνταῦθα ὄμμα σὸν δακρυρρόοτ: where ἐνταῦθα means in illâ re, as at v. 384, ὦ Φοῖβε, κἀκεῖ κἀνθάδ' οὐ δίκαιος εἶ: and often elsewhere, especially in the poets.

δὲ ὄκνον φέρει. 4. κράτιστοι δ' ἂν τὴν ψυχὴν δικαίως κριθεῖεν, οἱ τά τε δεινὰ καὶ ἡδέα σαφέστατα γιγνώσκοντες, καὶ διὰ ταῦτα μὴ ἀποτρεπόμενοι ἐκ τῶν κινδύνων. 5. καὶ τὰ ἐς ἀρετὴν ἠναντιώμεθα τοῖς πολλοῖς· οὐ γὰρ πάσχοντες εὖ, ἀλλὰ δρῶντες, κτώμεθα τοὺς φίλους. 6. βεβαιότερος δὲ ὁ δράσας τὴν χάριν, ὥστε ὀφειλομένην

By ὄκνον is meant, hesitation or the delay produced by fear, as in Æschyl. Sept. 54, καὶ τῶνδε πύστις οὐκ ὄκνῳ χρονίζεται. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Lucian, Nigr. init. ὅτι ἡ ἀμαθία μὲν θρασεῖς, ὀκνηροὺς δὲ τὸ λελογισμένον ἀπεργάζεται.

Here, then, the general sentiment intended to be expressed is, that, 'however it might be with others, the Athenians did not (as the Lacedæmonians) trust to ignorance as the mother of courage, but found in habits of deep reflection that which prepared them to encounter danger with a discerning fortitude, quite apart from the θράσος, or foolhardiness, of the Lacedæmonians:' for by τοῖς ἄλλοις, lit. 'the rest' (of the Greeks), are here evidently meant the Peloponnesians.

4. κράτιστοι τὴν ψυχὴν] Meaning 'the most high-minded,' lit. 'high-souled.' Τὰ δεινά. Goell., following the Schol., takes this to mean 'the dangers of war,' as τὰ ἡδέα, 'the sweets of peace' (see infra iv. 62, init., and compare iii. 9, where we have opposed the two expressions τὰ δεινὰ and εἰρήνη): 'by neither of which being swayed, they approve themselves to be most high-souled.' It should rather seem, however, that the term ἡδὺς is here used, in its more general sense, of the sweets or pleasures of civilized and polished society, such as it existed at Athens: and so in Xen. Hiero. ii. 14, and elsewhere, we have τὰ ἡδέα used to denote gaudia. It is meant, then, that 'they are not deterred (as might be supposed) from facing dangers, by their being fully acquainted with the gaudia vitæ,' to use the expression of Virg. Æn. xi. 180. Now of these the Spartans stoically affected to be ignorant, as indifferent to them: while, on the other hand, with the τὰ δεινὰ they were well acquainted, and could bear the latter, and despise the former.

5. The speaker now proceeds a step further, and adverts to another striking contrast with the rest of the Greeks, (τοῖς ἄλλοις still meaning the Peloponnesians and especially the Spartans,) which is, that 'they were influenced in their dealings with other states, not by the selfishness which marked the Lacedæmonian character, but by a disposition to conciliate friendship by disinterested liberality, seeking no selfish ends.'

ἠναντιώμεθα] 'we differ very widely,' lit. 'we cultivate the directly contrary dispositions.' This difference, it is said, is as regards ἀρετήν: which term is to be understood, not, as Stephens contends it ought, of moral virtue, but rather of beneficence, liberality, or goodness, (as apart from the high-mindedness and intellectual superiority before claimed for them,) meaning the disposition to do good. So in Aristot. Rhet. i. 9, 2, we have ἀρετή, in its popular acceptation, defined to be δύναμις εὐεργητική. Of the word as used in this somewhat rare sense, I have noted examples in Eurip. Suppl. 225 and 1063. Plato, Men. p. 365, χρυσίον δὲ καὶ ἀργύριον πορίζεσθαι ἀρετὴ ἐστιν. Max. Tyr. Diss. 39, 5. Jos. 825, 12. 1055, 20. Liban. Or. 827. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 398, 44, οὐχ ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀναγκαίου μᾶλλον ἢ ὑπ' ἀρετῆς. Finally, of this rare use of the pret. tense in ἐναντ., an example is adduced by Poppo from Demosth. de Fals. Leg. § 205; as also an example of this use of pret. for pres. from Liban. Progymn. p. 39, Morell.

οὐ γὰρ πάσχοντες εὖ—φίλους] 'we gain our friends, not by receiving, but by conferring, benefits.' So in a passage cited by Poppo from Aristid. c. Lept. § 27, οἱ πρόσβυτατοι τῶν Ἀθηναίων εὖ ποιοῦντες, οὐκ εὖ πάσχοντες, τοὺς φίλους ἐκτῶντο. And so Sallust, Cat. 6, says of the Romans, 'magis dandis quam accipiendis amicitias parabant.'

6. βεβαιότερος δὲ—σώζειν] The sense here has been variously explained. Wakef., Ha., and Bekk. take βεβ. to mean, 'more sure of goodwill from the obliged.' That sense, however, is, as Goell. observes, forbidden by the ὥστε following: not to say that the sentiment thus arising is at variance with the subsequent words, ὁ δὲ ἀμβλύτερος, &c. Hence it is better to retain the commonly received interpretation, adopted by Portus, and somewhat improved upon by Gail, Goell., and Pop., rendering as follows: 'But he who bestows the benefit (lit. does the favour) is a surer or steadier friend,' more to be relied on. On the import of the next words, an equal difference of opinion exists. The meaning

may possibly be that expressed by Gail and Poppo, 'ita ut, per continuam benevolentiam, debitam sibi gratiam in eo tueatur;' and this signification of δι' εὐνοίας is confirmed and illustrated by a passage of Plin. Epist. iii. 4, 6, adduced by Poppo. Yet thus the sense is forced and strained. Preferable is the following version, 'and that in order to preserve the favour due to him from whom he has, out of kindness, bestowed it:' in confirmation of which may be adduced Aristot. Eth. viii. 7, Οἱ δ' εὐεργέται τοὺς εὐεργετηθέντας δοκοῦσι μᾶλλον φιλεῖν ἢ οἱ εὖ παθόντες τοὺς δράσαντας·—τοῖς μὲν οὖν πλείστοις φαίνεται, ὅτι οἱ μὲν ὀφείλουσι, τοῖς δὲ ὀφείλεται. Καθάπερ οὖν ἐπὶ τῶν δανείων, οἱ μὲν ὀφείλοντες βούλονται μὴ εἶναι, οἷς ὀφείλουσιν, οἱ δὲ δανείσαντες καὶ ἐπιμέλονται τῆς τῶν ὀφειλόντων σωτηρίας· οὕτω καὶ τοὺς εὐεργετήσαντας βούλεσθαι εἶναι τοὺς παθόντας, ὡς κομιουμένους τὰς χάριτας, τοῖς δ' οὐκ εἶναι ἐπιμελὲς τὸ ἀντιαποδοῦναι. But even thus the words δι' εὐνοίας will have a somewhat jejune sense; in order to remedy which, we may, with Goell., join them, not with βεβαιότερος, but with σώζειν, in this sense: 'so as to keep alive the obligation, by means of good-will displayed towards the person on whom he has conferred it.' This view of the sense is strongly confirmed by a passage of Plutarch, Flamin. ch. i. (first adduced by myself in my note in Transl., and since then by Goell.) τοῖς εὐεργετηθεῖσι διαπαντὸς, ὥσπερ εὐεργέταις, εὔνους καὶ πρόθυμος, ὡς κάλλιστα τῶν κτημάτων, τοὺς εὖ πεπονθότας ὑπ' αὐτοῦ περιέπειν ἀεὶ καὶ σώζειν. In the several Greek phrases ἔχειν χάριν, κατατίθεσθαι χάριν, &c., we have, as Goell. and Arn. observe, metaphors taken from banking: 'as a man is anxious to support his banker's credit, that he may not lose the money which he has put into his hands; so the obliging party is here said to be a surer friend to the obliged, in order that he may be both able and willing to return the obligation hereafter.'

ὁ δ' ἀντοφείλων ἀμβλύτερος] 'whereas he who owes obligation in return is more sluggish,' i. e. has his feelings of friendship more blunt or languid, is less sensible to them. So Plut. c. Gracch. 8, ἀμβλὺν εὐνοίᾳ. Liban. Epist. 706, ἐραστὴς ἀμβλύτερος εἰς ἐρωμένην. Dio Cass. 43, 8, ἀμβλύτεροι ψυχαῖς. Appian, i. 547. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Plut. Sert. 4, τὸν Θ. ὁρῶν ἀμβλύτερον ὄντα.

This representation is by no means an exaggerated one; for, as observes Goell., 'those who owe an obligation too often hate their benefactors; least of all do they equal them in well-wishing and the desire to benefit them.' So Tacit. Ann. iv. 18, 'beneficia eo læta sunt, dum videntur exsolvi posse; ubi multum antevenere, pro gratiâ odium redditur.' Analyzing the evil disposition here adverted to, it is sufficient to say, that too commonly the effect of benefits is to wound the pride of the benefited, producing, with an uneasy sense of inferiority, a base feeling of ill-will towards him from whom the benefit has proceeded. Most true is the observation of a great metaphysician (Dr. S. Parr, in his Sermon on Ingratitude): 'He that confers, indulges the best feelings of his pride; while he that receives, is sometimes obliged to subdue its worst.'

εἰδὼς οὐκ ἐς χάριν—ἀποδώσων] 'knowing that he shall return the kindness not for (i. e. as) a favour, but as a debt.' Similarly in Rom. iv. 4, we have, ὁ μισθὸς οὐ λογίζεται κατὰ χάριν, ἀλλὰ κατ' ὀφείλημα. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Hdian. ii. 11, 14, χάριν οὐκ ᾔδεισαν· ὄφλημα γὰρ αὐτὸν ἀποτίνειν, ἀλλ' οὐ δωρεὰν διανέμειν ἐλογίζοντο.

7. καὶ μόνοι οὐ—ὠφελοῦμεν] Here we have resumed what was said supra § 5; the words of § 6, βεβαιότερος—ἀποδώσων, being in some measure parenthetical. Render, 'Yea, we alone fearlessly venture to benefit others, not by a calculation of interest, but rather through the confidence of liberality, by which the liberal person dares to give, without fearing that he shall find his means fail, or need others' aid;' (see the Schol.) or it may mean, 'without being turned from his purpose by the high probability of receiving ungrateful returns.' It is, however, the opinion of Schneider and Arnold, followed by Goell. and Poppo, that ἐλευθερίας τῷ πιστῷ is to be taken as standing for ἐλευθεριότητι: and they explain, 'with the free and confiding spirit inspired by the consciousness of our liberty, that which best becomes a free man.' Similar are the words of Appian, t. ii. 312, 48, καὶ τὸ δίκαιον ἢ πρέπον ἢ καλὸν οὐκ ἔθεσι μᾶλλον ἢ μεγαλοψύχοις λογισμοῖς ὁρίσαι. Comp. also Eurip. Erecth. frag. i.

ἀδεῶς τινὰ ὠφελοῦμεν. XLI. CH. XLI. In this chapter the speaker proceeds to advert to some of the advantages which entitled Athens to be called the school of Greece; which commonly enabled an Athenian to adapt himself more readily than other men to new circumstances, and to execute whatever he undertook with peculiar ease and grace; which had opened the most distant seas and lands to the Athenian arms; had erected a mighty empire, and ensured an immortal renown; and which made the country worthy of all the sacrifices that her sons could offer her. Such, in the judgment of Pericles, or of Thucydides, was the fair side which Athens now presented. There was, however, a reverse, with some very different features, which the orator did not wish to exhibit, but which the historian displays in the events of his history.—(Thirlwall.)

1. ξυνελών τε λέγω] 'and in short I affirm,' &c., as infra iii. 30. Παίδευσιν. This stands either for παιδεύτριαν, magistram; (by the use of abstract for concrete, often found in the case of παίδευμα. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 429.) or rather the word has here the sense school, as in Diod. Sic. Athens is called πάντων ἀνθρώπων κοινὸν παιδευτήριον. And Menedemus ap. Plut. ii. 81, D, says, that the greater part of the world goes to school to Athens.

καὶ καθ' ἕκαστον—παρέχεσθαι] Here καθ' ἕκαστον, as being opposed to πᾶσαν τὴν πόλιν, 'the country at large,' signifies individually, i. e. 'as to each individual of the mass.' Παρ' ἡμῶν, Poppo renders apud nos; but it is better to take παρὰ in its usual sense for ἐκ, supposing here understood (as at ch. 39, τῷ ἀφ' ἡμῶν εὐψύχῳ) some participle of a verb of motion, as ἐλθόντα, 'proceeding from us,' namely, as forming a member of their body politic. Accordingly, the sense is not ill expressed by Held. ap. Pop. 'virum, qui a nobis extiterit, ortus sit.' The construction is, λέγω τὸν αὐτὸν ἄνδρα παρ' ἡμῶν δοκεῖν ἂν μοι εὐτραπέλως τὸ σῶμα αὔταρκες παρέχεσθαι ἐπὶ πλεῖστα εἴδη καὶ μετὰ χαρίτων. Αὔταρκες signifies idoneum, fit. And παρέχ. (mid. voice) means, se prœbere, exhibere, præstare. Of ἐπὶ πλεῖστ' εἴδη, the sense is, 'to, or for, the most varied kinds [of action or business];' πράγματος being here to be supplied from the subject-matter. In εὐτραπέλως is further developed the idea contained in ἐπὶ πλεῖστ' εἴδη παρέχεσθαι. The phrase is well explained by the Schol. εὐκινήτως, ἐνδεξίως, versatiliter. And so it is used in Liban. Or. 717, D, as also εὐτράπελος, in the sense versatiliter, 'easy to be turned, supple in motion,' in Aristot. Eth. iv. 8, where the word has its natural sense. In the figurative one, it occurs in Ælian, H. An. v. 26, οὕτως ἄρα ἡ φύσις ποικίλον καὶ εὐτράπελόν ἐστι. Aristoph. Vesp. 469, λόγον εὐτράπελον, i. e. a witty turn; in which sense εὐτράπ. occurs in Polyb. xxiv. 5, 7. The expression here signifies adroitly, (as in Ælian, V. H. v. 13, Ἀθηναῖοι δεινῶς εἰς πολιτείας εὐτράπελοι,) having reference to that suppleness of character, which enabled the Athenians, (like the Gauls of aftertimes, or their posterity the French,) to adapt themselves adroitly to new circumstances, and which is expressed by the ingenium velox of Juven. Sat. iii. 75, seqq. Finally, this very versatility and suppleness of character, this readiness to adapt one's self to any condition or circumstances, and to act therein with peculiar ease and grace, (what is here expressed by μετὰ χαρίτων,)—this it was that distinguished the greatest Grecian philosophers. So Hor. Epist. i. 17, 23, 'Omnis Aristippum decuit color et status et res,' i. e. every condition and mode of action alike became him. Finally, so in Diog. Laërt. ii. 66, we have, ἦν δὲ ἱκανὸς ἁρμόσασθαι (to adapt himself, ὥστε αὐταρκῆ εἶναι πᾶσι) καὶ τόπῳ καὶ χρόνῳ καὶ προσώπῳ. Of τὸ σῶμα, the sense seems to be, not, as Poppo explains, the body itself, but rather 'the person,' meaning, not a man's bodily powers only, but whatever constitutes his person. Indeed, the term σῶμα is merely used suitably to the metaphor in question, which is one derived from a dancer, whose limbs are so supple as to enable him to adapt himself to all sorts of postures with equal ease and grace.

2. λόγων—κόμπος μᾶλλον ἢ ἔργων ἀλήθεια] 'a mere wordy boast rather

may possibly be that expressed by Gail and Poppo, 'ita ut, per continuam benevolentiam, debitam sibi gratiam in eo tueatur;' and this signification of δι' εὐνοίας is confirmed and illustrated by a passage of Plin. Καθάπερ οὖν ἐπὶ τῶν δανείων, οἱ μὲν ὀφείλοντες βούλονται μὴ εἶναι, οἷς ὀφείλουσιν, οἱ δὲ δανείσαντες καὶ ἐπιμέλονται τῆς τῶν ὀφειλόντων σωτηρίας· οὕτω καὶ τοὺς εὐεργετήσαντας βούλεσθαι εἶναι τοὺς παθόντας, ὡς κομιουμένους τὰς χάριτας, τοῖς δ' οὐκ εἶναι ἐπιμελὲς τὸ ἀντ-αποδοῦναι.* But even thus the words δι' εὐνοίας will have a somewhat jejune sense; in order to remedy which, we may, with Goell., join them, not with βεβαιότερος, but with σώζειν, in this sense: 'so as to keep alive the obligation, by means of good-will displayed towards the person on whom he has conferred it.' Sert. 4, τὸν Θ. ὁρῶν ἀμβλύτερον ὄντα.

This representation is by no means an exaggerated one; for, as observes Goell., 'those who owe an obligation too often hate their benefactors; least of all do they equal them in well-wishing and the desire to benefit them.' εἰδὼς οὐκ ἐς χάριν—ἀποδώσων] 'knowing that he shall return the kindness not for (i. e. as) a favour, but as a debt.' Similarly in Rom. iv. 4, we have, ὁ μισθὸς οὐ λογίζεται κατὰ χάριν, ἀλλὰ κατ' ὀφείλημα. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Hdian. ii. 11, 14, χάριν οὐκ ᾤδεισαν· ὄφλημα γὰρ αὐτὸν ἀποτίνειν, ἀλλ' οὐ δωρεὰν διανέμειν ἐλογίζοντο.

7. καὶ μόνοι οὐ—ὠφελοῦμεν] Here we have resumed what was said supra § 5; the words of § 6, βεβαιότερος—ἀποδώσων, being in some measure parenthetical. Finally, this very versatility and suppleness of character, this readiness to adapt one's self to any condition or circumstances, and to act therein with peculiar ease and grace, (what is here expressed by μετὰ χαρίτων,)—this it was that distinguished the greatest Grecian philosophers. So Hor. Epist. i. 17, 23, 'Omnis Aristippum decuit color et status et res,' i. e. every condition and mode of action alike became him. Finally, so in Diog. Laërt. ii. 66, we have, ἦν δὲ ἱκανὸς ἁρμόσασθαι (to adapt himself, ὥστε αὐταρκῆ εἶναι πᾶσι) καὶ τόπῳ καὶ χρόνῳ καὶ προσώπῳ. Of τὸ σῶμα, the sense seems to be, not, as Poppo explains, the body itself, but rather 'the person,' meaning, not a man's bodily powers only, but whatever constitutes his person. Indeed, the term σῶμα is merely used suitably to the metaphor in question, which is one derived from a dancer, whose limbs are so supple as to enable him to adapt himself to all sorts of postures with equal ease and grace.

αὐτὴ ἡ δύναμις τῆς πόλεως, ἣν ἀπὸ τῶνδε τῶν τρόπων ἐκτησάμεθα, σημαίνει. 3. μόνη γὰρ τῶν νῦν ἀκοῆς κρείσσων ἐς πεῖραν ἔρχεται, καὶ μόνη οὔτε τῷ πολεμίῳ ἐπελθόντι ἀγανάκτησιν ἔχει ὑφ' οἵων κακοπαθεῖ, οὔτε τῷ ὑπηκόῳ κατάμεμψιν ὡς οὐχ ὑπ' ἀξίων ἄρχεται. 4. μετὰ μεγάλων δὲ σημείων, καὶ οὐ δή τοι ἀμάρτυρόν γε τὴν δύναμιν παρασχόμενοι, τοῖς τε νῦν καὶ τοῖς ἔπειτα θαυμασθησόμεθα, καὶ οὐδὲν προσδεόμενοι οὔτε Ὁμήρου ἐπαινέτου, οὔτε ὅστις ἔπεσι μὲν τὸ αὐτίκα τέρψει, τῶν δὲ ἔργων τὴν ὑπόνοιαν ἡ ἀλήθεια βλάψει, ἀλλὰ πᾶσαν μὲν θάλασσαν καὶ γῆν ἐσβατὸν τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ τόλμῃ than actual truth:' genit. subst. for adject. Evidently imitated from these are the expressions in a passage of Procop. Gaz. ap. Villois. Anecd. Gr. ii. 30, εἰ κόμπος δὲ ταῦτα, καὶ λόγων ἀλαζονεία. Plut. Mar. § 9, λόγου κόμπῳ μετρῶν ἀεὶ φρονήματος μέγεθος. It is, then, meant that 'all this is not mere boast of words, since reality of deeds will attest its truth.'

3. ἐς πεῖραν ἔρχεται] 'comes to proof,' 'turns out on proof,' 'approves itself;' as ἴέναι ἐς πεῖραν, infra vii. 21. Aristid. ii. 171. Phil. Jud. 296. and Dio Cass. 846. Evidently imitated from this is the expression in Procop. p. 132, πολλὰ κρείσσω ἐλπίδος ἐς πεῖραν ἦλθε.

μόνη οὔτε τῷ πολεμίῳ—ἄρχεται] 'it alone occasions, neither to an invading enemy indignant vexation at being worsted by such persons, (meaning persons decidedly inferior in all respects,) nor to a subjugated foe self-reproach, as if governed by those unworthy of rule.' Ἔχει stands for παρέχει, as supra i. 6, answering to which is the use in Latin of habeo for præbeo. Οἵων is for τοιούτων, (as used either of praise or blame,) on which see Vig. p. 124, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 480, 5. By the use of the term κακοπαθεῖν, the speaker, we see, takes it for granted, that an invading enemy will be worsted: and in the words ὑφ' οἵων he appeals to a deeply-seated feeling of the human heart, —it being ever found, that the chagrin of defeat, and, indeed, injury of every kind, is aggravated not a little by the unworthiness of the injurer. To which purpose are the words of Herodot. v. 3, 18, ὑπ' ἀξιοχρέῳ καὶ ἀποθανεῖν ἡμίσεα συμφορή. And the same is true of insult; for, as says our great English moralist, Johnson,

'Fate never wounds more deep the generous heart,
Than when a blockhead's insult points

4. οὐ δή τοι ἀμάρτυρόν γε τὴν δύναμιν παρασχόμενοι] 'occasioning to be not unwitnessed.' An elegant meiosis, for, 'witnessed in every way,' as Acts xiv. 17, καί τοι γε οὐκ ἀμάρτυρον ἑαυτὸν ἀφῆκε. Examples of the same are not unfrequent in Dionys. Hal., Procop., Philostr., and Plutarch. 'The term ἀμάρτ.,' as Arn. remarks, 'was properly a forensic term, used of a cause that rested merely on the party's own assertions; and hence the emphasis that is here laid upon it.' 'In οὐ δή τοι—γε, we have,' says Poppo, 'a remarkable association of particles, for which one should have expected οὐ δήπου γε.' But δήπου would be unsuitable, as expressing doubt, which here can have no place. The truth is, that the τοι belongs to the οὐ, not to δή, and οὐ δή τοι is for οὐ τοι δή, non profecto, which occurs in Plato ap. Hoog. Part. p. 505. At ἔπεσι μὲν τὸ αὐτίκα—βλάψει, the construction is disputed; some commentators joining τῶν ἔργων with ἡ ἀλήθεια: others, with τὴν ὑπόνοιαν: and others, again, with both: of which several methods, the second seems to deserve the preference; for τῶν ἔργων must, I think, be taken with τὴν ὑπόνοιαν: and it may, also, with ἡ ἀλήθεια, though that is not necessary, the article being used with reference thereto, and the genit. denoting as to. So in Hom. Od. xi. 506, we have, αὐτάρ τοι παιδός γε Νεοπτολέμοιο (about Neoptolemus) φίλοιο Πᾶσαν ἀληθείην μυθήσομαι. Or, ἡ ἀλήθεια might mean the truth, without any subaudition, as often in N. T., and also in Herodot. iii. 72, and vi. 69. Ὑπόνοια, here, simply signifies 'a mental conception,' such as the mind forms for itself in the process of thinking. The ὑπο has reference to the operation being carried on, alta mente reposta. Of this sense of ὑπόνοια, (which is rare,) examples occur in Diod. Sic. i. 87, ὑπόνοιαν λαβόντες τοῦ συμβησομένου. Dionys. Hal. Ant. viii. 81, fin. ἔλαβον τὴν ὑπόνοιαν. The future, in βλάψει, has the sense, not of will, but would or might.

The words following, ἀλλὰ πᾶσαν μὲν θάλασσαν — καταναγκάσαντες, connect καταναγκάσαντες γενέσθαι, πανταχοῦ δὲ μνημεῖα κακῶν τε καὶ ἀγαθῶν αἰδία ξυγκατοικίσαντες. 5. περὶ τοιαύτης οὖν πόλεως οἵδε τε γενναίως, δικαιοῦντες μὴ ἀφαιρεθῆναι αὐτήν, μαχόμενοι ἐτελεύτησαν, καὶ τῶν λειπομένων πάντα τινὰ εἰκὸς ἐθέλειν ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς κάμνειν. XLII. Διὸ δὴ καὶ ἐμήκυνα τὰ περὶ τῆς πόλεως, διδασκαλίαν τε ποιούμενος μὴ περὶ ἴσου ἡμῖν εἶναι τὸν ἀγῶνα καὶ οἷς τῶνδε μηδὲν ὑπάρχει ὁμοίως, καὶ τὴν εὐλογίαν ἅμα, ἐφ' οἷς νῦν λέγω, φανερὰν σημείοις καθιστάς. 2. καὶ εἴρηται αὐτῆς τὰ μέγιστα· ἃ γὰρ τὴν πόλιν ὕμνησα, αἱ τῶνδε καὶ τῶν τοιῶνδε ἀρεταὶ ἐκόσμησαν· καὶ οὐκ ἂν πολλοῖς τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἰσόρροπος, ὥσπερ τῶνδε, ὁ λόγος † τῶν with θαυμασθησόμεθα before, which is here to be repeated in the mind of the reader. By the term καταναγκ., we have intimated the persevering labour, by which the very seas were compelled to yield approach to the adventurous mariners of Athens.

In the next words, πανταχοῦ δὲ—ξυγκατ., we have an almost lyrical boldness. Render, 'inasmuch as we have every where planted together eternal monuments of good and evil, weal and woe;' meaning, memorials of the evils we have wrought on our enemies, (namely, in cities destroyed, or sacked and plundered, and countries devastated and subjugated,) and 'the benefits we have implanted every where,' i. e. in colonization and alliance, by which the blessings of religion, laws, civilization, and the arts and sciences were carried into the most distant regions.

5. περὶ τοιαύτης οὖν πόλεως] 'in behalf of,' 'in defence of;' &c. At καὶ τῶν, repeat περὶ τοιαύτης πόλεως, 'for such a state, it is right that every one of the survivors should be disposed to undergo labours and dangers.'

CH. XLII. This chapter and the next contain the panegyric, properly speaking, on the departed heroes; and the speaker, with admirable address, introduces it by showing, why it was that he had dilated so much on the circumstances of the state at large, and as yet said nothing about the persons whose praises were the occasion of the present solemnity. Now this was, first, in order to show that the contest was not for equal states between themselves, and those who (like the Lacedæmonians) did not enjoy, in a like degree, such advantages: 2dly, in order to establish thereon the praises of the persons commemorated, inasmuch as the greater part of what had been said had tended to their praise, supplied the principal part of their panegyric, they having mainly made the country what it was, and therefore her praise was their panegyric.

1. μὴ περὶ ἴσου ἡμῖν εἶναι τὸν ἀγῶνα] Similarly in Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 2, we have, οὐ περὶ τῶν ἴσων ὁ κίνδυνός ἐστι. In the words following, οἷς τῶνδε μηδὲν ὑπάρχει ὁμοίως, the Peloponnesians are alluded to, who possessed none of the advantages above adverted to, at least, not one of them, ὁμοίως, 'in an equal degree;' consequently, the Athenians, having more at stake than their enemies, might be expected to make greater sacrifices.

2. καὶ εἴρηται αὐτῆς τὰ μέγιστα] Meaning, 'what principally tends to establish that eulogy, has been already said.' In the words following, ἃ γὰρ—ὕμνησα, 'the things for which I celebrate them,' the verb ὑμνεῖν carries two accusatives, from its being a verb of naming. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 414. The word is chiefly used of poetic celebration; but it is also applied to any high panegyric, especially in the oratorical style, as in Hdot. i. 13, 17. Isocr. p. 153. Phil. Jud. p. 726.

ἰσόρροπος ὁ λόγος τῶν ἔργων φανείη] In other cases, as he had just said, τὴν ἐκ τοῦ λόγου ὑπόνοιαν ἡ ἀλήθεια βλάπτει: or in other words, ὁ λόγος τῶν ἔργων κρατεῖ. (i. 69.) But here, ὁ λόγος τῶν ἔργων οὐ κρατεῖ μᾶλλον ἢ ἰσόρροπος φαίνεται, 'the fame of their actions does not go beyond the actions themselves, but hangs in equal balance with them.' (Arnold.) As to the construction, elsewhere ἰσόρροπος carries after it (as one should expect from its signification) a dative or its equivalent;—for, futile is it to appeal (as does Arnold) to the expression γῆς ἰσόμοιρος ἀὴρ in Soph. El. 87, since there the genitive can very well be accounted for from the circumstance of ἰσόμοιρος being there, in a manner, a subst. (as in Xen. Anab. ii. 1, 31, τοὺς ὑπηρέτας ἰσομοίρους πάντων ἐποίει, 'made them equal sharers of every thing;') whereas here it is quite unaccountable. Hence I doubt not there is a corruption, and that our author, for τῶν ἔργων, wrote τῷ ἔργῳ, the ν and ι adscript being perpetually interchanged. Now this will make the construction sufficiently exact, and will better suit the antithetical term ὁ λόγος. Render, 'few, indeed, are there of the Greeks of whom the word would not be more than equal to, go beyond the deed done,' or the course of action performed. So supra i. 69, ὁ λόγος τοῦ ἔργου ἐκράτει. I must, however, confess that one example of the construction with the genit. has occurred to me,—namely, in Theodoret on Psalm lvii. 1, διηγεῖται τὴν τοῦ Σαοὺλ πονηρίαν, καὶ τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν, τὴν ἐκείνου ἰσόῤῥοπον κεκτημένων γνώμην. Yet as there ἰσόῤῥοπος has simply the sense of ἴσην, it must also have the construction: and there is little doubt that Theodoret wrote, not ἐκείνου, but ἐκείνῳ. The plural here might very well creep in from the use of the plural just before, ὥσπερ τῶνδε.

The general meaning, then, as Gail observes, is, that 'among the other Greeks their fame is not equalled by their actions: not so with the Athenians; their actions exceed what fame reports of them.'

3. δοκεῖ δέ μοι, &c.] The speaker now passes from the general merits of those whose eulogy he is pronouncing, to the particular merit of their having died for their country.

ἀνδρὸς ἀρετὴν] 'manly courage and valour,' as in Isocr. Areop. § 4. Evag. § 2. Max. Tyr. Diss. 28, 7: and especially Procop. p. 183, 2, ἀνδρὸς ἀρετὴν οὐκ ἀρχόμεναι δηλοῦσιν αἱ πράξεις, ἀλλὰ τελευτῶσαι μηνύουσι. It is meant, that 'their very death for their country is a proof of their merit as soldiers.' A certain perplexity attaches to the words following, πρώτη τε μηνύουσα καὶ τελευταία βεβαιοῦσα, and to the term προτίθεσθαι, of which the view adopted by Goeller and Arnold involves, I apprehend, the least of difficulty or objection. The sense of the whole passage they suppose to be, 'It is a proof both when it is the first to give us information of their worth; (i. e. as Goell. explains it, when nothing before had been known of a man;) and when it comes at the last to confirm the testimony already borne by a life of virtue. It is a proof of worth always; for even they who in other points have done amiss, ought to have their worth in the wars in their country's cause set above every thing else; for their good has wiped out their evil, and they have served the whole state, rather than in their private relations been mischievous.' In the words τελευταία βεβαιοῦσα, we have an allusion to the final mode of confirming any testimony, which was by affixing one's seal. So in a passage of St. John, iii. 33, we have, ἐσφράγισεν ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς ἀληθής ἐστι, for ἔδειξεν: and similarly in 2 Cor. i. 21, ὁ δὲ βεβαιῶν ἡμᾶς Θεὸς, ὁ καὶ σφραγισάμενος ἡμᾶς. Προτίθεσθαι is, as the Schol. says, for προτιμᾶσθαι, 'to be put forward, for praise and honour.' Ἀγαθῷ γὰρ κακὸν ἀφανίσαντες, 'thus having effaced evil by good,' namely, the benefit to their country of laying down their lives for it; since, as says Cicero pro Quinct. ch. 15, cited by Goeller, Mors honesta vitam turpem exornat. Evidently imitated from this is a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 291, 35, ἐκ μιᾶς γὰρ τῆς περὶ τὸν θάνατον ἀρετῆς, κἂν φαῦλος γένηταί τι, ἐξετάζειν δεῖν τοὺς ἀγαθούς. See also Plato, Menex. § 2.

5. τῶνδε δὲ οὔτε πλούτῳ—προτιμήσας] 'yet of these there was not any one who, either from preference for the longer enjoyment of riches, or,' &c. With οὐ προτιμήσας here compare οὐ προτιμῶν at Æschyl. Ag. 1388. The words ἔτι ἀπόλαυσιν προτ. are meant to be explanatory of the πλούτῳ, (for so I have thought proper, with Ha., Pop., and Goell., to edit, from all the best MSS., instead of vulg. πλούτου, injudiciously retained by Bekk.) and here αὐτοῦ is to be supplied. Of μαλακίζεσθαι in this sense, 'to be softened into pusillanimity,' examples occur in the best Attic writers. The sentiment is well illustrated by the words of the Schol. on Eurip. Phœn. 600, οἱ πλούσιοι δειλοί εἰσι πρὸς θάνατον, (so in Hebr. ii. 15, φόβῳ θανάτου διὰ παντὸς τοῦ ζῆν ἔνοχοι ἦσαν ἀναβολὴν τοῦ δεινοῦ ἐποιήσατο· τὴν δὲ τῶν ἐναντίων τιμωρίαν ποθεινοτέραν αὐτῶν λαβόντες, καὶ κινδύνων ἅμα τόνδε κάλλιστον νομίσαντες, ἐβουλήθησαν μετ' αὐτοῦ τοὺς μὲν τιμωρεῖσθαι τῶν δὲ ἐφίεσθαι· ἐλπίδι μὲν τὸ ἀφανὲς τοῦ κατορθώσειν ἐπιτρέψαντες, ἔργῳ δὲ, περὶ τοῦ ἤδη ὁρωμένου, σφίσιν αὐτοῖς ἀξιοῦντες πεποιθέναι· καὶ ἐν αὐτῷ τὸ ἀμύνεσθαι καὶ παθεῖν μᾶλλον ἡγησάμενοι ἢ τὸ ἐνδόντες σώζεσθαι, τὸ μὲν αἰσχρὸν τοῦ λόγου ἔφυγον, τὸ δ' ἔργον τῷ σώματι ὑπέμειναν, καὶ δι' ἐλαχίστου καιροῦ τύχης, ἅμα ἀκμῇ τῆς δόξης δουλείας,) ὡς μεγάλων ἀγαθῶν στερισκόμενοι. Of πενίας ἐλπίδι, meaning 'a hope about his poverty,' (namely, that it might change to riches,) the words following are meant to be explanatory; the sense being, 'a hope that, by even escaping it, he might become rich.'

ποθεινοτέραν αὐτῶν λαβόντες] 'regarding it as more desirable than those objects.' By αὐτῶν is meant those objects of desire, the continued enjoyment of wealth, or the anticipation thereof in hope.

κινδύνων ἅμα τόνδε κάλλιστον νομίσαντες] 'thinking that this danger was of all others the most glorious and honourable.' Μετ' αὐτοῦ, scil. τοῦδε τοῦ κινδύνου. By τῶν δὲ understand the objects just adverted to. Ἐφίεσθαι, appetere, 'to seek the acquirement thereof.' Ἐλπίδι μὲν τὸ ἀφανὲς τοῦ κατορθώσειν ἐπιτρέψαντες, 'committing indeed the uncertainty whether they should succeed or not to hope.' Similarly in Jos. Ant. p. 272, we have, ἀλλ' ἀδήλῳ τῷ μέλλοντι παραδόντας αὐτούς.

ἔργῳ δὲ — πεποιθέναι] 'but resolving, as to what was really present to their view, to rely on themselves and their own exertions.' Of the words following, καὶ ἐν αὐτῷ τὸ ἀμύνεσθαι—σώζεσθαι, the sense is, 'and therein (namely, ἐν ἔργῳ) preferring rather to withstand [the foe] and suffer [the consequences], than to give way and be saved:' of which elliptical use of παθεῖν examples occur in Dionys. Hal. vi. 9, (a passage evidently imitated from the present,) οἷς ἔξεστιν εὐτυχήσασι μὲν ἀμφότερα, σῶσαι καὶ νικᾶν ἀσφαλῶς· εἰ δὲ καὶ μετὰ τοῦ δρᾶσαί τι καὶ παθεῖν γενναῖον, where for σῶσαι I would read σώσασθαι. So 1 Pet. ii. 20, εἰ ἀγαθοποιοῦντες καὶ πάσχοντες ὑπομενεῖτε. Also Herodian, iv. 4, 5, ὑπὸ—ἐπιθυμίας ἐλαυνόμενος διέγνω, δρᾶσαί τι, ἢ παθεῖν, γενναῖον, for so I would there point. The plena locutio in παθεῖν is found also in Eurip. Phœn. 490, κακόν τι δρᾶσαι καὶ παθεῖν ἃ γίγνεται. Μᾶλλον ἡγησ. Pop. and Goell. take as put for προελόμενοι. This, however, does not touch the ratio of the thing. I am disposed to assent to the opinion of Arnold, that 'this passage is to be added to those quoted by Lobeck on Phryn. p. 753, in which the verbs ἡγεῖσθαι, οἴεσθαι, and νομίζειν are used with what is called a sensus prægnans; namely, that by which they contain, besides the simple notion of thinking, the implied one of thinking good, approving, inclining in favour of or to do any thing.' He very properly remarks, that the article τὸ does not interfere with this construction, as appears from infra ch. 53, τὸ μὲν προσταλαιπωρεῖν οὐδεὶς πρόθυμος ἦν, and other examples pointed out by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 542, obs. 2. Here it could not have been dispensed with because of the antithetical τό. Moreover, the art. is not repeated, because it would be detrimental to the sense; παθεῖν being closely connected with τὸ ἀμύνεσθαι, as a consequence or result therefrom; and accordingly there should be no comma in the above passage of I Peter after ἀγαθοποιοῦντες, nor any in that of Eurip. Finally, δρᾶσαι and παθεῖν are as closely connected in the passage of Dionysius, as ἀμύνεσθαι and παθεῖν in this passage of our author; the sense being, 'and if it be necessary, together with the doing some noble exploit, to even suffer [for it].'

τὸ αἰσχρὸν τοῦ λόγου ἔφυγον] 'they have avoided the baseness of the word [beaten].' See Gail. Τὸ αἰσχρὸν τοῦ λ. is for ὃ αἰσχρὸν ἂν ἦν καὶ ἐν τῷ λόγῳ. It is meant to be intimated, that the very name is shameful, much more the thing itself. Similarly supra i. 122, we have, ἴστω οὐκ ἄλλο τι φέρουσαν, ἢ ἄντικρυς δουλείαν· ὃ καὶ λόγῳ ἐνδοιασθῆναι αἰσχρὸν τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ.

καὶ δι' ἐλαχίστου—ἀπηλλάγησαν] 'and, after the short and quickly-decided crisis of their fate, they yielded up their lives;' καιροῦ signifying tempus opportunum, articulus temporis; and τύχης, 'the fortune of battle.' So Terence, Andr. has 'in ipso articulo oppressit:' and Horace, 'Horæ μᾶλλον ἢ τοῦ δέους, ἀπηλλάγησαν. XLIII. Καὶ οἵδε μὲν, προσηκόντως τῇ πόλει, τοιοίδε ἐγένοντο· τοὺς δὲ λοιποὺς χρὴ ἀσφαλεστέραν μὲν εὔχεσθαι, ἀτολμοτέραν δὲ μηδὲν ἀξιοῦν τὴν ἐς τοὺς πολεμίους διάνοιαν ἔχειν, σκοποῦντας μὴ λόγῳ μόνῳ τὴν ὠφέλειαν, (ἣν ἄν τις πρὸς οὐδὲν χεῖρον αὐτοὺς ὑμᾶς εἰδότας μηκύνοι, λέγων ὅσα ἐν τῷ τοὺς πολεμίους ἀμύνεσθαι ἀγαθὰ ἔνεστιν,) ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον τὴν τῆς πόλεως δύναμιν καθ' ἡμέραν ἔργῳ θεωμένους, καὶ ἐραστὰς γιγνομένους αὐτῆς,—καὶ, ὅταν ὑμῖν μεγάλη δόξῃ εἶναι, ἐνθυμουμένους ὅτι τολμῶντες, καὶ γιγνώσκοντες τὰ δέοντα, καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις αἰσχυνόμενοι ἄνδρες αὐτὰ ἐκτήσαντο· καὶ ὁπότε καὶ πείρᾳ του σφαλείησαν, οὔκουν καὶ τὴν πόλιν γε τῆς σφετέρας ἀρετῆς ἀξιοῦντες στερίσκειν, κάλλιστον δὲ ἔρανον αὐτῇ προϊέμενοι. 2. κοινῇ γὰρ τὰ

Momento cita mors venit, aut victoria læta.' With the expression ἀκμῇ τῆς δόξης, compare Herodot. vi. 3, ἐν ἀκμῇ δόξης καὶ κλέους: and Appian, vii. 16, 12, ἐν ἀκμῇ τῆς δόξης—ἀπηλλάχθαι. In the expression following, ἢ τοῦ δέους, there may seem to be some harshness, and even frigidity: but the correctness of the reading is established by all the MSS., and confirmed by a passage, evidently written in imitation of the present, in Dio Cass. 240, 57, ἐν ἀκμῇ τοῦ δέους ὤν. Render, 'summa cum gloria, potius quam summo timore decesserunt;' the meaning being, as the Schol. explains, ἐν εὐδοξίᾳ, καὶ οὐχὶ δειλίᾳ, ἀπέθανον. Finally, hence may be understood and illustrated an obscure expression in Hor. Carm. iv. 4, 75, 'Quas —curæ sagaces Expediunt per acuta belli,' i. e. τὰ τοῦ πολέμου ὀξύῤῥοπα. So Tacit. 'subita belli.'

τοὺς δὲ λοιποὺς — διάνοιαν ἔχειν] Of these words Poppo lays down the sense as follows: 'Superstites quidem supplicare debent diis, ut pro patria pugnantes vitam tutius conservent, quam illi (pro patria defuncti) non minorem tamen putent sensum virtutis declarandum esse adversus hostes.' And Gottleb. 'optandum quidem est, ut superstites talem sensum, animum, habeant, quo sint tutiores, q. d. reliquos oportet quidem optare meliorem fortunam [seu tutiorem vitam].' Similarly in Soph. Aj. 521, we have, ὦ παῖ, γένοιο πατρὸς εὐτυχέστερος, Τὰ δ' ἄλλ' ὅμοιος. Διάνοιαν stands for φρόνημα, 'temper of mind,' 'disposition.' So in a passage of St. Paul, Phil. ii. 5, τοῦτο φρονείσθω ἐν ὑμῖν ὃ καὶ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

σκοποῦντας μὴ λόγῳ μόνῳ — αὐτῆς] Meaning, 'not in mere words, speculating and reasoning, as one might do at large, to those who know every thing as well as ourselves,—on the propriety and utility of defending our country, but in act and deed, continually keeping in view the power of the state, and becoming as it were enamoured thereof.' So in a passage of Diodorus we have, ἐρασταὶ τῆς πολιτείας.

καὶ ὅταν ὑμῖν—ἐκτήσαντο] 'and when its greatness strikes you, reflecting that men daring and adventurous, both knowing their duties, and in discharging them, keenly alive to shame, acquired these things, or brought about this state of things.' (See infra v. 9, and supra i. 35; and compare Hom. Il. v. 530. xv. 563.) Τολμῶντες stands for τολμηροὶ, as in Eurip. Phœn. 277.

καὶ ὁπότε καὶ πείρᾳ του σφαλείησαν] 'and whenever they even failed in their attempt to attain any object;' as supra i. 70, ἢν δ' ἄρα καί του πείρᾳ σφαλῶσι.

οὔκουν καὶ τὴν πόλιν — στερίσκειν] 'nevertheless unwilling at any rate to deprive the state of their valour,' i. e. unwilling that the state should be deprived of the benefit of their valour [even though they had failed to honour it by victory].' Of the next words (which are highly animated and energetic) the sense is, 'but contributed (lit. cast down or forth) the noblest and best offering [to its benefit],' namely, that of their lives, as is just after intimated. In ἔρανον προϊέμενοι there is a metaphor supposed to be taken from the custom of the ἔρανος, or 'pic-nic,' by which persons contributed each his share to a common entertainment: or rather, as the word ἔρανος meant also, 'the money subscribed in common by the members of a friendly society,' for their individual relief when in distress; to this, as is thought, the allusion may be intended: an opinion

σώματα διδόντες, ἰδίᾳ τὸν ἀγήρων ἔπαινον ἐλάμβανον, καὶ τὸν τάφον ἐπισημότατον, οὐκ ἐν ᾧ κεῖνται μᾶλλον, ἀλλ' ἐν ᾧ ἡ δόξα αὐτῶν παρὰ τῷ ἐντυχόντι ἀεὶ καὶ λόγου καὶ ἔργου καιρῷ ἀείμνηστος καταλείπεται. 3. ἀνδρῶν γὰρ ἐπιφανῶν πᾶσα γῆ τάφος, καὶ οὐ στηλῶν μόνον ἐν τῇ οἰκείᾳ σημαίνει ἐπιγραφή, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τῇ μὴ προσηκούσῃ ἄγραφος μνήμη παρ' ἑκάστῳ, τῆς γνώμης μᾶλλον ἢ τοῦ

confirmed by the words following, κοινῇ —δίδοντες, ἰδίᾳ τὸν ἀγήρων ἔπαινον ἐλάμβανον. Hence the Schol. well explains ἔρανον by συνεισφοράν, lit. 'a joint-offering,' i. e. as Arn. defines it, 'a tribute to their country, which all those who fell in her service jointly presented:' and by ἰδίᾳ ἐλάμβανον it is intimated, that the sacrifice they jointly made, was repaid to them individually in a deathless fame, secured to each by his having his name recorded on the monument erected to those who fell in battle. Beyond this general correspondence we must not attempt to carry the allusion, nor suppose any allusion to the customs of the ἔρανος, whether as a pic-nic entertainment, or as a common benefit-society; on which see Boeckh, and also Holst de Eranis Græcorum, Lugd. Bat. 1832. Indeed, the term ἔρανος was, by the Greeks, transferred from the symbola conviviorum to various other kinds of contribution, as appears from Eurip. Suppl. 363, κάλλιστον ἔρανον δοὺς, where it is used of duty to parents: and so in Diog. Laërt. i. 37, we have οὓς ἂν ἐράνους εἰσενέγκας τοῖς γονεῦσι, τοὺς αὐτοὺς προσδέχου καὶ παρὰ τῶν τέκνων: and Demosth. καλὸς ἔρανος χάρις δικαία. Isocr. Plat. § 23. Very similar to the present is a passage of Xen. Cyr. vii. 1, 12, where Cyrus thus addresses his soldiers: Ὦ ἄνδρες, εἰς τίνα ποτ' ἂν καλλίονα ἔρανον ἀλλήλους παρακαλέσαιμεν, ἢ εἰς τόνδε; Νῦν γὰρ ἔξεστιν ἀγαθοῖς ἀνδράσι γενομένοις πολλὰ κἀγαθὰ ἀλλήλοις εἰσενεγκεῖν. Evidently imitated from this passage of our author is one in Dionys. Art. Rhet. p. 236, cited by Gottleb. (with an application to matrimony and child-bearing,) καὶ τοῦτον ἂν τις εἴποι δικαίως κάλλιστον ἔρανον, οὐ χρημάτων ἀλλ' αὐτῆς τῆς φύσεως, where the writer might also have in view the words of the spokeswoman of the chorus of women, in Aristoph. Lys. 650, τοῦ 'ράνου γάρ μοι μέτεστι· καὶ γὰρ ἄνδρας εἰσφέρω. Finally, from this passage of our author may be sufficiently confirmed the conjecture of Scaliger in Lycurg. cont. Leoc. 168, 18, καὶ δεήσεται καὶ ἱκετεύσει ἐλεῆσαι αὐτὸν τίνων; οὐχ οἷς τὸν αὐτὸν ἔρανον εἰς τὴν σωτηρίαν εἰσενεγκεῖν οὐκ ἐτόλμησεν, where all the MSS. have, quite incorrectly, τῶν αὐτῶν ἐράνων.

In προϊέμενοι we have a highly forcible expression, answering to profundere in Latin; as in the Ciceronian, 'vitam profundere pro patriâ,' and the Virgilian, 'projecere animas,' Æn. vi. 436; with which comp. the yet finer figure in Isaiah liii. 12, 'because he hath poured out his soul unto death.' Προϊέσθαι is so used in Xen. Anab. i. 9, 7, τὰ ἑαυτῶν σώματα προεμένοι, where, as here, the sense is, giving up their bodies. Similarly, in a passage of Daniel iii. 28, we have παρέδωκαν (yielded up) τὰ σώματα εἰς πῦρ: and in Aristid. iii. 261, τὰ σώματα εἰσήνεγκα.

3. ἀνδρῶν γὰρ ἐπιφανῶν πᾶσα γῆ τάφος] By πᾶσα γῆ is to be understood, not the whole earth, but the whole country of which they are citizens. So in Epigr. Anth. p. 236, we have μνῆμα μὲν Ἑλλὰς ἅπασ' Εὐριπίδου. Evidently imitated from the present are the words of Dio Cass. 688, 16, ὥστε σοί τε (I conj. γε) ἀγαθῷ ὄντι, πᾶσα γῆ τεμένισμά ἐστι, and Phil. Jud. 530, ἀποθανόντων δὲ πᾶσα γῆ τάφος.

ἄγραφος μνήμη—τῆς γνώμης—ἐνδιαιτᾶται] Constr. ἄγρ. μνήμη τῆς γνώμης μᾶλλον ἢ τοῦ ἔργου, ἐνδ. παρ' ἑκάστῳ. With ἄγραφος μνήμη here, as opposed to that ἐν γράμμασι διὰ ἐπιγραφῆς, compare Æschin. p. 80, 43, οὐ γὰρ ᾤοντο δεῖν ἐν τοῖς γράμμασι τιμᾶσθαι, ἀλλ' ἐν τῇ μνήμῃ τῶν εὖ πεπονθότων, ἣ ἀπ' ἐκείνου τοῦ χρόνου μέχρι τῆσδε τῆς ἡμέρας ἀθάνατος οὖσα διαμένει.

By τῆς γνώμης μᾶλλον ἢ τοῦ ἔργου is meant an unwritten memorial of mind and heart, rather than such as consists in any material or external monument. An elegant turn of expression, with which compare a yet more recondite one in a passage of St. Paul, 2 Cor. iii. 3, ἐπιστολὴ γεγραμμένη οὐκ ἐν πλαξὶ λιθίναις, ἀλλ' ἐν πλαξὶ καρδίας σαρκίναις: and so Æschyl. Prom. 814, ἣν ἐγγράφου σὺ μνήμοσιν δελτοῖς φρενῶν. Of ἐνδιαιτᾶται, the sense is, 'is seated,' 'has its abode,' as in Procop. p. 92.

ἔργου, ἐνδιαιτᾶται. 4. οὓς νῦν ὑμεῖς ζηλώσαντες, καὶ τὸ εὔδαιμον τὸ ἐλεύθερον, τὸ δὲ ἐλεύθερον τὸ εὔψυχον κρίναντες, μὴ περιορᾶσθε τοὺς πολεμικοὺς κινδύνους. 5. οὐ γὰρ οἱ κακοπραγοῦντες δικαιότερον ἀφειδοῖεν ἂν τοῦ βίου, οἷς ἐλπὶς οὐκ ἔστ' ἀγαθοῦ, ἀλλ' οἷς ἡ ἐναντία μεταβολὴ ἐν τῷ ζῆν ἔτι κινδυνεύεται, καὶ ἐν οἷς μάλιστα μεγάλα τὰ διαφέροντα, ἢν τι πταίσωσιν. 6. ἀλγεινοτέρα γὰρ ἀνδρὶ γε φρόνημα ἔχοντι ἡ [ἐν τῷ] μετὰ τοῦ μαλακισθῆναι κάκωσις, ἢ ὁ μετὰ ῥώμης καὶ κοινῆς ἐλπίδος ἅμα γιγνόμενος ἀναίσθητος

4. μὴ περιορᾶσθε] 'ne recusetis:' a rare sense.

5. οὐ γὰρ οἱ κακοπραγοῦντες δικαιότερον ἀφειδοῖεν ἂν τοῦ βίου] This, I would not, with the Schol., regard as a paradox, but rather a pre-occupation, by the speaker, of an argument on the part of the rich,—namely, that they, having the means for enjoyment, ought not to hazard themselves in war, but leave it to the poor, who have not such; and who, therefore, having nothing to lose, may and do run all hazards: for, as we find from the Schol. on Eurip. Phœn. 600, (cited by Poppo,) it was a commonly received notion, τοὺς πλουσίους δειλοὺς εἶναι πρὸς θάνατον, τοὺς πένητας ῥιψοκινδύνους εἶναι: which may call to mind a well-known story in Horace: now the answer to this is, that 'even they are not certain of their possessions, but have to fear a reverse, which they ought to provide against.' With the phrase here, ἀφειδοῖεν ἂν τοῦ βίου, compare Soph. El. 967, ψυχῆς ἀφ. and Aristot. Eth. iv. 8, 3, ἀφειδεῖ τοῦ βίου, ὡς οὐκ ἄξιον ὂν ζῆν: and with ἡ ἐναντία μεταβολή, 'the change to the opposite condition,' comp. Procop. p. 146, 3. Of ἐν τῷ ζῆν, the sense is, 'while they live.' Ἔτι κινδυνεύεται, 'is yet hazarded,' 'at hazard.' So Demosth., ἐν οἷς τῶν ὅλων τι κινδυνεύεται τῇ πόλει: see note on ch. 35.

6. [ἐν τῷ] μετὰ τοῦ] This reading, though found in all the MSS., is evidently a jumble of two readings, ἐν τῷ and μετὰ τοῦ,—because while one expression is tantamount in sense to the other, it cannot be united with it, without an offensive pleonasm. In choosing between them, we cannot but prefer μετὰ τοῦ, as bearing a strong affinity to other expressions found in Thucyd. e. gr. i. 6, μετὰ τοῦ γυμνάζεσθαι, where some MSS. have ἐν τῷ γ. Ἐν τῷ here is the more suspicious, from having its place different in different MSS., an almost certain proof that it came from the margin. I have, however, forborne to cancel it, from want of external evidence; for, as Stobæus, a compiler of fine sentiments, is often a compressor of seeming superfluity, and Tusanus's readings are generally mere conjectures; yet internal evidence is so strongly against ἐν τῷ, that I have placed it in double brackets, and should have cancelled it had one MS. sanctioned this step. The obscurity of this passage is partly occasioned by corruption. Bekk. attempts to heal the corruption by editing τῳ, yet that yields a very jejune sense. Render, 'far more grievous, to a high-minded man, is the misery which comes immediately after giving way to his enemy, than the stroke of death, being withal unfelt, that comes amidst strength and common hope.' Κάκωσις signifies lit. 'a worsening,' 'a change for the worse,' (denoted by ἡ ἐναντία μεταβολή, just before,) and its accompanying annoyance and wretchedness. Μαλακισθῆναι is, as Goell. and Pop. very properly observe, equiv. to μαλακὸν ἑαυτὸν παρέχειν at ch. 42, 4, meaning the misery produced by cowardice: see Sallust, Catil. 20. Of κοινῆς ἐλπίδος, the sense is, not 'public hope,' but 'common hope,' meaning, 'hope common to all, each man fancying that he shall escape, though his neighbour fall;' since, in the well-known words of Dr. Young, 'All men think all men mortal but themselves:' to which purpose, are the words supra i. 141, τὸ μὲν πιστὸν ἔχοντες ἐκ τῶν κινδύνων κἂν περιγενέσθαι. Γιγνόμενος ἀναίσθητος is not well rendered by Portus and Hobbes, sensu carens, as an epithet of death; a sense, this, not a little frigid: rather, 'being almost unfelt;' in confirmation and illustration of which rendering, see various passages (evidently imitated from the present) of Dio Cass. 400, 22. 522, 4, and Appian ii. 693. The epithet is meant to intimate, how speedily the pang of death in battle is over, as compared with that which comes on after the protracted suffering of lingering disease: so Lord Russel is known to have said, a little before his execution, that he thought a violent death was a very desirable mode of ending life; it was only to suffer the pain of one minute, which he was confident was not equal to the pain of drawing a tooth. 'Men (observes Dr. South) may bring themselves to think death little or nothing,—ceasing while it is endured,—and probably without pain.' 'So,' says Bp. Jer. Taylor (Works, v. 293), 'have I known a bold trooper, in battle, warm with rage, receive wounds gaping as a grave,—but he felt them not.'

θάνατος. XLIV. Διόπερ καὶ τοὺς τῶνδε νῦν τοκέας, ὅσοι πάρεστε, οὐκ ὀλοφύρομαι μᾶλλον, ἢ παραμυθήσομαι. ἐν πολυτρόποις γὰρ ξυμφοραῖς ἐπίστανται τραφέντες· τὸ δ' εὐτυχὲς, οἳ ἂν τῆς εὐπρεπεστάτης λάχωσιν, ὥσπερ οἵδε μὲν νῦν τελευτῆς, ὑμεῖς δὲ, λύπης· καὶ οἷς ἐνευδαιμονῆσαί τε ὁ βίος ὁμοίως καὶ ἐντελευτῆσαι ξυνεμετρήθη.

CH. XLIV. The speaker now turns from the topics of confirmation and exhortation to those of consolation, as addressed to those at whose loss their country's gain has been promoted: and, first, the parents of the deceased.

1. διόπερ] 'wherefore,' 'such being the case.' The speaker here does not so much bewail their fate, as proceed to comfort them in their sorrows; the ὀλόφυρσις being, indeed, excluded by the foregoing considerations, as the παραμυθία is founded on the subsequent consideration, namely, that such deprivations, however bitter, are according to the course of nature, it being as certain as the assurance of divine truth can make it, that 'man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upward;' or, as it is said by Timocles, ap. Athen. 223, B, ἄνθρωπός ἐστι ζῶον ἐπίπονον φύσει, Καὶ πολλὰ λυπῆρ' ὁ βίος ἐν ἑαυτῷ φέρει.

ἐν πολυτρόποις ξυμφοραῖς ἐπίστανται τραφέντες] 'they know that they were born and bred to diversified events [both prosperous and adverse].' So in Jos. Ant. Procem. § 2, we have ὁμιλήσας τύχαις πολυτρόποις. Plut. Alcib. ἐν τύχαις πολυτρόποις. On this sensus prægnans in τρέφεσθαι, see Matth. Gr. Gr. In ξυμφ. we have a word of middle signification.

τὸ δ' εὐτυχὲς—λύπης] Render, 'but fortunate are they who, like those, are destined to the noblest death, or, like you, to the noblest sorrow.' Goell. regards the construction as a blending of two modes of expression, τὸ δ' εὐτυχὲς, ἐάν τις λάχῃ, or εὐτυχεῖς δέ εἰσιν, οἳ ἂν λάχωσιν: see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 481, obs. 2, who adduces several examples of the idiom.

καὶ οἷς ἐνευδαιμονῆσαι—ξυνεμετρήθη] These words involve no little difficulty, partly from extreme brevity, and partly from the affectation, occasionally found elsewhere in our author, of expressing a common sentiment in an uncommon manner, whether by antithesis, point, or otherwise; a fault severely animadverted on by Longinus de Subl. § 3, and there termed the puerile, σχολαστικὴ νόησις ὑπὸ περιεργίας λήγουσα εἰς ψυχρότητα, (the frigid!) This fault, he further observes, is one into which those are apt to run, οἱ ὀρεγόμενοι τοῦ περιττοῦ καὶ πεποιημένου, 'who are fond of the affected and the artificial,' lit. 'the made up.' Now the τὸ περιττὸν τῆς λέξεως (or affected diction) is attributed to our author by Dionys. Hal.; who, however, servilely imitates him in this above every other, and accordingly, to use the words of Longinus a little after, ὑποκέλλει εἰς ῥωπικὸν καὶ κακόζηλον: but to proceed,—though the sentiment here expressed seems simply, that 'fortunate are they to whom life has been measured out,' ὥστε ἐν εὐδαιμονίᾳ καὶ ζῆσαι καὶ τελευτῆσαι, (as the Schol. explains,) yet the words involve a difficulty both grammatical and exegetical, which Pop. thinks may be obviated, by supposing that at ἐντελευτῆσαι, a εὖ is to be supplied from the preceding ἐνευδαιμονῆσαι, of which idiom, examples, as Poppo shows, may be seen in Schaefer on Greg. Cor. p. 1032, and on Demosth. Olynth. p. 20: thus it will be, as though ἐνευτελευτῆσαι (which Reiske conjectured to be the true reading) had been written; and the meaning intended will be, 'to whom life has been measured out, alike to be fortunate in, and to die happy in.' It may, indeed, be asked, how any one can be said, ἐν τῷ βίῳ τελευτᾶν? I answer—we have only to consider this as one of those bold expressions, which (especially in the case of pointed sentences like the present) are not to be too rigidly pressed on, especially in the case of a writer like Thucydides, who ἐν πᾶσι φεύγει τὴν συνήθειαν, affecting out of the way, and, occasionally, far-fetched expressions. In the greatest writers, indeed, there are found bold expressions of this kind, savouring of poetic and lyric character. This is perpetually the case as respects our great English Æschylus, Shakspeare, and more or less applies to

2. χαλεπὸν μὲν οὖν οἶδα πεῖθειν ὃν, ὧν καὶ πολλάκις ἔξετε ὑπομνήματα ἐν ἄλλων εὐτυχίαις, αἷς ποτὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ ἠγάλλεσθε· καὶ λύπη οὐχ ὧν ἄν τις μὴ πειρασάμενος ἀγαθῶν στερίσκηται, ἀλλ' οὗ ἂν ἐθὰς γενόμενος ἀφαιρεθῇ. 3. καρτερεῖν δὲ χρὴ καὶ ἄλλων παίδων ἐλπίδι, οἷς ἔτι ἡλικία τέκνωσιν ποιεῖσθαι· ἰδίᾳ τε γὰρ τῶν οὐκ ὄντων λήθη οἱ ἐπιγιγνόμενοί τισιν ἔσονται, καὶ τῇ πόλει διχόθεν, ἔκ τε τοῦ μὴ ἐρημοῦσθαι καὶ ἀσφαλείᾳ, ξυνοίσει· οὐ γὰρ οἷόν τε

Milton, Dryden, Pope, and especially Young. Thus, it is well known, that for the line, 'A horrid stillness first invades the ear,' Dryden was persecuted with perpetual ridicule by the petty critics; but, as Johnson shows, undeservedly: and here there is really nothing substantial at which to carp; since the dying hour, or closing scene, may correctly be said to form part of life. There is, I repeat, nothing really to object to; since, after all, the sentiment intended can only be, that 'their life does not outlive their happiness.' In short, the exegetical difficulty is purely imaginary, and the grammatical one may be encountered as above. If, however, it should be thought to involve too much harshness, we may read, εὖ τελευτῆσαι, as Poppo conjectures; or rather, as thus the antithetical turn at εν would be destroyed, we may read, κἀν εὖ τελ., a change so slight as scarcely to need authority from MSS. Thus, the ἐν will be like ξὺν at iii. 13, μὴ ξὺν κακῶς ποιεῖν αὐτούς, ἀλλὰ ξυνελευθεροῦν, where, for the sake of greater distinctness of opposition, a similar boldness is hazarded.

2. χαλεπὸν μὲν οὖν—ἠγάλλεσθε] 'difficult, however, I wot, it is to persuade you respecting those of whom you will often have memorials in the good fortune of others, wherein ye too yourselves once exulted.' Of πείθ. the literal and full sense is, 'to induce them [to be comforted], or receive comfort:' there being here a sensus prægnans, as in Xen. Hist. i. 7, 4, τοιαῦτα λέγοντες ἔπειθον τὸν δῆμον, and Æschin. ap. Steph. Thes. 7325, οὐ πείσαντες τὸν δῆμον, and Lysias, p. 520. With ἔξετε ὑπομνήματα, 'ye will be reminded,' (lit. reminiscimenta habebitis,) compare Dem. 1412, 8, παρ' ὅλον τὸν βίον τῆς ἑαυτῶν ἀγνωσίας ὑπομνήματα ἔχουσι, and 1193, 2, ὑπομνήματα πολλὰ λαμβάνουσα. Æschin. 60, 17. Liban. Or. 375, A. For the sentiment comp. Isocr. Plat. § 19, p. 530, ἐν τοῖς τῶν πέλας ἀγαθοῖς τὰς ἡμετέρας αὐτῶν συμφορὰς καθορῶντες. By εὐτυχίαις understand 'the good fortune' of their children being preserved to them. In ἠγάλλεσθε we have a highly significant term, meaning 'ye exultingly rejoiced,' equivalent to ἀγαλλιᾶσθαι in the later Greek writers.

καὶ λύπη οὐχ—ἀφαιρεθῇ] 'and sorrow [rises] not so much for the loss of that whereof we are bereft while yet untried, as for what may be snatched from us after having experienced its value.' Similar is the sentiment expressed in a passage adduced by Arn. from Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 82. And evidently imitated from the present are the following passages, Isidor. Epist. v. 144, καὶ οὐχ οὕτω λυπεῖ τὸ μὴ κτηθὲν, ὡς ἡ τῶν ὑπαρξάντων στέρησις. Philo Jud. 717, E, λυπεῖ γὰρ οὐ τὸ μὴ γεύσασθαι τῶν χρηστῶν, ὡς ἡ μετὰ τὴν πεῖραν στέρησις.

3. καρτερεῖν δὲ χρὴ, &c.] Meaning to say, that 'though it is, he knows, difficult to induce them to receive comfort under the loss of blessings whose value they had learnt by experience to dearly prize,—yet they should bear up under the hope of new ties and fresh affections, to supply the place of those they had lost.' This use of καρτερεῖν for ἀνέχεσθαι, 'to bear up,' is Attic, and the force of the dative is upon, i. e. 'by resting upon.' So in a passage of Isocr. in Archid. we have, δεῖ καρτερεῖν ἐπὶ (under, amidst) τοῖς παροῦσι, καὶ θαῤῥεῖν περὶ τῶν μελλόντων. Τέκνωσιν ποιεῖσθαι stands for τεκνοποιεῖν.

ἰδίᾳ γὰρ—ξυνοίσει] Render, 'for thus the children subsequently born will, in a private view, to some prove the means of oblivion as respects the departed; and, in a public view, the thing will benefit the state,—and that doubly, by preventing its depopulation, and by contributing to its security.' The nominative to ξυνοίσει is τέκνωσιν ποιεῖσθαι. Λήθη stands, per metonym., for the cause of forgetfulness. Διχόθεν, 'doubly, in two ways,' as in Jos. Bell. iv. 4, 5. Aristid. i. 194, C. With the elegant turn in διχόθεν ξυνοίσει, compare one, evidently imitated from it, in Jos. Ant. xvii. 6, 5, διχόθεν αὐτὸν οὐχ ἁμαρτήσαντας τοῦ εὐφρανοῦντος κυρώσει τε ὧν ἐπιστείλειεν αὐτοῖς, μέλλων τελευτᾶν, καὶ τὸ (I conj. τῷ) πένθει ἀξιολόγῳ τετιμῆσθαι: and another in Philo Jud. 898, D, τὴν δὲ οὐσίαν

οὐ γὰρ οἷον, &c.] 'Hac altera enunciatione causali cur tutius actura sit urbs, explicatur.' (Goell.) By ἴσον is meant æquum, 'impartial;' compare i. 91, 6. The words, a little after, οἳ ἂν μὴ—κινδυνεύωσιν, are best rendered by Bauer and Poppo, 'qui non ipsi periclitentur perinde ac alii, liberis suis in pericula pro republica datis.' Compare note on iii. 14. Similarly in Dio Cass. 304, we have, μετὰ γυναικῶν καὶ παιδῶν πάντα γε ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου παραβαλλόμενοι. Hence we see the reason of the Attic law, mentioned by Dinarch. c. Demosth., that all public orators and generals should procreate lawful children; evidently in order that they might thus have a stake in the country, and the country have a firmer hold on their fidelity.

The phrase κέρδος ἡγεῖσθαι is equiv. to the Latin lucro apponere, 'to think clear gain,' and therefore to be content with. So in Appian, i. 369, 6, ὅ τι ἂν λάβητε, κέρδος ἡγεῖσθε. Xen. Cyr. iv. 2, 43, κέρδος ἡγ. Hence is formed the very rare phrase (found in Xenoph. Mem.) ζημίαν ἡγεῖσθαι: and hence may be illustrated an obscure passage of Joseph. Ant. xv. 5, 5, κέρδος δ' εἰ θνήσκοιεν, τὴν συμφορὰν τὸ ζῆν ποιούμενοι, where ποιούμενοι must be taken twice. Of the phrase κέρδος ποιεῖσθαι, I know of no other example. It seems formed on this of our author, and that of Herodot. vi. 13, 12, ἐν κέρδεϊ ἐποιεῦντο περιποιῆσαι τά τε ἱρὰ τὰ σφέτερα καὶ τὰ ἴδια. Occasionally κερδαίνειν is found used instead of κέρδος ἡγεῖσθαι. So Lucian, ii. 284, 94, μαθὼν οὖν ὅτι ἀλλὸ (read ἄλλως, in vain) ἐβόων, ἔγνων σιγῆ προϊέναι, καὶ κερδαίνειν τὸ μὴ παίεσθαι, where the accus. is dependent on κατὰ understood, and with that it is equiv. to a dative, which indeed is found in a passage of Herodot. viii. 60, Μεγάροισι κερδαινέομεν περιεοῦσι. Finally, so in Eurip. Hippol. 642, we have, κερδαίνει ('rest content with') σωφροσύνην: and hence may be understood an obscure passage of Æschyl. Theb. 694, λέγουσα κέρδος πρότερον ὑστέρου μόρου, where λέγουσα stands for ἡγουμένη, (by a use of the word frequent in Eurip., Soph., and Herodot.; see Markl. on Euripides, Hippol. 869.) and there is an ellipsis of εἶναι. Further illustration may be sought from Lysias, p. 137, εἰ δὲ πάλαι ἔδεον τιμωρεῖσθαι, ὕστερον ὑμεῖς τιμωρούμεθα, τὸν χρόνον κερδαίνει, ὃν ἔζη, οὐ προσῆκον αὐτῷ, 'he is a gainer by the time he lives;' where the writer had probably in view this passage of our author; and also, I conceive, one of Eurip. Heracl. 954, Matth. δεῖ σε κατθανεῖν κακῶς. Καὶ κερδανεῖς ἅπαντα ('you will be altogether a gainer), χρῆν γὰρ οὐχ ἅπαξ θνήσκειν σὲ, πολλὰ πήματ' ἐξειργασμένον. Certainly the editors on Lysias need not to have resorted to conjecture at τὸν χρόνον κερδαίνει, since the common reading there is sufficiently defended by a passage of Eurip. Phryx. frag. v. 9, Εἰ δέ τις πράσσει καλῶς Κακὸς πεφυκώς, τὸν χρόνον κερδαινέτω· Χρόνῳ γὰρ οὗτος ὕστερον δώσει δίκην. Hence appears the sense in an obscure passage of Eurip. Or. 779, τῷ χρόνῳ δὲ (I conj. γε) κερδανεῖς: as also Med. 440, πᾶν κέρδος ἡγοῦ, ζημιουμένη φυγῇ, 'be content with being punished by banishment, [whereas you merited death].'

The motive of comfort here urged, is the same as that adverted to in Aristot. Rhet. p. 129, where it is said that elderly men ζῶσι τῇ μνήμῃ μᾶλλον ἢ τῇ ἐλπίδι· τοῦ γὰρ βίου τὸ μὲν λοιπὸν ὀλίγον, τὸ δὲ παρεληλυθὸς πολύ. Comp. also Philostr. Epist. 93.

τόνδε] Meaning, this life [that now is before you], the remainder of your existence. With the words following, καὶ τῇ τῶνδε εὐκλείᾳ κουφίζεσθε, 'and be lightened [as your sorrows] by the glory of these,' compare Demosth. 1400, 7, λόγῳ κουφίζειν τὰς συμφοράς: and so erigo in Latin, as in the Ciceronian, animum demissum erigere. Sometimes, however, the term

2. χαλεπὸν μὲν οὖν οἶδα πείθειν ὄν, ὧν καὶ πολλάκις ἔξετε ὑπομνήματα ἐν ἄλλων εὐτυχίαις, αἷς ποτὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ ἠγάλλεσθε· καὶ λύπη οὐχ ὧν ἄν τις μὴ πειρασάμενος ἀγαθῶν στερίσκηται, ἀλλ' οὗ ἂν ἐθὰς γενόμενος ἀφαιρεθῇ. 3. καρτερεῖν δὲ χρὴ καὶ ἄλλων παίδων ἐλπίδι, οἷς ἔτι ἡλικία τέκνωσιν ποιεῖσθαι· ἰδίᾳ τε γὰρ τῶν οὐκ ὄντων λήθη οἱ ἐπιγιγνόμενοί τισιν ἔσονται, καὶ τῇ πόλει διχόθεν, ἔκ τε τοῦ μὴ ἐρημοῦσθαι καὶ ἀσφαλείᾳ, ξυνοίσει· οὐ γὰρ οἷόν τε

Milton, Dryden, Pope, and especially Young. Thus, it is well known, that for the line, 'A horrid stillness first invades the ear,' Dryden was persecuted with perpetual ridicule by the petty critics; but, as Johnson shows, undeservedly: and here there is really nothing substantial at which to carp; since the dying hour, or closing scene, may correctly be said to form part of life. There is, I repeat, nothing really to object to; since, after all, the sentiment intended can only be, that 'their life does not outlive their happiness.' In short, the exegetical difficulty is purely imaginary, and the grammatical one may be encountered as above. If, however, it should be thought to involve too much harshness, we may read, εὖ τελευτῆσαι, as Poppo conjectures; or rather, as thus the antithetical turn at ἐν would be destroyed, we may read, κἂν εὖ τελ., a change so slight as scarcely to need authority from MSS. Thus, the ἐν will be like ξὺν at iii. 13, μὴ ξὺν κακῶς ποιεῖν αὐτοὺς, ἀλλὰ ξυνελευθεροῦν, where, for the sake of greater distinctness of opposition, a similar boldness is hazarded.

2. χαλεπὸν μὲν οὖν—ἠγάλλεσθε] 'difficult, however, I wot, it is to persuade you respecting those of whom you will often have memorials in the good fortune of others, wherein ye too yourselves once exulted.' Of πείθ. the literal and full sense is, 'to induce them [to be comforted], or receive comfort:' there being here a sensus prægnans, as in Xen. Hist. i. 7, 4, τοιαῦτα λέγοντες ἔπειθον τὸν δῆμον, and Æschin. ap. Steph. Thes. 7325, οὐ πείσαντες τὸν δῆμον, and Lysias, p. 520. With ἔξετε ὑπομνήματα, 'ye will be reminded,' (lit. reminiscimenta habebitis,) compare Dem. 1412, 8, παρ' ὅλον τὸν βίον τῆς ἑαυτῶν ἀγνωσίας ὑπομνήματα ἔχουσι, and 1193, 2, ὑπομνήματα πολλὰ λαμβάνουσα. Æschin. 60, 17. Liban. Or. 375, A. For the sentiment comp. Isocr. Plat. § 19, p. 530, ἐν τοῖς τῶν πέλας ἀγαθοῖς τὰς ἡμετέρας αὐτῶν συμφορὰς καθορῶντες. By εὐτυχίαις understand 'the good fortune' of their children being preserved to them. In ἠγάλλεσθε we have a highly significant term, meaning 'ye exultingly rejoiced,' equivalent to ἀγαλλιᾶσθαι in the later Greek writers.

καὶ λύπη οὐχ—ἀφαιρεθῇ] 'and sorrow [rises] not so much for the loss of that whereof we are bereft while yet untried, as for what may be snatched from us after having experienced its value.' Similar is the sentiment expressed in a passage adduced by Arn. from Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 82. And evidently imitated from the present are the following passages, Isidor. Epist. v. 144, καὶ οὐχ οὕτω λυπεῖ τὸ μὴ κτηθὲν, ὡς ἡ τῶν ὑπαρξάντων στέρησις. Philo Jud. 717, E, λυπεῖ γὰρ οὐ τὸ μὴ γεύσασθαι τῶν χρηστῶν, ὡς ἡ μετὰ τὴν πεῖραν στέρησις.

3. καρτερεῖν δὲ χρή, &c.] Meaning to say, that 'though it is, he knows, difficult to induce them to receive comfort under the loss of blessings whose value they had learnt by experience to dearly prize,—yet they should bear up under the hope of new ties and fresh affections, to supply the place of those they had lost.' This use of καρτερεῖν for ἀνέχεσθαι, 'to bear up,' is Attic, and the force of the dative is upon, i. e. 'by resting upon.' So in a passage of Isocr. in Archid. we have, δεῖ καρτερεῖν ἐπὶ (under, amidst) τοῖς παροῦσι, καὶ θαῤῥεῖν περὶ τῶν μελλόντων. Τέκνωσιν ποιεῖσθαι stands for τεκνοποιεῖν.

ἰδίᾳ γὰρ—ξυνοίσει] Render, 'for thus the children subsequently born will, in a private view, to some prove the means of oblivion as respects the departed; and, in a public view, the thing will benefit the state,—and that doubly, by preventing its depopulation, and by contributing to its security.' The nominative to ξυνοίσει is τέκνωσιν ποιεῖσθαι. Λήθη stands, per metonym., for the cause of forgetfulness. Διχόθεν, 'doubly, in two ways,' as in Jos. Bell. iv. 4, 5. Aristid. i. 194, C. With the elegant turn in διχόθεν ξυνοίσει, compare one, evidently imitated from it, in Jos. Ant. xvii. 6, 5, διχόθεν αὐτὸν οὐχ ἁμαρτήσαντας τοῦ εὐφρανοῦντος κυρώσει τε ὢν ἐπιστείλειεν αὐτοῖς, μέλλων τελευτᾶν, καὶ τὸ (I conj. τῷ) πένθει ἀξιολόγῳ τετιμῆσθαι: and another in Philo Jud. 898, D, τὴν δὲ οὐσίαν

οὐ γὰρ οἷον, &c.] 'Hac altera enunciatione causali cur tutius actura sit urbs, explicatur.' (Goell.) By ἴσον is meant æquum, 'impartial;' compare i. 91, 6. The words, a little after, οἳ ἂν μὴ—κινδυνεύωσιν, are best rendered by Bauer and Poppo, 'qui non ipsi periclitentur perinde ac alii, liberis suis in periculo pro republica datis.' Compare note on iii. 14. Similarly in Dio Cass. 304, we have, μετὰ γυναικῶν καὶ παιδῶν πάντα γε ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου παραβαλλόμενοι. Hence we see the reason of the Attic law, mentioned by Dinarch. c. Demosth., that all public orators and generals should procreate lawful children; evidently in order that they might thus have a stake in the country, and the country have a firmer hold on their fidelity.

4. παρηβήκατε] 'are past the flower or vigour of your age.' Of this somewhat rare term examples occur in Herodot. iii. 53, and Æschyl. Ag. 957. Of the words following, τόν τε πλείονα κέρδος, ὃν εὐτυχεῖτε, βίον ἡγεῖσθε, the construction is, τόν τε πλείονα βίον ὃν εὐτυχεῖτε κέρδος ἡγ.: and the sense, 'account the greater part of your life, in which you were fortunate, as so much clear gain.' The reading ὃν, which I have edited, from several MSS., with Bekk. and Goell., is confirmed by the following imitation of the passage in Liban. Epist. 1401, κέρδος, ὃν ἀπελαύσας χρόνον, ἡγοῦ.

The phrase κέρδος ἡγεῖσθαι is equiv. to the Latin lucro apponere, 'to think clear gain,' and therefore to be content with. So in Appian, i. 369, 6, ὅ τι ἂν λάβητε, κέρδος ἡγεῖσθε. Xen. Cyr. iv. 2, 43, κέρδος ἡγ. Hence is formed the very rare phrase (found in Xenoph. Mem.) ζημίαν ἡγεῖσθαι: and hence may be illustrated an obscure passage of Joseph. Ant. xv. 5, 5, κέρδος δ' εἰ θνήσκοιεν, τὴν συμφορὰν τὸ ζῆν ποιούμενοι, where ποιούμενοι must be taken twice. Of the phrase κέρδος ποιεῖσθαι, I know of no other example. It seems formed on this of our author, and that of Herodot. vi. 13, 12, ἐν κέρδεϊ ἐποιεῦντο περιποιῆσαι τά τε ἱρὰ τὰ σφέτερα καὶ τὰ ἴδια. Occasionally κερδαίνειν is found used instead of κέρδος ἡγεῖσθαι. So Lucian, ii. 284, 94, μαθὼν οὖν ὅτι ἀλλὸ (read ἄλλως, in vain) ἐβόων, ἔγνων σιγῇ προϊέναι, καὶ κερδαίνειν τὸ μὴ παίεσθαι, where the accus. is dependent on κατὰ understood, and with that it is equiv. to a dative, which indeed is found in a passage of Herodot. viii. 60, Μεγάροισι κερδαινόμεν περιεοῦσι. Finally, so in Eurip. Hippol. 642, we have, κερδαίνει ('rest content with') σωφροσύνην: and hence may be understood an obscure passage of Æschyl. Theb. 694, λέγουσα κέρδος πρότερον ὑστέρου μόρου, where λέγουσα stands for ἡγουμένη, (by a use of the word frequent in Eurip., Soph., and Herodot.; see Markl. on Euripides, Hippol. 869.) and there is an ellipsis of εἶναι. Further illustration may be sought from Lysias, p. 137, εἰ δὲ πάλαι ἐχρῆν τιμωρεῖσθαι, ὕστερον ὑμεῖς τιμωρούμεθα, τὸν χρόνον κερδαίνει, ὃν ἔζη, οὐ προσῆκον αὐτῷ, 'he is a gainer by the time he lives;' where the writer had probably in view this passage of our author; and also, I conceive, one of Eurip. Heracl. 954, Matth. δεῖ σε κατθανεῖν κακῶς. Καὶ κερδανεῖς ἅπαντα ('you will be altogether a gainer), χρῆν γὰρ οὐχ ἅπαξ θνήσκειν σὲ, πολλὰ πήματ' ἐξειργασμένον. Certainly the editors on Lysias need not to have resorted to conjecture at τὸν χρόνον κερδαίνει, since the common reading there is sufficiently defended by a passage of Eurip. Phryx. frag. v. 9, Εἰ δέ τις πράσσει καλῶς Κακὸς πεφυκώς, τὸν χρόνον κερδαινέτω· Χρόνῳ γὰρ οὗτος ὕστερον δώσει δίκην. Hence appears the sense in an obscure passage of Eurip. Or. 779, τῷ χρόνῳ δὲ (I conj. γε) κερδανεῖς: as also Med. 440, πᾶν κέρδος ἡγοῦ, ζημιουμένη φυγῇ, 'be content with being punished by banishment, [whereas you merited death].'

The motive of comfort here urged, is the same as that adverted to in Aristot. Rhet. p. 129, where it is said that elderly men ζῶσι τῇ μνήμῃ μᾶλλον ἢ τῇ ἐλπίδι· τοῦ γὰρ βίου τὸ μὲν λοιπὸν ὀλίγον, τὸ δὲ παρεληλυθὸς πολύ. Comp. also Philostr. Epist. 93.

τόνδε] Meaning, this life [that now is before you], the remainder of your existence. With the words following, καὶ τῇ τῶνδε εὐκλείᾳ κουφίζεσθε, 'and be lightened [as your sorrows] by the glory of these,' compare Demosth. 1400, 7, λόγῳ κουφίζειν τὰς συμφοράς: and so erigo in Latin, as in the Ciceronian, animum demissum erigere. Sometimes, however, the term τιμον ἀγήρων μόνον· καὶ οὐκ ἐν τῷ ἀχρείῳ τῆς ἡλικίας τὸ κερδαίνειν,—ὥσπερ τινές φασι,—μᾶλλον τέρπει, ἀλλὰ τὸ τιμᾶσθαι. XLV. Παισὶ δ' αὖ, ὅσοι τῶνδε πάρεστε, ἢ ἀδελφοῖς ὁρῶ μέγαν τὸν ἀγῶνα· τὸν γὰρ οὐκ ὄντα ἅπας εἴωθεν ἐπαινεῖν, καὶ μόλις ἂν καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ἀρετῆς οὐχ ὁμοῖοι, ἀλλ' ὀλίγῳ χείρους κριθείητε. 2. φθόνος γὰρ τοῖς ζῶσι πρὸς τὸ ἀντίπαλον, τὸ δὲ μὴ ἐμποδὼν ἀνανταγωνίστῳ εὐνοίᾳ τετίμηται. 3. εἰ δέ με δεῖ καὶ γυναικείας τι ἀρετῆς, ὅσαι νῦν ἐν χηρείᾳ ἔσονται, μνησθῆναι, βραχείᾳ παραινέσει occurs (as here) absolutely; but that is only in the pass. or mid. voice, as in Eurip. Med. 473, λέξασα κουφισθήσομαι. Thus Aristot. ap. Steph. Thes. κουφίζονται γὰρ οἱ λυπούμενοι, συναλγούντων τῶν φίλων. So in Latin, erigi, in the sense 'to take courage;' as Hor. Sat. ii. 8, 57, 'Nos, majus veriti, postquam nihil esse pericli Sensimus, erigimur.' The same motive to comfort is held out in Liban. Fun. Orat. on Julian, p. 155, ἐστερημένους δὲ φάρμακον δεῖ ποιεῖσθαι τῆς λύπης τὸ κείνου κλέος. Hence in a passage of Eurip. Meleag. frag. 13, παῖδες δὲ χρηστοὶ, κἂν θάνωσι, δώμασι Καλὸν τὸ θησαύρισμα, τοῖς τεκοῦσί τε Ἀνάθημα βιότου, vitæ decus, where, from ignorance of the sense, Heath proposed to read κἂν στένοισι or πένησι.

5. τὸ γὰρ φιλότιμον ἀγήρων μόνον] These words suggest the reason why glory is to be prized,—namely, because it alone is undecaying, never grows old. Wasse justly remarks on the elegance of the allusion to the age of the persons addressed; comparing a similar elegance in Æschyl. Ag. 593, ἀεὶ γὰρ ἡβᾷ τοῖς γέρουσιν εὖ μαθεῖν. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Philostr. Vit. Soph. i. 3, τῆς ἀνθρωπείας φύσεως τὸ φιλότιμον ἀγήρων ἡγουμένης. By ἐν τῷ ἀχρείῳ τῆς ἡλικίας is meant 'that period of life which is unfit for any of the active duties.' Τὸ κερδαίνειν and τὸ τιμᾶσθαι are put substantively, denoting 'the being devoted to gain,' and 'the being alive to honour.' In the words ὥσπερ τινές φασι there is probably a reference to Simonides, of whom Plutarch, ii. 781, thus writes: Σιμωνίδης ἔλεγε πρὸς τοὺς ἐγκαλοῦντας αὐτῷ φιλαργυρίαν, ὅτι τῶν ἀλλῶν ἀπεστερήμενος διὰ τὸ γῆρας ἡδονῶν, ὑπὸ μιᾶς ἔτι γηροβοσκεῖται, τῆς ἀπὸ τοῦ κερδαίνειν. The general import of the whole passage is, as Arn. well expresses it, 'that those to whom age denies the above hope, must let the thought of the happy past console the short space of life that yet remains to them; and its glory, the best solace of old age, must be their comfort.'

CH. XLV. 1. παισὶ δ' αὖ, &c.] Usitatior ordo verborum erat, τοῖς παισὶ δ' αὖ τῶνδε, ὅσοι πάρεστε. Nunc ad τῶνδε repetendum παῖδες, et ad παισὶ propter articulum omissum supplendum ὑμῖν. Itaque vulgari modo et plene ita scribendum erat, ὅσοι δ' αὖ τῶνδε πάρεστε παῖδες ἢ ἀδελφοὶ, ὑμῖν ὁρῶ. (Poppo.)

ὁρῶ μέγαν τὸν ἀγῶνα] 'I foresee a wide field for emulation.' The phrase occurs again infra ch. 89, and is found in the best Attic writers, especially the dramatic ones. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of the Pseudo-Phalaris, in his epistle to the sons of the deceased Stesichorus: οὐ γὰρ μικρὸς ὑμῖν ἀγὼν, μὴ πολὺ καταδεεστέρους ἐκείνου ὑμᾶς γενέσθαι.

καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ἀρετῆς] 'even by the utmost stretch of merit or desert.' Ἀρετὴ is here used in a general (and that the primary) sense, to denote 'whatever is praiseworthy or meritorious.'

2. φθόνος γὰρ—τετίμηται] In πρὸς τὸ ἀντίπαλον, 'for an adversary,' we have an adjectival phrase for a subst., as often in this word. Ἀνανταγωνίστῳ, 'without jealous rivalry.' Of various parallel sentiments occurring in other writers, may be instanced the following: Mimnerm. Δεινοὶ γὰρ ἀνδρὶ πάντες ἐσμὲν εὐκλεεῖ Ζῶντι φθονῆσαι, κατθανόντα δ' αἰνέσαι. Vell. Paterc. ii. 92, 'Præsentia invidiâ, præterita veneratione prosequimur: et his nos obrui, illis instrui credimus.' So Hor. Od. iii. 24, 31, 'Virtutem incolumem odimus, Sublatam ex oculis quærimus, invidi;' for so I would there point; the invidi belonging to both clauses of the sentence, and the general sense intended to be expressed being, that 'the principle of envy makes men hate eminent merit, while in existence, and complain of the want of it when removed from the earth.' Compare also Plut. Num. 22.

3. εἰ δέ με—μνησθῆναι] Render, 'If, too, it behoves me to say something about female virtue, as to those who will now be in widowhood,' &c. The word ἀρετὴ is here to be taken in its most general acceptation, of 'what is befitting to be done.'

ἅπαν σημανῶ. 4. τῆς τε γὰρ ὑπαρχούσης φύσεως μὴ χείροσι γενέσθαι ὑμῖν μεγάλη ἡ δόξα, καὶ ἧς ἂν ἐπ' ἐλάχιστον, ἀρετῆς πέρι ἢ ψόγου, ἐν τοῖς ἄρσεσι κλέος ᾖ. XLVI. Εἴρηται καὶ ἐμοὶ λόγῳ κατὰ τὸν νόμον ὅσα εἶχον πρόσφορα, καὶ ἔργῳ οἱ θαπτόμενοι τὰ μὲν ἤδη κεκόσμηνται, τὰ δὲ αὐτῶν τοὺς παῖδας τὸ ἀπὸ τοῦδε δημοσίᾳ ἡ πόλις μέχρι ἥβης θρέψει, ὠφέλιμον στέφανον τοῖσδέ τε καὶ τοῖς λειπομένοις τῶν τοιῶνδε ἀγώνων προτιθεῖσα· ἆθλα γὰρ οἷς κεῖται ἀρετῆς μέγιστα, τοῖς δὲ καὶ ἄνδρες ἄριστοι πολιτεύουσι. 2. νῦν δὲ ἀπολοφυράμενοι ὧν προσήκει ἕκαστος, ‡ ἀποχωρεῖτε."

Having made mention of female virtue generally, Pericles inculcates the cultivation of it by adverting to those virtues which especially befit the female sex,—namely, modesty, and a retiring spirit. The former is represented as their great glory; the latter, as that which tends to secure the other. The former,—though, by a peculiar delicacy, rather hinted at than expressed,—has the first place assigned to it in the words τῆς ὑπαρχούσης φύσεως μὴ χείρ. γεν.: the latter is subjoined, as bearing a strong affinity thereto, and forming the best preservative thereof; and this, too, is rather intimated than expressed in the words καὶ ἧς—ᾖ. For I am still of the same opinion as when I formed my Translation, that the virtue here designated is not humanity, as Haack and Poppo understand; nor affectionateness of spirit, as Arnold (for to either of these virtues women are too naturally inclined to require any admonition to their cultivation); but, as the ancient interpreters, and, of the modern ones, Abr., Gottl., Smith, and Meyer, are agreed, modesty or chastity, the cardinal virtue of women, that in which all the others concentre, and without which they are worthless. That the word φύσις has not unfrequently the sense sex, needs no proof, and is admitted by Poppo; but when he affirms that φύσις cannot signify the virtue of the sex,—this, though true, is little to the purpose. It cannot, indeed, signify more than sex or nature. But though the literal import of the words is only this, 'not to be inferior to the sex you belong to, will be your greatest glory,' yet as there is in μὴ χείροσι γ. an implied comparison of some persons with others, the sense intended must be, 'not to be inferior to or fall behind the persons who compose that sex,'—in what? namely, in their great sexual virtue, chastity. I would compare Eurip. Antiop. frag. 36, εἴ τιν' εὐφυᾶ Λαβοῦσα τέχνη φῶτ', ἔθηκε χείρονα· supply from εἰφυᾶ, τῆς ὑπαρχδύσης φύσεως. Of course, though ἧς is accommodated in gender to τῆς φύσεως, yet it must designate what is meant by τῆς φύσεως, the sex, and sexual virtue. So in a similar sentiment of Euboidas ap. Plut. Apophth. p. 366, τινῶν ἐπαινούντων γυναῖκα ἀλλοτρίαν, οὐκ ἀπεδέχετο, φήσας· Περὶ γυναικείας φύσεως παρὰ τοῖς ἔξω λόγον εἶναι οὐδένα δεῖ.

CH. XLVI. With the words αὐτῶν τοὺς παῖδας—θρέψει, comp. those of Plat. Menex. c. 22, τοὺς δὲ παῖδας συνεκτρέψει αὐτὴ προθυμουμένη. Lesbonax, Protr. p. 173. Æschin. p. 75, 28: from which and other passages, it appears, that the law was, that they should be supported and educated up to manhood at the public expense, and then be presented with a suit of armour, and occupy the first seats at the theatre.

ὠφέλιμον—τῶν τοιῶνδε ἀγώνων] Construe, προτιθεῖσα ὠφέλιμον στέφανον τῶν τοιῶνδε ἀγώνων, 'thus holding out a salutary reward for such contests.' With the words following, ἆθλα γὰρ—πολιτεύουσι, compare Lesbonax, Protr. 173, 8, καὶ ἀρετὴν πλεῖστον ἂν εὕροις αὐτὴν ἐπιδιδοῦσαν, ὅπου μείζονα καὶ τιμὴν ἔχει καὶ ἆθλοις καὶ ἐπαίνοις. Livy, iv. 35, 'Nihil non aggressuros homines, si magnis conatibus magna præmia proponantur.' Πολιτεύουσι, 'in politiâ vivunt.'

2. ἀπολοφυράμενοι] 'having thus brought your lamentations to a close.' Not meaning, that they were to bewail their relatives, and then depart; for the mourning had already been performed, to which the customary oration formed the appendage. Of ὃν προσήκει ἕκαστος, the sense is, 'the person each is in duty bound [to mourn for].' For the vulg. ἄπιτε many of the best MSS. have ἀποχωρεῖτε, which is edited by Pop. and Goell., while Haack and Bekk. retain the former, regarding (with Wess. and Gottl.) ἀποχ. as a gloss: yet surely ἄπιτε needed no gloss; and far more probable is it, that ἄπιτε was an alteration, proceeding from certain ancient critics, who wished to substitute instead of ἀποχωρ., the term almost exclusively, in such a case, used by the best writers, (of whom, among many others, may be instanced Plato, in his Menex.) namely, ἄπιτε.

XLVII. Τοιόσδε μὲν ὁ τάφος ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ χειμῶνι τούτῳ· καὶ διελθόντος αὐτοῦ, πρῶτον ἔτος τοῦ πολέμου τοῦδε ἐτελεύτα. 2. τοῦ δὲ θέρους εὐθὺς ἀρχομένου, Πελοποννήσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι τὰ δύο μέρη, ὥσπερ καὶ τὸ πρῶτον, ἐσέβαλον ἐς τὴν Ἀττικήν· ἡγεῖτο δὲ Ἀρχίδαμος ὁ Ζευξιδάμου Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλεύς· καὶ καθεζόμενοι ἐδῄουν τὴν γῆν. 3. καὶ ὄντων αὐτῶν οὐ πολλάς πω ἡμέρας ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ, ἡ νόσος πρῶτον ἤρξατο γενέσθαι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, λεγόμενον μὲν καὶ πρότερον πολλαχόσε ἐγκατασκῆψαι, καὶ περὶ Λῆμνον καὶ ἐν ἄλλοις χωρίοις· οὐ μέντοι τοσοῦτός γε λοιμὸς, οὐδὲ φθορὰ οὕτως ἀνθρώπων οὐδαμοῦ ἐμνημονεύετο γενέσθαι. 4. οὔτε γὰρ ἰατροὶ ἤρκουν τὸ πρῶτον θεραπεύοντες ἀγνοίᾳ, ἀλλ' αὐτοὶ μάλιστα ἔθνησκον, ὅσῳ καὶ μάλιστα προσῄεσαν, οὔτε ἄλλη ἀνθρωπεία τέχνη οὐδεμία· ὅσα τε πρὸς ἱεροῖς ἱκέτευσαν, ἢ ‡ μαντείαις καὶ τοῖς

Ch. XLVII. 1. τάφος] for ταφὴ, as in Hom. Il. xxiii. 619.

2. τὰ δύο μέρη] A double nomin. for τῶν Πελοποννησίων τὰ δύο μέρη, 'two-thirds:' see note supra i. 74.

3. ἡ νόσος] Meaning, 'the great pestilence,' so called κατ' ἐξοχήν. In the words following, λεγόμενον μὲν, &c., we have either, as Pop. thinks, a nomin. absol., (in the sense 'quum dicatur,') as εἰρήμενον supra i. 140; or, the neuter gender may be explained on the principle of a constructio ad sensum, by referring it (with the Schol., Duker, Hemsterh., Wessel., and Matth. § 434.) to νόσημα, as standing for νόσος, πρᾶγμα being tacitly adverted to, q. d. 'a thing which is said to have,' &c. Of these two methods the latter is preferable; yet, considering the frigid sense thus yielded by the πρᾶγμα, it is best to refer λεγόμενον (with the Schol. Basil.) to πάθος, or rather to νόσημα, especially from the neuter gender being used in the next chapter, as if νόσημα had preceded, and νόσημα itself occurring at ch. 51. On the contrary, in Soph. Phil. 742, we have (as Poppo observes) αὕτη put after νόσημα, as if νόσος had preceded.

πολλαχόσε ἐγκατασκῆψαι] 'to have broken out in various places.' Ἐγκατασκήπτω is properly used of 'what comes upon one with sudden and irresistible violence,' as lightning, storms, and tempests. In this word and its compounds, with that signification, there is always implied the notion of a dart. So Hom. Il. init. Apollo is described as sending the pestilence by launching forth his dart, βέλος ἐχεπευκὲς ἐφιείς: and Soph. Œd. Tyr. 27, that is represented as a fiery dart: ἐν δ' ὁ πυρφόρος θεὸς Σκήψας ἐλαύνει, λοιμὸς ἔχθιστος, πόλιν. Ἐνσκήπτω is not unfrequent in this sense, while ἐγκατ. is rare. The only examples I have noted are, Æschyl. Pers. 520, ἃ (κακὰ) Πέρσαις ἐγκατέσκηψεν θεός. Soph. Tr. 1089, ἐγκατέσκηψεν βέλος. Liban. Orat. p. 309.

οὕτως] Abresch takes this as standing for οὕτως μεγάλη, comparing Xen. Cyr. vii. 4, 3, ἦν δὲ χιὼν πολλὴ καὶ ψύχος οὕτως, &c. scil. μέγα. But it is better, with Pop., Goell., and Arn., to join οὕτως with γενέσθαι, οὕτως being here the predicate: see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 604: render 'to such a degree.'

4. οὔτε γὰρ—ἀγνοίᾳ] The sense here will depend upon the construction, according as τὸ πρῶτον and ἀγνοίᾳ are joined with ἤρκουν, or with θεραπεύοντες. I agree with Goell. in preferring the latter mode, since, as he observes, 'we have here suggested the reason, why at the beginning they tried to cure the disorder, (namely, because they were ignorant of its incurable nature,) and why they went to the sick,—namely, because they did not know the danger, though they shortly understood it.' In ἀρκέω we have a technical term. With the words following, ἀλλ' αὐτοὶ μάλιστα ἔθνησκον, compare Ovid, Met. vii. 561, 'Nec moderator adest, inque ipsos sæva medentes Erumpit clades.' On the formula μάλιστα, ὅσῳ—μάλιστα, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 462.

οὔτε ἄλλη ἀνθρωπεία τέχνη οὐδεμία] 'nor did any other human art avail;'

τοιούτοις ἐχρήσαντο, πάντα ἀνωφελῆ ἦν· τελευτῶντές τε αὐτῶν ἀπέστησαν, ὑπὸ τοῦ κακοῦ νικώμενοι. XLVIII. Ἤρξατο δὲ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον, ὡς λέγεται, ἐξ Αἰθιοπίας τῆς ὑπὲρ Αἰγύπτου· ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ ἐς Αἴγυπτον καὶ Λιβύην κατέβη, καὶ ἐς τὴν βασιλέως γῆν τὴν πολλήν. 2. ἐς δὲ τὴν Ἀθηναίων πόλιν ἐξαπιναίως ἐνέπεσε, with allusion, Pop. thinks, to the musical art: and that the ancients did attempt to cure certain disorders by music, cannot be doubted, and has been fully established. The Schol. and Gottl. suppose the art here spoken of to be that of incantation: an art, if I mistake not, often exercised by the same persons who practised the former; and which, therefore, might here be alluded to, in conjunction with the other; yet so little probable is it that any would seriously hope for aid from such means, in a disorder like the present,—that, considering the reference in ἄλλη to be to the ἰατροὶ and their art, we may rather suppose the τέχνη here spoken of, to be that of persons, not indeed medical practitioners, but who might know of certain powerful nostrums, (whether of herbs or otherwise,) which might be likely to cure the disorder. If this view be thought inadmissible, it may be supposed that no particular stress was intended to be laid on the ἄλλη: and, probably, so thought Dionys. Hal., since in a passage closely imitated from the present, Ant. ix. 42, p. 1857, he omits the expression altogether.

μαντείαις] So I edit, with Bekk., from several MSS., for vulg. μαντείοις, which is retained by Pop. and Goell., on the ground that 'our author elsewhere uses μαντεῖον in the same sense as μαντεία, namely, for the prophecy itself.' To which it is replied by Arn., that 'the sense here required seems to be, not so much prophecies, as prophesyings;' and as that would be expressed by μαντεία, rather than μαντεῖον, he prefers the former;' and with reason; for, while μαντεῖον would not express the sense prophesying, μαντεία might, and often does; yet the sense here seems to be, not prophesyings, but rather consultations of any oracle, namely, as to the means of safety: so in Eurip. Hipp. 236, and elsewhere, especially in the phrase μαντείᾳ χρήσασθαι, whereas of μαντεῖον in this sense I know of no example.

In the expression following, τοῖς τοιούτοις, allusion may be had to incantations, as also the λιτανεῖαι θεῶν, mentioned by Dionys. ubi supra, who also subjoins, as the last resource, οἱ γινόμενοι καθαρμοὶ (lustrations, expiatory sacrifices) κατ' ἄνδρα καὶ ὑπὲρ κοινοῦ, either for individuals or for the public at large. To which purpose are the words of the Schol. on Aristoph. Plut. 454, καθάρματα ἐλέγοντο οἱ ἐπὶ τῇ καθάρσει λοιμοῦ τινος ἢ τινος ἑτέρας νόσου θυόμενοι τοῖς θεοῖς: see also a passage of Schol. on Eq. 1333, where it is said, that the Athenians kept certain very mean and useless persons; and, in the time of any public calamity,—as plague or such like,—coming on the city, they, in order to purify themselves from the pollution, sacrificed these, whom they called καθάρματα, lit. purifiers.

αὐτῶν ἀπέστησαν] 'desisted from them;' as in a similarly expressed passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 677, περὶ τὰ θεῖα λειτουργίας ἀπέστησαν. That this should have been the case is no wonder, since, when the removal of temporal evil (nearly all that was looked to, amidst what might almost be called a total disbelief of future retribution for good or evil in this world) was sought in vain, religious observances were likely to be wholly discontinued.

ὑπὸ τοῦ κακοῦ νικώμενοι] So in Eurip. Med. 1164, Elms. we have ξυμφορᾷ (for ὑπὸ τῆς ξυμφορᾶς) νικωμένη. See Wets. on Rom. xii. 21.

Ch. XLVIII. 1. ἤρξατο—ἐξ Αἰθιοπίας τῆς ὑπὲρ Αἰγύπτου] Meaning, what is now called Nubia and Sennaar, often bearing that name in the classical writers. All ancient accounts, as those of Procop., Galen, &c., agree in representing the greatest plagues and pestilences that have ever afflicted the human race, to have come from Ethiopia and Egypt; which, to use the words of Gibbon, 'have been stigmatized in all ages as the original source and seminary of the plague. In a damp, hot, stagnating air, this African fever is generated from the putrefaction of animal substances.' On which subject, see a passage of Posidon. cited in Strabo, Geogr. xvii. p. 830.

Λιβύην] Probably, meaning the Libya Marmorica, adjoining to Egypt. Τὴν βασιλέως γῆν τὴν πολλήν, maximam partem.

2. ἐς τὴν Ἀθηναίων πόλιν ἐξαπιναίως ἐνέπεσε] 'suddenly fell upon the city.' An image, borrowed either from an enemy suddenly breaking into a besieged καὶ τὸ πρῶτον ἐν τῷ Πειραιεῖ ἤψατο τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὥστε καὶ ἐλέχθη ὑπ' αὐτῶν ὡς οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι φάρμακα ἐσβεβλήκοιεν ἐς τὰ φρέατα· κρῆναι γὰρ οὔπω ἦσαν αὐτόθι· ὕστερον δὲ καὶ ἐς τὴν ἄνω πόλιν ἀφίκετο, καὶ ἔθνησκον πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἤδη. 3. λεγέτω μὲν οὖν περὶ αὐτοῦ ὡς ἕκαστος γιγνώσκει, καὶ ἰατρὸς καὶ ἰδιώτης, ἀφ' ὅτου εἰκὸς ἦν γενέσθαι αὐτό, καὶ τὰς αἰτίας ἅστινας νομίζει τοσαύτης μεταβολῆς ἱκανὰς εἶναι δύναμιν ἐς τὸ μεταστῆσαι σχεῖν· city,—as in a passage of Herodot. cited in Steph. Thes. and in one of Herodian, viii. 6, 16, (and which is the view evidently adopted by Dio Cass. p. 34, 16, where, in evident imitation of our author, he has, οὕτω τὸ δεινὸν τοῦτ' ἐκεῖθεν ἀρξάμενον, καὶ ἐς τὸ ἄστυ ἔπεσε. Read with Sturz, for ἔπεσε, ἐνέπεσε,)—or, from a wild beast breaking into a sheep-fold, and worrying the sheep; a figure which may be traced in a passage of Soph. Aj. 55, ἔνθ' εἰσπεσὼν (scil. βουκόλων φρουρήματα) ἔκειρε πολυκέρων φόνον. The sense of the expression is elegantly represented by the words of Lucret. vi. 1141, 'Incubuit tandem populo Pandionis;' as also those of Ovid, Met. vii. 524, 'Dira lues populis—incidit.' And so in Hor. Od. i. 3, 30, we have, 'macies et nova febrium Terris incubuit cohors.'

ἤψατο τῶν ἀνθρώπων] 'attacked the inhabitants;' for no stress is here to be laid on ἀνθρώπων, as if animals had been previously attacked; though from certain passages, of Hom. Il. i. 150. Max. Tyr. Diss. 28, and Heracl. Pont., it seems to have been the opinion of the ancients, that in pestilential disorders the malady first makes its appearance in the quadrupeds. And so in Dionys. Hal. Ant. lx. 67, an epidemic is described as first attacking the quadrupeds, and then passing to the human race: though, indeed, the disorder there described was manifestly the febris castrensis, not the plague; at all events, no such circumstance took place in the present instance.

In the ὥστε, following, reference is had to ἐξαπιναίως before, q. d. 'so suddenly did it break out, that poison was reported to have been cast into the cisterns by the Peloponnesians.' The same false notion, in after-times, seized the minds of the multitude, in various countries,—as France, Spain, and Hungary,—at the similarly sudden and wide-spread devastation of the cholera. It is well known that almost all the most devastating pestilences have appeared suddenly.

By τὰ φρέατα we are to understand reservoirs, or tanks, made to catch the rain-water, as in Herodot. ii. 108, and Demosth. p. 1225.

καὶ ἔθνησκον πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἤδη] 'and now there died far more [than before].' So it is related, that in the great plague at London, as soon as the infection spread from the more open parts of Westminster and Southwark to the city, the mortality increased rapidly.

3. λεγέτω ὡς ἕκαστος γιγνώσκει] 'let him speak as he thinks.' Evidently imitated from these are the words of Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, 16, λεγέτω τις περὶ αὐτοῦ τούτου ᾧ γιγνώσκει. Of the words following, καὶ ἰατρὸς καὶ ἰδιώτης, the sense is, 'both physician and non-physician.' The term ἰδιώτης properly denotes 'one in a private station,' as distinguished from one holding any public office, and also from one exercising any public profession or art, especially that of medicine: thus it denotes 'a non-practiser of it:' in which latter acceptation the word is used here, and in Plato, Polit. p. 433, (where we have, similarly opposed, ἰατροὶ and ἰδιῶται,) and in Plut. de Sera Num. V. 4, οὐ γὰρ ἰατροῦ μὲν ἰδιώτην ὄντα συμβαλεῖν λογισμόν.

καὶ τὰς αἰτίας—σχεῖν] These words have so much the appearance of excessive and unaccountable pleonasm, that many critics regard δύναμιν σχεῖν as insititious and glossematical: but, excluding the words, the sentence will assume a very cropped appearance: and as not merely extreme brevity, but occasionally verboseness, is a distinguishing characteristic of our author, we may suppose the latter to have place here,—especially since a very competent judge, Wyttenbach, assures us, that a pleonasm in the words μετάστασις and μεταβολή is not unfrequent. The question, however, is, what is the construction?—and, especially, with what are the words τοσαύτης μεταβολῆς to be construed? Now, Poppo joins them with αἰτίας ἅστινας, and interprets as follows: 'Et dicat eas causas quas putet tantæ mutationis esse idoneas, ut vim ad rerum conversionem efficiendam habuerint.' Goell., however, joins them with δύναμιν, ἐγὼ δὲ οἷόν τε ἐγίγνετο λέξω, καὶ ἀφ' ὧν ἄν τις σκοπῶν, εἴ ποτε καὶ αὖθις ἐπιπέσοι, μάλιστ' ἂν ἔχοι τι προειδὼς μὴ ἀγνοεῖν, ταῦτα δηλώσω, αὐτός τε νοσήσας καὶ αὐτὸς ἰδὼν ἄλλους πάσχοντας. XLIX. Τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἔτος, ὡς ὡμολογεῖτο, ἐκ πάντων μάλιστα δὴ ἐκεῖνο ἄνοσον ἐς τὰς ἄλλας ἀσθενείας ἐτύγχανεν ὄν· εἰ δέ τις καὶ προέκαμνέ τι, ἐς τοῦτο πάντα ἀπεκρίθη. 2. τοὺς δ' ἄλλους ἀπ' οὐδεμιᾶς προφάσεως, ἀλλ' ἐξαίφνης, ὑγιεῖς ὄντας, πρῶτον μὲν τῆς κεφαλῆς θέρμαι ἰσχυραὶ, καὶ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν ἐρυθήματα καὶ φλόγωσις tracing the construction as follows: αἰτίας ἅστινας νομίζει ἱκανὰς εἶναι δύναμιν σχεῖν τοσαύτης μεταβολῆς ἐς τὸ μεταστῆσαι: of which two modes of construction the latter is the more natural; but the former is more in the manner of our author, (who abounds in harsh transpositions,) and while it involves in the end the least of difficulty, it yields the most suitable sense, namely, 'Let him say what causes of such a change (i. e. what causes producing such a change) had power to occasion such a total revolution in the bodily system, from health to sickness.' Finally, it is strongly supported by a passage infra vi. 20, (adduced by Poppo,) where μεταβολὴ and μετάστασις are so distinguished, as that the former is the antecedent, the latter the consequent; the one denoting a change generally, the other a conversio, lit. 'a turning upside down, a complete change.' Thus in Soph. Phil. 463. Liban. Or. 185. Philostr. Vit. Ap. vi. 33. we have the change from sickness to health expressed by μεθίστημι: and if so, why,—since the term is one of middle signification,—may it not denote the change from health to total sickness, which was the case in the present instance; since this, from being a season free from disorder, became ἔτος νοσῶδες. Μεταβάλλω and μεταβολὴ are terms not unfrequently used of changes from health to sickness, as Xen. Hipp. xvii. 1. Appian, i. 366. 530. Jos. 425, 39, ἡ φύσις τίκτει τοιαύτας μεταβολάς. A similar mode of expression is observable at vii. 87, where a change of season is said μεταβολῇ ἐς ἀσθένειαν νεωτερίζειν (τοὺς ἀνθρώπους), equiv. to μετάστ. here. However, I deny not that a certain superabundance of words exists in this passage of our author, in which we may trace a sort of blending of two sentences into one; and accordingly, though I entirely reject as inadmissible the construction laid down by Arnold, I by no means object to his representation of the sense as follows: 'and the causes which, where the change from health to universal sickness was so fearfully great, were sufficient to have had the power to create such a change.'

CH. XLIX. 1. ἐκ πάντων] 'above all.' With ἔτος ἄνοσον, (an expression occurring also in Ælian, H. An. xi. 2,) compare the Virgilian latior annus. Answering to the phrase here, ἐς τοῦτο πάντα ἀπεκρίθη, secessit, 'merged into this,' is that at ch. 51, ἐς τοῦτο ἐτελεύτα. It appears from this and other passages, that in ἀποκρίνεσθαι we have a medical term, by which disorders are said depositos secedere, et in alios expurgatos esse; it being meant, as Gail explains, that 'toutes ces maladies dans leur crise se séparaient de leur caractère propre, pour prendre le caractère de celle-ci.' In other words, as Arn. expresses the sense, 'seemed to be shut out from their own proper nature, and all to be turned into the plague.' Finally, so Hippocrates often uses the phrase ἀπόκρισις νοσερὴ to signify, 'exhalatio illa, quæ ab aëre excernitur, et in corpora immittitur.'

The truth of this representation, as regards the plague, is attested by Foësius Œcon., Hippocr. in v., and Chelot de Pestil. p. 45.

2. προφάσεως] The term here, as often in Hippocr., signifies, 'such an apparent cause, as readily accounts for any thing.' Indeed, we have occasionally in that writer the similar phrase, ἄνευ προφάσεως. The circumstance of suddenness in the attack finds its counterpart in the plague, as described by the writers above mentioned.

κεφαλῆς θέρμαι ἰσχυραὶ] 'strong heats in the head.' Of this word (which is very rare) examples occur in Arrian, E. A. ii. 4, 11, θέρμαις ἰσχυραῖς. Lucian, i. 318. iii. 74. Menand. ap. Phryn. and Plato, p. 178, C. Similar in Hippocrates ἐλάμβανε· καὶ τὰ ἐντὸς, ἥ τε φάρυγξ καὶ ἡ γλῶσσα, εὐθὺς αἱματώδη ἦν, καὶ πνεῦμα ἄτοπον καὶ δυσῶδες ἠφίει. 3. ἔπειτα ἐξ αὐτῶν πταρμὸς καὶ βράγχος ἐπεγίγνετο· καὶ ἐν οὐ πολλῷ χρόνῳ κατέβαινεν ἐς τὰ στήθη ὁ πόνος μετὰ βηχὸς ἰσχυροῦ· καὶ ὁπότε ἐς τὴν καρδίαν στηρίξαι, ἀνέστρεφέ τε αὐτὴν, καὶ ἀποκαθάρσεις χολῆς πᾶσαι, ὅσαι ὑπὸ ἰατρῶν ὠνομασμέναι εἰσὶν, ἐπῆεσαν, καὶ αὗται μετὰ is the use of the plural in τὰ ῥίγεα: and so often πυρετοὶ and febres in Latin, with allusion to the paroxysms by which it makes its attacks. In τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν ἐρυθήματα the plural has reference to the two eyes; though in Hippocr. we have often the plural used in a singular sense, as 126, D, ἐρυθήματα προσώπου ἐν πυρετοῖσι γινόμενα. Of the somewhat rare word φλόγωσις, examples occur in Galen, Jos., and Themist. These previous symptoms are elegantly depicted in the words of Lucretius: 'Principio caput incensum fervore gerebant, Et duplices oculos suffusa luce rubenteis;' with which compare the ardentes oculi of Virgil. Corresponding to these violent heats of the head, are the extreme feverish head-aches which usher in the other symptoms of the plague.

τὰ ἐντὸς—αἱματώδη ἦν] Of the phrase τὰ ἐντὸς (supply τοῦ στόματος), which is rare, I have noted examples in Jos. Ant. ii. 14, 4, and in Plato. Similar is the description in Lucretius, 'Sudabant etiam fauces intrinsecus atro Sanguine.' Symptoms, these, attributed to the plague by the medical writers referred to in Poppo.

πνεῦμα ἄτοπον καὶ δυσῶδες ἠφίει] Meaning, 'emitted a noisome and fetid odour.' So Pausan. v. 5, 5, τὸ ἄτοπον τῆς ὀσμῆς. Dio Cass. 724, 64, ὕδατα φύσιν ἄτοπον ἔχοντα. Dionys. Hal. Ant. 677, 25, ἀτοπίᾳ τῆς ὀσμῆς. Appian, i. 833, ἀτμῶν ἀτόπων γενομένων. Here δυσῶδες is subjoined by way of explanation. Similarly we have this described by Lucretius, 'Spiritus ore foras tetrum volvebat odorem.' Here again we have what is proved to be a symptom of plague.

3. πταρμὸς] 'sneezing:' a term found in Galen and in the Sept. Βράγχος properly denotes simply hoarseness, (as expressed by the fauces raucas of Lucret.) but it may have the sense it often bears in Galen,—namely, the hoarseness, accompanied by a slight catarrh, affecting the throat and rough artery. Ἐπεγίγνετο, 'supervened.' A customary term to denote the access of any disorder or symptom; though the simple verb γιγ. is also not unfrequent in this sense. By ὁ πόνος, just after, understand, not pain, as the term is usually explained, but 'the malady;' in which sense the word occurs not unfrequently in Hippocr., Dioscor., Galen, and also writers not medical, as Eurip. Ion, 1206. Æschyl. Ag. 1186. Theocr. Id. i. 64. Appian, i. 61. With βηχὸς ἰσχυροῦ comp. the expression in Pausan. iv. 12, 7, ἄλγημα ἰσχυρόν. This symptom, of severe cough, is also attributed to the plague by Hippocr., Procop., and various modern authorities. By the disorder thus descending to the chest, the bronchitis became what medical men call an affectio catarrhoso-phlegmonosa.

ἐς τὴν καρδίαν στηρίξαι] By καρδία is here meant, as occasionally in Hippocr. and other Greek medical writers, as also in writers not medical, what Galen explains by τὸ στόμα τῆς γαστρὸς, the os ventriculi, and what Foes. expresses by the 'orificium ventriculi sinistrum, quod alias stomachus dicitur.' In στηρίξαι we have the not unusual idiom of a transitive verb used intransitively; on which see Viger, Hemst., and Matth. Gr. Gr., and of which an example occurs in Eurip. Hipp. 1202, and Bacch. 970, 1080, and in the case of the similar term ἐρείδω at Acts xxvii. 41, and Plut. de Curios. 1; which latter word is used in this very sense in Æschyl. Ag. 974, νόσος γὰρ γείτων ὁμότοιχος ἐρείδει, 'fixes itself (fixes its abode) with one, as neighbour or fellow-occupant of the same house.' The words are meant to verify and illustrate the general statement, that an exuberance of health often finds a sad issue in the contrary; sickness fixing itself near, like a neighbour occupying an apartment in the same house, and therefore always ready to step in. An elegant figure this, with which we may compare a similar one in our own poet, Gray, in his Ode on a prospect of Eton College:

'Yet see, how all around them wait
The ministers of human fate,
And black misfortune's baleful train.
Ah! show them where in ambush stand,
To seize their prey, the murderous band!'

ἀνέστρεφέ τε αὐτὴν] lit. 'caused it to turn,' 'excited vomiting.' So Galen in Hippocr. Progn. Comm. iii. p. 162, citing this passage, explains, τὸ γὰρ ἀναστρέφειν, ἐπὶ τῆς πρὸς ἐμετὸν ὁρμῆς εἶπεν.

ἀποκαθάρσεις χολῆς—ἐπῆεσαν] 'there

ταλαιπωρίας μεγάλης. 4. λύγξ τε τοῖς πλείοσιν ‡ ἐνέπιπτε κενὴ, σπασμὸν ἐνδιδοῦσα ἰσχυρὸν, τοῖς μὲν μετὰ ταῦτα λωφήσαντα, τοῖς

supervened all those so called by physicians discharges of bile.' I am not aware that the term is ever so applied by medical writers. Hippocrates, indeed, p. 377, has χολῆς ἀποκρίσεις: but the verb ἀποκαθαίρεσθαι is (as Foes. testifies) used by Hippocr. 'de pure, quod per sputa ex thorace repurgatur,' and also ἀνακαθαίρεσθαι. By the term ταλαιπωρίας we have simply denoted the extreme pain which usually accompanies such evacuations, as in the case of dysentery.

4. λύγξ—κενὴ] So called (the Schol. observes) in contradistinction to the λύγξ πλήρης or full hiccough. Foes. well explains it: 'Inanis singultus, qui nihil vomitatione refunderet nullumque humorem rejiceret.' By this, then, we have denoted a dry hiccough, or that ineffectual retching consequent upon exhaustion and irritation of the stomach, when nothing is brought off the stomach, because nothing there remains. The next words, σπασμὸν ἐνδιδοῦσα ἰσχυρὸν, present not so much a separate symptom, as a conjoint and accessory circumstance of the preceding symptom. Render, 'bringing on occasionally strong spasms,' (a sense, this, of ἐνδιδ. as used for ἐπιφέρουσα, of which I have found no example except in a passage of Eurip. Andr. 224, ἵνα σοὶ μηδὲν ἐνδοίην πικρὸν)—such usually following the λύγξ. So Hippocr., as cited by Krauss, says: σπασμοὶ γίγνονται ἢ ὑπὸ πληρώσιος ἢ κενώσιος· οὕτω δὲ καὶ λυγμός. And Galen: οἷόν τι πάθος τοῖς μυσὶν ὁ σπασμός ἐστιν, τοιοῦτον ἐν τῷ στομάχῳ γίγνεται ἡ λύγξ. These spasms we may, with Krauss, suppose to have been not merely local, (namely, convulsive motions of the diaphragm, causing the respiration to be rapid and violent,) but consisting in convulsions of the muscles generally, both of the members and of the face; a regular attendant, this, on the plague. See the writers referred by Poppo, especially Larrey, whose words are, 'Le malade éprouve per intervalles des contractions involuntaires dans les muscles,' &c. Similarly Joseph. Ant. p. 1041, 40, Huds. has βηχὶ σπασμῶδει διετείνετο.

I have here, with Pop., thought proper to retain vulg. ἐνέπιπτε: for though most of the best MSS. have ἐνέπεσε, which has been edited by Goell., yet I suspect the reading to have arisen from mere critical emendation, in consequence of the aor. being much more usual (not to say proper) in this sense; insomuch that the imperf. is almost unprecedented. But for that very reason is the aorist here to be preferred, in a writer like Thucydides, who seeks the unusual: a reason, this, I would observe, of more weight than the one alleged by Arn. for the common reading, namely, that 'though the imperf. occurs twice in describing subordinate circumstances of the disorder, yet each separate symptom, or stage in its progress, is given in the imperfect tense:' which is supposing a greater nicety of diction than our author ever condescends to cultivate.

μετὰ ταῦτα] for αὐτίκα. Evidently imitated from this is a passage of Dio Cass. 223, 2, καὶ πολλοὶ, τοῖς μὲν εὐθὺς τοῖσδε καὶ μετὰ ταῦτ', ἐλυμήνατο, where, for πολλοὶ τοῖς read πολλοῖς, and ταῦτ'. The term following, λωφήσαντα, is best explained by Pop. as put, by a rare use, (on which see note supra i. 18,) as standing for ὃς ἐλώφησε, 'which abated' or 'ceased.' So in Plato, p. 854, we have, ἐὰν λωφᾷ τι τὸ νόσημα: and in Jos. Ant. ii. 7, 7, λωφήσαντός τοῦ κακοῦ. Soph. Aj. 61, τοῦδ' ἐλώφησεν πόνον. Plut. vii. 225 and 230, τοῦ πυρετοῦ λωφήσαντος. Hippocr. p. 98 and 398, πάντα λωφᾷ: and 643, ἢν δὲ μὴ λωφήσῃ ὁ ῥόος: and 524, ὅταν δὲ λωφήσῃ ἡ ὀδύνη. The idiom may be traced as far back as to Homer; e. g. Il. xxi. 292, ἀλλ' ὅδε μὲν τάχα λωφήσει, a harsh metaphor for 'the river will cease from its attacks, as if weary.' And so Xen. An. iv. 7, 4, δεῖ, ὅταν λωφήσωσιν οἱ λίθοι ('have ceased to be hurled') παραδραμεῖν. Hom. Od. ix. 460, ἐμὸν κῆρ λωφήσειε κακῶν. Æschyl. Prom. 376, λωφ. χόλου. 677, λωφ. πάθου. The word had at first an active sense, properly signifying to lighten any one of a burden, by taking it from his shoulders or neck, (λόφος, comp. Ps. lxxxi. 6,) or by removing part of it; and thus to lighten any burden, both naturally and figuratively. So in Æschyl. Prom. 27, we have, ἀεὶ δὲ τοῦ παρόντος ἀχθηδὼν κακοῦ Τρῦσει σ'· ὁ λωφήσων γὰρ οὐ πέφυκέ πω, where Prometheus' suffering is compared to a burden too heavy for him to bear, (as in Ps. lv. 22,) which wears down the bearer, who consequently needs τὸν λωφήσοντα, 'one who should remove or lighten it.' The same metaphor is observable in a passage of Isaiah, xxxviii. 14, where render, not, as is commonly done, 'I am oppressed, undertake for me,' but, with the margin, 'I am oppressed, (lit. overburdened,) ease me of my burden,' namely, by taking it on thy shoulders:

δὲ καὶ πολλῷ ὕστερον. 5. καὶ τὸ μὲν ἔξωθεν ἁπτομένῳ σῶμα οὐκ ἄγαν θερμὸν ἦν, οὔτε χλωρόν, ἀλλ' ὑπέρυθρον, πελιτνόν, φλυκταίναις μικραῖς καὶ ἕλκεσιν ἐξηνθηκός· τὰ δὲ ἐντὸς οὕτως ἐκάετο, ὥστε μήτε τῶν πάνυ λεπτῶν ἱματίων καὶ σινδόνων τὰς ἐπιβολάς, μήτ' ἄλλο τι ἢ ‡ γυμνοὶ ἀνέχεσθαι, ἥδιστά τε ἂν ἐς ὕδωρ ψυχρὸν σφᾶς for as the Hebrew harab means properly miscere and permutare, as in a passage of Exod. xxvii. 9, 27, so the literal rendering there is, 'change with me,' namely, by taking, or undertaking to bear, my burden.

5. ἁπτομένῳ] Supply τινί, 'any one,' namely, whether physician or not. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 570, or § 388, 6. There is, as Goell. observes, a transposition in the words, καὶ τὸ μὲν—θερμὸν ἦν, for τὸ μὲν ἔξωθεν σῶμα ἁπτομένῳ (αὐτοῦ) οὐκ ἄγαν θερμὸν ἦν. Closely imitated from this is a passage of Jos. Ant. xvii. 6, 5. Similarly Boccaccio testifies that in the plague at Milan, there was in most cases little or no external fever; though Larrey says there is usually a great deal. We have, just after, added, οὔτε χλωρὸν, from the circumstance that high fever is often united with extreme paleness. Ὑπέρυθρον, reddish: a word usually considered very rare; but I have noted it in Hippocr., Procop., Pausan., and Pollux. Poppo compares, from Ovid, vii. 555, 'flammæque latentis Indicium rubor est.' Corresponding to which symptom may be the erysipelatous redness noticed by Russel on the Plague: though Krauss finds some parallel to it in the exanthema typhosum, when the skin is red and marbled. But this very marbled appearance of the skin is mentioned as a symptom of the plague by Russel. Πελιτνὸν, 'of a livid or lead-colour.' So in Virg. Æn. vii. 687, we have 'liventis plumbi.' The word is one usually accounted rare; but I have noted it in Dio Cass., Procop., Diod. Sic., Lucian, Athen., Plut., and Nicand. With respect to the precise spelling of the word, I have, with Ha., Bekk., and Goell., for vulg. πελιδνὸν, received πελιτνὸν, because the ancient grammarians unite in regarding this latter spelling as that adopted by our author. And so in Aristoph. ap. Athen. 107, D, πελιδνὸν ὂν τῷ χρώματ', Porson very properly emends πελιτνόν. And similarly in an ancient author cited by Athen. 111, A, for πελίχναις πέδαισι ought to be read πελίτναις, which was doubtless in the archetype; and certain it is that χ and τ are often confounded. Φλυκταίναις—ἐξηνθηκὸς may be rendered 'bespeckled with small pustules and ulcerous sores.' Corresponding to the former are the petechiæ and other exanthemata mentioned by Russel; and to the latter, the carbuncles and buboes described by Larrey and Starck. Or by φλυκτ. may be denoted the minute carbuncles and other ἐξανθήματα: and by ἕλ., the large carbuncles and other buboes or plague-boils; for absolute exactness of phraseology is not to be expected in one professedly, like our author, ἰδιώτης, non-medicus. In ἐξανθέω we have a very rare word, used no where else but in two passages of Procop., and in another, evidently imitated from the present, in Lucian.

τὰ δὲ ἐντὸς ἐκάετο] Imitated from these are the words of Aristid. ii. 146, ἡ κεφαλὴ καὶ τὰ ἐντὸς ἐκαίετο. And similarly in Lucret. vi. 1166, we have, 'Intima pars homini vero flagravit ad ossa; Flagravit stomacho flamma, ut fornacibus, intus.' Here I have, with Bekker and Goeller, thought proper to edit ἐκάετο instead of vulg. ἐκαίετο, which has been retained, but on precarious grounds, by Poppo. That κάω and κλάω were old Attic forms, few would now deny: and if the point were admitted to be doubtful, it would still be best decided, in each passage, by the authority of the best MSS., which where they, as in the present case, almost all unite in presenting the uncommon for the common form, ought certainly to be followed.

τὰς ἐπιβολὰς] 'the casting or throwing on;' as in Joseph. 324, 4, δυσρίγης μηδ' ὑπὸ τῆς ἐπιβολῆς ἐκ πολλῶν ἱματίων γενομένης ἀναθερμαίνεσθαι. Auctor Vitæ Epicuri, ὥστε ἀδυνατεῖν καὶ τὴν ἱματίων φέρειν ἐπιβολήν. Ælian, V. H. xi. 4, καὶ τὴν ἐς αὐτὸν τῶν τριχῶν ἐπιβολὴν οὐκ ἠγνόουν. By σινδόνων understand sheets or coverlets. See my Lex. N. T. in voc. The two terms ἱμάτια and σίνδονα are similarly united in a passage of Herodot. ii. 78, 86, and 95. Comp. also the words of Ovid, Met. vii. 557, 'Non stratum, non ulla pati velamina possunt.' For vulg. γυμνὸν, γυμνοὶ is found in seven MSS. and Galen, and has been edited by Bekk. and Arn.; while Pop. and Goell. retain γυμνὸν, supplying τὸ σῶμα from the preceding τὸ μὲν ἔξωθεν ἁπτομένῳ σῶμα: which Arnold, with reason, thinks is not good Greek. On the other hand, Pop. has gone far to prove αὐτοὺς ῥίπτειν. 6. καὶ πολλοὶ τοῦτο τῶν ἠμεληµένων ἀνθρώπων καὶ ἔδρασαν ἐς φρέατα, τῇ δίψῃ ἀπαύστῳ ξυνεχόµενοι· καὶ ἐν τῷ ὁµοίῳ καθειστήκει τό τε πλέον καὶ ἔλασσον ποτόν. 7. καὶ ἡ ἀπορία τοῦ µὴ ἡσυχάζειν, καὶ ἡ ἀγρυπνία ἐπέκειτο διὰ παντός. 8. καὶ τὸ σῶµα, ὁσονπερ χρόνον καὶ ἡ νόσος ἀκµάζοι, οὐκ ἐµαραίνετο, ἀλλ' ἀντεῖχε παρὰ δόξαν τῇ ταλαιπωρίᾳ· ὥστε ἢ διεφθείροντο οἱ πλεῖστοι ἐναταῖοι καὶ ἑβδοµαῖοι ὑπὸ τοῦ ἐντὸς καύµατος, ἔτι ἔχοντές τι γυμνοὶ to be solœcistic. Yet it seems deserving of the preference, as not so offensively harsh as γυμνόν: and, moreover, after ἄλλο ignorant or careless copyists would be more likely to write γυμνὸν than γυμνοὶ, in which, after every attempt that has been made to justify it, we may certainly recognise one of those negligent, and, strictly speaking, ungrammatical expressions which have occasionally escaped a writer far less attentive to words than things. Correctness would undoubtedly have required γυμνοὺς, scil. εἶναι. As it is, we must supply ὄντες, comparing such modes of expression elsewhere as ἠνείχοντο, supra i. 77, and rest satisfied with obtaining a good sense, though with inaccuracy of construction. At ἥδιστά τε we may, with Pop., supply from the following context, εἰ ἠμελοῦντο: or rather, as the conditional proposition, 'insomuch that they would most gladly have thrown themselves,' &c., implies something on which the condition may rest, we may supply 'if they had possessed the power.' Generally speaking, the condition is contained either in express words, or such as imply it. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 598, a.

6. τῶν ἠμελημένων ἀνθρώπων] Meaning, 'such persons as were not waited on or taken care of' by nurses. Καὶ ἔδρασαν ἐς φρέατα, 'even threw themselves into cisterns or tanks.' See note supra ch. 48. An affecting circumstance, this, introduced by Lucret. and Ovid. The expression δίψῃ ἀπαύστῳ ξυνεχόμενοι is borrowed by Arrian, E. A. vi. 14, 11. In the next words we have a refined way of expressing that 'their thirst was insatiable.' Doubtless the poor sufferers went as much to cool their fevered bodies as to quench their burning thirst. See Diod. Sic. xii. 45.

7. ἡ ἀπορία τοῦ μὴ ἡσυχάζειν] It is not necessary to regard the μὴ (with Goell.) as pleonastic. It is sufficient to understand τοῦ μὴ ἡσυχ. as explanatory of ἡ ἀπορία, which signifies the not knowing what to do with themselves by reason of their being unable to rest. To which purpose are the similar words of Hippocr. in a passage de Morbo Sacro, sub init. (cited by Arn.) κατὰ τὴν ἀπορίαν τοῦ μὴ γιγνώσκειν. See also Matth. Gr. Gr. § 321. In this extreme restlessness we have one among the many other symptoms attendant on the plague, (see Procop. p. 79, 6, and Larrey ap. Pop.) though, indeed, it is also found in other disorders. By ἡ ἀγρυπνία we have denoted only an effect of the same cause. The simple idea is drawn out into a picture by Lucretius as follows: 'Quippe patentia quom totiens ardentia morbeis Lumina versarent oculorum expertia somno.' With the expression ἐπέκειτο διὰ παντὸς, 'instabat, urgebat, premebat, afflixit,' comp. Hippocr. p. 105, B, αἱ Λειεντερίαι ὁμοίως νυκτός τε καὶ ἡμέρης ἐπικείμεναι. The metaphor is one probably taken from troops who press hard on the rear of flying foes, and never let them rest: and so Lucret. 'Nec requies erat ulla mali.' The expression sometimes also bears the sense vexare, affligere bello, as in Xen. Hist. vi. 5, 35, ἐπέκειντο ὑμῖν, and vii. 2, 10. Aristoph. Vesp. 1285, μ' ὑπετάραττεν ἐπικείμενος, and Eq. 252, where we have allusion to an enemy that has the upper ground, and is continually assailing from thence. The same allusion is found in a passage of Ps. xxxii. 4, 'Day and night thy hand was heavy upon me;' and xxxviii. 2, 'Thy hand presseth me sore.'

8. ἀκμάζοι] A medical term, denoting a disorder arriving at its height. In ἐμαραίνετο we have another medical term, on which see my note in Transl.

ἀντεῖχε παρὰ δόξαν τῇ ταλαιπωρίᾳ] 'resisted the effects of the disorder.' Ταλ. is here equiv. to πόνῳ, meaning, the distress or torture produced by the disorder. Almost transcribed from the present are passages of Procop. 131, 13, and 240, 16.

διεφθείροντο — ἐναταῖοι καὶ ἑβδομαῖοι] Lucretius says, 'Octavoque fere candenti lumine solis Aut etiam nonâ reddebant lampade vitam.' See Livy, xli. 21. These were considered the critical days: but they have differed widely in different states of the disorder, and in different subjects.

δυνάμεως, ἢ, εἰ διαφύγοιεν, ἐπικατιόντος τοῦ νοσήματος ἐς τὴν κοιλίαν, καὶ ἑλκώσεώς τε αὐτῇ ἰσχυρᾶς ἐγγιγνομένης, καὶ διαῤῥοίας ἅμα ἀκράτου ἐπιπιπτούσης, οἱ πολλοὶ ὕστερον δι' αὐτὴν ἀσθενείᾳ ἀπεφθείροντο. 9. διεξῄει γὰρ διὰ παντὸς τοῦ σώματος ἄνωθεν ἀρξάμενον τὸ ἐν τῇ κεφαλῇ πρῶτον ἱδρυθὲν κακόν· καὶ εἴ τις ἐκ τῶν μεγίστων περιγένοιτο, τῶν γε ἀκρωτηρίων ἀντίληψις αὐτοῦ ἑλκώσεως] Four MSS. have ἐκκαύσεως, which is approved by some critics: but the textual reading is, no doubt, the true one; ulceration being a common attendant on dysentery, insomuch that Ætius defines δυσεντερία to be ἕλκωσις τῶν ἐντέρων. On the term κοιλία, see Foes. Œcon., and especially Pollux, ii. 202, as also my Lex. Nov. Test. in v.

διαῤῥοίας ἅμα ἀκράτου ἐπιπιπτούσης] Of ἀκράτου the sense has been disputed. Commentators are not agreed whether it is to be taken as a technical term describing the nature of the diarrhœa as unmixed with solid matter, as opposed atro humorum profluvio; or whether it designates the diarrhœa generally as immoderate, excessive. Fab., Paul, Gail, and Arn. adopt the former view, appealing to two passages of Hippocr. in which we have the expression αἱ ἄκρητοι καθάρσιες. This is, however, at variance with facts; the flux in this disorder (i. e. of plague) being, I believe, not a pure liquid, but one discoloured by intermixture with solid matter or with blood. So in Lucret. vi. 1203, we have, 'Profluvium porro qui tetri sanguinis acre Exierat,' and 1198. And considering that our author does not profess to give the symptoms of the disorder with the minute exactness of a physician, but merely as an ἰδιώτης, it is better to adopt the latter sense. Moreover, the term ἐπιπτ. is one only suitable as applied to the disorder itself, not to the profluvium, which the sense maintained by Arn. would require. All, indeed, that our author meant was, we may suppose, to describe the sick persons who had survived the first stage of the disorder, as subsequently perishing mostly of the diarrhœa that supervened. Thus it was sufficient to call it immoderate, and quite immaterial to describe the colour of the profluvium, as a physician might have done. The correctness of the expression ἄκρατος διάῤῥοια (as of the similar ones ἄκρατον καῦμα, &c.) ought not to be doubted, since it is found in Polyæn. vii. 42. Pollux, iv. 187; of which, the latter passage was probably written with a view to the present, as also another of Dio Cass. 386, 82, τῆς κοιλίας ἀκρατὴς ὑπὸ διαῤῥοίας, and certainly one of Eunap. p. 81, (cited by Pop.) διαῤῥοίας ἀκρατοῦς ἅμα ἐπιπιπτούσης. Finally, Hippocrates not unfrequently uses the term ἄκρατος of affections of the body that cannot be restrained, as Aphor. 19, ἄχροιαι ἄκρατοι: and 107, C, καταμήνια ἄκρατος γίνεται. And perhaps such may be the sense of the term here, namely, 'not to be restrained.' So at 137, C, we have, χολώδεες κοιλίαι καὶ ἀκρατέες.

ἀπεφθείροντο] This I have thought proper, with Pop., Bekk., and Goell., to edit, for vulg. διεφθ., in which we have evidently a mere gloss on a recondite term, (answering to our phrase, 'to be carried off,' 'to perish off,' and Latin absumo,) the only examples of which I have met with are in Eurip. Suppl. 1106, and Troad. 508. The active form is found in Æschyl. Choëph. 254, 256.

9. διεξῄει διὰ παντὸς τοῦ σώματος—τὸ - κακὸν] 'the malady pervaded the whole body.' Compare Æschyl. Choëph. 67, παναρκέτας νόσου βρύειν, 'ad omnes corporis partes pertinens.' Ἱδρυθὲν, 'after taking post;' a term used of a disorder fixing itself in any member. Liban. p. 712. At μεγίστων supply κινδύνων. Of the words following, τῶν γε ἀκρωτηρίων—ἐπεσήμαινε, the sense is, 'Its (meaning, the disorder's) seizure of the extremities at any rate left its mark behind,' i. e. marked the person as having had the disorder: of which force of the term (perceived by Foes. and Wyttenb., though not confirmed by the evidence of other passages in which it has place) I have noted examples in Hippocr. de Morbo Sacr. p. 306, οὐ γὰρ ἔτι ἐπίληπτον γίνεται, ἢν ἅπαξ ἐπισημανθῇ: and a little before, περιγίγνεται (τὰ παιδία) ἐπίσημα ἐόντα· ἢ γὰρ στόμα παρασπᾶται, ἢ ὀφθαλμοὶ, ἢ αὐχὴν, ἢ χείρ. Pausan. vii. 24, 6, τοῦτο δὲ ἀλλαχοῦ τε τοῦ σώματος ἐπισημαίνει, καὶ ἐν ταῖς χερσίν. Indeed as σῶμα or σημεῖον properly denoted a mark put upon any thing, so it sometimes denoted a scar left by a wound, as a mark of its former existence. So in Plut. de Vit. Pud. 19, we have, τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ δηγμοῦ: and in Eurip. Iph. Taur. 1372, δεινοῖς δὲ σημάντοισιν ἐσφρα- ἐπεσήμαινε· κατέσκηπτε γὰρ ἐς αἰδοῖα καὶ ἐς ἄκρας χεῖρας καὶ πόδας, καὶ πολλοὶ στερισκόμενοι τούτων διέφευγον, εἰσὶ δ' οἳ καὶ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν. 10. τοὺς δὲ καὶ λήθη ἐλάμβανε παραυτίκα ἀναστάντας τῶν πάντων ὁμοίως, καὶ ἠγνόησαν σφᾶς τε αὐτοὺς καὶ τοὺς ἐπιτηδείους. L. Γενόμενον γὰρ κρεῖσσον λόγου τὸ εἶδος τῆς νόσου, τά τε ἄλλα χαλεπωτέρως ἢ κατὰ τὴν ἀνθρωπείαν φύσιν προσέπιπτεν ἑκάστῳ, καὶ ἐν τῷδε ἐδήλωσε μάλιστα ἄλλο τι ὂν ἢ τῶν ξυντρόφων τι· τὰ γὰρ ὄρνεα καὶ τετράποδα ὅσα ἀνθρώπων ἅπτεται, πολλῶν ἀτάφων γιγνομένων, ἢ οὐ προσῄει, ἢ γευσάμενα διεφθείρετο. 2. τεκμήριον δέ· τῶν μὲν τοιούτων ὀρ-

γισμένοι. In the next words, κατέσκηπτε, &c., we have indicated how the disorder left its mark,—namely, by the patient being crippled in the feet or hands. With the phrase κατέσκηπτεν ἐς. 'made its attack on,' comp. Galen, κατασκ. εἰς κυρσούς: and Dionys. Hal. Ant. 597, νόσος εἰς γυναῖκας κατασκήψασα. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Dio Cass. 724, 66, τὸ δὲ δὴ νόσημα ἐς τὴν κεφαλὴν ἐνσκήψαν ἐξήφαινεν αὐτήν· καὶ τοὺς μὲν πολλοὺς αὐτίκα ἀπώλλυε, τῶν δὲ δὴ περιγιγνομένων ἐς τὰ σκέλη κατῆγε, &c. By the words following, στερισκόμενοι τούτων, seems to be implied amputation, without which the lives of the persons could not, I apprehend, be preserved; for the feet, hands, and other extremities were, it seems, so affected by gangrene and sphacelus, that they would have rotted off, and thus destroyed the patient, whose life nothing but timely amputation could save. The circumstance in question is thus alluded to by Procop. p. 80, τισὶ δὲ αὐτῶν καὶ τὸν μηρὸν ἀποξηρανθῆναι ξυνέβη· where, for the manifestly corrupt τὸν μηρὸν, read τὸ μόριον, membrum genitale. Of ἀποξηρ. the sense is, 'to waste away,' as ξηραίνεται in a passage of St. Mark, ix. 18.

Some, it is added, were deprived of sight; namely, from the inflammation of the eyes, at the commencement of the disorder, having still continued and increased, so as to terminate in ophthalmia and amaurosis.

10. παραυτίκα ἀναστάντας] lit. 'immediately on rising from their sick beds,' or becoming convalescent. So Herodot. i. 22, ἐκ τῆς νόσου ἀνέστη. Æsop, Fab. 15, 18, ἀναστὰς ὁ νοσῶν προσῆλθεν. Plato ap. Steph. Thes. ἀναστῆναι ἐκ τῆς νόσου. Livy, iii. 24, 'assurrexit ex morbo.' The words λήθη ἐλάμβανε—αὐτοὺς καὶ τοὺς ἐπιτηδείους Gail explains as equiv. to τὸ μὴ γνωρίζειν τοὺς συνήθεις καὶ τὸ μὴ μεμνῆσθαι τῶν πεπραγμένων: noticing this as a circumstance occurring in plague cases. The sense of the passage is elegantly expressed by Lucret. thus: 'Atque etiam quosdam cepere oblivia rerum Cunctarum, neque se possent cognoscere ut ipsei.' Of course it is meant to be understood, that the effect on the memory was only temporary; recollection returning, sooner or later, with returning health.

Ch. L. 1. κρεῖσσον λόγου] 'beyond expression' or description. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 451. So Eurip. Bacch. 666, δεινὰ δρῶσι θανάτων τε κρείσσονα. Themist. 203, θαυμαστὰ καὶ λόγῳ (read λόγου) κρείττω. Appian, ii. 83, γενόμενον γὰρ τὸ κακὸν κρεῖσσον ἐπινοίας. Eurip. Suppl. 844, κρεῖσσον ἢ λέξαι λόγῳ, and Hippol. 1217. Similarly in Herodot. ii. 35, we have ἔργα λόγου μείζω. Closely imitated from the present is a passage of Cantacuzen, p. 52, cited by Poppo.

χαλεπωτέρως ἢ κατὰ—προσέπ.] 'befel [them] more grievously than human nature could endure.' Comp. Gen. iv. 13. Of this use of an adj. in the compar. (or, as here, of a comparative adverb,) followed by ἤ and a subst. with κατὰ, in the sense ad instar, 'in proportion to,' examples occur elsewhere supra, vi. 15, and vii. 45; and others may be seen in the note of Blomf. on Æschyl. Theb. 421, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 449.

ἐδήλωσε ὂν] 'showed itself as being,' 'evinced that it was.' Ἄλλο τι ἢ τῶν ξυντρ. 'quite different from the indigenous or customary ones.' So Lucian, iii. 35, νόσημα τῶν συντρόφων ἦν. Dio Cass. 724, 65, νόσημα οὐδενὶ τῶν ξυνήθων ὁμοιον ἐγίγνετο. We may also comp. Plut. de Samit. Tuend. 3, δίαιταν σύντροφον. Elegant is the versification of this passage by Lucret. and Ovid; and similar to the present is the description in Livy, xli. 21. Of ἅπτεσθαι in the sense to prey on, devour, examples occur in the best Attic writers.

2. τεκμήριον δέ· τῶν μὲν] I have here thought proper, with Pop., Goell., and νίθων ἐπίλειψις σαφὴς ἐγένετο, καὶ οὐχ ἑωρῶντο οὔτε ἄλλως οὔτε περὶ τοιοῦτον οὐδέν· οἱ δὲ κύνες μᾶλλον αἴσθησιν παρεῖχον τοῦ ἀποβαίνοντος διὰ τὸ ξυνδιαιτᾶσθαι.

LI. Τὸ μὲν οὖν νόσημα, πολλὰ καὶ ἄλλα παραλιπόντι ἀτοπίας, ὡς ἑκάστῳ ἐτύγχανέ τι διαφερόντως, ἑτέρῳ πρὸς ἕτερον, γιγνόμενον, τοιοῦτον ἦν ἐπὶ πᾶν τὴν ἰδέαν. 2. καὶ ἄλλο παρελύπει κατ' ἐκεῖνον τὸν χρόνον οὐδὲν τῶν εἰωθότων· ὃ δὲ καὶ γένοιτο, ἐς τοῦτο ἐτελεύτα. 3. ἔθνησκον δὲ οἱ μὲν ἀμελείᾳ, οἱ δὲ καὶ πάνυ θεραπευόμενοι· ἔν τε οὐδὲ ἓν κατέστη ἴαμα, ὡς εἰπεῖν, ὅ τι χρὴν προσφέροντας ὠφελεῖν· τὸ γάρ τῳ ξυνενεγκὸν, ἄλλον τοῦτο ἔβλαπτε. 4. σῶμα τε αὔταρκες ὂν οὐδὲν διεφάνη πρὸς αὐτὸ, ἰσχύος πέρι ἢ ἀσθενείας, ἀλλὰ πάντα ξυνήρει, καὶ τὰ πάσῃ διαίτῃ θεραπευόμενα. 5. δεινότατον δὲ παντὸς ἦν τοῦ κακοῦ ἥ τε ἀθυμία ὁπότε τις αἴσθοιτο κάμνων, (πρὸς γὰρ τὸ ἀνέλπιστον εὐθὺς τραπόμενοι τῇ γνώμῃ, πολλῷ μᾶλλον προΐεντο σφᾶς αὐτοὺς, καὶ οὐκ ἀντεῖχον,) καὶ ὅτι ἕτερος ἀφ' ἑτέρου θεραπείας ἀναπιμπλάμενοι, ὥσπερ τὰ πρόβατα, ἔθνησκον· καὶ τὸν πλεῖστον φθόρον τοῦτο ἐνεποίει. 6. εἴτε γὰρ

Arn., to place a colon instead of a comma after τεκμ. δὲ, (as at i. 11. ii. 39, and elsewhere,) and that because, as Pop. and Arn. are agreed, if τεκμήριον δὲ were the predicate of the whole proposition, the linguæ proprietas would require the art. to be prefixed to the subject. Of ἐπίλειψις, just after, the sense is, failure, non-appearance. By τοιοῦτον οὐδὲν understand ἄταφα σώματα.

αἴσθησιν παρεῖχον τοῦ ἀποβαίνοντος] A popular expression, equiv. to 'gave men to understand what the matter was,' i. e. what was the consequence of the dogs eating of the flesh, namely, their certain death. Accordingly it is said, in the affecting words of Lucret. vi. 1220, 'Cum primis fida canum vis Strata viis animam ponebat in omnibus ægram.'

Ch. LI. 1. παραλιπόντι] This use of the participle in the dat. for a verb and ἵνα or ἐὰν, is similar in principle to that at ἀπτομένῳ supra, ch. 49, 5.

ὡς ἑκάστῳ—γιγνόμενον] The construction is, ὡς τι ἐτύγχανε γιγνόμενον (for γίγνεσθαι) διαφερόντως ἑκάστῳ, ἑτέρῳ πρὸς ἕτερον. I have pointed accordingly. In ἑτέρῳ πρὸς ἕτερον there is the not unfrequent use of ἕτερος for εἷς, as in Latin alter alteri, &c. So, just after, ἕτερος ἀφ' ἑτέρου θεραπείας ἀναπιμπλάμενοι.

2. καὶ ἄλλο παρελύπει—ἐτελεύτα] This passage is by Levêque and Gail thought to be not genuine, and to have crept in as an interpretation of what is said at ch. 49, init. But,—not to mention that the passage has by no means the air of an interpretation,—how, it may be asked, could its introduction here be accounted for? And if repetitions of what has been before said, introduced by a writer himself, were to be rejected, surely (as Pop. shows) many such in Thucyd. would have to be cancelled, as, for instance, that sup. ch. 27, compared with others, infra iv. 56. i. 100. iv. 102. i. 20. vi. 57, to omit several passages occurring in the course of l. viii. Moreover, as at ch. 49 our historian treats of the period which preceded the pestilence, so does he, in the present passage, of the time when it raged. In short, after having detailed the leading symptoms of the disorder, he proceeds to make some supplementary general remarks thereon,—first medical, and then moral: the former, as being ushered in by the words καὶ ἄλλο—ἐτελεύτα, were intended, as Poppo points out, to further inculcate that the disorder was epidemic.

3. ἔθνησκον δὲ—θεραπευόμενοι] Closely imitated from this is a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. ix. 42. By θεραπ. is denoted care and attendance of every kind, both those of physicians and nurses; a use of the word frequent in Hippocr. and Xen. See my note on Acts xvii. 25.

Here, for vulg. οὐδὲν, retained by Pop. and Goell., I have thought proper, with Bekk., to edit, from most of the best MSS. and Greg. Corinth., οὐδὲ ἓν, internal as well as external evidence being quite in favour of the latter. As to the examples in support of the former, adduced by Pop. from Dio Cass. and other later writers, they prove nothing; since the form in question was doubtless confined to the earlier Attic writers. In εἷς οὐδὲ εἷς we have a somewhat more significant expression than οὐδ' εἷς, denoting, as Schaefer has shown, nullus ne unus quidem, i. e. plane nullus.

ὡς εἰπεῖν] propè dixerim. Προσφέροντας. The term is used chiefly of taking food; but here, of medicine; as also in a similar passage of Hippocr. p. 301, cited by Arnold, μὴ ἔχειν ὅ τι προσενέγκαντες ὠφελήσουσιν.

4. σῶμα αὔταρκες ὂν οὐδὲν διεφάνη π. α.] 'no frame was found able to struggle with it.' So Herodot. i. 32, ἀνθρώπου σῶμα ἐν οὐδὲν αὔταρκές ἐστι. The words following, ἰσχύος πέρι, are explanatory of the preceding, meaning, 'in respect of strength or weakness [of constitution]:' being equivalent, as Goell. observes, to what might be expressed in other words thus: 'No frame was so strong as to resist the disorder; none was so weak as not to supply matter for it to lay hold on:' though, indeed, it is generally found that feebleness of frame is better able to resist the attacks of some disorders, especially plague. The term ξυνήρει may mean either, as Port., Bauer, and Pop. render, corripiebat; or, as Steph., conficiebat. So infra viii. p. 271, Steph. τὰ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ταχὺ συναιρεθήσεσθαι. Yet that sense, though also adopted, I find, by Cantacuzen, is not well established; for of the passages adduced in my smaller edition, the one from Dionys. is probably corrupt, and in those from Dio Cass. p. 239, and 629, 69, corripiebat is probably the sense. Again, at p. 119, 34, φάρμακον οὐ συνεῖλεν αὐτὸν, the sense undoubtedly is, 'did not lay hold on him:' in which case one might with equal propriety say, 'his frame afforded no hold to the poisonous drug.'

The words following, πάσῃ διαίτῃ, are not to be confined to the supplying of proper food in due proportion, but extended to the management generally of the sick, both as to diet and regimen, and to careful nursing. So Arrian, E. A. iv. 13, 1, περὶ τὴν δίαιταν τοῦ σώματος διακονεῖσθαι τῷ βασιλεῖ. In this sense we have θεραπεύεσθαι used in a passage of Hippocr. de Rat. vict. p. 83, 32; and in Plut. de Sanit. Tuend. 11, θωπεύοντες ἰατροὺς καὶ θεραπεύοντες, where Wyttenb. well conjectured, for θεραπεύοντες, θεραπεύοντας. And so a little further on in the same writer: ἀπορίᾳ τοῦ θεραπεύσοντος, and ἕτερος ἀφ' ἑτέρου θεραπείας.

5. δεινότατον δὲ παντὸς—κάμνων] 'but the most fearful part of the whole malady was the total dejection of mind [which came on] when any one felt himself ill of the disorder;' δεινότ. signifying 'worst,' 'most formidable.' So Lucret. expresses it: 'Illud in his rebus miserandum et magnopere unum Ærumnabile erat.' In the words following, πρὸς γὰρ τὸ ἀνέλπιστον—ἀντεῖχον, we have further unfolded the idea contained in ἀθυμία, it being meant, that 'total despair caused them to give themselves up as lost, and accordingly to make no struggle with the disorder.' So Lucretius, vi. 1231, 'Deficiens animo, mœsto cum corde jacebat Funera respectans, animam et mittebat ibidem;' an elegant amplification this, especially in the last verse.

καὶ ὅτι ἕτερος—ἔθνησκον] These words contain the other part of the δεινὸν or ærumnabile above spoken of; in which ὥσπερ τὰ πρόβατα must be taken, not with the term following ἔθνησκον, but with the one preceding, ἀναπιμπλάμενοι, scil. νόσου, which may mean infecti, lit. impleti, to denote that the body was fully impregnated with infection. Duker aptly compares a passage of Plut. Pericl. 34, ἐῶν, ὥσπερ βοσκήματα καθειργμένους ἀναπίμπλασθαι φθορᾶς ἀπ' ἀλλήλων. And he might have added others, in Soph. Phil. 520, ὅρα σὺ μὴ—ὅταν δὲ πλησθῇς τῆς νόσου, ξυνουσίᾳ. Dionys. Hal. Ant. x. 53, ἀναπιμπλάμενος—τῆς νόσου. Such, too, is the use of repleri in Livy iv. 30, et al. And to this purpose are the words of Ps. xxxviii. 6, 'My bones are filled with a sore [rather, noisome] disease.' In the words ὥσπερ τὰ πρόβατα we have an allusion to the speedy and universal communication of infection among sheep, by the scab or the rot. So Juv. ii. 78, 'dedit hanc contagio labem, Et dabit in plures: sicut grex totus in agris Unius scabie cadit, et porrigine porci.'

By τοῦτο, a little after, is meant the circumstance of their attending on each other, or rather, what is implied in the above, their being so huddled together, like cattle in a fold, that they could not avoid contact, nor consequently escape infection.

6. The contents of this section are illustrative of the virulence and highly infectious nature of the disorder, and also the appalling character it bore. It is intimated that, 'let men do what they would, the mortality could not be arrested in its progress.' At ἀπώλλυντο ἔρημοι the subject is ἄνθρωποι, the sick persons. Render, 'perished for want of attendance.' Of the words following, καὶ οἰκίαι πολλαὶ ἐκενώθησαν, the sense is, 'and [thus] many houses became emptied of their inhabitants, and the families extinct.' So in Æschyl. Suppl. 646, μήποτε λοιμὸς ἀνδρῶν τῶνδε πόλιν κενώσαι. Eurip. Rhes. 914, μυριάδας πόλεις ἀνδρῶν ἀγαθῶν ἐκένωσεν. That Cantacuz. took οἰκίαι of 'houses,' not, as most commentators understand it, of families, is certain from a passage, evidently imitated from the present, at p. 51, καὶ πολλαὶ οἰκίαι ἐκενώθησαν τῶν οἰκητόρων. The circumstance is one most pathetic, and even graphic. Similarly Josephus, in his Bell. Jud., mentions that after the capture of Jerusalem, many houses were found containing the corpses of all the inmates: and De Foe notices the same circumstance as happening in the great plague of London. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 2133, ὥστε πολλὰς οἰκίας ἐξερημωθῆναι δι' ἀπορίαν τῶν ἐπιμελησομένων, from which and from passages of Isocr. Ægin. § 29, and Jos. Ant. xii. 8. xviii. 6, 2, may be confirmed the correctness of the common reading here, θεραπεύσοντος, for which some have proposed θεραπεύοντος. The singular is here put generically for the plural.

μὴ θέλοιεν, δεδιότες, ἀλλήλοις προσιέναι, ἀπώλλυντο ἔρημοι·—καὶ οἰκίαι πολλαὶ ἐκενώθησαν ἀπορίᾳ τοῦ θεραπεύσοντος·—εἴ τε προσ-ίοιεν, διεφθείροντο, καὶ μάλιστα οἱ ἀρετῆς τι μεταποιούμενοι· αἰ-σχύνῃ γὰρ ἠφείδουν σφῶν αὐτῶν, ἐσιόντες παρὰ φίλους, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὰς ὀλοφύρσεις τῶν ἀπογιγνομένων τελευτῶντες καὶ οἱ οἰκεῖοι

εἴ τε προσίοιεν, διεφθείροντο] Compare Lucret. vi. 1241, and Lev. xxv. 26. Of the words following, οἱ ἀρετῆς τι μεταποιούμενοι, the sense is, 'those who laid claim to any virtue;' a use of μεταποιεῖσθαι with ἀρετῆς and other similar terms, of which examples are frequent in Procop., Isocr., Appian, Dio Cass., Jos., and Dionys. Hal.: whence it is clear that by ἀρετ. is meant, in the most general acceptation of the term, moral virtue: and accordingly the present phrase is justly regarded by Pop. as equiv. to 'those who wished to be thought καλοὶ καγαθοί,' what Lucret. expresses by optimus quisque. Αἰσχύνῃ, 'through shame,' namely, of selfish caution. See note on ch. 43, and on i. 84. In ἠφείδουν σφῶν αὐτῶν we have a highly energetic mode of expression to denote self-devotion, occurring also in Plut. de Diser. 13, αὐτοὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν ἀφειδοῦσι: and so ψυχῆς ἀφ. in Soph. El. 980. See my note at Acts xx. 25. Col. ii. 23. In ἐσιόντες παρὰ φίλους we have an expression derived from the simplicity of early phraseology, denoting to visit, equiv. to ἐπισκέπτεσθαι, to go to see, as said of the attendance of friends on one another, especially in case of sickness: of which use I know no other example, except in a passage of Acts xxviii. 8, πρὸς ὃν ὁ Παῦλος εἰσελθών, and another of Xen. Cyr. v. 1, 9, Thiem.

In the clause following, ἐπεὶ καὶ—ἐξέκαμνον, it is meant to be intimated how it was that friends so heroically devoted themselves,—namely, because even relations failed them; so making good the words of Solomon, 'There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.' See also Eurip. Orest. 794, seqq. Of this a parallel case occurred in the plague at Florence, wherein Boccaccio states that 'relations seldom or never visited each other, and thus most of the sick had nothing to depend on, but either the kind assiduities of friends, and those few, or the paid, attentions of servants, induced by exorbitant wages to offer their services, though of little use except to reach what the sick wanted, or watch when they died.' The reason, indeed, why they thus failed, must be sought for in the words, τὰς ὀλοφύρσεις τῶν ἀπογιγνομένων — ἐξέκαμνον, which may mean, as they are usually understood to do, that 'they were wearied out with the moanings of the dying;' yet such a signification the term ὀλοφ. will not well bear, and the sense thus arising is not a little feeble and jejune; nor, indeed, in point of fact, are those dying of the plague observed to break into plaintive cries. Moreover, as Arnold notices, the terms ἐκκάμνειν and ἀποκάμνειν are generally used to express 'the being tired out with what we are ourselves doing,' not with what another is doing. Hence it is better with Pop., Goell., and Arnold, to render, 'were tired out with lamenting for the dying, overcome by the extremity of the evil;' in other words, 'were weary of lamenting for their sick relatives, grew callous to the feeling of grief for them, and thus either went not to them (or rarely) to see what they wanted, or to watch when they died, and receive their ἐξέκαμνον, ὑπὸ τοῦ πολλοῦ κακοῦ νικώμενοι. 7. ἐπὶ πλέον δὲ ὅμως οἱ διαπεφευγότες τόν τε θνήσκοντα καὶ τὸν πονούμενον ᾤκτίζοντο, διὰ τὸ προειδέναι τε, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἤδη ἐν τῷ θαρσαλέῳ εἶναι· δὶς γὰρ τὸν αὐτὸν, ὥστε καὶ κτείνειν, οὐκ ἐπελάμβανε. 8. καὶ ἐμακαρίζοντό τε ὑπό τῶν ἄλλων, καὶ αὐτοὶ τῷ παραχρῆμα περιχαρεῖ καὶ ἐς τὸν ἔπειτα χρόνον ἐλπίδος τι εἶχον κούφης μηδ' ἂν ὑπ' ἄλλου νοσήματός ποτε ἔτι διαφθαρῆναι.

LII. Ἐπίεσε δ' αὐτοὺς μᾶλλον, πρὸς τῷ ὑπάρχοντι πόνῳ, καὶ ἡ ξυγκομιδὴ ἐκ τῶν ἀγρῶν ἐς τὸ ἄστυ, καὶ οὐχ ἧσσον τοὺς ἐπελθόν-last breath;' which was regarded as one of the most pious offices of relatives. Vain were it to urge, that the lamentations of friends would be rather for the dead than the dying: since, as Arnold very truly observes, 'ὀλοφύρσεις might be made for a dying friend as well as for one actually dead, if we understand not the formal lamentations which were a part of the funeral ceremony, but the mere natural expression of sympathy and sorrow.' It is not, indeed, directly asserted that they did not visit them, or visited them but seldom; yet certainly such is implied.

Of ἀποκάμνειν, thus used with an accus., an example is adduced by Goeller, from Xen. Hist. vii. 5, 19, ὡς πόνων τε μηδένα ἀποκάμνειν.

7. ὅμως] The full import of the conjunction is, as Arnold well expresses it, 'Still, [whatever were the particular instances of intrepid humanity, visiting the sick and dying without any consideration for its own safety,] yet the sufferers met with the liveliest compassion and the greatest attention from those who had themselves had the plague, and had recovered from it;' 'intimating (as he observes) that even the most humane, while risking their own lives by their kindness, were less free and unhesitating in their charitable work than those who, from having once experienced the disorder, were relieved from all personal apprehension for the future, while they were best able to appreciate the misery of the sufferers.' Τὸν πονούμενον, for κάμνοντα, 'him who was labouring under the disease,' as occasionally in Herodot. and Aristoph., and often in Homer. Similar is the use of ταλαιπωρεῖσθαι for ταλαιπωρεῖν. In διὰ τὸ προειδέναι we have briefly expressed what, in less concise terms, would stand thus: 'because they knew by experience the disorder (its virulence), and could therefore pity the sufferers:' so making good the words of the poet, 'Haud ignara mali miseris succurrere disco.' Answering to the phrase here, ἐν τῷ θαρσαλέῳ εἶναι, is the Latin, in bono animo esse, and our to be of good heart, of good courage. Τὸ θαρσαλέον also occurs in Herodot. vi. 3, 9, and Zosim. iv. 40. Ἐπελάμβανε, corripiebat, attacked, as in Herodot. viii. 115, ἐπιλαβὼν λοιμὸς τὸν στρατὸν, and Hippocr. ap. Foes.

8. The full sense meant to be expressed in this section is, that 'they who escaped were both felicitated on their escape by the rest, (namely, those who were yet unattacked,) and they themselves, in the excess of their joy, entertained a light hope for the future, that they should never hereafter be destroyed by any other disease.' Of the phrase τὸ παραχρῆμα περιχαρές another example occurs in Dio Cass. xlvii. 12. Almost transcribed from these words of our author, ἐλπίδος τι εἶχον κούφης are the similar ones of Charit. vi. and evidently imitated from thence are the words of Appian, ii. 621, καί τί που καὶ κούφως (where read κούφης) εἶχον ἐλπίδος. Of the expression κούφη ἐλπίς, and κούφαι ἐλπίδες, examples occur in Find. Olymp. xiii. 116, and Herodian, ii. 8, 6. ix. 1. And so the leves spes of Horace: here, however, the epithet κούφη has reference, not, as it usually has, to that emptiness of hope by which it flatters and deceives, but the buoyancy, or sustaining power, of hope, as 'an anchor of the soul;' (gently alluded to by Soph. Aj. 558, κούφοις πτερύγεσιν βάσκων, where, indeed, one should have expected, not βάσκων, but rather αἴωρων: but there is there a commixture of two phrases, and κούφ. stands for κουφίζουσι.

Ch. LII. Our author now subjoins certain circumstances that might be thought to aggravate the evils of the pestilence, if not to account for its origin, i. e. the annoyance of a densely crowded population.

1. ἡ ξυγκομιδὴ—ἄστυ] Meaning, τὸ ξυγκομίζεσθαι, 'the removing of themselves,' &c., migratio. So in a passage of Liv. iii. 6, (evidently written with a view to the present,) we have, 'Grave tempus et forte annus pestilens erat urbi agrisque, nec

τας. 2. οἰκιῶν γὰρ οὐχ ὑπαρχουσῶν, ἀλλ' ἐν καλύβαις πνιγηραῖς ὥρᾳ ἔτους διαιτωμένων, ὁ φθόρος ἐγίγνετο οὐδενὶ κόσμῳ, ἀλλὰ καὶ νεκροὶ ἐπ' ἀλλήλοις ἀποθνήσκοντες ἔκειντο, καὶ ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς ἐκαλινδοῦντο καὶ περὶ τὰς κρήνας ἁπάσας ἠμιθνῆτες, τοῦ ὕδατος ἐπιθυμίᾳ. 3. τά τε ἱερά, ἐν οἷς ἐσκήνηντο, νεκρῶν πλέα ἦν, αὐτοῦ ἐναποθνησκόντων· ὑπερβιαζομένου γὰρ τοῦ κακοῦ, οἱ ἄνθρωποι οὐκ ἔχοντες ὅ,τι γένωνται, ἐς ὀλιγωρίαν ἐτράποντο καὶ ἱερῶν καὶ ὁσίων ὁμοίως. 4. νόμοι τε πάντες ξυνεταράχθησαν οἷς ἐχρῶντο πρότερον

2. οἰκιῶν γὰρ οὐχ ὑπαρχουσῶν, &c.] 'for there being no houses for them to inhabit in,' namely, from the want of room to build, and the want of means for their being built : see supra ch. 17. By καλύβαις are meant, 'huts made of boards,' &c. So Aristoph. Eq. 792, τοῦτον ὁρῶν οἰκοῦντα ἐν ταῖς πιθακναῖσι καὶ γυπαρίοις. Of πνιγηραῖς the sense is narrow, lit. stifling, as in several passages imitated from the present, e. gr. Jos. Bell. iii. 9, 1, where it is said of Cæsarea, ἦν πνιγώδης θέρους (scil. ὥρᾳ) ὑπὸ καύματος : and so Philostr. calls Athens itself, πνιγηρὸν οἰκητήριον. By ὥρᾳ ἔτους is to be understood, not, as many explain, 'time of year,' but summer-time, the height of summer, as appears from various passages imitated from the present, in Plut., Arr., Procop., and Dionys. Hal. Οὐδενὶ κόσμῳ, i. e. πάνυ ἀκόσμως, 'ita ut nulla haberetur ratio ordinis et disciplinæ publicæ.' Evidently imitated from which are the words of Liban. Or. 505, ἀπέθνησκον οὐδενὶ κόσμῳ δαπανώμενοι, and Arrian, E. A. i. 8, 14, τοὺς Θηβαίους οὐδενὶ κόσμῳ ἔκτεινον.

In the words following, νεκροὶ ἐπ' ἀλλήλοις ἀποθνήσκοντες ἔκειντο, we have one of those negligently worded forms of expression occasionally found in our author, and which are not to be too rigorously pressed on. We may best, with Pop., regard the words as standing for ἐπ' ἀλλήλοις ἀποθνήσκοντες ἔκειντο : νεκροὶ being considered as the consequent to the words ἐπ' ἀλλ. ἀποθ.

ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς ἐκαλινδοῦντο] 'they rolled along the streets, staggering about the fountains.' Comp. Aristid. iii. 404, πάντα ἦν κυλινδουμένων, καὶ πιπτόντων, καὶ ἀπορουμένων. So in Lucret. vi. 1263, we have, 'Multa siti prostrata viam per proque voluta Corpora, Silanos ad aquarum strata, jacebant — Multaque per populi passim loca prompta viasque Languida semianimo tum corpore membra videres.'

3. ὑπερβιαζομένου—τοῦ κακοῦ] 'the calamity exceeding all bounds.' So Joseph. p. 419, 26, ὑπερβιαζομένου τοῦ κακοῦ. Procop. 131, 33, ὑπερβιαζομένου αὐτὸν τοῦ λιμοῦ : also 146 and 240.

οὐκ ἔχοντες ὅ,τι γένωνται] 'not knowing what to have recourse to.' An Attic idiom, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 488, 5, and Blomfield on Æschyl. Prom. 940.

ἱερῶν καὶ ὁσίων] The sense may be either 'sacred and profane,' or, 'sacred and civil ;' for,—as it is well remarked by Taylor on Æschin. p. 49,—'ἱερὰ ad religionem, ὅσια ad rempublicam spectant, quemadmodum inter res sacras et publicas distinguit jurisprudentia Romana.' Either signification is well supported ; the former, by several passages of the orators adduced in Steph. Thes. 7032, C and D ; the latter, by other passages adduced by that lexicographer, (7033, A.) from Antipho, ἀμῦναι ὑπὲρ τῶν ἱερῶν καὶ ὁσίων, and from Plato, θεραπευτὴν ὁσίων τε καὶ ἱερῶν. And hence may be emended a desperately corrupt passage of Jos. Ant. xiv. 12, 3, καὶ πόλεων μήτε ἡρώων ἀποσχομένων, where for ἡρώων read, from the best MS. (Leyd.) and Ruffinus, ἱερῶν : and for πόλεων, read γ' ὁσίων, the two letters Γ and Π being often confounded, as also Σ and Λ. This emendation is quite confirmed by what follows in the same passage, where it is said, by way of explanation, τοὺς αἰτίους καὶ τῶν εἰς ἀνθρώπους παρανομιῶν καὶ τῶν εἰς θεοὺς ἀνομημάτων ἠμυνάμεθα.

To return to the present passage ;—certain it is, that the two significations above mentioned, in effect, merge into each other ; but sacred and civil seems to deserve the preference.

4. ξυνεταράχθησαν] 'were confounded,' i. e. violated. Evidently imitated from this is a passage of Dio Cass. 253, 8, ὥστε τὸν ὅμιλον—συνταραχθῆναι καὶ μήτε τοῦ θείου ἔτι φροντίσαι, ἀλλὰ πάντα τὰ περὶ τὰς ταφὰς νόμιμα συγχέαι, &c. Similarly in a passage of Procop. it is said, πάντα ἐν ἅπασι ξυνεταράχθη. What these laws for burial were, may be seen in Petit. Legg. Att. p. 33, 598. The sense is elegantly expressed by Lucret. vi. 1276 : 'Nec mos ille sepulturæ remanebat in urbe, Ut prius hic populus semper consuerat humari: Perturbatus enim totus trepidabat, et unus Quisque suum pro re consortem mœstus humabat,' where Wakef. and Eich. wrongly edit pius instead of prius, (which word is sufficiently confirmed by this passage of our author,) also, for trepidabat, repetebat, though the former is perfectly suitable, while the latter is by no means so, and, indeed, has scarcely a glimmering of sense, merely arising, it may be supposed, from the t in trepidabat being faded off in some very ancient archetype. Finally, pro re there is pro re nata, and corresponds to the ὡς ἐδύνατο of our author.

5. ἐς ἀναισχύντους θήκας ἐτράποντο] A very unusual form of expression, which it is difficult to reconcile with the rules of correct writing. The Schol., Huds., Abr., Gottl., Pop., Jacobs, and Goell., regard it as an anomalous form of expression, to be resolved into what, according to more usual phraseology, would stand thus : ἐς ἀναισχυντίαν ἐτράποντο, χρησάμενοι θήκαις ἀλλοτρίαις, thus taking θήκ. in the sense repositaria, sepulchres, a signification which the word bears in a passage of Æschyl. Pers. 411, where see Blomf. And so the term was probably understood by Procop., as appears from his words, B. P. ii. 23, τοὺς νεκροὺς ἐς ἀλλοτρίας θήκας ἐῤῥίπτουν : yet, in thus taking ἀναισχύντους as standing for ἀλλοτρίας or ξένας, so great a harshness is involved, that we may better take θήκας as put for ταφάς, meaning, 'modes of burial ;' by which the sense will be, 'resorted to shameless modes of burying their dead.' Thus, as observes Arnold, θήκη, which is properly the place where the dead are deposited, is here used incorrectly (or impropriè) to denote 'the act of disposing of the dead.' Vain is it that Pop. urges, against this view, that the word θήκη does not bear that signification : certainly it does not properly ; but it seems to be here so used by our author, agreeably to his custom of deviating from the ordinary modes of expression. Nor does this suppose an anomaly greater than many elsewhere found in our author ; though good taste cannot approve of them, as being only suited to poetical phraseology. No other, indeed, can be the sense here intended ; for ἀναισχ. were a term little applicable to place, though sufficiently so to action, in which case the epithet is understood of the agent. And as the word ταφὴ signifies properly the act of burying, so might θήκη the act of depositing, though here it denotes the act of laying the dead any where for burial. Finally, the former interpretation is forbidden by the words following, which are evidently explanatory of the foregoing, —serving to indicate, that the dead were disposed of, not by being deposited in sepulchres, or inhumation, but in the rudest manner possible, by burning them on funeral pyres.

At τῶν ἐπιτηδείων must be supplied, from the subject-matter, (as in a passage of Dionys. Hal. p. 677,) the words ἐς ταφάς, as though ταφὰς, not θήκας, had preceded. Of the complete phrase an example occurs in Herodian, viii. 5, 18, οὐκ ἐχόντων αὐτῶν τὰ πρὸς ταφὰς ἐπιτήδεια, meaning, not only wood for the pyre, but garments, the fat of oxen, honey, spices, ointments, perfumes, &c. See Potter.

φθάσαντες τοὺς νήσαντας] 'having anticipated, been beforehand with, those that had raised the funeral pyre,' and were going to deposit their dead upon it. In νήσαντας πυρὰν we have a customary and conventional term, frequent in the Attic writers.

CH. LIII. Having stated the physical character of the pestilence, and noted the circumstances which attended it, our author now proceeds to detail the moral consequences thereof, as shown in its effects on the manners of the Athenian people—effects very similar to those so vividly portrayed by Livy, Boccaccio, Manzoni, De Foe, and Froissart in his description of the plague in the year 1348, who assure us that every bond of attachment was broken asunder ; that servants fled from their masters, wives from their husbands, children from their parents ; that laws were no longer in νόσημα. 2. ῥᾷον γὰρ ἑτόλμα τις ἃ πρότερον ἀπεκρύπτετο μὴ καθ' ἡδονὴν ποιεῖν, ἀγχίστροφον τὴν μεταβολὴν ὁρῶντες τῶν τ' εὐδαιμόνων καὶ αἰφνιδίως θνησκόντων καὶ τῶν οὐδὲν πρότερον κεκτημένων, εὐθὺς δὲ τἀκείνων ἐχόντων. 3. ὥστε ταχείας τὰς ἐπαυρέσεις καὶ πρὸς τὸ τερπνὸν ἠξίουν ποιεῖσθαι, ἐφήμερα τά τε σώματα καὶ τὰ χρήματα ὁμοίως ἡγούμενοι. 4. καὶ τὸ μὲν προσταλαιπωρεῖν τῷ δόξαντι καλῷ οὐδεὶς πρόθυμος ἦν, ἄδηλον νομίζων εἰ, πρὶν ἐπ' αὐτὸ ἐλθεῖν, διαφθαρήσεται· ὅ τι δὲ ἤδη τε ἡδὺ καὶ πανταχόθεν τὸ ἐς αὐτὸ κερδαλέον, τοῦτο καὶ καλὸν καὶ χρήσιμον κατέστη. 5. θεῶν δὲ φόβος ἢ ἀνθρώπων νόμος οὐδεὶς ἀπεῖργε, τὸ μὲν κρίνοντες ἐν ὁμοίῳ καὶ σέβειν καὶ μή, ἐκ τοῦ πάντας ὁρᾶν ἐν ἴσῳ ἀπολλυμένους,

2. ῥᾷον γὰρ ἑτόλμα τις—ποιεῖν] The constr. is, ἑτόλμα γάρ τις ῥᾷον [ταῦτα], ἃ πρότερον ἀπεκρύπτετο μὴ καθ' ἡδονὴν ποιεῖν, i. e. as Jacobs explains, εὐλαβεῖτο καὶ ἐφυλάττετο φαίνεσθαι καθ' ἡδονὴν ποιεῖν. Compare a passage of Lysias, Areop. p. 276, referred to by Jacobs, περὶ ὧν ἀπεκρυπτόμεθα μηδένα εἰδέναι. The infin. here is explanatory of the foregoing verb, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 534. Of the phrase τὰ καθ' ἡδονήν, (scil. ὄντα,) 'quæ grata sunt,' frequent examples are found in Xen., Plato, and the Attic writers. Ἀγχίστροφον τὴν μεταβολήν, 'the sudden change of fortune:' a phrase often occurring in Procop. and other writers, for which the full phrase is, τὸ ἀγχ. τῆς τύχης, found in Dionys. Hal. 570. The term ἀγχίστροφος properly signifies, turning at a corner, (ἀγχὶ, coming from ἀγς, a corner;) and hence it also bears the sense, suddenly. The genitives τῶν εὐδαιμόνων and τῶν κεκτημένων are genitives of reference, signifying 'in respect of,' on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 340.

3. ὥστε ταχείας—ποιεῖσθαι] lit. 'insomuch that they thought it right to make (or seek) quick enjoyments, with a view to gratification [only].' They were, it seems, desirous to snatch the enjoyment of such fugitive delights as presented themselves, regarding alike their lives and their possessions as only held by the tenure of a day; so, indeed, acting on the sensual maxim, 'Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.'

4. τὸ μὲν προσταλαιπωρεῖν—ἦν] 'as to the labouring after what was esteemed honourable, no one was ready to do it.' On this use of the art. with the infin. mood, where the infin. alone would suffice, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 542, obs. 2. Προσταλαιπωρεῖν is a very rare term; though I have noted it in Aristoph. Lys. 765, and Poll. vi. 139.

πρὶν ἐπ' αὐτὸ ἐλθεῖν] Meaning, 'before he attained the object he was in pursuit of,' (namely, τὸ ἡδύ, 'the pleasurable,' what ministered to his pleasure;) the words being meant, as Arnold observes, to distinguish the pursuit of virtue from the attainment to it. A long course of virtuous habits was necessary, before τὸ καλὸν could be acquired; that is, before a man could love goodness for its own sake, and could appreciate its intrinsic beauty and excellence. Πανταχόθεν, 'in any way.' In the terms following, καλὸν καὶ χρήσιμον, there is, perhaps, an allusion to the long-agitated philosophic question concerning τὸ καλὸν and τὸ χρήσιμον, the honestum and the utile. We have, indeed, no art. here; but that may be very well dispensed with, as in another passage infra v. 105, τὰ μὲν ἡδέα καλὰ νομίζουσι, τὰ δὲ ξυμφέροντα δίκαια.

5. θεῶν δὲ φόβος ἢ ἀνθρώπων νόμος οὐδεὶς ἀπεῖργε] Lucret. 'Nec jam religio divom neque numina magni Pendebantur.' Evidently imitated from these are the similar words of Procop. Vand. p. 133, οὔτε θεῖον (I conj. θεοῦ) φόβος οὔτε ἀνθρώπων αἰδὼς. That such should have been the case, is far from unaccountable, it being ever found, that overwhelming national calamity rather tends to suppress than strengthen religious principle; for, since true is the saying of Æschyl. Theb. 77, πόλις εὖ πράσσουσα δαίμονας τίει: so, the converse,—especially among those who looked to divine power only for temporal advantage,—was sure to produce the reverse; a fact to which Procop. and Josephus bear ample testimony. Τὸ μὲν depends upon σέβειν, and is to be referred to τὸ θεῖον, inherent in θεῶν φόβος.

τῶν δὲ ἁμαρτημάτων οὐδεὶς—ἀπολαῦσαι] 'no one expecting that his existence would be prolonged till judgment should take effect, and he receive the punishment of his offences; nay, they supposed that a far heavier judgment—already denounced against them—hung over their heads; and before it fell upon them, they thought it right to snatch some enjoyment of life.' It is meant, that they considered themselves as criminals condemned to death, expecting every instant the execution of their sentence. A metaphor this, with which we may compare the similar one, in a passage of St. Paul, 2 Cor. i. 9, 'But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves,' &c.; the Apostle meaning to say, that 'he was like one who lies under condemnation to death; over whom the sword of the law is continually suspended.' In like manner, in Jos. Ant. xvii. 6, 2, death is spoken of as τὸ κατεψηφισμένον, scil. τῶν ἀνθρώπων. See also Philostr. V. Ap. vii. 28. And so St. Augustin, de urbis Romæ excidio, ch. vi. says, when speaking of the cloud of fire which was seen for one whole night to hang over Constantinople, (in the reign of Arcadius,) that 'people who had not received baptism before, now impatiently desired it, in order to escape, not the temporal fire, which they saw themselves threatened with, but that eternal one, which they dreaded.'

ἥξει—ἅμ' αὐτῷ] Founded on Hom. Il. A. 61, Εἰ δὴ ὁμοῦ πόλεμός τε δαμᾷ καὶ λοιμὸς Ἀχαιούς.

3. μὴ λοιμὸν—ἀλλὰ λιμὸν] These two words are often confounded in MSS., from strong similarity of sound, nay, as having been originally the same, the idea of wasting being common to both. See my note on Matt. xxiv. 7, and on Rev. vi. 8.

ἐνίκησε δὲ—λοιμὸν εἰρῆσθαι] Supply ἡ δόξα, 'the opinion prevailed:' a form of expression, on which see Steph. Thes. vi. 388, A, and comp. Æschyl. Choëph. 671, εἶτ' οὖν κομίζειν δόξα νικήσει φίλων, &c. Εἰκότως stands for ὡς εἰκὸς, meaning, 'it was likely they should,' or, 'with reason;' as infra iii. 2. And so οἷον εἰκὸς elsewhere. With the phrase following, πρὸς ἃ ἔπασχον τὴν μνήμην ἐποιοῦντο, 'made their recollections in conformity to, or to square with,' comp. supra i. 140, πρὸς δὲ τὰς ξυμφορὰς καὶ γνώμας τρεπομένους.

5. ὁμοῖα εἶναι] 'to be suitable thereto.'

6. ὅ τι ἄξιον καὶ εἰπεῖν] 'in any considerable degree,' lit. 'any thing worth mentioning.' Ἐπενείματο, 'devastated,' lit. eat up. The word is used of any sudden and wide-spread devastation.

Ch. LV. 1. τὴν Πάραλον γῆν καλουμένην] A tract of country which comprehended the narrow part of that triangle, or horn, of which Attica consists (the apex of which is the promontory of Sunium): see more in Col. Leake's Attica, i. 412. ii. 12. 16. 24, 25. On Mount Laurium and its silver mines, see Leake's Attica, i. 471. ii. 3. 65. 274.

2. I have here followed Poppo, Bekk., and Goell., in editing ᾗ, for ἣ, though on the authority of only a few MSS., and that because it is required by the sense, which is 'eam partem hujus terræ quâ.'

Ch. LVI. 1. ἐπειδὴ ἑτοῖμα ἦν] scil. τὰ παρεσκευασμένα, 'when the things prepared were ready.' Comp. ii. 98.

4. προεχώρησε] 'processit,' 'succeeded.' Supp. from the context, ἡ πεῖρα, or τὸ ἑλεῖν from the preceding; as infra ch. 58 ἡ αἵρεσις τῆς πόλεως is expressed in a similar phrase.

6. ἐς Πρασιὰς] On this place see my note in Transl., and Leake's Morea, vol. ii. 484. This unfortunate city was not only taken and sacked on the present occasion, but twice afterwards in the Peloponnesian war; in allusion to which, Aristoph. Pac. 241, Ἰὼ Πρασιαὶ τρισάθλιαι.

Ch. LVII. 1. θάπτοντας—ᾐσθάνοντο] Matth., Goell., and Arnold understand this, of their perceiving the flames and smoke of the funeral pyres. Yet, besides this, it may be understood of interring without the walls in the Ceramicus exterior: see ch. 34, 5. Indeed, θάπτειν was, as Arnold observes, 'applied generally to any manner of performing the funeral rites, whether by interment or by burning; as appears from Herodot. v. 8, ἔπειτα δὲ θάπτουσι, κατακαύσαντες, ἢ ἄλλως γῇ κρύψαντες, where Wess. annotates, "Igne sepeliunt, θάπτουσι πυρὶ, ut in Æl. H. An. x. 22."'

Ch. LIX. 1. ἠλλοίωντο τὰς γνώμας] 'changed their sentiments.' Of this rare signification of the verb, an example occurs also in Dio Cass. p. 344, 22, ἠλλοιώθη.

ἐν αἰτίᾳ εἶχον] So at i. 35. v. 6. Dion. Hal. 491 and 548, ἐν αἰτίᾳ εἶχον τοὺς δ. Herodian vi. 7, 8.

2. ἄπρακτοι ἐγένοντο] scil. οἱ πρεσβεῖς.

3. πανταχόθεν—καθεστῶτες] A phrase this, signifying, 'to be encircled and hemmed in with such difficulties on all sides (πανταχόθεν) as to be utterly at a loss to know which way to turn, or what course to take.' So, in a passage of St. Paul, 2 Cor. iv. 8, ἐν παντὶ θλιβόμενοι, τες, ἐνέκειντο τῷ Περικλεῖ. 4. ὁ δὲ, ὁρῶν αὐτοὺς πρὸς τὰ παρόντα χαλεπαίνοντας, καὶ πάντα ποιοῦντας ἅπερ αὐτὸς ἤλπιζε, ξύλλογον ποιήσας, (ἔτι δ' ἐστρατήγει) ἐβούλετο θαρσῦναί τε καὶ, ἀπαγαγὼν τὸ ὀργιζόμενον τῆς γνώμης, πρὸς τὸ ἠπιώτερον καὶ ἀδεέστερον καταστῆσαι· παρελθὼν δὲ ἔλεξε τοιάδε.

"Καὶ προσδεχομένῳ μοι τὰ τῆς ὀργῆς ὑμῶν ἐς ἐμὲ γεγένηται, (αἰσθάνομαι γὰρ τὰς αἰτίας,) καὶ ἐκκλησίαν τούτου ἕνεκα ξυνήγαγον, ὅπως ὑπομνήσω καὶ ‡ μέμψωμαι, εἴ τι μὴ ὀρθῶς ἢ ἐμοὶ χαλεπαίνετε, ἢ ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς εἴκετε. 2. ἐγὼ γὰρ ἡγοῦμαι πόλιν πλείω ξύμπασαν ὀρθουμένην ὠφελεῖν τοὺς ἰδιώτας, ἢ καθ' ἕκαστον ἀλλ' οὐ στενοχωρούμενοι· ἀπορούμενοι, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐξαπορούμενοι.

4. ἐβούλετο θαρσῦναι — καταστῆσαι] 'he wished both to hearten them, and, by drawing off the irritation of their feelings, to bring them to a calmer and less dispirited state of mind.' So infra ch. 65, ἀπὸ τῶν παρόντων δεινῶν ἀπάγειν τὴν γνώμην. Of the same nature with the phrase πρὸς τὸ ἠπιώτερον is another, ἐπὶ τὸ βέλτιον; the article in such cases being always used with reference to some subst. understood.

CH. LX. The present speech commences with somewhat of abruptness, (like that of Alcibiades, vi. 16,) agreeably to the indignant character it breathes, and the air of authority, which became one who, as it is said infra ch. 65, οὐκ ἤγετο μᾶλλον ὑπ' αὐτοῦ (τοῦ πλήθους) ἢ αὐτὸς ἦγε,—ἔχων ἐπ' ἀξιώσει καὶ πρὸς ὀργήν τι ἀντειπεῖν.

1. καὶ προσδεχομένῳ, &c.] The καὶ before προσδεχ. has corresponding to it the καὶ before ἐκκλησίαν. Pericles ably prefaces what he is going to say, with telling them why, and for what purpose, he had convened the assembly. He then proceeds to expostulate with his hearers on the injustice of the displeasure they evinced towards him, and appeals to their own equitable unbiassed sense of his ability, patriotism, and integrity.

Similar to the construction here, γεγένηταί μοι προσδεχομένῳ, (on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 388, ε.) is that of γίγνεσθαι, or εἶναι βουλομένῳ or βουλομένοις, supra ch. 3. Of this phrase with προσδέχεσθαι, the only examples known to me are infra vi. 46, τῷ N. προσδεχομένῳ ἦν τὰ παρὰ τῶν Ἐγ., and Arrian, E. A. i. 22, 1, οὐδὲ προσδεχομένοις Μακεδόσιν ἦν. In fact the rule comprehends all verbs of willing or wishing; and also, as included in the latter, those of expecting. The words following, τὰ τῆς ὀργῆς, may be rendered, 'these manifestations of your anger:' or we may regard them as falling under the rule by which 'a substantive in the genit. is put with the art. in the nomin. for the nomin. of the subst.;' an idiom frequently occurring in our author, as iv. 54. viii. 77, and on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 284, 285. The expression is evidently imitated by Plut. Brut. 21, ὅταν παρακμάσῃ καὶ μαρανθῇ τὸ τῆς ὀργῆς, where the true reading is probably τὰ τῆς ὀργῆς. By an evident imitation of the present passage, an oration in Aristid. iii. 650, similarly commences with, καὶ προσεδόκων ταῦτα, ὦ Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ ἀδικεῖτε ὅτι ὀργίζεσθε.

μέμψωμαι] For this Bekk. edits, from two MSS., μέμψομαι: but I have thought proper, with Poppo and Goell., to retain the common reading. Poppo here censures the temerity of Bekk. in altering, in various passages, the aor. subjunct. into the fut. indic., on such slender authority of MSS.—yet, as MSS. in such minute variations as the present, have but little authority, I should not object to the change where decided propriety of language might require it: and I fully agree with Arnold, that 'wherever ὅπως can be brought to bear the sense of how, (as after ὁρᾶν, πράσσειν, σκοπεῖν, παρασκευάζεσθαι, or any similar verbs,) we may without scruple introduce the fut. indic. instead of the aor. subjunct.:' but where the sense is simply 'in order that,' 'with a view to,' the condemnation of the aor. form should be qualified. Besides, as Arnold observes, 'considering that Bekk. himself reads at viii. 109, πορεύεσθαι διενοεῖτο — ὅπως μέμψηταί τε καὶ ἀπολογήσηται, if the aor. subj. is right in one of these cases, it must be surely so in the other.'

2. ἡγοῦμαι πόλιν, &c.] Render, 'I am of opinion, that a state which enjoys public prosperity is more promotive of the welfare of private persons, than one in prosperity

τῶν πολιτῶν εὐπραγοῦσαν, ἀθρόαν δὲ σφαλλομένην. 3. καλῶς μὲν γὰρ φερόμενος ἀνὴρ τὸ καθ' ἑαυτὸν, διαφθειρομένης τῆς πατρίδος, οὐδὲν ἧσσον ξυναπόλλυται, κακοτυχῶν δὲ ἐν εὐτυχούσῃ πολλῷ μᾶλλον διασώζεται. 4. ὁπότε οὖν πόλις μὲν τὰς ἰδίας ξυμφορὰς οἷά τε φέρειν, εἷς δὲ ἕκαστος τὰς ἐκείνης ἀδύνατος, πῶς οὐ χρὴ πάντας ἀμύνειν αὐτῇ, καὶ μὴ ὃ νῦν ὑμεῖς δρᾶτε, ταῖς κατ' οἶκον κακοπραγίαις ἐκπεπληγμένοι, τοῦ κοινοῦ τῆς σωτηρίας ἀφίεσθε, καὶ ἐμέ τε τὸν παραινέσαντα πολεμεῖν, καὶ ὑμᾶς αὐτοὺς οἳ ξυνέγνωτε δι' αἰτίας ἔχετε. 5. καίτοι ἐμοὶ τοιούτῳ ἀνδρὶ ὀργίζεσθε, ὃς οὐδενὸς οἴομαι ἧσσον εἶναι γνῶναί τε τὰ δέοντα καὶ ἑρμηνεῦσαι ταῦτα, φιλόπολίς τε καὶ χρημάτων κρείσσων. 6. ὅ τε γὰρ γνοὺς καὶ μὴ

indeed, individually, but collectively brought to ruin.' So Livy, xxvi. 36, 'Respublica incolumis et privatas res facile salvas præstat; publica prodendo, tua nequidquam serves.' Ὀρθουμένην, lit. 'what goes right,' as a vessel well steered and ably managed; for I apprehend there is here a nautical metaphor, as in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 1833, 12, ἐν ὀρθῇ πλεῖν παρέχουσα ὑμῖν τῇ πόλει: and so a little before, in the same writer, τόδε τὸ σκάφος ἀνετράπη, as said of the vessel of the state. Compare also Hor. Carm. i. 14, 1, O Navis, &c. As respects the sentiment, well is it observed by Bp. Sanderson, Serm. on Job xxix. 14, 'We much deceive ourselves if we think our own private good to be severed from the public; and so neglect the public employment, to follow our own private affairs. For the private is not distinguished from the public, but included in it; and no man knoweth what mischiefs unawares he prepareth for his private estate in the end, whilst thinking to provide well enough for himself, he cherisheth, in the mean time, or suffereth abuses in the public.'

ἀθρόαν] This use of ἀθρόος is found at i. 141, τὸ κοινὸν ἀθρόον φθειρόμενον: and Eurip. And. 481, σοφῶν τε πλῆθος ἀθρόον ἀσθενέστερον φαυλοτέρας φρενὸς αὐτοκρατοῦς.

σφαλλομένην] 'ruined.' So iii. 37, σφάλλουσι τὰς πόλεις: an agonistic metaphor.

3. καλῶς φερόμενος] for καλ. πράσσων. So φέρεσθαι is used in the best writers, with εὖ, or πλέον, or καλῶς, and κακῶς, or χεῖρον.

κακοτυχῶν] A very rare word, which I have only found elsewhere in Procop. 202 and 275.

4. τὰς ἰδίας ξυμφορὰς] Meaning, the Schol. remarks, not ἑαυτῆς, but τὰς τῶν καθ' ἕκαστον ἀνθρώπων καὶ μερικὰς δυστυχίας. The words following, καὶ μὴ ὃ νῦν ὑμεῖς δρᾶτε, are for καὶ μὴ δρᾶν, ὃ νῦν ὑμεῖς δρᾶτε. So it is remarked by Herm. on Vig. p. 761, 'Res per verbum δρᾶν universe designata, deinde, non addito pronomine οἵ, pluribus explicatur.'

ἐκπεπληγμένοι] 'struck with consternation.' So Plut., ἐκπεπληγμένος ὑπὸ τῆς ξυμφορᾶς. Æschyl. Pers. 295, ἐκπεπληγμένη κακοῖς.

ἀφίεσθε] 'let go;' for ἀφίεσθαι: by a sort of abandonment of the construction, with accommodation to ὑμεῖς. Ἀφίεσθαι properly signifies to 'let go one's hold of,' but is found in the sense relinquere, desrere, &c. in Xen. Cyr. ii. 1, 8, and elsewhere.

οἳ ξυνέγνωτε] 'who jointly determined on.'

5. οὐδενὸς ἧσσον] An elegant use. So οὐδενὸς ὕστερος, ἐλάσσων, χείρων, μείων, &c.

In the words following, γνῶναι—ταῦτα, we have a sort of definition of the qualifications proper to a statesman and orator, which has been (as I have shown in my note in Transl.) very extensively imitated. In χρημάτων κρείσσων, 'superior to base lucre,' we have an elegant phrase, which occurs also in Plut. Pericl. ch. 26. Aristid. iii. 197. Eurip. Dan. fragm. 3. Liban. Epist. 1450, and is akin to the more usual χρημάτων ἧσσων, which occurs in Aristoph. Plut. 362, and elsewhere.

In thus speaking, Pericles, according to a writer quoted in Fabr. Bibl. t. viii. 848, arrogates to himself every virtue: and in this view Aristides, iii. 650, observes that his words are equiv. to εἰμὶ ὑμῶν πάντα ἄριστος—ὥσπερ Ζεύς τις Ὁμηρικός. This, however, surely proceeds upon mere misrepresentation. The speaker does but claim to himself the qualifications of an accomplished orator, and the virtue of a disinterested patriot: and these qualities his very enemies did not deny him.

σαφῶς διδάξας, ἐν ἴσῳ καὶ εἰ μὴ ἐνεθυμήθη· ὅ τ' ἔχων ἀμφότερα, τῇ δὲ πόλει δύσνους, οὐκ ἂν ὁμοίως τι οἰκείως φράζοι· προσόντος δὲ καὶ τοῦδε, χρήμασι δὲ νικωμένου, τὰ ξύμπαντα τούτου ἑνὸς ἂν πωλοῖτο. 7. ὥστ', εἴ μοι, καὶ μέσως ἡγούμενοι μᾶλλον ἑτέρων προσεῖναι αὐτά, πολεμεῖν ἐπείσθητε, οὐκ ἂν εἰκότως νῦν τοῦ γε ἀδικεῖν αἰτίαν φεροίμην. LXI. Καὶ γάρ, οἷς μὲν αἵρεσις γεγένηται τἆλλα εὐτυχοῦσι, πολλὴ ἄνοια πολεμῆσαι· εἰ δ' ἀναγκαῖον ἦν ἢ εἴξαντας εὐθὺς τοῖς πέλας ὑπακοῦσαι, ἢ κινδυνεύσαντας περιγενέσθαι, ὁ φυγὼν τὸν κίνδυνον τοῦ ὑποστάντος μεμπτότερος. 2. καὶ ἐγὼ μὲν ὁ αὐτός εἰμι, καὶ οὐκ ἐξίσταμαι· ὑμεῖς δὲ μεταβάλλετε, ἐπειδὴ ξυνέβη

6. ἐν ἴσῳ—ἐνεθυμήθη] 'is in the same state as if he never had the conceptions.' Καὶ εἰ μὴ is rightly edited by Bekk., Goell., and Poppo, for εἰ καὶ μή. For (as Goell. observes) perinde ac si is the sense required; whereas εἰ καὶ can only signify etsi. I could adduce many instances of a similar confusion of εἰ καὶ and καὶ εἰ. Ἐν ἴσῳ is for ἴσως, as vii. 76, ὁμοίως καὶ εἰ.

At οὐκ ἂν ὁμοίως supply from the context ὥσπερ ἂν λέγοι, εἰ φιλόπολις εἴη. It is meant (as Poppo points out) that the four virtues of the statesman just spoken of, cannot be separated, but that each one needs the rest. Οἰκείως here signifies convenienter, 'suitably to,' è re civitatis, as in various passages of Xen., Polyb., Diod. Sic., and other writers. Of the term προσεῖναι, as thus used in the sense insuper esse, inesse, examples are found in Xen. Mem. iii. 10, 12, and various passages of Dionys. Hal. By τοῦδε is meant (as Goell. observes) τοῦ εὖνου τῇ πόλει, to be fetched from the foregoing τῇ πόλει δύσνου.

At χρήμασι νικώμενου supply αὐτοῦ; the sense being, 'but he be enslaved to lucre,' as Æschyl. Ag. 333, κέρδεσιν νικωμένου. With the expression following, τὰ ξύμπαντα—πωλοῖτο, 'all would be sold [by him] for this one thing,' compare Xen. Ages. i. 18, ἀντιπροῖκα τὰ πάντα ἐπωλεῖτο.

7. καὶ μέσως] 'even in a moderate degree,' for μετρίως, as in Eurip. Herc. Fur. 58, καὶ μέσως εὔνους. Μᾶλλον ἑτέρων is equiv. to μᾶλλον ἢ ἑτέροις. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 524, 2. Τοῦ γε ἀδικεῖν, 'of having injured you,' namely, by proposing wrong measures: meaning to say, that if any thing be wrong in the measures, they must partake in the blame.

CH. LXI. The speaker now enters into a defence of the counsel he had given.

1. καὶ γάρ, &c.] 'now as for those who, in other respects fortunately circumstanced, have a free choice of action, (namely, to go to war, or not,) it were arrant folly in them to go to war.' Of the words following, εἰ δ' ἀναγκαῖον ἦν—μεμπτότερος, the general sense is well expressed by Poppo as follows: 'Si cum, qui, sicut nos Athenienses, bellum contra alios inceperit, eo tempore, quo id incepit, necesse erat aut, si cessisset, aliis statim parere, aut, si periculum subisset, servari, is, qui isto tempore periculum subterfugerit, majorem reprehensionem meretur, quam ille, qui hoc fortiter susceperit.' Τἆλλα εὐτυχοῦσι is well rendered by Goell. 'dum ceterum liberi manentes de suo jure nihil cedunt:' and he observes that εὐτυχεῖν or εὐδαίμων εἶναι in our author signifies 'to be free,' 'to enjoy civil freedom.' See supra ch. 43 and 45. Μεμπτότερος, 'is rather blameable.' Poppo remarks that 'the imperf. is here very properly used, since the speaker has reference to the time when the Lacedæmonians had sent the last ambassadors to Athens, i. 139; and he, in allusion to their demands, said to the citizens, ch. 141, αὐτόθεν δὴ διανοήθητε ἢ ὑπακούειν πρίν τι βλαβῆναι.'

ὁ αὐτός εἰμι] scil. τῇ γνώμῃ, as infra iii. 38. Of the phrase ὁ αὐτός εἰμι, rare in this sense, examples occur in Plut. Arat. 30. Theogn. Sent. 324, and Eurip. Phœn. 935. The contrary phrase is οὐκ ἐξίσταμαι, scil. τῆς γνώμης: as Aristid. ii. p. 138, where it is said, with allusion to the present case, [Περικλῆς] οὐδ' ἐξέστη τῆς ἀρχαίας γνώμης. Soph. Antig. 1105, καρδίας (for γνώμης) ἐξίσταμαι. Comp. with the present a very similar passage of Demosth. Olynth. ii. p. 24, 10.

ὑμῖν πεισθῆναι μὲν ἀκεραίοις, μεταμέλειν δὲ κακουμένοις, καὶ τὸν ἐμὸν λόγον ἐν τῷ ὑμετέρῳ ἀσθενεῖ τῆς γνώμης μὴ ὀρθὸν φαίνεσθαι, διότι τὸ μὲν λυποῦν ἔχει ἤδη τὴν αἴσθησιν ἑκάστῳ, τῆς δὲ ὠφελείας ἄπεστιν ἔτι ἡ δήλωσις ἅπασι· καὶ μεταβολῆς μεγάλης, καὶ ταύτης ἐξ ὀλίγου ἐμπεσούσης, ταπεινὴ ὑμῶν ἡ διάνοια ἐγκαρτερεῖν ἃ ἔγνωτε. 3. δουλοῖ γὰρ φρόνημα τὸ αἰφνίδιον καὶ ἀπροσδόκητον, καὶ τὸ πλείστῳ παραλόγῳ ξυμβαῖνον· ὃ ὑμῖν, πρὸς τοῖς ἄλλοις, οὐχ ἥκιστα καὶ κατὰ τὴν νόσον γεγένηται. 4. ὅμως δὲ πόλιν μεγάλην οἰκοῦντας, καὶ ἐν ἤθεσιν ἀντιπάλοις αὐτῇ τεθραμμένους, χρεὼν καὶ ‡ ξυμφοραῖς ‡ ταῖς μεγίσταις ἐθέλειν ὑφίστασθαι, καὶ τὸν ἐμὸν λόγον, &c.] Repeat ἐπειδὴ ξυνέβη, 'and since it has happened that my counsel does not seem right.' By the words ἐν τῷ ὑμετέρῳ ἀσθενεῖ τῆς γνώμης it is intimated why the thing so appeared, namely, from the weakness of their own judgment, whereby they could not measure the rectitude of his counsels: and the reason of the change in their views is indicated by the words following, διότι τὸ μὲν λυποῦν ἔχει ἤδη τὴν αἴσθησιν ἑκάστῳ—ἅπασι, 'because the ills or pains it brings with it, now occupy the feelings of each of you, while the advantages hereafter resulting are as yet to all unseen.' Τὸ λυποῦν stands for ἡ λύπη, as often in the Attic writers; and ἔχει for κατέχει. Similarly in Eurip. Hippol. 693, we have, τὸ γὰρ δάκνον, σου τὴν διάγνωσιν κρατεῖ, tuum rectum judicium superat, 'masters the faculty of discernment.' Τῆς ὠφελείας ἡ δήλωσις, 'the manifestation of the advantage.' This change in their judgment is further indicated by the words following, which declare it to be occasioned by the great change of circumstances; the reverse being so great, and that taking place unexpectedly,—as it is said elsewhere, μέγας ὁ παράλογος—καὶ ἐξ ὀλίγου, scil. χρόνου: and so Eurip. Herc. Fur. 1290, κεκλημένῳ δὲ φωτὶ μακαρίῳ ποτὲ Αἱ μεταβολαὶ λυπηρόν. In ταπεινὴ—ἐγκαρτερεῖν, &c., 'is too weak to,' &c., we have the use of positive for compar., as in Jos. Ant. xiii. 16, 1, ἀσθενὴς πράγματα διοικεῖν. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 448, obs. 6. The word ὥστε is here to be understood, which is expressed in Xen. Cyr. iv. 5, 15, ὀλίγοι ἐσμὲν, ὥστε ἐγκρατεῖς εἶναι: and Mem. ii. 6, 22, ἐγκαρτερεῖν ὥστε μὴ λυπεῖν. In ἐγκαρτερεῖν ἃ ἔγνωτε, 'to persevere in your resolves,' the ἃ stands, by a common Atticism, for οἷς: as in Xen. Hippag. viii. 22, δυνήσονται ἃ ἂν γνῶσιν ἐγκαρτερεῖν. Procop. p. 337, γενναῖος δὲ ὃς ἂν ἐγκαρτερῇ τὰ δυνατώτατα. Διάνοια here signifies, not intention or purpose, but determination or the power by which the will is determined: it being meant, that 'not only was the judgment too weak to discover the right course, but the will was too weak to carry into effect its resolves.'

3. Here the speaker enlarges on the idea just before suggested in ἐξ ὀλίγου ἐμπ. In δουλοῖ φρόνημα there is an elegant use of δουλ., as in Eurip. Hipp. 426, δουλοῖ γὰρ ἄνδρα κἂν θρασύσπλαγχνος ᾖ: and Menal. frag. ix. 4. Plut. Demetr. 29. And so our poet Gray, in his Ode to Adversity: 'Relentless power, Thou tamer of the human breast, Bound in thy adamantine chain.' On the term παραλόγῳ, see note at i. 78. Πρὸς τοῖς ἄλλοις, 'besides other matters of grief.' Evidently imitated from this passage of our author, is one of Dio Cass. 305, 32, and another of Procop. 123, 10.

4. Pericles now exhorts them to show themselves worthy of the greatness of their country, by forgetting their private sufferings in their anxiety for its general honour and welfare.

ἐν ἤθεσιν ἀντιπάλοις αὐτῇ τεθραμμένους] 'trained up in manners and habits of life correspondent to [that greatness],' lit. like-matched. In ξυμφοραῖς—ὑφίστασθαι the construction with the dat. is very rare, yet found in the common text of Eurip. Herc. Fur. 1320, Ταῖς συμφοραῖς γὰρ ὅστις οὐκ ἐπίσταται, Θνητὸς πεφυκὼς, ὃν τρόπον χρεὼν φέρειν, Οὐδ' ἀνδρὸς ἂν δύναιθ' ὑποστῆναι βέλος: with which we might compare the similar expression in Shakspeare, 'to bear the arrows of outrageous fortune:' and though there Hermann and Matthiæ have edited, from several MSS.,—supported by the usage of that author elsewhere,—τὰς συμφορὰς, yet the dat. is sufficiently confirmed by that use of ὑφιστ. by which it signifies 'to await an enemy,' 'to meet him,' excipere, subsistere alicui. And indeed as the sense here is καὶ τὴν ἀξίωσιν μὴ ἀφανίζειν· (ἐν ἴσῳ γὰρ οἱ ἄνθρωποι δικαιοῦσι τῆς τε ὑπαρχούσης δόξης αἰτιᾶσθαι ὅστις μαλακίᾳ ἐλλείπει, καὶ τῆς μὴ προσηκούσης μισεῖν τὸν θρασύτητι ὀρεγόμενον·) ἀπαλγήσαντας δὲ τὰ ἴδια, τοῦ κοινοῦ τῆς σωτηρίας ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι. LXII. Τὸν δὲ πόνον τὸν κατὰ τὸν πόλεμον, μὴ γένηταί τε πολὺς, καὶ οὐδὲν μᾶλλον περιγενώμεθα, ἀρκείτω μὲν ὑμῖν καὶ ἐκεῖνα ἐν οἷς ἄλλοτε πολλάκις γε δὴ ἀπέδειξα οὐκ ὀρθῶς αὐτὸν ὑποπτευόμενον· δηλώσω δὲ καὶ τόδε, ὅ μοι δοκεῖτε οὔτ' αὐτοὶ πώποτε ἐνθυμηθῆναι, ὑπάρχον ὑμῖν, μεγέθους πέρι ἐς τὴν ἀρχὴν, οὔτ' ἐγὼ ἐν τοῖς πρὶν λόγοις,—οὐδ' ἂν νῦν ἐχρησάμην, κομπωδεστέραν ἔχοντι τὴν προσποίησιν, εἰ μὴ καταπεπληγμένους ὑμᾶς παρὰ τὸ εἰκὸς ἑώρων. 2. οἴεσθε μὲν γὰρ τῶν ξυμμάχων μόνον ἄρχειν, ἐγὼ δὲ ἀποφαίνω δύο μερῶν τῶν ἐς χρῆσιν φανερῶν, γῆς καὶ θαλάσσης,

'to endure,' literally, 'to bear up under,' the accus., found in two MSS. and in Dionysius, was probably written by our author, especially as the accus. is found at iv. 59 and 127.

In the words following, ἐν ἴσῳ γὰρ, &c., we have a parenthetical remark, intended to work on the pride of those addressed. Render, 'for men think themselves alike in censuring him who through pusillanimity falls short of the glory already his own, as they do in hating him who daringly stretches or strives after, aims at, what does not belong to him.' Μισεῖν here, as occasionally elsewhere, both in the classical and scriptural writers, expresses the idea of strong reprobation. With the phrase τῆς ὑπαρχούσης δόξης—ἐλλείπει, compare Lesbon. 171, 12, ἐλλιπόντων δὲ ἡμῶν τὴν προθυμίαν, where, for τὴν προθυμίαν, I conj. τῆς προθυμίας. And so in another passage of Lesbon. 171, 38, we have, δίκαιον δὲ τούτων τινὰ μὴ ἐλλείπειν: and in Æschin. p. 43, 41, ὁ μηδὲν, ὧν ἦν δυνατὸς, ἐλλείπων.

ἀπαλγήσαντας τὰ ἴδια] 'having ceased to grieve for, having become callous to our private calamities.' Of this rare use of ἀπαλγ. (as of dedolere in Latin) examples are found in Plut. Cleom. 22, ἀπαλγήσας τὸ πένθος: and Aristid. ii. 356, B, ἃ γὰρ οὐκ ἔστι κατ' ἀξίαν δδύρασθαι πῶς οὐκ ἀπαλγήσαντας ἐᾷν: and ii. 371, A, ἀπαλγήσαντας ἐᾷν: on which sense of ἀπο see my note at Ephes. iv. 19. Of ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι, just after, the sense is, 'apply yourselves to promote,' lit. 'lay hold of, in order to keep up.' See my note on a passage of St. Luke, i. 54.

Ch. LXII. 1. τὸν πόνον, &c.] Render, 'as to the labour [of the war];' for the αὐτὸν, which follows, is pleonastic: on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 472. The construction is, ἀρκείτω — ἐκεῖνα, ἐν οἷς ἄλλοτε — ἀπέδειξα οὐκ ὀρθῶς ὑποπτεύεσθαι, μὴ ὁ πόνος γένηταί τε πολὺς καὶ οὐδὲν μᾶλλον περιγενώμεθα.

οὐκ ὀρθῶς αὐτὸν ὑποπτευόμενον] 'that to be a vain notion,' 'a groundless suspicion.' The particip. is here put in the masculine, and not—as one might have expected—the neuter, because πόνον, a little before, though of the masc. gender, has a neuter sense, denoting 'the idea concerning the labour and sufferings of the war.'

δηλώσω δὲ καὶ τόδε—ἀρχὴν] Meaning to say, that 'so far from retracting the assurances of success, with which he had encouraged them to enter upon the war, he had in one respect underrated their resources.' The construction is, ὅ μοι δοκεῖτε οὔτ' αὐτοὶ πώποτε ἐνθυμηθῆναι μεγέθους πέρι ἐς τὴν ἀρχὴν ('as to empire') ὑπάρχον ὑμῖν, 'though the means for attaining it are in your power.' At οὔτ' ἐγὼ we may best supply ἐχρησάμην, rendering, 'which neither yourselves seem to have reflected on, nor have I mentioned in my former addresses; nor would I even now,' &c.

κομπωδεστέραν ἔχοντι τὴν προσποίησιν] 'as having a somewhat boastful claim,' vendicationem. Not so much erroneous as corrupt is the explanation here of the Schol. τὴν ἀπαγγελίαν, where for ἀπαγγ. should be read ἐπαγγελίαν, a use this, of the noun derived from that sense of the verb ἐπαγγέλλεσθαι, by which it signifies 'to profess or give oneself out' as being this or that,—'to vaunt oneself.'

2. ἀποφαίνω] 'I aver,' 'affirm,' as at

τοῦ ἑτέρου ὑμᾶς παντὸς κυριωτάτους ὄντας, ἐφ' ὅσον τε νῦν νέμεσθε καὶ ἢν ἐπὶ πλέον βουληθῆτε· καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ὅστις τῇ ὑπαρχούσῃ παρασκευῇ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ πλέοντας ὑμᾶς οὔτε βασιλεὺς κωλύσει, οὔτε ἄλλο οὐδὲν ἔθνος τῶν ἐν τῷ παρόντι. 3. ὥστε οὐ κατὰ τὴν τῶν οἰκιῶν καὶ τῆς γῆς χρείαν, (ὧν μεγάλων νομίζετε ἐστερῆσθαι,) αὕτη ἡ δύναμις φαίνεται· οὐδ' εἰκὸς χαλεπῶς φέρειν αὐτῶν, μᾶλλον ἢ οὐ κηπίον καὶ ἐγκαλλώπισμα πλούτου πρὸς ταύτην νομίσαντας ὀλιγωρῆσαι· καὶ γνῶναι ἐλευθερίαν μὲν, ἣν ἀντιλαμβανόμενοι αὐτῆς διασώσωμεν, ῥᾳδίως ταῦτα ἀναληψομένην, ἄλλων δ' ὑπακούσασι καὶ τὰ † προσκεκτημένα φιλεῖν ἐλασσοῦσθαι· τῶν τε πατέρων μὴ χείρους

ii. 13. The mid. form, however, is more usual in this sense. Δύο μερῶν τῶν ἐς χρῆσιν φανερῶν we may render, with Arnold, 'ad usum patentium,' 'visible and obvious for man's use:' yet that version serves but to retain all the obscurity of the original. The intelligible meaning can only be expressed in a free version, as follows: 'Of the two parts into which the world is distributed for man's use—sea and land.' It is not of the four elements, but simply, in a geographical sense, of the parts of the terraqueous globe, that Pericles is speaking.

καὶ ἢν ἐπὶ πλέον βουληθῆτε] An elliptical mode of expression, for καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν οὔτε βασιλεὺς οὔτε ἄλλο οὐδὲν ἔθνος τῶν ἐν τῷ παρόντι ὅστις κωλύσει ὑμᾶς πλέοντας [σὺν] τῇ ὑπαρχ. π. τ. ν. The phrase παρασκευῇ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ, 'an armament, or force, of a navy,' 'a naval force,' is like παρασκ. τριηρῶν at iii. 39, and παρασκ. ταῖς ναυσὶ (for τῶν νεῶν) vi. 8. The fut. κωλύσει has the sense of power; 'can hinder.'

3. ὥστε οὐ κατὰ τὴν—χρείαν] Render, 'So that this power is manifestly not to be put on a footing of comparison with the benefit you derive from your houses and landed property.' In the words following, ὧν μεγάλων νομίζετε ἐστερῆσθαι, there is a commixture of two modes of expression. Render, 'of which being deprived, you think you are deprived of great things.' In χαλεπῶς φέρειν αὐτῶν the genit. is a genit. of cause, to denote 'on account of' (in which case ὑπὲρ or ἕνεκα might be employed); of which use examples are adduced in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 368, 5, a, from Xen. Cyr. v. 2, 7, πενθικῶς ἔχουσαν τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ, and other writers. The same syntax occurs also supra i. 77, though it is rare, the accus. being in such a case far more usual.

μᾶλλον ἢ οὐ κηπίον—νομίσαντας] In this idiom,—which occurs also at iii. 36, and is found in the best writers, as Hdot. iv. 118. v. 94, 16. Xen. Hist. vi. 3, 15, and elsewhere,—the οὐ is evidently pleonastic; and philologists endeavour, but with little success, to account for its insertion. Different views as to the matter are adopted by Hermann and Matth.; but neither of them satisfactory. It is, I think, best to suppose, with Goell. and Arnold, that 'the construction in question is one which had passed from the language of common life into that of books and writing,' as in the case of other forms of expression not squaring with any grammatical rules: also, that there is here a commixture of two modes of expression, so that either μᾶλλον ἢ without οὐ, or καὶ οὐ without μᾶλλον ἢ, might be put.

In the terms κηπίον and ἐγκαλλώπισμα πλ., 'the trim decorations and gay embellishments of wealth,' some ancient, and most modern, commentators suppose an allusion to the trim pleasure-gardens surrounding Athens: an opinion confirmed by Liban. Orat. p. 797, C, ἡδίων οὗτος ἐμοὶ ὧν ὑμεῖς γεωργεῖτε καταγελάστων κηπίων. Thus also, in enumerating the items of revenue at Rome, Polybius, l. vi. 7, 2, has ποταμῶν, λιμένων, κηπίων, μετάλλων. And in a passage of Polyæn. iv. 6, 18, τὴν καλουμένην Βῶλον, ἀπέχουσαν οὐ πρόσω τῶν τειχῶν, by Βῶλον I would understand 'a plot of suburban ground, probably cultivated as garden-ground.' There may, however, as Duk. and Poppo suppose, be an allusion to those petty gardens, decked out with the greatest nicety, which sometimes appertained to even the houses in Athens, as appears from the words of Steph. Byz. in v. γῆ: λέγεται καὶ γήπεδον τὸ πρὸς τοῖς οἴκοις ἐν πόλει κηπίον. In ἐγκαλλώπισμα we have a very rare word, which I have not observed elsewhere, except in Menand. Hist. ap. Corp. Hist. Byz. 135. Isidor. Epist. ii. 201. Aristid. ii. 289. Procop. Hist. p. 355, and de Ædif. ii. 6.

προσκεκτημένα] For this Bekk. edits, from several ancient MSS., προσεκτ.: but

κατ' ἀμφότερα φανῆναι, οἳ μετὰ πόνων, καὶ οὐ παρ' ἄλλων δεξάμενοι, κατέσχον τε καὶ προσέτι διασώσαντες παρέδοσαν ἡμῖν αὐτά, (αἴσχιον δὲ ἔχοντας ἀφαιρεθῆναι ἢ κτωμένους ἀτυχῆσαι,) ἰέναι δὲ τοῖς ἐχθροῖς ὁμόσε, μὴ φρονήματι μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ καταφρονήματι. 4. αὔχημα μὲν γὰρ καὶ ἀπὸ ἀμαθίας εὐτυχοῦς καὶ δειλῷ τινι ἐγγίγνεται, καταφρόνησις δὲ, ὃς ἂν καὶ γνώμῃ πιστεύῃ τῶν ἐναντίων προέχειν· ὃ ἡμῖν ὑπάρχει. 5. καὶ τὴν τόλμαν, ἀπὸ τῆς ὁμοίας τύχης, ἡ ξύνεσις ἐκ τοῦ ὑπέρφρονος ἐχυρωτέραν παρέχεται, ἐλπίδι τε ἧσσον πιστεύει, ἧς ἐν τῷ ἀπόρῳ ἡ ἰσχὺς, γνώμῃ δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν

I have thought proper, with Poppo and Goeller, to retain the common reading, because I see no sufficient ground for the change in question. The Ionic ἔκτημαι is, indeed, sometimes used by Plato; but not, it appears, by the old Attic writers. And though προσέκτημαι may seem too uncommon a form to come from the copyists, yet there is every reason to think it a mere error from προεκτ., which is found in one MS. Προσκεκτημένα is rightly explained by Poppo as equivalent to πρὸς ταύτῃ [τῇ ἐλευθερίᾳ] κεκτ., and so signifying 'whatever we are possessed of in addition to freedom.' The reading προκεκτημένα doubtless originated with those critics who could not see the meaning of προσκ., and therefore conjectured the true reading to be προκ., which yields, indeed, a sense, but one too feeble to be suitable to our author.

αἴσχιον δὲ—ἀτυχῆσαι] 'now it is more disgraceful to be deprived of [a thing] after having once possessed it, than to fail of acquiring it.' Similarly in Sallust, Jug. ch. 31, (cited by Poppo,) 'Majus dedecus est parta amittere, quam omnino non paravisse.'

ἰέναι δὲ τοῖς ἐχθροῖς—καταφρονήματι] 'to go forth and encounter one's foes, not with spirit only, but with disdain!' Of this pointed sentence, in which the paronomasia is remarkable, numerous are the imitations found in ancient writers. See my note in Transl.

4. αὔχημα—ἐγγίγνεται] 'for boastful alertness may even spring from lucky ignorance, and have place in a coward.' Ἐγγίγνεται is either to be taken twice, with ἀπὸ ἀμαθίας εὐτυχοῦς and with δειλῷ τινι, or the construction may be, αὔχημα ἐγγίγνεται ἀπὸ ἀμαθ. εὐτυχ. καὶ δειλῷ τινι.

καταφρόνησις δὲ, ὃς, &c.] Construe, καταφρ. δὲ (ἐγγίγνεται ἐκείνῳ) ὃς, &c. Render, 'but this dignified disdain is found only in him who, as in our case, may feel justly confident that he is superior to his foe in counsel as well as combat.'

5. καὶ τὴν τόλμαν — ἡ πρόνοια] Of these words the sense seems to be as follows: 'And prudence (meaning, intelligence, knowledge, and presence of mind) founded on magnanimity,—supposing fortune to be equal,—generates a courage more to be relied on; since it trusts less to hope (whose power is chiefly conversant with those in straits and difficulties) than to judgment and counsel, from a consideration of present and existing circumstances, of which the forecast is surer.' At ἐκ τοῦ ὑπέρφρονος (which is for ὑψηλόφρονος, found in Soph. Aj. 1236) some participle must be supplied, equivalent to 'arising from.' Here, indeed, we have no other than a phrase for an adverb, as in Dio Cass. 28, 86, 447, 75. At ἀπὸ τῆς ὁμοίας τύχης understand ὁρμωμένη, 'setting out from, or with, equal fortune.' Similar to this is the phrase infra iv. 10, ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου μείζων. Of παρέχεται the sense is, reddit, præstat, as supra i. 32, ἐχυρὸν παρέχεσθαι, 'make it surer of its object.' Of the words following, ἧς ἐν τῷ ἀπόρῳ ἡ ἰσχὺς, (with which compare the expression ἰσχὺν ἐλπίδος at iv. 65,) the best explanation is suggested by the similar sentiment at v. 103 and 111, on the power of hope. The sentiment here meant to be expressed is, that 'hope acts peculiarly on those who are in a strait what to do.' 'Hope,' it is meant, 'most predominates in difficulties; for in proportion as men are less supported by reason and prudence, so they place reliance on hope and uncertain events;' in other words, 'in straits, when men are destitute of all other help, they try the power of hope, as drowning men catch at twigs.' See Plut. Themist. 13, and Appian, ii. 831.

In the words γνώμῃ δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων, ἧς βεβαιοτέρα ἡ πρόνοια, the words ἀπὸ τῶν ὑπαρχ. are emphatical, ὑπαρχόντων, ἧς βεβαιοτέρα ἡ πρόνοια. LXIII. Τῆς τε πόλεως ὑμᾶς εἰκὸς τῷ τιμωμένῳ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἄρχειν, ᾧπερ ἅπαντες ἀγάλλεσθε, βοηθεῖν, καὶ μὴ φεύγειν τοὺς πόνους, ἢ μηδὲ τὰς τιμὰς διώκειν· μηδὲ νομίσαι περὶ ἑνὸς μόνου, δουλείας ἀντ' ἐλευθερίας, ἀγωνίζεσθαι, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀρχῆς στερήσεως, καὶ κινδύνου ὧν ἐν τῇ ἀρχῇ ἀπήχθεσθε. 2. ἧς οὐδ' ἐκστῆναι ἔτι ὑμῖν ἔστιν, εἴ τις καὶ τόδε ἐν τῷ παρόντι, δεδιὼς, ἀπραγμοσύνῃ ἀνδραγαθίζεται· ὡς τυραννίδα γὰρ ἤδη ἔχετε αὐτὴν, ἣν λαβεῖν μὲν ἄδικον δοκεῖ εἶναι, ἀφεῖναι δὲ ἐπικίνδυνον. 3. τάχιστ' ἄν τε πόλιν οἱ τοιοῦτοι ἑτέρους τε πείσαντες ἀπολέ-meaning 'things actually existing,' in opposition to those, as in the case of hope, which are yet future and only contingent. Arnold here aptly compares the words at iv. 18, ἀπὸ τῶν ὑπαρχόντων γνώμῃ σφαλέντες, 'deceived in the judgment they had formed, not on contingent prospects, but on resources actually existing.' Of βεβαιοτέρα the sense is, 'surer of attaining its object.' Compare vi. 72, τὴν δὲ εὐψυχίαν αὐτὴν ἑαυτῆς μετὰ τοῦ πιστοῦ τῆς ἐπιστήμης θαρσαλεωτέραν ἔσεσθαι.

1. τῆς τε πόλ.—διώκειν] Render, 'That dignity, too, of the state accruing to it from empire—of which you are all proud—it is right that you should maintain; and either not decline the toils of empire, or not pursue the honours attached to them;' meaning to say, in other words, that 'the lofty eminence on which their country stood, in which every citizen felt an honest pride, was naturally exposed to envy and hatred, and could not be maintained without great efforts and sacrifices.' Τῷ τιμωμένῳ stands for τῷ τιμᾶσθαι, as τὸ τιμᾶσθαι for ἡ τιμὴ at ii. 44. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 271. Of this passage many imitations (as I have shown in Transl.) are to be found in the later Greek writers. Similar sentiments, too, occur in Xen. Mem. ii. 4, 9, and Pind. Ol. ii. 5, 34. Sallust, Jug. 'Næ illi falsi sunt, qui diversissimas res pariter expectant, ignaviæ voluptatem et præmia virtutis.' To this purpose it has been well observed by an eminent writer of our own country, that 'there are few less happy than those who are ambitious without industry; who pant for the prize, but will not run the race:' a defect, this, best remedied by frequent reflection on the abundant encouragements held out to virtue and exertion by experience and example.

μηδὲ νομίσαι—ἀπήχθεσθε] 'Nor think that you are contending with the alternative alone of freedom or slavery, but also for what concerns deprivation of rule, and the danger arising from the animosity of those whose odium you incurred in the exercise of rule;' meaning to say, that 'defeat carried with it not merely degradation, but imminent danger of destruction, from the inexorable vengeance of foes, whose hatred would pursue them to the death.' Compare i. 75 and 76.

2. ἧς οὐδ' ἐκστῆναι, &c.] 'recede from, or give up:' a phrase, this, of frequent occurrence in Dio Cass., and sometimes found in Dionys. Hal. The general sense intended to be expressed is, that 'however hard it might be to keep, they could not recede from it with safety.'

εἴ τις—ἀνδραγαθίζεται] Render, 'if any of you, at present, through fear and a fondness for quiet, would by this affect the good sort of men.' I refer the τόδε, with Gottleb., Ha., and Goell., to ἐκστῆναι τῆς ἀρχῆς. It must be taken with ἀνδραγαθ., by the subaudition of κατὰ, being for ἐν τῷδε. Δεδιὼς must be taken absolutely (as often in Thucyd.) in the sense 'being afraid, from fear.' Ἀπραγμοσύνῃ is for ὑπὸ ἀπραγμοσύνης: and ἀνδραγ. signifies 'to act the good easy man,' 'to affect probity and equity,' as in a kindred passage at iii. 40; as also in Procop. p. 29 and 114, and other writers.

ὡς τυραννίδα—ἐπικίνδυνον] 'for as a kind of tyranny you now hold it, (namely, the dominion in question,) which to have assumed may seem to be unjust, but to part with it were perilous.' Poppo here compares a saying of Phalaris ap. Stob. ii. p. 345, τοῦ κτήσασθαι τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐπισφαλέστερον τὸ καταθέσθαι, and another of Sallust, frag. 'Per scelus occupata periculosius dimittuntur.' He might have added another in Diog. Laërt. i. 97.

σειαν, καὶ εἴ που ἐπὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν αὐτόνομοι οἰκήσειαν· τὸ γὰρ ἄπραγμον οὐ σώζεται, μὴ μετὰ τοῦ δραστηρίου τεταγμένον, οὐδὲ ἐν ἀρχούσῃ πόλει ξυμφέρει, ἀλλ' ἐν ὑπηκόῳ, ἀσφαλῶς δουλεύειν. LXIV. Ὑμεῖς δὲ μήτε ὑπὸ τῶν τοιῶνδε πολιτῶν παράγεσθε, μήτε ἐμὲ δι' ὀργῆς ἔχετε,—ᾧ καὶ αὐτοὶ ξυνδιέγνωτε πολεμεῖν,—εἰ καὶ ἐπελθόντες οἱ ἐναντίοι ἔδρασαν ἅπερ εἰκὸς ἦν μὴ ἐθελησάντων ὑμῶν ὑπακούειν, ἐπιγεγένηταί τε πέρα ὧν προσεδεχόμεθα ἡ νόσος ἥδε, πρᾶγμα μόνον δὴ τῶν πάντων ἐλπίδος κρεῖσσον γεγενημένον· καὶ δι' αὐτὴν, οἷδ' ὅτι, μέρος τι μᾶλλον ἔτι μισοῦμαι· οὐ δικαίως, εἰ μὴ καὶ, ὅταν παρὰ λόγον τι εὖ πράξητε, ἐμοὶ ἀναθήσετε. 2. φέρειν τε χρὴ τά τε δαιμόνια ἀναγκαίως, τά τε ἀπὸ τῶν πολεμίων ἀνδρείως· ταῦτα γὰρ ἐν ἔθει τῇδε τῇ πόλει πρότερόν τε ἦν, νῦν τε μὴ ἐν ὑμῖν κωλυθῇ. 3. γνῶτε δὲ ὄνομα μέγιστον αὐτὴν ἔχουσαν ἐν πᾶσιν εἴ που ἐπὶ σφῶν—οἰκήσειαν] 'or if they should go and settle apart from their country, and live in independence, governing themselves by their own laws,' namely, as colonies planted in independence of their mother-country. Ἐπὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν signifies apart, by themselves. So Valck. on Herodot. viii. 32, 4, πόλιν κειμένην ἐπ' ἐωϋτῆς, remarks that, in this sense, a city might properly be said ἐπ' ἐωϋτῆς εἶναι or κεῖσθαι, or οἰκεῖσθαι, referring to the present passage. The sense, then, of ἐπὶ σφῶν αὐτῶν being fixed, determines that of αὐτόνομοι οἰκήσειαν. The construction of the whole sentence is, πόλιν ἀπολέσειαν, πείσαντες ἑτέρους τε, καὶ εἴ που—αὐτόνομοι οἰκήσειαν.

τὸ γὰρ ἄπραγμον—δραστηρίου] Render, 'for inactive quietude cannot preserve its tranquillity, unless it be conjoined with bustling activity.' Evidently imitated from the present are two similar passages, in Dio Cass. xxxviii. 16, and Procop. 108, 23, τὸ γὰρ ἀνδρεῖον οὐκ ἂν νικήφη, μὴ μετὰ τοῦ δικαίου ταττόμενον.

οὐδὲ ἐν ἀρχούσῃ πόλει ξυμφέρει] scil. τὸ ἄπραγμον. The sense is, as Goell. explains, 'quietness is good, not in a governing city, but in a subject one; and that for peacefulness of servitude,' that it may exist in unmolested slavery. Ἀσφαλῶς is well explained by the Schol. on iv. 61, εἰρηναίως, ἀκινδύνως. And the general sense of the words is well expressed by Thirlwall, 'Let them not dream of security in an inglorious, unambitious, unmolested repose.'

Ch. LXIV. 1. ᾧ καὶ αὐτοὶ ξυνδιέγνωτε πολεμεῖν] Here, again, the speaker cursorily touches on the argument, that, 'as they had participated in the affair, he ought not to bear the sole blame who had only proposed, while they decreed it.

εἰ καὶ ἐπελθόντες—ὑπακούειν] 'if the enemy have even come, and done, what it was likely he would do on your refusal to submit.'

ἀναθήσετε] Ἀνατιθέναι, in this sense, signifies to 'put to any one's account,' 'impute to.' In many of the passages where it occurs, αἰτίαν is to be understood, which is expressed in certain passages of Isocr., Appian, and Polyb. Similar to the injustice here spoken of is that animadverted on, as committed towards rulers and governors, in Æschyl. Theb. 4, Εἰ μὲν γὰρ εὖ πράξαιμεν, αἰτία Θεοῦ· (subaud ἐκ) Εἰ δ' αὖθ', ὃ μὴ γένοιτο, συμφορὰ τύχοι, Ἐτεοκλέης ἂν εἷς πολὺς κατὰ πτόλιν, Ὑμνοῖθ' ὑπ' ἀστῶν φροιμίοις πολυῤῥόθοις, Οἰμώγμασίν θ', where Blomfield aptly cites Tacit. Agric. 27, 'Iniquissima hæc bellorum conditio est: prospera omnes sibi vindicant, adversa uni imputantur.'

2. φέρειν χρὴ τὰ δαιμ. ἀναγκ.] Ἀναγκ. denotes what is unavoidable, and therefore must be borne. So in Eurip. Phœn. 393, we have, δεῖ φέρειν τὰ τῶν θεῶν: and in Demosth. de Corona, δεῖ δὲ τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς ἄνδρας ἐγχειρεῖν μὲν ἅπασι ἀεὶ τοῖς καλοῖς, τὴν ἀγαθὴν προβαλλομένους ἐλπίδα, φέρειν δ' ὅ,τι ἂν ὁ Θεὸς διδῷ γενναίως. Soph. Philoct. 1316, ἀνθρώποισι τὰς μὲν ἐκ θεῶν Τύχας δοθείσας ἔστ' ἀναγκαῖον φέρειν. Evidently imitated from the present is the expression of Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 47, p. 1147, 16, τὰς ἀναγκαίας συμφορὰς γενναίως φέρειν.

ἐν ἔθει—ἦν] 'has been the custom;' as Dion. Hal. 659, 33. 677, 32. Μὴ—κωλυθῇ, ne impedientur, 'let them not be hindered through you, or in your case.'

ἀνθρώποις διὰ τὸ ταῖς ξυμφοραῖς μὴ εἴκειν, πλεῖστα δὲ σώματα καὶ πόνους ἀναλωκέναι πολέμῳ· καὶ δύναμιν μεγίστην δὴ μέχρι τοῦδε κεκτημένην, ἧς ἐς ἀΐδιον τοῖς ἐπιγιγνομένοις, ἢν καὶ νῦν ὑπενδῶμέν ποτε, (πάντα γὰρ πέφυκε καὶ ἐλασσοῦσθαι) μνήμη καταλελείψεται, Ἑλλήνων τε ὅτι Ἕλληνες πλείστων δὴ ἤρξαμεν, καὶ πολέμοις μεγίστοις ἀντέσχομεν πρός τε ξύμπαντας καὶ καθ' ἑκάστους, πόλιν τε τοῖς πᾶσιν εὐπορωτάτην καὶ μεγίστην ᾠκήσαμεν. 4. καίτοι ταῦτα ὁ μὲν ἀπράγμων μέμψαιτ' ἄν, ὁ δὲ δρᾶν τι βουλόμενος καὶ αὐτὸς ζηλώσει· εἰ δέ τις μὴ κέκτηται, φθονήσει. 5. τὸ δὲ μισεῖσθαι καὶ λυπηροὺς εἶναι ἐν τῷ παρόντι πᾶσι μὲν ὑπῆρξε δὴ ὅσοι ἕτεροι ἑτέρων ἠξίωσαν ἄρχειν· ὅστις δ' ἐπὶ μεγίστοις τὸ

3. σώματα καὶ πόν. ἀναλωκέναι] So Demosth. p. 247, 6, σώματα ἀναλ., and Plato de Rep. ii. (ap. Steph. Thes.) ἀναλίσκειν χρόνον τε καὶ πόνον ἐπί σιτου παρασκευῇ.

πλεῖστα — κεκτημένην] Poppo rightly remarks that ἀναλωκέναι belongs to διὰ τὸ, and κεκτημένην to γνῶτε.

Ἐς ἀΐδιον sub. χρόνον. Ἀΐδιος, from ἀΐ, one of the thirteen forms of ἀεί. It is equivalent to ἐς ἀεί, and is of very rare occurrence. Indeed I know of no other example than the present and Epigr. Adesp. 491, referred to in Steph. Thes.

ὑπενδῶμεν] The ὑπὸ does not denote clam, but nonnihil, as in Aristoph. Ran. 735-7. Νῦν may denote any time, past, present, or future, according to the tense of the verb with which it is conjoined. So also πότε may be joined with adverbs of all times, as πάλαι, ἤδη, ἀεὶ: and, with future adjuncts, has the faint sense of tandem, ever.

πέφυκε] naturâ comparata sunt. Simil. Theodectes ap. Stob. p. 139, ἅπαντ' ἐν ἀνθρώποισι γηρασκεῖν ἔφυ. Pausan. iv. 29, 3, πέφυκε δὲ ἄρα ὡς ἐπίπαν μεταπίπτειν τὰ ἀνθρώπινα. Soph. Phil. 80 and 88. Vell. Paterc. ii. 11. Hence this verb carries with it an adjunct notion of what is fated to be done. So Eurip. Phœn. 930, ἅπερ πέφυκε ταῦτα κἀνάγκη σε δρᾶν.

Ἕλληνες—ἤρξαμεν] The words Ἑλλήνων, Ἕλληνες, are limitative and exegetical, i. e. 'we have ruled over the greatest number, as Greeks over Greeks;' confining the comparison to Greeks; for in the great empires of Persia, Egypt, &c. others had ruled over far more. Δὴ, when thus used with superlatives, is intensive.

4. καίτοι ταῦτα ὁ μὲν ἀπράγμων—φθονήσει] Καίτοι hic non est quanquam, sed atqui, quam vim particulæ negat quidem Herm. ad Vig. p. 840, sed ex notione ad profecto, ut in similibus particulis καὶ μήν, facile illa significatio procedit. Et ita Xen. Cyr. iii. 3, 19. (Poppo.) The above commentator here adduces the annotation of Dukas, Τρεῖς κριτὰς ἐνταῦθα ἐκτίθησι τῶν λεγομένων, τὸν ἀπράγμονα, τὸν ζηλωτὴν. τὸν φθονερόν. It would rather seem, however, that there are but two genera of persons here spoken of, ὁ ἀπράγμων and ὁ δραστήριος, which latter we have again distributed into two species, namely, those who are in possession of the means for accomplishing the purposes of their ambition, and those who are destitute of them. The latter being excluded from imitating, can only envy, as they will be sure to do, that which is out of their reach. By τι is meant μέγα τι, as in Aristoph. Ran. 568, ἀλλ' ἐχρῆν τι δρᾶν.

5. Against this uncomfortable consideration, as to the hatred and malignity which they must incur, the speaker urges for consolation the weighty truth, that 'such has ever been, and must be, the fate of those who claim to rise above their fellows.' Compare a parallel sentiment infra vi. 16, 5, where similar is the use of the phrase λυπηρὸς εἶναι, 'to be obnoxious to any one,' 'to be the object of hatred.' To the above is then a little after subjoined another very pithy gnome,—ὅστις δ' ἐπὶ μεγίστοις—βουλεύεται, 'but he who, since he must incur odium, incurs it for the best objects, counsels wisely.' With which compare a similar one in Eurip. Phœn. frag. 2, φθόνον οὐ σέβω, φθονεῖσθαι δὲ ἐθέλοιμ' ἐπὶ μεγίστοις, and another of Pind. Pyth. i. 163, κρείσσων—οἰκτιρμῶν φθόνος, 'it is better to be envied than pitied.' Whence is illustrated a passage of Æschyl. Ag. 912, ὃδ' ἀφθόνητός γ' οὐκ ἐπίζηλος πέλει.

ἐπίφθονον λαμβάνει, ὀρθῶς βουλεύεται. 6. μῖσος μὲν γὰρ οὐκ ἐπὶ πολὺ ἀντέχει, ἡ δὲ παραυτίκα τε λαμπρότης καὶ ἐς τὸ ἔπειτα δόξα ἀείμνηστος καταλείπεται. 7. ὑμεῖς δὲ ἔς τε τὸ μέλλον καλὸν προγνόντες, ἔς τε τὸ αὐτίκα μὴ αἰσχρὸν, τῷ ἤδη προθύμῳ ἀμφότερα κτήσασθε· καὶ Λακεδαιμονίοις μήτε ἐπικηρυκεύεσθε, μήτε ἔνδηλοι ἔστε τοῖς παροῦσι πόνοις βαρυνόμενοι· ὡς οἵτινες πρὸς τὰς ξυμφορὰς γνώμῃ μὲν ἥκιστα λυποῦνται, ἔργῳ δὲ μάλιστα ἀντέχουσιν, οὗτοι καὶ πόλεων καὶ ἰδιωτῶν κράτιστοί εἰσιν."

LXV. Τοιαῦτα ὁ Περικλῆς λέγων ἐπειρᾶτο τοὺς Ἀθηναίους τῆς τε ἐπ' αὐτὸν ὀργῆς παραλύειν, καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν παρόντων δεινῶν ἀπάγειν τὴν γνώμην. 2. οἱ δὲ δημοσίᾳ μὲν τοῖς λόγοις ἀνεπείθοντο, καὶ οὔτε πρὸς τοὺς Λακεδαιμονίους ἔτι ἔπεμπον, ἔς τε τὸν πόλεμον μᾶλλον ὥρμηντο, ἰδίᾳ δὲ τοῖς παθήμασιν ἐλυποῦντο· ὁ μὲν δῆμος, ὅτι ἀπ' ἐλασσόνων ὁρμώμενος ἐστέρητο καὶ τούτων, οἱ δὲ δυνατοὶ, καλὰ κτήματα κατὰ τὴν χώραν οἰκοδομίαις τε καὶ πολυτελέσι κατα-

6. μῖσος μὲν γὰρ—καταλείπεται] To the above the speaker now subjoins other arguments of comfort; e. g. that 'the envy or malignity thus excited is not of any long continuance.' A parallel occurs in a passage of Theophr. ap. Stob. Serm. p. 149, ἐκ διαβολῆς καὶ φθόνου ψεῦδος ἐπ' ὀλίγον ἴσχυον ἀπεμαράνθη, Never does the envy last longer than the life of the person maligned, (or, in the words of Hor. Epist. ii. 1, init. Comperit invidiam supremo fine domari: Urit enim fulgore suo, qui prægravat artes Infra se positas; extinctus amabitur idem,) and sometimes dies before its object. So Plut. Num. 22, τοῦ φθόνου πολὺν χρόνον οὐκ ἐπιζῶντος, ἐνίων (I conj. ἐνίοτε) καὶ προαποθάνοντος.

7. ἔς τε τὸ μέλλον καλὸν προγνόντες] The term προγ., in the two clauses to which it belongs, bears two somewhat different senses;—in the first, signifying, to forecast; in the second, to decide, decree, resolve, with a conjoint notion of action, as consequent on counsel.

κτήσασθε] 'seek to acquire.' In the words following, ἔνδηλοι ἔστε τοῖς παρ. πόν. βαρυνόμενοι, we have the use of particip. for infin., on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 296, who, however, should not have confined the rule to δῆλος εἶναι, but extended it to words of a similar signification, as φανερὸς εἶναι, or δείκνυσθαι, on which see Valck. on Herodot. iii. 72. Ἔνδηλος is more significant than δῆλος, and is used by the dramatic writers, as also Plato, Plutarch, and Xenoph., and many of the historians. Like δῆλος, it has often a participle after it, as here and in Arrian, E. A. iii. 24, 10. Xenoph. Anab. ii. 4, 1, and ii. 6, 12. Dio Cass. p. 17, 47. Agath. p. 15. At τοῖς παροῦσι πόνοις must (as in Soph. Phil. 970, τοῖς παροῦσι πόνοις ἄχθομαι) be supplied ἐπὶ, which is expressed in similar phrases, ex. gr. Soph. Elect. 325, ἀλγῶ 'πὶ τοῖς παροῦσι.

ἀντέχουσιν] 'they hold out,' 'bear up,' under trouble or exertion. So Aristoph. Ach. 1121, ἔχ', ἀντέχου, παῖ.

Ch. LXV. 1. τοὺς Ἀθηναίους—παραλύειν] 'to appease the anger of the Athenians.' A remarkable form of expression, with which compare Dio Cass. p. 17, 47, and 77, 25, τῆς ὀργῆς σφᾶς παρέλυσε. Παραλύω is used for παραπαύω, or καταπαύω, or παραλύω. So Xen. Cyr. viii. 5, 12, καταλύειν τοῦτον τῆς ἀρχῆς, where one should have expected καταπαύειν.

2. ἀνεπείθοντο] for μετεπείθοντο, meaning, as appears from the words a little after, ἰδίᾳ δὲ τοῖς παθήμασιν ἐλυποῦντο, that (as Thirlwall expresses it) 'they were convinced, but not satisfied.'

ὁ δῆμος] Meaning, the plebs, or vulgus, as opposed to the nobles and rulers; as in Hom. Il. ii. 188 and 198. And so in Soph. Aj. 1090, we have ἄνδρα δημότην opposed to τοῖς ἐφεστῶσι, imperantibus. (Duker.) In ἀπ' ἐλασσόνων ὁρμώμενος, we have the same use of the verb as at i. 141, and in either case ὁρμᾶσθαι signifies, 'to go, or proceed upon any thing, as the means for an end,'—resources, support. There is here an ellipsis of χρημάτων, è subsidiis, facultatibus. So Polyb. i. 3, 7, ἀπὸ μικρᾶς

σκευαῖς ἀπολωλεκότες, τὸ δὲ μέγιστον, πόλεμον ἀντ' εἰρήνης ἔχοντες. 3. οὐ μέντοι πρότερόν γε οἱ ξύμπαντες ἐπαύσαντο ἐν ὀργῇ ἔχοντες αὐτὸν, πρὶν ἐζημίωσαν χρήμασιν. 4. ὕστερον δ' αὖθις οὐ πολλῷ, (ὅπερ φιλεῖ ὅμιλος ποιεῖν,) στρατηγὸν εἵλοντο, καὶ πάντα τὰ πράγματα ἐπέτρεψαν· ὧν μὲν περὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα ἕκαστος ἤλγει, ἀμβλύτεροι ἤδη ὄντες, ὧν δὲ ἡ ξύμπασα πόλις προσεδεῖτο, πλείστου ἄξιον νομίζοντες εἶναι. 5. ὅσον τε γὰρ χρόνον προῦστη τῆς πόλεως ἐν τῇ εἰρήνῃ, μετρίως ἐξηγεῖτο, καὶ ἀσφαλῶς διεφύλαξεν αὐτὴν, καὶ ἐγένετο ἐπ' ἐκείνου μεγίστη· ἐπεί τε ὁ πόλεμος κατέστη, ὁ δὲ φαίνεται καὶ ἐν τούτῳ προγνοὺς τὴν δύναμιν. 6. ἐπεβίω δὲ δύο ἔτη καὶ μῆνας ἕξ· καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἀπέθανεν, ἐπὶ πλέον ἔτι ἐγνώσθη ἡ πρόνοια αὐτοῦ ἡ ἐς τὸν πόλεμον. 7. ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἡσυχάζοντάς τε, καὶ τὸ ναυτικὸν θεραπεύοντας, καὶ ἀρχὴν μὴ ἐπικτωμένους ἐν τῷ

ὁρμώμενοι δυνάμεως, and Lucian, i. p. 10, ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων ὁρμώμενος. In the words a little after, οἰκοδομίαις—κατασκευαῖς, the dat. has the use of the Latin ablative, denoting together with: see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 397, seqq. By κατασκευαῖς is meant, not furniture which had been removed to Athens, but the decorations and fitting up, both internal and external, of the houses. So supra ch. 16, ἄρτι ἀνειληφότες τὰς κατασκευάς.

3. ἐζημίωσαν χρήμασιν] 'fined him in a certain sum of money,' 'imposed a certain fine upon him.' On this construction (which is found in Herodot. vi. 21, and most of the historians,) see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 404, 5, who regards the dat. as expressing mode of action. It would seem that ἐν is to be supplied, as at 2 Cor. vii. 9. Thus the accusative is sometimes found, either with or without εἰς. The fine in question is by some said to have been 80 talents; by others, 50; and by some, 15. We may suppose 80 to have been the fine imposed; 15, the sum finally received, after mitigation.

4. ὅμιλος] 'the multitude.' One MS. has ὁ ὅμιλος, which Wasse seems to have approved, as agreeable to the usage of Philo and Herodot.: but in such matters each writer 'is a law unto himself;' and the usage of Thucyd. is, to omit the article: see iv. 28, and viii. 1. And that we have the true reading of the author, might be proved from several imitations of the passage in Dio Cass., Appian, Procop., and Josephus.

στρατηγὸν εἵλοντο] By στρατ. is (as Krueg. and Seidler have shown) to be understood, not the ordinary prætor urbis, (comp. supra ch. 13,) but, as Diod. and Plut. attest, the prætor αὐτοκράτωρ, answering to the Roman dictator, or supreme governor over the other στρατηγοί: see Schoem. de Com. Ath. p. 314, and Ellendt on Arrian, E. A. vi. 14, 1. Xen. Hist. i. 4, 20. Pausan. iv. 15, 2. In the clause following, ὧν μὲν—νομίζοντες εἶναι, the genit. ὧν depends upon ἀμβλύτεροι, not ἤλγει, the expression being tantamount to ἐκείνων ἃ ἤλγει. Of ἀμβλ. the sense is, 'less keenly sensible,' as at ii. 40, where see note.

πλείστου ἄξιον] 'a matter of the greatest consequence.' The construction is, νομίζοντες δὲ (τὰ χρήματα) ὧν ἡ ξύμπασα πόλις προσεδεῖτο εἶναι πλείστου ἄξιον (πρᾶγμα). This use of ἄξ. in the predicate is somewhat rare, but there is an example in Xen. Cyr. iv. 4, 2, οἰκουμένη χώρα πολλοῦ ἄξιον κτῆμα.

5. ἐν τῇ εἰρήνῃ] Notwithstanding what Poppo urges, this must have the sense, (assigned by me in my Transl.) 'the peace,' meaning, the thirty years truce which followed the reduction of Eubœa up to the present war, (see i. 15,) and which formed the longest period of the administration of Pericles; a view, I find, also adopted by Goell. and Arnold.

μετρίως ἐξηγεῖτο] 'governed the state with moderation.' Ἀσφαλῶς διεφύλαξεν, meaning, either that he was a careful or safe guardian of its security. Imitated from these two expressions of our author are the following in Procop. 151, 11, μετρίως τε ἐξηγεῖτο, καὶ Λιβύην ἀσφαλῶς διεφύλασσε, and 166, 36, ἀσφαλῶς τὴν χώραν διεφύλαξε.

7. ναυτικὸν θεραπεύοντας] 'paying strict attention to their navy.' This sense of θεραπεύεσθαι is very rare. I have found it only in Arrian, Indic. 38, 9, τὰς δὲ ἄλλας (τριηρεῖς) ἐθεράπευον. Diod.

πολέμῳ, μηδὲ τῇ πόλει κινδυνεύοντας ἔφη περιέσεσθαι· οἱ δὲ ταὐτά τε πάντα ἐς τοὐναντίον ἔπραξαν, καὶ ἄλλα ἔξω τοῦ πολέμου δοκοῦντα εἶναι, κατὰ τὰς ἰδίας φιλοτιμίας καὶ ἴδια κέρδη, κακῶς ἔς τε σφᾶς αὐτοὺς καὶ τοὺς ξυμμάχους ἐπολίτευσαν· ἃ κατορθούμενα μὲν, τοῖς ἰδιώταις τιμὴ καὶ ὠφέλεια μᾶλλον ἦν, σφαλέντα δὲ, τῇ πόλει ἐς τὸν πόλεμον βλάβη καθίστατο. 8. αἴτιον δ' ἦν, ὅτι ἐκεῖνος μὲν, δυνατὸς ὢν τῷ τε ἀξιώματι καὶ τῇ γνώμῃ, χρημάτων τε διαφανῶς ἀδωρότατος γενόμενος, κατεῖχε τὸ πλῆθος ἐλευθέρως, καὶ οὐκ ἤγετο μᾶλλον ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ἢ αὐτὸς ἦγε, διὰ τὸ μὴ, κτώμενος ἐξ οὐ προσηκόντων τὴν δύναμιν, πρὸς ἡδονήν τι λέγειν, ἀλλ' ἔχων

Sic. v. 68, τὰς πεπονηκυίας τριήρεις ἐθεράπευον. iii. 120. Polyb. x. 20, 2, θερ. παν-οπλίας.

ἀρχὴν μὴ ἐπικτωμένους] 'making no acquisitions of empire,' beyond what they had received from their forefathers. So Plato ap. Steph. Thes. πότερον ὧν κέκτησαι, τὰ πλείω παρέλαβες, ἢ ἐπεκτήσω: see i. 144.

τῇ πόλει κινδυνεύοντας] 'putting the city to hazard.' So vi. 10 & 47. Hdot. ap. Steph. Thes. κινδυνεύοντες τῇ πόλει, and κινδυνεύειν τοῖς ἑτοίμοις περὶ τῶν ἀφάνων. Polyb. xxviii. 13, 1, κιν. τῇ πόλει.

ἔξω τοῦ πολέμου] 'which had no proper concern with the war,' 'were foreign to its true object.' With the present compare the phrases ἔξω τῶν προκειμένων, and ἔξω τοῦ λόγου, in Greg.; ἔξω τοῦ πράγματος, in Demosth.; and ἔξω ὑποθέσεως, in Isocr. There is allusion to such measures as the expedition to Crete, ch. 85, when the fleet ought to have sailed straight to the relief of Phormio; besides others that might be mentioned, and, above all, the unfortunate expedition against Syracuse.

κατορθούμενα μὲν] 'if they indeed proved successful,' as in the case of Cleon and Alcibiades, vi. 12. On which sense of κατορθ. see my note on Acts xxiv. 3. Σφαλέντα, 'if they miscarried,' as in the case of Cleon in Thrace, and Nicias in Sicily. With the whole passage, compare iii. 38, ἡ δὲ πόλις—ἀναφέρει.

It is truly observed by Dr. South, (Serm. on Prov. xvi. 33,) that 'the reason why men fall so short, and are so weak in governing, is, that most things fall out to them accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to employ them subsequently, and to strike in with such things, as they fall out, by after-applications of them to their purposes, or by framing their purposes to them.'

8. αἴτιον δ' ἦν] Sub. τούτου. There seems a reference to ἀσφαλῶς διεφύλαξεν, and the full sense intended is, 'whereas the reason of this difference (in point of safety of rule, between Pericles and his successors,) was as follows.'

κατεῖχε—ἐλευθέρως] 'held the multitude in a liberal control,' i. e. in a manner worthy of freemen. So Eurip. Cycl. 286, ἱκετεύομεν τε καὶ λέγομεν ἐλευθέρως. So in Aristid. iii. 212, it is said of Pericles, ἐλευθέρως ὡμίλει τῷ δήμῳ. On the incorruptibility of Pericles, just spoken of, see Aristoph. Eq. 383, and Schol. there.

διὰ τὸ μὴ—ἀντειπεῖν] Render, 'and that because, not having acquired his power by unworthy means, he was not obliged to soothe their humours in his speeches, but could venture, by his authority, somewhat warmly to contradict them.' With respect to the construction and phraseology, κτώμενος is to be taken for κτᾶσθαι, as is required by ἔχων in the following clause, which is for δυνάμενος. Ἐπ' ἀξίωσει signifies præ dignitate, or propter dignitatem. The two antithetical phrases,—πρὸς ἡδονὴν λέγειν, and πρὸς ὀργὴν ἀντειπεῖν,—deserve attention, especially as πρὸς has not (as might be expected) the same sense in both. In the former it denotes (like ad in Latin) purpose, view, i. e. 'for pleasure,' 'to please,' and is often used with verbs of speaking. The other phrase is also used with verbs of speaking or answering, but never, in any good writer, has the force of purpose or intention, (as the translators make it,) but, with ὀργὴν, signifies cum irâ, and forms an adverbial phrase, equivalent to an adverb formed from an adjective cognate with ὀργὴ, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 591, e. So Aristoph. Ran. 844, καὶ μὴ πρὸς ὀργὴν σπλάγχνα θερμήνῃς

ἐπ' ἀξιώσει καὶ πρὸς ὀργήν τι ἀντειπεῖν. 9. ὁπότε γοῦν αἴσθοιτό τι αὐτοὺς παρὰ καιρὸν ὕβρει θαρσοῦντας, λέγων κατέπλησσεν ἐπὶ τὸ φοβεῖσθαι, καὶ δεδιότας αὖ ἀλόγως ἀντικαθίστη πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸ θαρσεῖν. 10. ἐγίγνετό τε λόγῳ μὲν δημοκρατία, ἔργῳ δὲ ὑπὸ τοῦ πρώτου ἀνδρὸς ἀρχή. 11. οἱ δὲ ὕστερον, ἴσοι αὐτοὶ μᾶλλον πρὸς ἀλλήλους ὄντες, καὶ ὀρεγόμενοι τοῦ πρῶτος ἕκαστος γίγνεσθαι, ἐτράποντο καθ' ἡδονὰς τῷ δήμῳ καὶ τὰ πράγματα ἐνδιδόναι. 12. ἐξ ὧν ἄλλα τε πολλὰ,—ὡς ἐν μεγάλῃ πόλει καὶ ἀρχὴν ἐχούσῃ,—ἡμαρτήθη, καὶ ὁ ἐς Σικελίαν πλοῦς· ὃς οὐ τοσοῦτον γνώμης κότῳ, and 856, μὴ πρὸς ὀργὴν, Λ., ἀλλὰ πράονως Ἔλεγχ', ἐλέγχου. Joseph. Bell. ii. 1, 3, πρὸς ὀργὴν ἀπεκρίναντο, et sæpe al. Liban. Orat. 772, πρὸς ὀργὴν ἐπιπλήξεις. Appian, ii. 496, πρὸς ὀργὴν ἀποκρίνασθαι: see also Arrian, E. A. iv. 13, 5. Ind. xiv. 4. Lucian, ii. 62, 9. iii. 4, 21. Dionys. Hal. p. 153, 395, and 735. Lucian, Pisc. 8, πρὸς ὀργὴν ἀκούετε, καὶ οὐδὲν τῶν δικαίων προσίεσθε.

Arnold, indeed, says, that πρὸς has here the same sense in both phrases; and he explains πρὸς ὀργὴν to mean, 'so as to excite their anger:' but all that he proves is, that the expression might have that sense, not that it must; which, indeed, is here forbidden by the context, and yields a sense not a little jejune, whereas the sense I maintain (which has been adopted by Poppo and Goell.) is at once agreeable to the context, and established on the strongest authority.

9. ὁπότε γοῦν—φοβεῖσθαι] 'Whenever, for instance, he perceived them, in aught, unreasonably and petulantly confident, he used, in addressing them, to strike them with alarm.' Θαρσ. is here, as often, used in malam partem; and ὕβρις has here the same sense as at iii. 45, ἡ δ' ἐξουσία ὕβρει. And so ἐφ' ὕβρει infra vi. 21, præ petulantiâ. Of κατέπλησσεν ἐπὶ τὸ φοβεῖσθαι, the sense is, lit. 'he beat them (meaning, their confidence) down to the level of fear.' So in Prov. xxi. 12, we have, 'and casteth down the strength of their confidence.' A similar construction to the present is found in Xen. Laced. viii. 3, ὅσῳ μείζω δύναμιν ἔχει ἡ ἀρχὴ, τοσούτῳ μᾶλλον ἂν αὐτὴν καὶ καταπλήξειν τοὺς πολίτας τοῦ ὑπακούειν· where the gen., dependent on ἕνεκα, understood, is equiv. to ἐπὶ τὸ in the present passage.

καὶ δεδιότας—θαρσεῖν] 'And when, on the contrary, [he saw them] unreasonably fearful, he reanimated their courage,' lit. 'he established them back again to a courageous frame of mind.' Evidently imitated from this passage is the similar one in Dio Cass. p. 86, 100, ἐς φόβον—ἀντικατέστησαν, and Procop. p. 200, 9, ἐπὶ τῷ (I conj. τὸ) θαρσεῖν ἀντικαθίστη, also 293, 15. 336, 43.

10. ἔργῳ δὲ ὑπὸ τοῦ πρώτου ἀνδρὸς ἀρχὴ] Compare the words at ch. 37, ὄνομα μὲν—κεκώλυται. 'It is not meant,' as observes Hand., cited by Poppo, 'that the government of Athens, in the time of Pericles, was an aristocracy;' it is merely said, 'that the power of the state was τὸ τοῦ ἀρίστου,' i. e. ingenii et virtutibus præstantissimi: see Aristid. i. 373. Plut. ii. 802. Philostr. Vit. Ap. v. 35. Aristot. passim.

11. ἐτράποντο—ἐνδιδόναι] The sense is sufficiently clear, but there is some difficulty in determining the construction. Many commentators refer καθ' ἡδον. to ἐνδιδόναι,—itself dependent on ἐτράποντο, and from τῷ δήμῳ they supply αὐτοῦ. This, however, does violence to the construction, and is not permitted by the καὶ, which makes the sentence bimembris. Ἐτράποντο καθ' ἡδονὰς τῷ δήμῳ (for δήμῳ is to be taken with ἐτράπ.) must be construed thus: ἐτράπ. τῷ δήμῳ καθ' ἡδον. where ἐτράπ. has the sense, 'sese convertebant, or conferebant,' as in Plato, ap. Steph. Thes. in v. τραπέσθαι πρὸς διδασκάλους· and καθ' ἡδον. means, 'in order to gratify them,' 'for their gratification,' as in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 696, 22, καθ' ἡδονὰς τὰς ὑμετέρας λέγω. So also Thucyd. vi. 16, καθ' ἡδον. λέγειν, and ii. 53, καθ' ἡδον. ποιεῖν. The phrase καθ' ἡδον. τραπέσθαι I have not met with any where except in Eurip. Suppl. 883, and there not in exactly the same sense. At ἐνδιδόναι, sub. αὐτῷ, from δήμῳ. By τὰ πράγματα, understand 'public affairs,' meaning, their administration, as at v. 65, and vii. 48.

12. At πλοῦς is to be repeated ἡμαρτήθη, per zeugma, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 634, 3, whereby a verb employed ἁμάρτημα ἦν πρὸς οὓς ἐπῆεσαν, ὅσον οἱ ἐκπέμψαντες οὐ τὰ πρόσφορα τοῖς οἰχομένοις ἐπιγιγνώσκοντες, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὰς ἰδίας διαβολὰς περὶ τῆς τοῦ δήμου προστασίας, τά τε ἐν τῷ στρατοπέδῳ ἀμβλύτερα ἐποίουν, καὶ τὰ περὶ τὴν πόλιν πρῶτον ἐν ἀλλήλοις ἐταράχθησαν. 13. σφαλέντες δ' ἐν Σικελίᾳ ἄλλῃ τε παρασκευῇ καὶ τοῦ ναυτικοῦ τῷ πλείονι μορίῳ, καὶ κατὰ τὴν πόλιν ἤδη ἐν στάσει ὄντες, ὅμως ‡ τρία μὲν ἔτη ἀντεῖχον τοῖς τε πρότερον ὑπάρχουσι πολεμίοις, καὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ Σικελίας μετ' αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων ἔτι τοῖς πλείοσιν ἀφεστηκόσι, Κύρῳ τε ὕστερον βασιλέως παιδὶ προσγενομένῳ, ὃς παρεῖχε χρήματα Πελοποννησίοις ἐς τὸ ναυτικόν· καὶ οὐ πρότερον ἐνέδυσαν, ἢ αὐτοὶ ἐν σφίσι κατὰ τὰς ἰδίας διαφορὰς περιπεσόντες with two nouns must, in the second, be taken with some modification of sense,—namely, in the present case, to be wrongly managed: and so an expedition may be said to be mismanaged. Such is the use of the term in a passage of Plut. on Self-praise, 17, where we have ἡμαρτημένος ἔπαινος, 'mismanaged, misdirected, panegyric.'

ὃς οὐ τοσοῦτον—ἐταράχθησαν] 'which was not so much an error of judgment respecting those against whom it proceeded, as that they who sent it out (i. e. the rulers) knew not what were the proper requisites for the armament; but, —occupied about their private cabals and quarrels for political pre-eminence,—caused the affairs of the expedition to proceed with so much the more remissness; and as to the business of the state, they were then, first, embroiled in mutual dissensions.' At πρὸς οὓς, sub. περὶ ἐκείνων, as ch. 40. Goell. remarks the peculiar use of ἀλλὰ after γιγνώσκοντες, as if ἐπιγίγνωσκον had preceded, and compares i. 67, Αἰγινῆται φανερῶς μὲν οὐ προσβεύομενοι, δεδιότες τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, κρύφα δὲ οὐχ ἥκιστα μετ' αὐτῶν ἐνῆγον τὸν πόλεμον. Of τὰ πρόσφορα the sense is, supplementa, subsidia, requisita. Οἰχομένοις is well rendered by Port. profectis: see Matth. Gr. § 504, obs. 2. In ἐπιγιγνώσκειν the prep. ἐπὶ (as Abr. notices) stands for μετὰ, postea. The construction is well laid down by Poppo, thus, ὅσον οἱ ἐκπέμψαντες τὰ ἐν τῷ στρατοπέδῳ ἀμβλύτερα ἐποίουν, οὐ τὰ πρόσφορα τοῖς οἰχομένοις ἐπιγιγνώσκοντες, ἀλλὰ (ἐπιγ.) κατὰ—προστασίας.

For διαφορὰς, I have, with Bekk., Goell., and Poppo, edited διαβολὰς, such being the more difficult reading, the other a gloss: the sense is simultates, querelas, cabals. The words τά τε ἐν τῷ στρατ. ἀμβλύτερα ἐποίουν advert to the little care taken by the government at home to send out timely reinforcements, supplies, &c. (see vii. 9—15.) by which the wheels of affairs, as it were, moved heavily—the fault of the state-ministers at home, οἱ ἐποίουν τὰ ἐν τῷ στρατ. ἀμβλ. εἶναι, 'to be carried on with inertness.' So Poppo renders, 'tardiora reddebant, hebetabant,' caused them ἀμβλύνεσθαι: see ch. 87, 2.

The chief difficulty, however, is centered in καὶ τὰ περὶ—ἐταράχθησαν, which I am now of opinion must be referred to the same persons as those of the former clause, οἱ ἐκπεμψ., and at τὰ supply κατά. Ἐταράχθ. means, 'they were embroiled,' as in Xen. Ages. i. 33, ταράττεσθαι διὰ τὸ αἰτιᾶσθαι ἀλλήλους τοῦ γεγενημένου: yet the sense seems not complete. What Thucyd. meant to express was, 'and as to the home-affairs,—they (i. e. the statesmen) were occupied with their mutual embroilments.'

Of πρῶτον, the sense is not 'first,' namely, (as Arnold explains,) since the time of the expulsion of the Pisistradæ; but the meaning is, rather, that 'they were then first (during the Peloponnesian war) involved in those internal troubles, which (as our historian proceeds to state) subsequently proved their ruin.'

13. τρία ἔτη ἀντεῖχον] For τρία, Ha. and Goell. would read δέκα, but no change is necessary: see my note in Transl.

καὶ οὐ πρότερον—ἐσφάλησαν] Construe, καὶ οὐ πρότερον ἐνέδοσαν, ἢ αὐτοὶ περιπεσόντες, ἐν σφίσι, κατὰ τὰς ἰδίας διαφορὰς ἐσφάλησαν. We have here a blending of two phrases, περιπίπτειν σφίσι, and σφάλλεσθαι ἐν σφίσι. So in Aristid. ii. 111, it is said, Athens might have been saved, εἰ μὴ αὐτὴ περὶ αὐτὴν ἡ πόλις ἔπταισε. Comp. the similar phrase at i. 69, περὶ αὐτῷ σφαλῆναι.

ἐσφάλησαν. 14. τοσοῦτον τῷ Περικλεῖ ἐπερίσσευσε τότε, ἀφ' ὧν αὐτὸς προέγνω καὶ πάνυ ἂν ῥᾳδίως περιγενέσθαι τῶν Πελοποννησίων αὐτῶν τῷ πολέμῳ.

LXVI. Οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι τοῦ αὐτοῦ θέρους ἐστράτευσαν ναυσὶν ἑκατὸν ἐς Ζάκυνθον τὴν νῆσον, ἣ κεῖται ἀντιπέρας Ἤλιδος· εἰσὶ δὲ Ἀχαιῶν τῶν ἐκ Πελοποννήσου ἄποικοι, καὶ Ἀθηναίοις ξυνεμάχουν. 2. ἐπέπλεον δὲ Λακεδαιμονίων χίλιοι ὁπλῖται καὶ Κνῆμος Σπαρτιάτης ναύαρχος. 3. ἀποβάντες δὲ ἐς τὴν γῆν ἐδήωσαν τὰ πολλά· καὶ ἐπειδὴ οὐ ξυνεχώρουν, ἀπέπλευσαν ἐπ' οἴκου.

LXVII. Καὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ θέρους τελευτῶντος Ἀριστεὺς Κορίνθιος καὶ Λακεδαιμονίων πρέσβεις, Ἀνήριστος καὶ Νικόλαος καὶ Στρατόδημος, καὶ Τεγεάτης Τιμαγόρας, καὶ Ἀργεῖος ἰδίᾳ Πόλλις, πορευόμενοι ἐς τὴν Ἀσίαν ὡς βασιλέα, εἴ πως πείσειαν αὐτὸν χρήματά τε παρέχειν καὶ ξυμπολεμεῖν, ἀφικνοῦνται ὡς Σιτάλκην πρῶτον τὸν Τήρεω ἐς Θρᾴκην, βουλόμενοι πεῖσαί τε αὐτόν, εἰ δύναιντο, μεταστάντα τῆς Ἀθηναίων ξυμμαχίας στρατεῦσαι ἐπὶ τὴν Ποτίδαιαν, οὖ ἦν στράτευμα τῶν Ἀθηναίων πολιορκοῦν, καὶ,—ᾗπερ ὥρμηντο,—δι' ἐκείνου πορευθῆναι πέραν τοῦ Ἑλλησπόντου ὡς Φαρνάκην τὸν Φαρναβάζου, ὃς αὐτοὺς ἔμελλεν ὡς βασιλέα ἀναπέμψειν. 2. παρα-

14. τοσοῦτον — προέγνω, &c.] This sentence is obscure, from the elliptical nature of the sentence, where at τοσοῦτον τῷ Περικλεῖ ἐπερίσσευσε τότε, may be supplied φρονήσεως περὶ τὰ πράγματα, i. e. lit. 'such was the superabundant sagacity of Pericles respecting those measures by which,' &c.: so in a passage of Liv. lib. ii. (cited by Bauer,) we have, 'Tantum superabat animi ad sustinendam invidiam;' and in Sall. Jug. ch. 68, 'cui virtus, gloria, atque alia optanda bonis superabant.' Of περισσεύω, used in this sense, (which is rare,) examples occur in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 149, l. Sylb. τό τε ἀνδρεῖον ἐπερίττευεν αὐτῷ καὶ τὸ φρόνιμον. Ecclus. xix. 20, περισσ. ἐν φρονήσει. Jos. Ant. xix. i. 18, τοσόνδε ἐπερίσσευσεν αὐτοῖς εὐνοίας τῆς πρὸς αὐτόν. The idiom, indeed, has place chiefly in the case of περίειμι, and in certain instances is found ushered in by τοσοῦτον, as in Dionys. Hal. 327, 45. Aristid. iii. 244. Ælian, V. H. ii. 13. Philostr. Vit. Ap. viii. 1, 8. If, however, the above ellipse be thought, as it may, harsh, we may, with Poppo, join the words ἀφ' ὧν with περιγενέσθαι, so as to stand thus, περιγενέσθαι ἀπὸ τούτων ἃ, &c., and, supposing the subject of the verb ἐπερίσσευσε to be περιγενέσθαι, render, 'tantum superabat [virium] Pericli ad Peloponnesios solos iis, quæ ipse præviderat, atque facillime quidem in hoc bello devincendos.' But, preferable to this, (which involves no little harshness,) is the method proposed by Gail, Goell., and Arnold, namely, before ἀφ' ὧν to supply ἐκείνων, understanding thereby vires, or rather, 'means' for the contest. So Arnold renders, 'Such a superabundance of means did Pericles then possess, from which he of himself foresaw that he could easily triumph over the unaided force of the Peloponnesians.' Similarly in Liv. ii. 42, we have, 'ad bella externa prope superarant vires,' 'they had more strength than they wanted,' had enough, and to spare.

CH. LXVI. 3. οὐ ξυνεχώρουν] 'agreed not to terms of surrender.' This signification is frequent in Thucyd., but somewhat rare in other writers. The subject of the verb is Ζακύνθιοι, taken from Ζάκυνθον preceding.

CH. LXVII. 1. ἰδίᾳ] 'in his private capacity,' without any authority from the state. Στρατεῦσαι ἐπὶ τὴν Ποτίδ. 'to send an expedition to the relief of Potidæa.' Ἧ,περ ὥρμηντο, 'whither they were desirous of going,' or had determined to go.

τυχόντες δὲ Ἀθηναίων πρέσβεις, Λέαρχος Καλλιμάχου καὶ Ἀμεινιάδης Φιλήμονος, παρὰ τῷ Σιτάλκῃ, πείθουσι τὸν Σάδοκον, τὸν γεγενημένον Ἀθηναῖον, Σιτάλκου υἱόν, τοὺς ἄνδρας ἐγχειρίσαι σφίσιν, ὅπως μὴ, διαβάντες ὡς βασιλέα, τὴν ἐκείνου πόλιν, τὸ μέρος, βλάψωσιν. 3. ὁ δὲ, πεισθεὶς, πορευομένους αὐτοὺς διὰ τῆς Θρᾴκης ἐπὶ τὸ πλοῖον ᾧ ἔμελλον τὸν Ἑλλήσποντον περαιώσειν, πρὶν ἐσβαίνειν, ξυλλαμβάνει, ἄλλους ξυμπέμψας μετὰ τοῦ Λεάρχου καὶ Ἀμεινιάδου, καὶ ἐκέλευσεν ἐκείνοις παραδοῦναι· οἱ δὲ λαβόντες ἐκόμισαν ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας. 4. ἀφικομένων δὲ αὐτῶν, δείσαντες οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὸν Ἀριστέα, μὴ αὖθις σφᾶς ἔτι πλείω κακουργῇ διαφυγών,—ὅτι καὶ πρὸ τούτων τὰ τῆς Ποτιδαίας καὶ τῶν ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης πάντ' ἐφαίνετο πράξας,—ἀκρίτους, καὶ βουλομένους ἔστιν ἃ εἰπεῖν, αὐθημερὸν ἀπέκτειναν πάντας, καὶ ἐς φάραγγας ἐσέβαλον, δικαιοῦντες τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἀμύνεσθαι οἵσπερ καὶ οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ὑπῆρξαν, τοὺς ἐμπόρους οὓς ἔλαβον Ἀθηναίων καὶ τῶν ξυμμάχων ἐν ὁλκάσι περὶ Πελοπόννησον πλέοντας ἀποκτείναντες, καὶ ἐς φάραγγας ἐσβαλόντες. 5. πάντας γὰρ δὴ κατ' ἀρχὰς τοῦ πολέμου οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ὅσους λάβοιεν ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ, ὡς πολεμίους διέφθειρον, καὶ τοὺς μετὰ Ἀθηναίων ξυμπολεμοῦντας, καὶ τοὺς μηδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων.

LXVIII. Κατὰ δὲ τοὺς αὐτοὺς χρόνους, τοῦ θέρους τελευτῶντος, καὶ Ἀμπρακιῶται, αὐτοί τε καὶ τῶν βαρβάρων πολλοὺς ἀναστήσαντες, ἐστράτευσαν ἐπ' Ἄργος τὸ Ἀμφιλοχικὸν καὶ τὴν ἄλλην Ἀμφιλοχίαν. 2. ἔχθρα δὲ πρὸς τοὺς Ἀργείους ἀπὸ τοῦδε αὐτοῖς ἤρξατο πρῶτον γενέσθαι. 3. Ἄργος τὸ Ἀμφιλοχικὸν καὶ Ἀμφιλοχίαν τὴν ἄλλην ἔκτισε, μετὰ τὰ Τρωϊκὰ οἰκαδε ἀναχωρήσας καὶ οὐκ ἀρεσκόμενος τῇ ἐν Ἄργει καταστάσει, Ἀμφίλοχος ὁ Ἀμφιάρεω, ἐν τῷ Ἀμπρακικῷ κόλπῳ, ὁμώνυμον τῇ ἑαυτοῦ πατρίδι Ἄργος ὀνομάσας. 4. καὶ ἦν ἡ πόλις αὕτη μεγίστη τῆς Ἀμφιλοχίας, καὶ τοὺς δυνατωτάτους εἶχεν οἰκήτορας. 5. ὑπὸ ξυμφορῶν δὲ πολλαῖς γενεαῖς ὕστερον πιεζόμενοι, Ἀμπρακιώτας, ὁμόρους ὄντας τῇ Ἀμφιλοχικῇ, ξυνοίκους ἐπηγάγοντο, καὶ ἐλληνίσθησαν τὴν νῦν γλῶσσαν τότε πρῶτον ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀμπρακιωτῶν ξυνοικησάντων· οἱ δὲ ἄλλοι Ἀμφίλοχοι βάρβαροί εἰσιν. 6. ἐκβάλλουσιν οὖν τοὺς Ἀργείους οἱ Ἀμπρακιῶται χρόνῳ, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἴσχουσι τὴν πόλιν. 7. οἱ δ' Ἀμφίλοχοι, γενομένου τούτου, διδόασιν ἑαυτοὺς Ἀκαρνᾶσι, καὶ προσπαρακαλέσαντες ἀμφότεροι Ἀθηναίους, οἳ αὐτοῖς Φορμίωνά τε στρατηγὸν ἔπεμψαν καὶ ναῦς τριάκοντα, ἀφικομένου δὲ τοῦ Φορμίωνος, αἱροῦσι κατὰ κράτος Ἄργος, καὶ τοὺς Ἀμπρακιώτας ἠνδραπόδισαν· κοινῇ τε ᾤκησαν αὐτὸ Ἀμφίλοχοι καὶ Ἀκαρνᾶνες. 8. μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο ἡ ξυμμαχία ἐγένετο πρῶτον Ἀθηναίοις καὶ Ἀκαρνᾶσιν. 9. οἱ δὲ Ἀμπρακιῶται τὴν μὲν ἔχθραν ἐς τοὺς Ἀργείους ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀνδραποδισμοῦ

2. τὸ μέρος] scil. οὖσαν, 'in some measure,' ex parte. So Arnold expresses the sense, 'that they might not bear their part, whatever it might be, in injuring his country;' Athens being his adopted country. So in Aristoph. Ach. 145, we have, πατέρ' ἠντιβόλει βοηθεῖν τῇ πάτρᾳ. Indeed, that the word μέρος belongs to βλάψωσιν, and not to πόλιν, seems evident from the almost unqualified terms in which Athens is here spoken of as the young prince's country. And in addition to the examples adduced by Arnold, may be noted the following in Herodot. i. 120, καὶ ἄρχομεν τὸ μέρος. To this purpose, too, is the remark of Mitch. on Aristoph. Ach. 133, ὁ δὲ υἱὸς, ὃν Ἀθηναῖον ἐπεποιήμεθα. This word, coupled with what follows a little after, seems to imply, that the prince had been admitted to all the privileges of citizenship, and not, as was usual, to a part only.

3. περαιώσειν] Περαιόω properly signifies 'to ferry any one over:' but it is here used in the neuter sense, 'to pass over,' which is frequent in the primitive περάω, whence our verb 'to ferry.' This is the more remarkable, as Thucyd. has always elsewhere used the middle voice. See Poppo, Proleg. i. 185, who adduces this among other examples of act. for mid., as πειρᾶν for πειρᾶσθαι iv. 132. ξυγκλήσαντες iv. 35. στηρίζειν ii. 49, &c.

4. αὐθημερὸν] Namely, lest there should be any delay, and lest the public commiseration should, as in the case of the Mitylenæans, bk. iii., be interested in their favour, and they be saved from destruction. Ἐς φάραγγας ἐσέβαλον Dukas takes to mean simply, that 'they were thrown out as food for the dogs and birds of prey.' See Hom. Il. i. 4. Nevertheless, I must still adhere to the opinion I have before expressed, that a calamity far greater than that of ῥίπτειν ἀτάφους was intended: a view, I find, which has been adopted by Poppo and Goell. The place where their bodies were tossed was probably some particular spot, abounding in pits, employed like the Ceadas at Sparta (spoken of i. 134), of which use was made for that purpose: the plural being here employed as in a similar passage of Eurip. Phaëth. frag. 9, φίλος δέ μοι Ἀλλ' οὗτος (where read, with Musgr., Ἄλουτος) φάραξι σήπεται νέκυς. Goell. conjectures the place to have been that barathrum ἐν Κεραΐδων δήμῳ τῆς Οἰνηΐδος φυλῆς, εἰς ὃ τοὺς ἐπὶ θανάτῳ καταγνωσθέντας ἐνέβαλον.

δικαιοῦντες τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἀμύνεσθαι] 'thinking it but just to retaliate on the Lacedæmonians, by using the same cruelties that they had begun the use of.' See Herodot. viii. 137, where we have the fate of the above individuals ascribed to a judgment visited on their heads for the crime of their forefathers. On this use of ὑπάρχω, see Valck. on the passage, and Hesych. in vv. ὑπάρξας and ὑπάρχει.

CH. LXVIII. Our historian now proceeds to narrate an attack made by the Ambraciots on Argos Amphilochicum; which he prefaces with an account of the origin and early history of that state, so as to account for the present attack, by relating the circumstances of its alliance with the Acarnanians, and consequently the Athenians. On the origin of the connexion of Acarnania with Athens, and of the quarrel of Ambracia with Argos Amphilochicum, see Thirlwall's History of Greece, vol. iii. p. 148.

3. οὐκ ἀρεσκόμενος—καταστάσει] 'dissatisfied with the state of affairs in A.:' a sort of meiosis, found at viii. 84.

ὁμώνυμον—ὀνομάσας] So Isocr. Evag. Τεῦκρος Σαλαμῖνα κατῴκισεν, ὁμώνυμον ποιήσας τῆς πρότερον αὐτῷ πατρίδος οὔσης. These passages are examples of the two constructions which ὁμώνυμος admits, with the dative and with the genit.; the former of which is more agreeable to propriety of language, (for nouns compounded with ὁμοῦ regularly carry a dat.) the latter is found only in the later writers.

5. ἐλληνίσθησαν, &c.] 'were taught, or learnt Greek, the language they now speak;' probably the old Pelasgic. There is here a blending of two phrases. The above signification of ἑλληνίζεσθαι is rare, but occurs also in Liban. ap. T. Mag.

βάρβαροί εἰσιν] 'use the barbarian tongue.' This sense is demanded by the context, and found in 1 Cor. xiv. 11, ἔσομαι τῷ λαλοῦντι βάρβαρος· καὶ ὁ λαλῶν ἐν ἐμοὶ βάρβαρος.

7. καὶ προσπαρακαλέσαντες] This reading (for vulg. προσκαλ.) is required by the authority of MSS. and one of the most certain of critical canons; accordingly it is received by all the recent editors. In the punctuation of the passage I have now thought proper to follow Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold, who make αἱροῦσι the verb to προσπαρακαλ. ἀμφ.: regarding the clause οἳ αὐτοῖς—ἔπεμψαν as equiv. to πεμψάντων τε τούτων αὐτοῖς Φορμίωνα.

σφῶν αὐτῶν πρῶτον ἐποιήσαντο, ὕστερον δὲ ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ τήνδε τὴν στρατείαν ποιοῦνται αὐτῶν τε καὶ Χαόνων καὶ ἄλλων τινῶν τῶν πλησιοχώρων βαρβάρων· ἐλθόντες τε πρὸς τὸ Ἄργος τῆς μὲν χώρας ἐκράτουν, τὴν δὲ πόλιν ὡς οὐκ ἐδύναντο ἑλεῖν προσβαλόντες, ἀπεχώρησαν ἐπ᾽ οἴκου καὶ διελύθησαν κατὰ ἔθνη. τοσαῦτα μὲν ἐν τῷ θέρει ἐγένετο.

Τοῦ δ᾽ αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος οἱ Ποτιδαιᾶται, ἐπειδὴ οὐκέτι ἐδύναντο πολιορκούμενοι ἀντέχειν, ἀλλ᾽ αἵ τε ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἐσβολαὶ Πελοποννησίων οὐδὲν μᾶλλον ἀπανίστασαν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, ὅ τε σῖτος ἐπελελοίπει, καὶ ἄλλα τε πολλὰ ἐπεγεγένητο αὐτόθι ἤδη βρώσεως πέρι ἀναγκαίας καὶ τινες καὶ ἀλλήλων ἐγέγευντο, οὕτω δὴ λόγους προσφέρουσι περὶ ξυμβάσεως τοῖς στρατηγοῖς τῶν Ἀθη-

Ch. LXIX. 1. ὅπ. ταῦτα ἀργυρολογῶσι] Sub. μέρη, 'in order to collect the tribute in those parts.' The same construction (an accus. of thing) occurs at iii. 19, and viii. 3. The general use of this verb is with an accus. of person. The only other example known to me of thing is in Synes. Epist. ἀργ. τὰς πόλεις, and there the thing is for pers.

Ch. LXX. 1. οὐκέτι ἐδύν. πολιορκ. ἀντέχειν] 'could no longer hold out being besieged.' So Herodot. ii. 157, A, ἐπὶ πλεῖστον χρόνον πολιορκευμένη ἀντέσχε. Hence may be emended Zosim. i. 55, 1, ἐπεὶ δὲ ἀντέσχοντο πολιορκούμενοι: read ἀντέσχον.

ἀπανίστασαν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους] 'drew off the Athenians [from the siege].' So Herodot. vi. 133, οὐκ ἀπαναστήσειν τὴν στρατιήν. Appian, i. 45, ἀπανέστησαν αὐτοὺς ἀπὸ Φ. Dionys. Hal. 318, 47, ἀπανιστάναι τὸν στρατόν.

βρώσεως πέρι ἀναγκαίας] 'as to the means of obtaining necessary food.' So ἀναγκαίου τροφῆς, supra i. 2; and Plato, p. 848, A, τροφῆς ἀναγκαίου δεόμενον, where, as here, ἀναγκαῖος signifies 'barely necessary:' and so vii. 69, οὐχ ἱκανὰ μᾶλλον ἢ ἀναγκαῖα. In this use of περὶ, 'in respect to,' with a genitive after ἐπιγίνεσθαι, (which has here the sense of συμβαίνειν,) we have a very rare construction, to which something similar is found in Acts xx. 19, πειρασμῶν τῶν συμβάντων μοι ἐν ταῖς ἐπιβουλαῖς τῶν Ἰ.

ἀλλήλων ἐγέγευντο] 'had even fed upon each other:' a familiar mode of expression (found also in Procop., Liban., and Dio Cass.) to denote the feeding on human flesh; the direst extremity of famine, of which the earliest instance on record is in Herodot. iii. 25, where it is related as taking place on the expedition of Cambyses to Æthiopia, and is there denominated ἀλληλοφαγία. Yet Strabo, iv. p. 282, says, that the eating of human flesh was a Scythian custom. There is, indeed, little doubt that cannibalism has ever been conjoined with extreme barbarism.

λόγους προσφέρουσι—στρατηγοῖς] 'they prefer proposals respecting capitulation to the Athenian generals.' So at iii. 109, προσφέρει λόγον περὶ σπονδῶν, and i. 57.

ναίων τοῖς ἐπὶ σφίσι τεταγμένοις, Ξενοφῶντί τε τῷ Εὐριπίδου καὶ Ἑστιοδώρῳ τῷ Ἀριστοκλείδου καὶ Φανομάχῳ τῷ Καλλιμάχου. 2. οἱ δὲ προσεδέξαντο, ὁρῶντες μὲν τῆς στρατιᾶς τὴν ταλαιπωρίαν ἐν χωρίῳ χειμερινῷ, ἀναλωκυίας τε ἤδη τῆς πόλεως δισχίλια τάλαντα ἐς [τὴν] πολιορκίαν. 3. ἐπὶ τοῖσδε οὖν ξυνέβησαν, ἐξελθεῖν αὐτοὺς καὶ παῖδας καὶ γυναῖκας καὶ τοὺς ἐπικούρους ξὺν ἑνὶ ἱματίῳ, γυναῖκας δὲ ξὺν δυοῖν, καὶ ἀργύριόν τι ῥητὸν ἔχοντας ἐφόδιον. 4. καὶ οἱ μὲν ὑπόσπονδοι ἐξῆλθον ἐπὶ τὴν Χαλκιδικήν, καὶ ἕκαστος ᾗ ἐδύνατο· Ἀθηναῖοι δὲ τούς τε στρατηγοὺς ἐπητιάσαντο, ὅτι ἄνευ αὐτῶν ξυνέβησαν, ἐνόμιζον γὰρ ἂν κρατῆσαι τῆς πόλεως ᾗ ἐβούλοντο, καὶ ὕστερον ἐποίκους ἑαυτῶν ἔπεμψαν ἐς τὴν Ποτίδαιαν, καὶ κατῴκισαν. 5. ταῦτα μὲν ἐν τῷ χειμῶνι ἐγένετο· καὶ τὸ δεύτερον ἔτος ἐτελεύτα τῷ πολέμῳ τῷδε ὃν Θουκυδίδης ξυνέγραψεν.

LXXI. Τοῦ δ᾽ ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἐς μὲν τὴν Ἀττικὴν οὐκ ἐσέβαλον, ἐστράτευσαν δ᾽ ἐπὶ Πλάταιαν· ἡγεῖτο δὲ Ἀρχίδαμος ὁ Ζευξιδάμου, Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλεύς. καὶ καθίσας τὸν στρατὸν ἔμελλε δῃώσειν τὴν γῆν· οἱ δὲ Πλαταιῆς εὐθὺς πρέσβεις πέμψαντες πρὸς αὐτὸν ἔλεγον τοιάδε. 2. "Ἀρχίδαμε καὶ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, οὐ δίκαια ποιεῖτε, οὐδ᾽ ἄξια οὔτε ὑμῶν οὔτε πατέρων ὧν ἐστὲ, ἐς γῆν τὴν Πλαταιῶν στρατεύοντες. Παυσανίας γὰρ ὁ Κλεομβρότου, Λακεδαιμόνιος, ἐλευθερώσας τὴν

By τοῖς ἐπὶ σφίσι τεταγμένοις understand 'those who were charged with the office of directing the operations of the siege.'

2. ἐν χωρίῳ χειμερινῷ] Meaning, 'in a bleak situation,' where they would be exposed to the rigour of winter.

3. ξὺν ἑνὶ ἱματίῳ] Such treaties generally included some condition as to the quantity of apparel to be taken. So Polyæn. vii. 48, συγχωρῆσαι αὐτοῖς ἑνὶ ἱματίῳ ἐξελθεῖν. Pausan. ix. 1, 9, ἀπελθεῖν σφᾶς πρὸ ἡλίου δύντος, ἀνδρας μὲν σὺν ἑνὶ, γυναῖκας δὲ δύο ἱμάτια ἑκάστην ἔχουσαν. Appian, i. 400, 19, διεξελθεῖν διὰ χιτωνίσκου μόνου. The women were allowed to take two garments, because they always wore two, as appears from Herodot. ii. 36, where, mentioning the points of opposition between the Egyptians and other nations, he says, εἵματα τῶν μὲν ἀνδρῶν ἕκαστος ἔχει δύο, τῶν δὲ γυναικῶν ἓν ἑκάστη. Thus, upon the whole, it was only permitted them to take one suit of clothes, the χιτὼν, &c., being included. It was rare that two suits were allowed. The only instance I have remarked is in Appian, i. 383, 23, ὁμόσαντες σὺν δύο ἱματίοις ἕκαστον ἀπολύσειν.

ἐφόδιον] for ὡς ἐφ. 'as a provision for the journey.' So ἐπισιτισμὸς εἰς τὴν ὁδὸν in Gen. xlii. 25. This condition was very rarely granted; and the only example elsewhere known to me is in Zosim. iii. 18, 9, ῥητὸν ἀργύριον καὶ ἱμάτιον ἔχοντα.

4. καὶ ἕκαστος ᾗ ἐδύνατο] 'and whoever else was able [to go],' i. e. each going to whatever quarter he could find a refuge in. Ἐπητιάσαντο, in jus vocabant, 'called them to account.' So Herodot. vi. 30, ἐπαιτησάμενος τοὺς ταῦτα ποιήσαντας. On ἐποίκους see note supra ch. 27.

Ch. LXXI. From this chapter to the end of the book we have recorded the occurrences of the third year of the war; of which ch. 71—78 contain an account of the expedition against Platæa; ch. 71—74 treating of the ineffectual attempts to adjust matters between the Peloponnesians and the Platæans, without resorting to hostilities. In ch. 74—78 we have related, the attempt to take the city by storm.

1. καθίσας τὸν στρατὸν] 'having encamped the army.' So vi. 66, καθ. τὸ στράτευμα, and iv. 93, and elsewhere. This use is rare except in our author, though I have noted it in Eurip. Heracl.

Ἑλλάδα ἀπὸ τῶν Μήδων μετὰ Ἑλλήνων τῶν ἐθελησάντων ξυνάρασθαι τὸν κίνδυνον τῆς μάχης ἢ παρ' ἡμῖν ἐγένετο, θύσας ἐν τῇ Πλαταιῶν ἀγορᾷ Διὶ ἐλευθερίῳ ἱερά, καὶ ξυγκαλέσας πάντας τοὺς ξυμμάχους, ἀπεδίδου Πλαταιεῦσι γῆν καὶ πόλιν τὴν σφετέραν ἔχοντας αὐτονόμους οἰκεῖν, στρατεῦσαί τε μηδένα ποτὲ ἀδίκως ἐπ' αὐτούς, μηδ' ἐπὶ δουλείᾳ· εἰ δὲ μή, ἀμύνειν τοὺς παρόντας ξυμμάχους κατὰ δύναμιν. 3. τάδε μὲν ἡμῖν πατέρες οἱ ὑμέτεροι ἔδοσαν ἀρετῆς ἕνεκα καὶ προθυμίας τῆς ἐν ἐκείνοις τοῖς κινδύνοις γενομένης, ὑμεῖς δέ τἀναντία δρᾶτε· μετὰ γὰρ Θηβαίων τῶν ἡμῖν ἐχθίστων ἐπὶ δουλείᾳ τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ ἥκετε. 4. μάρτυρας δὲ θεοὺς τούς τε ὁρκίους τότε γενομένους ποιούμενοι, καὶ τοὺς ὑμετέρους πατρῴους καὶ ἡμετέρους ἐγχωρίους, λέγομεν ὑμῖν τὴν γῆν τὴν Πλαταιίδα μὴ ἀδικεῖν μηδὲ παραβαίνειν τοὺς ὅρκους, ἐὰν δὲ οἰκεῖν αὐτονόμους,

2. ξυνάρασθαι—μάχης] 'to take part in the peril of the battle.' The proper syntax of ξυνάρασθαι is a dat. of person and genit. of thing, with or without περί. But here we have an accusative of thing dependent on κατά, as in Eurip. Orest. 757, συμφράμην φόνον σοι ματρὸς, and Rhes. 495. Demosth. Olynth. i. συν. τὰ πράγματα. Dionys. Hal. v. 62, μέγαν πόλεμον συναιρουμένους, where for συναιρουμένους read συναραμένους.

Διὶ ἐλευθερίῳ] On the origin of this name, see Harpocr. p. 145, and on the solemnity of the worship paid to Jupiter Ἐλευθέριος, see Bach on Zenoph. Œcon. p. 34. In the words, a little after, ἔχοντας αὐτονόμους οἰκεῖν, we have not—what it might seem—an unnecessary epexegesis, but a circumstance not unimportant, as serving to secure that independence which was called in question by the Bœotians, who claimed a sovereignty over Platæa. The complete construction here is, [ὥστε αὐτοὺς] ἔχοντας αὐτονόμους οἰκεῖν, answering to a similar expression in our law-writings, 'to have and to hold.' Of ἀπεδίδου the sense I believe to be, as Haack, Goeller, and Arnold explain, 'he granted,' (lit. 'gave it over;' implying the assumption on the part of Pausanias to dispose of the territory of Platæa as the assembled thought proper,) rather than 'he gave back or restored it after its occupation by the Persians:' two examples of which use Arnold adduces from Demosth. Olynth. ii. p. 27 (Reiske), εἰ τοῖς μὲν ἐπιτάττειν ἀποδώσετε· τοῖς δ' ἀναγκάζεσθαι τριηραρχεῖν, &c.; and Xen. Hier. ix. 3, τὸ τὰ ἆθλα ἀποδιδόναι. And he truly observes, that the sense, alike in the passage of Demosthenes and this of Thucydides, is assignare, mandare, adjudicare.

3. ἀρετῆς ἕνεκα καὶ προθυμίας] 'for your merit and zeal in the cause of Greece:' alluding perhaps (as Wasse supposes) to the words of Herodot. viii. 1, respecting the Platæans, ὑπὸ δὲ ἀρετῆς τε καὶ προθυμίας.

4. θεοὺς τούς τε ὁρκίους, &c.] 'adjuring you by the gods who were invoked as witnesses when the oath was sworn.' So Æschines, p. 16, ἐπομόσας τοὺς ὁρκίους θεούς.

τοὺς ὑμετέρους πατρῴους καὶ ἡμετέρους ἐγχωρίους] 'Deos patrios et indigetes.' These were each tutelary deities: but the former were the gods of a whole country; the latter, those of a district. In the present instance, the θεοὶ πατρῷοι of the Lacedæmonians, the gods of their race, are (as Arnold explains) Hercules, and also the spirits of the later kings or chiefs of the race of Hercules, who would take it ill that the graves of their countrymen slain at Platæa should be abandoned to the power of the hostile Thebans. By the θεοὶ ἐγχώριοι of Platæa are to be understood (as Arnold explains) 'the local deities to whom Platæa was a home, and who would be dispossessed if the country were occupied by strangers.' Of the phrase θεοὶ ἐγχώριοι examples occur in Æschyl. Sept. 14, and Ag. 784. Suppl. 515, 1629. Nearly the same with these words of our author are those of Jos. Ant. xviii. 6, 7, θεοὺς τοὺς ἐμοὺς πατρῴους, καὶ τοὺς τῇδε ἐγχωρίους ἐπομνύμενος.

Of λέγομεν ὑμῖν the sense is, 'we charge or enjoin on you.'

καθάπερ Παυσανίας ἐδικαίωσεν." LXXII. Τοσαῦτα εἰπόντων Πλαταιῶν, Ἀρχίδαμος ὑπολαβὼν εἶπε· "Δίκαια λέγετε, ὦ ἄνδρες Πλαταιῆς, ἢν ποιῆτε ὁμοῖα τοῖς λόγοις· καθάπερ γὰρ Παυσανίας ὑμῖν παρέδωκεν, αὐτοί τε αὐτονομεῖσθε, καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ξυνελευθεροῦτε ὅσοι, μετασχόντες τῶν τότε κινδύνων, ὑμῖν τε ξυνώμοσαν καὶ εἰσὶ νῦν ὑπ' Ἀθηναίοις· παρασκευή τε τοσήδε καὶ πόλεμος γεγένηται αὐτῶν ἕνεκα καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἐλευθερώσεως. 2. ἧς μάλιστα μὲν μετασχόντες καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐμμείνατε τοῖς ὅρκοις· εἰ δὲ μή,—ἅπερ καὶ τὸ πρότερον ἤδη προὐκαλεσάμεθα,—ἡσυχίαν ἄγετε νεμόμενοι τὰ ὑμέτερα αὐτῶν, καὶ ἔστε μηδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων, δέχεσθε δὲ ἀμφοτέρους φίλους, ἐπὶ πολέμῳ δὲ μηδ' ἑτέρους. καὶ τάδε ἡμῖν ἀρκέσει." 3. ὁ μὲν Ἀρχίδαμος τοσαῦτα εἶπεν· οἱ δὲ Πλαταιῶν πρέσβεις ἀκούσαντες ταῦτα, ἐσῆλθον ἐς τὴν πόλιν, καὶ τῷ πλήθει τὰ ῥηθέντα κοινώσαντες, CH. LXXII. 1. ὑπολαβὼν εἶπε] At ὑπολ. supply τὸν λόγον, which is expressed in Herodot. iii. 146, and so suscipere in Latin. See more in my note on Luke x. 30.

δίκαια λέγετε—ἢν ποιῆτε, &c.] 'ye say what is right and just, if ye do [actions] like your words,' i. e. if your deeds correspond to your words. There is an ellipsis of the word ἔργῳ, which is expressed in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 383, 41, Sylb. οὐκ ἔστιν ὅμοια τοῖς λόγοις αὐτοῦ τὰ ἔργα. Here, then, (as Thirlw. observes,) 'Archidamus admits their claims, but bids them reflect that the rights on which they insisted implied some corresponding duties; that if the Spartans were pledged to protect their independence, they were themselves bound to assist the Spartans in delivering those who had ever been their allies from the tyranny of Athens.'

In the words following, καθάπερ γὰρ, &c., the γὰρ has not a causal force, but may be rendered nimirum: on which force of the particle see Hoog. de Part. p. 100. The expression αὐτονομεῖσθε is well explained by the Schol. τοῖς οἰκείοις νόμοις ἀκωλύτως χρῆσθε.

παρασκευή τε, &c.] The τε is not, as Poppo imagines, copulative, but rather has the force,—treated of by Hoogev. de Part. 562,—namely, ἐπίδοσις cum emphasi (what in Latin is expressed by et quidem), as in Aristoph. Ach. 598. The αὐτῶν, a little after, is, as Goell. observes, to be referred to ὅσοι—ξυνώμοσαν, 'and who yet themselves, too, obey the rule of the Athenians.'

2. μάλιστα μὲν—εἰ δὲ μή] A frequent formula, though here used (as at ch. 40) in a somewhat peculiar manner, by which the μάλιστα μὲν serves to denote what is thought the best to be done; the εἰ δὲ μή, what may, however, be acquiesced in. Of ἅπερ — προὐκαλεσάμεθα, just after, the sense is, 'which we proposed to you [for you to do].' So infra v. 37, τὰ εἰρημένα προκαλούμενοι, and ii. 73, ἃ προκαλεῖται, and iv. 22. The same expression, too, occurs in other writers, as Aristoph. Eq. 792. Pausan. ii. 13, 11; and it should be restored in a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. 742, 37: in which case, according to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 413, there is an ellipsis of ἐς, which word is expressed in two other passages, v. 43, ὑμᾶς προκαλοῦνται ἐς σπονδάς, and iv. 19.

νεμόμενοι τὰ ὑμέτερα αὐτῶν] sua possidentes, suis fruentes. So Poppo explains; aptly comparing Demosth. c. Neær. § 102, where it is similarly said that the Lacedæmonians proposed to the Platæans τὴν χώραν ἔχειν, καὶ καρποῦσθαι τὰ αὐτῶν. Possibly our author had in mind the words of Hesiod, Ἔργ. i. 119, ἥσυχοι ἔργα νέμονται, 'enjoy the fruit of the works.' In the phrase ἔστε μηδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων, 'are neutrals,' the somewhat rare expression μηδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων is nearly equiv. to μετὰ μηδετέρων: though generally (as Goell. observes) it has a somewhat stronger force, as οὐδὲ καθ' ἕν is stronger than κατ' οὐδέν. The next words are almost transcribed by Dio Cass. xli. 19.

τάδε ἡμῖν ἀρκέσει] 'these will suffice,' 'be sufficient for us,' i. e. 'with this we will be satisfied.' For vulg. ἀρέσκει, I have, with the recent editors, adopted, from several MSS., ἀρκέσει, which reading is supported by a passage of Xen. Cyr. viii. 3, 45, ἀρέσκει μοι ὅτι καὶ σὺ ἔχῃς, τούτων μετέχειν. That ἀρκέσει yields a more suitable sense I have, I think, fully shown in my note in Transl.

The same expression, too, occurs in other writers, as Aristoph. Eq. 792. Pausan. ii. 13, 11; and it should be restored in a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. 742, 37: in which case, according to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 413, there is an ellipsis of ἐς, which word is expressed in two other passages, v. 43, ὑμᾶς προκαλοῦνται ἐς σπονδάς, and iv. 19.

νεμόμενοι τὰ ὑμέτερα αὐτῶν] sua possidentes, suis fruentes. So Poppo explains; aptly comparing Demosth. c. Neær. § 102, where it is similarly said that the Lacedæmonians proposed to the Platæans τὴν χώραν ἔχειν, καὶ καρποῦσθαι τὰ αὐτῶν. Possibly our author had in mind the words of Hesiod, Ἔργ. i. 119, ἡσυχοι ἔργα νέμονται, 'enjoy the fruit of the works.' In the phrase ἔστε μηδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων, 'are neutrals,' the somewhat rare expression μηδὲ μεθ' ἑτέρων is nearly equiv. to μετὰ μηδετέρων: though generally (as Goell. observes) it has a somewhat stronger force, as οὐδὲ καθ' ἕν is stronger than κατ' οὐδέν. The next words are almost transcribed by Dio Cass. xli. 19.

τάδε ἡμῖν ἀρκέσει] 'these will suffice,' 'be sufficient for us,' i. e. 'with this we will be satisfied.' For vulg. ἀρέσκει, I have, with the recent editors, adopted, from several MSS., ἀρκέσει, which reading is supported by a passage of Xen. Cyr. viii. 3, 45, ἀρέσκει μοι ὅ,τι καὶ σὺ ἔχῃς, τούτων μετέχειν. That ἀρκέσει yields a more suitable sense I have, I think, fully shown in my note in Transl.

ἀπεκρίναντο αὐτῷ, ὅτι ἀδύνατα σφίσιν εἴη ποιεῖν ἃ προκαλεῖται ἄνευ Ἀθηναίων· παῖδες γὰρ σφῶν καὶ γυναῖκες παρ' ἐκείνοις εἴησαν· δεδιέναι δὲ καὶ περὶ τῇ πάσῃ πόλει, μὴ, ἐκείνων ἀποχωρησάντων, Ἀθηναῖοι ἐλθόντες σφίσιν οὐκ ἐπιτρέπωσιν, ἢ Θηβαῖοι, ὡς ἔνορκοι ὄντες κατὰ τὸ ἀμφοτέρους δέχεσθαι, αὖθις σφῶν τὴν πόλιν πειράσωσι καταλαβεῖν. 4. ὁ δὲ, θαρσύνων αὐτοὺς πρὸς ταῦτα, ἔφη· "Ὑμεῖς δὲ πόλιν μὲν καὶ οἰκίας ἡμῖν παράδοτε τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις, καὶ γῆς ὅρους ἀποδείξατε, καὶ δένδρα ἀριθμῷ τὰ ὑμέτερα, καὶ ἄλλο εἴ τι δυνατὸν ἐς ἀριθμὸν ἐλθεῖν· αὐτοὶ δὲ μεταχωρήσατε ὅποι βούλεσθε, ἕως ἂν ὁ πόλεμος ᾖ. ἐπειδὰν δὲ παρέλθῃ, ἀποδώσομεν ὑμῖν ἃ ἂν παραλάβωμεν. 5. μέχρι δὲ τοῦδε ἔξομεν παρακαταθήκην, ἐργαζόμενοι, καὶ φορὰν φέροντες ἣ ἂν ὑμῖν μέλλῃ ἱκανὴ ἔσεσθαι." LXXIII. Οἱ δ' ἀκούσαντες ἐσῆλθον αὖθις ἐς τὴν πόλιν, καὶ βουλευσάμενοι μετὰ τοῦ πλήθους, ἔλεξαν ὅτι βούλονται, ἃ προκαλεῖται, Ἀθηναίοις κοινῶσαι πρῶτον, καὶ ἢν πείθωσιν αὐτοὺς, ποιεῖν ταῦτα· μέχρι δὲ τούτου σπείσασθαι σφίσιν ἐκέλευον, καὶ τὴν γῆν μὴ δῃοῦν. ὁ δὲ ἡμέρας τε ἐσπείσατο ἐν αἷς εἰκὸς ἦν κομισθῆναι, καὶ τὴν γῆν οὐκ ἔτεμνεν. 2. ἐλθόντες δὲ οἱ Πλαταιῆς πρέσβεις ὡς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους καὶ βουλευσάμενοι μετ' αὐτῶν πάλιν ἦλθον ἀπαγγέλλοντες τοῖς ἐν τῇ πόλει τοιάδε· 3. "Οὔτ' ἐν τῷ πρὸ τοῦ χρόνῳ, ὦ ἄνδρες Πλαταιῆς, ἀφ' οὗ ξύμμαχοι ἐγενόμεθα Ἀθηναῖοί φασιν ἐν οὐδενὶ ἡμᾶς προέσθαι ἀδικουμένους οὔτε νῦν περιὄψεσθαι, βοηθήσειν δὲ κατὰ δύναμιν. 4. ἐπισκήπτουσί τε ὑμῖν, πρὸς τῶν ὅρκων οὓς οἱ πατέρες ὤμοσαν, μηδὲν νεωτερίζειν περὶ τὴν ξυμμαχίαν." LXXIV. Τοιαῦτα τῶν πρέσβεων ἀπαγγειλάντων, οἱ Πλαταιῆς ἐβουλεύσαντο Ἀθηναίους μὴ προδιδόναι, ἀλλ' ἀνέχεσθαι καὶ γῆν τεμνομένην, εἰ δεῖ, ὁρῶντας, καὶ ἄλλο πάσχοντας ὅ τι ἂν ξυμβαίνῃ·

3. ὡς ἔνορκοι—δέχεσθαι] i. e. as being comprehended in the terms of the oath according to which they swore to receive both parties. Thus ἔνορκοι is, as Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold are agreed, put for ἔνσπονδοι, fœdere recepti. And so indeed the word is used in Dio Cass. 335, 9, τῶν τε Ῥωμαίων καὶ τῶν ἐνόρκων σφίσι, and Æschin. p. 63, 6, and 66.

4. ἄλλο εἴ τι] 'whatever.' Δυνατὸν ἐς ἀριθμὸν ἐλθεῖν, 'capable of coming into number,' 'of being numbered.' So Plut. Pericl. 16, δι' ἀριθμοῦ βαδίζειν.

Ch. LXXIII. 1. εἰκὸς ἦν κομισθῆναι] scil. αὐτοὺς, 'it was likely they (i. e. the ambassadors) would get back.' Κομισθῆναι, for ἀνακομ., as vi. 29 and 37.

4. ἐπισκήπτουσί τε ὑμῖν, πρὸς τῶν ὅρκων] In ἐπισκήπτω here there is an union of the usual sense, to enjoin on any one (mandare) the doing of any thing, and that of conjure (i. e. to summon in a sacred name), adjure to do it. The latter sense is suggested by the added words πρὸς τῶν ὅρκων. So in a passage of Basil, cited by Steph. Thes. in v., we have, ἐπισκήπτω ὑμῖν πρὸς τῶν πατέρων: and in Herodot. iii. 65, ὑμῖν τάδε ἐπισκήπτω θεοὺς τοὺς βασ. ἐπικαλέων. The same pregnancy of sense is found in the term elsewhere in Herodot. iii. 73.

Ch. LXXIV. 1. ἀνέχεσθαι—ὁρῶντας] 'to bear, if so it must be, even to see their lands ravaged.' For ἀνέχ. some good MSS. have ἀντέχεσθαι, which Haack and Poppo were inclined to adopt. But the active form would, in this case, be required, and the sense thus arising would not be so suitable. Instead of ὁρῶντας and πάσχοντας we should rather have expected ὁρῶντες and πάσχοντες, as in a passage of Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1918, ἠνείχοντο σῖτον συγκομιζόμενον ὑπὸ τῶν πολεμίων ὁρῶντες. But, as Goell. observes, here and in another passage infra vi. 16, ἀνεχέσθω ὑπερφρονούμενος, the construction changes to the accusative cases ὁρῶντας and πάσχοντας, on account of the interposed words εἰ δεῖ, to which the structure of the remaining part of the sentence is accommodated; not a few examples of which are adduced by Lobeck on Phryn. p. 755. The contrary transition, from the accus. to the nomin., occurs, as Arn. observes, in Hdot. i. 27: and he compares other passages of our author, v. 41 and 50. vii. 74.

ξυνίστορες ἔστε] 'be witnesses,' 'bear witness.' The word occurs also in Eurip. Suppl. 1173. Soph. Aj. 542, and Phil. 1293. Dionys. Hal. 227 and 160. Joseph. Bell. i. 30, 1033. Polyb. xxviii. 17, 13. xxx. 8, 1.

ἐκλιπόντων — τὸ ξυνώμοτον] 'having first abandoned their sworn compact.' I know of no other example of this expression τὸ ξυνώμ. than Dio Cass. p. 136, 40.

παρέσχετε αὐτὴν εὐμενῆ ἐναγων.] Καὶ αὐτὴν is for ἣν: and εὐμενῆ, which properly belongs to the gods protecting, is here, per hypallagem, applied to the country protected. Ἐναγων. stands for ἀγων. ἐν αὐτῇ: on which use of verbs compounded with ἐν, see note supra ch. 20 and 44. The sense of the words is either 'a field propitious to fight in,' or, as Poppo explains, 'favourable to fight in.' Compare Xen. Anab. iv. 6, 12, and Plutarch ap. Steph. Thes. τόπος εὐφυέστατος ἐναγωνίζεσθαι.

προκαλ. πολλὰ καὶ εἰκότα] 'though we have made many and fair proposals.' See supra ch. 72.

οὐ τυγχάνομεν] 'we cannot obtain our purpose.' This signification is founded on the idiom τυγχάνειν σκόπου. And Steph. Thes. furnishes two examples of this elliptical sense, Hesiod, Theog. 973, and Plut. Lyc. 25.

3. ξυγγνώμονες — νομίμως] No little difficulty attaches to this sentence; and that chiefly arising from the unusual acceptation in which Thucyd. has employed the phrase ξυγγνώμονες ἔστε, which Valla, Dukas, Poppo, and Arnold are agreed must mean grant, allow, assent that, &c.; lit. 'be consenting to us in this.' Thus Arnold explains the sense to be, 'assent

LXXV. Τοσαῦτα ἐπιθειάσας, καθίστη ἐς πόλεμον τὸν στρατόν, καὶ πρῶτον μὲν περιεσταύρωσεν αὐτοὺς τοῖς δένδρεσιν ἃ ἔκοψαν, τοῦ μηδένα ἔτι ἐξιέναι· ἔπειτα χῶμα ἔχουν πρὸς τὴν πόλιν, ἐλπίζοντες ταχίστην αἵρεσιν ἔσεσθαι αὐτῶν, στρατεύματος τοσούτου ἐργαζομένου. 2. ξύλα μὲν οὖν τέμνοντες ἐκ τοῦ Κιθαιρῶνος, παρῳκοδόμουν ἑκατέρωθεν, φορμηδὸν ἀντὶ τοίχων τιθέντες, ὅπως μὴ διαχέοιτο ἐπὶ πολὺ τὸ χῶμα· ἐφόρουν δὲ ὕλην ἐς αὐτό, καὶ λίθους καὶ to the first aggressors being punished for their iniquity, and that those who are lawfully seeking [rather, taking] vengeance [for injury], may not fail to obtain it.' It is well remarked by Poppo, that the genit. τῆς ἀδικίας is here placed first because it belongs not only to ὑπάρχουσι, but also to κολάζεσθαι. Of this kind of construction I know no example elsewhere except in a passage of Plut. cited in Steph. Thes. Ὑπάρχω is not unfrequently used, as here, with ἀδικίας, βίας, and other terms denoting injury. Suffice it to advert to ii. 67, and a passage of Demosth. ap. Steph. Thes. in v., where it is, as here, united with the term πρότερος, which serves to strengthen the sense.

Ch. LXXV. 1. Τοσαῦτα ἐπιθειάσας] 'having made these solemn invocations.' Ἐπιθειάζω signifies, 'to address supplications, invocations, &c. to the gods.' The word, which occurs at viii. 53, is used, as also the phrase ταῦτ' or πολλὰ ἐπιθειάσαι, in the later historians and later writers generally, as Philostrat. and Achill. Tat. Καθίστη ἐς πόλεμον τὸν στρατὸν, 'put the army in order for war.'

περιεσταύρωσεν αὐτοὺς] 'palisadoed them round.' Meaning, the place; for the word is elsewhere only used with an accus. of place, as Xen. Hist. viii. 4, 14 and 21, περιεσταύρωσαν τὸν K. διπλῷ σταυρώματι. By δένδρεσιν understand the trees of the plain around Platæa, comparatively of a light kind, and chiefly fruit-trees, with which the plains in the south of Europe are principally occupied. Indeed previous to a siege it was always the custom to clear the ground around the place to be besieged. So Joseph. 1219, 32, καταβληθέντος δὲ παντὸς ἕρκους καὶ περιφράγματος, ὅσα κήπων προανεστήσαντο καὶ δένδρων οἱ οἰκήτορες, ὕλης τε ἡμέρου τῆς μεταξὺ πάσης ἐκκοπείσης. When heavy timber was required for beams (ξύλα), it had to be felled on the mountains, (where alone forest-trees are commonly found in those countries,) as, in the present instance, on Cithæron.

χῶμα ἔχουν] 'raised a mound.' So Herodot. i. 162, χώματα χῶν πρὸς τὰ τείχεα, and ii. 137. iv. 76. Appian, i. 476, 49, χῶμα ἔχου, and i. 752. Joseph. Bell. v. 3, 2. Though this be the first detailed account of the operations of a siege, yet the above, and some of the other methods here recorded, are such as would readily suggest themselves, and, indeed, had been employed nearly 600 years before: see 2 Sam. xx. 15. 2 Kings xix. 32. Jer. vi. 6. The one in question, Arnold observes, 'simply consisted in the carrying of a mound, with an inclined plane, to the level of the top of the walls, so that the besiegers might march up as by a regular road.' Yet here the mound was not intended to form an inclined plane, but was merely formed to drive the garrison from the nearest point of the walls, and thence to afford a facility for carrying the place by an escalade, (whence the anxiety felt to raise it as high as possible,) or, at least, to leave only a small interval.

2. ξύλα] Meaning, such large beams as are formed on simply squaring the trunks of trees by the use of the axe. Μὲν οὖν, porro, 'hereupon:' see Hoogev. de Part. p. 358. Παρῳκοδόμουν ἑκατέρωθεν, 'they built them upon each side [of the mound].' Φορμηδὸν, 'cross-wise;' from φορμὸς, a coarse-plaited mat, or piece of wicker-work. In a passage of Dio Cass. 227, 29, (evidently imitated from the present,) we have the term στοιχηδόν. This work, from the derivation of the word in question, and from the description of it in Æneas Poliorc. p. 574, (whose words are, ἐξ ὀρθίων καὶ πλαγίων συντιθεμένων,) appears to have been of the following form, ##.

ὅπως μὴ διαχέοιτο ἐπὶ πολὺ τὸ χῶμα] 'to prevent the mound from falling away, or being dilapidated,' as its base would, if not confined by the beam-work. So Jos. Bell. Jud. vii. 8, 5, ὅπως δὲ μὴ ὑφουμένου τοῦ χώματος, ἡ γῆ διαχέοιτο.

ὕλην] The word here and at ch. 77, 3, denotes what we call brushwood, as opp. to timber. Ἀνύτειν stands for τελεσουργεῖν.

γῆν, καὶ εἴ τι ἄλλο ἀνύτειν μέλλοι ἐπιβαλλόμενον. 3. ἡμέρας δὲ ἔχουν ἑβδομήκοντα καὶ νύκτας ξυνεχῶς, διῃρημένοι κατ' ἀναπαύλας, ὥστε τοὺς μὲν φέρειν, τοὺς δὲ ὕπνον τε καὶ σῖτον αἱρεῖσθαι· Λακεδαιμονίων τε οἱ ξεναγοὶ ἑκάστης πόλεως ξυνεφεστῶτες ἠνάγκαζον ἐς τὸ ἔργον. 4. οἱ δὲ Πλαταιῆς, ὁρῶντες τὸ χῶμα αἰρόμενον, ξύλινον τεῖχος ξυνθέντες, καὶ ἐπιστήσαντες τῷ ἑαυτῶν τείχει ᾗ προσεχοῦτο, ἐσῳκοδόμουν ἐς αὐτὸ πλίνθους ἐκ τῶν ἐγγὺς οἰκιῶν, καθαιροῦντες. 5. ξύνδεσμος δ' ἦν αὐτοῖς τὰ ξύλα, τοῦ μὴ ὑψηλὸν γιγνόμενον ἀσθενὲς εἶναι τὸ οἰκοδόμημα· καὶ προκαλύμματα εἶχε δέῤῥεις καὶ διφθέρας, ὥστε τοὺς ἐργαζομένους καὶ τὰ ξύλα μήτε πυρφόροις ὀϊστοῖς βάλλεσθαι ἐν ἀσφαλείᾳ τε εἶναι. 6. ᾔρετο δὲ τὸ ὕψος τοῦ τείχους μέγα, καὶ τὸ χῶμα οὐ σχολαίτερον ἀντανήει αὐτῷ. 7. καὶ οἱ Πλαταιῆς τοιόνδε τι ἐπινοοῦσι· διελόντες τοῦ τείχους ᾗ προσέπιπτε τὸ χῶμα, ἐσεφόρουν τὴν γῆν. LXXVI. Οἱ δὲ Πελοποννήσιοι, αἰσθόμενοι, ἐν ταρσοῖς καλάμου πηλὸν ἐνείλλοντες, οἱ ξεναγοὶ] Meaning, I apprehend, 'the commanders' of the quotas furnished by the allies of the Lacedæmonian confederation, who are called ξένοι, in contradistinction to the Spartans; answering to the præfecti sociorum of the Romans. So Xen. Hist. iii. 5, 7. v. 2, 7, Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἐξέπεμπον αὐτοῖς κατὰ κώμην ἑκάστην ξεναγὸν, and v. 1, 35, διέπεμπε καὶ ξεναγοὺς ἐς τὰς πόλεις, and iv. 2. 19, the second of which passages will show that the name was applied even to the commanders of the Periœci of the Lacedæmonians. Of ξυνεφεστῶτες, the sense is, as Kistem. explains, 'unà præpositi,' 'unà cum propriis ducibus præpositi.'

3. διῃρημένοι κατ' ἀναπαύλας] A blending of two phrases, i. e. 'divided into parties for relief,' as we say, 'into reliefs.'

4. ξύλινον τεῖχος ξυνθέντες] Like that described in Jos. Bell. vii. 8, 5, οἰκοδομησάμενοι τεῖχος ἕτερον — τοιῷδε τρόπῳ κατεσκεύασαν. δοκοὺς μεγάλας ἐπὶ μῆκος προσεχεῖς ἀλλήλαις κατὰ τὴν τομὴν συνέθεσαν. δύο δ' ἦσαν στίχοι παράλληλοι τοσοῦτον διεστῶτες, ὅσον εἶναι πλάτος τείχους, καὶ μέσον ἀμφοῖν τὸν χοῦν ἐνεφόρουν: see also Jos. Bell. iii. 7, 10.

ᾗ προσεχοῦτο] 'ab illâ parte, quâ agger adversum urbem excitabatur.' (Port.) So a little after, § 6, ᾗ προσέπιπτε τὸ χῶμα. Of the words following, ἐσῳκοδόμουν ἐς αὐτὸ πλίνθους, the sense is, lit. 'they built up into it (in the interstices of the wood-work) bricks.' Ἐκ τῶν ἐγγὺς οἰκιῶν, καθαιροῦντες, lit. 'having taken them down from the adjacent houses.' So καθ. is used at ch. 14.

5. ξύνδεσμος δ' ἦν αὐτοῖς τὰ ξύλα] 'the beams served to bind all together.' Evidently imitated from which are the words of Procop. 83, 12, καὶ ξύλα μακρὰ ἔνδεσμον (I conj. σύνδ.) ἐποιεῖτο τοῦ ἔργου, ὅπως μὴ, ὑψηλὸν γινόμενον, ἀσθενὲς εἴη· and Arrian, E. A. ii. 18, 7, καὶ αὐτὸς ὁ πηλὸς ξύνδεσμος τοῖς λίθοις ἐς τὸ ἐπιμένειν ἐγίγνετο.

προκαλύμματα] 'fore-coverings,' to defend the workmen. Of the word in this rare sense,—which is the primitive one,—examples occur in Procop. 83, 32. Polyæn. v. 17, and Agath. p. 73, 11. With respect to the two terms, δέῤῥεις and διφθέρας, (which are also found in the above writers,) I am now inclined to think, with Gail and Arnold, that the former denotes skins, or raw hides; the latter, such as are artificially prepared for use, by tanning: a view strongly confirmed by a passage of Procop. 68, 24, where we have δέῤῥεις δὲ καὶ βύρσας, as also by Schneider's derivation of the word διφθέρα, from δέφω, to tan, or curry. The phrase ἐν ἀσφαλείᾳ εἶναι is rare; ἐν ἀσφαλεῖ being far more usual: yet ἐν ἀσφαλείᾳ was probably the plainer and more ordinary phrase, and is defended by Xen. Hier. ii. 10, ἐν ἀσφαλείᾳ καθεστάναι.

6. ἀντανήει] 'was raised opposite to it.' So Dio Cass. 333, 44, in a kindred passage uses ἀντανίστατο.

7. τοῦ τείχους ᾗ] The genit. is here to be taken partitivè, with a subaudition of μέρος. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 354, 5.

Ch. LXXVI. 1. ἐν ταρσοῖς καλάμου πηλὸν ἐνείλλοντες] No easy matter is it ἐσέβαλλον ἐς τὸ διῃρημένον, ὅπως μὴ διαχεόμενον, ὥσπερ ἡ γῆ, φοροῖτο. 2. οἱ δὲ, ταύτῃ ἀποκληόμενοι, τοῦτο μὲν ἐπέσχον, ὑπόνομον δ' ἐκ τῆς πόλεως ὀρύξαντες, καὶ ξυντεκμηράμενοι ὑπὸ τὸ χῶμα, ὑφεῖλκον αὖθις παρὰ σφᾶς τὸν χοῦν· καὶ ἐλάνθανον ἐπὶ πολὺ τοὺς ἔξω, ὥστ' ἐπιβάλλοντας ἧσσον ἀνύτειν, ὑπαγομένου to determine the sense of these words,—obscure from our imperfect acquaintance with the manners and customs of antiquity,—one thing is certain, that it cannot be what some commentators make it, 'daubing hurdles of reed over with clay,' what the Schol. expresses by ἐμπλέκοντας. Ἐνείλλοντας must mean ramming, or squeezing. Far from easy, however, is it to fix the import of ταρσοί. Now this might mean baskets, or (as I formerly explained in my smaller edition) hampers. Arnold, in his first edition, (after Casaub. on Æn. Tact. 32,) assigned to it the sense weavements, layers of wattled reeds. And this is (I find) adopted by Thirlwall, who describes it by 'layers of stiff clay pressed down close on wattles of reeds.' But surely ἐνείλλοντες cannot possibly mean 'pressing down.' The term can only denote 'thrusting or squeezing into;' an idea which necessarily implies that the ταρσοὶ were a certain kind of vessel capable of holding the clay. Hence it may bear the sense baskets, or hampers; which is the view of its meaning adopted by Mitford, and long ago by Zonaras, Lex. col. 64, where the word is explained by καλαθισμοῖς or κοφινίοις. In his second edition, Arnold expresses it as his opinion, that 'the vessels in question were large wattled cases, or crates made of reed;' by crates, of course, meaning those vessels of wicker-work in which articles of coarse earthenware are conveyed: a view nearly the same with that by which the word was by me interpreted hampers, canistra. A use, this, nearly allied to the earliest one of this word, found in Homer and Theocr., where it denotes a cheese-vat, in which cheeses were placed and turned, doubtless formed of wicker-work, thus ###.

By καλάμου, (which is sing. for plur., as in our reed,) we have denoted, as Arnold observes, the arundo donax, called by the modern Greeks κάλαμο, and which is, by Dr. Sibthorp, on the plants of Greece, said to be at this day employed for wicker-work; being, we may presume, of a much tougher nature than our reed, and something like our osiers.

This passage of our author was evidently had in view by Abydenus, ap. Euseb. Præp. Evang. x. 12, ἀπίκατο γὰρ δὴ πηλοῦ κατάπλεοι τοὺς ταρσούς.

ἐς τὸ διῃρημένον] 'into the perforated orifice,' namely, of the wall or mound. Διαχεόμενον must, as Goell. and Arnold are agreed, be referred to χῶμα, denoting, 'the matter heaped on the mound,' and accordingly equiv., as Goell. observes, to μὴ τὸ χῶμα, πηλὸς ὢν, διαχεόμενον, ὥσπερ τὸ χῶμα, γῆ ὂν, φοροῖτο.

2. τοῦτο μὲν ἐπέσχον] Steph. would read τούτου, and this Dio Cass. had possibly in his copy, since at 625, 87, he has, τούτου μὲν ἐπέσχε. Probably, however, he had in mind the words of our author, viii. 31, τούτου μὲν ἐπέσχεν. And, moreover, (as Arnold observes,) 'while, with the middle voice the genit. is necessary, (since we say, to withhold or forbear oneself from a thing,) with the active the accus. is equally correct, and, as being far less usual, is more likely to be the genuine reading.' It is, however, not so unusual, but that it is found at v. 46 and 63. Dio Cass. 625, 87. 1072, 42. 1182, 82, and Plut. Alex. 62.

ξυντεκμηράμενοι ὑπὸ τὸ χῶμα] A condensed form of expression, in which ξυντ. is considered as a vox prægnans, comprehending, together with the sense of conjecturing or guessing, that of motion to a place, i. e. 'making their way by conjecture to the part under the mound.' And this view is confirmed by a similar expression in Herodot. ii. 150, ἐκ τῶν σφετέρων οἰκιῶν—ὑπὸ γῆν σταθμεώμενοι, ἐς τὰ βασ. οἰκία ὤρυσσον. A use this of σταθμ. evidently imitated by Procop. p. 227, and Pausan. vii. 21, 5, as the passage of our author is by Appian, i. 691, τὴν γῆν ἐς τὰ τείχη τεκμαιρομένους διορύττειν. Finally, the word ξυντεκμ. in the sense 'to guess in what direction to carry any course of action,' is found in Xen. Sympos. ii. 8.

ὑφεῖλκον—τὸν χοῦν] 'privily drew the heaped-up earth to themselves, or within the place.' Imitated by Dio Cass. 1080, 9.

ἐπιβάλλοντας] scil. τὸν χοῦν, 'heaping on fresh earth.' Similarly in Xen. Anab. iii. 5, 10, we have ἐπιβαλῶ ὕλην, καὶ γῆν ἐπιφορήσω, and Ezek. xxiv. 10, 'heap on wood.' Of the words following, ὑπαγομένου—τοῦ χώματος, the αὐτοῖς κάτωθεν τοῦ χώματος καὶ ἰζάνοντος ἀεὶ ἐπὶ τὸ κενούμενον. 3. δεδιότες δὲ μὴ οὐδ' οὕτω δύνωνται, ὀλίγοι πρὸς πολλοὺς, ἀντέχειν, προσεπεξεῦρον τόδε· τὸ μὲν μέγα οἰκοδόμημα ἐπαύσαντο ἐργαζόμενοι τὸ κατὰ τὸ χῶμα, ἔνθεν δὲ καὶ ἔνθεν αὐτοῦ ἀρξάμενοι, ἀπὸ τοῦ βραχέος τείχους ἐκ τοῦ ἐντὸς μηνοειδὲς ἐς τὴν πόλιν προσῳκοδόμουν, ὅπως εἰ τὸ μέγα τεῖχος ἁλίσκοιτο, τοῦτ' ἀντέχοι, καὶ δέοι τοὺς ἐναντίους αὖθις πρὸς αὐτὸ χοῦν, καὶ προχωροῦντας εἴσω διπλάσιόν τε πόνον ἔχειν, καὶ ἐν ἀμφιβόλῳ μᾶλλον γίγνεσθαι. 4. ἅμα δὲ τῇ χώσει καὶ μηχανὰς προσῆγον τῇ πόλει οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι· μίαν μὲν, ἣ τοῦ μεγάλου οἰκοδομήματος κατὰ τὸ χῶμα προσαχθεῖσα, ἐπὶ μέγα τε κατέσεισε καὶ τοὺς Πλαταιέας ἐφόβησεν, ἄλλας δὲ ἄλλῃ τοῦ τείχους· ἃς, βρόχους τε περιβάλλοντες ἀνέκλων οἱ Πλαταιῆς, καὶ δοκοὺς μεγάλας ἀρτήσαντες ἀλύσεσι μακραῖς σιδηραῖς ἀπὸ τῆς τομῆς full sense is, 'having the earth privily withdrawn from below.' So in Arrian, E. A. ii. 27, 6, we have, τοῦ χοῦ ἀφανῶς ἐκφερομένου.

καὶ ἰζάνοντος ἀεὶ ἐπὶ τὸ κενούμενον] 'and continually settling down upon the emptied, or vacant, space.' Imitated by Arrian, ii. 27, 6, ὑφίζανον κατὰ τὸ κενούμενον, and Appian, i. 69, τὸ χῶμα ὑφίζανον. Jos. 142, 19. Procop. 84, 28. Hence may be emended a passage of Plut. Alex. 75, δεινὴ δ' ἡ δεισιδαιμονία, δίκην ὕδατος ἀεὶ πρὸς τὸ ταπεινούμενον· where after ὕδατος, I suspect ἰζάνοντος formerly had place, which might very well be omitted by the copyist, propter homœoteleuton. So in another passage of the same writer we have, τὰ δ' εὐθὺς ἐπίμπλατο ῥευμάτων καθαρῶν ἐπισυνδιδόντων, ὁλκῇ καὶ φορᾷ τοῦ θλιβομένου πρὸς τὸ κενούμενον.

3. δεδιότες — ἀντέχειν] Namely, because the Platæans, as few in number, could not withdraw the soil so quickly as the Peloponnesians could heap it up.

ἔνθεν δὲ καὶ—προσῳκοδόμουν] Of ἔνθεν καὶ ἔνθεν, the sense is, 'on either end,' as in Herodot. iv. 71, ἔνθεν καὶ ἔνθεν τοῦ νεκροῦ, and various other authors. By αὐτοῦ, understand the μέγα οἰκοδόμημα just before mentioned. The sense here is well expressed by Arnold, 'beginning at the two extremities of the raised [rather, high] wall, from the points where the wall returned again to its original lower elevation.' The beginnings of the half-moon wall commenced each of them at the end of the higher, and the beginning of the lower part of the wall. For the expression τοῦ βραχέος τείχους, 'the short' or 'low wall,' must have the same sense as τοῦ δὲ βραχέος ᾠκοδομημένου at vii. 29, meaning the part of the wall on each side of the μέγα οἰκοδόμημα. The words ἐκ τοῦ ἐντὸς μην. ἐς τὴν πόλιν προσῳκ. must be construed together. Render, 'built, in addition, a wall in the form of a half-moon, bending inwards towards the city.' In short, to use the words of Thirlwall, 'they built a second wall, in the shape of a half-moon, behind the raised part of the old work, which was the chord of the arc.' That this expedient was one not unfrequently resorted to, appears from several passages occurring in ancient historians. Of ἐν ἀμφιβόλῳ μᾶλλον γίγνεσθαι, the full sense is, 'and be yet more exposed to missiles, namely, on either flank;' the phrase being equivalent to βαλλόμενοι ἀμφοτέρωθεν at iv. 32 and 36. The thing itself is well illustrated by Appian, i. 694, κάμνων δὲ, ὡς ἐν στενῷ, καὶ βαλλόμενος ἄνωθεν ἔκ τε μετώπου καὶ τῶν κεραιῶν, ὡς ἐν μηνοειδέσι χωρίοις. Comp. Arrian, E. A. i. 21, 12. Herodian, vii. 5, 11.

4. μίαν μὲν, ἣ—κατέσεισε] 'one which, being brought up on the mound, shook violently a great part of the high wall;' ἐπὶ μέγα τοῦ μεγ. οἰκοδομήματος signifying, lit. 'to a great extent of the high wall.' So infra iv. 100, we have ἐσεισιδήρωτο ἐπὶ μέγα καὶ τοῦ ἄλλου ξύλου. Of κατέσεισε, the sense is, lit. 'shook [it] from its foundations,' i. e. violently; as in Ælian, V. H. iii. 16. Dionys. Hal. ix. 68.

δοκοὺς — τείχους] 'suspending huge beams, by long iron chains, fastened to either end, and hung from two poles, like yard-arms, inclining forwards and stretchἑκατέρωθεν, ἀπὸ κεραιῶν δύο ἐπικεκλιμένων καὶ ὑπερτεινουσῶν ὑπὲρ τοῦ τείχους, ἀνελκύσαντες ἐγκαρσίας, ὁπότε προσπεσεῖσθαί πη μέλλοι ἡ μηχανή, ἀφίεσαν τὴν δοκὸν χαλαραῖς ταῖς ἁλύσεσι, καὶ οὐ διὰ χειρὸς ἔχοντες· ἡ δὲ, ῥύμῃ ἐμπίπτουσα, ἀπεκαύλιζε τὸ προέχον τῆς ἐμβολῆς.

LXXVII. Μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι, ὡς αἵ τε μηχαναὶ οὐδὲν ὠφέλουν, καὶ τῷ χώματι τὸ ἀντιτείχισμα ἐγίγνετο, νομίσαντες ἄπορον εἶναι ἀπὸ τῶν παρόντων δεινῶν ἑλεῖν τὴν πόλιν, πρὸς τὴν

ing over the wall.' Τομὴ is here used in a rare sense; and, as in Hom. Il. A. 235, ἐπειδὴ πρῶτα τομὴν ἐν ὄρεσσι λέλοιπε, it signifies, 'the place whence it was cut,' (compare Isa. li. 1.) so here it denotes 'the place where the beam had been cut off from the tree either way.' The only examples of a similar use known to me are Joseph. Bell. viii. 3, 5, δοκοὺς μεγάλας ἐπὶ μῆκος προσεχεῖς ἀλλήλαις κατὰ τὴν τομὴν συνέθεσαν, (imitated from Thucyd.) and Arrian, Ind. xiii. 12, κατὰ τὴν τομήν. These two methods of preventing the effect of the enemy's battering-engines were such as were commonly resorted to, as appears from the passages cited by Arnold, from Æneas Tact. and Veget., and certain others, which I have noted in the later historians, ex. gr. Appian, i. 751, τοὺς κριοὺς λίθοις ἀπεκαύλιζον, ἢ βρόχοις ἀνέκλων. Dio Cass. 1080, 11, τοὺς μὲν βρόχοις ἀνεῖλκον, τοὺς δὲ ἁρπάγαις ἀνέσπων.

By κεραιῶν are denoted poles protruding like horns, or yard-arms of ships, to which the beams were suspended by very long chains, which admitted of being raised and tightened, or lowered and slackened. Of these we elsewhere read. So Plutarch, Marcell. 15, ἀπὸ τῶν τειχῶν ἄφνω ὑπεραιρούμεναι κεραῖαι. Athen. 208, B, κεραῖαι, ἐφ' ὧν κατεσκεύαστο φατνώματα δι' ὧν ἠφίεντο λίθοι, κ. τ. λ. See also Liv. xxiv. 35, and Ariosto, Orl. Fur. cant. xl. v. 122.

ἀνελκύσαντες ἐγκαρσίας] 'having drawn them up obliquely.' Adj. for adv.; for I read, with all the recent editors, instead of ἐγκαρσίως, ἐγκαρσίας, especially as it is confirmed by various passages imitated from the present, in Appian, Jos., Procop., and Polyæn. In χαλαραῖς ταῖς ἁλύσεσι we have a rare expression, though found in Procop. p. 334, and 198, as also ἀγκυραῖς χαλαραῖς in Dio Cass. 563, 97. The prep. ἐν must here be supplied, which is expressed in Xen. Hippag. xii. 1, ἐν χαλαρῷ τῷ χαλινῷ, 'at slack-rein.'

Of ῥύμῃ, a little after, the sense is impetu, as in Procop. p. 198, ξὺν ῥύμῃ πολλῇ. Philostr. Juv. Icon. i. 11, καταφερομένης σὺν πολλῇ τῇ ῥύμῃ. Polyæn. v. 36, ῥύμῃ φερομένῃ. At ἀπεκαύλιζε there is a metaphor taken from lopping off the heads of plants, as also Eurip. Suppl. 717, κυνέας θερίζων κἀποκαυλίζων ξύλῳ, and Aristoph. ap. Polluc. On. x. 144, λόγχαι δ' ἐκαυλίζοντο, καὶ ξυστὴ κάμαξ. Procop. B. P. i. 18, τὰ βέλη θώρακι ἐντύχοντα, ἀπεκαυλίζετο. Appian, i. 751, (a passage evidently imitated from the present,) ἀπεκαυλ. τοὺς κριοὺς λίθοις. Hence may be perceived the true force of the imagery in a passage of Aristoph. Eq. 804, Mitch. χασμᾷ, καὶ τοὺς καυλοὺς Τῶν εὐθυνῶν ἐκκαυλίζων Καταβροχθίζει, where there is an allusion to a glutton laying hold of a choice cauliflower, who biting off at a mouthful the head, casts aside the stalky part.

By τὸ προέχον τῆς ἐμβολῆς we must understand, not,—as almost all commentators explain,—the beak of the engine, but, with Poppo, the caput arietis, 'the nozle of the beak;' a word, this, employed by Pope in his Martinus Scriblerus: 'It is only a paltry old sconce, with the nozle broke off.'

Ch. LXXVII. 1. τὸ ἀντιτείχισμα] Meaning, the inner wall, of the shape of a half-moon, the counter-mound, which effectually defended the end aimed at by the opposite mound. In ἀπὸ τῶν παρόντων δεινῶν, the ἀπὸ stands for διὰ, 'by means of,' signifying, lit. that from which any thing proceeds, as in iii. 11 and 64, ἀπὸ σμικρᾶς δαπάνης, and iv. 130, and other passages of other authors cited in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 396, 2. Of δεινῶν the sense is, terriculamentorum; a use of the word also occurring at iii. 45, fin. and Isocr. p. 345. At πρὸς τὴν περιτείχισιν, the article is not without force, the sense being, 'the building a wall of circumvallation about the city,' but is not to be confounded with the περισταύρωσις spoken of at ch. 75, 1, that being a rude and hasty work, merely intended to keep their περιτείχισιν παρεσκευάζοντο. 2. πρότερον δὲ πυρὶ ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς πειρᾶσαι, εἰ δύναιντο,—πνεύματος γενομένου,—ἐπιφλέξαι τὴν πόλιν, οὖσαν οὐ μεγάλην· πᾶσαν γὰρ δὴ ἰδέαν ἐπενόουν, εἴ πως σφίσιν ἄνευ δαπάνης καὶ πολιορκίας προσαχθείη. 3. φοροῦντες δὲ ὕλης φακέλλους, παρέβαλλον ἀπὸ τοῦ χώματος ἐς τὸ μεταξὺ πρῶτον τοῦ τείχους καὶ τῆς προσχώσεως, ταχὺ δὲ πλήρους γενομένου διὰ πολυχειρίαν, ἐπιπαρένησαν καὶ τῆς ἄλλης πόλεως ὅσον ἐδύναντο ἀπὸ τοῦ μετεώρου πλεῖστον ἐπισχεῖν. 4. ἐμβαλόντες δὲ πῦρ ξὺν θείῳ καὶ πίσσῃ ἧψαν τὴν ὕλην· καὶ ἐγένετο φλὸξ τοσαύτη, ὅσην οὐδείς πω ἔς γε ἐκεῖνον τὸν χρόνον χειροποίητον εἶδεν· ἤδη γὰρ ἐν ὄρεσιν ὕλη, τριφθεῖσα ὑπ' ἀνέμων πρὸς αὐτὴν, ἀπὸ ταὐτομάτου πῦρ καὶ φλόγα men from deserting, or wandering about the country, to the neglect of the irksome duties of the siege.

2. πειρᾶσαι, εἰ δύναιντο] On this syntax see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 526. Οὖσαν οὐ μεγάλην. Col. Leake, indeed, (North. Greece, vol. ii. p. 36) describes its site as of considerable size. But such terms as μέγας are merely comparative; and all that our author means is, that the city was not so large, but that, when set on fire, the flames of one part might, by a driving wind, be communicated to the opposite part.

πᾶσαν ἰδέαν ἐπενόουν] 'they turned in mind every device.' So Aristoph. Thesm. 436, πάσας δ' ἰδέας ἐξήτασεν· πάντα δ' ἐβάστασεν φρενί. On the term ἰδ. see supra, ch. 19, 1, and note. In the words following, ἄνευ δαπάνης καὶ πολιορκίας, there is an hendiadys; the sense being, 'without the expense which must be incurred during a long siege.' Προσαχθείη, 'would be brought over [to a surrender].'

3. ὕλης φακέλλους] 'fagots of brushwood.' The word φάκ. is derived from φακὸς, cognate with φασκὸς, fascis, fasciculus, a bundle. It is not unfrequently used of fire-wood. So Plut. Fab. Max. 6, φρυγάνων φακ. Eurip. Cycl. 241, φακ. ξύλων. Appian, ii. 169, φακ. ξύλων ἐς τὴν τάφρον ἐμβάλλων. Joseph. 208, φακ. ὕλης ξηρᾶς. Herodot. iv. 62, φρυγάνων φακ. Ὕλην is here, as at ch. 75, 2, equiv. to φρύγανα. Of παρέβαλλον the sense is, 'cast them one beside another.' Διὰ πολυχειρίαν, 'by the multitude of hands [employed]:' a phrase occurring also in Dionys. Hal. 1648. Dio Cass. 229, 19. Arrian, E. A. i. 21, 8. Polyb. viii. 5, 2, though διὰ πολυχειρίας is more usual. In προσχώσεως, mound, we have a rare word, though I have noted it in Joseph., as also πρόσχωμα in Æschyl. Prom. 872.

ἐπιπαρένησαν] 'heaped them side by side into,' &c. The word is peculiar to our author. The construction here is, as Goell. observes, ἐπιπαρένησαν καὶ τῆς ἄλλης πόλεως ὅσον πλεῖστον ἐδύναντο ἐπισχεῖν (reach) ἀπὸ τοῦ μετεώρου. He adds, that 'instead of the words as they now stand, we should rather have expected, ἐπιπαρένησαν φακέλλους καὶ ἐν τῇ ἄλλῃ πόλει ἐφ' ὅσον πλεῖστον ἐδύναντο ἐπισχεῖν, &c.' A similar mode of attack on a besieged city is mentioned in Bede, Hist. iii. 16; and such is said by Southey, Nav. Hist. of England, i. p. 111, to have been by no means unfrequent in the middle ages.

4. ἐμβαλόντες δὲ πῦρ, &c.] Compare similar passages in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 2028. Herodian, viii. 4, 26, and Polyæn. iv. 7, 4.

φλὸξ τοσαύτη, ὅσην — χειροποίητον] 'such a fire as had never yet been kindled by human hands.' Closely imitated from which are the words of Jos. Bell. Jud. iv. 3, 4, ἐξέλαμψε δὲ πῦρ τοσοῦτον, ὅσον οὐδὲ χειροποίητον ἱστόρησέ τις, οὔτε κατὰ βίαν πνευμάτων ὕλης πρὸς αὐτὸ (read αὐτὴν) παρατριβείσης αὐτομάτως ἐξεκρούσθη.

ἤδη γὰρ—ἀνῆκε] Render, 'For already (or heretofore) mountain-forests have taken fire, by the mutual attrition of dry branches agitated by winds, and have sent forth fire and flames of their own accord;' meaning, as Arnold observes, that 'such a fire produced by the power of man had never yet been witnessed; for, if we speak of natural conflagrations, such as of a mountain-forest catching fire, from the attrition of its boughs, owing to high winds, and bursting into a blaze, that has been known to happen.' Of the term αὐτόματος thus used, examples occur in Athen. p. 19, ὃς πῦρ τε αὐτόματον ἐποίει ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἀνῆκε. 5. τοῦτο δὲ μέγα τε ἦν, καὶ τοὺς Πλαταιέας, τἆλλα διαφυγόντας, ἐλαχίστου ἐδέησε διαφθεῖραι· ἐντὸς γὰρ πολλοῦ χωρίου τῆς πόλεως οὐκ ἦν πελάσαι, πνεῦμά τε εἰ ἐπεγένετο αὐτῇ ἐπίφορον, ὅπερ καὶ ἤλπιζον οἱ ἐναντίοι, οὐκ ἂν διέφυγον. 6. νῦν δὲ καὶ τόδε λέγεται ξυμβῆναι, ὕδωρ ἐξ οὐρανοῦ πολὺ καὶ βροντὰς γενομένας σβέσαι τὴν φλόγα, καὶ οὕτω παυθῆναι τὸν κίνδυνον.

LXXVIII. Οἱ δὲ Πελοποννήσιοι, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τούτου διήμαρτον, μέρος μέν τι καταλιπόντες τοῦ στρατοπέδου, [τὸ δὲ λοιπὸν ἀφέντες,] περιετείχιζον τὴν πόλιν κύκλῳ, διελόμενοι κατὰ πόλεις τὸ χωρίον· τάφρος δὲ ἐντός τε ἦν καὶ ἔξωθεν, ἐξ ἧς ἐπλινθεύσαντο. 2. καὶ, ἐπειδὴ πᾶν ἐξείργαστο περὶ ἀρκτούρου ἐπιτολάς, καταλιπόντες φύλακας τοῦ ἡμίσεος τείχους, (τὸ δὲ ἥμισυ Βοιωτοὶ ἐφύλασσον,) ἀνεχώρησαν τῷ στρατῷ, καὶ διελύθησαν κατὰ πόλεις. 3. Πλαταιῆς δὲ παῖδας μὲν καὶ γυναῖκας, καὶ τοὺς πρεσβυτάτους τε καὶ πλῆθος ἀναφύεσθαι, and 233, E, αὐτομάτως ὕλην ἐμπρησθείσης. Plut. Alex. 35, ἀπὸ ταὐτομάτου λάμψαι τι πῦρ. Animated is the description of Lucret. i. 896, in his versification of the present passage: 'At sæpe in magnis fit montibus, inquis, ut altis Arboribus vicina cacumina summa terantur Inter se, validis facere id cogentibus austris, Donec fulserunt flammæ fulgore coorto.'

5. ἐντὸς γὰρ — πελάσαι] With this Poppo compares a similar construction in Plat. Symp. 18, οὐδ' ἐντὸς πολλοῦ πλησιάζειν, and Dobree renders literally, 'there was no approaching the fire within a distance, which extended to a considerable part of the town.' Ἐπίφορον, just after, signifies driving, answering to vento ferente in Latin, and equiv. to ἐπιφερόμενον, 'borne strongly towards a certain object,' here meaning the city. So iii. 74, εἰ ἄνεμος ἐπεγένετο τῇ φλογὶ ἐπίφορος ἐς αὐτήν. The expression occurs also in Dionys. Hal., Appian, Plut., Pausan., and Lucian; though chiefly used absolutely in the sense favourable. Hence may be understood a most obscurely expressed passage of Æschyl. Choëph. 799, ξυλλάβοι δ' ἐνδίκως Παῖς ὁ Μαίας ἐπιφορώτατος Πρᾶξιν οὐρίαν θέλων, where read, with Burney, οὐ 'πιφορώτατος, and, for θέλων, read τ' ἐλῶν, 'and driving on the affair to a prosperous issue;' a naval metaphor taken from ναῦν ἐλαύνειν, adapted to the nautical one in ἐπιφ., which signifies propitious. I suspect, however, the true reading to be ἐπιφορώτατον. Point Μαίας, ἐπιφορώτατον πρᾶξιν οὐρίαν τ' ἐλῶν.

Ch. LXXVIII. 1. τὸ δὲ λοιπὸν ἀφέντες] These words are cancelled by Poppo, and bracketed by Goell. and Bekk. in his 1st edition. In his 2nd, for λοιπὸν, he edits, from three MSS., πλέον, which is adopted by Arnold: and certainly πλέον is far less objectionable than λοιπὸν, yet it savours of correction, and the clause itself is probably insititious. Neither can any good reason be given why it should have no place in so many of the best MSS.; probably it proceeded from some marginal Scholium.

διελόμενοι κατὰ πόλεις τὸ χωρίον] 'having divided the space [to be circumvallated] in proportion to [the size of] each state.' So infra vii. 19, 1, we have, Δεκ. ἐτείχιζον, κατὰ πόλεις διελόμενοι τὸ ἔργον. Xen. Hist. iii. 2, 10, ἐτείχιζε, κατὰ μέρη διελὼν τοῖς στρατιώταις τὸ χωρίον.

2. περὶ ἀρκτούρου ἐπιτολάς] Meaning, the ἐπιτολὴ ἑῴα, when it rises a little before sunrise, and so first becomes visible, after a period of forty days, during which it had been invisible, because it did not rise till after the sun. The first morning-rising of Arcturus fell nearly on the autumnal equinox, about Sept. 19th.

3. πλῆθος τὸ ἀχρεῖον] 'the useless population,' turba inutilis, i. e. ad bellum; what Diod. Sic. t. vi. 64, calls τὸν ἀχρεῖον ὄχλον, as also Xen. Anab. vi. 17. Hist. vii. 2, 18. Herodot. i. 194, and iii. 81, σὺν τῷ ἀχρηίῳ τοῦ στρατοῦ· and so Arrian, E. A. ii. 7, 6, and often. I have retained the common reading, ἀχρεῖον, (notwithstanding that Ha., Bekk., and Poppo, edit, from most of the MSS., ἄχρηστον,) such being defended by Herodot. i. 191 and 211. iii. 81, ὁμίλου ἀ., and several passages of our author, ii. 6, 40, τὸ ‡ ἀχρεῖον τῶν ἀνθρώπων πρότερον ἐκκεκομισμένοι ἦσαν ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας, αὐτοὶ δ' ἐπολιορκοῦντο ἐγκαταλελειμμένοι τετρακόσιοι, Ἀθηναίων δὲ ὀγδοήκοντα, γυναῖκες δὲ δέκα καὶ ἑκατὸν σιτοποιοί. 4. τοσοῦτοι ἦσαν οἱ ξύμπαντες ὅτε ἐς τὴν πολιορκίαν καθίσταντο· καὶ ἄλλος οὐδεὶς ἦν ἐν τῷ τείχει οὔτε δοῦλος οὔτε ἐλεύθερος. 5. τοιαύτη μὲν ἡ Πλαταιῶν πολιορκία κατεσκευάσθη.

LXXIX. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους, καὶ ἅμα τῇ τῶν Πλαταιῶν ἐπιστρατείᾳ, Ἀθηναῖοι δισχιλίοις ὁπλίταις ἑαυτῶν καὶ ἱππεῦσι διακοσίοις ἐστράτευσαν ἐπὶ Χαλκιδέας τοὺς ἐπὶ Θράκης καὶ Βοττιαίους ἀκμάζοντος τοῦ σίτου· ἐστρατήγει δὲ Ξενοφῶν ὁ Εὐριπίδου τρίτος αὐτός. 2. ἐλθόντες δὲ ὑπὸ Σπάρτωλον τὴν Βοττικὴν, τὸν σῖτον and 44. i. 74, 84, 93, and being probably read by Dio Cass., as appears by a passage evidently imitated from the present, p. 248, 77, τοὺς τε παῖδας, καὶ τὰς γυναῖκας, τῶν τε ἄλλων τοὺς ἀχρειοτάτους ἐξέβαλε. Considering, too, that it is used solely by Hom. and Herodot., and almost solely by the tragedians, there can be no doubt that it was the earlier Attic term, though ἄχρηστος soon came into use; yet not so as to supersede ἀχρεῖος. In restoring the old reading I have been followed by Goell. in his 2nd edition, and Bekk. in his 2nd. Utterly insufficient is the reason for still retaining ἄχρηστος, urged by Poppo, namely, that 'ἄχρηστος is equally good Greek;' for that will not prove that it was not of later Grecism, and the evidence that I have adduced serves to show that it was.

ἐκκεκομισμένοι] On this active sense of the part. pass., see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 493, and Blomf. on Æschyl. Ag. 252. In γυναῖκες — σιτοποιοὶ we have one of those expressions by which a part is used for the whole; these women discharging, we may suppose, other domestic duties; in short, (as appears from Diod. Sic. i. 584, and Polyæn. viii. 70,) employing themselves in carrying the food, arms, and ammunition to the ramparts, dressing wounds, nursing the sick, and ministering to the wants of both sick and well: see Eurip. Troad. 494. Hec. 366, and Herodot. vii. 187. In fixing the number of the women, the usual proportion, it seems, was one woman to four men; though in Herodot. iii. 150, it is related, that, at the siege of Babylon, one woman was assigned to each man. Their duties, even as bread-makers, were not a little laborious; for they had to grind the corn into flour before they made the bread, and that by a very rude and toilsome process,—namely, by hand-mills, composed of two huge stones: see my note on Matt. xxiv. 41. Hence it was sometimes a sole occupation. So in Hom. Od. xx. 105, γυνὴ ἀλετρὶς, and Pollux, vii. 180, μυλακρίδα τὴν ἀλῶσαν γυναῖκα ἔλεγον.

Ch. LXXIX. While the siege is in progress, the Athenians undertake an expedition, detailed in this chapter, against the revolted Chalcidians of Thrace.

1. τῇ τῶν Πλαταιῶν ἐπιστρατείᾳ] 'the expedition against the Platæans.' Of the term ἐπιστρ., which is rare, other examples are found in Herodot. ix. 3, and Jos. Ant. xvi. 10, 8. On this use of the genit. see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 367. Ἑαυτῶν, 'of their own people.' The word is not pleonastic, but has reference to certain forces not their own, probably the light troops of which we afterwards have mention.

ἀκμάζοντος τοῦ σίτου] Such expressions as this are relics of the phraseology of the very early ages, when certain times were rudely expressed by the great operations of nature, or by some agricultural work to be done at those times: insomuch that these formed a sort of rude shepherds' calendar, such as that so beautifully imagined in Shakspeare's Henry the Sixth. This method of speaking had, however, in our own language, grown so obsolete even in Shakspeare's time, that he puts it into the mouths of his low or rustic characters, such as Master Shallow.

2. ἐλθόντες ὑπὸ Σπάρτωλον] Not meaning 'to Spartolus,' but 'very near to it,' 'close by it,' 'under the walls.' So in Polyæn. iv. 6, we have, ὑπὸ τὴν B., and Pausan. iv. 34, 1, ὑπὸ τοῦ Π. τὸ στόμα. The expression is one derived from the Homeric ὑπὸ Ἴλιον, or ὑπὸ Τροίην, or πόλιν ἴέναι. On the situation of the plain in question, see my note in Transl.

‡ διέφθειραν. 3. ἐδόκει δὲ καὶ προσχωρήσειν ἡ πόλις ὑπό τινων ἔνδοθεν πρασσόντων. 4. προσπεμψάντων δὲ ἐς Ὄλυνθον τῶν οὐ ταῦτα βουλομένων, ὁπλῖταί τε ἦλθον καὶ στρατιὰ ἐς φυλακήν· ἧς ἐπεξελθούσης ἐκ τῆς Σπαρτώλου, ἐς μάχην καθίστανται οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι πρὸς αὐτῇ τῇ πόλει. 5. καὶ οἱ μὲν ὁπλῖται τῶν Χαλκιδέων καὶ ἐπίκουροί τινες μετ' αὐτῶν νικῶνται ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ ἀναχωροῦσιν ἐς τὴν Σπάρτωλον· οἱ δὲ ἱππῆς τῶν Χαλκιδέων καὶ ψιλοὶ νικῶσι τοὺς τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἱππέας καὶ ψιλούς. 6. εἶχον δέ τινας οὐ πολλοὺς πελταστὰς ἐκ τῆς Κρουσίδος γῆς καλουμένης· ἄρτι δὲ τῆς μάχης γεγενημένης, ἐπιβοηθοῦσιν ἄλλοι πελτασταὶ ἐκ τῆς Ὀλύνθου. 7. καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Σπαρτώλου ψιλοὶ ὡς εἶδον, θαρσήσαντες τοῖς τε προσγιγνομένοις καὶ ὅτι πρότερον οὐχ ἡσσῶντο, ἐπιτίθενται αὖθις, μετὰ τῶν Χαλκιδέων ἱππέων καὶ τῶν προσβοηθησάντων, τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις· καὶ ἀναχωροῦσι πρὸς τὰς δύο τάξεις ἃς κατέλιπον παρὰ τοῖς σκευοφόροις. 8. καὶ ὁπότε μὲν ἐπίοιεν οἱ

For διέφθειραν six good MSS. have διέφθειρον, more agreeable to the sense intended to be expressed by the verb; which must (as another, supra ii. 5, ἐπεβούλευον τοῖς ἔξω) denote action commenced, but not completed; for the work of destruction would soon be interrupted by the arrival of the troops from Olynthus; Spartolus being but a little way from thence to the north, as we are informed by Col. Leake, North. Gr. vol. iii. p. 456. Hence I would observe, that in Isæus, p. 55, 18, φυλαρχῶν τῆς Ὀλυσίας ἐν Σπαρτώλῳ, for Ὀλυσίας ought doubtless to be read Ὀλυνθίας: a passage thus serving to attest the near vicinity of Spartolus to Olynthus.

3. ὑπό τινων ἔνδοθεν πρασσόντων] 'by means of certain persons within the place who practised (i. e. held negociations) with the enemy.' Comp. iv. 89 & 132. viii. 49.

4. προσπεμψάντων] 'would come over to terms of surrender:' a signification frequent in our author. With the words following, τῶν οὐ ταῦτα βουλ., 'those who were not of that mind,' lit. 'did not wish those things [to be],' compare vi. 80, τὰ Σ. βουλόμενοι. Of nearly the same kind is that expression at viii. 92, πλὴν ὅσοις μὴ βουλομένοις ταῦτα ἦν: which passage confirms the emendation here of the recent editors, οὐ for μὴ, from most of the MSS.; the μὴ being only suitable to what is conditional, as there; the οὐ, to what is positive and actual, as in the present case.

καὶ στρατιὰ] This must mean other forces, namely, light-armed, or rather, targeteers; for it is, a little after, (§ 6,) said that other targeteers came to their assistance from Olynthus.

6. εἶχον δέ] It is not agreed what is the subject of this verb, whether the Athenians, (as Dukas, Haack, and Goell. suppose,) or, as Port., Poppo, and Goell. in his 2nd edit. make it, the Chalcideans and their allies. The latter is the more probable; for, not to mention that Crusis was a territory hostile to the Athenians, and therefore not likely to furnish them with targeteers, no other than οἱ Χαλκιδεῖς can well be the subject; since, as Poppo justly argues, 'mox verba ἄλλοι πελτασταὶ superioribus οὐ πολλοὺς πελταστὰς respondere clarissime apparet, ἄλλους πελταστὰς autem Olynthiorum ideoque Chalcidensium esse dubitatione caret; ergo ad eosdem οὐ πολλοὺς πελταστὰς referendum esse intelligitur.'

7. τοῖς προσγιγνομένοις] 'the accession of new forces.'

πρότερον οὐχ ἡσσῶντο] Nothing seems to have been before said of these light-armed troops from Spartolus; yet, however obscurely he has expressed himself, our author must certainly mean the τῶν Χαλκιδέων ψιλοὶ mentioned at § 5, who are here called ἐκ τῆς Σπαρτώλου, because they had made their sally from thence: a view, this, perfectly consistent with the words οὐχ ἡσσῶντο, which may very well mean, by a frequent meiosis, 'came off rather victors,' as it is said at § 5. In οἱ ψιλοὶ we have, as Arnold observes, a general term including all foot-soldiers not ὁπλῖται, whether πελτασταὶ, τοξόται, ἀκοντισταὶ, or only λιθοβόλοι. At ἀναχωροῦσι, a little after, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι must certainly be the subject; though perspicuity would rather have required οἳ ἀναχ.

Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐνεδίδοσαν· ἀποχωροῦσι δὲ ἐνέκειντο καὶ ἐσηκόντιζον. 9. οἵ τε ἱππῆς τῶν Χαλκιδέων προσιππεύοντες, ᾗ δοκοῖ προσέβαλλον, καὶ οὐχ ἥκιστα φοβήσαντες, ἔτρεψαν τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, καὶ ἐπεδίωξαν ἐπὶ πολύ. 10. καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς τὴν Ποτίδαιαν καταφεύγουσι, καὶ ὕστερον τοὺς νεκροὺς ὑποσπόνδους κομισάμενοι, ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας ἀναχωροῦσι τῷ περιόντι τοῦ στρατοῦ· ἀπέθανον δὲ αὐτῶν τριάκοντα καὶ τετρακόσιοι, καὶ οἱ στρατηγοὶ πάντες. 11. οἱ δὲ Χαλκιδῆς καὶ οἱ Βοττιαῖοι τροπαῖόν τε ἔστησαν, καὶ τοὺς νεκροὺς τοὺς αὐτῶν ἀνελόμενοι, διελύθησαν κατὰ πόλεις.

LXXX. Τοῦ δ' αὐτοῦ θέρους, οὐ πολλῷ ὕστερον τούτων, Ἀμπρακιῶται καὶ Χάονες, βουλόμενοι Ἀκαρνανίαν πᾶσαν καταστρέψασθαι καὶ Ἀθηναίων ἀποστῆσαι, πείθουσι Λακεδαιμονίους ναυτικόν τε παρασκευάσασθαι ἐκ τῆς ξυμμαχίδος, καὶ ὁπλίτας χιλίους πέμψαι ἐς Ἀκαρνανίαν· λέγοντες ὅτι, ἢν ναυσὶ καὶ πεζῷ ἅμα μετὰ σφῶν ἔλθωσιν, ἀδυνάτων ὄντων ξυμβοηθεῖν τῶν ἀπὸ θαλάσσης Ἀκαρνάνων, ῥᾳδίως ἂν Ἀκαρνανίαν σχόντες, καὶ τῆς Ζακύνθου καὶ Κεφαλληνίας κρατήσουσι, καὶ ὁ περίπλους οὐκέτι ἔσοιτο Ἀθηναίοις ὁμοίως περὶ Πελοπόννησον· ἐλπίδα δ' εἶναι καὶ Ναύπακτον λαβεῖν. 2. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, πεισθέντες, Κνῆμον μὲν, ναύαρχον ἔτι ὄντα, καὶ τοὺς ὁπλίτας ἐπὶ ναυσὶν ὀλίγαις εὐθὺς πέμπουσι, τῷ δὲ ναυτικῷ περιήγγειλαν παρασκευασαμένῳ ὡς τάχιστα πλεῖν ἐς Λευκάδα.

9. ᾗ δοκοῖ] A frequent phrase, with which Poppo compares ubi videretur in Latin.

CH. LXXX. Our historian now details an expedition sent out, soon after that of the Athenians to Chalcidice, by the Spartans to the western coast of Greece, in order to destroy the Athenian power there, by crushing or annoying her allies, especially the Acarnanians, from their position and power the most influential. This they attempted by the aid of the Ambraciots and some barbarian allies. See supra ch. 68, and notes, whence will appear the origin of the connexion of the Acarnanians with Athens.

1. ξυμβοηθεῖν] 'to muster for defence,' as Xen. Hist. vii. 4, 27. Polyb. iv. 67, 4. Aristoph. Lysist. 247, οὔκουν ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ξυμβοηθήσειν οἴει τοὺς ἄνδρας εὐθύς. Dio Cass. 217, 88.

In τῶν ἀπὸ θαλάσσης the ἀπὸ does not signify 'away from,' but 'of,' or 'belonging to.' Or there may be, as Goell. supposes, a blending of these two senses; the whole, he thinks, standing for τῶν παρὰ θαλάσσῃ Ἀκ. ἀπὸ θαλάσσης ξυμβοηθεῖν ἀδυνάτων ὄντων.

ὁμοῖος] For this Bekk. in his 2nd edit. substitutes, from one MS., ὁμοίως, which yields a plainer, but a less forcible, sense Render, 'like what it had been.' Similar is the use of the word at iii. 40, 4, where Thiersch, as uncritically as Bekk. here, would read ὁμοίως: though, as I have shown, such, while it clears the construction, enervates the strength of the sentence.

2. ναύαρχον ἔτι ὄντα] Though the office of admiral (one of considerable power and dignity) was held only for a year, (see viii. 20 & 85. Xen. Hist. i. 6, 1,) yet that the period was sometimes prolonged, has been shown by Manso, Spart. ii. p. 282. And indeed it would seem that Cnemus and Alcidas each held the office for two years, not so much, as Arnold conjectures, 'because the Spartans wished their admirals to gain more experience than they could acquire within the short space of a year,' but rather, from the extreme inconvenience of having the supreme command so often changed in a maritime war so prolonged, as that which they must have anticipated with Athens.

τῷ δὲ ναυτικῷ περιήγγειλαν παρασκευασαμένῳ] lit. 'they sent round orders to their navy to prepare itself [for action] and sail:' a usual figure of speech, by which the ships stand for the sailors.

3. ἦσαν δὲ Κορίνθιοι ξυμπροθυμούμενοι μάλιστα τοῖς Ἀμπρακιώταις, ἀποίκοις οὖσι. 4. καὶ τὸ μὲν ναυτικὸν ἔκ τε Κορίνθου καὶ Σικυῶνος καὶ τῶν ταύτῃ χωρίων ἐν παρασκευῇ ἦν· τὸ δ' ἐκ Λευκάδος καὶ Ἀνακτορίου καὶ Ἀμπρακίας, πρότερον ἀφικόμενον, ἐν Λευκάδι περιέμενε. 5. Κνῆμος δὲ καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ χίλιοι ὁπλῖται, ἐπειδὴ ἐπεραιώθησαν λαθόντες Φορμίωνα,—ὃς ἦρχε τῶν εἴκοσι νεῶν τῶν Ἀττικῶν αἱ περὶ Ναύπακτον ἐφρούρουν,—εὐθὺς παρεσκευάζοντο τὴν κατὰ γῆν στρατείαν. 6. καὶ αὐτῷ παρῆσαν Ἑλλήνων μὲν Ἀμπρακιῶται καὶ Λευκάδιοι καὶ Ἀνακτόριοι, καὶ οὓς αὐτὸς ἔχων ἦλθε χίλιοι Πελοποννησίων, βάρβαροι δὲ Χάονες χίλιοι ἀβασίλευτοι,—ὧν ἡγοῦντο ‡ἐπ' ἐτησίῳ προστασίᾳ ἐκ τοῦ ἀρχικοῦ γένους Φώτιος καὶ Νικάνωρ,—ἐστρατεύοντο δὲ μετὰ Χαόνων καὶ Θεσπρωτοὶ ἀβασίλευτοι. 7. Μολοσσοὺς δὲ ἦγε καὶ Ἀτιντᾶνας Σαβύλινθος, ἐπίτροπος

3. ἦσαν ξυμπροθυμούμενοι] lit. 'had been zealous or active with them in supporting them,' i. e. their cause. This use is rare; and the only examples of it with the dat. that I have noticed, are Lucian, iii. 251, and Diod. Sic. vi. 111, and even there the dat. is one of thing, not of person, as here. The full sense of the expression is, 'to be zealous with any one, for the attainment of any object;' 'to enter into his views,' and, by implication, 'to aid him therein; help him to bring it about.' Hence the verb sometimes carries an accus. of thing, as viii. 1, and Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, 19.

6. οὓς αὐτὸς ἔχων ἦλθε] lit. 'whom he came, having under his command.'

The position ἦλθεν ἔχων (found in some MSS.) is supported by parallel passages at i. 9, and viii. 8. Yet, in an author so studious of variety, the argument thence deduced may be considered rather specious than conclusive: and as to the MSS. in question, they are of no weight.

For vulg. ἐπ' ἐτησίῳ, Poppo, from some MSS. and Dio Cass., edits ἐπετησίῳ; while Bekk. and Goell. retain the former; very properly; for, supposing each reading to be equally good, more likely was it that ἐπ' ἐτ. should pass into ἐπετ. than the contrary; and yet the MSS. present almost without exception ἐπ' ἐτ. Again, though the sense of ἐπετησίῳ προστασίᾳ, 'by or with an annual chieftainship,' be not objectionable, more definite and significant is that yielded by ἐπ' ἐτησίῳ προστ., namely, that Photius and Nicanor being of the reigning family,—that which enjoyed the exclusive possession of authority,—were holding rule on the condition that they should hold it for a year, and then vacate it to others of the family. Similarly as in the case of Eteocles and Polynices, of whom it is said in Eurip. Phœn. 69, Ξυμβάντ' ἔταξαν, τὸν νεώτερον πάρος Φεύγειν ἑκόντα τήνδε Πολυνείκην χθόνα, Ἐτεοκλέα δὲ σκῆπτρ' ἔχειν μένοντα γῆς Ἐνιαυτὸν ἀλλάσσοντ'. In either passage condition and interchange are the prominent ideas. In illustration of the taking of the chief magistrates or rulers from one family, Goell. compares the like privilege once enjoyed by the Alcmæonidæ at Athens, the Bacchiadæ at Corinth, and the Aleuadæ and Scopadæ in Thessaly.

Φώτιος] For this Bekk. and Goell. read, from a few MSS., Φώτυος. But there is, as far as I know, no vestige existing of such a name in all antiquity, and indeed it is strongly discountenanced by analogy; the termination —υος being, I believe, no where found. Hence I have, with Poppo, retained the common reading.

7. Ἀτιντᾶνας] So I read, with the recent editors, for Ἀτιτᾶνας, not only because this is supported by respectable MS. authority, but because I find it confirmed by Aristot., Polyb., Appian, Lycophr., Steph. Byz., Polyæn., Livy, and Pliny. On the situation of this tribe, as well as that of the Παραύαιοι, the Μολοσσοί, and the Ὀρέσται, see Cramer's Greece, vol. i. sect. 3. Poppo's Proleg. Niebuhr's Rom. Hist. vol. iii. p. 525, seqq., and Leake's North. Gr. iv. 113, seqq. Suffice it here to say, that the Molossians lived to the east of the Thesprotians, and their territory extended south as far as the Ambracian gulf. The Parauæi were settled, as their name indicates, on the river Aous, near its source, and under the chain of mountains which divide Epirus from Thessaly. The Orestæ are said by Arnold to have lived along the Ceraunian mountains, the chain which divides Macedonia from Epirus. See more precise information on these several tribes, in Leake's North. Gr. vol. iv. p. 121, seqq.

9. ὕστερον ἦλθον] 'arrived too late [to render service].' So ὕστερον ἦκον infra vii. 27, (where, as here, it stands for ὕστεροι ἦκειν.) Æschyl. Ag. 1656, ὕστερος ἐλθὴ τοῦ σημείου. Hom. Il. Σ. ὕστερος ἐλθών.

10. διὰ τῆς Ἀργείας] Meaning the territory of the Argos Amphilochicum, on which see Kruse's Hellas, vol. iii. 334, and Leake's North. Gr., ubi supra.

Στράτον] So called, I imagine, as being the camp, or place of muster, for the armed population of Acarnania. No wonder is it that this should have been the capital of Acarnania, since it was placed (as Colonel Leake shows, North. Gr. i. 138) in a most commanding situation, a military position of considerable importance. 'Being (says he) situated at the point where the valley of Lepenu meets that of the Achelous, and where they both open into the great Ætolian plain, it commanded two of the principal approaches to that plain from the north, and was not far removed from a third, of little less importance:' which was probably in the mind of our author when he wrote, a little after, νομίζοντες, εἰ ταύτην πρώτην λάβοιεν, ῥᾳδίως ἂν σφίσι τἆλλα προσχωρήσειν.

ἂν — προσχωρήσειν] For examples of ἂν with the fut., see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 598, a, and § 599, d.

CH. LXXXI. 2. τέλη] 'divisions.' See Valckn. on Herodot. ix. 23, and Wachsmuth's Antiq. Gr. i. 1, p. 327.

3. μέσον ἔχοντες Χάονες] As a mode of accounting for the omission here of the article, it is sufficient to say, that the term μέσος is so definite, when used in describing a position, as not to need the article. In the words following, καὶ οἱ μετὰ τούτων, the τούτων is by Haack understood of the Œniadæ, who, he says, joined the expedition, as appears from the following chapter. But it would rather seem that the Œniadæ only joined Cnemus after his repulse at Stratus: 'an opinion,' as Arnold observes, 'supported by the words employed in the above-mentioned portion; as also by the circumstance of no previous mention having been made of them.' 'The words οἱ μετὰ τούτων would then (he adds) be equiv. to οἱ ξύμμοροι αὐτοῖς (scil. τοῖς Θηβαίοις) at iv. 93, and denote the Perioeci of the Leucadian peninsula, who were not Leucadian citizens, and those also of Anactorium.' On the various kinds of the Perioeci, see Wachsm. Antiq. Gr i. 1, p. 160.

οἱ μετὰ τούτων, ἐν ἀριστερᾷ δὲ Κνῆμος καὶ οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι καὶ Ἀμπρακιῶται· διεῖχον δὲ πολὺ ἀπ' ἀλλήλων, καὶ ἔστιν ὅτε οὐδὲ ἐωρῶντο. 4. καὶ οἱ μὲν Ἕλληνες τεταγμένοι τε προσῄεσαν καὶ διὰ φυλακῆς ἔχοντες ἕως ἐστρατοπεδεύσαντο ἐν ἐπιτηδείῳ· οἱ δὲ Χάονες, σφίσι τε αὐτοῖς πιστεύοντες, καὶ ἀξιούμενοι ὑπὸ τῶν ἐκείνῃ ἠπειρωτῶν μαχιμώτατοι εἶναι, οὔ τ' ἐπέσχον τὸ στρατόπεδον καταλαβεῖν, χωρήσαντές τε ῥύμῃ μετὰ τῶν ἄλλων βαρβάρων, ἐνόμισαν αὐτοβοεὶ ἂν τὴν πόλιν ἑλεῖν, καὶ αὐτῶν τὸ ἔργον γενέσθαι. 5. γνόντες δ' αὐτοὺς οἱ Στράτιοι ἔτι προσιόντας, καὶ ἡγησάμενοι, μεμνωμένων εἰ κρατήσειαν, οὐκ ἂν ἔτι σφίσι τοὺς Ἕλληνας ὁμοίως προσελθεῖν, προλοχίζουσι τὰ περὶ τὴν πόλιν ἐνέδραις, καὶ ἐπειδὴ ἐγγὺς ἦσαν, ἔκ τε τῆς πόλεως ὁμόσε χωρήσαντες καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἐνεδρῶν, προσπίπτουσι. 6. καὶ ἐς φόβον καταστάντων διαφθείρονταί τε πολλοὶ τῶν Χαόνων, καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι βάρβαροι ὡς εἶδον αὐτοὺς ἐνδόντας, οὐκέτι ὑπέμειναν, ἀλλ' ἐς φυγὴν κατέστησαν. 7. τῶν δὲ Ἑλληνικῶν στρατοπέδων οὐδέτερον ἤσθετο τῆς μάχης, διὰ τὸ πολὺ προελθεῖν αὐτούς, καὶ στρατόπεδον οἰηθῆναι καταληψομένους ἐπείγεσθαι. 8. ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐνέκειντο φεύγοντες οἱ βάρβαροι, ἀνελάμβανόν τε αὐτούς, καὶ ξυναγαγόντες τὰ στρατόπεδα, ἡσύχαζον αὐτοῦ τὴν ἡμέραν, ἐς χεῖρας ἐστρατοπεδεύσαντο ἐν ἐπιτηδείῳ] Both the Greeks and Romans always chose an encampment, even for a night, with singular care. Of the words a little after, οὔ τ' ἐπέσχον τὸ στρατόπεδον καταλαβεῖν, the sense is, 'did not stay to occupy their encampment,' viz. that which they were expected to occupy.

4. διὰ φυλακῆς ἔχοντες] scil. ἑαυτοὺς, 'keeping on their guard;' as vii. 8.

ῥύμῃ] Though almost every MS. of consideration has ῥώμῃ, yet that authority will weigh less in the case of words so perpetually confounded as ῥώμη and ῥύμη, than suitableness to the context, which here, as at ch. 76, demands ῥύμῃ, in the sense impetu: a reading supported (besides other passages) by Heliod. iv. 4, τοῦ δρόμου τὴν ῥύμην: and Pollux, iv. 90, ῥύμῃ πολλῇ καὶ δρόμῳ.

αὐτοβοεί] 'on the first onset,' or, 'by a coup-de-main.' So in Livy, i. 11, we have, 'primo impetu et clamore:' and vi. 4, 'primo clamore atque impetu.'

5. ὁμοίως] i. e. 'with equal alacrity.' Προλοχίζουσι—ἐνέδραις, 'they beset the ground around the city with ambuscades.' In προλοχ. we have a customary and conventional term, as appears from various examples adduced in the note on iii. 111: though in few of these passages have we the accus. of thing, as here and in Dio Cass. 228, 83, and Herodot. v. 121. The present expression, προλοχ. τὰ ἐνέδραις, (which involves a sort of redundancy. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 636,) is so rare, that I know of no example elsewhere except in Procop. 80, 43, προλοχίσας οἰκίσκους τινὰς ἐνέδραις: and 58, 40, ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ προλοχίζεσθαι τὰς δυσχωρίας ἐνέδρας (read ἐνέδραις) τισὶ, &c.

ὁμόσε χωρήσαντες — προσπίπτ.] 'they closed with and engaged with them.'

7. στρατοπέδων] Called camps because the columns in question had encamped apart, and were going to occupy separate encampments. Of the words, a little after, καὶ στρατόπεδον—ἐπείγεσθαι, the sense is, 'and because they (i. e. the Greeks) thought they (i. e. the Barbarians) had hastened forward to occupy any encampment.'

8. ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐνέκειντο] 'but when they (i. e. the Barbarians) came pressing upon them in their flight.' The word is always used elsewhere of the pursuers, not the pursued.

ἀνελάμβανον] 'received them into protection.' So bk. v. αὐτοὺς ἀναλαβὼν ἦγε: and Plutarch ap. Steph. Thes. ἀναλ. στρατιώτας, colligere dispersos et recipere ad se. In nearly the same sense the word occurs in Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 19. Hist. iv. 8, 11.

LXXXII. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ νὺξ ἐγένετο, ἀναχωρήσας ὁ Κνῆμος τῇ στρατιᾷ κατὰ τάχος ἐπὶ τὸν Ἄναπον ποταμόν,—ὃς ἀπέχει σταδίους ὀγδοήκοντα Στράτου,—τούς τε νεκροὺς κομίζεται τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ ὑποσπόνδους, καὶ Οἰνιαδῶν ξυμπαραγενομένων κατὰ φιλίαν, ἀναχωρεῖ παρ' αὐτοὺς πρὶν τὴν ξυμβοήθειαν ἐλθεῖν· κἀκεῖθεν ἐπ' οἴκου ἀπῆλθον ἕκαστοι. 2. οἱ δὲ Στράτιοι τροπαῖον ἔστησαν τῆς μάχης τῆς πρὸς τοὺς βαρβάρους.

LXXXIII. Τὸ δ' ἐκ τῆς Κορίνθου καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ξυμμάχων τῶν ἐκ τοῦ Κρισαίου κόλπου ναυτικὸν,—ὃ ἔδει παραγενέσθαι τῷ Κνήμῳ, ὅπως μὴ ξυμβοηθῶσιν οἱ ἀπὸ θαλάσσης ἄνω Ἀκαρνᾶνες,—οὐ παραγίγνεται, ἀλλ' ἠναγκάσθησαν περὶ τὰς αὐτὰς ἡμέρας τῆς ἐν Στράτῳ μάχης ναυμαχῆσαι πρὸς Φορμίωνα καὶ τὰς εἴκοσι ναῦς τῶν Ἀθηναίων αἳ ἐφρούρουν ἐν Ναυπάκτῳ. 2. ὁ γὰρ Φορμίων παραπλέοντας αὐτοὺς ἔξω τοῦ κόλπου ἐτήρει, βουλόμενος ἐν τῇ εὐρυχωρίᾳ ἄνευ ὅπλων κινηθῆναι] 'to stir from the camp, (namely, to procure necessaries,) without arms;' meaning, without their shields and defensive armour: a hardship, this; since for such service the light-armed were alone fit.

CH. LXXXIII. The writer now takes up the thread of the narrative broken off at ch. 80, 3.

1. ὃ ἔδει παραγενέσθαι τῷ Κνήμῳ] Render, 'which ought to have joined Cnemus.' So vi. 56, ἔδει ἄρξαι αὐτοὺς, 'compositum erat,' 'convenerat:' and vii. 27, οὓς ἔδει ξυμπλεῖν: v. 15, ἐν ᾗ ἔδει ξυνιόντας—βουλεύεσθαι. In short, the term carries with it a sense of duty or obligation arising from the being bound by engagement of some kind or other: a sense, indeed, naturally springing from that notion of binding inherent in its root δέω. Thus δεῖ μοι τοῦτο ποιῆσαι means literally, 'there is a bond or obligation upon me to do this.' In the words following, ὅπως μὴ ξυμβοηθῶσιν οἱ ἀπὸ θαλάσσης ἄνω Ἀκαρνᾶνες, there is, as Herm. (cited in Poppo) observes, a brief and condensed form of expression for ὅπως μὴ οἱ παρὰ θαλάσσῃ Ἀκ. ἀπὸ θαλάσσης ἄνω ξυμβοηθῶσιν: as supra, ch. 80, 1, ἀδυνάτων ὄντων ξυμβοηθεῖν τῶν ἀπὸ θαλάσσης Ἀ.

2. παραπλέοντας αὐτοὺς ἔξω τοῦ κόλπου ἐτήρει] A certain difficulty here exists, connected with the words ἔξω τοῦ κόλπου, which, if construed (as it would seem they ought) with ἐτήρει, would yield a sense not borne out by facts; for Phormio was watching the Peloponnesian fleet from the inside, not the outside, of the mouth of the gulf: and if construed with παραπλέοντας, they yield a most awkward sense. Again, reading, with Poppo, for ἔνδον, ἔσω, we shall have Greek any thing but Attic, and the sense arising will be not a little feeble and inept: for Phormio's intention was evidently to watch the time when the fleet should have passed through the mouth of the gulf, and be bending their course, as he supposed they would, across to the coast of Acarnania. The best mode of obviating the difficulty is, with Goeller, to take παραπλέοντας as a verbum prægnans for παραπλέοντας καὶ πλέοντας: as at vi. 90, μὴ διαφύγοιεν ἔξω τοῦ κέρως, where see note. Moreover, the sense of ἐτήρει is not 'he watched them,' but 'he watched for them,' viz. their sailing; as infra iii. 22, τηρήσαντες νύκτα χειμέριον. Thus the present is a highly condensed form of expression for 'he watched their sailing along the coast of Achaia, and waited for them sailing outside of the gulf,' intending, as it is added, to attack them in the open space, when crossing over to Acarnania. Phormio watched for the time when they were sailing out of the gulf,—meaning, whatever course they might take, to intercept them midway; and as they coasted along to Patræ, he might easily, with better sailing,

ἐν τῇ εὐρυχωρίᾳ] 'in the open space,' alto mare, as in Arrian, E. A. ii. 6, 3. vii. 6, 5. Pol. xii. 19, 6, et al.

3. οὐχ ὡς—παρεσκευασμένοι] So I read, with all the recent editors, for ὡς οὐκ, and ναυμαχίᾳ, not only because of MS. authority, but from parallel passages at ch. 85, 86, and 89, and at Dio Cass. 625, 66. The reading ναυμαχίᾳ may, however, be defended; and in Arrian, E. A. ii. 18, 9, we have both constructions: ἅ τε (I read ἅτε, quippe) ἐπ' ἐργασίᾳ μᾶλλόν τι ἢ ὡς ἐς μάχην ἐσταλμένοι. This, however, rather proves, that though both the accus. and the dat. may be used after the ἐπὶ taken by itself, yet when united with ὡς the dat. only was employed. There is a harshness in the use of στρατιωτικώτερον for ἐπὶ στρατείαν, as corresponding to ναυμαχίαν. But Thucyd. is fond of the unusual; and indeed in στρατ. there is an allusion to ναυτικώτερον, which is included in ἐπὶ ναυμαχίαν. Compare the words infra ch. 87, 2, οὐχὶ ἐς ναυμαχίαν μᾶλλον ἢ ἐπὶ στρατείαν, namely, from their ships being encumbered with troops for the invasion of Acarnania.

ἀντιπαραπλέοντας] 'coasting along the shore opposite.' In the words following, παρὰ γῆν σφῶν κομιζομένων, 'as they themselves were proceeding along shore,' we have a gen. absol. for nomin. of partic. (see Poppo, Prol. i. 119,) as at iii. 13, and viii. 76. So, just after, we have, ἐκ Πατρῶν—ἐπὶ Ἀκαρνανίας, 'as they were crossing over from Patræ,' &c.

καὶ οὐκ ἔλαθον νυκτὸς ὑφορμισάμενοι] Of these words I am now, on full consideration, inclined to adopt the interpretation proposed by Port., Haack, and Poppo, 'et quum ii (Peloponnesii) non clam Atheniensibus portum cepissent noctu.' The Peloponnesians had, it is said, not escaped the malice of the enemy, while bringing to, during the night, at Patræ. I cannot agree with Arnold in adopting Haack's interpretation of ὑφορμ., namely, 'clam appellere ad littus.' The ὑπὸ certainly does not signify clam, any more than sub in Latin does in the phrase navem subducere. In either case the preposition has reference to something in the operation of hawling to shore, or out of port: and so we have ὑφόρμισις, in the Anthol. Gr., used to denote anchorage. Indeed in the passage of Polyb. iii. 19, 8, (cited by Arn.) ὑφορμοῦντα can only bear the sense stationem habere, 'to lie at anchor;' as also at xxxiv. 3, 1.

λεπτὰ πλοῖα] 'light barks.' Διὰ βραχέος, for δι' ὀλίγου, 'exiguo ex intervallo,' namely, as Dukas observes, 'from the centre to the circumference.' For vulg. προσπίπτοιεν, Haack and Poppo read, from several MSS., προσπλέοιεν, regarding the former as a mere interpretation of πῃ ‡ προσπίπτοιεν οἱ ἐναντίοι. LXXXIV. Οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι, κατὰ μίαν ναῦν τεταγμένοι, περιέπλεον αὐτοὺς κύκλῳ καὶ ξυνῆγον ἐς ὀλίγον, ἐν χρῷ ἀεὶ παραπλέοντες, καὶ δόκησιν παρέχοντες αὐτίκα ἐμβαλεῖν· προείρητο δ' αὐτοῖς ὑπὸ Φορμίωνος μὴ ἐπιχειρεῖν πρὶν ἂν αὐτὸς σημήνῃ. 2. ἤλπιζε γὰρ αὐτῶν οὐ μενεῖν τὴν τάξιν, ὥσπερ ἐν γῇ πεζῇ, ἀλλὰ ξυμπεσεῖσθαι πρὸς ἀλλήλας τὰς ναῦς, καὶ τὰ πλοῖα ταραχὴν παρέξειν, εἴ τ' ἐκπνεύσαι ἐκ τοῦ κόλπου τὸ πνεῦμα,—ὅπερ ἀναμένων τε περιέπλει καὶ εἰώθει γίγνεσθαι ἐπὶ τὴν ἕω,—οὐδένα χρόνον ἡσυχάσειν αὐτούς· καὶ τὴν ἐπιχείρησιν ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ τε ἐνόμιζεν εἶναι ὁπόταν βούληται,—τῶν νεῶν ἄμεινον πλεουσῶν,—καὶ τότε καλλίστην γίγνεσθαι. 3. ὡς δὲ τό τε πνεῦμα κατῄει, καὶ αἱ νῆες, ἐν ὀλίγῳ ἤδη οὖσαι, ὑπ' ἀμφοτέρων, τοῦ τε ἀνέμου τῶν τε πλοίων ἅμα προσκειμένων, ἐταράσσοντο, καὶ ναῦς τε νηῒ προσέπιπτε, καὶ τοῖς κοντοῖς διωθοῦντο, βοῇ τε χρώμενοι καὶ πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἀντιφυλακῇ a more difficult term. Far more probable, however, is it that προσπλέοιεν is either an error of the scribes, arising from the ξυνέπλει, πλεούσας, and ἐκπλέοιεν preceding, or an alteration proceeding from certain critics who did not perceive the force of the expression προσπίπτοιεν, which may be paralleled by our now vulgar phrase, to fall foul of. Finally, by the above reading a most offensive tautology would be incurred, and a feeble sense would arise. I have, therefore, with Bekk. and Goell., retained the common reading, especially as the term occurs infra ch. 84.

ἐν χρῷ ἀεὶ παραπ.] 'perpetually brushing past them, and grazing them.' The sense here is the same as in ἐν χρῷ ἀεὶ παραπλέοντας in Procopius, cited by Abresch. To which I add Procop. p. 31, 18, ἐν χρῷ ἀλλήλοις (for ὑπ' ἀλλήλων) ξυναγόμενοι. Arrian, Ind. 31, 4. Appian, ii. 819. Dio Cass. 686, 26. 628, 86. Pollux, i. 113. The idiom is derived from ἐν χρῷ κείρω, or ξύρω, to cut to the quick, as Hdot. iv. 175.

2. ὅπερ ἀναμένων, &c.] A similarly adroit manœuvre was resorted to by Themistocles, at the battle of Salamis. See Plut. Themist. ch. 14. So also Camill. 34, ὅθεν εἰώθει μάλιστα προσπίπτειν ὁ ἄνεμος—ἀνέμεινε τὴν ὥραν. The wind here spoken of is the land-wind, which at day-break succeeds the sea-wind, that usually prevails in the night.

ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ] 'in his own power.' The words following, ὁπόταν βούληται, are explanatory of the present. Imitated from the present is a passage of Onosand. Strat. c. xii. p. 63, ἐὰν μὲν γὰρ ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ νομίζῃ, τὸ ὅτε βούλεται τὸ στράτευμα πρὸς μάχην ἐκτάττειν εἶναι: where, for τὸ ὅτε, read τε ὅτε, taken as put for ὅτε τε.

3. ὡς τὸ πνεῦμα κατῄει] Meaning either, 'when the wind blew from the land,' as opposed to that from the sea; or, supposing another particular here brought, as it were, into the picture, we may render, 'when the wind came down upon them and caught them,' (as it is said ch. 25, ἀνέμου κατιόντος,) which, Arn. thinks, well expresses the effect of sudden wind upon a calm sea: a view not a little countenanced by various passages which I have adduced in the note on ch. 25. And, though the expression in question be one properly applicable only to a sudden and stormy gust of wind, yet it may not improperly be applied to a stiff breeze from the land, which usually comes on a little before day-break, and is, I believe, ushered in by a sudden puff of wind.

ἐταράσσοντο] 'they were thrown into disorder.' Wasse aptly compares Æschyl. Ag. 637: and I have noted something similar in Herodot. viii. 16, ταρασσομένων τε τῶν νεῶν, καὶ περιπιπτουσέων περὶ ἀλλήλας. Of the words, a little after, τοῖς κοντοῖς διωθοῦντο, the sense is, 'and they (meaning the sailors) kept pushing off each other's vessels with poles;' literally, 'staved off the mutual push of vessel on vessel.' This use of διωθ. is rare; though I have noted it in certain passages, written in imitation of the present, in Dio Cass. 628, 94. Procop. 99, 11. 108, 42.

ἀντιφυλακῇ] Meaning, 'a mutual cau-τε καὶ λοιδορίᾳ, οὐδὲν κατήκουον οὔτε τῶν παραγγελλομένων, οὔτε τῶν κελευστῶν, καὶ τὰς κώπας ἀδύνατοι ὄντες ἐν κλυδωνίῳ ἀναφέρειν ἄνθρωποι ἄπειροι, τοῖς κυβερνήταις ἀπειθεστέρας τὰς ναῦς παρεῖχον, τότε δὴ κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον σημαίνει, καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, προσπεσόντες, πρῶτον μὲν καταδύουσι τῶν στρατηγίδων νεῶν μίαν, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ πάσας ᾗ χωρήσειαν διέφθειρον, καὶ κατέστησαν ἐς ἀλκὴν μὲν μηδένα τρέπεσθαι αὐτῶν ὑπὸ τῆς ταραχῆς, φεύγειν δ' ἐς Πάτρας καὶ Δύμην τῆς Ἀχαΐας. 4. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι, καταδιώξαντες, καὶ ναῦς δώδεκα λαβόντες, τούς τε ἄνδρας ἐξ αὐτῶν τοὺς πλείστους ἀνελόμενοι, ἐς Μολύκρειον ἀπέπλεον· καὶ τροπαῖον στήσαντες ἐπὶ τῷ Ῥίῳ, καὶ ναῦν ἀναθέντες τῷ Ποσειδῶνι, ἀνεχώρησαν ἐς Ναύπακτον. 5. παρέπλευσαν δὲ καὶ οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι εὐθὺς ταῖς περιλοίποις τῶν νεῶν ἐκ τῆς Δύμης καὶ Πατρῶν ἐς Κυλλήνην τὸ Ἠλείων ἐπίνειον· καὶ ἀπὸ Λευκάδος Κνῆμος καὶ αἱ ἐκεῖθεν νῆες, ἃς tion to avoid impinging.' Of this word, which is very rare, examples are found in Dio Cass. 1288, 45, and Lucian, ii. 37: and the verb ἀντιφυλάττεσθαι occurs in Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 3. On λοιδορίᾳ compare the words of Hor. Sat. i. 5, 11, 'pueris convicia nautæ Ingerere.'

By τῶν παραγγελλομένων understand, 'the orders issued by the officers who directed the fighting of the ship,' as distinguished from the directions of the κελευσταί, who superintended the working of the vessel. The expression is borrowed by Appian, i. 328, καὶ τῶν παραγγελλομένων οὐ κατήκουον. Of the κελευσταὶ a graphic description may be seen in a passage of Ovid, Met. iii. 618.

ἐν κλυδωνίῳ] 'in a billowy sea.' Κλύδων properly signifies, 'a short-breaking wave,' which curls back and dashes over. Of the phrase ἐν κλυδωνίῳ, or κλύδωνι, examples are found in the best writers, though chiefly in the figurative sense. In ἀναφέρειν we have an usual nautical term, found in various passages of Appian, Arrian, and Polyæn.

τοῖς κυβερνήταις ἀπειθεστέρας τὰς ναῦς παρεῖχον] 'occasioned the ships to be unmanageable to the steersmen,' namely, by their not obeying the rudder. So, in Dio Cass. 624, 29, we have, νῆες ἀπειθέστεραι τοῖς κυβερνοῦσι, and Pollux, i. 112.

τότε δὴ κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον] 'then, indeed, at that very critical time.' Of διέφθειρον, a little after, the meaning is, not utterly destroyed, but put hors de combat; which is well expressed by Diod. Sic. xii. 48, ἁπλους ἐποίησε.

κατέστησαν—τρέπεσθαι] Construe, κατ. (αὐτοὺς ὥστε) μηδένα τρέπ. ἐς ἀλκήν, efficiebant ut, &c., 'they brought things to such a pass that,' &c., where ἐς ἀλκὴν τρέπεσθαι answers to the French se mettre en défense, 'to put themselves in a posture of defence.' The expression is by Stephens said to be used also by some of the later writers, in imitation of our author. But of ἀλκή, thus used, examples are found in Hom. Il. xv. 564, and Herodot. ix. 70.

4 ἀνελόμενοι] 'having taken up and removed into their own ships;' in which sense the term not unfrequently occurs in our author. They, however, only took on board τοὺς πλείστους: all, it seems, that they could safely carry. Many were probably left on board the water-logged, though not quite sinking, hulls; and not a few, we may suppose, had made their escape by boats, rafts, &c.; justly fearing that they might be killed by the enemy, as was often the case. See i. 50, 1.

ναῦν ἀναθέντες τῷ Ποσειδῶνι] Namely, in the temple which Scylax, p. 14, says was situated on the promontory, and doubtless a temple of Neptune, since most of the temples of that god were situated on lofty promontories.

5. αἱ ἐκεῖθεν νῆες] Namely, 'those furnished from thence,' including, doubtless, those of their neighbouring allies, the Anactorians and Ambraciots; of whom mention is made supra ch. 80, τὸ ἐκ Λευκάδος καὶ Ἀνακτορίου καὶ Ἀμπρακίας: the quota from those states which, it is added, waited for the rest of the allied fleet at Leucas: to which place accordingly, it seems, (though our author has not said so,) Cnemus had gone, when the land-forces had been disbanded from Œniadæ, and gone to their homes.

CH. LXXXV. 1. Πέμπουσι—ξυμβούλους] Meaning, 'persons to form a common-council board.' This practice of directing military command, while common with the other Greeks, as afterwards with the Romans, was little in use among the Lacedæmonians, though after that it became very usual with them; for of these ξύμβουλοι frequent mention is made in Polyb., Appian, and Diod. Sic.

κατασκευάζεσθαι] adornare, instruere, parare, 'to set forth, contrive.' So at ch. 78 we have, κατασκευάζεσθαι πόλεμον, and at viii. 5, ἐν κατασκευῇ τοῦ πολέμου. Isocr. p. 134, κατασκευάζοντες τὸν πόλεμον. Pol. xxxi. 18, 7. In all which cases we should rather have expected παρασκ., which, indeed, is here found in several MSS., but those of the least authority, and doubtless from a gloss there introduced. Hence Goell. was by no means warranted in admitting it into his text; and in alleging that the words are often confounded in the MSS., and accordingly, 'pendet arbitrium et norma ex consensu libb. script.,' he urges what is any thing but justificatory of his procedure in this instance, his own practice being inconsistent with his own canon; for, independent of the consent of almost every MS. of consideration, so strong is internal evidence in favour of κατασκ., that this 'consent of MSS.,' if we had it not, might have been dispensed with. As to the distinctions between the two verbs promulged by Schneid. on Xen. Anab. iii. 2, 24, and Arnold in loc., they are too refined, and too little capable of solid proof, to materially assist the judgment of an editor.

2. ἐδόκει γὰρ αὐτοῖς—πολὺς ὁ παράλογος] 'It seemed to them an event wholly contrary to expectation;' or, expressing the force of the art. 'the event seemed one,' &c. Comp. iii. 16. vii. 28. Appian, i. 782. Arrian, i. 9, 9.

τοσοῦτον] I have received this reading from three MSS., for the common one τοσούτῳ, since, though, in general, there is little or no difference between the construction with the accus. and that with the dat.; here, however, the correspondent words γεγενῆσθαι δὲ will scarcely permit the dat.; at least I have never met with a single example of τοσούτῳ followed in apodosi by ὅ, but only by ὅσῳ, or ὅσον. Τοσοῦτον signifies tantum, so much. Render, 'They were not so much of opinion that their navy (i. e. their naval skill) was outstripped or distanced, as they thought,' &c.: a construction this, seemingly anomalous, for which the usage and propriety of language would rather have required οὐ τοσοῦτον - ὅσον, non tantum, as at ch. 87, οὐδ' ἡ ἀπειρία τοσοῦτον λείπεται, ὅσον τόλμῃ προέχετε, and Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 70; but it is, in reality, a stronger form of expression, as containing a more direct affirmation. In λείπεσθαι we have a metaphor taken from the race-course, as at v. 69. vi. 72. vii. 70.

οὐκ ἀντιτιθέντες — μελέτης] These words are meant to indicate the cause of this error in judgment and consequent injustice,—namely, that 'they had not placed in just comparison the long-acquired skill of the Athenians with their own briefly continued practice.' It is, as Goell. remarks, put for οὐ τιθέντες τὴν τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐκ πολλοῦ ἐμπειρίαν ἀντὶ τῆς σφετέρας. And he compares a passage of our author infra iii. 56, ἡμῶν τῆς νῦν ἁμαρτίας ἀντιτιθεῖναι τὴν τότε προθυμίαν. The same construction is found in Eurip. Iph. Taur. 358, τὴν ἐνθάδ' Αὐλιν ἀντιθεῖσα τῆς ἐκεῖ. The metaphor here employed seems one taken from the keeping of accounts, by which the debtor and creditor accounts are set off one against the other, by being placed opposite to each, so that when they are compared, the difference may be readily seen. What is here laid to the charge of the Lacedæmonians is, that, from infirmity of judgment, they could not make a just set-off of one against the other, so as to perceive the vast difference. To which purpose it is well observed by Thirlwall, that 'the inexperience of the Spartans was such, that they could not even conceive the full extent of the advantage afforded by superior skill.' The best comment on the ἐκ πολλοῦ here are the words at i. 142, οὐδὲ γὰρ ὑμεῖς μελετῶντες αὐτὰ ἀπὸ τῶν Μηδ. ('from the time of the Median war downwards') ἐξείργασθέ πω. Of the words following, ὀργῇ οὖν ἀπέστελλον, the sense is, 'they had in wrath sent off the instructions they did, in such angrily worded terms.'

4. ἐλπίδος οὔσης] scil. αὐτῷ, 'that he expected every day he should be brought to a battle.'

5. τῷ κομίζοντι] 'the conductor,' the officer in command, who had the charge of leading the naval force. Of the word as used in this rare sense, I know no other example. The meaning of the term may be expressed in Latin, ei qui deducebat.

6. πρόξενος] Meaning, 'one allied by hospitable ties to the state;' a sort of voluntary consul. (Thirlwall.) Προσποιήσειν, i. e. 'would bring it over' to the Athenian interest. Οὖσαν πολεμίαν, viz. to Athens.

7. ὑπὸ — ἀπλοίας] 'from calms, or other hindrances to navigation:' for ἄπλοια denotes in general what is a hindrance to navigation. It is used in the tragedians and Dionys. Hal., and in Herodot. ii. 119, ἀποπλέειν γὰρ ὡρμημένον αὐτὸν ἴσχον ἄπλοιαι.

CH. LXXXVI. 4. Ἀθηναίους] Supp. ὁρμισαμένους, from the preceding ὡρμίσαντο.

εἶδον. 5. καὶ ἐπὶ μὲν ἓξ ἢ ἑπτὰ ἡμέρας ἀνθώρμουν ἀλλήλοις, μελετῶντές τε καὶ παρασκευαζόμενοι τὴν ναυμαχίαν, γνώμην ἔχοντες, οἱ μὲν, μὴ ἐκπλεῖν ἔξω τῶν Ῥίων ἐς τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν, φοβούμενοι τὸ πρότερον πάθος, οἱ δὲ μὴ ἐσπλεῖν ἐς τὰ στενὰ, νομίζοντες πρὸς ἐκείνων εἶναι τὴν ἐν ὀλίγῳ ναυμαχίαν. 6. ἔπειτα ὁ Κνῆμος καὶ ὁ Βρασίδας καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι τῶν Πελοποννησίων στρατηγοὶ, βουλόμενοι ἐν τάχει τὴν ναυμαχίαν ποιῆσαι, πρίν τι καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπιβοηθῆσαι, ξυνεκάλεσαν τοὺς στρατιώτας πρῶτον, καὶ ὁρῶντες αὐτῶν τοὺς πολλοὺς διὰ τὴν προτέραν ἧσσαν φοβουμένους, καὶ οὐ προθύμους ὄντας, παρεκελεύσαντο καὶ ἔλεξαν τοιάδε.

LXXXVII. "Ἡ μὲν γενομένη ναυμαχία, ὦ ἄνδρες Πελοποννήσιοι,—εἴ τις ἄρα δι' αὐτὴν ὑμῶν φοβεῖται τὴν μέλλουσαν,—οὐχὶ δικαίαν ἔχει τέκμαρσιν τὸ ἐκφοβῆσαι. 2. τῇ τε γὰρ παρασκευῇ ἐνδεὴς ἐγένετο, ὥσπερ ἴστε, καὶ οὐχὶ ἐς ναυμαχίαν μᾶλλον ἢ ἐπὶ στρατείαν ἐπλέομεν· ξυνέβη δὲ καὶ τὰ ἀπὸ τῆς τύχης οὐκ ὀλίγα ἐναντιωθῆναι· καί πού τι καὶ ἡ ἀπειρία πρῶτον ναυμαχοῦντας ἔσφηλεν. 3. ὥστε οὐ κατὰ τὴν ἡμετέραν κακίαν τὸ ἡσσῆσθαι προσεγένετο· οὐδὲ δίκαιον † τῆς † γνώμης τὸ μὴ κατὰ κράτος νικηθὲν,

5. μελετῶντες] 'practising,' (as at i. 80, and elsewhere,) scil. τὸ ναυτικόν. So i. 121, we have μελ. τὰ ναυτικά. Poppo here refers to Schwebel. on Onos. p. 25. Τὰ στενὰ, meaning, 'the narrows,' as Polyæn. i. 659. Herodian, ii. 11, 15. Arrian, E. A. i. 1, 8, and 28, 1.

CH. LXXXVII. 1. οὐχὶ δικαίαν ἔχει τέκμαρσιν τὸ ἐκφοβῆσαι] 'contains by no means any just conclusion [as to the result],' so as to occasion alarm. In οὐχὶ we have a stronger expression than οὐκ. Τέκμαρσις is a rare word, (though found also in Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1483. Dio Cass. 420 and 523, and Marc. Anton. ii. 13,) denoting, properly, 'a conclusion drawn from some evident sign,' especially such as enables us to judge concerning the future by the past. (τὰ μέλλοντα τοῖς γεγενημένοις τεκμαίρεσθαι, to use the expression of Isocr. Paneg.) The phrase ἔχει τέκμαρσιν is, as has been shown, similar to ἔχει ἀγανάκτησιν at ii. 4; ἔχει ἀνάθησιν, and others. Τὸ ἐκφοβῆσαι may be taken, with Hermann and Goell., for ὥστε ἐκφ.: see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 541.

2. ξυνέβη — ἔσφηλεν] 'It happened also, that the circumstances arising out of fortune (meaning, the chances of war,) were not a few of them adverse to us: and perhaps, too, our want of experience caused us, when first engaging in a sea-fight, to fail of success.' Τὰ τῆς τύχης, without the ἀπὸ, occurs infra iv. 155. Of καί πού τι, thus used, an example is adduced by Hoogev. from Plato.

3. ὥστε οὐ—προσεγένετο] 'so that the defeat befel us, not by reason of our cowardice:' a sense of κακία somewhat rare, though found also in Demosth. p. 1448, and Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 26. Of προσγ. thus used, I know no example elsewhere, except in Xen. Mem. iii. 14, 6.

οὐδὲ δίκαιον—κακοὺς γενέσθαι] Of this passage the sense appears to me to be as follows: 'Nor is it just, that (for, 'nor ought,' &c.) those who are in mind and heart not utterly beaten, but have something to allege in their own behalf, should be daunted at the occurrence of calamity; but to suppose, that though by fortune men are accustomed to be disappointed, yet, that in their own minds, the brave are, justly, ever the same; nor will they, as long as their courage remains, be ever likely to at all act cowardly under pretence of inexperience,' i. e. nor will they plead inexperience as any excuse for cowardice. In τὸ νικηθὲν we have the frequent use of neut. for masc. Κατὰ κράτος here stands, as Hesych. explains, for τελείως. The only real difficulty rests on τῆς γνώμης, and that is rather as regards construction than sense; for while the import of γνώμη is evidently mind, or spirit, heart, not so easy is the construction to be traced. To take τῆς γνώμης τὸ, (with Gail and Arnold,) as standing for τὸ τῆς γνώμης, 'our spirits' unvanquishedness,' would, as Poppo has seen, be at once to trample on grammatical rules; and, with Arnold, to regard τὸ μὴ νικηθὲν τῆς γνώμης, as of the same kind with other expressions, τὸ δεδιὸς, and τὸ θαρσοῦν, at i. 36, is to throw but a faint, not to say a false, light over the passage. Again, to construe τῆς γνώμης (as is done by Kistem. and Poppo) with ἀμβλύνεσθαι, would be doing violence to the construction. Now the main purpose of the speaker here being evidently to fortify their sinking courage, by showing that they are not beaten in mind or spirit; that their spirit at least is unvanquished; hence we have τῆς γνώμης placed in as prominent a situation as possible, though not without involving a harsh transposition. Similarly, as in a kindred passage infra vi. 72, 2, Hermocrates applies himself to reanimate the defeated Syracusans, by telling them τὴν γνώμην αὐτῶν οὐχ ἡσσᾶσθαι. Hence it cannot be doubted that the sense of τῆς γνώμης here intended is 'in mind' or spirit; though how τῆς γνώμης can express that, I see not, and therefore I cannot but suspect τῆς γνώμης to be an error of the scribes for τῇ γνώμῃ, or τὴν γνώμην, as Cantacuzen (cited by Poppo) must have read in his almost transcript of this passage as follows: οὐ δὴ (read δὲ) δίκαιον τοὺς μὴ τὴν γνώμην κατὰ κράτος νικηθέντας. Vain is it to urge, with Goell., the collocation of the words, as demanding the sense contended for by Dukas, 'part of mind;' for in what writer would an argument founded on the collocation of words in a sentence be so utterly weak and inconclusive as in our author, who delights in the harshest transpositions, and that often where no apparent reason exists, which here, as I have shown, is not the case?

ἔχον δέ τινα ἐν αὐτῷ ἀντιλογίαν, τῆς ξυμφορᾶς τῷ ἀποβάντι ἀμβλύνεσθαι· νομίσαι δὲ ταῖς μὲν τύχαις ἐνδέχεσθαι σφάλλεσθαι τοὺς ἀνθρώπους, ταῖς δὲ γνώμαις τοὺς αὐτοὺς ἀεὶ ἀνδρείους, ὀρθῶς, εἶναι· καὶ μὴ ἀπειρίαν, τοῦ ἀνδρείου παρόντος, προβαλλομένους εἰκότως ἂν ἔν τινι κακοὺς γενέσθαι. 4. ὑμῶν δὲ οὐδ' ἡ ἀπειρία τοσοῦτον λείπεται, ὅσον τόλμῃ προέχετε· τῶνδε δὲ ἡ ἐπιστήμη,—ἣν μάλιστα φοβεῖσθε,—ἀνδρείαν μὲν ἔχουσα, καὶ μνήμην ἔξει ἐν τῷ δεινῷ ἐπιτελεῖν ἃ ἔμαθεν· ἄνευ δὲ εὐψυχίας οὐδεμία τέχνη πρὸς τοὺς κινδύνους ἰσχύει. φόβος γὰρ μνήμην ἐκπλήσσει, τέχνη δὲ ἄνευ ἀλκῆς οὐδὲν ὠφελεῖ. 5. πρὸς μὲν οὖν τὸ ἐμπειρότερον αὐτῶν τὸ

Of ἀντιλογίαν the sense cannot be, as Arnold explains, defence; but by τινὰ ἀντιλογίαν must here be meant something wherewith to object in self-justification, in refutation of the enemy's claim to have utterly defeated them,—something that should account for the defeat, so as not to affect their honour. The term ἀμβλύνεσθαι signifies, properly, to be blunted, and fig. to be daunted. So Soph. Œd. R. 688, τοὐμὸν — καταμβλύνων κέαρ. Jos. 869, 16, τὸν θυμὸν ἠμβλύνθη. Æschyl. Prom. 891, ἀπαμβλυνθήσεται γνώμην, and Theb. 712, τεθηγμένον τί μ' οὐκ ἀπαμβλυνεῖς λόγῳ.

Ὀρθῶς does not (as Goell. takes it) stand for ὀρθῶς εἶναι, but is, as Dukas explains, for ὡς ὀρθῶς ἔχει, merits. Of adverbs thus standing for a clause, examples are indeed rare; but they are found, though confined to words expressive of approbation, as εἰκότως, δικαίως, ὀρθῶς: thus in 1 Cor. xv. 34, we have ἐκνήψατε δικαίως, καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε.

At καὶ μὴ ἀπειρίαν—γενέσθαι, the construction is, καὶ [νομίσαι δίκαιον] μὴ εἰκότως ἂν ἔν τινι κακοὺς γενέσθαι προβ. ἀπειρίαν, τοῦ ἀνδρείου παρόντος, where προβάλλεσθαι signifies, prætendere, 'to seek an excuse for a fault by pleading something in extenuation.'

4. λείπεται] 'is left behind,' 'is inferior.' The apodosis may seem irregular, but it will be set right if ὑμῶν ἡ ἀπειρία λείπεται be regarded as standing for ὑμεῖς λείπεσθε ἀπειρίᾳ, or ἀπειρίαν. See vi. 12, and v. 105.

τέχνη ἄνευ ἀλκῆς οὐδὲν ὠφελεῖ] And therefore need is there of the union of both. So of the Romans it is said in Val. Max. ii. 3, 3, 'Virtutemque arti, et rursus artem virtuti miscent; ut illa impetu hujus fortior, hæc illius scientiâ cautior fieret.'

τολμηρότερον ἀντιτάξασθε, πρὸς δὲ τὸ διὰ τὴν ἧσσαν δεδιέναι τὸ ἀπαράσκευοι τότε τυχεῖν. 6. περιγίγνεται δὲ ὑμῖν πλῆθός τε νεῶν καὶ πρὸς τῇ γῇ οἰκεία οὖσῃ, ὁπλιτῶν παρόντων, ναυμαχεῖν· τὰ δὲ πολλὰ τῶν πλειόνων καὶ ἄμεινον παρεσκευασμένων τὸ κράτος ἐστίν. 7. ὥστε οὐδὲ καθ' ἓν εὑρίσκομεν εἰκότως ἂν ἡμᾶς σφαλλομένους· καὶ ὅσα ἡμάρτομεν πρότερον, νῦν αὐτὰ ταῦτα προσγενόμενα διδασκαλίαν παρέξει. 8. θαρσοῦντες οὖν καὶ κυβερνῆται καὶ ναῦται τὸ καθ' ἑαυτὸν ἕκαστος ἕπεσθε, χώραν μὴ προλείποντες ᾗ ἄν τις προσταχθῇ. 9. τῶν δὲ πρότερον ἡγεμόνων οὐ χεῖρον τὴν ἐπιχείρησιν ἡμεῖς παρασκευάσομεν, καὶ οὐκ ἐνδώσομεν πρόφασιν οὐδενὶ κακῷ γενέσθαι. ἢν δέ τις ἄρα καὶ βουληθῇ, κολασθήσεται τῇ πρεπούσῃ ζημίᾳ· οἱ δὲ ἀγαθοὶ τιμήσονται τοῖς προσήκουσιν ἄθλοις τῆς ἀρετῆς."

LXXXVIII. Τοιαῦτα μὲν τοῖς Πελοποννησίοις οἱ ἄρχοντες παρεκελεύσαντο· ὁ δὲ Φορμίων, δεδιὼς καὶ αὐτὸς τὴν τῶν στρατιωτῶν ὀρρωδίαν, καὶ αἰσθόμενος ὅτι τὸ πλῆθος τῶν νεῶν, κατὰ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ξυνιστάμενοι, ἐφοβοῦντο, ἐβούλετο ξυγκαλέσας θαρσῦναί τε καὶ παραίνεσιν ἐν τῷ παρόντι ποιήσασθαι. 2. πρότερον μὲν γὰρ ἀεὶ αὐτοῖς ἔλεγε, καὶ προπαρεσκεύαζε τὰς γνώμας, ὡς οὐδὲν αὐτοῖς πλῆθος νεῶν τοσοῦτον, ἢν ἐπιπλέῃ, ὅτι οὐχ ὑπομενετέον αὐτοῖς ἐστι· καὶ οἱ στρατιῶται ἐκ πολλοῦ ἐν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς τὴν ἀξίωσιν ταύτην εἰλήφεσαν μηδένα ὄχλον, Ἀθηναῖοι ὄντες, Πελοποννησίων νεῶν ὑποχωρεῖν. 3. τότε δὲ πρὸς τὴν παροῦσαν ὄψιν

5. ἀντιτάξασθε] lit. 'range it opposite in the account, as a set-off:' see note supra ch. 85, 3. Of the words following, πρὸς δὲ τὸ—τυχεῖν, the sense is, 'against the apprehension arising from [recent] defeat, oppose the reflection, that you met it for want of due preparation.'

6. περιγίγνεται ὑμῖν πλῆθός τε νεῶν] Dukas well explains this as equivalent to ἐκ περιουσίας ἐστὶν ὑμῖν, ὃ ἔστι, 'the advantage you have is one ex abundanti.' Thus we may, with Arnold, suppose here a metaphor borrowed from arithmetical calculations, q. d. 'There is a balance in your favour, of superiority of numbers and advantageousness of position.' In ναυμαχεῖν we have an infin. without art. put for a subst., as at iii. 38, ἀμύνασθαι δὲ τὴν τιμωρίαν ἀναλαμβάνει: see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 541. The next clause, τὰ δὲ πολλὰ—ἐστίν, contains a gnome, the subject of frequent imitation in the later writers, and itself founded on the words of Hom. Il. xii. 412, πλεόνων δὲ τὸ ἔργον ἄμεινον.

7. προσγενόμενα] Schol. προσκτηθέντα, 'being added, or supplied,' and therefore the defect remedied.

8. τὸ καθ' ἑαυτὸν ἕκαστος ἕπεσθε] 'Let each of you, for his own part, (i. e. according to his own particular station,) follow' where ye may be led, or ordered to go,—as we should say, follow your orders.

9. οὐκ ἐνδώσομεν — γενέσθαι] There is a similar construction in Xen. Anab. iii. 2, 31, τοὺς οὐδ' ἐ . ἐπιτρέψοντας κακῷ εἶναι.

LXXXVIII. 1. κατὰ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ξυνιστάμενοι] Equivalent to κατὰ ξυστάσεις γιγνόμενοι at ii. 21.

2. προπαρεσκεύαζε τὰς γνώμας] There is here a pregnancy of sense, i. e. 'he had prepared their minds, and had inspired them with the notion, that,' &c.

τὴν ἀξίωσιν ταύτην εἰλήφεσαν] 'had taken up this notion, or opinion;' not præsumptionem, or fiduciam, as Budæus and Steph. Thes. explain. At Ἀθηναῖοι ὄντες, sub. ὡς, 'in quality of Athenians.'

μηδένα ὄχλον ὑποχωρεῖν] This syntax is rare, but is found in Hom. Il. xiii. 476, οὐδὲ ὑπεχώρει Αἰνείαν ἐπιόντα, and Lucian, ii. 545, ὑποχωροῦμεν ἐπιόντας. Joseph. Ant. xvii. 6, 3, ἄδοξον ἡγουμένοις ὑποχωρεῖν τὴν ἔφοδον αὐτοῦ. It is truly ὁρῶν αὐτοὺς ἀθυμοῦντας, ἐβούλετο ὑπόμνησιν ποιήσασθαι τοῦ θαρσεῖν, καὶ ξυγκαλέσας τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἔλεξε τοιάδε.

LXXXIX. "Ὁρῶν ὑμᾶς, ὦ ἄνδρες στρατιῶται, πεφοβημένους τὸ πλῆθος τῶν ἐναντίων, ξυνεκάλεσα, οὐκ ἀξιῶν τὰ μὴ δεινὰ ἐν ὀρρωδίᾳ ἔχειν. 2. οὗτοι γὰρ, πρῶτον μὲν διὰ τὸ προνενικῆσθαι, καὶ μηδὲ αὐτοὶ οἴεσθαι ὁμοίοι ἡμῖν εἶναι, τὸ πλῆθος τῶν νεῶν, καὶ οὐκ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, παρεσκευάσαντο· ἔπειτα, ᾧ μάλιστα πιστεύοντες προσέρχονται,—ὡς προσῆκον σφίσιν ἀνδρείοις εἶναι,—οὐ δι' ἄλλο τι θαρσοῦσιν ἢ διὰ τὴν ἐν τῷ πεζῷ ἐμπειρίαν τὰ πλείω κατορθοῦντες· remarked by Goell., 'Cum accusativo constructum magis ad sensum verbi, quam usu.' Thus the expression is equiv. to φεύγειν.

3. ὑπόμνησιν ποιήσασθαι τοῦ θαρσεῖν] Τοῦ θαρσ. stands for ἐς τὸ θαρσεῖν. The expression is indeed unusual, but the genuineness of the reading is confirmed by a passage, closely imitated from the present, in Procop. 137, 6, βουλόμενος ὑπόμνησιν αὐτοῖς ποιήσασθαι τοῦ θαρσεῖν.

CH. LXXXIX. 1. ὁρῶν ὑμᾶς, &c.] Evidently imitated from this commencement is the similar one to a speech in Arrian, E. A. v. 25, 6, ὁρῶν ὑμᾶς, ὦ ἄνδρες Μακ.—ξυνήγαγον ἐς ταὐτὸ, &c.

στρατιῶται] The term is not confined to denote soldiers, but is sometimes extended to forces by sea as well as land, as here and in Aristoph. Ach. 546, ἢν δ' ἀν ἡ πόλις πλέα θορύβου στρατιωτῶν περὶ τριηράρχου βοῆς. In οὐκ ἀξιῶν—ἔχειν we have one of those cases, treated of in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 608, in which the negative οὐ is so used with a verb, that the neg. and verb form together only one idea. Accordingly οὐκ ἀξιόω is, in such a case, equivalent to ἀνάξιόν τι εἶναι φημὶ, 'indignum censeo:' examples of which may be seen, adduced from Demosth. and Pausan., in Steph. Thes. 7050, B. The turn of the expression is imitated in Dionys. Hal. vi. 52, τὰ μὴ δεινὰ ἀξιόω δεδιέναι, where δεινὸς is used in the primary sense of the term, fearful, occasioning fear.

2. οὗτοι γὰρ, &c.] Of this briefly worded sentence, the meaning, more fully expressed, is as follows: 'For, in the first place, as to those [fellows], it is because they have been before beaten by us, and do not even themselves think they are a match for us, that they have provided this multitude of ships [which you see], yea, not on an equal footing [with our force].' The point here chiefly worthy of attention is, the out-of-the-way mode in which we have an obvious truth expressed; the words being, as Arnold observes, equiv. to πλήθει προεχούσας ταῖς ναυσὶ, καὶ οὐκ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου παρεσκευάσαντο. I cannot, however, agree with Poppo and Arnold, that the sense in full would be, 'provided their superior number of ships, and did not provide a fleet that should be on equal terms with us.' The οὐκ does not belong to the verb παρεσκ. repeated, but the participle οὔσας, scil. ναῦς, understood,—'ships that are not on an equal footing of number with ours, but are an over-match.'

ἔπειτα, ᾧ μάλιστα—θρασύτεροί ἐσμεν] Of this somewhat perplexed and involved passage, the construction is well laid down by Poppo and Goell., thus: Ἔπειτα (τούτῳ), ᾧ μάλιστα πιστεύοντες προσέρχονται, ὡς προσῆκον σφίσιν ἀνδρείοις εἶναι, οὐ δι' ἄλλο τι θαρσοῦσιν ἢ διὰ τὴν ἐν τῷ πεζῷ ἐμπειρίαν, ὅτι τὰ πλείω κατορθοῦσι, καὶ (ὅτι) οἴονται σφίσι καὶ ἐν τῷ ναυτικῷ (τοῦτο, ᾧ πιστεύοντες προσέρχονται, ἥγουν τὴν προσήκουσαν δῆθεν σφίσιν ἀνδρείαν) ποιήσειν τὸ αὐτὸ ἥγουν τὸ κατορθοῦν· τὸ δὲ (ᾧ πιστεύοντες προσέρχονται ἥγουν ἡ ἀνδρεία) ἐκ τοῦ δικαίου ἡμῖν μᾶλλον νῦν περιέσται, εἴπερ καὶ τούτοις (τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις) ἐν ἐκείνῳ (ἐν τῷ πεζῷ)· ἐπεὶ εὐψυχίᾳ γε οὐδὲν προφέρουσι, τῷ δὲ ἑκάτεροί τι ἐμπειρότεροι εἶναι θρασύτεροί ἐσμεν. It is well remarked by Goell., 'Subjectum primarium per totum vides inesse in τούτῳ, ᾧ μάλιστα πιστεύοντες προσέρχονται.' Of the words ὡς προσῆκον (scil. ὄν) σφίσιν ἀνδρείοις εἶναι, the sense is, 'that it is an endowment or gift of nature to them to be brave.' In illustration of which use of προσῆκον, Goell. refers to other passages in i. 121. ii. 61. and iii. 64. At the words κατορθοῦντες καὶ οἴονται, there is, as Goell. remarks, a variation of construction, 'nam his duobus verbis causa declaratur, cur Lacedæmonii confidant; quæ quum ad idem consilium declarandæ causæ fiduciæ referantur, debebant pari constructione efferri, vel sic, ὅτι κατορθοῦσι καὶ οἴονται, vel καὶ οἴονται σφίσι καὶ ἐν τῷ ναυτικῷ ποιήσειν τὸ αὐτό. 3. τὸ δ' ἐκ τοῦ δικαίου ἡμῖν μᾶλλον νῦν περιέσται, εἴπερ καὶ τούτοις ἐν ἐκείνῳ· ἐπεὶ εὐψυχίᾳ γε οὐδὲν προφέρουσι. τῷ δὲ ἑκάτεροί τι ἐμπειρότεροι εἶναι, θρασύτεροί ἐσμεν. 4. Λακεδαιμόνιοί τε, ἡγούμενοι τῶν ξυμμάχων, διὰ τὴν σφετέραν δόξαν ἄκοντας προσάγουσι τοὺς πολλοὺς ἐς τὸν κίνδυνον· ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἄν ποτε ἐπεχείρησαν, ἡσσηθέντες παρὰ πολὺ, αὖθις ναυμαχεῖν. 5. μὴ δὴ αὐτῶν τὴν τόλμαν δείσητε· πολὺ δὲ ὑμεῖς ἐκείνοις πλέω φόβον παρέχετε καὶ πιστότερον, κατά τε τὸ προνενικηκέναι καὶ ὅτι οὐκ ἂν ἡγοῦνται, μὴ μέλλοντάς τι ἄξιον τοῦ παρὰ πολὺ πράξειν, ἀνθίστασθαι ὑμᾶς. 6. ἀντίπαλοι μὲν γὰρ οἱ πλείους, ὥσπερ οὗτοι, τῇ δυνάμει τὸ πλέον πίσυνοι ἢ τῇ γνώμῃ ambo per formam participii, κατορθοῦντες καὶ οἰόμενοι, "quia plerumque in pedestribus prœliis feliciter rem gerunt, et quia putant," &c. Porro τὸ αὐτὸ referendum est ad κατορθοῦντες, unde repetendum est τὸ κατορθοῦν, "neque minus in pugnâ navali victoriam sibi paratum iri putant illâ, quam sibi vindicant, naturali fortitudine." Verborum autem τὸ δ' ἐκ τοῦ δικαίου, &c. subjectum esse illud idem primarium τοῦτο ᾧ πιστεύοντες προσέρχονται, &c., vel verba ἐκ τοῦ δικαίου monstrant.' Render, 'But surely that [circumstance] may, in all justice, be here expected to attend us, as, in the other case, it would them.' Εἴπερ means siquidem.

3. τῷ δὲ—ἐσμεν] Of these words the construction is, as Goell. very properly points out, τῷ δὲ ἑκάτεροί τι ἐμπειρότεροι εἶναι ἑκάτεροι θρασύτεροί ἐσμεν (for ἑκάτεροι is to be taken twice). He observes, too, that the infinitive joined with a nomin. may be thus explained, τῷ δὲ, ὅτι ἑκάτεροί τι ἐμπ. ἐσμεν, θρασ. ἐσμεν.

4. Λακεδαιμόνιοί τε—ναυμαχεῖν] The drift of the argument here is to show that the circumstance of their venturing to again meet the Athenians, is no proof of that superiority of courage to which the Peloponnesians laid claim,—since it was only from the commanding power of the Lacedæmonians, that they were induced to come forward. Render, 'The Lacedæmonians, too, as leaders of the allies, bring into danger, for the promotion of their own glory, the greater part of them against their wills.'

For προσάγουσι, some MSS. have προάγουσι, which reading is adopted by Reiske; but though a specious one, it must be considered unfounded; and is forbidden by the term ἄκοντας just before, which necessarily requires the stronger sense inherent in προσάγ., which, in its use here, answers to the Latin adducere, in the phrases adducere aliquem in discrimen, or in periculum. The more usual term, indeed, in such a case, is καθίστημι, which is found in Xen. Cyneg. xi. 3, εἰς κίνδυνον καθίσταντα τοὺς αἱροῦντας: but προσάγ. was here doubtless preferred as being the more appropriate term, since it is often (especially in Xen.) used of the bringing up forces into action. At ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἄν, &c., there is (as in a passage of Heb. x. 1, ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν ἐπαύσαντο, &c.) an ellipsis of ἄλλως, equiv. to the omitted protasis, εἰ μὴ ἄκοντας οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι προσῆγον.

5. μὴ δὴ αὐτῶν τὴν τόλμαν—ὑμᾶς] 'fear ye not, then, the daring they now evince. Nay, ye afford to them a greater and surer-grounded cause for fear, both by reason of their having been previously beaten, and because they do not imagine that you would resist them, unless you were going to achieve something decidedly worthy of notice.' On this position of ἄν with verbs of thinking, followed by an infin. mood, to which it refers, see Arnold, and also Schneid. on Xen. Anab. i. 5, 9. The only real difficulty in the sentence rests on the words ἄξιον τοῦ παρὰ πολὺ, where Goeller repeats προνενικηκέναι, and Poppo πράσσειν, from πράξειν: while some, again, would take τοῦ παρὰ πολὺ as a subst. Least objectionable is the method proposed by Goeller, according to which an excellent sense arises, namely, 'something worthy of the decided victory you had gained:' and so supra, i. 29, we have, ἐνίκησαν οἱ Κ. παρὰ πολύ.

ἐπέρχονται· οἱ δ' ἐκ πολλῷ ὑποδεεστέρων, καὶ ἅμα οὐκ ἀναγκαζόμενοι, μέγα τι τῆς διανοίας τὸ βέβαιον ἔχοντες ἀντιτολμῶσιν. ἃ λογιζόμενοι οὗτοι τῷ οὐκ εἰκότι πλέον πεφόβηνται ἡμᾶς ἢ τῇ κατὰ λόγον παρασκευῇ. 7. πολλὰ δὲ καὶ στρατόπεδα ἤδη ἔπεσεν ὑπ' ἐλασσόνων τῇ ἀπειρίᾳ, ἔστι δὲ ἃ καὶ τῇ ἀτολμίᾳ· ὧν οὐδετέρου ἡμεῖς νῦν μετέχομεν. 8. τὸν δὲ ἀγῶνα οὐκ ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ, ἐκὼν εἶναι, ποιήσομαι, οὐδὲ ἐσπλεύσομαι ἐς αὐτόν· ὁρῶ γὰρ ὅτι πρὸς πολλὰς ναῦς ἀνεπιστήμονας ὀλίγαις νανσὶν ἐμπείροις καὶ ἄμεινον πλεούσαις ἡ στενοχωρία οὐ ξυμφέρει. 9. οὔτε γὰρ ἂν ἐπιπλέον πίσυνοι) ἢ ὅτι μέγα τι τὸ βέβαιον τῆς διανοίας ἔχουσι. (Goell.) The general sense is well traced by Haack, Goeller, and Arnold, thus: 'For when fairly matched with their enemy, most men, like the Lacedæmonians now, go into action relying on their physical resources rather than on their moral; whereas those who with inferior forces advance on the enemy uncompelled, these must run the hazard under the influence of some sure dependence of mind, as a pledge of victory, to induce them to encounter danger.'

τῷ οὐκ εἰκότι] Meaning, as Gail, Haack, Goeller, and Poppo are agreed, 'by the improbability [that we should have met them with such a force].' Of τῇ κατὰ λόγον παρασκευῇ the sense is, 'by any preparation of force proportioned to the requirements of the occasion:' the general drift of the sentiment being, (as Thirlwall expresses it,) that 'the enemy would be more dismayed when he found the superiority of numbers he had taken such pains to secure did not daunt the enemy, than be disposed to use it with effect.'

7. πολλὰ δὲ — μετέχομεν] With the adage in the former part of the passage, compare similar ones in Pind. Isth. iv. 56, and Herodot. vii. 10. Of the argument in the latter part, Poppo pronounces that it is 'non accurata;' adding, 'Nam si exercitus majores a minoribus vincuntur ob imperitiam et ignaviam, ab his autem vitiis Athenienses liberi sunt, sequitur quidem eos, si plures essent Peloponnesii, ab iis non victum iri; non item sequitur, quum pauciores sint, victoriam iis futuram. Debebat igitur potius scribi: "utrumque autem vitium in illos (Peloponnesios) cadit."' No such change, however, is necessary; since, in effect, the words as they now stand yield, by implication, the same sense as the above. It is very properly observed by Goell. 'Thucydides omisit sententiam contrariam Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ νῦν μετέχουσι usitatissimo more Graecorum, negantium id, cujus contrarium intelligi volunt,' as i. 40. Here, then, the course of argument is, as Arnold, after Goeller, lays it down: 'And far from numbers always ensuring victory, many armies have been overthrown ere now by an inferior force, sometimes from want of skill, and sometimes from want of daring; two causes of defeat with which certainly we on this present occasion have no concern;' insinuating that the Peloponnesians have somewhat to do with them both.

With respect to the phraseology, somewhat rare is this construction of μετέχω, with a genit. of any thing wherein the idea of participation implies that of criminality, as in Eurip. Med. 117, μ. ἀμπλακίας, and Heracl. 559, μ. μιάσματος.

8. ἐκὼν εἶναι] A formula denoting 'as far as my will is concerned;' where the εἶναι is, as Herm. Opusc. i. 227, has shown, not pleonastic, but is a word generally used in negative sentences, where the speaker wishes to qualify his denial or refusal, by saying that he will not do it if he can help it. So Herodot. viii. 116, we have, ὃς οὔτε αὐτὸς ἔφη τῷ Ξέρξῃ ἑκὼν εἶναι. ἐπουλεύσειν. See more in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 545. By the words οὐδὲ ἐσπλεύσομαι ἐς αὐτὸν we have merely expressed that it was his intention so to do: it is not meant to be denied that he might be, as he was, compelled to abandon it. In the words, a little after, ναῦς ἀνεπιστήμονας and νανσὶν ἐμπείροις, we have a figure not unfrequent in Thucyd. and others of the best writers, by which epithets properly applicable only to persons, are applied to the things about which the persons are conversant, especially ships, (as in Appian, ii. 639, 54.) and sometimes what is only suitable to things is ascribed to the persons who handle those things, as just after in the present passage, and in another of Appian, ii. 622. In οὐ ξυμφέρει we have an usual meiosis, or softening; the sense intended being, 'is a disadvantage.'

πλεύσειέ τις ὡς χρὴ ἐς ἐμβολήν, μὴ ἔχων τὴν πρόσοψιν τῶν πολεμίων ἐκ πολλοῦ, οὔτε ἂν ἀποχωρήσειεν ἐν δέοντι πιεζόμενος· διέκπλοι τε οὐκ εἰσὶν οὐδὲ ἀναστροφαί, ἅπερ νεῶν ἄμεινον πλεουσῶν ἔργα ἐστίν· ἀλλ' ἀνάγκη ἂν εἴη τὴν ναυμαχίαν πεζομαχίαν καθίστασθαι· καὶ ἐν τούτῳ αἱ πλείους νῆες κρείσσους γίγνονται. 10. τούτων μὲν οὖν ἐγὼ ἕξω τὴν πρόνοιαν κατὰ τὸ δυνατόν· ὑμεῖς δὲ εὔτακτοι παρὰ ταῖς ναυσὶ μένοντες τά τε παραγγελλόμενα ὀξέως δέχεσθε, ἄλλως τε καὶ δι' ὀλίγου τῆς ἐφορμήσεως οὔσης· καὶ ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ κόσμον καὶ σιγὴν περὶ πλείστου ἡγεῖσθε, ἧπερ ἐς τε τὰ πολλὰ τῶν πολεμικῶν ξυμφέρει, καὶ ναυμαχίᾳ οὐκ ἥκιστα· ἀμύνασθε δὲ τούσδε ἀξίως τῶν προειργασμένων. 11. ὁ δὲ ἀγὼν μέγας ὑμῖν, ἢ καταλῦσαι Πελοποννησίων τὴν ἐλπίδα τοῦ ναυτικοῦ, ἢ ἐγγυτέρω καταστῆσαι Ἀθηναίοις τὸν φόβον περὶ τῆς θαλάσσης. 12. ἀναμιμνήσκω δ' αὖ ὑμᾶς ὅτι νενικήκατε αὐτῶν τοὺς πολλούς· ἡσσημένων δὲ ἀνδρῶν οὐκ ἐθέλουσιν αἱ γνῶμαι πρὸς τοὺς αὐτοὺς κινδύνους ὁμοῖαι εἶναι."

XC. Τοιαῦτα δὲ καὶ ὁ Φορμίων παρεκελεύετο. οἱ δὲ Πελοποννήσιοι, ἐπειδὴ αὐτοῖς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι οὐκ ἐπέπλεον ἐς τὸν κόλπον καὶ τὰ στενά, βουλόμενοι ἄκοντας ἔσω προαγαγεῖν αὐτούς, ἀναγόμενοι

9. ἐς ἐμβολήν] 'to the attack' or charge; ἐμβολή, as Poppo observes, differing from προσβ., which denotes adversus concursus, as in vii. 70. See more in vii. 70, 4. On the term διέκπλοι, see note supra i. 50. Ἀναστροφαί, just after, Poppo observes, 'sunt recessiones navium, junctæ cum aversione, sive reversiones. Ἀναστροφὴ discernenda est a conversione sive ἐπιστροφῇ, et ab ἀνακρούσει sive recessione, quæ fiebat navi ἀντιπρώρῳ, i. e. prora hosti opposita.'

10. τούτων μὲν οὖν ἐγὼ ἕξω τὴν πρόνοιαν] lit. 'I will take the forethought, or provident care, of these matters necessary to their adjustment.' On the expression τὰ παραγγελλόμενα ὀξέως δέχεσθε, see note at ii. 11, fin. By τῆς ἐφορμήσεως understand 'the enemy's station, that from which they watch our motions;' equiv. to ἐφόρμου, which term occurs infra iii. 6. See also vi. 48, 1, and note. Ἐφόρμησις signifies properly the occupying of a naval station aloof of any fleet, with hostile purpose, so as to attack whenever an opportunity offers.

For ὥστε, I have, with Bekker and Poppo, adopted the conjecture of Steph., ὃ ἔς τε (taken as standing for οὕτως τε): a mild emendation, but not effectual, as it supposes a harsh transposition, and yields but an indifferent sense; not to say that it is little consistent with the word ναυμαχίας.

For ξυμφέρει, Poppo edits καὶ ξυμφ.: a reading found in several good MSS., but which may plainly be traced to a mere transposition, originating in inadvertence, καὶ ξυμφ. for ξυμφ. καί.

12. ἡσσημένων δὲ — εἶναι] A pithy adage, with which compare a similar one in Procop. 208, 10, τῶν γὰρ πολλάκις ἠτυχηκότων ἥκιστα ἀνδραγαθίζεσθαι φιλοῦσιν αἱ γνῶμαι. See also infra vii. 6.

Οὐκ ἐθέλουσι the translators render by non solent: and so the word was taken by Steph. in his Thes., and long ago by Procop. Yet all that we can say is, that the latter word is equiv. to the former, and might be substituted for it. Ἐθέλ. cannot absolutely signify such. We may render more closely by non possunt, lit. 'are not disposed to be,' 'cannot in the nature and disposition of things be.' So in Plato de Rep. vi. p. 503, we have, εὐμαθεῖς καὶ μνήμονες, καὶ ἀγχίνοοι καὶ ὀξεῖς, ὥσθ' ὅτι οὐκ ἐθέλουσιν ἅμα φύεσθαι. Herodot. i. 74, ἄνευ ἀναγκαίης ἰσχυρῆς συμβάσιες ἰσχυραὶ οὐκ ἐθέλουσι συμμένειν. Dio Cass. 305. 37, οὐκ ἐθέλουσιν οἱ λογισμοὶ τοῖς φόβοις συνεῖναι. and 178, 58.

ὁμοῖαι] 'of equal alacrity.'

CH. XC. 1. τὰ στενά] literally, 'the narrows,' meaning, the straits; by a use of the word frequent in Xen. and Arrian.

ἅμα ἕῳ, ἔπλεον, ἐπὶ τεσσάρων ταξάμενοι τὰς ναῦς, ἐπὶ τὴν ἑαυτῶν γῆν ἔσω ἐπὶ τοῦ κόλπου, δεξιῷ κέρᾳ ἡγουμένῳ, ὥσπερ καὶ ὥρμουν. 2. ἐπὶ δ' αὐτῷ εἴκοσι ἔταξαν τὰς ἀρίστα πλεούσας, ὅπως,—εἰ ἄρα νομίσας ἐπὶ τὴν Ναύπακτον αὐτοὺς πλεῖν ὁ Φορμίων, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐπιβοηθῶν ταύτῃ παραπλέοι,—μὴ διαφύγοιεν πλέοντα τὸν ἐπίπλουν σφῶν οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἔξω τοῦ ἑαυτῶν κέρως, ἀλλ' αὗται αἱ νῆες περικλῄσειαν. 3. ὁ δὲ,—ὅπερ ἐκεῖνοι προσεδέχοντο,—φοβηθεὶς περὶ τῷ χωρίῳ ἐρήμῳ ὄντι, ὡς ἑώρα ἀναγομένους αὐτούς, ἄκων καὶ κατὰ σπουδὴν ἐμβιβάσας, ἔπλει παρὰ τὴν γῆν· καὶ ὁ πεζὸς ἅμα τῶν Μεσσηνίων παρεβοήθει. 4. ἰδόντες δὲ οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι κατὰ μίαν ἐπὶ κέρως παραπλέοντας, καὶ ἤδη ὄντας ἐντὸς τοῦ κόλπου τε καὶ ἔπλεον, ἐπὶ τεσσάρων—ὥρμουν] Render, 'they sailed, ranged in files of four, towards their territory within the gulf, in the same manner as they had lain at anchor, with the right wing leading the way.' The last words denote that the line of battle was formed from the line of anchorage; that which made the right and left in the latter, making the same also in the former. Now the right wing took the lead, because the column might have moved on its left; as it would have done, had it intended to go out of the gulf; whereas it must move on its right, to proceed up the gulf.

In ἐπὶ τὴν ἑαυτῶν γῆν, the ἐπὶ signifies (by a somewhat rare use) not to, juxta, but rather towards. The context, indeed, rather requires the sense near upon, along-side of. But the word so used would scarcely take after it an accus.: and hence I suspect that for τὴν γῆν should be read τῇ γῇ, by which the ἐπὶ may very well bear the not unfrequent sense of near unto.

The Peloponnesian fleet took the direction in question because it was not their immediate intention to attack Naupactus; the present motion being merely a feint. Had they really taken their course to Naupactus, it would have been impossible for the Athenian fleet to have prevented them: but by taking their course rather along the coast of Achæa, they might still put Phormio in fear for Naupactus, lest, as Poppo suggests, after coming opposite to the city, they should suddenly change their course, and cross over and attack the place. That feint deceived Phormio, by inducing him to send his fleet within the strait, to watch the motions of the Peloponnesian fleet, and thus exposed part of the line to be cut by the clever manœuvre devised by Cnemus and Brasidas.

Now this might well be called τὴν ἑαυτῶν γῆν, as opposed to that of the Athenians on the other side of the gulf, because, as Poppo observes, the ships in question were chiefly Achæan or Corinthian. See ch. 83.

Instead of the vulg. ἡγούμενοι, I have, with Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, edited, from several of the best MSS., ἡγουμένῳ, which may very well be supposed to have been altered by those who did not understand the construction, in which we have the dat. used as the Latin ablative; as supra ch. 65, 2, κτήματα οἰκοδομίαις τε καὶ κατασκευαῖς ἀπολωλεκότες.

2. εἰ ἄρα] Meaning, 'if haply,' as at i. 27, εἰ ἄρα—κωλύοιντο, and Acts xvii. 27, εἰ ἄρα ψηλαφήσειαν αὐτὸν καὶ εὕροιεν. Render, 'in order that if perchance Phormio, thinking they were sailing to Naupactus, should himself, too, coast along in that direction to its succour, the Athenians might not,' &c.; ταύτῃ signifying in that direction, (namely, that of Naupactus,) as at vii. 80, and often.

μὴ διαφύγοιεν—περικλῄσειαν] Meaning, 'might not escape their charge, nor get beyond their wing; but that those ships might enclose them as in a net.' By τὸν ἐπίπλουν understand, 'the charge of the squadron (or wing) sailing upon them.' The words ἔξω τοῦ ἑαυτῶν κέρως are obscure, from brevity; but the sense is, 'so as to get beyond, or out of the reach of, the wing;' which would thus suddenly turn as it were upon a pivot, to cut them off from Naupactus. Of this use of ἔξω, as said of a wing which outflanks an opposite one of the enemy, examples are found in Xen. An. i. 8, 9, et sæpe.

3. ἄκων καὶ κατὰ σπουδὴν] 'unwillingly and in haste,' or rather, in a hurry, as at ch. 94, ἐσβάντες κατὰ σπουδὴν καὶ πολλῷ θορύβῳ.

4. ἐπὶ κέρως παραπλέοντας] 'coasting along in line;' for ἐπὶ κέρως signifies in

πρὸς τῇ γῇ,—ὅπερ ἐβούλοντο μάλιστα,—ἀπὸ σημείου ἑνὸς ἄφνω ἐπιστρέψαντες τὰς ναῦς, μετωπηδὸν ἔπλεον, ὡς εἶχε τάχους ἕκαστος, ἐπὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους, καὶ ἤλπιζον πάσας τὰς ναῦς ἀπολήψεσθαι. 5. τῶν δὲ ἔνδεκα μέν τινες, αἵπερ ἡγοῦντο, ὑπεκφεύγουσι τὸ κέρας τῶν Πελοποννησίων καὶ τὴν ἐπιστροφὴν ἐς τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν· τὰς δὲ ἄλλας ἐπικαταλαβόντες, ἐξέωσάν τε πρὸς τὴν γῆν ὑποφευγούσας, καὶ διέφθειραν, ἄνδρας τε τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀπέκτειναν, ὅσοι μὴ ἐξένευσαν αὐτῶν. 6. καὶ τῶν νεῶν τινας ἀναδούμενοι εἵλκον κενάς, μίαν δὲ αὐτοῖς ἀνδράσιν εἷλον ἤδη· τὰς δέ τινας οἱ Μεσσήνιοι, παραβοηθήσαντες, καὶ ἐπεσβαίνοντες ξὺν τοῖς ὅπλοις ἐς τὴν θάλασσαν, καὶ ἐπιβάντες, ἀπὸ τῶν καταστρωμάτων μαχόμενοι ἀφείλοντο ἑλκομένας ἤδη. XCI. Ταύτῃ μὲν οὖν οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι ἐκράτουν τε, καὶ ἔφθειραν τὰς Ἀττικὰς ναῦς· αἱ δὲ εἴκοσι νῆες αὐτῶν αἱ ἀπὸ τοῦ δεξιοῦ κέρως ἐδίωκον τὰς ἕνδεκα ναῦς τῶν Ἀθηναίων, αἵπερ ὑπεξέφυγον τὴν ἐπιστροφὴν ἐς τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν· καὶ φθάνουσιν αὐτούς, πλὴν μιᾶς νεώς, προκαταφυγοῦσαι ἐς τὴν line or column, as said of a wing, whether that line be one deep (as here denoted by κατὰ μίαν) or a greater. See more in my note in Transl. With ἀπὸ σημείου comp. Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 32, and ἀπὸ ἑνὸς κελεύσματος infra ch. 92. In ἐπιστρέψαντες τὰς ναῦς we have another nautical term, signifying to wheel about a column of ships or a column of troops, as in Polyæn. v. 36. Pol. i. 25, 2, and 50, 5.

μετωπηδὸν ἔπλεον] 'sailed from the front,' as opposed to moving on either wing. So Herodot. vii. 100, τὰς δὲ νέας—ἀναγαγόντες—τὰς πρώρας ἐς γῆν τρέψαντες πάντες μετωπηδόν. Thus the expression sometimes stands in opposition to ἐπὶ κέρως, as in Lucian, de Conscr. Hist. ch. 37, τί ἐπὶ κέρως, καὶ τί ἐπὶ μετώπου; ὡς εἶχε τάχους ἕκαστος] 'with as much speed as every one could.' See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 315.

5. τινες] Bekker and Goeller cancel the word, and Poppo brackets it. But as it is far easier to account for its omission than its insertion, I have retained it even without the bracket, internal evidence being quite in its favour; inasmuch as this sense of τινες (answering to our some and the Fr. quelques) is not so well known, but that it has often escaped the copyists, if not the critics. It has precisely the same use at iii. 111, ἐς διακοσίους τινὰς αὐτῶν ἀπέκτειναν.

ὑπεκφεύγουσι — τὴν εὐρυχωρίαν] Of these words the full sense intended is, 'they avoid the wheeling of the Peloponnesian wing, [and effect their escape] to the open space;' not meaning the open sea, but that which might be called open in comparison with the τὰ στενά, which they had just passed, the mid-channel of the gulf, which there widens. Of the term ἐπικαταλαμβάνειν the sense is, 'to overtake after chasing.'

ἐξέωσαν πρὸς τὴν γῆν] 'drove them on shore,' (for ἐξώκειλαν,) a rare sense except in Thucyd., but which I have noted also in Arrian, E. A. ii. 22, 2, ἐς τὸν αἰγιαλὸν ἐξωθεῖν. Xen. Hist. iv. 3, 6, εἰς τὴν γῆν ἐξ., and elsewhere.

Of διέφθειραν the sense is, 'disabled them,' 'put them hors de combat,' as at i. 49 & 50. With ἐξένευσαν, 'swam out to shore,' compare Acts xxvii. 42, ἐκκολυμβήσας.

6. ἀναδούμενοι εἵλκον κενάς] See note on i. 50. The ἤδη following I can by no means agree with Bekker in cancelling, from two of the worst MSS.: for although the word involves some harshness in explanation, (standing, I conceive, for a clause, q. d. 'while the men were still in the ship,') yet in such a writer as Thucyd., to cancel a word on that ground would be very uncritical. Besides, we can by no means account for the insertion of the word, though we may easily for its omission. I have therefore, with Poppo and Goeller, retained it.

ἐπεσβαίνοντες] This, from the two prepositions in composition, is a forcible term, and one found in the best writers. So Xen. Hist. i. 1, 7, παρεβοήθει καὶ ἐπεσβαίνων τῷ ἵππῳ εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν.

Ναύπακτον, καὶ ‡ἴσχουσαι ἀντίπρωροι κατὰ [τὸ] Ἀπολλώνιον, παρεσκευάζοντο ἀμυνούμενοι, ἢν ἐς τὴν γῆν ἐπὶ σφᾶς πλέωσιν. 2. οἱ δὲ, παραγενόμενοι ὕστερον, ἐπαιώνιζόν τε ἅμα πλέοντες, ὡς νενικηκότες, καὶ τὴν μίαν ναῦν τῶν Ἀθηναίων τὴν ὑπόλοιπον ἐδίωκε Λευκαδία ναῦς μία πολὺ πρὸ τῶν ἄλλων. 3. ἔτυχε δὲ ὁλκὰς ὁρμοῦσα μετέωρος, περὶ ἣν ἡ Ἀττικὴ ναῦς φθάσασα [καὶ περιπλεύσασα], τῇ Λευκαδίᾳ διωκούσῃ ἐμβάλλει μέσῃ, καὶ καταδύει. 4. τοῖς μὲν οὖν Πελοποννησίοις, γενομένου τούτου ἀπροσδοκήτου τε καὶ παρὰ λόγον, φόβος ἐμπίπτει· καὶ ἅμα ἀτάκτως διώκοντες διὰ τὸ κρατεῖν, αἱ μέν τινες τῶν νεῶν καθεῖσαι τὰς κώπας ἐπέστησαν τοῦ πλοῦ, ἀξύμφορον

Ch. XCI. 1. ἴσχουσαι] Though Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller retain ἴσχουσαι, yet I suspect that σχοῦσαι, found in some of the best MSS. (including the Clar. à 1 manu) is the true reading; since the word occurs also infra iv. 129, σχόντες κατὰ τὸ Ποσειδώνιον· and here the ι before σ might easily arise from the ι preceding.

ἀντίπρωροι] 'with their beaks turned to seaward;' the contrary to what was usual; the beaks being turned to land, and the ships hauled on shore. Or, 'with the beaks turned towards the enemy;' which is the sense of the expression every where else in Thucyd., and in many passages of the historians, &c. Yet I have observed one example of the former sense in Xen. Hist. vi. 2, 16, ἀντιπρώρους καταστήσας τὰς τριηρεῖς. The use with the adjective is rare; yet I have noted it in Dio Cass. p. 563, 74, νῆες ἀντίπρωροι τεταγμένοι.

The τὸ after κατὰ,—though not found in some of the best MSS.,—I have not followed Bekker in cancelling, since it is strongly supported by the kindred passage at iv. 129, and others in which such names of temples are found. Internal evidence, too, (which, in such a case is stronger than external,) is all in its favour; it being surely more likely to be omitted than inserted.

παρεσκευάζοντο ἀμυνούμενοι] for ὡς ἀμυν., 'prepared themselves for resistance.' The ὡς is sometimes expressed, as in Xen. Cyr. i. 3, 11. v. 1, 12, and iv. 14.

3. φθάσ. καὶ περιπλ. τῇ Λευκαδίᾳ] The words καὶ περιπλεύσασα after φθ., are with reason cancelled by Bekker, and obelized by Poppo and Goeller, as insititious. Φθάσασα will thus be taken as a vox prægnans. And though no examples of this use are adduced, yet I have noted the following: Xen. Cyr. v. 4, 9, οἱ δὲ, φθάσαντες εἰς πόλιν. Arrian, E. A. vi. 7, 3, διώκων εἶχετο τῶν φθασάντων ἐς τὴν ἀποχώρησιν. This construction with εἰς is also mentioned by Gregor. Cor. p. 846. Poppo adds Appian, Syr. 36. The words may indeed seem countenanced by Lucian, iii. 38, καὶ τὸ μὲν φθάσας, καὶ καταδῦναι ἐς τὸν φωλεόν. Yet there we have only a plenior locutio. And as to the two reasons urged by Poppo and Arnold, for retaining the words — that 'they are by no means superfluous, and that, if removed, the awkwardness is as great as that involved in their being retained,—neither of these are of much force; for as to the latter, that rather makes against than for the words; and as to the former, it is not said that they are superfluous; nay, many persons would miss them, if absent. But so much easier is it to account for their insertion than for their omission, that they may justly be suspected of having come from the margin, and therefore ought to be bracketed, though, from the deficiency of external testimony, not absolutely cancelled.

4. τῶν νεῶν—πλοῦ] 'backed their oars, and stopped in their course.' Καθιέναι τὰς κώπ. signifies to let down the oars, the broad ends of which being held perpendicularly in the water, the effect of the current was prevented, and the vessel stopped. So in a kindred passage of Dio Cass. 626, 100, τὰς κώπας ἐς τὸ ὕδωρ τοῖς ναυταῖς καθεῖναι κελεύσας, ἀνέσχε χρόνον τινά. Of the above sense of ἐφίστημι, (which has been likewise misunderstood,) I have adduced many examples both of the word used absolutely, and with a genit. One must here suffice. Diod. Sic. vi. 225, ἐπιστῆναι τῆς πορείας. Of course ναῦς must be understood.

ἀξύμφορον] Render, not useless, but prejudicial: the word being here (like ἀχρεῖος, ἀλυσιτελὴς, and some others) used per meiosin; of which the earliest example found is, I believe, in Hesiod, Op. μάλ' ἀσύμφορός ἐστι φυτοῖσιν. See my note on Rom. iii. 12. By τὴν ἀντεξόρμησιν understand 'the enemy's anchorage, or station.' The term is a very rare one, though occasionally found in Dio Cass.

Ch. XCII. 1. ἀπὸ ἑνὸς κελεύσματος] i. e. ἐκ μιᾶς παραγγέλσεως: corresponding to what is with us vulgarly called the hip, before a general shouting: the latter here denoted by ἐμβοήσαντες, which is to be construed with ὥρμησαν ἐπ' αὐτούς.

4. κατέδυ] lit. 'went down.' Ἐξέπεσε, delatus est, for ἐξεβράσθη, 'was carried by the wind and current.'

5. ὅθεν ἀναγόμενοι ἐκράτησαν] Meaning, 'at the place from whence they had weighed and set out to gain this victory.' So we have ἐξ ἧς κρατεῖν δεῖ at vi. 68, fin., where see note.

τὰ νανάγια ὅσα πρὸς τῇ ἑαυτῶν ἦν, ἀνείλοντο] This was all that honour demanded of them. So at i 54, it is said, ἀνελόμενοι τὰ κατὰ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς νανάγια καὶ νεκρούς.

6. τῆς τροπῆς—διέφθειραν] Construe, ὑπὲρ, or ἕνεκα, τῆς τροπῆς (τῶν νεῶν) ἃς, &c.

Ch. XCIII. 1. πρὶν διαλῦσαι] 'before they (meaning, the commanders) had separated.' Ἐβούλοντο, διδαξάντων Μεγαρέων, ἀποπειρᾶσαι, 'they were disposed, at the counsel of the Megareans, to,' &c. Διδάσκω has here the sense suadeo, 'to advise,' as in Xen. Cyr. iii. 1, 8. An. iv. 5, 24. Hist. ii. 3, 18. v. 3, 17. Ἀποπειρᾶσαι stands for ἀπόπειραν ποιεῖσθαι, as often in Thucydides and the best Attic writers. At διὰ τὸ ἐπικρατεῖν supply αὐτοὺς, 'had the superiority.' So in Xen. Anab. vii. 1, 4, Thiem. we have, κατὰ θάλατταν ἐπικρατῆσαι.

2. λαβόντα τῶν ναυτῶν ἕκαστον τὴν κώπην καὶ τὸ ὑπηρέσιον καὶ τὸν τροπωτῆρα] Of these misunderstood (or at least imperfectly understood) terms τροπωτὴρ and ὑπηρέσιον I have given a full explanation in note in Transl. Respecting the former, indeed, little difference of opinion has existed; it being generally admitted to denote that thong by which the heavy oar of ancient vessels was fastened to the row-lock, or wooden framework formed to contain and support it, and called the κωπητὴρ, Lat. scalmus, Eng. thole. The τροπωτὴρ, then, was a thong answering to the hind-peg, τύλος, of our modern boats, in which the oar moves between two pegs. As to the ὑπηρέσιον, I have shown at large that the notion of Mitford, who supposes it to have been a port-valve, or oar-bag, is utterly inadmissible, and that it must have been, as the Schol., Phot., and Pollux are agreed, a seat-cover, meaning, not so much a cushion, as a sort of coarse carpeting, or rather a mere κῶας, or fleece well-fastened to the seat by straps; insomuch that the article sometimes had the name κῶας, (as in Theocr. Id. xxi. 12. x. 17. Appian, i. 797. Aristoph. Thesm. 1130,) or ἄσκωμα, which is found in Aristoph. Acharn. 540, seq. Now this article, if not indispensable, was yet so convenient, that few rowers would choose to be without the article; and indeed the oar and seat-cover are not unfrequently mentioned together as inseparable; e. g. Plut. Them. 4, Θεμιστοκλῆς εἰς ὑπηρέσιον καὶ κώπην συνέστειλε τὸν τῶν Ἀθηναίων δῆμον. Isocr. p. 688, Lang. οἱ μὲν ὑπηρέσιον καὶ κώπην ἔχοντες ἐμβαίνουσιν. Hermipp. ap. Hesych. in v. πανικτόν: Ὥρα τοίνυν μετ' ἐμοῦ χωρεῖν τὸν κωπητῆρα λαβόντα καὶ προσκεφάλαιον, ἵν' ἐς τὴν ναῦν ἐμπηδήσας ῥοθιάζῃς. Plato, Pol. i. p. 328, C, καθῆστο ἐπί τινος προσκεφαλαίου τε καὶ δίφρου. The above view has been entirely adopted by Poppo, and lately confirmed by an able treatise of Dr. Bishop, of Oxford, (inserted in Dr. Arnold's Appendix to his 2nd edition,) in which considerable light is thrown on this most obscure point of ancient nautics. He first shows at large the use of the τροπωτὴρ, and 2dly proves from thence, that the ὑπηρέσιον must have been a seat-cover, whose chief and only primary use was to prevent the sliding which would necessarily take place on a bare bench become polished by constant use, since every atom of this sliding motion would be deducted from the propelling force of the rower; and the greater the exertion, the greater would be the sliding tendency. He further observes, that seat-covers with us are in frequent use, and are considered indispensable in racing-boats.

Besides this use of the ὑπηρέσιον within the vessel, we may, as Thirlwall suggests, suppose it to have been convenient, even out of the vessel, to the rowers; who, it is well known, always slept on shore, and commonly in the open air. It may be imagined, then, that the oar and cushion were taken by each rower, not because these articles could not be had at Megara, but that the procuring them would lose time, and also (as Dr. Bishop suggests) from the recognised feeling that the rower and the oar, &c. were inseparable; not to say that every workman prefers and uses best the implement he has been accustomed to handle.

μὴ ἂν—ἐπιπλεύσειαν] On this peculiar use of ἂν with the opt. in a conditional proposition, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 520, obs. 3. Moreover, προσδοκία is followed by μὴ (lest) because the signification partakes of fear.

Of the words following, ἐπεὶ οὔτ' ἀπὸ—προαισθέσθαι, the purpose is to show why αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἐχώρουν εὐθύς· καὶ ἀφικόμενοι νυκτὸς, καὶ καθελκύσαντες ἐκ τῆς Νισαίας τὰς ναῦς, ἔπλεον ἐπὶ μὲν τὸν Πειραιᾶ οὐκέτι, ὥσπερ διενοοῦντο, καταδείσαντες τὸν κίνδυνον, (καί τις καὶ ἄνεμος λέγεται αὐτοὺς κωλῦσαι,) ἐπὶ δὲ τῆς Σαλαμῖνος τὸ ἀκρωτήριον τὸ πρὸς Μέγαρα ὁρῶν· καὶ φρούριον ἐπ' αὐτοῦ ἦν, καὶ νεῶν τριῶν φυλακὴ τοῦ μὴ ἐσπλεῖν Μεγαρεῦσι μηδ' ἐκπλεῖν μηδέν· τῷ τε φρουρίῳ προσέβαλον, καὶ τὰς τριήρεις ἀφείλκυσαν κενὰς, τήν τε ἄλλην Σαλαμῖνα ἀπροσδοκήτοις ἐπιπεσόντες ἐπόρθουν. XCIV. Ἐς δὲ τὰς Ἀθήνας φρυκτοί τε ᾖροντο πολέμιοι, καὶ ἔκπληξις ἐγένετο οὐδεμιᾶς τῶν κατὰ τὸν πόλεμον ἐλάσσων. 2. οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἐν τῷ ἄστει ἐς τὸν Πειραιᾶ ᾤοντο τοὺς πολεμίους ἐσπεπλευκέναι ἤδη, οἱ δ' ἐν τῷ Πειραιεῖ τήν τε Σαλαμῖνα ᾠήθησαι ἐνόμιζον, καὶ παρὰ σφᾶς ὅσον οὐκ ἐσπλεῖν αὐτούς· ὅπερ ἂν, εἰ ἐβουλήθησαν μὴ κατοκνῆσαι, ῥᾳδίως ἂν ἐγένετο, καὶ οὐκ ἂν ἄνεμος ἐκώλυσε. 3. βοηθήσαντες δὲ ἅμ' ἡμέρᾳ πανδημεὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐς τὸν Πειραιᾶ, ναῦς τε καθεῖλκον, καὶ ἐσβάντες κατὰ σπουδὴν καὶ πολλῷ θορύβῳ, ταῖς μὲν ναυσὶν ἐπὶ τὴν Σαλαμῖνα ἔπλεον, τῷ πεζῷ there was no such expectation: though here a certain difficulty meets us, occasioned by extreme brevity, a harshness of use in οὔτε, (since, as Poppo observes, 'Prius οὔτε non ad ἀπὸ τοῦ προφανοῦς, sed ad totam priorem enunciationem, et potissimum ad τολμῆσαι spectat,') and a still greater harshness in the word ἐνόμιζον having (at least as Goell. thinks) to be supplied from προσδοκία ἦν: though it is better to suppose that προσδοκία ἦν is to be repeated here, in the sense 'they expected.' The connexion and general sense is well traced by Arnold in the following paraphrase: 'Nobody had thought of the enemy's attempting to surprise Piræus; for as to the other conceivable case, that of a deliberate and open attack upon it, no one had supposed that they would either venture such a thing, or, if they should venture it, that it could fail to be discovered in time.' 'Thus (continues he) Bekker's correction, οὔτε — οὔτε for vulg. οὐδὲ — οὐδὲ, appears necessary:' and so thought Poppo; in deference to whose authority, added to that of Bekker, I have adopted it, but with some hesitation, because not a single MS. seems to have the reading.

Of καθ' ἡσυχίαν the sense (notwithstanding what Poppo says) must certainly be that sometimes found in our quietly, or coolly, which have then an implied notion of deliberation. In the words following, the two negatives in μὴ οὐκ ἂν make an affirmative; the infin. προαισθέσθαι depending on μὴ οὐκ: on which use see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 609.

3. καί τις καὶ ἄνεμος, &c.] In this use of the two καί's there is not, what Steph. and Duker recognise, a pleonasm; the former one bearing the sense and; the latter, that of too, or likewise.

ἐσπλεῖν—ἐκπλεῖν] Meaning, 'to be imported and exported.' Neut. for pass., as in Athen. 343, A, ὄψου ἓξ μηδὲν εἰσπλεῖν. See also iii. 51, and iv. 67.

CH. XCIV. 1. φρυκτοὶ ᾖροντο πολέμιοι] 'war-lights were hoisted.' Adj. for subst. and preposition, or rather a phrase. These φρυκτοί, or πυρσοί, were called either πολέμιοι, or φίλιοι, according to the different purposes for which they were employed. See Valckn. on Herodot. vii. 182, and Blomf. on Æschyl. Ag. 32. In οὐδεμιᾶς — ἐλάσσων we have an Attic meiosis, as in οὐδενὸς ἧσσων, οὐδενὸς ἕστερος, &c.

2. εἰ ἐβουλήθησαν μὴ κατοκνῆσαι] Meaning, 'if they had been disposed not to hesitate and stop short through fear.' The verb, in this absolute use, has generally a negative accompanying it, as here and in Dio Cass. 788, 9. Καὶ οὐκ ἂν ἄνεμος ἐκώλυσε, 'and the wind had not hindered them:' a circumstance recorded in order to show that they turned from the enterprise, not merely because of any such natural hinderance, but also because their courage failed them.

4. ὅ τι] I have, with Poppo and Goeller, received this on the conjecture of Abresch, for ὅτε, which is, however, retained by Bekker, though ἔστιν ὅτε can only mean sometimes, not somewhat, which the context here requires.

διὰ χρόνου καθελκυσθεῖσαι] Meaning, 'drawn [to sea] after lying some time in the dry-dock.' Καὶ οὐδὲν στέγουσαι, 'and by no means water-tight, or seaworthy;' lit. 'not keeping out the water.' The word ὕδωρ is expressed in Æschyl. Suppl. 141. Στέγειν is more frequently used of vessels that will not hold water. So in Plato ap. Steph. Thes. we have, οὗ τὸ ὕδωρ ἀγγεῖον οὐδὲν στέγει. Examples, however, of the term used as here, occur in Plut. Philop. ch. 14, ναῦν παλαιὰν δι' ἐτῶν τεσσ. κατασπάσας ἐπλήρωσεν· ὥστε, μὴ στεγούσας, κινδυνεῦσαι τοὺς πολίτας. Lucian, t. i. 379, τοῦ πυθμένος στέγειν οὐ δυναμένου. The phrase μὴ στέγειν is also used of a leaky vessel in Plut. de Garrul. 1 & 12, de Sanit. Tuend. 11, and de Tranquil. An. 17, though figuratively and by a simile.

Ch. XCV. Our historian now proceeds to recount certain operations on the great scale, which were set in motion and carried forward as a diversion in favour of Athens, (being a set-off against the check which her power had recently received in the summer of this same year in Chalcidia and Bottiæa,) by Sitalces, king of the Odrysian Thracians: as a preface to which he recounts the origin, progress, and actual state of the kingdom of Odrysia. First, however, he relates the immediate origin of the war of the king of Odrysia with the Macedonian monarch.

1. δύο ὑποσχέσεις] Supply διὰ (which word, indeed, was formerly in the text, but has been, with reason, excluded by the later editors, as merely proceeding from the margin) or κατὰ, as in a kindred passage at iv. 87. Render, 'this intending to enforce, and that himself to fulfil,' or, in other and more explicit terms, 'on account of two promises,—one made to him, which he intended to enforce; the other made by him, which he meant to perform:' a quaint out-of-the-way mode of expression, of which it must be confessed that it involves a needless obscurity, and introduces verbal point and antithesis, where the sentiment is too obvious to accord with phraseology so recondite and overstrained. Better would it have been simply to express it thus: 'He went on the expedition as well to fulfil his own engagement, as to compel Perdiccas to fulfil those which he had entered into with him.' The same remark may be applied to a not dissimilarly worded passage in the epistle to the Hebrews, vi. 18, (involving a similar obscurity from a similar cause,) ἵνα διὰ δύο πραγμάτων ἀμεταθέτων, ἐν οἷς, &c.

Of ἀναπράττω the sense here found, (namely, τὰ ἄνωθεν ἐξ ὑποσχέσεως ὀφειλόμενα εἰσπράττειν,) however rare, is probably the primary one.

ὄντα, μὴ καταγάγοι ἐπὶ βασιλείᾳ, ἃ ὑπεδέξατο, οὐκ ἐπετέλει· τοῖς τε Ἀθηναίοις αὐτὸς ὡμολογήκει, ὅτε τὴν ξυμμαχίαν ἐποιεῖτο τὸν ἐπὶ Θρᾴκης Χαλκιδικὸν πόλεμον καταλύσειν. 3. ἀμφοτέρων οὖν ἕνεκα τήν τε ἔφοδον ἐποιεῖτο, καὶ τὸν τε Φιλίππου υἱὸν Ἀμύνταν ὡς ἐπὶ βασιλείᾳ τῶν Μακεδόνων ἦγε, καὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων πρέσβεις, οἳ ἔτυχον παρόντες τούτων ἕνεκα, καὶ ἡγεμόνα Ἄγνωνα· ἔδει γὰρ καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ναυσί τε καὶ στρατιᾷ ὡς πλείστῃ ἐπὶ τοὺς Χαλκιδέας παραγενέσθαι. XCVI. Ἀνίστησιν οὖν, ἐκ τῶν Ὀδρυσῶν ὁρμώμενος, πρῶτον μὲν τοὺς ἐντὸς τοῦ Αἵμου τε ὄρους καὶ τῆς Ῥοδόπης Θρᾷκας, ὅσων ἦρχε μέχρι θαλάσσης, ἐς τὸν Εὔξεινόν τε πόντον καὶ τὸν Ἑλλήσποντον· ἔπειτα τοὺς ὑπερβάντι Αἷμον Γέτας, καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα μέρη ἐντὸς τοῦ Ἴστρου ποταμοῦ πρὸς θάλασσαν μᾶλλον τὴν τοῦ Εὐξείνου πόντου κατῴκητο· εἰσὶ δ' οἱ Γέται καὶ οἱ ταύτῃ ὅμοροί τε τοῖς Σκύθαις καὶ ὁμόσκευοι, πάντες ἱπποτοξόται.

3. ἐπὶ βασιλείᾳ] The ἐπὶ here, as also a little further on, denotes purpose.

Ch. XCVI. In this chapter is contained a list enumerating the different tribes which followed Sitalces to the field, which is similar to several found in Hdot., especially at vii. 61—99, where are enumerated the various nations that followed Xerxes in his expedition against Greece; and in which doubtless the historian had in view the far-famed κατάλογος in Hom. Il. ii. 494, sqq.

1. ἀνίστησιν—τοὺς ἐντὸς, &c.] evocat, 'calls forth [into the field],' as at ch. 68, 1, though rarely in any other author but Thucyd. The only instance I have noted is in Arrian, E. A. v. 22, 3, ξύν τε τῇ σφετέρᾳ ἐννάμει καὶ πολλὰ ἄλλα ἔθνη—ἀναστήσαντα. Similar is the use of the Latin excieo.

τοὺς ὑπερβάντι Αἷμον Γέτας] Equiv. to τοὺς ὑπὲρ Αἵμου, 'those on the other side beyond Hæmus:' an idiom peculiarly Ionic, as found in Homer, Herodot. &c. It partakes of the wordiness of ancient diction; since, as Dukas observes, when resolved into the full expression of the meaning intended, the words will stand thus: τοὺς Γέτας οἱ τινες φανήσονταί τινι ὑπερβάντι τὸν Αἷμον. Of the next words, ὅσα ἄλλα—κατῴκητο, (obscure from extreme brevity,) the full sense is well expressed by Poppo, thus: 'et quæcunque aliæ nationes iis Istrum [et quidem] magis [quam Getæ mediterranea potissimum incolentes] ad Euxinum degebant.' If by ἄλλα μέρη be understood the nations, (as Poppo interprets,) κατῴκητο may be taken actively, according to the use of the verb at i. 120; but it may mean the parts, i. e. tracts, of country. Poppo remarks on the strangeness of the expression, θάλασσα ἡ τοῦ Εὐξείνου πόντου, which, he thinks, may be defended on the ground that πόντος has coalesced with Εὔξ. into a name: but the strangeness in question will be less, if we take θάλασσα here to mean, as it may, the sea-coasts; which, indeed, I conceive to have been the original signification of the word, though afterwards confined to cases in which the word occurs with a verb of motion, as Eurip. Hel. 1543, πρὸς θάλασσαν ἐστάλη. Sometimes, however, it has place where motion is only implied, as when the word occurs followed by πρὸς, in the sense towards, or by ἐπὶ used in that sense. Such is, I conceive, the sense which the word bears in a passage of Acts xvii. 14, πορεύεσθαι ὡς ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν, 'to go towards the sea,' meaning the sea-coast; Paul being conducted on his road in that direction, that it might be supposed he was going to embark for Asia. So also, by the same idiom, we say, 'to go to the sea,' meaning the sea-coast. Finally, the above interpretation is, I would observe, placed beyond doubt by a passage of Herodot. ii. 33, where we have, τελευτᾷ δὲ ὁ Ἴστρος ἐς θάλασσαν τὴν τοῦ Εὐξείνου πόντου.

ὅμοροι—ὁμόσκευοι] Evidently imitated from these are the words of Dio Cass. 762, 71, Σκορδίσκοις ὁμόροις τε αὐτῶν καὶ ὁμοσκεύοις οὖσι. The word ὁμόσκευος is rare; though I have noted it elsewhere in Lucian, ii. 557. Dionys. Hal. Ant. ch. 11. It refers not to arms only, but also to accoutrements, including dress; for σκεῦος is a very general term, and

2. παρεκάλει δὲ καὶ τῶν ὀρεινῶν Θρᾳκῶν πολλοὺς τῶν αὐτονόμων καὶ μαχαιροφόρων, οἳ Δῖοι καλοῦνται, τὴν Ῥοδόπην οἱ πλεῖστοι οἰκοῦντες· καὶ τοὺς μὲν μισθῷ ἔπειθεν, οἱ δ' ἐθελονταὶ ξυνηκολούθουν. 3. ἀνίστη δὲ καὶ Ἀγριᾶνας καὶ Λαιαίους καὶ ἄλλα ὅσα ἔθνη Παιονικὰ ὧν ἦρχε· καὶ ἔσχατοι τῆς ἀρχῆς οὗτοι ἦσαν μέχρι Γραικῶν Παιόνων καὶ τοῦ Στρυμόνος ποταμοῦ, ὃς ἐκ τοῦ ‡ Σκόμβρου ὄρους διὰ Γραικῶν καὶ Λαιαίων ῥεῖ, οὗ ὡρίζετο ἡ ἀρχὴ may denote the latter as well as the former.

2. παρεκάλει—πολλοὺς] i. e. 'invited them to come and join the expedition.' The full construction occurs in Herodot. vii. 158, 1, ἐτολμήσατε ἐμὲ σύμμαχον ἐπὶ τὸν βάρβαρον παρακαλέοντες ἐλθεῖν: the elliptical one is frequent in Xen., in the sense ad belli societatem aliquem arcessere. Τῶν αὐτονόμων. So Arrian, E. A. i. 1, 6, ἐμβαλεῖν εἰς Θρᾴκην τὴν τῶν αὐτονόμων καλουμένων Θρᾳκῶν. Of μαχαιροφόρων, the sense is, 'armed with a long sword,' like the Highland claymore, such as the Asiatic mountaineers generally used. So in Æschyl. Pers. 56, we have, τὸ μαχαιροφόρον τὸ ἔθνος ἐκ πάσης τῆς Ἀσίας ἕπεται. And in Xen. Cyr. vi. 2, 20, mention is made of these independent Thracians, as μεμισθωμένοι πολλοὶ and μαχαιροφόροι. They were, it seems, like the Swiss of modern Europe, ready to take pay from any state that might engage their services.

μισθῷ ἔπειθεν] 'prevailed on to take pay,' engaged for pay. Ἐθελονταί, 'as volunteers,' meaning, without pay; as i. 60, and iii. 20.

3. Σκόμβρου] The reading here is very doubtful, and consequently disputed. For vulg. Σκομίου, which has been retained by Ha. and Bekk., and preferred by Niebuhr, Poppo and Goell. edit Σκόμβρου, which is found in three of the best MSS. (to which add the Cod. Clarend. à primâ manu,) and is supported by two others, and confirmed by a passage of Aristot. Meteor. i. 13. I have thought proper to follow his example, because I find very little besides the bulk of the MSS. to countenance Σκομίου. Moreover, while in Σκομίου we have a name for which no reason can be given, this is by no means the case with Σκόμβρου; for it is the name of a certain fish, from a fancied resemblance to which, as in a multitude of other cases, the mountain in question, we may suppose, obtained its name. The Scombrus, then, corresponds to the Ghinstendal of our modern maps. As to the question agitated, whether by τοῦ Σκ. ὄρους, at § 4, we are to understand the same mountain, or some other, we may justly, with Gatterer, Poppo, and Goeller, regard it as the same, since no other is mentioned. Yet, though the same, the same part of it cannot be meant, but rather that end of the chain of Ghinstendal, where it abuts upon the cross-chain of Mount Rhodope, forming a remarkable peak, from whence proceeds the Hebrus, the Nessus, and the Strymon, the most central point of the continent, and, probably, the highest of all the great summits of the Balkan. Insomuch, that though Σκομίου be corrupt, we might suspect our author to have written Σκοπίου, scil. ὄρους (the letters π and μ being not unfrequently confounded); and thus Σκόπιον, scil. ὄρος, would mean, 'the mountain of the look-out' (σκοπιά), as affording from its summit a prospect over the whole country. That the adjective did exist, is certain from its derived subst. σκοπιά, which is of frequent occurrence in Hom. and Herodot. As serving to show how easily the mistake might arise, I would observe, that in the Appendix to Dioscorides, p. 473, among other names which were anciently given to the wild fig, is Σκόπιον, for which manifestly corrupt reading the true one is doubtless Σκόβριον, which is confirmed by the old Latin version, Scorpion, for which read Scobrium. The wild fig was, we may suppose, so called from some fancied resemblance to the little fish so called.

The other names given to the great chain of mountains which separated Thrace from Macedonia and Dalmatia were in general significant. Thus, Mount Scardus (or Scordus, the same word, by a frequent metathesis) signifies cleft, or craggy, from the Gothic and Ang.-Sax. scearan, 'to cut, cleave;' being the partic. pass. sceared, scear'd. And so equivalent in meaning to our names Rockcliffe and Scarborough, i. e. Scard-burgh, meaning, clefted-mount; (burg being primarily equiv. to berg, a ragged cliff, an expression found in Is. ii. 21.) a name this highly descriptive of the castle-hill of Scarborough,

οὗ ὡρίζετο ἡ ἀρχὴ τὰ πρὸς Παίονας] 'where his dominion is bounded on the side of Paeonia.' So, just after, we have, τὰ πρὸς Τριβαλλοὺς—ὡρίζον. In either case κατὰ must be supplied. There is another example of this syntax in a kindred passage of Æschyl. Suppl. 270, Ὁρίζομαι δὲ τήνδε Περῥαιβῶν χθόνα, Πίνδου τε τἀπέκεινα, Παιόνων πέλας, Ὄρη τε Δωδωναῖα. Yet more apposite is Plato, Menex. 405, τὴν ἀρχὴν ὡρίσατο μέχρι Σκυθῶν. In this use of ὁρίζ. we may recognise a sensus pragmaticus: the meaning of ὁρίζεσθαι being, 'to reach as far as and to stop at.' So at i. 71 we have, μέχρι τοῦδε ὡρισθω ὑμῶν ἡ βραδυτής.

4. παρήκουσι] 'stretch, extend,' as in Herodot. iii. 114, παρήκει πρὸς ἑσπέρην ἥλιον ἡ Α. χώρη.

5. ἔρημον] An epithet signifying not desertum, rough, and uncultivated, but solitary, namely, by its height, standing apart and remote from the country around. So in Herodot. i. 117, by ἔρημον οὖρος is meant, 'remote from human habitations.' And so ὁδὸς ἔρημος in Arrian, E. A. iii. 21, 11. and Acts viii. 26: an epithet this, quite appropriate to a high peaked mountain, such as the present is represented to be in the best maps, something like a Mont-Blanc in Switzerland, Ararat, or Mount Sinai. And such is doubtless what our great epic poet meant to denote by 'the secret top of Horeb, or of Sinai,' namely, far removed from the haunts of men. In this sense, too, Xenoph. Cyr. iii. 2, 1, uses the expression ὄρη ἔρημα. And so Tacit. Agr. 38, vastum ubi silentium, secreti colles.

Ch. XCVII. In order to give a just idea of the power of Sitalces, our historian now succinctly, and in a cursory manner, treats on the size of his dominions, and the revenues (constituting the very sinews of war) they yielded.

1. ἐπὶ θάλασσαν καθήκουσα] 'as far as it reaches down to the sea-coast,' i. e. taking the line of its sea-coast. Αὕτη—γῆ, 'this tract is to be sailed round by the shortest possible course:' of which adjectival use of περίπλους I know no other example. This rude and imperfect mode of denoting the distance along a coast-line by the number of days' sail, and on land by days' journeys, is one which bears the stamp of remote antiquity, and is found in Herodot. It was one not ill adapted to the still seas and steady winds of the Levant summer-season, mariners coasting along from headland to headland, and so taking the shortest course, τὰ ξυντομώτατα, as it is here said. Similarly in Herodot. iv. 86, we have the distance of a day's voyage estimated at about 700 stadia, and of a night's voyage at 600.

ἢν ἀεὶ κατὰ πρύμναν ἱστῆται] 'if the wind stand at the poop,' i. e. be quite favourable. Ἵστασθαι is used of such a wind as blows steadily from any quarter; and although the term is most properly employed in such a phrase as κατὰ βορέαν ἑστηκώς, vii. 104, yet it is sometimes associated with the name of such a part of the ship as the wind may bear upon. So Pollux, i. 110, ἀνέμου κατὰ πρώραν ἑστηκότος. Dorville on Charit. p. 627, cites from Long. i. 12, ἄνεμος κατὰ πρύμναν εἱστήκει.

νηῒ στρογγύλῃ] i. e. 'a ship of burden;' so called from its round form, as distinguished from that of ships of war, called long ships, which were flat and shallow, for speed, but of a deep form, as being intended to carry freight. 'These ships (observes Arnold) were always worked by sails, and continued their voyage by night as well as by day, which ships of war did not.'

δὲ τὰ ξυντομώτατα ἐξ Ἀβδήρων ἐς Ἴστρον ἀνὴρ εὔζωνος ἐνδεκαταῖος τελεῖ. 2. τὰ μὲν πρὸς θάλασσαν τοσαύτη ἦν· ἐς ἤπειρον δὲ ἀπὸ Βυζαντίου ἐς Λαιαίους καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν Στρυμόνα, (ταύτῃ γὰρ διὰ πλείστου ἀπὸ θαλάσσης ἄνω ἐγίγνετο,) ἡμερῶν ἀνδρὶ εὐζώνῳ τριῶν καὶ δέκα ἀνύσαι. 3. φόρος τε ἐκ πάσης τῆς βαρβάρου καὶ τῶν Ἑλληνίδων πόλεων, ὅσον προσῆξαν ἐπὶ Σεύθου,—ὃς ὕστερον Σιτάλκου βασιλεύσας πλεῖστον δὴ ἐποίησε,—τετρακοσίων ταλάντων ἀργυρίου μάλιστα δύναμις, ἃ χρυσὸς καὶ ἄργυρος εἴη· καὶ ὧρα οὐκ ἐλάσσω τούτων χρυσοῦ τε καὶ ἀργύρου προσεφέρετο, χωρὶς δὲ ὅσα ὑφαντά τε καὶ λεῖα, καὶ ἡ ἄλλη κατασκευή· καὶ οὐ μόνον αὐτῷ, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς παραδυναστεύουσί τε καὶ γενναίοις Ὀδρυσῶν.

εὔζωνος] 'lightly accoutred.' So Herodot. i. 72, εὐζώνῳ ἀνδρὶ πέντε ἡμέραι ἀναισιμοῦνται: and i. 104, τριήκοντα ἡμερέων εὐζώνῳ ὁδός. Lucian, iii. 5. Pausan. i. 44, 10. ii. 15, 1. v. 5, 5, and other writers, even the Latin. So Livy, ix. 9, 'tridui iter expedito erat.'

3. προσῆξαν] lit. brought in, as we say of revenue of every kind. Of this use, which is rare, an example occurs in Pol. v. 30, 5, αἱ πόλεις δυσχερῶς προσῆγον τὰς εἰσφοράς. And so Hesych. explains προσάγει by προσφέρει, (which term is found a little further on, on the same subject,) and we have προσάγειν in the Septuagint. In the phrase, a little after, ἀργυρίου δύναμις, the word δύναμις bears the sense value, also found in Xen. Cyr. viii. 4, 15. Anab. vii. 7, 21. Œc. ix. 15. Veetig. iv. 16. And so the Latin, magna vis auri. Of ἃ χρυσὸς καὶ ἄργυρος εἴη, the sense is, 'so much of it as consisted in gold and silver:' the opt. being here used (as Haack and Arnold observe) because our author is speaking not of the income of one particular year, but of what came in year by year: see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 527.

ὧρα] In this circumstance of the royal revenue being thus made up of tribute, gifts in money or goods, &c., we have that which peculiarly savours of oriental custom, and one of the remotest antiquity. So in Herodot. iii. 97, it is said of the Persians, οὔτε δὲ φόρον μὲν οὐδένα ἐτάχθησαν φέρειν, ὧρα δὲ ἀγινέουσι: and further on, ταῦτα μὲν ὧρα πάρεξ τοῦ φόρου βασιλέϊ ἐκομίζοντο: also iii. 89, ἐπὶ Κύρου ἄρχοντος—ἦν κατεστηκὸς οὐδὲν φόρου πέρι, ἀλλὰ ὧρα ἀγινέον. Thus also the Jewish kings were at first supported almost entirely by presents: see 1 Sam. xvi. 20. 2 Sam. viii. 2. 2 Chron. xxvi. 8. And in after-times, at least up to the time of David, these formed an important branch of the royal revenue; and even under Herod they constituted a no inconsiderable item: see Jos. Ant. xvii. 8, 1, and 13, 2. Finally, from Bernier's description of Hindoostan, it appears that the revenue of the Great Mogul was made up in this very way. 'The gifts (says he) in gold, silver, precious stones, and other valuable moveables, amounted to a very considerable sum.' Hence it is well observed by Gibbon, Hist. Rom. ix. 13, that the ancient oriental custom of never appearing without gifts before a sovereign or a superior, seems analogous to the idea of sacrifice, still more ancient and universal.

ὅσα ὑφαντά τε καὶ λεῖα] Meaning, 'stuffs both embroidered with the needle, and plain.' Ὑφαντά, standing for ἐννυφ., or, as the Schol. explains, πεποικιλμένα. So in Exod. xxviii. 6, we have ἔργον ὑφαντὸν ποικιλτοῦ, and xxvi. 32: and in Eurip. Ion 1146, ἐνῆν δ' ὑφανταὶ γράμμασιν τοιαίδ' ὑφαί: and Jos. Ant. iii. 2, 4, (a passage evidently imitated from the present,) ὅσα τε ὑφαντὰ—ἥ τε ἄλλη κατασκευή. The term λεῖα is explained by the Schol. λιτά, which word is used br Menander with χλανίδιον. This, however, does not present the full force of the term, which is that of smooth in surface, as opposed to the raised work of embroidery: see Herodot. ii. 105, and iii. 47. That these embroidered stuffs were of great value, is shown by Homer's not unfrequently uniting the two terms χρυσὸν and ὑφαντά. By the term κατασκευὴ is denoted furniture of every kind, especially wearing apparel. So in Xen. Anab. vii. 3, 27, speaking of the persons who presented gifts to Seuthes, it is said, ἄλλος ἐδωρήσατο ἱματία τῇ γυναικὶ καὶ Τ. ἐδωρήσατο—τάπιδα.

4. κατεστήσαντο γὰρ τοὐναντίον τῆς Περσῶν βασιλείας τὸν νόμον, ὄντα μὲν καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις Θραξὶ, λαμβάνειν μᾶλλον ἢ διδόναι· (καὶ αἴσχιον ἦν αἰτηθέντα μὴ δοῦναι ἢ αἰτήσαντα μὴ τυχεῖν,) ὅμως δὲ, either 'those who had influence with him,' (in which case the expression will answer to another at i. 138, γίγνεται παρ' αὐτῷ μέγας.) or, if this be thought—as it is by Arnold—to confound the different meanings of δυναστεύειν and δύνασθαι, we may, with Poppo, render, 'qui apud regem auctoritate pollebant,' meaning, 'those who held power under the king.' So Goell. understands the expression to denote, minores dominos et quasi regulos, infra regem positos. So Scuthes, mentioned at ch. 101, was παραδυναστεύων Sitalcæ (though there, I would observe, the expression is, μέγιστον μεθ' ἑαυτὸν δυνάμενος): confirmatory of this latter view are the following passages which I have noted in Dio Cass. 714, 14, πάντα πρὸς τὰ τῶν ἀεὶ κρατούντων τῶν τε παραδυναστευόντων σφίσι βουλήματα πράττεσθαι: and 1092, 98, οὐ γὰρ ὁμοίως ἄλλοι τε τινὲς παραδυναστεύουσι καὶ αὐτοὶ αὐταρκοῦσιν (where, for ἄλλοι, I conj. ἄλλοις): and 1267, παραδ. τῷ Σεβήρῳ: and 1335, 18, αὐτῷ τῷ Ἀρταξάνῃ καὶ τοῖς παραδυναστεύουσιν αὐτῷ. Synes. p. 18, A, προεντεύξασθαι τοῖς βασιλεῖ παραδυναστεύουσι.

4. κατεστήσαντο — διδόναι] Render: 'For they (meaning the king, and his courtiers or nobles,) have established the custom,—one, too, which indeed subsists among the rest of the Thracians,—in contrariety to that of the Persian kingdom, "to receive rather than to give;" it being there, it seems, the fashion to give rather than receive.' Arnold here queries, 'Does this allude to its being the frequent practice of the kings of Persia to send gifts as a reward to any meritorious service; or is it a tribute to the uprightness, or at least the honourable pride of the Persian satraps, that they scorned to receive presents from those who applied to them for justice; whereas amongst the Thracian chiefs nothing was to be done without a bribe?' I answer, it may allude to both: but the chief purpose was to censure the Thracians, by contrasting their custom with that of the Persians: though we must not push the meaning of the commendation on the latter further than our author intended it. He does not say that the king and his courtiers never received, but that they practised giving rather than receiving. At the same time, it was, doubtless, then much as it is now, at the court of Persia, whose monarch, indeed, gives much; but as his revenue, in a great measure, depends on the gifts he receives, he must receive much: and this he does from all his courtiers and his wealthier subjects. Those again, in order to be able to make such presents, are compelled to receive gifts from such as seek their influence at court; so that the difference which Thucydides mentions, was more in appearance than in reality. The chief point of dissimilarity consisted in this, that the Persians were (as they still continue to be) a generous, liberal people; and though the king and courtiers might receive much, they readily parted with it to others. Not so the Thracians, who were always accounted a sordid and avaricious people. At the same time, it is to be borne in mind, that these gifts among the Thracians, especially when made to sovereigns, were in reality taxes, like what our modern customs at first were, consisting of a certain portion of the articles imported from foreign countries; and, probably, such was very much the case in Persia,—with this difference, however, that among the Odryse such presents were exacted with the utmost severity and rapacity, as is manifestly suggested by the parenthetical remark, καὶ αἴσχιον ἦν αἰτηθέντα μὴ δοῦναι ἢ αἰτήσαντα μὴ τυχεῖν, in which we have a cutting sarcasm on the base rapacity of the Thracian courtiers and nobles; who ought rather to have been ashamed to ask, than their inferiors not to give. If this be duly borne in mind, a modern reader will not, as Thirlwall says, 'be inclined to think the remark, that among the Thracians it was the fashion for the great to receive, and their inferiors to pay, more singular than the custom.' And true it is, that in all countries, the great receive, and their inferiors pay. Here, however, the expression used is not pay, but give: and though these gifts, when made to the sovereigns, were little else than taxes or customs,—yet when made to great men for good offices, they were essentially gifts, and were, it seems, extorted with unrelenting rapacity;—insomuch that no one could get any thing done (not even justice could be obtained) without a bribe.

ὅμως δὲ—ἐπὶ πλέον αὐτῷ ἐχρήσαντο] Here ὅμως δὲ stands in opposition to the preceding μέν: the meaning being, as κατὰ τὸ δύνασθαι, ἐπὶ πλέον αὐτῷ ἐχρήσαντο· οὐ γὰρ ἦν πρᾶξαι οὐδὲν μὴ διδόντα δῶρα. 5. ὥστε ἐπὶ μέγα ἦλθεν ἡ βασιλεία ἰσχύος· τῶν γὰρ ἐν τῇ Εὐρώπῃ ὅσαι μεταξὺ τοῦ Ἰονίου κόλπου καὶ τοῦ Εὐξείνου πόντου μεγίστη ἐγένετο χρημάτων προσόδῳ καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ εὐδαιμονίᾳ, ἰσχύϊ δὲ μάχης καὶ στρατοῦ πλήθει πολὺ δευτέρα μετὰ τὴν Σκυθῶν. 6. ταύτῃ δὲ ἀδύνατα ἐξισοῦσθαι οὐχ ὅτι τὰ ἐν τῇ Εὐρώπῃ, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ ἔθνος ἓν πρὸς ἓν οὐκ ἔστιν ὅ τι δυνατὸν Σκύθαις ὁμογνωμονοῦσι πᾶσιν ἀντιστῆναι. 7. οὐ μὴν οὐδ' ἐς τὴν ἄλλην εὐβουλίαν καὶ ξύνεσιν περὶ τῶν παρόντων ἐς τὸν βίον

Poppo points out, that the custom in question was prevalent indeed among all the Thracians; but, nevertheless, that the Odrysians used it more than the rest, κατὰ τὸ δύνασθαι, 'by reason of their [greater] power [so to do].' Though, indeed, the interpretation of the words proposed by me in Transl. (which is that adopted by Osiander and Klein) may be the true one,—namely, in proportion as their power increased; or, as Thirlwall similarly expresses it, 'as the power of the state increased, this usage was more rigidly enforced.'

5. ὥστε] 'accordingly,' adeo ut; with reference to what preceded, respecting the great extent of the Odrysian territory. The full meaning intended is, that, 'from the gradual amalgamation of various Thracian and barbarian tribes into one state, the kingdom had attained to a considerable height of power.' Ἐπὶ μέγα ἔρχεσθαι, followed by a gen., is a phrase frequent in the best writers from Herodot. downwards.

εὐδαιμονίᾳ] Meaning, prosperity in general. So Herodot. v. 4, ἔστι ἐν πάσῃ εὐδαιμονίῃ, and v. 28. Xen. Laced. i. 2, 2. Procop. 59, 2. Ἰσχύϊ μάχης, 'in military strength;' the genit. here being for the accus. with πρὸς, ἐπὶ, or εἰς, as in Sept. Psalm xviii. 39, and Dionys. Hal. Ant. 149, 19, ἐν ἰσχύει τῶν ὅπλων. Of the words, a little after, πολὺ δευτέρα μετὰ τὴν Σκυθῶν, the sense is, lit. 'was by far second after the Scythian,' meaning, inferior to the Scythian. Of which mode of expression,—rare, like many others in our author,—an example occurs in a passage of Soph. Œd. Col. 1228, referred to by Arnold; with whom, however, I cannot agree in understanding the meaning to be, 'although inferior to the Scythians, yet far superior to all others.' The comparison here is merely with the former, and has nothing to do with others. And with πολὺ δευτ. here we may compare πολὺ πρῶτος elsewhere in our author, and in Homer. In short, the force of the πολύ is merely to show that the second is decidedly such, there being a great distance between the first and second. What there might be between the second and third, is not said. That circumstance is barely intimated in the saying of Afer Domitius, in answer to the question of Quintilian, 'Who came next to Homer?'—'Secundus est Virgilius, primo tamen propior quam tertio.' Now, in the present instance, it would be 'tertio tamen propior quam primo.'

6. ἓν πρὸς ἓν] This qualification, nation against nation, is thrown in with allusion to Persia; the empire of the Persians being, as Arnold observes, far greater than that of the Scythians, although the single nation of the Persians, if stripped of its subject people, was inferior to the nation of the Scythians.

7. οὐ μὴν οὐδέ] On a careful reconsideration of this obscurely-worded sentence, I am induced to finally coincide in the view of the sense taken by Poppo, Goell., and Arnold, as expressed in the following version: 'But yet I do not say either, that in other points, as regards prudence or sagacity in the management of matters of present moment, and the occasions of common life, that they are on a level with other people.' True it is that the expression οὐχ ὁμοιοῦσθαι might signify, what some suppose it does,—by such a meiosis as is found at v. 103. vi. 16, and Eurip. Bacch. 1346,—'to be superior to.' But that sense could not, as Niebuhr has shown, be justified by facts, and is forbidden by the very purpose of the sentence; which is, as he says, 'to explain why the Scythians were not a great and united people, and thus able to subdue the neighbouring nations.' On this use of οὐ μὴν οὐδέ, see Vig. vii. 8, (note,) and Hoogev. de Partic. p. 486. By εὐβουλίαν καὶ ξύνεσιν, there is denoted, by hendiadys, 'acute penetration and sagacity,' as exercised in the arts of comἄλλοις ὁμοιοῦνται. XCVIII. Σιτάλκης μὲν οὖν βασιλεύων χώρας τοσαύτης, παρεσκευάζετο τὸν στρατόν· καὶ, ἐπειδὴ αὐτῷ ἑτοῖμα ἦν, ἄρας ἐπορεύετο ἐπὶ τὴν Μακεδονίαν, πρῶτον μὲν διὰ τῆς αὐτοῦ ἀρχῆς, ἔπειτα διὰ Κερκίνης ἐρήμου ὄρους, ὅ ἐστι μεθόριον Σίντων καὶ Παιόνων. 2. ἐπορεύετο δὲ δι' αὐτοῦ τῇ ὁδῷ ἣν πρότερον αὐτὸς ἐποιήσατο, τεμὼν τὴν ὕλην, ὅτε ἐπὶ Παίονας ἐστράτευσε. 3. τὸ δὲ ὄρος ἐξ Ὀδρυσῶν διιόντες ἐν δεξιᾷ μὲν εἶχον Παίονας, ἐν ἀριστερᾷ δὲ Σίντους καὶ Μαίδους· διελθόντες δὲ αὐτὸ ἀφίκοντο ἐς Δόβηρον τὴν Παιονικήν. 4. πορευομένῳ δὲ αὐτῷ ἀπεγίγνετο μὲν οὐδὲν τοῦ στρατοῦ, εἰ μή τι νόσῳ, προσεγίγνετο δέ· πολλοὶ γὰρ τῶν αὐτονόμων Θρᾳκῶν ἀπαράκλητοι ἐφ' ἁρπαγὴν ἠκολούθουν· ὥστε τὸ πᾶν πλῆθος λέγεται οὐκ ἔλασσον πεντεκαίδεκα μυριάδων γενέσθαι· καὶ τούτου τὸ μὲν πλέον πεζὸν ἦν, τριτημόριον δὲ μάλιστα ἱππικόν. 5. τοῦ δ' ἱππικοῦ τὸ πλεῖστον αὐτοὶ Ὀδρύσαι παρείχοντο καὶ μετ' αὐτοὺς Γέται. 6. τοῦ δὲ πεζοῦ οἱ μαχαιροφόροι μαχιμώτατοι μὲν ἦσαν οἱ ἐκ τῆς Ῥοδόπης αὐτόνομοι καταβάντες, ὁ δὲ ἄλλος ὅμιλος ξύμμικτος, πλήθει φοβερώτατος, ἠκολούθει. XCIX. Ξυνηθροίζοντο οὖν ἐν τῇ Δοβήρῳ καὶ παρεσκευάζοντο ὅπως κατὰ †κορυφὴν ἐσβαλοῦσιν ἐς τὴν κάτω Μακεδονίαν, ἧς ὁ Περδίκκας ἦρχε. 2. τῶν γὰρ Μακεδόνων εἰσὶ καὶ Λυγκησταὶ, καὶ Ἐλειμιῶται, καὶ ἄλλα ἔθνη ἐπάνωθεν, ἃ ξύμμαχα μέν ἐστι τούτοις καὶ ὑπήκοα, βασιλείας δ' ἔχει καθ' αὑτά. 3. τὴν δὲ παρὰ θάλασσαν νῦν Μακεδονίαν Ἀλέξανδρος ὁ Περδίκκου πατὴρ, καὶ οἱ πρόγονοι αὐτοῦ Τημενίδαι, τὸ ἀρχαῖον ὄντες ἐξ Ἄργους, πρῶτον ἐκτήσαντο, καὶ ἐβασίλευσαν, ἀναστήσαντες μάχῃ ἐκ μὲν mon life. The Scythians were indeed semi-barbarous Nomades, and, in all the arts, of even a low grade of civilization, and were doubtless far behind the neighbouring nations.

CH. XCVIII. 1. καὶ ἐπειδὴ αὐτῷ ἑτοῖμα ἦν] See note on ch. 3.

4. ἀπεγίγνετο] The Schol. and Suid. well explain it by ἀπώλλυτο, a rare sense, but occurring supra ch. 34 and 51, and Herodot. v. 4. vi. 58. Observe the paronomasia in ἀπεγ. and προσεγ. (accessit); as in passages of Aristot. and Gregor. ap. Steph. Thes. and Herodot. v. 4, we have a similar one in ἀπογ. and ἐπιγ.

ὥστε τὸ πᾶν πλῆθος λέγεται οὐκ ἔλασσον] So Aristophanes, speaking of them in his Ach. 148, makes Sitalces swear βοηθήσειν (Ἀθηναίοις), ἔχων Στρατιὰν τοσαύτην ὥστε Ἀθηναίους ἐρεῖν· "Οσον τὸ χρῆμα παρνόπων προσέρχεται! Why they are so called, sufficiently appears from the words of our author just before, ἐφ' ἁρπαγὴν ἠκολούθουν, for there is a strong figure to denote immense numbers and insatiable rapacity. Comp. Joel ii. 3 and 4, with Revel. ix. 7, where see my note.

6. μαχιμώτατοι] So in Aristoph. Ach. 153, we have, Καὶ νῦν ὅπερ μαχιμώτατον Θρᾳκῶν ἔθνος Ἔπεμψεν ὑμῖν.

CH. XCIX. 1. κατὰ κορυφὴν] desuper, ex superiori parte, inde a jugis montium; 'down-hill,' as the road would be after passing Mount Cercine. This sense, indeed, would seem to require ἐκ or κατὰ κορυφῆς, as in Hom. Il. ii. 456, and Eurip. Ion, 457. And though Goell. says that the accus. is used in order to intimate 'ductum in longum per juga montium agmen,' far more likely is it that our author wrote κορυφῆς: in which case the κατὰ would be used as in the phrase κατὰ τῶν κρημνῶν at vii. 44. κατ' ἄκρας, &c.

2. ἐπάνωθεν] in regione montuosâ, 'in the highlands.'

3. κόλπος] The ordinary sense of the word, gulf, assigned by all the translators, cannot be admitted. As κόλπος is derived from κοῖλος, and as κοῖλον and κοίλη denote a hollow, deep valley, or dell embosomed among hills,—so κόλπος may signify a hollow formed at the side of a mountain, and forming as it were its lap. So Xen. Hist. vi. 5, 17, ἔλαθε στρατοπεδευσάμενος εἰς τὸν ὄπισθεν κόλπον τῆς Μαντινικῆς, μάλα σύνεγγυς, καὶ κύκλῳ ὄρη ἔχοντα. Aristoph. Av. 1094. Oppian de Venat. i. 3 : and so sometimes gremium in Latin, as Plin. Hist. N. iii. 16, Padus gremio Vesuli montis profluens.

4. στενήν τινα] 'a narrow strip of land,' what the Scots call a strath.

Ch. C. Our author now proceeds to offer a sketch of the Macedonian kingdom, in its then state, with some brief information respecting its origin and gradual formation, so as to become at length a great state, together with its then component elements. Now of that country there were three divisions : I. Upper Macedonia, consisting of the Lyncestæ, Elimiotæ, and Orestæ, and, probably, part of Pæonia ; comprising all the hilly parts to the north, the north-west, and west of the country. This was in some measure independent, only acknowledging a sort of allegiance to the monarch. II. Lower Macedonia, which may be divided,—first, into that tract between the Strymon and the Axius ; secondly, that between the Axius and the Cambunian mountains ; thirdly, part of Pæonia, Eordœa, and Alinopia. This formed the kingdom of Perdiccas, except a district in the north part, a territory which lay next to Pæonia and Lyncestæ, situated on the river Axius, and comprehending the cities of Idomene, Gortynia, Atalanta, Europus, and probably others not mentioned by Thucydides. This had been apportioned as an appanage to Philip, and after him to Amyntas. It had, however, been seized by Perdiccas ; and it was one of the objects of Sitalces, in this expedition, to procure its restitution to its rightful owner. III. Maritime Macedonia, divided into Bottiæa, Pieria, and Chalcidice ; though the division between this territory, and that occupied by the Greeks, on parts of the coast, was not well defined.

Thus we see, from the insight incidentally given us by our author, that, as Thirlwall observes, 'Macedonia then contained the elements of a great power, (afterwards developed by Archelaus and Philip,) though one scattered and feeble. Besides the custom of bestowing appanages on the younger princes, which weakened the monarchy, large tracts in the upper country were subject to native princes, who owned the royal supremacy, but in the spirit of the great feudal chieftains of after-times. The full dominion of the sovereign was confined to the lower provinces, which were open to the attacks of the Greeks, who were in possession of most of the coast. There was little internal commerce ; for there were no regular roads. The people lived mostly in open towns or villages ; fortified ones were rare, (as appears by the words of our author elsewhere, τὰ τείχη ὅσα ἦν ἐν τῇ χώρᾳ,) and there was scarcely any organized military force.'

account of which he had undertaken the expedition,' namely, claiming of him the fulfilment of his promises.

ἀπιστοῦντες αὐτὸν μὴ ἥξειν] These words must be construed after Ἀθηναῖοι, and before οὐ παρῆσαν. For τε after δῶρα, (which is little suitable, though it has been retained by Bekker and Goeller,) I have, with Haack, received the conjecture of Poppo, δὲ, which is at once simple and conducive to perspicuity; nay, is required by the ellipsis of μόνον, which implies a but. The full meaning intended is, that 'the Athenians sent only envoys and presents, not the promised naval aid.'

τειχήρεις ποιήσας] 'having compelled them to take refuge in the strong-holds:' a phrase occurring also in Herodot. i. 162. Diod. vi. 129, &c.

4. παρέσχε λόγον ἐπὶ, &c.] 'afforded matter for talk and debate, whether or not,' &c. Of the phrase λόγον παρέχειν, which is rare, examples are found in Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, 21, and Dio Cass. 209, 63, and 370, 70. Of κατὰ τὸ ξυμμαχικὸν the sense is, 'according to treaty,' as v. 6.

5. ἅμα ἐπέχων] literally, 'while staying there;' a signification of ἐπέχει occurring also in Xen. Cyr. iv. 2, 6. v. 4, 38. Plut. vi. 574. Philo, p. 1029. Acts xix. 22.

καὶ ἡ στρατιὰ σῖτόν τε οὐκ εἶχεν αὐτῷ] It is not easy to ascertain the exact force of the αὐτῷ. Arnold supposes that the word belongs rather to the whole sentence than to any particular word in it, and takes the meaning to be, 'when he found that the army had no provisions:' a mode of understanding the words too precarious to be safely adopted. I see not why the dative should not be taken, as often in our author, for the genit., and so standing for ἡ στρατιὰ αὐτοῦ, 'his army.' Thus all will be plain.

μέγιστον μεθ' αὐτὸν δυναμένου] 'who held the greatest authority [in the state] after him.'

8. τὰ μὲν—ἐγένετο] Mitford remarks on the striking resemblance between this expedition of the king of Thrace, related by Thucydides, and that of the Khan of Crim Tartary described at length by Baron Tott, who accompanied the Tartar prince in his winter campaign, in the war between Russia and Turkey.

CII. Οἱ δὲ ἐν Ναυπάκτῳ Ἀθηναῖοι τοῦδε τοῦ χειμῶνος,—ἐπειδὴ τὸ τῶν Πελοποννησίων ναυτικὸν διελύθη, Φορμίωνος ἡγουμένου ἐστράτευσαν, παραπλεύσαντες ἐπ' Ἀστάκου καὶ ἀποβάντες, ἐς τὴν μεσόγειαν τῆς Ἀκαρνανίας τετρακοσίοις μὲν ὁπλίταις Ἀθηναίων τῶν ἀπὸ τῶν νεῶν, τετρακοσίοις δὲ Μεσσηνίων, ἔκ τε Στράτου καὶ Κορόντων καὶ ἄλλων χωρίων ἄνδρας οὐ δοκοῦντας βεβαίους εἶναι, ἐξήλασαν, καὶ Κύνητα τὸν Θεολύτου ἐς Κόροντα καταγαγόντες, ἀνεχώρησαν πάλιν ἐπὶ τὰς ναῦς. 2. ἐς γὰρ Οἰνιάδας, ἀεί ποτε πολεμίους ὄντας μόνους Ἀκαρνάνων, οὐκ ἐδόκει δυνατὸν εἶναι, χειμῶνος ὄντος, στρατεύειν· ὁ γὰρ Ἀχελῷος ποταμὸς ῥέων ἐκ Πίνδου ὄρους διὰ Δολοπίας, καὶ Ἀγραῶν, καὶ Ἀμφιλόχων, καὶ διὰ τοῦ Ἀκαρνανικοῦ πεδίου, ἄνωθεν μὲν παρὰ Στράτον πόλιν, ἐς θάλασσαν δὲ ἐξιεὶς παρ' Οἰνιάδας, καὶ τὴν πόλιν αὐτοῖς περιλιμνάζων, ἄπορον ποιεῖ ὑπὸ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν χειμῶνι στρατεύειν. 3. κεῖνται δὲ καὶ τῶν νήσων τῶν Ἐχινάδων αἱ πολλαὶ καταντικρὺ Οἰνιαδῶν, τοῦ Ἀχελῴου τῶν ἐκβολῶν οὐδὲν ἀπέχουσαι· ὥστε μέγας ὢν ὁ ποταμὸς προσχοῖ ἀεὶ, καὶ εἰσὶ τῶν νήσων αἳ ἠπείρωνται, ἐλπὶς δὲ καὶ πάσας οὐκ ἐν πολλῷ τινι ἂν χρόνῳ τοῦτο παθεῖν. 4. τό τε γὰρ ῥεῦμά ἐστι μέγα καὶ πολὺ καὶ θολερὸν, αἵ τε νῆσοι πυκναὶ, καὶ

Ch. CII. 1. παραπλεύσαντες ἐπ' Ἀστάκου καὶ ἀποβάντες] I have here thought proper to adopt the punctuation laid down by Goell. and Arnold; the words forming a sort of parenthesis, of which the meaning is, 'having sailed along shore to Astacus, and there disembarked, they went on an expedition to the interior of Acarnania,' namely, to strengthen the Athenian interest more firmly in Stratus and certain other towns.

2. ἄνωθεν μὲν] The only effectual mode of removing the difficulty connected with these words is, (as I suggested on a former occasion,) to supply ῥέων from the preceding, and to take ἄνωθεν (with Arnold) as standing for ἄνω, supernè, 'high up the river,' as in another passage of our author adduced by him from iv. 108, ἄνωθεν μὲν οὔσης λίμνης, τὰ δὲ πρὸς Ἠιόνα τριήρεσι τηρουμένων. We may render, with Goell., 'supernè quidem Stratum urbem, ubi vero in mare influit, Œniadas præterfluens.'

δὲ ἐξιεὶς] So I read, with Goeller and Bekker, (from the conjecture of Poppo,) for διεξιείς. The δὲ is required by the antithesis, while δι is prejudicial to the sense of the verb, and contrary to custom; which supports the simple verb. And,—what is of most weight,—ἐξιεὶς is supported by a similar passage of Herodot. ii. 10, where, speaking of the Achelous, he says, ὃς ῥέων δι' Ἀκαρνανίας, καὶ ἐξιεὶς ἐς θάλασσαν, τῶν Ἐχινάδων νήσων τὰς ἠμίσεας ἤπειρον πεποίηκε: a passage, indeed, probably had in view by our author here. Ἐς θάλ. ἐξιεὶς may be most closely rendered, 'disemboguing into the sea, [running] by Œniadæ.'

περιλιμνάζων] 'making lakes, or pools, around.' This verb occurs, perhaps, no where else, except in Arrian, E. A. vi. 14, 11, ἵνα περιλιμ. This description of Œniadæ may bring to mind the admirably graphic one of Venice, in Livy, x. 2, 'tenue prætentum littus esse; quod transgressis stagna ab tergo sint, irrigua æstibus maritimis—inde esse ostium fluminis prælti.'

3. προσχοῖ ἀεὶ] 'continually throws up heaps;' for προσχώματα ποιεῖ. So Diodor. i. 122, ὁ Ἀχελῷος ποταμὸς—προσκέχωκεν οὐκ ὀλίγην χώραν. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 122, ὁ Κηφισὸς προσκέχωκεν. The Schol. well explains, ὕλην συμφορεῖ: for not only soil, but wood and rubbish of every kind are thrown up by a river so circumstanced.

ἠπείρωνται] 'have become dry land.' So Aristot. ap. Steph. Thes. ἠπείρους ἐθαλάσσωσαν καὶ θαλάττας ἠπείρωσαν. Philo-Jud. κόλπους—ἠπειρῶσθαι. Joseph. 90, 20, ἠπειρωθῆναι δὲ καὶ τὸ πέλαγος.

4. θολερὸν] 'turbid.' So Plut. Lucull. 24, of the Euphrates: κατιόντα πολὺν καὶ θολερόν. Arrian, E. A. v. 9, 6.

καὶ ἀλλήλαις—γίγνονται] Construe, καὶ γίγν. ξύνδεσμοι ἀλλήλαις (διὰ) τῆς προσχώσεως τῷ μὴ σκεδάννυσθαι, scil. τὴν πρόσχωσιν, 'the rubbish.' Τῷ μὴ is for διὰ τὸ μὴ, at least as the words stand; I should, however, prefer, for vulg. τῷ μὴ σκ., to read, from some MSS., τὸ σκεδ., taken in the sense ὥστε μή.

παραλλὰξ] 'crossways,' thus, ∴∴ Κατὰ στοῖχον, for στοιχηδὸν, thus, ::::

ὅτε δὴ ἀλᾶσθαι] lit. 'when that he was,' &c.: for the infin. may, as Goell. observes, be used after ὅτε in oratione obliquâ. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 538.

ἀλᾶσθαι] 'wandering in exile:' or it might be taken in a metaphorical acceptation, 'wandering in mind;' in which sense the word is used by Soph. Aj. 23, ἀλλ' ἀλώμεθα. Eurip. Troad. 635, ψυχὴν ἀλᾶται. Yet the common interpretation is confirmed by Eurip. Elect. 1253, δειναὶ δὲ κῆρες, αἱ κυνώπιδες θεαὶ, Τροχηλατήσουσ' ἐμμανῆ πλανώμενον.

ὑπειπόντα] obscurè significantem, 'intimating.' Λύσις, a term not unfrequent to denote remedy, cure, both of disorders, and of evils in general.

πρὶν ἂν—κατοικίσηται] for πρὶν εὑρεῖν χώραν, καὶ κατοικ. ἐν αὐτῇ. In the words, a little after, αὐτῷ μεμιασμένης, 'was defiled with respect to him,' we have an enigmatical mode of expressing that 'he is exiled from it, and must not touch or set foot upon it.' So Lycophr. Cassand. 1038, χέρσου πατρῴας οὐ γὰρ ἂν φονῆ ποσὶ Ψαύσαι, μέγαν πλειῶνα, (for χρόνον,) μὴ πεφευγότα.

7. λεγόμενα παρελάβομεν] From the word λεγόμενα, it would appear that our author placed very little reliance on the report; though, like other ancient historians, he felt himself bound to relate what was said. So Herodot. vii. 152, ἐγὼ δὲ ὀφείλω λέγειν τὰ λεγόμενα, πείθεσθαί γε μὲν ὦν οὐ παντάπασι ὀφείλω.

ΞΥΓΓΡΑΦΗΣ Γ.

I. ΤΟΥ δ' ἐπιγιγνομένου θέρους Πελοποννήσιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἅμα τῷ σίτῳ ἀκμάζοντι ἐστράτευσαν ἐς τὴν Ἀττικήν· ἡγεῖτο δὲ αὐτῶν Ἀρχίδαμος ὁ Ζευξιδάμου Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλεύς. 2. καὶ ἐγκαθεζόμενοι ἐδῄουν τὴν γῆν· καὶ προσβολαὶ, ὥσπερ εἰώθεσαν, ἐγίγνοντο τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἱππέων ὅπῃ παρείκοι· καὶ τὸν πλεῖστον ὅμιλον τῶν ψιλῶν εἶργον τὸ μὴ, προεξιόντας τῶν ὅπλων, τὰ ἐγγὺς τῆς πόλεως κακουργεῖν. 3. ἐμμείναντες δὲ χρόνον οὗ εἶχον τὰ σιτία, ἀνεχώρησαν καὶ διελύθησαν κατὰ πόλεις.

II. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν ἐσβολὴν τῶν Πελοποννησίων εὐθὺς Λέσβος,

Ch. I. 2. καὶ ἐγκαθεζόμενοι] The meaning of this expression, here and at iv. 2, is not, as the Schol. explains, ἐνδιατρίβοντες or ἐμβραδύνοντες, but, 'having fixed their camp,' 'taken up a military station or encampment,' (which was always done, for security sake, in these incursions,) as in Dionys. Hal. Ant. ix. 62, ἐγκαθ. ἐν γῇ, φέρειν τε πάντα καὶ ἄγειν· and Jos. Ant. vii. 11, 2.

ὅπῃ παρείκοι] Not qua cedebat, as Port. renders; but, 'where opportunity might offer.' Hence the Schol. well explains by ἐνεδέχετο: for the verb is to be taken impersonally. The phrase is one frequent in the historians; as also ᾗ παρείκοι, which is found in Jos. Ant. xviii. 4, 4. In a passage of Plut. Opp. Mor. 718, E, for εἰ μὴ παρείκοι ought undoubtedly to be read εἴ πῃ παρ., a conjecture confirmed by a passage of Zosim. iii. 24, 6, εἴ ποι παρείκοι, where read εἴ πῃ παρ. Hence, also, in a passage of Soph. Phil. 1047, πόλλ' ἂν λέγειν ἔχοιμι πρὸς τὰ τοῦδ' ἔπη Εἴ μοι παρείκοι: for εἴ μοι παρ. I conjecture εἴ πῃ π., for I know no other instance of a dat. after παρ., which verb, being impersonal, would reject it. Sometimes, however, the impersonal form is abandoned, and the nomin. καιρὸς employed, as in Arrian, E. A. vi. 9, 4. Dio Cass. 803 and 516.

εἶργον τὸ μὴ, προεξιόντας] This comes under the rule of Matth. Gr. Gr. § 534, of the inf., with an ellipsis of μὴ, to express a consequence, or as used by way of explanation; or it may be referred to § 542, obs. 3, of the infin. put with the accus. of the art. for the genit.

τῶν ὅπλων] Meaning, 'the camp where the heavy-armed soldiers had their quarters.' See note on i. 111. In this sense the term frequently occurs in Xenophon.

3. ἐμμείναντες χρόνον οὗ εἶχον] The gen. here, as Goeller observes, is to be explained on the same principle as in the phrases σιτία ἔχειν τριῶν or τεσσάρων ἡμερῶν.

Ch. II. Our historian now proceeds to detail one of the most important events of πλὴν Μηθύμνης, ἀπέστη ἀπ' Ἀθηναίων, βουληθέντες μὲν καὶ πρὸ τοῦ πολέμου, (ἀλλ' οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι οὐ προσεδέξαντο,) ἀναγκασθέντες δὲ καὶ † ταύτην τὴν ἀπόστασιν πρότερον ἢ διενοοῦντο ποιήσασθαι. 2. τῶν τε γὰρ λιμένων τὴν χῶσιν, καὶ τειχῶν οἰκοδόμησιν, καὶ νεῶν ποίησιν ἐπέμενον τελεσθῆναι, καὶ ὅσα ἐκ τοῦ Πόντου ἔδει ἀφικέσθαι, τοξότας τε καὶ σῖτον, καὶ ἃ μεταπεμπόμενοι ἦσαν. 3. Τενέδιοι γὰρ ὄντες αὐτοῖς διάφοροι, καὶ Μηθυμναῖοι, καὶ αὐτῶν Μυτιληναίων ἰδίᾳ ἄνδρες κατὰ στάσιν, πρόξενοι Ἀθηναίων, μηνυταὶ

the war; and which, had it taken a turn contrary to what it did, must have gone far to crush the power of Athens,—namely, the revolt of Lesbos (with the exception of Methymna) from Athens. Before the war broke out, Mitylene had only been prevented from casting off the Athenian yoke by the reluctance which the Spartans felt to break the thirty-years' truce. The motives which led to the design still continued, and the altered state of affairs now opened a fair prospect of success. Several causes, too, conspired to render a part of the Mitylenæans,—namely, the higher classes,—eager for a revolution; and other causes operated on the community at large: both which are ably stated by Thirlwall. He truly observes, that 'the answer they formally received, though in the negative, was probably such as might encourage them to renew their application at a more favourable juncture, and in the mean time to keep alive their animosity against Athens, and to strengthen their resolution when an opportunity offered by promises of support.'

1. οὐ προσεδέξαντο] Supply τὴν βούλησιν, from βουληθέντες before. Ταύτην τὴν ἀπόστασιν, 'this very revolt,' namely, the revolt they did make; for the other was only in intention. I suspect, however, that, for ταύτην, our author wrote ταύτῃ, hoc modo, which is found in Aristoph. Eq. 843. And thus I would here point τὴν ἀπόστασιν, πρότερον ἢ διενοοῦντο, ποιήσασθαι.

2. γὰρ] This, as also the γὰρ a little further on, is meant to advert to the two causes, 1. why they had delayed the revolt so long; 2. why they now entered upon it so suddenly. Λιμένων τὴν χῶσιν, 'the blocking-up of the ports;' namely, by raising a mound (χῶμα) at the mouths of each. The plural in λιμ. is used, not with reference, as Thirlwall seems to think, to such harbours in the island at large as would afford shelter to the enemy, (for that they would be sure to find at Methymna,) but to the two harbours which Mitylene, as we learn from Strabo, and also Diod. Sic. p. 917, B, had,—one to the south, κλεῖστον, τριήρεσι, as it is there said, 'a shut-up port for triremes,' (for so I would there point and interpret,)—another to the north, (called Maloeis,) ἀνειμένον, 'left open, large and deep, fit for merchant-vessels, and covered by a mole.' Hence easy is it to see how ports so situated might be blocked up; which was necessary on account of the naval superiority of Athens. See Plehn, in his Lesbiaca, p. 24. The only other instance I remember of this λιμ. χῶσις, (effected, probably, by sinking hulks full of stone, and then letting down huge blocks and slabs of stone,) is found in Arrian, E. A. ii. 20, 12.

ἔδει ἀφικέσθαι] for καὶ ἀφικ. ὅσα ἔδει ἀφικέσθαι, 'were engaged to be sent;' for ἔδει has reference to engagement formed on previous plan. Ἃ μεταπεμπόμενοι, for ἄλλα ἃ, which, indeed, is read by Schaefer, but not on good grounds; for the word ἄλλα, as Poppo remarks, 'inest in contextu orationis.'

3. καὶ αὐτῶν Μυτιλ.] Construe, καὶ ἄνδρες ἰδίᾳ αὐτῶν M., πρόξενοι (ὄντες) Ἀ., μηνυταὶ κατὰ στάσιν ἐγίγνοντο. So ch. 34, πόλεως ἐαλωκυίας ὑπὸ Ἀ. καὶ τῶν βαρβάρων κατὰ στάσιν ἰδίαν ἐπαχθέντων.

By ἰδίᾳ ἄνδρες are meant, 'persons acting in their private capacity,' as opposed to those acting δημοσίᾳ, on the part of the public. On the term πρόξενος, see note at ii. 29. Of these ἰδίᾳ ἄνδρες, one, and probably the principal, was the Doxander mentioned in Aristot. Pol. v. 4, as having, from a disappointment in his hopes of marrying his two sons to two heiresses of a wealthy person, called Timophanes, and a consequent feud arising, been induced, out of revenge, to join in revealing the meditated rebellion of the Athenians; to whom, it seems, Timophanes was opposed. The words of Aristotle are as follows: Τιμοφάνους γὰρ, τῶν εὐπόρων γίγνονται τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ὅτι ξυνοικίζουσί τε τὴν Λέσβον ἐς τὴν Μυτιλήνην βίᾳ, καὶ τὴν παρασκευὴν ἅπασαν μετὰ Λακεδαιμονίων καὶ Βοιωτῶν, ξυγγενῶν ὄντων, ἐπὶ ἀποστάσει ἐπείγονται· καὶ, εἰ μή τις προκαταλήψεται ἤδη, στερήσεσθαι αὐτοὺς Λέσβου. III. Οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι (ἦσαν γὰρ τεταλαιπωρημένοι ὑπό τε τῆς νόσου καὶ τοῦ πολέμου ἄρτι καθισταμένου καὶ ἀκμάζοντος) μέγα μὲν ἔργον ἡγοῦντο εἶναι Λέσβον προσπολεμώσασθαι, ναυτικὸν ἔχουσαν καὶ δύναμιν ἀκέραιον· καὶ οὐκ ἀπεδέχοντο πρῶτον τὰς κατηγορίας, τινὸς, καταλιπόντος δύο θυγατέρας, ὁ περιωθισθεὶς, καὶ οὐ λαβὼν τοῖς υἱέσιν αὐτοῦ, Δόξανδρος ἦρξε τῆς στάσεως. Καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους παρώξυνε, πρόξενος ὢν τῆς πόλεως. The family of the heiresses was doubtless of aristocratical, and Doxander of democratical principles. Hence his rejection. Accordingly, the course he, out of spite, adopted, is easily accounted for: but not so his knowledge of the meditated rebellion; which certainly no aristocrat would reveal to him, as being a democrat, and, indeed, πρόξενος ὢν τῆς πόλεως [Ἀθ.] He had, we may suppose, by some means discovered the thing; and, had he been accepted by the family of Timophanes, would have concealed it. Moreover, though of democratical principles, he might, from particular motives, wish his country to recover that independence and greatness she had once held, all remains of which the longer continued predominance of Athens threatened to utterly destroy.

μηνυταὶ γίγνονται] This does not, as Bauer imagines, stand for μηνύουσι, but is a stronger expression, occurring in Dion. Hal. Ant. xi. 26, and on which see more in my note at iii. 23, 2. Render, 'become informers.' Of the next words, ὅτι ξυνοικίζουσί τε τὴν Λέσβον ἐς τὴν Μυτιλήνην βίᾳ, the sense is disputed and uncertain. Formerly I supposed it to be, 'compelling the Lesbians to resort to Mitylene, as the seat of government for the island;' as at ii. 15, Theseus is said ἐς τὴν νῦν πόλιν (Athens) ξυνῴκισε πάντας: and this view of the sense has been since adopted by Arnold and Wachsmuth. 'Thus,' observes Arnold, 'they meant that the other cities of Lesbos should sink from the condition of independent πόλεις, or civil societies, to that of δῆμοι, or municipal towns, with only a subordinate instead of a sovereign government of their own.' But surely this measure was not of a kind that could be brought about suddenly, and therefore was not likely to be resorted to, as any furtherance of their present purpose; which required measures of immediate effect, like the λιμένων χῶσις, τειχῶν οἰκοδόμησις, νεῶν ποίησις, the arming and victualling the city for a siege. Hence I am now induced to prefer the interpretation proposed by the Schol., and adopted by Goell.; according to which, the ξυνοίκισις here spoken of must be understood to be of the same kind as that of the Chalcidæan cities to Olynthus; the removal, in either case, being made for this purpose, that the inhabitants of the cities thus brought together might become the stronger against the common enemy: a view, this, I find, also adopted by Thirlwall. 'The population (says he) of Mitylene was receiving continual additions from the smaller towns under her influence; from which, by persuasion or force, she transplanted [rather, was transplanting] the inhabitants within her own walls. Now this measure would be one of a piece with the rest just mentioned, and would be the most effectual of all to promote the present security and future independence of Mitylene.'

ἐπείγονται] The term is here used in an active sense, corresponding to that of the Latin festinare or properare aliquid.

Ch. III. 1. τεταλαιπωρημένοι ὑπὸ τῆς νόσου, &c.] afflicti, &c. Of this passive form, which is rare, examples occur in Aristoph. Plut. 224, and Vesp. 967. Arrian, E. A. vii. 10, 1, and Ind. xxxii. 9. Τοῦ πολέμου ἄρτι καθισταμένου, 'the war being now already on foot;' a phrase occurring also at ch. 68. Of the words following, μέγα ἔργον ἡγοῦντο εἶναι, the sense is, 'thought it a serious matter:' of which rare idiom examples are found in Herodot. and Xenophon. In προσπολεμώσασθαι it is proper to notice the force of the middle voice; the full sense being, 'to bring on themselves a war with Lesbos, in addition to that with the Peloponnesians.'

πλὴν Μηθύμνης, ἀπέστη ἀπ' Ἀθηναίων, βουληθέντες μὲν καὶ πρὸ τοῦ πολέμου, (ἀλλ' οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι οὐ προσεδέξαντο,) ἀναγκασθέντες δὲ καὶ † ταύτην τὴν ἀπόστασιν πρότερον ἢ διενοοῦντο ποιήσασθαι. 2. τῶν τε γὰρ λιμένων τὴν χῶσιν, καὶ τειχῶν οἰκοδόμησιν, καὶ νεῶν ποίησιν ἐπέμενον τελεσθῆναι, καὶ ὅσα ἐκ τοῦ Πόντου ἔδει ἀφικέσθαι, τοξότας τε καὶ σῖτον, καὶ ἃ μεταπεμπόμενοι ἦσαν. 3. Τενέδιοι γὰρ ὄντες αὐτοῖς διάφοροι, καὶ Μηθυμναῖοι, καὶ αὐτῶν Μυτιληναίων ἰδίᾳ ἄνδρες κατὰ στάσιν, πρόξενοι Ἀθηναίων, μηνυταὶ

the war; and which, had it taken a turn contrary to what it did, must have gone far to crush the power of Athens,—namely, the revolt of Lesbos (with the exception of Methymna) from Athens. Before the war broke out, Mitylene had only been prevented from casting off the Athenian yoke by the reluctance which the Spartans felt to break the thirty-years' truce. The motives which led to the design still continued, and the altered state of affairs now opened a fair prospect of success. Several causes, too, conspired to render a part of the Mitylenæans,—namely, the higher classes,—eager for a revolution; and other causes operated on the community at large: both which are ably stated by Thirlwall. He truly observes, that 'the answer they formally received, though in the negative, was probably such as might encourage them to renew their application at a more favourable juncture, and in the mean time to keep alive their animosity against Athens, and to strengthen their resolution when an opportunity offered by promises of support.'

1. οὐ προσεδέξαντο] Supply τὴν βούλησιν, from βουληθέντες before. Ταύτην τὴν ἀπόστασιν, 'this very revolt,' namely, the revolt they did make; for the other was only in intention. I suspect, however, that, for ταύτην, our author wrote ταύτῃ, hoc modo, which is found in Aristoph. Eq. 843. And thus I would here point τὴν ἀπόστασιν, πρότερον ἢ διενοοῦντο, ποιήσασθαι.

2. γὰρ] This, as also the γὰρ a little further on, is meant to advert to the two causes, 1. why they had delayed the revolt so long; 2. why they now entered upon it so suddenly. Λιμένων τὴν χῶσιν, 'the blocking-up of the ports;' namely, by raising a mound (χῶμα) at the mouths of each. The plural in λιμ. is used, not with reference, as Thirlwall seems to think, to such harbours in the island at large as would afford shelter to the enemy, (for that they would be sure to find at Methymna,) but to the two harbours which Mitylene, as we learn from Strabo, and also Diod. Sic. p. 917, B, had,—one to the south, κλεῖστον, τριήρεσι, as it is there said, 'a shut-up port for triremes,' (for so I would there point and interpret,)—another to the north, (called Maloeis,) ἀνειμένον, 'left open, large and deep, fit for merchant-vessels, and covered by a mole.' Hence easy is it to see how ports so situated might be blocked up; which was necessary on account of the naval superiority of Athens. See Plehn, in his Lesbiaca, p. 24. The only other instance I remember of this λιμ. χῶσις, (effected, probably, by sinking hulks full of stone, and then letting down huge blocks and slabs of stone,) is found in Arrian, E. A. ii. 20, 12.

ἔδει ἀφικέσθαι] for καὶ ἀφικ. ὅσα ἔδει ἀφικέσθαι, 'were engaged to be sent;' for ἔδει has reference to engagement formed on previous plan. Ἃ μεταπεμπόμενοι, for ἄλλα ἃ, which, indeed, is read by Schaefer, but not on good grounds; for the word ἄλλα, as Poppo remarks, 'inest in contextu orationis.'

3. καὶ αὐτῶν Μυτιλ.] Construe, καὶ ἄνδρες ἰδίᾳ αὐτῶν M., πρόξενοι (ὄντες) Ἀ., μηνυταὶ κατὰ στάσιν ἐγίγνοντο. So ch. 34, πόλεως ἐαλωκυίας ὑπὸ Ἀ. καὶ τῶν βαρβάρων κατὰ στάσιν ἰδίαν ἐπαχθέντων.

By ἰδίᾳ ἄνδρες are meant, 'persons acting in their private capacity,' as opposed to those acting δημοσίᾳ, on the part of the public. On the term πρόξενος, see note at ii. 29. Of these ἰδίᾳ ἄνδρες, one, and probably the principal, was the Doxander mentioned in Aristot. Pol. v. 4, as having, from a disappointment in his hopes of marrying his two sons to two heiresses of a wealthy person, called Timophanes, and a consequent feud arising, been induced, out of revenge, to join in revealing the meditated rebellion of the Athenians; to whom, it seems, Timophanes was opposed. The words of Aristotle are as follows: Τιμοφάνους γὰρ, τῶν εὐπόρων

γίγνονται τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ὅτι ξυνοικίζουσί τε τὴν Λέσβον ἐς τὴν Μυτιλήνην βίᾳ, καὶ τὴν παρασκευὴν ἅπασαν μετὰ Λακεδαιμονίων καὶ Βοιωτῶν, ξυγγενῶν ὄντων, ἐπὶ ἀποστάσει ἐπείγονται· καὶ, εἰ μή τις προκαταλήψεται ἤδη, στερήσεσθαι αὐτοὺς Λέσβου. III. Οἱ δ' Ἀθηναῖοι (ἦσαν γὰρ τεταλαιπωρημένοι ὑπό τε τῆς νόσου καὶ τοῦ πολέμου ἄρτι καθισταμένου καὶ ἀκμάζοντος) μέγα μὲν ἔργον ἡγοῦντο εἶναι Λέσβον προσπολεμώσασθαι, ναυτικὸν ἔχουσαν καὶ δύναμιν ἀκέραιον· καὶ οὐκ ἀπεδέχοντο πρῶτον τὰς κατηγορίας, τινὸς, καταλιπόντος δύο θυγατέρας, ὁ περιωθισθεὶς, καὶ οὐ λαβὼν τοῖς υἱέσιν αὐτοῦ, Δόξανδρος ἦρξε τῆς στάσεως. Καὶ τοὺς Ἀθηναίους παρώξυνε, πρόξενος ὢν τῆς πόλεως. The family of the heiresses was doubtless of aristocratical, and Doxander of democratical principles. Hence his rejection. Accordingly, the course he, out of spite, adopted, is easily accounted for: but not so his knowledge of the meditated rebellion; which certainly no aristocrat would reveal to him, as being a democrat, and, indeed, πρόξενος ὢν τῆς πόλεως [Ἀθ.] He had, we may suppose, by some means discovered the thing; and, had he been accepted by the family of Timophanes, would have concealed it. Moreover, though of democratical principles, he might, from particular motives, wish his country to recover that independence and greatness she had once held, all remains of which the longer continued predominance of Athens threatened to utterly destroy.

μηνυταὶ γίγνονται] This does not, as Bauer imagines, stand for μηνύουσι, but is a stronger expression, occurring in Dion. Hal. Ant. xi. 26, and on which see more in my note at iii. 23, 2. Render, 'become informers.' Of the next words, ὅτι ξυνοικίζουσί τε τὴν Λέσβον ἐς τὴν Μυτιλήνην βίᾳ, the sense is disputed and uncertain. Formerly I supposed it to be, 'compelling the Lesbians to resort to Mitylene, as the seat of government for the island;' as at ii. 15, Theseus is said ἐς τὴν νῦν πόλιν (Athens) ξυνῴκισε πάντας: and this view of the sense has been since adopted by Arnold and Wachsmuth. 'Thus,' observes Arnold, 'they meant that the other cities of Lesbos should sink from the condition of independent πόλεις, or civil societies, to that of δῆμοι, or municipal towns, with only a subordinate instead of a sovereign government of their own.' But surely this measure was not of a kind that could be brought about suddenly, and therefore was not likely to be resorted to, as any furtherance of their present purpose; which required measures of immediate effect, like the λιμένων χῶσις, τειχῶν οἰκοδόμησις, νεῶν ποίησις, the arming and victualling the city for a siege. Hence I am now induced to prefer the interpretation proposed by the Schol., and adopted by Goell.; according to which, the ξυνοίκισις here spoken of must be understood to be of the same kind as that of the Chalcidæan cities to Olynthus; the removal, in either case, being made for this purpose, that the inhabitants of the cities thus brought together might become the stronger against the common enemy: a view, this, I find, also adopted by Thirlwall. 'The population (says he) of Mitylene was receiving continual additions from the smaller towns under her influence; from which, by persuasion or force, she transplanted [rather, was transplanting] the inhabitants within her own walls. Now this measure would be one of a piece with the rest just mentioned, and would be the most effectual of all to promote the present security and future independence of Mitylene.'

μεῖζον μέρος νέμοντες τῷ μὴ βούλεσθαι ἀληθῆ εἶναι· ἐπειδὴ μέντοι καὶ πέμψαντες πρέσβεις οὐκ ἔπειθον τοὺς Μυτιληναίους τήν τε ξυνοίκισιν καὶ τὴν παρασκευὴν διαλύειν, δείσαντες προκαταλαβεῖν ἐβούλοντο. 2. καὶ πέμπουσιν ἐξαπιναίως τεσσαράκοντα ναῦς, αἳ ἔτυχον περὶ Πελοπόννησον παρεσκευασμέναι πλεῖν· Κλεϊππίδης δὲ ὁ Δεινίου, τρίτος αὐτὸς, ἐστρατήγει. 3. ἐσηγγέλθη γὰρ αὐτοῖς ὡς εἴη Ἀπόλλωνος Μαλόεντος ἔξω τῆς πόλεως ἑορτὴ, ἐν ᾗ πανδημεὶ Μυτιληναῖοι ἑορτάζουσι, καὶ ἐλπίδα εἶναι ἐπιχθέντας ἐπιπεσεῖν ἄφνω· καὶ ἢν μὲν ξυμβῇ ἡ πεῖρα,—εἰ δὲ μὴ, Μυτιληναίοις εἰπεῖν ναῦς τε παραδοῦναι καὶ τείχη καθελεῖν· μὴ πειθομένων δὲ, πολεμεῖν. 4. καὶ αἱ μὲν νῆες ᾧχοντο· τὰς δὲ τῶν Μυτιληναίων δέκα τριήρεις, αἳ ἔτυχον βοηθοὶ παρὰ σφᾶς κατὰ τὸ ξυμμαχικὸν παροῦσαι, κατέσχον οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ τοὺς ἄνδρας ἐξ αὐτῶν ἐς φυλακὴν ἐποιήσαντο. 5. τοῖς δὲ Μυτιληναίοις ἀνὴρ ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν διαβὰς ἐς Εὔβοιαν, καὶ πεζῇ ἐπὶ Γεραιστὸν ἐλθὼν, ὁλκάδος ἀναγομένης ἐπιτυχὼν, πλῷ χρησάμενος, καὶ τριταῖος ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ἐς Μυτιλήνην ἀφικόμενος, ἀγγέλλει τὸν ἐπίπλουν. 6. οἱ δὲ οὔ τε ἐς μεῖζον μέρος νέμοντες τῷ μὴ βούλεσθαι ἀληθῆ εἶναι] Of this imperfectly understood clause the sense seems to be, 'giving too much weight to the wish that they might not be true,' since what we wish we easily believe. The difficulty centres in the phrase μεῖζον μέρος νέμ., of which examples occur in Eurip. Suppl. 240, νέμοντες τῷ φθόνῳ πλεῖον μέρος, and Eurip. Antiop. frag. νέμων τὸ πλεῖστον τούτῳ μέρος. Confirmatory of the sense above assigned, are the following passages, evidently imitated from the present, of Philo-Jud. 1002, C, πλεῖστον διδόντες μέρος τῷ μὴ βούλεσθαι — δοκεῖν ὠμόν. Dio Cass. 118, 77, τῇ βουλήσει πλέον ἢ τῇ δυνάμει νέμων. At ἀληθῆ sub. κατηγορημένα, from κατηγορίας.

ξυνοίκισιν] So I read, with Poppo, (from four MSS., the Schol., and Valla, for ξυνοίκησιν, which is retained by Bekker and Goeller,) as being required by the words, a little before, ξυνοικίζουσι τὴν Λέσβον ἐς τὴν Μυτ. The sense here depends on the interpretation there adopted.

3. ὡς εἴη—ἑορτὴ] 'that there was then celebrating a festival,' which, it seems, lasted very many days. On this use of the opt. in oratione obliquâ, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 520. Ἀπόλλωνος Μαλόεντος. So called from the promontory Malea. Of this appellation of the god (Μαλόεις), examples are adduced by Goeller, who also notices that on the coins of Mitylene there are many gods called ἀκραῖοι, with reference, he supposes, to Malea. Yet several other promontories are there in Lesbos as well as Malea, e. g. Argennum; and it is probable that there were few promontories of any note without a temple, chiefly dedicated to Neptune.

ἢν—πεῖρα,—] A noted example of ellipsis, or rather aposiopesis per antanaclasin, at which philologists supply καλῶς ἂν εἴη, or καλῶς ἂν ἔχειν. See the examples in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 617, a; to which I add, Herodot. viii. 62, σὺ εἰ μενέεις αὐτοῦ, καὶ μένων ἔσεαι ἀνὴρ ἀγαθὸς—εἰ δὲ μὴ, κ. τ. λ. Eurip. Antiop. frag. 19, εἰ νοῦς ἔνεστι—εἰ δὲ μὴ, κ. τ. λ. Of the plena locutio I have noted an example in Ruth, iii. 13, Sept. ἐὰν ἀγχιστεύσῃ σε, ἀγαθόν· ἀγχιστευέτω. Ἐὰν δὲ μὴ, &c.

4. κατὰ τὸ ξυμμαχικὸν] 'according to the terms of the alliance.'

ἐς φυλακὴν ἐποιήσαντο] 'they put into hold.' So Acts iv. 3, ἔθεντο εἰς τήρησιν. This use of ποιεῖσθαι with ἐς, which occurs at viii. 1, ἐς ἀσφάλειαν ποι., 'put into safety,' is very rare, except in Thucyd.

5. ἐπιτυχὼν, πλῷ χρησάμενος] Both these terms occur in a kindred passage at i. 137, where see note.

διαβὰς ἐς—ἀφικόμενος] The accumulation of participles, in this sentence, is remarkable; yet more so is one which occurs in an imitation of the passage in Polyæn. viii. 46.

τὸν Μαλόεντα ἐξῆλθον, τά τε ἄλλα, τῶν τειχῶν καὶ λιμένων περὶ τὰ ἡμιτέλεστα, φραξάμενοι, ἐφύλασσον. IV. Καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι οὐ πολὺ ὕστερον καταπλεύσαντες ὡς ἑώρων, ἀπήγγειλαν μὲν οἱ στρατηγοὶ τὰ ἐπεσταλμένα, οὐκ ἐσακουόντων δὲ τῶν Μυτιληναίων, ἐς πόλεμον καθίσταντο. 2. ἀπαράσκευοι δὲ οἱ Μυτιληναῖοι καὶ ἐξαίφνης ἀναγκασθέντες πολεμεῖν, ἔκπλουν μέν τινα ἐποιήσαντο τῶν νεῶν ὡς ἐπὶ ναυμαχίᾳ ὀλίγον πρὸ τοῦ λιμένος· ἔπειτα, καταδιωχθέντες ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀττικῶν νεῶν, λόγους ἤδη προσέφερον τοῖς στρατηγοῖς, βουλόμενοι τὰς ναῦς τὸ παραυτίκα, εἰ δύναιντο, ὁμολογίᾳ τινὶ ἐπιεικεῖ ἀποπέμψασθαι. 3. καὶ οἱ στρατηγοὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀπεδέξαντο, καὶ αὐτοὶ φοβούμενοι μὴ οὐχ ἱκανοὶ ὦσι Λέσβῳ πάσῃ πολεμεῖν. 4. καὶ ἀνακωχὴν ποιησάμενοι, πέμπουσιν ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας οἱ Μυτιληναῖοι τῶν τε διαβαλλόντων ἕνα, ᾧ μετέμελεν ἤδη, καὶ ἄλλους, εἴ πως πείσειαν τὰς ναῦς ἀπελθεῖν, ὡς σφῶν οὐδὲν νεωτεριούντων. 5. ἐν τούτῳ δὲ ἀποστέλλουσι καὶ ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα πρέσβεις τριήρει, λαθόντες τὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ναυτικὸν, οἳ ὥρμουν ἐν τῇ Μαλέᾳ πρὸς βορέαν τῆς πόλεως· οὐ

6. τά τε ἄλλα τῶν τειχῶν] Constr. τὰ τε ἄλλα, ἐφύλασσον περὶ τὰ ἡμιτέλεστα [μέρη] τῶν τειχῶν καὶ λιμ., φραξάμενοι [αὐτά]. For τὰ ἄλλα is to be taken by itself, in the sense, 'as other things,' 'in other respects,' answering to Fr., au reste. They barricaded and kept guard about the half-finished parts of their walls and ports. The latter were probably something like those at the Piræus in Athens. Of the phrase φραξάμενοι ἐφύλασσον, another example occurs in Arrian, E. A. ii. 20, 12.

CH. IV. 1. Καὶ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι—ἑώρων, &c.] In order to remove what might be called an irregularity in the construction, the Schol. and others would suppose here an antiptosis; but to that principle it is here unnecessary to resort, since, as Poppo (after Bauer) points out, Ἀθηναῖοι should be taken with ὡς ἑώρων, the ὡς being, as Poppo observes, put after its verb, as at iii. 5. v. 28. vii. 32.

2. τὸ παραυτίκα] 'for the present,' i. e. until they were better prepared. Ὁμολογίᾳ τινὶ ἐπιεικεῖ, 'on some moderate conditions of capitulation.' Ἀποπέμψασθαι signifies, a se demittere, remorare.

4. τῶν διαβαλλόντων] 'of the accusers, or impeachers;' (partic. for subst., as at ii. 2 and 5,) called supra ch. 2, 3, μηνυταὶ, 'informers.' In the words, a little after, εἴ πως πείσειαν τὰς ναῦς ἀπελθεῖν, we have an elliptical construction, in which supply ὥστε at ἀπελθεῖν, and take πείσειαν absolutely, thus, '[to try] if they could by any means prevail for the ships to depart.'

ὡς σφῶν οὐδὲν νεωτεριούντων] Not meaning, as Thirlwall understands, that Doxander retracted his former statements, and endeavoured to persuade the Athenians that his countrymen were innocent of the designs he had imputed to them; but merely, that they were not going to carry them into effect, but would abandon them.

5. οἳ ὥρμουν ἐν τῇ Μαλέᾳ πρὸς βορέαν τῆς πόλεως] The best mode of removing the difficulty which embarrasses this passage, is to suppose, with Hobbes, Plehn, and Arnold, that there were two points on the east coast called Malea,—one, the well-known promontory at the south-east point of the island, and another to the north of Mitylene, and at a short distance from it; for, as Arnold observes, the soldiers could not go seven miles to get their provisions. This solution is also, I find, embraced by Thirlwall, who truly remarks, that 'though the occurrence of two places of the same name within so short a distance may seem somewhat singular, yet it is not on that account to be deemed incredible, particularly as we see in the local worship of Apollo an occasion which might have given rise to it. Indeed, (continues he,) Plehn himself furnishes an argument which appears to us γὰρ ἐπίστευον τοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων προχωρήσειν. 6. καὶ οἱ μὲν, ἐς τὴν Λακεδαίμονα ταλαιπώρως διὰ τοῦ πελάγους κομισθέντες, αὐτοῖς ἔπρασσον ὅπως τις βοήθεια ἥξει. V. Οἱ δ' ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν πρέσβεις ὡς οὐδὲν ἦλθον πράξαντες, ἐς πόλεμον καθίσταντο οἱ Μυτιληναῖοι καὶ ἡ ἄλλη Λέσβος, πλὴν Μηθύμνης· οὗτοι δὲ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἐβεβοηθήκεσαν, καὶ Ἴμβριοι καὶ Λήμνιοι, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὀλίγοι τινὲς ξυμμάχων. 2. καὶ ἔξοδον μέν τινα πανδημεὶ ἐποιήσαντο οἱ Μυτιληναῖοι ἐπὶ τὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων στρατόπεδον· καὶ μάχη ἐγένετο, ἐν ᾗ οὐκ ἔλασσον ἔχοντες οἱ Μυτιληναῖοι, οὔτε ἐπηυλίσαντο οὔτε ἐπίστευσαν σφίσιν αὐτοῖς, ἀλλ' ἀνεχώρησαν. 3. ἔπειτα οἱ μὲν ἠσύχαζον, ἐκ Πελοποννήσου καὶ μετ' ἄλλης παρασκευῆς βουλόμενοι, εἰ προσγένοιτό τι, κινδυνεύειν. 4. καὶ γὰρ αὐτοῖς Μελέας Λάκων ἀφικνεῖται καὶ Ἑρμαιώνδας Θηβαῖος, οἳ προαπεστάλησαν μὲν τῆς ἀποστάσεως, φθάσαι δὲ οὐ δυνάμενοι τὸν τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἐπίπλουν, κρύφα μετὰ τὴν μάχην ὕστερον ἐσπλέουσι τριήρει, καὶ παρῄνουν πέμπειν τριήρη ἄλλην καὶ πρέσβεις μεθ' ἑαυτῶν· καὶ ἐκπέμπουσιν. VI. Οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι, πολὺ ἐπιῤῥωσθέντες διὰ τὴν τῶν Μυτιληναίων ἡσυχίαν, ξυμμάχους τε προσεκάλουν,—οἳ πολὺ θᾶσσον παρῆσαν, ὁρῶντες οὐδὲν ἰσχυρὸν ἀπὸ more forcible than most of Dr. Arnold's. He observes, p. 16, "Aristoteles de Cæcia, quem a Thebæ campo flantem a Lesbiis Θηβαίαν vocari ait, ἐνοχλεῖ δὲ τὸν Μυτιληναίων λιμένα, μάλιστα δὲ τὸν Μαλόεντα. Traxit portus nomen illud a campo Malonte Apollini sacrato, quem commemorant Thucydides et Hellanicus ap. Steph. Byz. Uter portuum Mitylenæorum id nomen gesserit definire non possumus, quia, ubi locus Apollini sacer situs fuerit ignoramus." But as the plain of Thebe was north-east of Mitylene, it seems impossible to doubt that the harbour most exposed to the wind which blew from it, was the northern one. On this side of Mitylene, therefore, must have been the sanctuary of Apollo Μαλόεις, where the Athenians hoped to have surprised the Mitylenæans, and the Malea, where their fleet lay.'

οὐ γὰρ ἐπίστευον—προχωρήσειν] Supply the accus. αὐτὰ to προχωρ., taken from the τοῖς preceding, where the ellipsis, which some propose, (ἐλπιζομένοις,) is too arbitrary. The usual one, πράγμασι, will suffice, with accommodation to the subject. This is confirmed by a kindred passage at v. 46, οὐδὲν ἐκ τῆς Λακεδαίμονος πεπραγμένον, which explains ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθ. here. The ἀπὸ and ἐκ signify, 'on the part of.' And so infra vi. 46, τὰ παρὰ τῶν Ἐ. The above mode of taking the passage (proposed by me in Transl.) has, I find, since been adopted by Goell., who renders, 'non enim fidebant iis, quæ ab Atheniensibus expectabant, fore ut bene cedant,' 'that the business in progress with the Athenians would have a successful issue.'

6. ἔπρασσον ὅπως, &c.] dabant operam ut, 'contrived the means whereby some assistance might reach them.' So i. 56, 57. 68.

Ch. V. 1. οἱ δὲ—πράξαντες] by transposition, for ὡς δ' οἱ πρέσβεις ἦλθον ἐκ τῶν Ἀ. οὐδὲν πράξαντες.

2. οὐκ ἔλασσον ἔχοντες] So i. 105. ii. 22: see notes.

οὔτε ἐπηυλίσαντο] 'did not encamp on the field,' which was necessary to maintain a disputed claim to victory. So iv. 134, καὶ ἀγχωμάλου τῆς μάχης γενομένης, οἱ Τεγεᾶται μὲν ἐπηυλίσαντό τε καὶ εὐθὺς ἔστησαν τροπαῖον.

3. ἐκ Πελοποννήσου—κινδυνεύειν] The construction is not a little anomalous, but may be adjusted thus: βουλόμενοι μετ' ἄλλης παρασκευῆς ἐκ Πελ., εἰ προσγ. τι (ἐνθένδε) κινδυνεύειν: or thus, ἐκ Πελ. εἰ προσγένοιτό τι, καὶ μετ' ἄλλης παρασκευῆς, εἰ προσγένοιτο, βουλ. κινδ.

Ch. VI. 1. οὐδὲν ἰσχυρὸν] 'no strength of forces;' as in Xen. Hipp. vii. 13, and viii. 24, τὸ ἰσχυρὸν, and τὰ ἰσχυρά. Also, Dio Cass. 263, 14, οὐδὲν ἰσχυρὸν παρεπεριορμισάμενοι—πόλεως] To discover the sense, we must consider the ratio idiomatis. Now ὁρμίζειν ναῦν signifies, 'to bring a ship into port, or anchorage;' and ὁρμίσασθαι is used in the sense, 'to come to anchor, or mooring:' see i. 46. 51. ii. 41. 86. iii. 76. vii. 30. 34. This is sometimes used with εἰς, denoting the place of anchorage. Thus, περιορμίζειν must mean, in stationem circumagere, as Steph. Thes. explains, (who cites Demosth. ap. Pollux, περιορμ. τὴν ναῦν ἐπὶ τὸ χῶμα,) and consequently, περιορμίζεσθαι must mean, circumagere in stationem; and περιορμίσασθαι, 'to bring themselves (meaning their ships) round to anchorage.' The words following, τὸ πρὸς νότον τῆς πόλεως, are meant to show in what direction the fleet moved, namely, to the south of the city, instead of the north, where it had before had its station. The preposition denoting direction is here, as often, left to be understood.

ἐτείχισαν στρατόπεδα δύο] Of this custom of forming two and sometimes three separate encampments, when a city was too extensive to be regularly invested by the invading force, I have adduced several examples in my Transl.

ἐφόρμους—ἐποιοῦντο] 'established their blockades,' i. e. blockadings; ἐφόρμους standing for ἐφορμήσεις: see note at ii. 89.

2. εἶργον μὴ χρῆσθαι] Sub. ὥστε: see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 532.

ναύσταθμον—ἀγορᾶς] Τὸ ναύσταθμον was used of a situation which could not properly be called a port, as being only safe in certain winds, while, in others, it was a mere roadstead,—'statio male fida carinis.' In the expressions ναύσταθμον πλοίων καὶ ἀγορᾶς, there is (as observes Arnold, after Poppo, Prol. i. p. 202) a common incorrectness in expression, when a word that can properly apply to one thing only is made to apply to two. Ναύσταθμον ἀγορᾶς, of course, if literally taken, is absurd; but only the general idea of 'a place for any thing' is preserved; the particular one, of 'a place for ships,' suiting only to πλοίων.

Ch. VII. 4. ταῖς ναυσὶ κατὰ τὸν Ἀχελῷον ἔπλευσε] The sense here seems to be, 'attacked the place by sea, on the side of the Acheloüs, while the land-force ravaged the territory;' where ἔπλευσε stands for προσέπλευσε, 'made a naval attack;' and κατὰ τὸν Ἀχελῷον means, 'by, on the side of, the Acheloüs,' as opposed to κατὰ γῆν, which expression has often corresponding to it, κατὰ θάλασσαν.

5. τῶν αὐτόθεν ξυμβοηθησάντων] Meaning, 'the inhabitants who mustered together,' from that country,—the forces, or, as we should say, the militia of the country, as distinguished from the φρουροὶ, or garrison-troops, stationed along the coast-line, to repel the enemy's incursions. Of this idiom, οἱ αὐτόθεν, an example occurs elsewhere in our author at ii. 25, προσβοηθήσαντας — λογάδας, καὶ τῶν αὐτόθεν, &c.; and in Xen. Hist. ii. 1, 9, and iv. 3, 8, αὐτόθεν προσεγένοντο ὁπλῖται, for οἱ αὐτόθεν ὁπλῖται προσεγ.

6. καὶ ὕστερον—ἐκομίσαντο] Constr. καὶ ἀποπλεύσαντες οἱ Α0. ὕστερον ἐκομ. τοὺς νεκρούς, &c.

Ch. VIII. 1. Ὀλυμπίαζε παρεῖναι] 'to repair to Olympia.' On this form in ζε, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 259, 6. It answers to our -ward and -wards.

Ch. IX. Now follows one of the ablest speeches in Thucydides; a great part of which, as Thirlwall observes, 'turns on a question of political morality.' To this, therefore, the speakers first address themselves, with little of regular proëm, entering at once on the business in question. Thus, ch. 9, 10, 11, and 12, are occupied with the justification of the step they had taken. In ch. 13, arguments are adduced, derived from τὸ δυνατὸν and τὸ ξυμφέρον. And in ch. 14 we have the conclusion, which deals, as the Schol. says, in incitement and varied exhortation. Such is the general plan of the speech. To proceed to consider it in detail, ch. 9 contains the proëm, in which the speakers commence with vindicating themselves from an imputation, which they were aware they might seem to deserve,—of a breach of faith towards their allies, the Athenians; and this they proceed to establish by adverting to the peculiar circumstances of their connexion with Athens.

1. καθεστὸς] I have, with Bekk. and Goell., adopted, from three MSS., the Ionic, or old Attic form, -ος, (on which see Buttm. Gr. § 114, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 198, 3,) though the form -ὼς, which is middle Attic, is supported by the great body of the MSS., and has been retained by Poppo; though he grants that the form -ὸς is better. The sense of τὸ καθεστὸς νόμιμον is, 'the established usage.'

Of χείρους ἡγοῦνται the full sense is, 'they think the worse of them,' i. e. worse than they otherwise would have thought of them. For this passage may be brought under the rule laid down in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 457, of 'a comparative used without an expressed object of comparison, where something is left to be supplied, such as may easily be gathered from the subject-matter.' The same supplementum as here, is required in a passage of Lysias, adv. Diog. εἰδὼς ὅτι οὐ μόνον οἱ ἀδικοῦντες χείρους ὑμῖν εἶναι δοκοῦσιν (are thought), ἀλλὰ καὶ οἵτινες, &c. With the sentiment, comp. Livy, xxxvii. 17, 'Transfugæ nomen exsecrabile veteribus sociis, novis suspectum:' see also Procop. Goth. p. 177.

2. ἀξίωσις] 'opinion:' a rare sense, but found in a passage, imitated from the present, in Plut. Pericl., οὐκ ἦν ἄδικος ἀξίωσις αὐτῶν.

ὧν διακρίνοιντο, ἴσοι μὲν τῇ γνώμῃ ὄντες καὶ εὐνοίᾳ, ἀντίπαλοι δὲ τῇ παρασκευῇ καὶ δυνάμει, πρόφασίς τε ἐπιεικὴς μηδεμία ὑπάρκοι τῆς ἀποστάσεως· ᾧ ἡμῖν καὶ Ἀθηναίοις οὐκ ἦν. μηδέ τῳ χείρους δόξωμεν εἶναι, εἰ, ἐν τῇ εἰρήνῃ τιμώμενοι ὑπ' αὐτῶν, ἐν τοῖς δεινοῖς ἀφιστάμεθα. X. Περὶ γὰρ τοῦ δικαίου καὶ ἀρετῆς πρῶτον, ἄλλως τε καὶ ξυμμαχίας δεόμενοι, τοὺς λόγους ποιησόμεθα· εἰδότες οὔτε φιλίαν ἰδιώταις βέβαιον γιγνομένην οὔτε κοινωνίαν πόλεσιν ἐς οὐδέν, εἰ μὴ μετ' ἀρετῆς δοκούσης ἐς ἀλλήλους γίγνοιντο, καὶ τἆλλα ὁμοιότροποι εἶεν· ἐν γὰρ τῷ διαλλάσσοντι τῆς γνώμης καὶ αἱ διαφοραὶ τῶν ἔργων καθίστανται. 2. ἡμῖν δὲ καὶ Ἀθηναίοις ξυμμαχία ἐγένετο πρῶτον, ἀπολιπόντων μὲν ὑμῶν ἐκ τοῦ Μηδικοῦ πολέμου, παραμεινάντων δὲ ἐκείνων πρὸς τὰ ὑπόλοιπα τῶν ἔργων. 3. ξύμμαχοι μέντοι ἐγενόμεθα οὐκ ἐπὶ καταδουλώσει τῶν Ἑλλήνων Ἀθηναίοις, ἀλλ' ἐπ' ἐλευθερώσει ἀπὸ τοῦ Μήδου τοῖς Ἕλλησι.

ἴσοι τῇ γνώμῃ καὶ εὐνοίᾳ] 'like in mind and in affection;' meaning, those whose dispositions and views are alike, and who have the same likings and dislikings, who love or hate the same objects. Ἀντίπαλοι τῇ παρασκευῇ, 'equally balanced, or matched, in resources and power:' a signification frequent in Thucyd. and Dio Cass., but rare in other authors. Of ἐπιεικὴς in the sense just, sufficient, examples occur in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 595, 28, ἐπιεικεῖς αἰτίας. Polyb. iii. 91, 7, ἐπιεικ. ἀπόφασιν. For vulg. ἡμῖν τε καὶ, Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, edit, from many of the best MSS., ἡμῖν καὶ, which is so far right, inasmuch as the τε can have no place here,—as was distinctly seen by those critics who cancelled it, while others read, καὶ ἡμῖν καί: they would both have been better employed in emending, rather than in cancelling. I have no doubt that our author wrote γε, which, as in numerous other cases, was changed to τε.

Ch. X. The speakers now proceed to notice the nature of their connexion with Athens, showing that, though the relation in which they stood to her had originated in an act of their free choice, and was entered into for the defence of the common liberty of Greece, yet it had long ceased to be one of mutual confidence and good-will: for, when the Athenians had abused the confederation into a means of enslaving the allies; nay, when all but the Chians and themselves had been reduced to undisguised subjection, they could not but expect, in the end, the same fate. Thus, what they mean to prove is, that the revolt was occasioned by the πλεονεξία of the Athenians, and their unfaithfulness to the allies, which thus absolved them from all previous engagements.

1. τοῦ δικαίου καὶ ἀρετῆς] 'justice and moral rectitude;' lit., 'what is befitting man, as a moral agent, to do.' Μετ' ἀρετῆς δοκούσης, for μετὰ δοκήσεως [τινὸς] τῆς ἀρετῆς, 'nisi cum opinione virtutis quadam, quam inter se habeant [quisque de se et reliquis], fiat.' Thus it is equiv. to εἰ μὴ δοκοῖεν γίγνεσθαι φίλοι μετ' ἀρετῆς ἐς ἀλλήλους. At γίγνοιντο, supply φίλοι from φιλίαν preceding. Ὁμοιότροποι, 'of similar dispositions,' nearly equiv. to ἴσοι τῇ γνώμῃ. So Herodot. viii. 144, 7, ἤθεα ὁμότροπα: and in Theophr. Char. Eth. τοὺς ὁμοτρόπους.

ἐν γὰρ τῷ διαλλάσσοντι—καθίστανται] 'for from difference of mind arise too disagreements in action.' Τῷ διαλλ. for τῇ διαλλαγῇ: see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 271, 6. Of this very rare phrase, ἐν τῷ διαλλ. τῆς γνώμης, I have noted an example elsewhere in a passage (evidently imitated from the present) of Procop. 145, 32, αἱ δὲ πράξεις ἑκάστων ἢ τῷ ὁμοτρόπῳ ἐς ξυμμαχίαν συνάπτουσαι, ἢ τῷ διαλλάσσοντι τῆς γνώμης ἐς τὸ δυσμενὲς διακρίνουσαι.

2. ἀπολιπόντων ἐκ] 'abandoning:' a very rare construction, but of which another example occurs infra v. 4, ἀπολ. ἐκ τῶν Συρ.: see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 496, 1.

3. ξύμμαχοι—Ἕλλησι] Render, 'We became allies, not to the Athenians, for the subjugation of the Greeks, but to the Greeks, for their deliverance from [the yoke of] the Mede.'

4. καὶ μέχρι μὲν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ἡγοῦντο, προθύμως εἰπόμεθα· ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἐωρῶμεν αὐτοὺς τὴν μὲν τοῦ Μήδου ἔχθραν ἀνιέντας, τὴν δὲ τῶν ξυμμάχων δούλωσιν † ἐπαγομένους, οὐκ ἀδεεῖς ἔτι ἦμεν. 5. ἀδύνατοι δὲ ὄντες καθ' ἓν γενόμενοι, διὰ πολυψηφίαν, ἀμύνασθαι οἱ ξύμμαχοι, ἐδουλώθησαν, πλὴν ἡμῶν καὶ Χίων· ἡμεῖς δὲ, αὐτόνομοι δὴ ὄντες καὶ ἐλεύθεροι τῷ ὀνόματι, ξυνεστρατεύσαμεν. 6. καὶ πιστοὺς οὐκέτι εἴχομεν ἡγεμόνας Ἀθηναίους, παραδείγμασι τοῖς προγιγνομένοις χρώμενοι· οὐ γὰρ εἰκὸς ἦν αὐτοὺς, οὓς μὲν μεθ' ἡμῶν ἐνσπόνδους ἐποιήσαντο, καταστρέψασθαι, τοὺς δὲ ὑπολοίπους, εἴποτε ἄρα ἐδυνήθησαν, μὴ δρᾶσαι τοῦτο. XI. Καὶ εἰ μὲν αὐτόνομοι ἔτι ἦμεν ἅπαντες, βεβαιότεροι ἂν ἡμῖν ἦσαν μηδὲν νεωτεριεῖν· ὑποχειρίους δὲ ἔχοντες τοὺς πλείους, ἡμῖν δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου ὁμιλοῦντες, χαλεπώτερον, εἰκότως, ἔμελλον οἴσειν, καὶ

4. ἡγοῦντο] 'took the lead,' 'acted as leaders.' Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, 'on the principle of equality.' Τὴν τοῦ Μήδου ἔχθραν ἀνιέντας, 'slackening their enmity to the Mede:' a musical metaphor, taken from letting down the strings of an instrument. At τὴν τῶν ξυμμάχων δούλωσιν ἐπαγομένους, I would adopt the conjecture of Bekk., ἐπειγομένους: for of ἐπειγ. thus used transitively, examples occur not unfrequently in Thucyd. and others of the best writers.

5. καθ' ἓν γενόμενοι] in unum coëuntes. Διὰ πολυψηφίαν must be joined with ἀδύνατοι ὄντες, the term denoting, as says Levêque, not 'a multitude of suffrages, or those that bear suffrage, but a multitude of opinions differing among those who have the right of suffrage:' see note on i. 140.

αὐτόνομοι δὴ ὄντες] Here δὴ has, as often, the force of δῆθεν, (answering to that of the Latin scilicet, and our forsooth,) by which there is an implied notion of something that is merely said or given out as true, not what has really taken place, or is absolutely true. So iii. 104, κατὰ χρησμὸν δή τινα, 'in compliance, as they gave out or pretended, with a certain oracle.' Here then, as there, δὴ bears the sense 'as they pretended;' thus corresponding to τῷ ὀνόματι. Of ξυνεστρατεύσαμεν, the sense is, 'we served along with them in war,' 'we rendered to them military service,' 'followed their banners [in these wars].'

6. καὶ πιστοὺς, &c.] Here καὶ has a slightly adversative force, and may be rendered, 'and yet,' or 'nevertheless,' as in Xen. Cyr. vii. 5, 45, and Mem. i. 2, 32; and also in two passages of the New Testament, Matt. vi. 26, καὶ ὁ Πατὴρ—τρέφει αὐτὰ, and Gal. iv. 14, καὶ τὸν πειρασμόν μου—οὐκ ἐξουθενήσατε. Of πιστοὺς the sense is, trust-worthy, 'worthy of confidence.'

Ch. XI. In this chapter the speakers come closer home to the argument, and in proof of their position, (that the revolt was just,) argue, that not even their being yet in possession of some degree of independence, could avail to urge them to keep faith with the Athenians, who would be sure to take the first opportunity of breaking faith with them, by reducing them to utter servitude. Accordingly, the speakers show, that their being hitherto left in some degree of independence, was an effect of deep policy on the part of the Athenians, who only waited until, all the rest of the confederates being enslaved, they should have no aid to look to. Besides, that this forbearance suited their present purpose, because the support extended to them by the Mitylenæans in their enterprises, implied their approbation thereof; not to say that their naval power made it unsafe for them as yet to attack them; and their respectful attention to the Athenians, both the people at large and the rulers, had served to keep off this attack the longer.

1. βεβαιότεροι ἂν ἡμῖν ἦσαν μηδὲν νεωτεριεῖν] This, as Goell. and Poppo are agreed, stands for βεβαιότερον ἂν ἦν αὐτοὺς μηδὲν νεωτεριεῖν. We have a similar idiom in our own language, though confined to the phraseology of common life, by which a person is said to be safe to do, or not do, a thing. Of the words following, χαλεπώτερον—οἴσειν, the sense πρὸς τὸ πλεῖον ἤδη εἶκον τοῦ ἡμετέρου ἔτι μόνου ἀντισουμένου· ἄλλως τε καὶ ὅσῳ δυνατώτεροι αὐτοὶ αὐτῶν ἐγίγνοντο, καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐρημότεροι. 2. τὸ δὲ ἀντίπαλον δέος μόνον πιστὸν ἐς ξυμμαχίαν· ὁ γὰρ παραβαίνειν τι βουλόμενος τῷ μὴ προέχων ἂν ἐπελθεῖν ἀποτρέπεται. 3. αὐτόνομοί τε ἐλείφθημεν οὐ δι' ἄλλο τι ἢ ὅσον αὐτοῖς ἐς τὴν ἀρχὴν εὐπρεπείᾳ τε λόγου, καὶ γνώμης μᾶλλον ἐφόδῳ ἢ ἰσχύος, τὰ πράγματα ἐφαίνετο καταληπτά. 4. ἅμα μὲν γὰρ μαρis, 'they would, with reason, have thought it the harder,' lit. borne it worse. This parenthetic use of εἰκότως is rare, though found in Longin. § 5, fin. p. 12, εἶτα πρὸς οὐδὲν πεπονθότας ἀκροατὰς ἀσχημονοῦσιν, εἰκότως, ἐξεστηκότες πρὸς οὐκ ἐξεστηκότας. Such, too, is the use of the word in a passage of Onosand. Strat. 63, 2: see my note at i. 77, 5.

In the words following, καὶ πρὸς τὸ πλεῖον—ἀντισουμένου, the sentiment is plain, but the construction (which is, τοῦ ἡμετέρου ἔτι μόνου ἀντισουμένου πρὸς τὸ πλεῖον ἤδη εἶκον) involves an awkwardness, from the circumstance pointed out by Arnold, of the last clause, καὶ πρὸς τὸ πλεῖον—ἀντισουμένου, following the principal verb, ἔμελλον οἴσειν χαλ., whereas it should naturally have preceded it, as being merely a repetition of ὑποχειρίους δὲ — ὁμιλοῦντες, a little varied in form. Yet is it, in effect, more than a mere repetition, ὑποχειρίους signifying 'those already subjected;' τὸ εἶκον (μέρος), 'those giving way, but not yet subjugated.' This is apparent from the καὶ, which bears the sense insuper, besides. Render, 'Ours, too, being alone on a footing of equality, in comparison with the greater part already submitting to them.' On πρὸς, as signifying in comparison with, or to, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 591, γ. This construction of ἀντισοῦσθαι with πρὸς and an accus. is equiv. to the more usual one with the dative. The ἀντι signifies against, as when, to ascertain equality, one thing is weighed against another. Thus, in a passage of Herodot. iv. 196, πρὶν ἂν σφι ἀπισωθῇ (scil. χρυσὸς) τῇ ἀξίῃ τῶν φορτίων. I conjecture ἀντισ., and in Procop. de Ædif. p. 36, 43, τοῖς ξυμπίπτουσι χαλεποῖς ἀντιξ ποιούμενος τὴν αὐτοῦ πρόνοιαν, I would, for ἀντιξ π., read ἀντίξοον π., supposing ἀντίξοον to stand for ἀντισουμένην. And so in Etym. Mag. we have, ἀντίξοον explained by ἁρμόζον, οἷον ἀντισούμενον.

δυνατώτεροι αὐτοὶ αὐτῶν ἐγίγνοντο] Meaning, 'were becoming more powerful than before,' by an idiom frequent in Herodot. and Thucyd., on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 452.

2. τὸ δὲ ἀντίπαλον—ξυμμαχίαν] 'but an equally balanced, or reciprocal, apprehension,' (or, to express the force of the art., 'the equally-balanced dread,' meaning, the dread which is equally balanced,) is the only sure pledge of faith in respect to alliance. Πιστὸν may be a subst., as in Xen. Cyr. iv. 2, 4, ἔχετε πιστόν τι διδάσκον ὡς ἀληθεῖτε, but it should rather be regarded as an adj., in the sense 'fide dignum.' Render, 'is alone to be relied on,' as at iii. 40. v. 14, ἐλπίδα πιστὴν, and i. 141, 5, τὸ μὲν ἔχοντες πιστὸν, &c. Jos. Ant. xvi. 7, 2, ἵν' ᾖ τὸ δοκοῦν εὔνουν πιστὸν αὐτῷ πρὸς τὰς ἐπιχειρήσεις ὧν ἐδόκει.

τῷ μὴ προέχων ἂν ἐπελθεῖν ἀποτρέπεται] 'he is deterred from aggression by the circumstance that he should not make it with any superiority of force.' At ἐπελθ. is to be supplied αὐτὸν, and μὴ προέχων stands for μὴ προέχοντα, per attractionem.

3. αὐτόνομοί τε—καταληπτὰ] Of this obscure and ill-moulded sentence the meaning may be thus expressed: 'And we were left independent for no other reason, than that affairs, as to [the acquirement of] dominion, seemed to them attainable by speciousness of words, and by the craft of politic counsel, rather than force.' With respect to the construction and phraseology, ὅσον stands for ἐς ὅσον or καθ' ὅσον, inasmuch as, because. The words ἐς τὴν ἀρχὴν must be construed with τὰ πράγματα, as explanatory thereof, and taken in conjunction with καταληπτά: there being an allusion to the well-known phrase, καταλαμβάνειν τὰ πράγματα, 'to get hold of the management of public affairs.' So ch. 30 we have, ἐλπίζω — καταληφθῆναι ἂν τὰ πράγματα. Of ἐφόδῳ the sense is, 'by means of;' as in various passages of Dioscor., Hippocr., and Polyb., cited in my Transl.

4. ἅμα μὲν γὰρ, &c.] In this section are explained the nature and scope of this subtle policy, whereby the Athenians gained their dominion. Render, 'for withal they used this as an evidence, namely, that those allies at least who were on an equality, would not have been compelled to take the field with them, unless those against whom they proceeded had done some injury [to the confederacy at large].' The obscurity here existing is occasioned by extreme brevity, and a confused mode of composition: and ἄκοντας is to be closely joined with ξυστρατεύειν. Ἅμα μέν is in correspondence with ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ δέ: the two clauses containing each an illustration of the Athenian policy. To supply the sense wanted, we must suppose something left to be supplied from the subject-matter, as follows: 'they used this as an evidence [that all was right in their measures of policy].' That ἡμῖν (supplied by Poppo after μαρτυρίῳ) is not required, Goeller seems to have felt; for though adopting it in his version, yet in developing the condensed into the fuller mode of expression, he does not introduce the ἡμῖν, but writes thus: ἅμα μὲν γὰρ μαρτυρίῳ ἐχρῶντο, μὴ ἂν τούς γε ἰσοψήφους, εἰ μή τι ἠδίκουν οἷς ἐπῆσαν, ξυστρατεύειν, οὐ γὰρ ἂν ἀκοντάς γε ξυστρατεύειν, ἰσοψήφους ὄντας.

τυρίῳ ἐχρῶντο, μὴ ἂν τούς γε ἰσοψήφους ἄκοντας, εἰ μή τι ἠδίκουν οἷς ἐπῆσαν, ξυστρατεύειν· ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ δὲ καὶ τὰ κράτιστα ἐπί τε τοὺς ὑποδεεστέρους πρώτους ξυνεπῆγον, καὶ τὰ τελευταῖα λιπόντες, τοῦ ἄλλου περιῳρημένου, ἀσθενέστερα ἔμελλον ἕξειν. 5. εἰ δὲ ἀφ' ἡμῶν ἤρξαντο, ἐχόντων ἔτι τῶν πάντων αὐτῶν τε ἰσχύν, καὶ πρὸς ὅ τι χρὴ στῆναι, οὐκ ἂν ὁμοίως ἐχειρώσαντο. 6. τό τε ναυτικὸν ἡμῶν παρεῖχέ τινα φόβον, μή ποτε καθ' ἓν γενόμενον, ἢ ὑμῖν ἢ

ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ δὲ — ἔμελλον ἕξειν] Here commences the other illustration of the Athenian policy; and the full sense may be expressed as follows: 'By this same [mode of policy] they led out together the stronger states against the weaker first; and by [thus] leaving those to the last, they would be sure to find them,—the rest being cut down and lopped off around them,—the weaker and more helpless [to resist them].' The nature of the metaphor in περιῳρημένου is pointed out by Arnold, who well renders τοῦ ἄλλου περιῳρημένου, 'when all else (meaning, all others) was stripped from around them; like the foliage stripped from off a tree by some tempestuous wind.' And he might have established this view from a passage of Theophr. E. P. iii. 6, περιαιρεῖν τὴν θάλειαν τῶν κλάδων. The same metaphor, too, may be recognised in the words of Dr. South: 'That which lays a man open to an enemy, and that which strips him of a friend, attacks him in all those interests that are capable of being weakened by the one, and supported by the other:' though, indeed, there the metaphor may be one taken from lopping off the branches of a tree, which thus loses its best defence against the storms of heaven. And so Theodor. Gaza has the expression περιαιρουμένη ἄμπελος. And in this light was the metaphor considered by Liban., as appears from (what was evidently written in imitation of this elegance) Orat. p. 496, περικόπτοντες ἐν κύκλῳ πάντας καὶ τῶν μὲν ἤδη δεσπόζοντες, τοὺς δέ, &c. Similar is the image employed in a passage of Is. x. 33, 'Behold, the Lord shall lop the bough with terror; and the high ones of stature shall be hewn down.' So, also, Is. xxx. 17, 'Ye shall be left as a bare pole (namely, a tree lopped of its branches) on the top of a mountain,' and thus exposed undefended to all the winds: for so I would there render the Heb. Taran, which does not signify a banner or beacon, nor a ship-mast, but the bare trunk of a tree, or, as it is rendered in the margin of our common version, 'a tree bereft of its branches:' so corresponding to the Rabbinical term Tarannith, a pine-tree; such being a tree almost all trunk.

5. αὐτῶν ἰσχύν] 'their own individual strength.' Of the words following, καὶ πρὸς ὅ τι χρὴ στῆναι, the sense is, 'and something to stand to,' as a rallying-point: a metaphor taken from persons who, when attacked, fly to some wall, or other place at which they may place their backs and stand on their defence. Possibly our author may have still had in mind the above allusion of a tree, the trunk of which represented the Lesbians, and the branches the other confederates, who might take refuge with them, as men resort to a tree for defence.

6. τό τε ναυτικὸν — παράσχῃ] A third reason is here given for the policy of the Athenians, of leaving the Mitylenæans still independent,—namely, the apprehension of danger from driving them to unite their navy with that of the Peloponnesians.

ἄλλῳ τῳ προσθέμενον, κίνδυνον σφίσι παράσχῃ· 7. τὰ δὲ καὶ ἀπὸ θεραπείας τοῦ τε κοινοῦ αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν αἰεὶ προεστώτων περιεγιγνόμεθα. 8. οὐ μέντοι ἐπὶ πολύ γ' ἂν ἐδοκοῦμεν δυνηθῆναι, εἰ μὴ ὁ πόλεμος ὅδε κατέστη, παραδείγμασι χρώμενοι τοῖς ἐς τοὺς ἄλλους. XII. Τίς οὖν αὕτη † ἡ φιλία ἐγίγνετο ἢ ἐλευθερία πιστή, ἐν ᾗ παρὰ γνώμην ἀλλήλους ὑπεδεχόμεθα; καὶ οἱ μὲν ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ

7. τὰ δὲ καὶ — περιεγιγνόμεθα] This I would understand to be, not, what Arnold and Poppo imagine, a reason subjoined in confirmation of the foregoing, but a circumstance introduced to account for their being still left independent,—namely, because they had paid such constant court both to the Athenian people and their rulers. Of ἀπὸ θεραπείας the sense is, 'by respectful attention to,' as in Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 738, 42, τοὺς προεστηκότας τῶν κοινῶν θεραπείαις τισὶν οἰκειωσάμενοι. Pausan. i. 17, 6, διὰ θερ. τοῦ δήμου. Athen. 259, περὶ τὰς θερ. τῶν ἐπιφανῶν. And περιεγιγνόμεθα signifies, 'we still preserved our independence.'

8. οὐ μέντοι ἐπὶ πολύ γ' ἂν ἐδοκοῦμεν δυνηθῆναι] Standing, by a frequent hypallage, for οὐκ ἂν, ὡς δοκεῖ, ἐδυνάμεθα: for ἄν thus joined with an inf. gives to that mood the same signification as the ind. or opt. with ἄν would have in the resolution by means of the finite verb. So ch. 89, ἄνευ σεισμοῦ οὐκ ἄν μοι δοκεῖ τὸ τοιοῦτο ξυμβῆναι γενέσθαι, equivalent to οὐκ ἂν ξυνέβη, where, as here, the condition is contained in ἄνευ σεισμοῦ, (equivalent to εἰ μὴ σεισμὸς ἦν,) as here it is in εἰ μὴ ὁ πόλεμος κατέστη. See other examples adduced in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 598, a. The expression ὁ πόλεμος κατέστη has already occurred at ii. 65, and κατ. may be rendered, 'had been set on foot,' 'taken place.' At τοῖς ἐς τοὺς ἄλλους supply γενομένοις: the sense being, 'what had taken place in the case of the rest of the allies.'

CH. XII. Another argument is now adduced in proof of the necessity of the step they had taken,—and that deduced from the inequality of the power of each, whereby the weaker must in the end fall under the power of the stronger.

1. τίς οὖν αὕτη — πιστή] The sense here must depend on the reading. Now Poppo and Bekker, taking exception to the common lection ἡ, read, on the conjecture of Dind., ἤ, which, indeed, I am enabled to support by the authority of the Cod. Clarend. But I see no necessity for the change; and the reading in question may justly be supposed to have been a mere alteration proceeding from the conjecture of those who did not well comprehend the import of this peculiar mode of expression, in which the art. has great force, and the interrogation bears a strong affinity to exclamation; and, as Abr. remarks, 'inservit admirationi et indignationi:' in which view we may compare the words of Terence, Andr. i. 3, 11, 'quæ ista pravitas!' Arnold, indeed, thinks that the conjecture of Dind. removes all difficulty: but that is far from being the case, since it is not without reason objected by Goeller, that thus πιστὴ will be little suitable. At any rate it enervates the force of the words, which are pregnant with meaning—and that only to be drawn forth by supposing that the words φιλία and ἐλευθερία, though written once, are to be taken twice, thus: 'What sort of friendship, then, was this friendship of ours? what assured or secure liberty was this liberty of ours?' The liberty enjoyed by the Mitylenæans was, it seems, called by those who advocated the cause of the Athenian connexion, ἐλευθερία πιστή, as being pledged and assured to them by the terms of alliance. Finally, the article here was certainly read by Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 78, as appears by the following close imitation of the present passage: Τίς οὖν ἡ τοιαύτη φιλία καὶ πίστις, ἐν ᾗ παρὰ γνώμην ἀλλήλους θεραπεύειν ἀναγκασθησόμεθα; The present passage was also evidently present to the mind of Appian, ii. 367, 70, Ποία ταῦτα ἦν ἐλευθερία, ἧς οὐδ' ἐλπὶς ὑπέφαινετο ἔτι, where, for the manifestly corrupt ποία ταῦτα ἦν ἐλευθερία, ἧς ο. ἐ. ὐ., I would propose to read ποία γ' αὕτη ἡ ἐλευθερία, ᾗ ο. ἐ. ὐ., or ποῖα ταῦτα; ἡ ἐλευθερία, ἧς, &c. And so in Eurip. Phœn. 720, we have ποῖα ταῦτα; Supposing, however, ἡ to be the true reading, we may express the sense thus: 'What, then, was this? whether [shall we call it] friendship, or assured liberty? wherein,' &c. In whichsover of these two ways the passage is taken, it will still be a forcible mode of expressing the sentiment, that 'thus they held each other in mutual suspicion, being only restrained from aggression by mutual fear.'

Of παρὰ γνώμην the sense is, 'præter animi sententiam:' and ὑπεδεχόμεθα is to πολέμῳ διδιότες ἐθεράπευον, ἡμεῖς δὲ ἐκείνους ἐν τῇ ἡσυχίᾳ τὸ αὐτὸ ἐποιοῦμεν· ὅ τε τοῖς ἄλλοις μάλιστα, εὔνοια, πίστιν βεβαιοῖ, ἡμῖν τοῦτο ὁ φόβος ἐχυρὸν παρεῖχε· δέει τε τὸ πλέον ἢ φιλίᾳ κατεχόμενοι ξύμμαχοι ἦμεν· καὶ ὁποτέροις θᾶσσον παράσχοι ἀσφάλεια θάρσος, οὗτοι πρότεροί τι καὶ παραβήσεσθαι ἔμελλον. 2. ὥστε, εἴ τῳ δοκοῦμεν ἀδικεῖν προαποστάντες διὰ τὴν ἐκείνων μέλλησιν τῶν ἐς ἡμᾶς δεινῶν, αὐτοὶ οὐκ ἀνταναμείναντες σαφῶς εἰδέναι εἴ τι αὐτῶν ἔσται, οὐκ ὀρθῶς σκοπεῖ. 3. εἰ γὰρ δυνατοὶ ἦμεν ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου καὶ ἀντεπιβουλεῦσαι καὶ ‡ ἀντιμελλῆσαι, τί ἔδει ἡμᾶς ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου be taken not of reception to hospitality, but in that general sense of the term found in the Latin excipere, as used of welcoming any one by kind and respectful reception of him. So in Livy, xxx. 14, we have, 'benigno vultu excipere aliquem;' and in a passage of Cicero, pro Mil. 'O terram beatam! quæ hunc virum excipiet.'

The next words, καὶ οἱ μὲν ἡμᾶς—ἐποιοῦμεν, are meant to be explanatory of what has been before said; καὶ here, as occasionally elsewhere, being an explicative copula, serving to unite clauses, and which may be rendered, 'and accordingly.'

ὅ τε τοῖς ἄλλοις—παρεῖχε] A passage, this, of the same nature as that at ii. 40, ὃ τοῖς ἄλλοις—ὄκνον, and equally difficult to reconcile to any correct grammatical principles. Notwithstanding the total dissent of Poppo, I am still, as formerly, of opinion, (and am joined in this by Arnold and Goeller,) that the ὅ τε is best rendered and whereas; though to show how this sense arises, is difficult, if not impracticable: for I quite agree with Arnold, that grammatical construction there is none in the sentence, and Poppo's attempt to make out any, (either by regarding πίστιν βεβαιοῖ as one word, or by supposing a confusion of two modes of expression,) is such as can only call forth a smile in those who may not be displeased to see a grammarian caught in his own toils. I fully agree with Arnold, that the readiest way of making the sentence grammatical would be by striking out πίστιν, which, though brought in to make the sentence clearer, in reality confuses it, as in the case of the phrase ἀσφαλῶς ἐκπλήγνυσθαι at iv. 125. As a proof of the impracticability of making any grammar in the sentence, I would observe, that though I have noticed frequent imitations of the passage in the later classical writers, yet I have not found one in which the author has not chosen to omit what causes the perplexity here. Thus in a passage of Philostr. Epist. lvi. 11, we have, ὃ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐπίῤῥητον δοκεῖ καὶ μέμψεως ἄξιον, τοῦτο μάλιστα ἐγώ σου φιλῶ.

κατεχόμενοι] 'withheld [from aggression],' as in Arrian, E. A. ii. 7, 4, a passage evidently written in imitation of the present. For vulg. θράσος, I have, with the recent editors, thought proper to adopt θάρσος, especially as I find the latter strongly confirmed by a passage imitated from hence in Jos. Ant. xviii. 10, 8.

2. In this and the next section we have an anticipation of a counter-argument, to prove that they have acted unjustly,—which is first stated in the present section, and answered in the next. Now the first requires no explanation. It will suffice to adduce a passage of Eurip. Cresphont. frag. viii., containing a similar argument (namely, that a delay of suspected wrong should make us delay the repelling of it till the time of aggression arrives): εἰ γάρ σ' ἔμελλεν—ὡς σὺ φῂς, κτείνειν πόσις, Χρῆ καί σε μέλλειν ὡς χρόνος δῆθεν παρῇν, where, for χρῆ, read, with Valckn., χρῆν, and for ὡς read, with Valckn., ἕως.

διὰ τὴν ἐκείνων μέλλησιν τῶν ἐς ἡμᾶς δεινῶν] 'on the ground of their deferring the infliction of the evils.' It is very rare that nouns have this active sense, and then only when verbals. By τῶν δεινῶν is meant, 'the apprehended evils,' as v. 22, and Herodot. i. 155.

ἀνταναμείναντες] The ἀντι signifies 'on our part,' 'in return,' and has reference to the ἐκείνων before.

3. εἰ γὰρ δυνατοὶ ἦμεν ἐκ τοῦ ἴσου, &c.] Here there exists an acknowledged difficulty; but, if the true text be such as I have chosen to edit, the full sense intended will necessarily be as follows: 'For if we were on an equal footing with them,—able both to counter-counsel (or contrive plans against them) and to counter-forbear or delay [as they do towards us],—what obligation was there for us in like manner (i. e. as the case now stands) to be dependent upon them? On the contrary, the ἐπ' ἐκείνοις εἶναι; ἐπ' ἐκείνοις δὲ ὄντος ἀεὶ τοῦ ἐπιχειρεῖν, καὶ ἐφ' ἡμῖν εἶναι δεῖ τὸ προαμύνασθαι. XIII. Τοιαύτας ἔχοντες προφάσεις καὶ αἰτίας, ὧ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ ξύμμαχοι, ἀπέστημεν. σαφεῖς μὲν τοῖς ἀκούουσι γνῶναι ὡς εἰκότως ἐδράσαμεν, ἱκανὰς δὲ ἡμᾶς ἐκφοβῆσαι, καὶ πρὸς ἀσφάλειάν τινα τρέψαι, βουλομένους μὲν καὶ πάλαι, ὅτε ἔτι ἐν τῇ εἰρήνῃ ἐπέμψαμεν ὡς ὑμᾶς περὶ ἀποστάσεως, ὑμῶν δὲ οὐ προσδεξαμένων, κωλυθέντας· νῦν δὲ, ἐπειδὴ Βοιωτοὶ προὐκαλέσαντο, εὐθὺς ὑπηκούσαμεν, καὶ ἐνομίζομεν ἀποστήσεσθαι διπλῆν ἀπόστασιν, ἀπό τε τῶν Ἑλλήνων, [power of] attacking being always with them, so also with us ought to be that of repelling attack before it be commenced.' To advert to the phraseology, the sense above assigned to ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου is not unfrequent, and here required by the context. As to the reading, instead of vulg. ἀντεπιμελῆσαι, Poppo and Bekker have edited ἀντιμελλῆσαι, which is found in almost all the best MSS., and is certainly preferable, from the context requiring μελλ. rather than μελ. Yet so difficult, not to say impossible, is it to account for the επ, unless on the supposition that it crept in from the inadvertence of the scribes, who had yet in their ears the word ἀντεπιβουλεῦσαι, (as in a similar instance, ch. 104, where, for ἐντίκτειν, we have, from the occurrence of ἐναποθνήσκειν just before, ἐναποτίκτειν,) that I have, with Goeller and Arnold, thought proper to edit, on the authority of the Schol. and at least one MS., ἀντιμελλῆσαι. Τί was wrongly altered by Poppo to τις, since while useless to ἀντιμελλ., it possesses no little force as united with ἔδει: τί δεῖ being a phrase frequent in our author and the other Attic writers. Ἐκ τοῦ ὁμοίου is equivalent to ὁμοίως, signifying literally, 'like as if it were not so,' namely, as we are now circumstanced. Ἐπ' ἐκείνοις εἶναι signifies 'to be at their beck, or order;' not, as Arnold understands, 'at their subjection;' for the subjugation of Lesbos was not yet effected.

CH. XIII. With ch. 12 the justification of their revolt, properly speaking, terminates. In the commencing words of the present chapter, τοιαύτας ἔχοντες—ἀπέστημεν, (meaning, 'such is our justification of what we did, on these reasons we acted, and these we plead in justification,') the speakers having secured that point, make a transition to another topic,—namely, to account for having not taken the step before, but so long delayed doing it, —and why they had now urged it forward with so much haste. Now the link, to effect this transition, may be found in this intermediate observation, that 'though the step was justifiable, and done—as their auditors would allow — on good grounds, yet was it such as might well fill them with alarm, and drive them to seek for security from whatever quarter, and accordingly to have recourse to the Peloponnesians,—not tardily, or from want of goodwill, for they had before wished to take this step, but were prevented by the Peloponnesians rejecting their proposal.' They admit that their revolt has been quick and sudden, and consequently unprepared; but they argue that that very circumstance gives them a stronger claim on their support. Finally, the speakers show that the step they urge on the Peloponnesians will be at once well-timed, and in various ways promotive of their true interests, in the contest they were now engaged in.

1. σαφεῖς—γνῶναι] for σαφῶς τοὺς ἀκούοντας διδάξαι δυναμένας. Of πρὸς ἀσφάλειάν τινα τρέψαι the sense is, 'to turn us to seek some mode of securing ourselves [from ruin];' for as ἀσφαλὴς sometimes signifies procuring or promoting security, so may ἀσφάλεια the mode of procuring it. At βουλομένους πάλαι supply ἀφιστάναι, from the preceding ἀπέστημεν.

ἐνομίζομεν ἀποστήσεσθαι] 'we thought we ought to make;' for this is one of those cases adverted to by Lobeck on Phryn. p. 754, in which the verbs δεῖν, χρῆναι, and such like, 'in constructione delitescunt.' Of more consequence, however, is it to notice the strangeness of expression in ἀποστήσεσθαι διπλῆν ἀπόστασιν, ἀπό τε, &c., where, notwithstanding the dissent of Poppo, I am still, as formerly, of opinion that the sense is, 'to make a double secession; one from the Greeks, so as not to injure them with the Athenians, but to assist in liberating them [from oppression]; the other, from the Athenians, so as,' &c. The sense here assigned to ἀφ., absistere, was first propounded by Reiske, and afterwards adopted

μὴ ξὺν κακῶς ποιεῖν αὐτοὺς μετ' Ἀθηναίων, ἀλλὰ ξυνελευθεροῦν, ἀπό τε Ἀθηναίων, μὴ αὐτοὶ διαφθαρῆναι ὑπ' ἐκείνων ἐν ὑστέρῳ, ἀλλὰ προποιῆσαι. 2. ἡ μέντοι ἀπόστασις ἡμῶν θᾶσσον γεγένηται καὶ ἀπαράσκευος· ᾗ καὶ μᾶλλον χρὴ ξυμμάχους δεξαμένους ἡμᾶς διὰ ταχέων βοήθειαν ἀποστέλλειν, ἵνα φαίνησθε ἀμύνοντές τε οἷς δεῖ, καὶ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τοὺς πολεμίους βλάπτοντες. 3. καιρὸς δὲ ὡς οὔπω πρότερον. νόσῳ τε γὰρ ἐφθάραται Ἀθηναῖοι καὶ χρημάτων δαπάνῃ· νῆές τε αὐτοῖς αἱ μὲν περὶ τὴν ὑμετέραν εἰσὶν, αἱ δ' ἐφ' ἡμῖν τετάχαται. 4. ὥστε οὐκ εἰκὸς αὐτοὺς περιουσίαν νεῶν ἔχειν, ἣν ὑμεῖς ἐν τῷ θέρει τῷδε ναυσί τε καὶ πεζῷ ἅμα ἐπεσβάλητε τὸ δεύτερον· ἀλλ' ἢ ὑμᾶς οὐκ ἀμυνοῦνται ἐπιπλέοντας, ἢ ἀπ' ἀμφοτέρων ἀποχωρήσονται. 5. νομίσῃ τε μηδεὶς

by Haack and myself in Transl., and subsequently by Arnold and Goeller, of whom the latter truly remarks, that ἀπόστασις has here a double sense; one as it respects the Athenians, of defection or revolt; the other, as it respects the Greeks, of absistendi, recedendi, 'withdrawing oneself.' Of ἀφίστασθαι as used in the sense 'to stand apart from,' absistere, the examples adduced by Goeller and Arnold from infra iv. 118, and vii. 7, are not to the purpose, because in those passages the term is merely used of standing aloof from a thing, declining to engage in it; whereas here it is of a person. Yet examples do occur, and such are found in Acts v. 38, ἀπόστητε ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων τούτων. Luke iv. 13, ἀπέστη ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. Acts xxii. 29. 2 Cor. xii. 8. In all which cases the active so used in a neuter sense is the ordinary Greek idiom, for the middle form in a reflective sense, which is Attic. So in a passage of the Sept., Ecclus. vii. 2, we have the active form for ἀφίστασο, which occurs in 1 Tim. vi. 5. Poppo, indeed, would retain the sense of defection or revolt in both clauses. But thus a harshness almost intolerable would be added to an already frigid conceit, more worthy of a Timæus than a Thucydides.

μὴ ξὺν κακῶς ποιεῖν αὐτοὺς μετ' Ἀθηναίων] Of these words, which are explanatory of the foregoing ones, the sense is sufficiently clear, while the manner in which it is expressed is strange and unusual. The difficulty is not to be got rid of by supposing, with the critics in general and almost all the editors, the existence of a tmesis. There is merely the semblance of such, not the reality, since we cannot suppose such a phrase as κακῶς ξυμποιεῖν. We have not, then, a tmesis, but rather a recurrence to the ancient mode (frequent in Homer and Herodot.) of keeping the verb and its preposition in composition apart: a mode of writing, this, especially resorted to in the present case by our author, since there was probably then no such word as κακοποιεῖν, at least not in the sense to injure, but only to do evil, (for in Xen. Mem. iii. 5, 26, though we have τὴν βασίλεως χώραν κακοποιεῖν, yet I doubt not that Xenophon wrote κακῶς ποιεῖν, as in numerous other passages;) hence he was obliged to keep the ξὺν apart from κακῶς ποιεῖν, in which case the preposition is used as an adverb, by an idiom frequent in Homer, and occasionally found in Thucydides.

μὴ αὐτοὶ—προποιῆσαι] Meaning, '[so as] not to be ourselves destroyed by them at last, but to fore-do [the thing],' i. e. prevent them in destroying [and not wait to be destroyed by them].

3. ἐφθάραται] for ἐφθάρηνται: an Ionic and old Attic form. So we have, just after, τετάχαται, for τεταγμένοι εἰσί. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 204, 6, and Buttm. Gr. § 98, 6. In χρημάτων δαπάνῃ we have (as in the case of δαπ. χρυσοῦ and ἀργύρου at i. 1, and πρόσοδος τῶν χρημάτων, a little further on) a plena locutio, which, however, has an intensive force. The phrase is very rare, but I have noted examples elsewhere in Demosth. p. 1393, 1, and Schol. on Pind. Olymp. v. 33.

4. περιουσίαν νεῶν ἔχειν] 'have any reserve of ships' for defence against invasion. Ἐπεσβάλητε: a stronger term than ἐσβ., and which, though rare, is found in Eurip. El. 498. Of the words, a little after, ἢ ἀπ' ἀμφοτέρων ἀποχωρήσονται, the sense is, 'they will (i. e. must) retire from, withdraw their fleets from both places, Peloponnesus and Mitylene.' So in Dio Cass. 247, 30, we have, τῶν Ῥωμαίων πρὸς τῇ Γεργουβίᾳ πταισάν-

ἀλλοτρίας γῆς πέρι οἰκεῖον κίνδυνον ἔξειν· ᾧ γὰρ δοκεῖ μακρὰν ἀπεῖναι ἡ Λέσβος, τὴν ὠφέλειαν αὐτῷ ἐγγύθεν παρέξει. οὐ γὰρ ἐν τῇ Ἀττικῇ ἔσται ὁ πόλεμος, ὥς τις οἴεται, ἀλλὰ δι' ἣν ἡ Ἀττικὴ ὠφελεῖται. 6. ἔστι δὲ τῶν χρημάτων ἀπὸ τῶν ξυμμάχων ἡ πρόσοδος, καὶ ἔτι μείζων ἔσται, εἰ ἡμᾶς καταστρέψονται· οὔ τε γὰρ ἀποστήσεται ἄλλος, τά τε ἡμέτερα προσγενήσεται, πάθοιμέν τ' ἂν δεινότερα ἢ οἱ πρὶν δουλεύοντες. 7. βοηθησάντων δὲ ὑμῶν προθύμως, πόλιν τε προσλήψεσθε ναυτικὸν ἔχουσαν μέγα,—οὗπερ ὑμῖν μάλιστα προσδεῖ,—καὶ Ἀθηναίους ῥᾷον καθαιρήσετε, ὑφαιροῦντες αὐτῶν τοὺς ξυμμάχους· (θρασύτερον γὰρ πᾶς τις προσχωρήσεται·) τήν τε αἰτίαν ἀποφεύξεσθε ἣν εἴχετε, μὴ βοηθεῖν τοῖς ἀφισταμένοις· ἢν δ' ἐλευθεροῦντες φαίνησθε, τὸ κράτος τοῦ πολέμου

5. νομίσῃ τε μηδεὶς—ἔξειν] Here we have an anticipation of an objection which some would be likely to make to the engaging in this plan,—namely, that they should endanger their own welfare, for the benefit of a foreign land; or, according to the literal sense, that they should have (i. e. encounter) a personal danger, for, &c. There is probably an allusion to some adage, to that effect, common in the mouths of the timid and selfish, to whom the wisdom that teaches them to cherish self is peculiarly acceptable. By ἀλλοτρίας is meant not so much what is foreign, as what they had nothing to do with, had no connexion with, from its being distant from them.

ᾧ γὰρ δοκεῖ—παρέξει] 'for to him who thinks Lesbos far off, it will afford benefit near at hand,' or occurring in the scene of action, on the theatre of the war. This is then followed by another reason, (and that deduced from a motive of interest,) why they should embark with zeal and alacrity in the cause of Lesbos,—namely, because the war will not be decided by any blow struck in Attica, but in that territory whereby Attica is supported; meaning, the territory of her subject allies, of which Lesbos was the most considerable. Δι' ἣν stands for δι' ἧς, as at ch. 39, προσόδου δι' ἣν ἰσχύομεν.

6. ἔστι δὲ—πρόσοδος] These words are explanatory of the preceding, δι' ἣν ἡ Ἀττικὴ ὠφελεῖται, and may be rendered, 'Now their revenue is of (i. e. consists in) money derived from their allies.' Or we may regard ἡ πρόσοδος τῶν χρημάτων as constituting a plena locutio (as at ii. 13, and i. 15) for πρόσοδος. At any rate the art. stands for the poss. pron. with reference to ἡ Ἀττικὴ, its revenue, meaning that of the Athenians. By τὰ ἡμέτερα understand, 'whatever we have in wealth or property of any kind,' including shipping. The next words, πάθοιμέν τ' ἂν δεινότερα ἢ οἱ πρὶν δουλεύοντες, are meant to show why the property of the Mitylenæans would not only be at the power, but would be soon in the possession of the Athenians. The sense being, 'for we should suffer worse treatment than those who were in slavery before [they revolted], because for those there might be some excuse, [not for these.]' Accordingly, as Arnold observes, we find Cleon, at ch. 39, calling vengeance on them on this very ground.

7. βοηθησάντων δὲ ὑμῶν] Here we have the use of the gen. absol. for the case of the partic. required by the verb following, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 560 and 561. Καθαιρήσετε, 'will pull down,' 'humble.' Here, as in the τεθεμελιωμένοι ἐν ἀγάπῃ of St. Paul, and the ἐποικοδομῆσαι of St. Luke, we have an architectural metaphor, with this difference, that in the passage of St. Luke there is allusion to the raising of an edifice; in the present, to the pulling it down; and that (as is suggested in the term following, ὑφαιροῦντες) by undermining it, and pulling out stones from the foundations,—a main part this of ancient Poliorcetics.

μὴ βοηθεῖν τοῖς ἀφισταμένοις] Namely, as in the case of the Samians, Thasians, and Eubœans, whom the Spartans did not aid in their revolts from Athens, on the maxim of policy, which, as we find from i. 40, they acted upon, that each state should punish its own allies [for defection].

τὸ κράτος—ἕξετε] 'you will have a firmer assurance of victory in the contest;' for κράτος does not here signify robur, (as Port. renders,) but imperium, βεβαιότερον ἔξετε. XIV. Αἰσχυνθέντες οὖν τάς τε τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἐς ὑμᾶς ἐλπίδας, καὶ Δία τὸν Ὀλύμπιον, ἐν οὗ τῷ ἱερῷ ἴσα καὶ ἱκέται ἐσμέν, ἐπαμύνατε Μυτιληναίοις ξύμμαχοι γενόμενοι· καὶ μὴ πρόησθε ἡμᾶς, ἴδιον μὲν τὸν κίνδυνον τῶν σωμάτων παραβαλλομένους, κοινὴν δὲ τὴν ἐκ τοῦ κατορθῶσαι ὠφέλειαν ἅπασι δώσοντας, ἔτι δὲ κοινοτέραν τὴν βλάβην, εἰ, μὴ πεισθέντων ὑμῶν, σφαλησόμεθα. 2. γίγνεσθε δὲ ἄνδρες οἵουσπερ ὑμᾶς οἵ τε Ἕλληνες ἀξιοῦσι, καὶ τὸ ἡμέτερον δέος βούλεται."

XV. Τοιαῦτα μὲν οἱ Μυτιληναῖοι εἶπον. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἐπειδὴ ἤκουσαν, προσδεξάμενοι τοὺς λόγους, ξυμμάχους τε τοὺς Λεσβίους ἐποιήσαντο, καὶ τὴν ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἐσβολὴν τοῖς τε ξυμμάχοις παροῦσι κατὰ τάχος ἔφραζον ἰέναι ἐς τὸν ἰσθμὸν τοῖς δύο μέρεσιν ὡς ποιησόμενοι, καὶ αὐτοὶ πρῶτοι ἀφίκοντο, καὶ ὁλκοὺς παρεσκεύαζον τῶν νεῶν ἐν τῷ ἰσθμῷ, ὡς ὑπεροίσοντες or victoria, as often in Homer, Hesiod, Pind., and Herodot., and the Tragedians, who also put after it a genit. for a dat. with ἐν, as here. The phrase κράτος ἔχειν τοῦ πολέμου is so rare, that I have found it only here, and in Dio Cass. p. 24, 16.

Ch. XIV. In this chapter we have contained what the Rhetoricians call the ἐπίλογοι, dealing, as the Schol. says, in παροξυσμὸς καὶ παράκλησις ποικίλως δυσωποῦσα, where, by the former expression, understand incitatio, concitatio, exstimulatio, which sense the word bears in Heb. x. 24, εἰς παροξυσμὸν ἀγάπης καὶ καλῶν ἔργων. By the latter, ποικίλως δυσωποῦσα, is meant, 'influencing so to act by various considerations urged ad verecundiam,'—namely, that 'they ought to be ashamed to frustrate the hopes reposed in them by the Greeks, and to fail in respect to the Olympian Jove, whose suppliants they are, by refusing to defend them, and thus giving them up to their enemies:' an inducement this, then, backed by one of interest. They are entreated not to give them up to their enemies on this ground, that though the risk of the revolt is theirs, the benefits of its success will be common to all Greece, and still more the injury arising from its failure.

1. ἴσα καὶ ἱκέται] æque ac supplices, supplicibus similes; ἴσα being used adverbially; for ἴσα thus in comparison takes after it a καί. So Aristid. Panath. i. 285, ἴσα καὶ ἀήττητος. Of the words following, μὴ πρόησθε ἡμᾶς, the sense is, 'do not give us up,' 'abandon all care of us:' and so the term is used supra ii. 51, and often in Dio Cass. Of the phrase ἴδιον τὸν κίνδυνον, the examples adduced by Wasse and Duker are any thing but apposite, as applying only to παραβάλλεσθαι, not to παραβ. κίνδυνον, a phrase which I have met with only elsewhere in Onosand. p. 99, κίνδυνον εὐτόλμως παραβαλλόμενοι, though, as parallel to it, we may comp. ἀναῤῥίπτειν κίνδ. at iv. 95. Of εἰ σφαλησόμεθα the sense is, 'if we shall fail of success.' Closely imitated from the present is a sentence in Aristid. iii. 289, C, τὸν μὲν κίνδυνον αὐτοῦ, τὴν δ' ὠφέλειαν κοινὴν ἐποιήσατο.

2. γίγνεσθε δὲ ἄνδρες—βούλεται] An argumentum ad verecundiam, intimating that the eyes of all Greece were turned towards Sparta. Render, 'Be, then, men such as the Greeks esteem you, and our fears wish you [to be].' Comp. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 169, 22, οὐκ ἂν εἴημεν ἄνδρες οἵους ἡμᾶς προσῆκεν εἶναι.

Ch. XV. 1. καὶ τὴν ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν, &c.] Of this harshly transposed sentence, the construction is, (as Poppo and Goeller are agreed,) καὶ τὴν ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἐσβολὴν ὡς ποιησόμενοι, τοῖς τε ξυμμάχοις—ἔφραζον—καὶ αὐτοί, &c. In ὁλκοὺς παρεσκεύαζον, 'prepared machines for the transportation of the ships,' the gen. stands for the accus. with a preposition. These ὁλκοί, as we learn from the Schol. and ancient lexicographers, were wooden machines of a cylindrical form, by which ships were conveyed overland. So in Dio Cass. 1143, 46, we have, ὑπερενεγκὼν τὰ πλοῖα ὁλκοῖς. And in Hor. Od. i. 4, 2, Trahuntque siccas machinæ carinas. Comp. also Apoll. Rhod. i. 375.

XVI. Αἰσθόμενοι δὲ αὐτοὺς οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι διὰ κατάγνωσιν ἀσθενείας σφῶν παρασκευαζομένους, δηλῶσαι βουλόμενοι ὅτι οὐκ ὀρθῶς ἐγνώκασιν, ἀλλ' οἷοί τέ εἰσι, μὴ κινοῦντες τὸ ἐπὶ Λέσβῳ ναυτικὸν, καὶ τὸ ἀπὸ Πελοποννήσου ἐπιὸν ῥᾳδίως ἀμύνεσθαι, ἐπλήρωσαν ναῦς ἑκατὸν, ἐσβάντες αὐτοί τε, πλὴν ἱππέων καὶ πεντακοσιομεδίμνων, καὶ οἱ μέτοικοι· καὶ παρὰ τὸν ἰσθμὸν ἀναγαγόντες, ἐπίδειξίν τε ἐποιοῦντο καὶ ἀποβάσεις τῆς Πελοποννήσου ᾗ δοκοῖ αὐτοῖς. 2. οἱ δὲ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ὁρῶντες πολὺν τὸν παράλογον, τά τε ὑπὸ τῶν Λεσβίων ῥηθέντα ἡγοῦντο οὐκ ἀληθῆ, καὶ ἄπορα νομίζοντες, ὡς αὐτοῖς καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἅμα οὐ

2. ἐν καρποῦ ξυγκομιδῇ ἦσαν] 'were engaged in the gathering in of the crop,' or harvest. So in a passage of Isocr. Arcop., cited by Wasse, we have, εὐκαίρως πρὸς τὴν συγκομιδὴν τῶν καρπῶν: and in another of Xen. Hist., σίτου συγκομιδῆς οὔσης. On the phrase εἶναι ἐν, in this sense, see Matth. Gr. Gr. p. 1140, and compare the Horatian totus in illis. Ἐν ἀῤῥωστίᾳ τοῦ στρατεύειν is, as Suid. explains, for ἐν ἀπροθυμίᾳ, 'were in a state of indisposition for campaigning:' a similar figure to that by which we speak of being sick of any thing. Comp. Isocr. Panath. τὴν φύσιν εἰδὼς πρὸς τὰς πράξεις ἀῤῥωστέραν. Xen. Œcon. iv. 2, αἱ ψυχαὶ ἀῤ. γίγνονται. The sense, then, is, 'they were sick of warfare for that season, and, accordingly, were slow in attending to the summons for a fresh expedition.'

Ch. XVI. In this chapter are recorded the measures to which the Athenians—rousing a spirit, which, as usual, rose under difficulties,—had recourse in this crisis, and which rendered nugatory all the plans that had been formed for the invasion and subjugation of Attica.

1. διὰ κατάγνωσιν ἀσθενείας σφῶν] Namely, as Arnold explains, by imparting weakness to them, as in viii. 8, καταφρονήσαντες τῶν Ἀθηναίων ἀδυναμίαν. And he justly observes, that σφῶν and τῶν Ἀθηναίων are governed by κατάγνωσιν and καταφρονήσαντες, as the objects of the imputation. So in Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, 20, we have, αὐτὸς δ' ἐμαυτοῦ κατέγνων, μὴ ἂν καρτερῆσαι. Comp. also infra iii. 45.

ἱππέων καὶ πεντακοσιομεδίμνων] On these orders, the first and second of the state, according to the census or rating of their property, see Boeckh, Œcon. of Athens, vol. ii. p. 259. In the words a little after, for vulg. περὶ, (which yields no suitable sense,) I have edited, with Bekk., Goell., and Poppo, from all the best MSS., παρά. Thus, there will be in ἀναγ. a significatio prægnans, i. e. 'having weighed, and proceeded:' and παρὰ will signify to.

ἐπίδειξίν τε ἐποιοῦντο] 'made a display, or parade.' Of which signification I have adduced many examples from the historians, orators, and other writers.

2. ὁρῶντες πολὺν τὸν παράλογον] 'on seeing matters take a turn so different from what they had expected.' On this idiom see supra i. 78. At ἄπορα νομίζοντες, the sense must be, 'regarding the matter as impracticable.' There is an ellipsis here, which Poppo and Goell. would supply by ῥηθέντα, taken from the preceding, though understood in the accommodated sense, mandata, imperata, while Arnold would take ἄπορα impersonally, as at ii. 98, ἐπειδὴ ἑτοῖμα ἦν: of which two methods the latter is preferable, (the former involving a harshness quite inadmissible,) but the passage adduced in confirmation of it is of another character to the present. In either case we have a very brief mode of expression; but the present is yet more condensed, there being an ellipsis of εἶναι, and of some words to be supplied from the context, which must here be, 'the matters they had in hand.' Or ἄπορα νομίζ. may stand for ἄπορον εἶναι νομ., as νομίσαντες ἀδύνατα εἶναι stands for νομ. ἀδύνατον εἶναι, at i. 59,—with this difference, that ἀδύνατον may be taken impersonally, as in Plato, Theæt. p. 191, ὁμολογοῦντες ἀδύνατα [εἶναι], 'confessing that the thing was impracticable.'

ἠγγέλλοντο—πορθοῦσαι] See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 555, note 2.

3. ἐπήγγελλον—πλῆθος] 'they sent out orders for,' &c., like ἐπέταξαν. So at vii. 17, we have, ἐπ. στρατείαν, as also in Xen. Cyr. iv. 4, 3.

Ch. XVII. 1. ἐν τοῖς πλεῖσται δὴ νῆες] The editors have been, not without reason, perplexed with this ἐν τοῖς, which Herm., Bred., Haack, Goell., and Poppo, regard as a formula prefixed to superlatives, and communicating an intensity of sense; referring for examples to other passages of our author, i. 6. iii. 8, and vii. 19. Here, however, the superlative has a δὴ intensive after it, and therefore little needs any intensive prefix. Moreover, as Arnold observes, 'if ἐν τοῖς πλεῖσται be even more than the ordinary superlative degree, what shall we say to ἔτι πλείους coming just after it?' I am inclined to agree with him, that the ἐν τοῖς, added to the superlative, qualifies, instead of strengthening its proper force; that ἐν τοῖς πρῶτον signifies, 'one of the first,' and ἐν τοῖς πρῶτοι, ἐν τοῖς πλεῖστοι, 'some of the first,' 'some of the most numerous.'

Little less formidable than the above is the difficulty connected with the term κάλλει: construing it, as Goell. directs, with ἅμα, a sufficiently good sense arises,—namely, 'were at once effective and handsome.' But this, Poppo thinks, is forbidden by the collocation of the words; since, if ἅμα puts on the nature of a preposition, it cannot be separated from its case. Hence he would connect it with ἐνεργοὶ, by which the sense will be, 'being withal effective by their handsomeness,' meaning, 'the beautiful symmetry of their forms,' which would not a little contribute to the making them effective. Yet so forced and jejune seems this sense, that it is better to connect ἅμα with ἐγένοντο, as at § 2, in the sense 'at one time,' and suppose that the dative κάλλει stands for σὺν κάλλει, as in a passage of Eurip. Orest. 1460, (Matth.) ἰαχᾷ δόμων θύρετρα—ἐκβαλόντες stands for σὺν ἰαχᾷ. Render, 'at this period, when the ships sailed, there was in their possession one of the largest fleets they ever had at one time of vessels at once effective and handsome,' literally, 'effective together with handsomeness.'

3. ἐφρούρουν] 'guarded or garrisoned the trenches, or walls of circumvallation:' a signification which, though omitted in Steph. Thes., occurs in Thucyd. (as iii. 21, and i. 64.) and Arrian, E. A. i. 7, 14. iv. 3, 10.

δραχμὴν ἐλάμβανε] It is well observed by Mr. Knight, 'The first species of money that was invented by tale, and not by weight, consisted of small obelisks of brass or iron, hence called ὄβολοι. Six of these being as many as the hand could conveniently grasp, the words ὄβολος and δραχμὴ (handful) continued, after the inventing of counting, to be employed to denote the relative value of two pieces

XVIII. Μυτιληναῖοι δὲ κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον ὃν οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι περὶ τὸν ἰσθμὸν ἦσαν, ἐπὶ Μήθυμναν, ὡς προυδιδομένην, ἐστράτευσαν κατὰ γῆν, αὐτοί τε καὶ οἱ ἐπίκουροι· καὶ προσβαλόντες τῇ πόλει, ἐπειδὴ οὐ προύχώρει ᾗ προσεδέχοντο, ἀπῆλθον ἐπ' Ἀντίσσης καὶ Πύῤῥας καὶ ‡ Ἐρέσου· καὶ καταστησάμενοι τὰ ἐν ταῖς πόλεσι ταύταις βεβαιότερα, καὶ τείχη κρατύναντες, διὰ τάχους ἀπῆλθον ἐπ' οἴκου. 2. ἐστράτευσαν δὲ καὶ οἱ Μηθυμναῖοι, ἀναχωρησάντων αὐτῶν, ἐπ' Ἄντισσαν· καὶ ἐκβοηθείας τινὸς γενομένης, πληγέντες ὑπό τε τῶν Ἀντισσαίων καὶ τῶν ἐπικούρων, ἀπέθανόν τε πολλοὶ, καὶ ἀνεχώρησαν οἱ λοιποὶ κατὰ τάχος. 3. οἱ δὲ Ἀθηναῖοι πυνθανόμενοι ταῦτα, τούς τε Μυτιληναίους τῆς γῆς κρατοῦντας καὶ τοὺς σφετέρους στρατιώτας οὐχ ἱκανοὺς ὄντας εἴργειν, πέμπουσι περὶ τὸ φθινόπωρον ἤδη ἀρχόμενον Πάχητα τὸν Ἐπικούρου στρατηγὸν, καὶ χιλίους ὁπλίτας ἑαυτῶν. 4. οἱ δὲ, αὐτερέται πλεύσαντες τῶν νεῶν, ἀφικνοῦνται καὶ περιτειχίζουσι Μυτιλήνην ἐν κύκλῳ ἁπλῷ

ἔφερον] for ἐλάμβανον. Like the Latin ferre for reportare. The middle form is far more usual. The active is rare, but occurs in Xen. Anab. i. 3, 21, and vii. 6, 6, and Œcon. i. 6. Arrian, E. A. vii. 23, 6. When it is said that the seamen received the same pay as the land-forces, we are not to suppose that they received two drachmas a day, but only one; for as the soldiers received each two drachmas, one for himself, and the other for his servant, so considering that the seamen had no servants, we must not suppose they received more than a drachma a day. Indeed the pay allowed at Potidæa was in consideration of the service being very distant and expensive to the soldiers; for which reason the pay was extraordinary. It was usually, and continued long afterwards to be, rarely more than a drachma a day, without any further allowance.

4. δὴ πλεῖσται] Meaning 'at the most' when taken in the total.

Ch. XVIII. 1. ὡς προδιδομένην] Pres. for fut., as said of an event which was thought likely soon to happen, was in the course of taking place, since the plan for effecting it was being carried on. Οἱ ἐπίκουροι. Meaning the quota furnished by the other Lesbian cities in alliance with Mitylene. See supra ch. 5 and 6. Οὐ προὐχώρει, scil. ἡ προσβολὴ, which word is expressed in Hdian. vii. 9, 1.

Πύῤῥας] The common reading and that of all the MSS. is Πύρας, which is retained by Bekker. But Πύῤῥας, found at ch. 35 in all the MSS., and also occurring in Strabo, Scylax, Ptolemy, and many other writers, has been with reason received by Haack, Poppo, and Goeller. For vulg. Ἐρέσου Bekker and Goeller edit Ἐρέσσου. In so doubtful a case I have thought it better, with Poppo, to retain the common reading, especially since the spelling with the single σ is more likely to have been the original one.

καταστησάμενοι — βεβαιότερα] Supply πράγματα, which word is expressed at vi. 55, τὰ τῆς ἀρχῆς πράγματα καθ., and Polyæn. vi. 9, 2, τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀσφαλῶς καταστησάμενος.

2. ἐκβοηθείας] 'a sally.' Πληγέντες, 'being defeated:' a rare signification, but found in Herodot. v. 120, and viii. 130; and Eurip. Rhes. 867, ὑπ' ἐχθρῶν οὐδενὸς πεπλήγμεθα

4. αὐτερέται πλεύσαντες] So Philostr. Imag. p. 781, καὶ αὐτερέται πλέουσι. On the term, see note on i. 10.

ἐν κύκλῳ ἁπλῷ τείχει] 'with a single

wall,' namely, of circumvallation only, not of contravallation likewise. Poppo places the ἐν between brackets, because Thucyd. does not elsewhere use ἐν in this phrase. I could, however, adduce numerous examples of ἐν κύκλῳ from the ancient Attic writers, and those in after-times who imitated them. Indeed I grant that ἐν κύκλῳ and κύκλῳ are used without distinction, and that the former occurs also infra iii. 74.

ἔστιν ᾗ] All the editors retain the common reading ἔστιν οἳ. But as that is scarcely consistent with propriety of language, I have adopted ᾗ from five MSS. as agreeable thereto, and supported by the usage of Thucyd. elsewhere, and of the best of the ancient Attic writers, especially as I can prove that it was read by Dio Cass. Indeed it may be questioned whether any unexceptionable example can be adduced of ἔστιν οἵ, in the sense here required: and consequently we are not allowed to suppose, with Arnold, that ἔστι is only a correction. Bekker has in his second edition received ᾗ.

τῶν καρτερῶν] 'strong and commanding positions.' Ἐγκατῳκοδόμηται, 'were built-in,' viz. the wall. The term is rare, and I know no other example except in Plut. Lycurg. c. 9. This use is, however, imitated by Hirtius de Bell. Gall. viii. 9, inædificari loriculam. Here Bekker and Goeller with reason object to the use of the perfect tense, which cannot, they think, be tolerated: and they would read ἐγκατῳκοδομήθη.

Ch. XIX. 1. ἐσφοράν] This term was one applied to the contributions of the citizens, φόρος to that of the allies. See more in Wachsmuth's Antiq. ii. 1, p. 136.

2. ἠργυρολόγει καὶ περιέπλει] Meaning, 'levied contributions, as he was cruising both on other places and,' &c.

Ch. XX. The scene now shifts to another quarter, and the writer narrates another portion of the sad story of Platæa, whose brave little garrison despairing of relief, which the Athenians were too much occupied with their own affairs to afford, and stimulated alike by the failure of their provisions and the hopelessness of their condition, formed the project of escaping by scaling the enemy's lines of circumvallation. The story is also briefly narrated by Pseudo-Demosth. cont. Neær. § 103. Polyæn. vi. 19, 2 & 3, and Diod. xii. 36.

1. ἐπιβουλεύουσιν] 'they form a project, or determine.' A somewhat rare use of the word, as followed by an infin., but which is found at iv. 47. Xen. Cyr. iv. 13, and Symp. iv. 52. Appian, i. 41.

ἐσηγησαμένου τὴν πεῖραν] 'having suggested the attempt:' for the phrase signifies, consilio alicui præire, as in the similar expressions εἰσηγεῖσθαι γνώμην, occurring in Plut., εἰσηγοῦντο πόρον χρημάτων, Xen. Hist. i. 6, 8, and λύσιν εἰσηγεῖτο, in

Polyb. ii. 25, 8. Thus the phrase is equivalent to αἴτιον εἶναι, 'to be the author of any project,' and so corresponding to the 'Dux fœmina facti' of Virgil.

Εὐπομπίδου] So Bekker and Goeller edit, for vulg. Εὐπολπίδου; while Haack and Poppo edit Εὐμολπ., which is, indeed, supported by stronger external authority; though internal evidence is quite in favour of Εὐπομπ., since while Eumolpus and Eumolpidas were common names, Eupompidas is very uncommon. Yet such a name might easily arise from εὔπομπος, as δραπετίδας from δραπέτης. Of the words following, ὃς καὶ ἐστρατήγει, the sense is not, as Hobbes and Smith render, 'one of the commanders;' nor, as Thirlwall, 'one of the generals;' still less, as others, 'was commander of the sally;' for from ch. 22 it appears that Theænetus held a joint command. Render, 'was the commandant, or governor, of the garrison.'

2. ἀπώκνησαν] Supply, from the preceding, τὴν πεῖραν, 'shrunk from the enterprise;' for the word is, I believe, never used absolutely. Though, when we consider that the phrase ἀποκνεῖν τὸν κίνδυνον occurs infra ch. 30, and Demosth. p. 294. Arrian, vii. 10, 12, and elsewhere, it may be that the comma ought to be placed, not after πῶς, but κίνδυνον. And that Procop. so pointed, is plain from his imitation of this passage at p. 180, 11, τῶν δὲ ἰόντων οἱ ὑπὲρ ἥμισυ, κατορρωδηκότες τὸν κίνδυνον, ὀπίσω ἀπεκομίζοντο, where read (as is required by the words of our author) ὑπερημισεῖς, a term, this, occurring in Hdot. vii. 40 & 156.

3. ξυνεμετρήσαντο — πλίνθων] 'they had taken their measure by the layers of bricks;' where observe the force of the middle voice, as in ἠριθμοῦντο just after. So in Polyb. ix. 15, 3, we have, συμμετρεῖσθαι πρὸς λόγον: and in a passage of Plato, Tim., cited in Steph. Thes., οὔτε πρὸς ἄλληλα συμμετροῦνται σκοποῦντες ἀριθμοῖς. Instances of the same expedient being adopted under similar circumstances are found in the following passages (evidently written with a view to the present) of Procop. p. 197, πύργους ξυλίνους ἐποιήσατο ἴσους τῷ τείχει τῶν πολεμίων. καὶ ἔτυχέ γε τοῦ ἀληθοῦς μέτρου, πολλάκις ξυμμετρησάμενος ταῖς τῶν λίθων ἐπιβολαῖς. Livy, xxv. 23, 'Unus ex Romanis, ex propinquo murum contemplatus, numerando lapides, æstimandoque ipse secum, quid in fronte paterent singuli, altitudinem muri, quantum proxime conjecturâ poterat.' Polyæn. vii. 10, 5, ἐπεὶ δὲ κατὰ τὴν ἀγορὰν ὀρύσσοντες ἐγένοντο τεκμαιράμενοι (read τεκμηράμενοι or τεκμαιρόμενοι) ῥιζαῖς τῶν ἐλαιῶν. Of ἐπιβολή, to signify layer, examples are found in Procop. and Diod.

οὐκ ἐξαλειλιμμένον] 'not whitewashed:' a term found in Procop. de Ædif. p. 4, 22, and 27, 31. Levit. xiv. 42, 43, and 48. Thus Pollux, vii. 124, τιτάνῳ χρίειν, ἀλείφειν, ἐπαλείφειν, καταλείφειν, ἐξαλείφειν. And so Eustath. explains ἀλείφειν τοῖχον by τὸ κονίᾳ χρίειν. Hence it appears that the translators have here wrongly rendered ἐξαλ. 'plastered over.' And the Schol. might have suggested to them the right sense by explaining it (as does also Mœris) κεχρισμένον. Arnold and Goeller, indeed, take the term to mean 'thoroughly whitewashed,' as if our author intended to denote that the work had not been done so effectually but that a row of bricks might still be seen. Yet, considering the distance of the line of circumvallation from the city walls, this is any thing but probable. It may rather be supposed that a part had been accidentally left unwhitened. Moreover, of ἐξ as used in such a sense in this word, I know of no example. It would rather seem that ἐξ here is equivalent to ἐπ' or κατ', and our prefix be in the word to bedaub.

4. ἠριθμοῦντο — ἐπιβολὰς] This is by Poppo, Proleg. i. 187, referred to the case of the middle voice used almost as the act.; of which two examples are adduced by Budæus from Aristotle and Galen; though he does not quote the passages so fully as to enable us to judge. But, however the idiom in question may have place elsewhere, it has not here, where the middle form has a middle force; the sense being, as Goeller points out, 'they counted them wall,' namely, of circumvallation only, not of contravallation likewise. Poppo places the ἐν between brackets, because Thucyd. does not elsewhere use ἐν in this phrase. I could, however, adduce numerous examples of ἐν κύκλῳ from the ancient Attic writers, and those in after-times who imitated them. Indeed I grant that ἐν κύκλῳ and κύκλῳ are used without distinction, and that the former occurs also infra iii. 74.

ἔστιν ᾗ] All the editors retain the common reading ἔστιν οἳ. But as that is scarcely consistent with propriety of language, I have adopted ᾗ from five MSS. as agreeable thereto, and supported by the usage of Thucyd. elsewhere, and of the best of the ancient Attic writers, especially as I can prove that it was read by Dio Cass. Indeed it may be questioned whether any unexceptionable example can be adduced of ἔστιν οἳ, in the sense here required: and consequently we are not allowed to suppose, with Arnold, that ἔστι is only a correction. Bekker has in his second edition received ᾗ.

τῶν καρτερῶν] 'strong and commanding positions.' Ἐγκατῳκοδόμηται, 'were built in,' viz. the wall. The term is rare, and I know no other example except in Plut. Lycurg. c. 9. This use is, however, imitated by Hirtius de Bell. Gall. viii. 9, inædificari loriculam. Here Bekker and Goeller with reason object to the use of the perfect tense, which cannot, they think, be tolerated: and they would read ἐγκατῳκοδομήθη.

Ch. XIX. 1. ἐσφορὰν] This term was one applied to the contributions of the citizens, φόρος to that of the allies. See more in Wachsmuth's Antiq. ii. 1, p. 136.

2. ἠργυρολόγει καὶ περιέπλει] Meaning, 'levied contributions, as he was cruising both on other places and,' &c.

Ch. XX. The scene now shifts to another quarter, and the writer narrates another portion of the sad story of Platæa, whose brave little garrison despairing of relief, which the Athenians were too much occupied with their own affairs to afford, and stimulated alike by the failure of their provisions and the hopelessness of their condition, formed the project of escaping by scaling the enemy's lines of circumvallation. The story is also briefly narrated by Pseudo-Demosth. cont. Neær. § 103. Polyæn. vi. 19, 2 & 3, and Diod. xii. 36.

1. ἐπιβουλεύουσιν] 'they form a project, or determine.' A somewhat rare use of the word, as followed by an infin., but which is found at iv. 47. Xen. Cyr. iv. 13, and Symp. iv. 52. Appian, i. 41.

ἐσηγησαμένου τὴν πεῖραν] 'having suggested the attempt:' for the phrase signifies, consilio alicui præire, as in the similar expressions εἰσηγεῖσθαι γνώμην, occurring in Plut., εἰσηγοῦντο πόρον χρημάτων, Xen. Hist. i. 6, 8, and λύσιν εἰσηγεῖτο, in

Polyb. ii. 25, 8. Thus the phrase is equivalent to αἴτιον εἶναι, 'to be the author of any project,' and so corresponding to the 'Dux fœmina facti' of Virgil.

Εὐπομπίδου] So Bekker and Goeller edit, for vulg. Εὐπολπίδου; while Haack and Poppo edit Εὐμολπ., which is, indeed, supported by stronger external authority; though internal evidence is quite in favour of Εὐπομπ., since while Eumolpus and Eumolpidas were common names, Eupompidas is very uncommon. Yet such a name might easily arise from εὔπομπος, as δραπετίδας from δραπέτης. Of the words following, ὃς καὶ ἐστρατήγει, the sense is not, as Hobbes and Smith render, 'one of the commanders;' nor, as Thirlwall, 'one of the generals;' still less, as others, 'was commander of the sally;' for from ch. 22 it appears that Theænetus held a joint command. Render, 'was the commandant, or governor, of the garrison.'

2. ἀπώκνησαν] Supply, from the preceding, τὴν πεῖραν, 'shrunk from the enterprise;' for the word is, I believe, never used absolutely. Though, when we consider that the phrase ἀποκνεῖν τὸν κίνδυνον occurs infra ch. 30, and Demosth. p. 294. Arrian, vii. 10, 12, and elsewhere, it may be that the comma ought to be placed, not after πῶς, but κίνδυνον. And that Procop. so pointed, is plain from his imitation of this passage at p. 180, 11, τῶν δὲ ἰόντων οἱ ὑπὲρ ἡμισυ, κατορρωδηκότες τὸν κίνδυνον, ὀπίσω ἀπεκομίζοντο, where read (as is required by the words of our author) ὑπερημισεῖς, a term, this, occurring in Hdot. vii. 40 & 156.

3. ξυνεμετρήσαντο — πλίνθων] 'they had taken their measure by the layers of bricks;' where observe the force of the middle voice, as in ἠριθμοῦντο just after. So in Polyb. ix. 15, 3, we have, συμμετρεῖσθαι πρὸς λόγον: and in a passage of Plato, Tim., cited in Steph. Thes., οὔτε πρὸς ἄλληλα συμμετροῦνται σκοποῦντες ἀριθμοῖς. Instances of the same expedient being adopted under similar circumstances are found in the following passages (evidently written with a view to the present) of Procop. p. 197, πύργους ξυλίνους ἐποιήσατο ἴσους τῷ τείχει τῶν πολεμίων. καὶ ἔτυχέ γε τοῦ ἀληθοῦς μέτρου, πολλάκις ξυμμετρησάμενος ταῖς τῶν λίθων ἐπιβολαῖς. Livy, xxv. 23, 'Unus ex Romanis, ex propinquo murum contemplatus, numerando lapides, æstimandoque ipse secum, quid in fronte paterent singuli, altitudinem muri, quantum proxime conjecturâ poterat.' Polyæn. vii. 10, 5, ἐπεὶ δὲ κατὰ τὴν ἀγορὰν ὀρύσσοντες ἐγένοντο τεκμαιράμενοι (read τεκμηράμενοι or τεκμαιρόμενοι) ῥιζαῖς τῶν ἐλαιῶν. Of ἐπιβολὴ, to signify layer, examples are found in Procop. and Diod.

οὐκ ἐξαλειλιμμένον] 'not whitewashed:' a term found in Procop. de Ædif. p. 4, 22, and 27, 31. Levit. xiv. 42, 43, and 48. Thus Pollux, vii. 124, τιτάνῳ χρίειν, ἀλείφειν, ἐπαλείφειν, καταλείφειν, ἐξαλείφειν. And so Eustath. explains ἀλείφειν τοῖχον by τὸ κονίᾳ χρίειν. Hence it appears that the translators have here wrongly rendered ἐξαλ. 'plastered over.' And the Schol. might have suggested to them the right sense by explaining it (as does also Mœris) κεχρισμένον. Arnold and Goeller, indeed, take the term to mean 'thoroughly whitewashed,' as if our author intended to denote that the work had not been done so effectually but that a row of bricks might still be seen. Yet, considering the distance of the line of circumvallation from the city walls, this is any thing but probable. It may rather be supposed that a part had been accidentally left unwhitened. Moreover, of ἐξ as used in such a sense in this word, I know of no example. It would rather seem that ἐξ here is equivalent to ἐπ' or κατ', and our prefix be in the word to bedaub.

4. ἠριθμοῦντο — ἐπιβολὰς] This is by Poppo, Proleg. i. 187, referred to the case of the middle voice used almost as the act.; of which two examples are adduced by Budæus from Aristotle and Galen; though he does not quote the passages so fully as to enable us to judge. But, however the idiom in question may have place elsewhere, it has not here, where the middle form has a middle force; the sense being, as Goeller points out, 'they counted them

οἱ δὲ πλείους τεύξεσθαι τοῦ ἀληθοῦς λογισμοῦ, ἄλλως τε καὶ πολλάκις ἀριθμοῦντες, καὶ ἅμα οὐ πολὺ ἀπέχοντες, ἀλλὰ ῥᾳδίως καθορωμένου ἐς ὃ ἐβούλοντο τοῦ τείχους. 5. τὴν μὲν οὖν ξυμμέτρησιν τῶν κλιμάκων οὕτως ἔλαβον, ἐκ τοῦ πάχους τῆς πλίνθου εἰκάσαντες τὸ μέτρον. XXI. Τὸ δὲ τεῖχος ἦν τῶν Πελοποννησίων τοιόνδε τῇ οἰκοδομήσει. 2. εἶχε μὲν δύο τοὺς περιβόλους, πρός τε Πλαταιῶν, καὶ εἴ τις ἔξωθεν ἀπ' Ἀθηνῶν ἐπίοι· διεῖχον δὲ οἱ περίβολοι ἑκκαίδεκα πόδας μάλιστα ἀπ' ἀλλήλων. 3. τὸ οὖν μεταξὺ τοῦτο, οἱ ἑκκαίδεκα πόδες, τοῖς φύλαξιν οἰκήματα διανενεμημένα ᾠκοδόμητο, καὶ ἦν ξυνεχῆ, ὥστε ἓν φαίνεσθαι τεῖχος παχύ, ἐπάλξεις each one for himself.' He truly remarks, that 'just after, where this sense does not exist, the active ἀριθμοῦντες is used.' Poppo, indeed, affirms that this idiom is not found in the compounds ἀπαριθμ., διαριθμ., ἐξαριθμ. But I cannot find one where a middle sense may not be perceived. Thus very discernible is it in a passage of Chrysost., cited in Steph. Thes. 2314, εἴ τις πάντας ἐξαριθμεῖσθαι βούλοιτο. In Lucian, vol. ii. p. 453, δεομένων δ' ὅ τι φρονοίην ἀποφήνασθαι δι' ὀλίγου τοὺς ἑκατέρου λόγους ἀριθμησάμενος, the middle force may not be so obvious, but it is perceptible; though, unless the two ideas of reckoning up and weighing be there confounded, (which, in so perspicuous a writer as Lucian, were too harsh,) I should have no hesitation in supposing the true reading there to be σταθμησάμενος, sibi perpensâ utriusque oratione. And so in Herodot. ii. 150, we have, τοιούτῳ σταθμησάμενον πρήγματι.

ἐς ὃ ἐβούλοντο] Poppo, after rejecting the interpretation proposed by Kistem. and Arnold, and that by Dukas, acquiesces in the rendering adopted in my Translation, 'whereto they designed:' a brief form of expression for 'the object to which they wished to go.' The ellipsis of a verb of motion in the inf., after verbs expressive of wish or inclination, is of frequent occurrence. So in a passage of St. John, xxi. 18, we have, καὶ ἄλλος σε ζώσει, καὶ οἴσει ὅπου οὐ θέλεις scil. ἔ̈ναι. Hence here we may render, 'whereunto they wished [to go].' Similarly in Aristoph. Ran. 1312, ἐς τὸ βαλανεῖον βούλομαι: in which passage the idea of motion is implied in the preposition; and accordingly a verb of motion is to be supplied.

5. τὴν ξυμμέτρησιν τῶν κλιμάκων] 'the exact measure which, in just proportion, the ladders ought to bear.' By the next words, ἐκ τοῦ πάχους τῆς πλίνθου εἰκάσαντες τὸ μέτρον, it is intimated how that measure was obtained,—namely, by conjecture, from the thickness of the bricks employed; πλίνθου standing, by a frequent idiom, found supra ii. 4, for πλίνθων. Hence we may infer, as Weisse thinks we may, from Xen. An. vii. 8, 14, that there was a certain measure of thickness for bricks in Greece. At any rate the thickness would scarcely differ in districts so near together as Bœotia and Platæa. Not to say that the besieged might learn that thickness by getting possession of a single brick, or even a part of one.

Ch. XXI. 2. εἶχε μὲν δύο τοὺς περιβόλους] Meaning the two walls, one of circumvallation, against the besieged; the other of contravallation, against any enemies' force that might attack the besiegers' line. Similarly in Livy, v. 4, we have, 'Ita muniebant, ut ancipitia munimenta essent: alia in urbem et contra oppidanorum eruptiones versa; aliis frons in Etruriam spectans auxiliis, si quâ fortè inde venirent, obstruebatur.' Πρὸς with a genit. bears the sense 'opposed to,' versus.

3. τὸ οὖν μεταξὺ—ᾠκοδόμητο] The best mode of adjusting the construction of this irregularly worded sentence is to suppose, with Poppo and Goeller, that τὸ μεταξὺ is a subst. in the nomin. meaning 'the interval,' and that the words οἱ ἑκκαίδεκα πόδες are in apposition with it; (by an idiom, on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 4, 28.) though, according to received usage, we should rather have expected τὸ μεταξὺ ἑκκ. ποδῶν. Οἰκήματα ᾠκοδόμητο stands for οἰκήματα [ὡς] ᾠκοδ. A similarly worded passage is found in Appian, t. ii. 667, 10, Schw. τὸ δὲ μέσον τῶν λόφων, τὰ ὀκτὼ στάδια, δίοδος ἦν, and also another (noticed by Arnold) in Herodot. i. 180, τὸ δὲ ἀπὸ τούτου, αἱ ἐπικαμπαὶ παρὰ χεῖλος ἑκάτερον τοῦ ποταμοῦ, αἱμασιὴ πλίνθων ὀπτέων παρατείνει.

ὥστε ἓν φαίνεσθαι τεῖχος παχύ] Imitated from this is the expression in Dio

ἔχον ἀμφοτέρωθεν. 4. διὰ δέκα δὲ ἐπάλξεων πύργοι ἦσαν μεγάλοι καὶ ἰσοπλατεῖς τῷ τείχει, διήκοντες ἔς τε τὸ ἔσω μέτωπον αὐτοῦ, καὶ οἱ αὐτοὶ καὶ ἐς τὸ ἔξω· ὥστε πάροδον μὴ εἶναι παρὰ πύργον, ἀλλὰ δι' αὐτῶν μέσων διῆσαν. 5. τὰς οὖν νύκτας, ὁπότε χειμὼν εἴη νοτερὸς, τὰς μὲν ἐπάλξεις ἀπέλειπον, ἐκ δὲ τῶν πύργων, ὄντων δι' ὀλίγου καὶ ἄνωθεν στεγανῶν, τὴν φυλακὴν ἐποιοῦντο. 6. τὸ μὲν οὖν τεῖχος, ᾧ περιεφρουροῦντο οἱ Πλαταιῆς, τοιοῦτον ἦν. XXII. Οἱ δ', ἐπειδὴ παρεσκεύαστο αὐτοῖς, τηρήσαντες νύκτα χειμέριον ὕδατι καὶ ἀνέμῳ καὶ ἅμα ἀσέληνον, ἐξῆσαν· ἡγοῦντο δὲ οἵπερ καὶ τῆς πείρας αἴτιοι ἦσαν. 2. καὶ πρῶτον μὲν τὴν τάφρον διέβησαν ἣ περιεῖχεν αὐτούς, ἔπειτα προσέμιξαν τῷ τείχει τῶν πολεμίων λαθόντες τοὺς φύλακας, ἀνὰ τὸ σκοτεινὸν μὲν οὐ προϊδόντων αὐτῶν, ψόφῳ δὲ τῷ ἐκ τοῦ προσιέναι αὐτοὺς ἀντιπαταγοῦντος τοῦ ἀνέμου, οὐ κατακουσάντων· ἅμα δὲ καὶ διέχοντες πολὺ ἦσαν, ὅπως τὰ ὅπλα ἐς τὸ ἔξω] Poppo cancels the ἐς, from most of the MSS. But the omission involves so much harshness, that it seems more probable that several of the scribes should omit the ἐς by carelessness, than that the author should omit what can scarcely be dispensed with. I have, therefore, with Bekker and Goeller, retained it.

4. διὰ δέκα ἐπάλξεων] The διὰ here denotes 'distance through.' Render, 'at the distance of every ten battlements.' By the same idiom (on which see Matth. Gr. § 580, ε.) we have, in a passage of Strabo, cited by Steph. Thes., διὰ δώδεκα πηχῶν. With καὶ οἱ αὐτοὶ, a little after, compare the Latin use of idem with que.

5. ὁπότε χειμὼν εἴη νοτερὸς] χειμὼν, from χέω, 'to pour forth,' signifies properly an outpouring, (or what is vulgarly called a downfal,) whether of rain, or snow, or hail. And so in Quint. Curt. iii. fin. we have, 'procella subitò nivem effuderat.' And in Herodot. i. 87, χειμῶνα καταῤῥαγῆναι καὶ ὗσαι, &c. Hom. Il. iii. 4, ἐπεὶ χειμῶνα φύγον καὶ ὄμβρον: meaning, by hend., 'an outpouring of rain.' So in Is. iv. 6, 'and there shall be a tabernacle for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain,' where by 'storm and rain' understand 'a storm of rain,' procella being, as defined by Isidor. ad Serv., vis venti cum pluviâ. Here, however, as occasionally elsewhere, χειμὼν denotes what we call 'foul weather;' so Matth. xvi. 3, σήμερον χειμών, as opposed to εὐδία ἔσται. Pind. Isth. vii. 53, εὐδίαν ἐκ χειμῶνος. Acts xxvii. 20; and also that, as it were, paroxysm thereof, which issues in a storm of rain or snow driven by the wind. So Hom. Od. xiv. 522, ὅτε τις χειμὼν ἔκπαγλος ὄροιτο. And this latter may be the sense here; and if so, there will be no pleonasm; νοτερὸς determining the sense of χειμὼν to be a storm of rain, (and what Thucydides might similarly have denoted by χειμὼν καὶ νότος, but perhaps that would have been too poetical); for it might have been a storm of snow and hail. In this sense of χειμὼν ('storm,' corresponding to that of procella in Latin) there is implied the idea of wind as well as rain; and so, a little further on, the night is described as 'stormy with wind and rain,' χειμέριον ὕδατι καὶ ἀνέμῳ.

For ἀπέλειπον, a little after, eight of the best MSS. have ἀπέλιπον. But the common reading is required by propriety; the sense being relinquebant, 'they used to leave.' From certain passages, as Pausan. iv. 20, 3. Polyæn. Strat. 740, and Livy, xxiv. 46, it appears to have been not unusual, at such times, for the sentinels to leave the battlements, and take shelter in the towers. And indeed it was on this custom that the adventurers mainly depended for success. Of δι' ὀλίγου the sense is, 'at a short distance,' as in Eurip. Phœn. 1114.

Ch. XXII. 1. τηρήσαντες νύκτα χειμέριον, &c.] 'having seized the opportunity of,' &c, nearly equiv. to φυλάξαντες, 'having watched' or 'waited for.' This passage of our author has been frequently imitated by the later Greek writers. See the citations in my Transl.

μὴ κρουόμενα πρὸς ἄλληλα αἴσθησιν παρέχοι. 3. ἦσαν δὲ εὐσταλεῖς τε τῇ ὁπλίσει, καὶ τὸν ἀριστερὸν πόδα μόνον ὑποδεδεμένοι,

3. εὐσταλεῖς τῇ ὁπλίσει] Equivalent, as the Scholiast observes, to κούφην ὅπλισιν περιβεβλημένοι. Of this expression, which is rare, I have noted an example in Jos. Ant. iv. 5, 2, διὰ τὴν ὅπλισιν εὐσταλῆ κουφοί. And similarly in Æschyl. Pers. 800, we have εὐσταλῆ στόλον. The εὐ in this word is used as in εὔζωνος.

The next words, καὶ τὸν ἀριστερὸν πόδα, follow up the idea here, and are meant to show that the adventurers were also as lightly equipped about the feet as possible. The obscurity here complained of is in a great measure imaginary; but, as far as it exists, is occasioned by extreme brevity. The true gist of the question is, I would observe, at once suggested by the words of the Schol., ὑπεδέδεντο τὸν μὲν ἕνα τῶν ποδῶν δι' ἀσφάλειαν, τὸν δὲ ἕτερον γυμνὸν εἶχον διὰ κουφότητα: the full sense intended by our author being this,—that, as a further proof of the lightness of their equipment, 'they were shod on one foot only, the left, for security against the mire [while the right was left bare and unshod, for lightness].' Now it was not uncommon among the Grecian soldiery for one foot alone to be shod, while the other was left bare, to promote lightness of motion. So in Eurip. Med. frag. 6, we have, οἱ δὲ Θεστίου Κόροι τὸ λαιὸν ἴχνος ἀνάρβυλοι ποδὸς — Τὸν δ' ἐν πεδίλοις, ὡς ἐλαφρίζον γόνυ Ἔχοιεν· ὃς δὴ πᾶσιν Αἰτωλοῖς νόμος: for so I would point that passage; the words ὡς ἐλαφρίζον γόνυ ἔχοιεν certainly referring to τὸ λαιὸν ἴχνος ἀνάρβυλοι ποδὸς, by which the words τὸν δ' ἐν πεδίλοις will be, in some measure, parenthetical. By the τὸν δ' must be meant, 'the other foot;' though thus to supply πόδα involves so harsh an ellipsis, that, as ἴχνος a little before preceded, I suspect that Euripides wrote τὸ δ'. Again, in Lycoph. Cassand. 1310, (on the subject of Jason,) we have, Ταγῷ (duci) μονοκρήπιδι κλέψοντας νάκην. Needless is it to adduce further examples, since the fact is fully attested by the figures found on ancient monuments, chiefly vases, and especially those of the Etrusci, who were of Pelasgic origin.

Thus the left foot was, it seems, generally the one shod, and the right allowed to go bare. So Livy, ix. 40, of the Samnites, 'et sinistrum crus ocreâ tectum;' and in Juv. Sat. vi. 256, we have, 'crurisque sinistri Dimidium tegmen.' Sometimes, however, the right foot was shod, and the left suffered to remain bare, as appears from the passage of Euripides above cited. And so in a passage of Virg. Æn. vii. 689, (evidently written in imitation of that of Eurip.) we have, 'vestigia nuda sinistri Instituere pedis, crudus tegit altera pero.' But from Aristotle, in a fragment of his lost second book of Poetics preserved in Macrob. Saturn. v. 18, it is plain that the custom in Greece, in his age, was to have the left foot shod, and the right bare; which custom Aristotle thinks founded in nature and propriety; δεῖ γὰρ οἶμαι τὸν ἡγούμενον ἔχειν ἐλαφρὸν, ἀλλ' οὐ τὸν ἐμμένοντα, where by τὸν ἐμμένοντα is certainly to be understood the left foot, that being, as Wasse has observed, 'the one on which the soldier principally rests, using it as a centre on which the whole body may be turned about as on a pivot;' and consequently τὸν ἡγούμενον must mean the right foot, which is with reason called the leading one, as being, in the words of Heyne, 'anterior et prægrediens,' and which accordingly ought to be 'nudus et expeditus.' Yet with all due deference to the authority of the Stagirite, we may think that he is so far wrong, in the reason which he gives for the above, namely, from nature and propriety. It is rather on the custom obtaining in any nation that such a usage must depend; since it is but custom on which the distinctive meaning of even the terms right and left is founded. Thus, as observes Horne Tooke, (Div. of Purley,) 'the people in Melinda, a great and civilized nation in Africa, are described by De Gama as being all left-handed,' i. e. speaking with reference to European custom; for otherwise, as observes Tooke, 'they were as right-handed as the Portuguese, using that hand in preference which was directed by custom.' The only difficulty that rests on the interpretation of the present passage is, how to get out so much meaning from so few words. The best way to account for the omission of words which seem so necessary to the sense is, to suppose that our author meant the μόνον to be highly emphatic,—the right foot alone shod, implying that the other was left bare: an emphasis, I find, perceived by Dr. Arnold, who, however, in inferring from this that our author means to say that 'every man had his right foot ἀσφαλείας ἕνεκα τῆς πρὸς τὸν πηλόν. 4. κατὰ οὖν μεταπύργιον προσέμισγον πρὸς τὰς ἐπάλξεις, εἰδότες ὅτι ἔρημοί εἰσι, πρῶτον μὲν οἱ τὰς κλίμακας φέροντες, καὶ προσέθεσαν· ἔπειτα ψιλοὶ δώδεκα ξὺν ξιφιδίῳ καὶ θώρακι ἀνέβαινον,—ὧν ἡγεῖτο Ἀμμέας ὁ Κοροίβου, καὶ πρῶτος ἀνέβη,—μετὰ δὲ αὐτὸν οἱ ἑπόμενοι, ἓξ ἐφ' ἑκάτερον τῶν πύργων, ἀνέβαινον· ἔπειτα ψιλοὶ ἄλλοι μετὰ τούτους ξὺν δορατίοις ἐχώρουν, οἷς ἕτεροι κατόπιν τὰς ἀσπίδας ἔφερον, ὅπως ἐκεῖνοι ῥᾷον προσβαίνοιεν, καὶ ἔμελλον δώσειν ὁπότε πρὸς τοῖς πολεμίοις εἴησαν. 5. ὡς δὲ ἄνω πλείους ἐγένοντο, ἤσθοντο οἱ ἐκ τῶν πύργων φύλακες· κατέβαλε γάρ τις τῶν Πλαταιῶν, ἀντιλαμβανόμενος, ἀπὸ τῶν ἐπάλξεων κεραμίδα, ἣ πεσοῦσα ψόφον ἐποίησε· καὶ αὐτίκα βοὴ ἦν· τὸ δὲ bare, that he might be less liable to slip in the mud;' or, in other words, he has only his left, or weaker leg, shod, the other being prepared to meet the exigency of the case,—increases the difficulty unnecessarily, and indeed quite reverses the order of things. The left leg is not weaker than the right; and it was shod, not to strengthen it, but to obtain a surer footing amidst the mire; while the right was left unshod, for lightness, (to which purpose we may appeal to the above words of Eurip., ὡς ἐλαφρίζον γόνυ ἔχοιεν,) and as being the leading one in exploring one's way in the dark, and, if left bare, serving to feel it out, and in various ways precede and prepare the way for the rest of the limbs.

4. κατὰ μεταπύργιον] 'at one of the spaces between the turrets,' called, in military phraseology, the curtain. The term εἰδότες must not be pressed on, since it can only denote the full persuasion of a thing arising from high probability,—as was now the case. Καὶ προσέθεσαν, 'and they placed them,' for οἱ προσ.

5. ἀντιλαμβανόμενος] scil. τῆς κεραμίδος, 'while laying hold of it, to aid him in his ascent.' Thus κερ. may be supposed to have been one of the coping-stones. So in Eurip. Phœn. 1174, we have, λαᾶν ἐμβαλὼν κάρᾳ Ἁμαξοπληθῆ, γεῖσ' ἐπάλξεων ἄπο, where by γεῖσ' (plur. for sing., as at v. 1187, and Orest. 1570, 1560,) is denoted the coping of the battlements, called tecta by Virg. Æn. ix. 558, ('altaque certat Prendere tecta manu,') as being the roofing thereof.

ψόφον ἐποίησε· καὶ αὐτίκα βοὴ ἦν] Poppo, from several of the best MSS., has edited ψόφον ἐποίησε καὶ αὐτίκα βοήν: but without reason; for besides that the sense thus arising is, to say the least, tame and forced, the reading in question has nothing to support it in the usus loquendi; for where do we find such a phrase as βοὴν ποιεῖν, especially in the sense to lead to or occasion a shout? By this change, moreover, there is at once destroyed all the beauty of the passage; which, as in several other parts of this narrative, is highly graphic; the difference in the two cases being that of painting a scene as compared with that of stating a fact. A similar beauty and pathos, arising from the same cause, the highly descriptive, may be seen in the following passage of the Tam o' Shanter of Robert Burns:

'Till first ae caper, syne anither,
Tam tint his reason a' thegither,
And roars out, Weel done, Cutty-sark!
And in an instant a' was dark.'

Where the transition from stating a fact in 'Tam lost his reason,' to painting a scene, is made at the words, 'and roars out,' &c. Had Burns written, 'and in an instant all is dark,' it would have increased the graphic, though, I apprehend, diminished the force of the pathos; for the effect is far more impressive, inasmuch as the transition from the brilliant light whereby 'Kirk Alloway seemed in a blaze,' to darkness that might be felt, is strongly marked by the change of tense from the present to the imperf.; by which, too, more of reality is imparted to the picture, from its suggesting the idea of something that has positively taken place.

Bekker and Goeller, in editing, for ψόφον, δοῦπον, from one MS., have acted contrary to every principle of criticism; for the latter reading, especially from its being found only in one MS., may justly be supposed a mere gloss. No change is necessary; for ψόφος signifies generally strepitus, any noise, of whatever kind or degree; and it is often so used as to imply στρατόπεδον ἐπὶ τὸ τεῖχος ὥρμησεν· οὐ γὰρ ᾔδει ὅ τι ἦν τὸ δεινόν, σκοτεινῆς νυκτὸς καὶ χειμῶνος ὄντος· καὶ ἅμα οἱ ἐν τῇ πόλει τῶν Πλαταιῶν ὑπολελειμμένοι ἐξελθόντες προσέβαλον τῷ τείχει τῶν Πελοποννησίων ἐκ τοὔμπαλιν ἢ οἱ ἄνδρες αὐτῶν ὑπερέβαινον, ὅπως ἥκιστα πρὸς αὐτοὺς τὸν νοῦν ἔχοιεν. 6. ἐθορυβοῦντο μὲν οὖν, κατὰ χώραν μένοντες, βοηθεῖν δὲ οὐδεὶς ἐτόλμα ἐκ τῆς ἑαυτῶν φυλακῆς, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀπόρῳ ἦσαν εἰκάσαι τὸ γιγνόμενον. 7. καὶ οἱ τριακόσιοι αὐτῶν, οἷς ἐτέτακτο παραβοηθεῖν εἴ τι δέοι, ἐχώρουν ‡ἔξω τοῦ τείχους πρὸς τὴν βοήν· φρυκτοί τε ἤροντο ἐς τὰς Θήβας πολέμιοι. 8. παρανῖσχον δὲ καὶ οἱ ἐκ τῆς πόλεως Πλαταιῆς ἀπὸ τοῦ τείχους φρυκτοὺς πολλούς, πρότερον παρεσκευασμένους ἐς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ὅπως ἀσαφῆ τὰ σημεῖα τῆς φρυκτωρίας τοῖς πολεμίοις ᾖ, καὶ μὴ βοηθοῖεν,—ἄλλο τι νομίσαντες τὸ γιγνόμενον εἶναι ἢ τὸ ὄν,—πρὶν σφῶν οἱ ἄνδρες οἱ ἐξιόντες διαφύγοιεν, καὶ τοῦ ἀσφαλοῦς ἀντιgreat noise. Indeed it is defined by Suidas as the crash produced by the violent concurrence of two hard bodies. And moreover it is plain from certain passages, evidently imitated from the present, in Dio Cass. p. 348, 47, and 392, 73, that he had ψόφον in his copy. Hence I have, with Poppo, retained that reading.

οὐκ ᾔδει ὅ τι ἦν τὸ δεινὸν] 'knew not what the danger (or, as we should say, the matter) was.' So we have, just after, εἰκάσαι τὸ γιγνόμενον, 'to conjecture what was taking place.' The words just after, καὶ ἅμα οἱ ἐν τῇ πόλει, &c. are meant to account for the confusion and consequent inactivity of the great body of the troops; no one knowing what had happened, and their attention being drawn off from the quarter in which the attempt was made, by a demonstration of attack in the opposite quarter. In their perturbation and ignorance of what was the matter, they remained, indeed, at their post, but never ventured to move in any direction.

ἐκ τοὔμπαλιν ἢ—ὑπερέβαινον] 'on the contrary side to that at which the men had scaled the wall.' For vulg. ᾗ, I have, with the recent editors, adopted the reading of some MSS., ἢ: for while I know not a single example of ἔμπαλιν thus used with ᾗ, not a few are to be found of the phrase with ἤ: e. g. Herodot. ix. 56, τὰ ἔμπαλιν ἢ Λακεδαιμόνιοι ἤισαν. Lucian, i. 677, ἔμπαλιν ἢ σὺ ἤλπισας, and iii. 249, ἔμπαλιν ἢ οἱ πρόγονοι ἡμῶν. Of τὸν νοῦν ἔχοιεν the sense is, 'should give them attention.'

7. οἱ τριακόσιοι αὐτῶν, οἷς ἐτέτακτο] The art. here, as Arnold and Poppo well observe, has reference to what follows, being explained by the subsequent relative enunciation, meaning 'the three hundred who were appointed to give aid wherever it might be needed.' Sometimes, though very rarely, this subsequent explanation by a relative enunciation is dispensed with,—namely, when the thing is supposed to be too well known to require explanation. So in John xviii. 3, we have, τὴν σπεῖραν, where, as here, we are to understand a corps de garde, or piquet-guard.

ἐχώρουν ἔξω τοῦ τείχους πρὸς τὴν βοήν] Several of the best MSS., for ἔξω, have ἔξωθεν, which has been edited by Haack; while Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller retain the common reading, and on just grounds; especially as ἔξωθεν has every appearance of being a mere gloss, or alteration, — though quite unnecessary; for when it is said that 'they marched out of, or outside of, the wall to the place whence the noise proceeded,' it is certainly implied that they took their course on the outside of the walls; otherwise why should they have gone out? In short, we have here a brief form of expression for ἐχώρουν ἔξω τοῦ τείχους καὶ παρεβοήθουν πρὸς τὴν βοήν, or ἐξῆλθον πρὸς τὴν βοήν: the word ἔξω being often used with verbs of motion.

φρυκτοὶ — πολέμιοι] 'war-lights,' used as signals, on which see my note in Transl.

8. παρανῖσχον] 'brought by the side of the other;' namely, so as to interfere with and counteract the signals, thus making them unintelligible. Καὶ τοῦ ἀσφαλοῦς ἀντιλάβοιντο, 'and should have reached a place of security.'

λάβοιντο. XXIII. Οἱ δ' ὑπερβαίνοντες τῶν Πλαταιῶν ἐν τούτῳ, ὡς οἱ πρῶτοι αὐτῶν ἀναβεβήκεσαν, καὶ τοῦ πύργου ἑκατέρου τοὺς φύλακας διαφθείραντες ἐκεκρατήκεσαν, τάς τε διόδους τῶν πύργων ἐνστάντες αὐτοὶ ἐφύλασσον, μηδένα δι' αὐτῶν ἐπιβοηθεῖν, καὶ κλίμακας προσθέντες ἀπὸ τοῦ τείχους τοῖς πύργοις, καὶ ἐπαναβιβάσαντες ἄνδρας πλείους, οἱ μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν πύργων τοὺς ἐπιβοηθοῦντας καὶ κάτωθεν καὶ ἄνωθεν εἶργον βάλλοντες, οἱ δ' ἐν τούτῳ, οἱ πλείους, πολλὰς προσθέντες κλίμακας ἅμα, καὶ τὰς ἐπάλξεις ἀπώσαντες, διὰ τοῦ μεταπυργίου ὑπερέβαινον. 2. ὁ δὲ διακομιζόμενος ἀεὶ ἵστατο ἐπὶ τοῦ χείλους τῆς τάφρου, καὶ ἐντεῦθεν ἐτόξευόν τε καὶ ἠκόντιζον, εἴ τις παραβοηθῶν παρὰ τὸ τεῖχος κωλυτὴς γίγνοιτο τῆς διαβάσεως. 3. ἐπεὶ δὲ πάντες διεπεπεραίωντο οἱ ἀπὸ τῶν πύργων, χαλεπῶς οἱ τελευταῖοι, καταβαίνοντες ἐχώρουν ἐπὶ τὴν τάφρον· καὶ ἐν τούτῳ οἱ τριακόσιοι αὐτοῖς ἐπεφέροντο λαμπάδας ἔχοντες. 4. οἱ μὲν οὖν Πλαταιῆς ἐκείνους ἐώρων μᾶλλον ἐκ τοῦ σκότους, ἑστῶτες ἐπὶ τοῦ χείλους τῆς τάφρου, καὶ ἐτόξευόν τε καὶ ἐσηκόντιζον ἐς τὰ γυμνά, αὐτοὶ δὲ, ἐν τῷ ἀφανεῖ ὄντες, ἧσσον διὰ

CH. XXIII. 1. οἱ δ' ὑπερβαίνοντες—ὑπερέβαινον] 'Ita hæc verba jungenda sunt, οἱ δ' ὑπερβαίνοντες — ἐφύλασσον — οἱ μὲν—εἶργον—οἱ δ'—οἱ πλείους—ὑπερέβαινον· ubi expectes quidem, τῶν δ' ὑπερβαινόντων τῶν Πλαταιέων οἱ πρῶτοι ἐν τούτῳ, ὡς ἀναβεβήκεσαν—οἱ μὲν, οἱ δέ. Sed sæpe, ubi res quædam et tota et per partes suas significatur, totum illud eodem casu, quo partes, profertur.' (Goeller.)

τὰς διόδους] 'the door-ways' in the lower part of the turrets. Comp. Liban. Or. Par. Jul. § 120, τὰς θύρας τῶν πύργων καταλαβόντες, and Virg. Æn. ii. 803, 'Danaique obsessa tenebant Limina portarum.' Of ἐνστάντες the sense is, 'standing in,' meaning 'posted at,' as in Zosim. iv. 40. Ἐπαναβιβάσαντες, 'and having placed thereon.' Of this rare term I have noted another example in Dio Cass. 626, 28. Of the words, a little after, καὶ κάτωθεν καὶ ἄνωθεν, the meaning is, as Haack, Poppo, and Arnold are agreed, — 'from the δίοδος, or passage which was carried through the turrets, and from the summit of them,' whither some of the Platæans had mounted by ladders. Ἀπώσαντες, 'having pushed away, or thrust down.'

2. ὁ δὲ διακομιζόμενος—τάφρου] 'each, as he passed over, regularly halted at the bank, or (outer) brink, of the ditch, called by us the counter-scarp;' for such is the sense of χείλους. So in Arrian, Ind. xiii. we have, αὐτοὶ δὲ ἐπὶ τῷ χώματι τοῦ ἐπὶ τοῦ χείλεος τοῦ ἔξω τῆς τάφρου.

παρὰ τὸ τεῖχος] 'by aid at the wall,' namely, that which was adjacent to either of the turrets. In κωλυτὴς γίγνοιτο τῆς διαβάσεως we have a Thucydidean phrase for κωλύοι τὴν διάβασιν.

3. οἱ ἀπὸ τῶν πύργων] Meaning, 'those posted at the turrets, and who had to descend from them.' I have pointed off the words χαλεπῶς οἱ τελευταῖοι, because they contain a parenthetical remark, serving to intimate that 'those of the number who came last made their way with difficulty:' not, indeed, as Thirlwall says, 'because the ditch was deep and the water high,' (for it was no higher than before,) but because those who came last had no force to keep the enemy at bay or defend their passage, as had those who went before; but as soon as they stirred from the δίοδοι, they would have the enemy at their backs, ready to cut them down or push them from the battlements. By αὐτοῖς are meant the twelve mentioned at ch. 22, who had been posted at the extreme turrets either way. The piquets, as being night-guards, are accordingly described as carrying lamps. So in St. John, xviii. 3, we have, λαβὼν τὴν σπεῖραν — μετὰ φανῶν καὶ λαμπάδων. To the present passage there is an evident allusion in Themist. 283, C; and hence is illustrated a passage in Xen. Anab. vii. 4, 18.

4. ἐς τὰ γυμνὰ] scil. μέρη, meaning the left side, unguarded by the shield; a sense confirmed by various examples adduced by τὰς λαμπάδας καθεωρῶντο· ὥστε φθάνουσι τῶν Πλαταιῶν καὶ οἱ ὕστατοι διαβάντες τὴν τάφρον, χαλεπῶς δὲ καὶ βιαίως· κρύσταλλός τε γὰρ ἐπεπήγει οὐ βέβαιος ἐν αὐτῇ ὥστ' ἐπελθεῖν, ἀλλ' οἷος ἀπηλιώτου ἢ βορέου ὑδατώδης μᾶλλον· καὶ ἡ νὺξ τοιούτῳ ἀνέμῳ ‡ὑπονειφομένη πολὺ τὸ ὕδωρ ἐν αὐτῇ ἐπεποιήκει, ὃ μόλις ὑπερέχοντες ἐπεραιώθησαν. 5. ἐγένετο δὲ καὶ ἡ διαφευξις αὐτοῖς μᾶλλον διὰ τοῦ χειμῶνος τὸ μέγεθος. XXIV. Ὁρμήσαντες δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς τάφρου οἱ Πλαταιῆς, ἐχώρουν ἀθρόοι τὴν ἐς Θήβας φέρουσαν ὁδόν, ἐν δεξιᾷ ἔχοντες τὸ τοῦ Ἀνδροκράτους ἡρῷον, νομίζοντες ἥκιστα σφᾶς ταύτην αὐτοὺς ὑποτοπῆσαι τραπέσθαι, τὴν ἐς τοὺς πολεμίους· καὶ ἅμα ἑώρων τοὺς Πελοποννησίους τὴν πρὸς Κιθαιρῶνα καὶ Δρυὸς κεφαλὰς, τὴν ἐπ' Ἀθηνῶν φέρουσαν, μετὰ λαμπάδων διώκοντας. 2. καὶ ἐπὶ μὲν ἓξ ἢ ἑπτὰ σταδίους οἱ Πλαταιῆς τὴν ἐπὶ τῶν Θηβῶν ἐχώρησαν, ἔπειθ' ὑποστρέψαντες ᾖεσαν τὴν πρὸς τὸ ὄρος φέρουσαν ὁδὸν, ἐς Ἐρύθρας καὶ Ὑσιὰς, καὶ λαβόμενοι τῶν ὀρῶν διαφεύγουσιν ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας, ἄνδρες δώδεκα καὶ διακόσιοι ἀπὸ πλειόνων· εἰσὶ γάρ τινες αὐτῶν οἳ ἀπετράποντο ἐς τὴν πόλιν πρὶν ὑπερβαίνειν, εἷς δ' ἐπὶ τῇ ἔξω τάφρῳ τοξότης ἐλήφθη. 3. οἱ μὲν οὖν Πελοποννήσιοι κατὰ χώραν ἐγένοντο τῆς βοηθείας παυσάμενοι· οἱ δ' ἐκ τῆς πόλεως Πλαταιῆς, τῶν μὲν γεγενημένων εἰδότες οὐδέν, τῶν δὲ ἀποτρα-

me in Transl. Βιαίως, 'difficultly;' for their rearmost were hard-pressed by the piquet-guard. So supra i. 63, we have, παρῆλθε χαλεπῶς. With ἐπεπήγει, 'had formed itself,' compare Æschyl. Pers. 507, κρυσταλλοπῆγα διὰ πόρον στρατὸς περᾷ, and Eurip. Rhes. 441, φυσήματα Κρυσταλλόπηκτα. Athen. p. 42. Plut. Lucull. 32.

ἀλλ' οἷος ἀπηλιώτου ἢ βορέου ὑδατώδης μᾶλλον] The best mode of encountering the difficulty here complained of is, with the Schol., Pop., and Arn., to assign to ἀλλ' ὑδατώδης μᾶλλον the sense 'but rather watery;' such as is usually the case when the wind is at east (or E.S.E.) rather than north. For vulg. ὑπονιφομένη, I have, with Bekker, Goeller, and Poppo, edited ὑπονειφομένη; such being here, and in another passage infra iv. 103, found in most of the best MSS.: though, indeed, from the term νίφω and its compounds occurring in Herodot. and the dramatic writers, I would not positively pronounce that the above is the true reading. Of more importance, however, is it to advert to the peculiar phrase ἡ νὺξ ὑπονειφομένη. Now ὑπονείφεσθαι is elsewhere used of things, and sometimes of persons, who are, if we may use the expression, be-snowed; as in the instance of χιονίζεσθαι and ὕεσθαι. But in the application of the term to what is not properly a substance, we have a use, I apprehend, no where else to be found, and which may seem to savour of poetic, or even lyric, boldness; though probably arising simply from an aim at brevity.

μόλις ὑπερέχοντες] 'having scarcely their heads above water.' So Lucian, ii. 107, ὑπερέχοντες τῶν κυμάτων. Herodot. ὑπερέχ. τοῦ ὕδατος.

Ch. XXIV. 1. τὸ τοῦ Ἀνδροκράτους ἡρῷον] 'the chapel or fane of the hero Androcrates;' a celebrated Platæan general of remote antiquity, and supposed to be one of the tutelary heroes whom Archidamus called to witness before he commenced hostilities against Platæa. Indeed this chapel is mentioned in Herodot. ix. 25, and described by Plut. Aristid. as embosomed in a thick grove:' and he relates that prayers were offered up there, previous to the battle, to the hero Androcrates and others of whom he makes mention.

2. λαβόμενοι τῶν ὀρῶν] 'having reached the mountains.'

πομένων σφίσιν ἀπαγγειλάντων ὡς οὐδεὶς περίεστι, κήρυκα ἐκπέμψαντες, ἐπεὶ ἡμέρα ἐγένετο, ἐσπένδοντο ἀναίρεσιν τοῖς νεκροῖς, μαθόντες δὲ τὸ ἀληθὲς ἐπαύσαντο. 4. οἱ μὲν δὴ τῶν Πλαταιῶν ἄνδρες οὕτως ὑπερβάντες ἐσώθησαν.

Ἐκ δὲ τῆς Λακεδαίμονος, τοῦ αὐτοῦ χειμῶνος τελευτῶντος, ἐκπέμπεται Σάλαιθος ὁ Λακεδαιμόνιος ἐς Μυτιλήνην τριήρει· καὶ πλεύσας ἐς Πύῤῥαν, καὶ ἐξ αὐτῆς πεζῇ κατὰ χαράδραν τινὰ, ᾗ ὑπερβατὸν ἦν τὸ περιτείχισμα, διαλαθὼν ἐσέρχεται ἐς τὴν Μυτιλήνην· καὶ ἔλεγε τοῖς προέδροις ὅτι ἐσβολή τε ἅμα ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἔσται, καὶ αἱ τεσσαράκοντα νῆες παρέσονται ἃς ἔδει βοηθῆσαι αὐτοῖς, προαποπεμφθῆναί τε αὐτὸς τούτων ἕνεκα, καὶ ἅμα τῶν ἄλλων ἐπιμελησόμενος. 2. καὶ οἱ μὲν Μυτιληναῖοι ἐθάρσουν τε, καὶ πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἧσσον εἶχον τὴν γνώμην ὥστε ξυμβαίνειν. ὅ τε χειμὼν ἐτελεύτα οὗτος καὶ τέταρτον ἔτος τῷ πολέμῳ ἐτελεύτα τῷδε ὃν Θουκυδίδης ξυνέγραψεν.

3. ἐσπένδοντο ἀν. τοῖς νεκροῖς] The Schol. explains ἐσπ. by σπονδὰς ἐζήτουν ποιῆσαι, and Portus egerunt de, &c. But they and others have failed to see that as the imperfect tense denotes action begun but not continued, so it may very well denote what any one would do, or have done. Σπένδεσθαι is rarely used, as here, with a noun in the accus. denoting the purpose of the treaty. I would compare iii. 109, ἀναχώρησιν οὐκ ἐσπείσατο.

4. οἱ τῶν Πλαταιῶν ἄνδρες—ἐσώθησαν] That they were henceforward considered as Athenian citizens, appears from Aristoph. Ran. 706, where he notices the measure by which even the slaves who had fought with the Athenians at the battle of Arginusa were made citizens, καὶ Πλαταιᾶς εὐθὺς εἶναι, κάντὶ δούλων δεσπότας, where Πλαταιᾶς is to be taken for ὡς Πλαταιεῖς. It is well observed by Hellanicus, (ap. Schol. ibidem, 245, a, E.) ἐλευθερωθῆναι αὐτοὺς καὶ ἐγγραφέντας, ὡς Πλαταιεῖς, συμπολιτεύεσθαι αὐτοῖς.

Ch. XXV. 1. κατὰ χαράδραν—ἐσέρχεται] Meaning, the course or bed of a torrent, probably forming part of an euripus running up inland from Cape Malea to beyond Mitylene. By this watercourse, whether dry or not, the works of the Athenians were, it seems, by its extremely deep and precipitous character, interrupted. In διαλαθὼν, just after, we have an old Attic word, which ought to be restored to a passage of Procop. 357, 22, where, for διαλαβόντες ἐσώθησαν, read διαλαθόντες ἐσ.; a term, this, occurring again a little further on.

τοῖς προέδροις] The name given to the rulers or magistrates at Mitylene, on which see Wachsmuth's Ant. Gr. i. p. 196, and Plehn's Lesb. p. 93.

2. πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ἧσσον εἶχον τὴν γνώμην ὥστε ξυμβαίνειν] 'had less the mind (were less inclined) to come to terms with the Athenians.' This phrase, τὴν γνώμην ἔχειν πρὸς, is found also at iv. 125. v. 13. and vii. 72, and in two passages of Xen. Anab. ii. 5, 29, ἐβούλετο ὁ Κ. ἅπαν τὸ στράτευμα πρὸς ἑαυτὸν ἔχειν τὴν γνώμην, and Hist. iv. 8, 17. Ξυμβαίνειν here stands for ξύμβασιν ποιεῖσθαι, as elsewhere in Thucydides, though rarely in any other writer.

Ch. XXVI. 1. δύο καὶ τεσσαράκοντα ναῦς] Since the number of ships is, supra ch. 16 & 25, and infra 29 & 69, spoken of as forty, the critics in general suppose that the words δύο καὶ are not genuine. But to cancel words found, as these are, in every known MS., would surely be too bold; and there is no proof that Valla had them not in his copy, since he might pass over them, as not allowed by the other passage. That Diodorus had not τεσσ. in his copy, is certain; for he writes τεσσαρακοντάπεντε, an error indeed, but, I suspect, not proceeding from Diod. (who, I doubt not, meant to write τεσσ. δύο) but from the scribes, who might easily fall into ἔχοντα Ἀλκίδαν, ὃς ἦν αὐτοῖς ναύαρχος, προστάξαντες, αὐτοὶ ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν καὶ οἱ ξύμμαχοι ἐσέβαλον, ὅπως οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι, ἀμφοτέρωθεν θορυβούμενοι, ἧσσον ταῖς ναυσὶν ἐς τὴν Μυτιλήνην καταπλεούσαις ἐπιβοηθήσουσιν. 2. ἡγεῖτο δὲ τῆς ἐσβολῆς ταύτης Κλεομένης ὑπὲρ Παυσανίου τοῦ Πλειστοάνακτος υἱέος, βασιλέως ὄντος καὶ νεωτέρου ἔτι, πατρὸς δὲ ἀδελφὸς ὤν. 3. ἐδήωσαν δὲ τῆς Ἀττικῆς τά τε πρότερον τετμημένα, [καὶ] εἴ τι ἐβεβλαστήκει, καὶ ὅσα ἐν ταῖς πρὶν ἐσβολαῖς παρελέλειπτο· καὶ ἡ ἐσβολὴ αὕτη χαλεπωτάτη ἐγένετο τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις μετὰ τὴν δευτέραν. 4. ἐπιμένοντες γὰρ ἀεὶ ἀπὸ τῆς Λέσβου τι πεύσεσθαι τῶν νεῶν ἔργον, ὡς ἤδη πεπεραιωμένων, ἐπεξῆλθον τὰ πολλὰ τέμνοντες. 5. ὡς δ' οὐδὲν ἀπέβαινεν αὐτοῖς ὧν προσεδέχοντο, καὶ ἐπελελοίπει ὁ σῖτος, ἀνεχώρησαν καὶ διελύθησαν κατὰ πόλεις.

XXVII. Οἱ δὲ Μυτιληναῖοι ἐν τούτῳ, ὡς αἵ τε νῆες αὐτοῖς οὐχ ἦκον ἀπὸ τῆς Πελοποννήσου ἀλλὰ ἐνεχρόνιζον, καὶ ὁ σῖτος ἐπελελοίπει, ἀναγκάζονται ξυμβαίνειν πρὸς τοὺς Ἀθηναίους διὰ τάδε. 2. ὁ Σάλαιθος καὶ αὐτὸς οὐ προσδεχόμενος ἔτι τὰς ναῦς ὁπλίζει τὸν δῆμον, πρότερον ψιλὸν ὄντα, ὡς ἐπεξιὸν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις. 3. οἱ δὲ, the error, since ΔΔΔΔΙΙ would easily be mistaken for ΔΔΔΔΠ. And though forty only are mentioned infra ch. 29 & 69, yet may we suppose that there our author uses a round number; and the manner in which the ships are spoken of favours this. Nor does the τὰς here preceding oblige us, by the force of the reference in the article, to suppose the very same number, since the τὰς may belong to ναῦς only, and the words δύο καὶ τεσσ. be an insertion for the sake of explanation. Render, 'after they had sent off Alcidas in charge of the ships, two-and-forty in number, to [the relief of] Mitylene.' It seems that two ships more were added by the zeal of the allies; though our author does not directly say so, and afterwards, somewhat negligently, speaks of the forty ships, forgetting that they had been increased to forty-two. Thus all becomes plain. In the words following, ναῦς ἀπέστειλαν—προστάξαντες, there is not, what Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold suppose, a confusion of two modes of expression, in which, they say, either ἔχοντα or προστάξαντες must be superfluous,—but προστάξαντες is added by way of explaining what was meant by ἔχοντα, namely, that Alcidas was having in charge two ships, as commander; for ἔχειν may very well have that sense, as in Xen. An. vii. 1, 26. So supra ch. 16, we have, ναύαρχον προσέταξαν Ἀλκίδαν. And similarly here προστάξαντες stands for προστάξαντες αὐτὸν αὐταῖς.

2. νεωτέρου ἔτι] 'yet too young,' namely, to govern; as it is expressed at vi. 16.

3. καὶ εἴ τι ἐβεβλαστήκει] Dind., Poppo, Goeller, Dobree, and Arnold are agreed that the καὶ ought not to be here: certainly not, if it be taken as a copulative. Nor can it be defended unless we suppose καὶ εἰ to stand for εἰ καί: which is not permitted by the propriety of early Attic style. The καὶ seems to have crept in from the scribes feeling a want of a καὶ to correspond to the τὰ just before, and fancying that the apodosis commenced at εἴ τι ἐβεβλαστήκει, whereas the words are merely explicative, and intended to signify that 'they destroyed any thing, whatever it was, that had shot up afresh,' as the shoots of trees imperfectly felled down, &c., and whatever corn had grown since the previous ravage.

Ch. XXVII. 1. διὰ τάδε] Meaning, 'on account of these [following circumstances].' After a phrase of this kind, the next sentence commences without any copulative.

2. ὁπλίζει τὸν δῆμον] Not, 'arms the common people,' as Port., Hobbes, &c., render, but 'makes hoplites, or heavy-armed, of them:' a sense required by ἐπειδὴ ἔλαβον ὅπλα, οὔτε ἠκροῶντο ἔτι τῶν ἀρχόντων, κατὰ ξυλλόγους τε γιγνόμενοι, ἢ τὸν σῖτον ἐκέλευον τοὺς δυνατοὺς φέρειν ἐς τὸ φανερὸν, καὶ διανέμειν ἅπασιν, ἢ αὐτοὶ ξυγχωρήσαντες πρὸς Ἀθηναίους ἔφασαν παραδώσειν τὴν πόλιν. what follows, and occurring also at viii. 17 and 23, and Jos. Ant. xiv. 5, 2.

3. κατὰ ξυλλόγους γιγνόμενοι] 'being at parties,' i. e. getting together into factious bands. So Xen. Anab. v. 7, 1, καὶ ξύλλογοι ἐγίγνοντο, καὶ κύκλοι συνίσταντο. Arrian, E. A. v. 25, 4, ξύλλογοι ἐγίγνοντο τῶν, &c. Compare the phrase supra ii. 21, κατὰ ξυστάσεις γιγνόμενοι, where see note.

Ch. XXVIII. 1. οἱ ἐν τοῖς πράγμασιν] 'those in the administration of affairs.' The phrase occurs in Demosthenes, Theophrastus, and Aristophanes, and is equiv. to οἱ τὰ πράγματα ἔχοντες at vi. 39, or οἱ ἐπὶ τῶν πραγμάτων at iv. 2.

Of the words, a little after, ποιοῦνται κοινῇ ὁμολογίαν, the sense is, 'make, in common with them, (meaning, the people at large,) a capitulation.' So in a passage of Aristot., cited in Steph. Thes., we have, κοινῇ ξυνέβημεν. Ὥστε, a little after, bears the sense, not unfrequent in the Attic writers, 'on condition that.' And in βουλεῦσαι—βούλωνται, we have a frequent conventional term, like χρῆσθαι ὅ τι βούλεσθαι.

2. οἱ δὲ πράξαντες] Meaning, 'those who had held communications with the Lacedæmonians.' See on iv. 132, and vi. 61. With οὐκ ἠνέσχοντο here, 'could not restrain themselves,' compare v. 45, οὐκέτι ἠνείχοντο, and see Blomf. on Æschyl. Choëph. 735. The ὅμως, just after, has reference to a clause omitted; 'although faith had been pledged by the Athenians that they should not be injured:' a sort of ellipsis, this, frequent in the best Attic writers. Ἀναστήσας αὐτούς, i. e. 'having induced them to rise.' See i. 126 and 136.

3. προσεκτήσατο] 'gained it over to the Athenian interest.' Compare Herodot. iii. 74, φίλον προσκτᾶσθαί τινα.

Ch. XXIX. 1. ἀπ' αὐτῆς] i. e. 'after passing, or leaving it.'

δὲ μάλιστα ἦσαν τῇ Μυτιλήνῃ ἑαλωκυίᾳ ἑπτὰ, ὅτ' ἐς τὸ Ἔμβατον κατέπλευσαν'—πυθόμενοι δὲ τὸ σαφὲς, ἐβουλεύοντο ἐκ τῶν παρόντων· καὶ ἔλεξεν αὐτοῖς Τευτίαπλος ἀνὴρ Ἠλεῖος τάδε· XXX. XXXI. Ὁ μὲν τοσαῦτα εἰπὼν, οὐκ

2. ἡμέραι ἦσαν τῇ M. ἑαλωκυίᾳ ἑπτὰ] On this idiom see note at i. 13, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 388. In the words, a little after, ἐβουλεύοντο ἐκ τῶν παρόντων, we have a brief form of expression for 'they consulted what was best to be done under present circumstances,' pro præsentibus rebus. Hence is illustrated a passage of Æschyl. Pers. 793, πῶς ἂν ἐκ τούτων ἔτι πράσσοιμεν ὡς ἄριστα, where ἐκ τούτων is equiv. to ἐκ τῶν παρόντων here.

Ch. XXX. 1. ὅσοι πάρεσμεν] Here we have the first person used for the second.

πρὶν ἐκπύστους γενέσθαι] 'before we (i. e. the news of us) be noised abroad.' The word is often used of things, very rarely, as here, of persons. The only examples known to me are Dio Cass. pp. 524, 95. 291, 87. 556, 9.

ὥσπερ ἔχομεν] 'just as we are,' i. e. immediately. See note on i. 134.

2. τὸ ἀφύλακτον] for ἀφυλαξία. Ἀμελέστερον, ὡς κεκρατηκότων, διεσπάρθαι. At κεκρ. supply αὐτῶν, 'are somewhat carelessly, as having just got the mastery, dispersed about.' Here we have one of those cases treated of by Matth. Gr. Gr. § 568, where the particle ὡς, ὥστε, &c., as serving to introduce a reason for any action, may be resolved into a verb, which here will be, 'inasmuch as they have just gained the victory.'

3. ἐλπίζω—καταληφθῆναι ἂν τὰ πράγματα] lit. 'the matters in question might be attained,' i. e. the city might be got possession of.

4. νομίσαντες οὐκ ἄλλο—ὀρθοῖτο] A passage, this, of no inconsiderable perplexity, as well from doubtful reading as from uncertain interpretation. The difficulty hinges chiefly on the expression τὸ καινὸν τοῦ πολέμου—τὸ τοιοῦτον and ὅ, of which the former has been disputed as to the reading; a few MSS. having τὸ κενὸν τοῦ πολέμου, which has been preferred by Wessel., Abr., Reiske, Bredow, Bened., and Coray. Yet the sense they in general assign, 'the tricks and devices of war,' is one destitute of proof. The only established sense of which the expression is capable, is, 'vain fears and terrors,' which here were quite irrelevant, as Arnold, in his first edition, admits; though in his second, after observing that 'either κενὸν or καινὸν would be sense, and nearly the same sense,' (the word παράλογον expressing the import of each,) he proceeds to explain τὰ κενὰ τοῦ πολέμου to mean, 'accidents which baffle all reasonable calculation, such as false alarms, mistakes of time, place, numbers, &c.' And he adds, that 'the case of Teutiaplus would be a κενὸν τοῦ πολέμου, because he trusted to the effects of surprise and darkness to alarm the Athenians.' Yet not a single proof does he adduce that the expression τὸ κενὸν τοῦ πολέμου ever had such a sense: for in the passages of Aristot. Eth. iii. 8, 6, and Diod. Sic. xx. 30 & 67, it has reference alone to those panic terrors similarly called inania belli by Tacit. Hist. ii. 69. And in that sense it is used by Polyb. xxix. 6, 10. There is, indeed, generally an adjunct notion of some empty ἔπειθε τὸν Ἀλκίδαν· ἄλλοι δέ τινες τῶν ἀπ' Ἰωνίας φυγάδων καὶ οἱ Λέσβιοι ξυμπλέοντες παρῄνουν, ἐπειδὴ τοῦτον τὸν κίνδυνον φοβεῖται τῶν ἐν Ἰωνίᾳ πόλεων καταλαβεῖν τινα, ἢ Κύμην τὴν Αἰολίδα, ὅπως ἐκ πόλεως ὁρμώμενοι τὴν Ἰωνίαν ἀποστήσωσιν. ἐλπίδα δ' εἶναι·

deceit occasioning the panic. But here, as Goeller observes, the terror intended to be infused into the enemy would, of course, be a real and not an empty one, or a mere panic. Such being the case, I entirely agree with Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, in retaining τὰ καινὰ τοῦ πολέμου, supported as this reading is by almost all the MSS., and capable of a very satisfactory sense, as denoting τὰ παράλογα, those unexpected accidents which, whether effected (as in the present instance) by surprise or by the various stratagems of war, bring forward novel and unexpected events, which baffle all reasonable calculation and give a new face to affairs. By τὸ τοιοῦτον is meant, such a sort of attack as Teutiaplus recommended, namely, by surprise; the sense being, that 'such an enterprise would afford an instance of what is meant by the new and unexpected turns of war.' For the term καινὸν here stands for παράδοξον, as often in Xenophon and Lucian, &c., especially in the phrase as used parenthetically, τὸ καινότατον, 'what is a very strange case, unexpected and wonderful.' And so in Lucian, iii. 18, we have, καινὰ καὶ παράδοξα, and in Æl. V. H. iv. 25, παράδοξος μανία. Hence in Dionys. Hal. Ant. iii. 64, οὐδ' εἰς πεῖραν ἦλθον μάχης, ἀλλ' ἐκταραχθέντες ὑπὸ τοῦ παρ' ἐλπίδα καιροῦ παρέδοσαν, &c., the common reading cannot be defended, even on the principle ingeniously propounded by Reiske, of supposing a Latinism by which tempus stands for tempus adversum et calamitosum. And the reading of the Vat. MS. κακοῦ is evidently a gloss. Strange is it that none of the editors there should have seen that καινοῦ must be the true reading (the two letters ρ and ν being perpetually confounded); by which we obtain one example at least of the phrase τὸ καινὸν τοῦ πολέμου—a phrase so rare, that I have not met with it elsewhere; though it be true, what Coray observes on Heliod. 355, 25, that the confusion of the words was chiefly produced by the fact, that 'the thought is true either way, inasmuch as war has not only πολλὰ κενὰ, but πολλὰ καινά.' The latter idea was certainly present to the mind of Heliod., whose words are: καινουργὸς δὲ ὢν ἀεὶ πῶς ὁ πόλεμος τότε τι καὶ πλέον καὶ οὐδαμῶς εἰωθὸς ἐθαυματούργει.

Ch. XXXI. 1. ἐπειδὴ τοῦτον τὸν κίνδυνον φοβεῖται] A somewhat uncommon form of expression for, 'since he thought that attempt too perilous.' But there is something pointed, not to say pungent, in the turn; this being almost tantamount to calling Alcidas coward.

ἐκ πόλεως ὁρμώμενοι] 'making their sally-point from some city,' which they might use as their ὁρμητήριον or sedes belli, head-quarters, the central point from whence to spread the insurrection throughout Ionia. Of this idiom another example occurs infra iii. 85, and others in Dionys. Hal. 582, 47. 661, 18. Arrian, i. 24, 2.

ἐλπίδα δ' εἶναι—ξυμπολεμεῖν] A passage, this, most perplexing, partly from the reading being uncertain, and the text possibly corrupt; and partly from the extreme brevity of the wording, as in very many other cases, where, instead of the speeches of persons being given at large, the heads only of what they said are brought forward. Whenever this occurs in our author, the passages are more or lese obscure; and even where the sense can be ascertained, the construction is often too anomalous to be brought under the rules of correct writing. For whether our author imagined that he had, on such an occasion, more than usual license, (as when persons take down memoranda as heads of any discourse they have heard,) or whether he was indisposed to encounter the greater labour in composition, which such brief reports of the substance of a speech cannot but lay on a writer,—certain it is these are the most neglected and difficult parts of his history; and such as these will now henceforward in the work present themselves more frequently, especially in bk. v., until in bk. viii. they become of frequent occurrence. But to turn to the present passage, here it is proper first to briefly advert to the reading, and then endeavour to ascertain the sense, and, if possible, adjust the construction. The reading which I have above adopted is that found in Bekker's second edition, and differs from the common one only in οὐδενὶ being substituted for οὐδέν; for which there is strong authority from MSS., further confirmed by a kindred passage of Herodot. ii. 162, καὶ τῷ οὔνομα ἀνεκούσιον ἐγίνετο τὸ ποιεύμενον. Of the first clause the sense

may be thus expressed, 'Now there was [they said] a hope [of success in the attempt]; for to no one was his coming unwelcome;' where, as often in such reports as this, of the substance of speeches, there is an ellipsis of ἔφασαν. Then, after stating the general hope of success, they next advert to the great advantages that would redound to the Peloponnesians from the drawing over of the Ionians to revolt from Athens:—of which the first was the withdrawal of the revenue accruing to Athens from the tribute paid to the Ionians. By τὴν πρόσοδον ταύτην, 'this revenue,' understand the revenue from this quarter. Of this somewhat rare construction, by which the genit. is governed by ὑφέλωσι, examples occur infra iii. 13, ὑφαιροῦντες αὐτῶν τοὺς ξυμμάχους. Plato, p. 161, A. ἐάν τις σοῦ, ὡς πρωτοτόκου, αὐτὸ ὑφαιρῇ. Aristot. de Anim. 9, ὑφαιρεῖται τοῦ Κόρακος ὁ ἱκτῖνος ὅ τι ἂν ἔχῃ. Æschin. p. 25, ὡς εὖ τὸ πρᾶγμ' ὑφείλετο τῶν δικαστῶν. Hom. Il. ii. 154, ὑπὸ δ' ὕρεον ἕρματα νηῶν. The prep. ἀπὸ, usually understood, is expressed in Demosth. c. Androt. p. 381, ἀπὸ δὲ εἰσπραττομένων ὑφαιροῦνται, and Hom. Il. xvi. 352, ὡς δὲ λύκοι—ὑπ' ἐκ μήλων αἱρεύμενοι.

The second advantage adverted to was little less than the foregoing,—namely, if not the withdrawal of revenue, the occasioning of expense, which would equally tend to impoverish and ruin the Athenians: a sense, this, contained in the words καὶ ἅμα ἦν—γίγνηται, where, for vulg. ἐφορμῶσιν, found in all the MSS., ἐφορμοῦσιν is necessary to make any tolerable sense; a reading which had occurred to myself twenty-five years ago, and has since been adopted by Bekker in his second edition. The change itself is too small to need authority from MSS.; yet the Schol. Basil. must have had the reading in his copy. That ἐφορμοῦσιν should thus be mistaken for ἐφορμῶσιν, might very well arise from the unfrequency of the participle; which, however, is found in Arrian, E. A. ii. 1, 6, τῆς γῆς εἰργόμενοι, καὶ ἀπὸ θαλάττης πολλαῖς ναυσὶν ἐφορμούσαις (blockading) φρουρούμενοι. Appian, i. 475, ἐφορμουσῶν τῶν νεῶν τῇ Καρχηδόνι. Soph. Œd. Col. 812, μήδ' ἔμε φύλασσ' ἐφορμῶν: a nautical metaphor this. Again, for the vulg. αὐτούς,—which admits of no tolerable sense, and doubtless proceeded from those who, reading ἐφορμῶσιν, thought an accus. necessary after it,—I have here edited, on the authority of the best MSS., αὐτοῖς. With respect to the word σφίσι, I have, with Goeller, bracketed it, because its change of position in different MSS. renders it suspicious; and moreover, when, as Goeller observes, we consider that it admits of no tolerable explanation, but obscures a passage not otherwise dark in sense, there can be little doubt but that it crept in from the margin; where it was a gloss serving to explain the word ἐφορμοῦσιν, and show who were meant as the blockaded,—namely, the Lesbians, Ionians, and the allies generally.

Another difficulty still remains to be encountered,—namely, to trace some tolerable construction. Formerly I supposed an aposiopesis to exist after γίγνηται, as in another passage supra ch. 3, ἦν μὲν ξυμβῇ ἡ πεῖρα: an opinion which I formed, from thinking, as I still do, that the apodosis of the whole sentence cannot lie in the words πείσειν τε οἴεσθαι, &c. Yet to this suppression of the apodosis here, Arnold makes a not ill-founded objection, and others have occurred to myself. Either, therefore, we must suppose the apodosis to be really in πείσειν τε οἴεσθαι, (on τε in the apodosis, see Arnold on i. 133.) which, if the passage be correct, involves the least difficulty; or we must suppose the passage to be corrupt, by the loss of some words between γίγνηται and πείσειν, which completed the sense; and this I think so probable, that I have ventured to insert asterisks indicating this in the text.

2. τὸ πλεῖστον τῆς γνώμης εἶχεν—προσμῖξαι] 'felt most inclined (lit. had most mind) to make the Peloponnesian coast:' a rare phrase, the nearest approach to which that I have met with is in Herodot. v. 126, αὐτῷ δὲ ἡ πλείστη γνώμη ἦν ἐς τὴν Μ. ἀπάγειν: though we may also compare Herodot. i. 120, and vii. 220, ταύτῃ τῇ γνώμῃ πλεῖστός εἰμι. The phrases γνώμην ἔχειν and οὕτω τὴν γνώμην ἔχειν are of frequent occurrence τάχιστα τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ πάλιν προσμῖξαι. XXXII. Ἄρας δὲ ἐκ τοῦ Ἐμβάτου παρέπλει· καὶ ‡προσσχὼν Μυοννήσῳ τῇ Τηΐων, τοὺς αἰχμαλώτους οὓς κατὰ πλοῦν εἵληφει ἀπέσφαξε τοὺς πολλούς. 2. καὶ ἐς τὴν Ἔφεσον καθορμισαμένου αὐτοῦ, Σαμίων τῶν ἐξ Ἀναίων ἀφικόμενοι πρέσβεις ἔλεγον οὐ καλῶς τὴν Ἑλλάδα ἐλευθεροῦν αὐτόν, in Xenophon, who would here doubtless have written πλείστην τὴν γνώμην εἶχε. It is worthy of observation, that by the expression here employed with respect to Alcidas, taken in conjunction with that at § 1, ἐπειδὴ τοῦτον τὸν κίνδυνον φοβεῖται, there is marked in a quiet but decided way, and at two strokes, the character of Alcidas,—by the present, as utterly unenterprising and extremely vacillating in mind, but whose vacillation, as is intimated by the expressions τὸ πλεῖστον τῆς γνώμης εἶχε and ὅτι τάχιστα, verged to inaction and avoidance of danger. He was bent, it seems, on getting away from danger as quick as possible, and going home in a whole skin.

Of προσμῖξαι the sense is, appellere, 'to fall in with,' 'make the coast of;' as in Herodot. vi. 96, πρ. τῇ Νάξῳ, and vii. 168, πρ. τῇ Πελοποννήσῳ, and viii. 130, πρ. τῇ Ἀσίῃ.

CH. XXXII. 1. προσσχὼν] So Bekker edits, from two of the best MSS., for vulg. προσχ., which is retained by Poppo and Goeller, and on just grounds, according to the principle propounded by Blomfield on Æschyl. Ag. 1249, that 'in compounds of this kind the Greeks did not repeat the sigma unless for distinction sake, as in προσστῆναι, &c.' Yet this is rather said than proved; and indeed it takes for granted more knowledge than we possess. Ancient inscriptions are, in a case like this, the best evidence, but they strongly confirm the use of the double sigma. The next best is the usage of the most ancient writers, not of poetry, but of prose; and as we find Herodotus very frequently uses προσσχὼν, and never (at least in the best MSS.) προσχὼν, that seems to prove the use of the doubled σ in the most ancient prose style. Again, internal evidence is quite in favour of the σσ, from the circumstance that one may easily imagine how one σ, which was probably never used in pronunciation, was at length dropped in writing; but not vice versâ. It is scarcely necessary to observe, that the usage of the later writers will here prove nothing, since there is no doubt that the other σ was dropped even in the later Græcism, at least by writers in general; though its use in the earlier ones, and its propriety, was maintained by the ablest critics, as we may infer from what we find in the Etym. Mag. p. 700, 16, where the writer, (probably following Aristarchus and Apollonius,) after noticing that προσχὼν was sometimes written with the single σ and sometimes with a double, adds, that 'it was written with a double when it meant προσορμίσας; with a single when it meant ἰδών.' There was still, it seems, so much strictness as to require προσσχὼν to be written, in the sense of προσορμίσας; though the σ was abandoned in the other. Can we, then, doubt the usage of a far earlier period? As to Poppo's censure of Bekker, for editing προσσχεῖν at iv. 11, even without the authority of MSS., it falls pointless; for he forgets that if even the MSS. of Thucydides were far better than they actually are, this is one of those cases in which the authority of MSS. is next to nothing (since the copyists were so much used to see the word written with the single σ, that they would easily be led to write only the single σ; but not vice versâ); and is far overbalanced by the rules of correct composition as laid down by the ancient grammarians and critics.

Μυοννήσῳ] This was originally the name of the small rocky peninsula (νῆσος) in which the city was situated, and which it probably almost filled; though afterwards it came to be that of the city itself, which is briefly described by Strabo thus: ἐφ' ὕψους χερρονησιάζοντος κατοικεῖται. And more graphically by Livy, l. xxxvii. 27, thus: 'Ipse collis est in modum metæ in acutum cacumen a fundo satis lato fastigiatus: a continenti artæ semitæ aditum habet.' The peninsula was originally so called from its swarming with mice; it being not unfrequent in ancient times for islands to have names derived from some animals in which they abound.

2. οὐ καλῶς τὴν Ἑλλ. ἐλευθεροῦν αὐ.] Meaning, that however καλὸν it might be to liberate Greece, as they professed to do, (see i. 8.) he was not carrying it forward καλῶς, by fair and honourable means: alluding to the adage καλὸν καλῶς, in opposition to the pernicious maxim, to bring about good ends by evil means, adverted to by St. Paul, Epist. to the Rom. iii. 8.

εἰ ἄνδρας διέφθειρεν οὔτε χεῖρας ἀνταιρομένους οὔτε πολεμίους, Ἀθηναίων δὲ ὑπ' ἀνάγκης ξυμμάχους· εἴ τε μὴ παύσεται, ὀλίγους μὲν αὐτὸν τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἐς φιλίαν προσάξεσθαι, πολὺ δὲ πλείους τῶν φίλων πολεμίους ἕξειν. 3. καὶ ὁ μὲν ἐπείσθη τε, καὶ Χίων ἄνδρας, ὅσους εἶχεν ἔτι, ἀφῆκε, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων τινάς· ὁρῶντες γὰρ τὰς ναῦς οἱ ἄνθρωποι οὐκ ἔφευγον, ἀλλὰ προσεχώρουν μᾶλλον, ὡς Ἀττικαῖς· καὶ ἐλπίδα οὐδὲ τὴν ἐλαχίστην εἶχον, μή ποτε, Ἀθηναίων τῆς θαλάσσης κρατούντων, ναῦς Πελοποννησίων ἐς Ἰωνίαν παραβαλεῖν. XXXIII. Ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς Ἐφέσου ὁ Ἀλκίδας ἔπλει κατὰ τάχος, καὶ φυγὴν ἐποιεῖτο· ὤφθη γὰρ ὑπὸ τῆς Σαλαμινίας καὶ Παράλου ἔτι περὶ Κλάρον ὁρμῶν, (αἱ δ' ἀπ' Ἀθηνῶν ἔτυχον πλέουσαι,) καὶ δεδιὼς τὴν δίωξιν, ἔπλει διὰ τοῦ πελάγους, ὡς γῇ ἑκούσιος οὐ σχήσων ἄλλῃ ἢ Πελοποννήσῳ. 2. τῷ δὲ Πάχητι καὶ τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις ἦλθε μὲν καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἐρυθραίας ἀγγελία, ἀφικνεῖτο δὲ καὶ πανταχόθεν· ἀτειχίστου γὰρ οὔσης τῆς Ἰωνίας, μέγα τὸ δέος ἐγένετο, μὴ παραπλέοντες οἱ Πελοποννήσιοι,—εἰ καὶ ὡς μὴ διενοοῦντο μένειν,—πορθῶσιν ἅμα προσπίπτοντες τὰς πόλεις. 3. αὐτάγγελοι δ' αὐτὸν ἰδοῦσαι ἐν τῇ Κλάρῳ ἥ τε Πάραλος καὶ ἡ Σαλαμινία ἔφρασαν. 4. ὁ δὲ ὑπὸ σπουδῆς ἐποιεῖτο τὴν δίωξιν· καὶ μέχρι μὲν Πάτμου τῆς νήσου ἐπεδίωξεν, ὡς δ' οὐκέτι ἐν καταλήψει ἐφαίνετο, ἐπανεχώρει. 5. κέρδος δὲ ἐνόμισεν, ἐπειδὴ οὐ μετεώροις περιέτυχεν, ὅτι οὐδαμοῦ ἐγκαταληφθεῖσαι ἠναγκάσθησαν στρατόπεδόν † τε ποιεῖσθαι, καὶ εἰ διέφθειρεν] 'seeing that he destroyed.'

3. ἐλπίδα—εἶχον, μή ποτε—ναῦς παραβαλεῖν] 'had not the least expectation that (or suspicion that) the ships of the Peloponnesians would cross over into Ionia.' The μή ποτε is not simply for ὅτι, but is used because the notion of suspecting or imagining is here combined with that of expecting, and therefore the syntax is the same. It is true that the opt. or subj. usually follows, (as in the instance of προσδοκία μὴ at ii. 93.) but the inf. sometimes, though rarely, is found; in which view we may compare our idiom, 'to fear lest that any one should perish.'

Ch. XXXIII. 1. τῆς Σαλαμινίας καὶ Παράλου] Two vessels used by the Athenians for state-purposes or public business of any kind, whether of a civil or religious nature; to fit them for which latter use, they were set apart as sacred. Of the former kind were the recalling of or carrying out public orders to their generals, or fetching home officers accused of crime: of the latter were all sorts of sacred legations, as the carrying over of the θεωροὶ to Delos. They were triremes (manned only by freemen; the service being accounted honourable, and the pay greater); though, for the sake of speed, they were of a slighter make. Among their other civil employments was that of collecting the tribute from the over-sea allies, (see Schol. on Aristoph. Eq. 1071.) and upon this errand they probably were now going.

This custom of having sacred vessels was not confined to the Athenians; for in Arrian, E. A. ii. 24, 11, we have mention of a Tyrian ship called 'the sacred vessel.' I have, just after, followed Goeller and Arnold, in restoring the old reading and that of all the MSS., Κλάρον, for which Poppo and Bekker had edited, from conjecture, Ἴκαρον: for it has been ably maintained by Goeller, Didot, and Arnold, that the alteration in question is unnecessary.

δεδιὼς τὴν δίωξιν] literally, 'fearing the being pursued,' namely, by the fleet of Paches from Lesbos. Διὰ τοῦ πελάγους, 'through or across the [Ægean] sea,' namely, by the straightest course, and not that usually taken, along the continent of Asia and the islands, alluded to in παραπλέοντες, just after. Ἑκούσιος stands for ἑκών, which, as it is used with a verb adverbially, may be used with a participle. See note on ii. 89, 8.

2. ἀφικνεῖτο δὲ καὶ πανταχόθεν] scil. αὐτοῖς, 'it reached them, too, from every quarter;' answering to pervenire ad aures in Latin. So in Rom. xvi. 19, ἡ γὰρ ὑμῶν ὑπακοὴ εἰς πάντας ἀφίκετο, and Ecclus. xlvii. 17, εἰς νήσους πόρρω ἀφίκετο τὸ ὄνομά σου, meaning the tidings of them. Hippocr. πολὺ σοῦ τὸ κλέος εἰς ἡμέας ἀφῖκται. Here the dat. stands for the accus. and a prep. In εἰ καὶ ὡς μὴ διενοοῦντο μένειν the ὡς stands for οὕτως. Render, 'if even thus (or, under those circumstances) they did not think of remaining,' 'although they should not even thus (i. e. under these circumstances) determine to remain.' So καὶ ὡς is used at i. 40, and vii. 81; as also in Hom. Il. i. 116, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὡς (even thus, under these circumstances) ἐθέλω δόμεναι πάλιν, and xvi. 363, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὡς ἀνέμιμνε, σάω δ' ἑρίηρας ἑταίρους, where σάω must not be taken as standing for ἐσάωσεν, but I would propose to read ἀνέμιμν' ἐσάω, a dialectical form for ἐσάου, from the ancient Homeric verb σαόω. So also in Xen. Hist. v. 1, 15, we have, διεπνήσατε ἅπερ καὶ ὡς ἐμέλλετε. Thus we may render, 'if even they were thus minded not to remain,' i. e. 'though they were, even thus, minded,' &c.

3. αὐτάγγελοι — ἰδοῦσαι] 'themselves bringing the tidings who had been eye-witnesses of the fact.' So Plut. Anton. § 71, τῆς ἀποβολῆς τῶν δυνάμεων αὐτάγγελος ἦλθε. Appian, ii. 561, 4, αὐτ. ἦλθε. Soph. Œd. Col. 333, τί δ' ἦλθες; — καὶ λόγοις γ' αὐτ. Procop. de Ædif. 24, 32, ὁ βάρβαρος — αὐτάγγελος ἐσβέβηκεν ἐς Γ. τὴν γῆν, and p. 283, 2.

4. ὑπὸ σπουδῆς] A phrase occurring also at iv. 30. v. 66. viii. 108. and Plut. i. 153, ὑπὸ σπουδῆς ἀνατρέχων. With respect to the sense, it is rendered by Port. on v. 66, præ festinatione, and by Arnold, 'under the influence of haste;' but by Port. here, and by Bauer there, cum festinatione; a sense, this, preferable, since we have here expressed the accompaniment of action, without any reference to the passion which prompts it. Of this interchange of ὑπὸ and μετὰ, (where the ὑπὸ denotes accompaniment,) see examples in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 529, β, of which may be noted in particular Eurip. Ion, 1353, ὑπ' εὐκλείας θανεῖν. Herodot. ii. 45, ὑπὸ πομπῆς ἐξάγειν τινά. Soph. Trach. 519, ἦν ὑπ' ἀγνοίας ὁρᾷς. With respect to the phrase mentioned by Matth., ἀπὸ σπουδῆς, I am not aware that it ever occurs.

οὐκέτι ἐν καταλήψει ἐφαίνετο] 'he did not appear to be within reach,' meaning Alcidas; for that (notwithstanding what Poppo says) must be the subject of the verb; though no mention of this individual has been made either in the present or in the preceding paragraph; at least not by name, though he is referred to at the αὐτὸν in the words a little before, αὐτάγγελοι αὐτὸν ἰδοῦσαι; by a certain harshness, indeed, but one quite in the manner of our author. That Dio Cass. must have so taken ἐφαίνετο, (and not regarded it, as it is done by Poppo, in the light of an impersonal, with the subject τὰ πράγματα,) is plain from his close imitation of the present passage, p. 632, 23, ἐπεδίωξαν μὲν αὐτούς, ἐπεὶ δ' οὐκ ἐν καταλήψει ἐφαίνοντο, ἀνεχώρησαν. Of the phrase ἐν καταλήψει φαίνεσθαι or εἶναι, I have met with no example elsewhere.

5. κέρδος ἐνόμισεν — παρασχεῖν] The obscurity which involves these words may be attributed to extreme brevity, and from the subjects of the verbs not being marked. But if it be borne in mind that ἐγκαταληφθεῖσαι and ἠναγκάσθησαν have reference to the Peloponnesians, and σφίσι to the Athenians, the sense will be tolerably clear, though any other writer would have written, instead of σφίσι, τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις or αὐτῷ. 'As, then, he had not fallen in or come up with them at open sea, Paches regarded it as fortunate that the ships, being no where hemmed in (among the islands), were not obliged to form an encampment on some insular harbour, and thus give them (meaning the Athenians) the trouble of keeping a watch and maintaining a blockade of the port.' Probably Paches failed in coming up with the Peloponnesian fleet, because he kept too much along shore, as supposing that the Peloponnesian fleet would do so, and not knowing that Alcidas had taken his course, for speed, διὰ πελάγους, doubtless through the middle of the Cyclades between Delos and Naxos. On leaving Ephesus, he probably went through the strait now called 'The little Bogas,' between Samos and Mycale, and then traversing the middle of the Mare Icarium, left Patmos about twenty miles off, and struck a course between Myconus and Naxos. For though he had missed of the fleet by not knowing its exact course, yet, had that not been the case, he might indeed have overtaken it, but not till it reached the Cyclades; where it would have been easy for the Peloponnesian fleet to get into some port (as, for instance, Melos), and give its enemies some trouble.

φυλακὴν σφίσι καὶ ἐφόρμησιν παρασχεῖν. XXXIV. Παραπλέων δὲ πάλιν ἔσχε καὶ ἐς Νότιον τὸ Κολοφωνίων, οὗ κατῴκηντο Κολοφώνιοι τῆς ἄνω πόλεως ἐαλωκυίας ὑπὸ Ἰταμάνους καὶ τῶν βαρβάρων κατὰ στάσιν † ἰδίαν ἐπαχθέντων· ἑάλω δὲ μάλιστα αὕτη ὅτε ἡ δευτέρα Πελοποννησίων ἐσβολὴ ἐς τὴν Ἀττικὴν ἐγίγνετο. 2. ἐν οὖν τῷ Νοτίῳ οἱ καταφυγόντες καὶ κατοικήσαντες αὐτόθι, αὖθις στασιάσαντες, οἱ μὲν, παρὰ Πισσούθνου ἐπικούρους Ἀρκάδων τε καὶ τῶν Goeller observes, that, for παρασχεῖν, we should rather have expected παρέσχον; but that παρασχεῖν is put instead, by way of continuing the commenced construction, as in a similar case sup. i. 22. It could not, however, have been παρέσχον, and the construction is continued, because in φυλακὴν καὶ ἐφόρμησιν παρασχεῖν we have represented an effect of, or consequence on, the στρατόπεδον ποιεῖσθαι. Such being the case, the τε can have no place after ἠναγκάσθησαν; and accordingly I might, with Bekker and Goeller, have cancelled it, on the authority of three MSS., though it has been retained by Poppo and Arnold. I have thought proper to retain it, not because I think it genuine, but because it appears to me to present in itself a vestige of truth; for I doubt not that our author wrote γε, saltem. 'Since he had not met with the ships at open sea, (i. e. between where he might have easily engaged with and sunk them,) Paches thought this at least a fortunate circumstance, that he had not come up with them among the islands, where,' &c. It is true that φυλακὴν καὶ ἐφόρμησιν παρασχεῖν cannot of itself signify 'give trouble to;' but as it suggests the idea of πόνον or πράγματα παρέχειν τινί, it may bear that sense.

Ch. XXXIV. 1. ἐς Νότιον τὸ Κολοφωνίων] Notium was the port to Colophon, as Piræus to Athens; and the places occupied the same respective positions; for Colophon, as its name indicates, occupied the crown of a hill, while Notium was on the sea-shore, and was probably so called from its position, due south of Colophon. The places, however, are in some measure regarded as one (like Leith and Edinburgh); Colophon being called ἡ ἄνω πόλις, and probably πόλις; and Notium, ἡ κάτω πόλις.

κατὰ στάσιν] The phrase signifies, 'out of faction and party-discord.' Probably an aristocratical party had called in the aid of the Persians, and were οἱ μηδίσαντες.

2. αὖθις στασιάσαντες — ἐπαγόμενοι] Discord was again engendered at Notium, in which, as Thirlwall says, 'the animosity of one party towards their fellow-citizens proved stronger than their aversion to the barbarians.' But why, it may be asked, animosity amongst persons of like political views, namely, democratical? Because, as we learn from Aristot. Pol., the two factions consisted of the new comers, and the old inhabitants; of whom the former, it seems, thought themselves so ill-used by the latter, that they resolved to expel their opponents by whatever means, and themselves occupy the place; and to secure themselves in the possession, they even invited the aristocratical party in the possession of the upper town to share the government with them: and as Notium was unfortified, they enclosed one quarter with a wall (to serve as a sort of citadel), in which, as may be meant by the εἶχον, they kept themselves. Or rather at εἶχον we may repeat ἐπικούρους or supply αὐτούς, rendering, 'they kept them ἐν διατειχίσματι, in a διατείχισμα.' So we say, 'to keep soldiers or servants in any place.' The word διατείχισμα signifies properly a cross-walling or barricade; and, in a military sense, a cross fortification, separating one part of a city from another. And in this sense it frequently occurs in Dio Cass. and Polyb. (see viii. 36, 9. xvi. 31, 5 & 8. xvi. 33, 1.) and in Appian, i. 479, it is explained by Schweigh. to mean, 'castellum a quo in duas partes separabatur agger.' Yet such cannot well be the sense here. The term must here signify, 'the part partitioned off,' separating one part of the town from the rest. The use of the term seems, however, to intimate that this part, inhabited by the new comers, did not require, for defence, to be inclosed all round, (being probably surrounded chiefly by the sea,) but simply to be separated from the rest of Notium by a straight wall; which was, we may suppose, so fortified as to make it a sort of τεῖχος, or fortress: and indeed such is the name given to it in Polyæn. iii. 2. Thus we may render, 'kept in a partition,' or a part of the town separated from the rest by a partition-wall. So βαρβάρων ἐπαγόμενοι, ἐν διατειχίσματι εἶχον, καὶ τῶν ἐκ τῆς ἄνω πόλεως Κολοφωνίων οἱ μηδίσαντες ξυνεσελθόντες ἐπολίτευον· οἱ δὲ, ὑπεξελθόντες τούτους, καὶ, ὄντες φυγάδες, τὸν Πάχητα ἐπάγονται. 3. ὁ δὲ προκαλεσάμενος ἐς λόγους Ἱππίαν τὸν ἐν τῷ διατειχίσματι Ἀρκάδων ἄρχοντα, ὥστε, ἢν μηδὲν ἀρέσκον λέγῃ, πάλιν αὐτὸν καταστήσειν ἐς τὸ τεῖχος σῶν καὶ ὑγιᾶ,—ὁ μὲν ἐξῆλθε παρ' αὐτὸν, we have, just after, τὸν ἐν τῷ διατειχίσματι ἄρχοντα. And as the part so partitioned off (see iv. 102 & 113.) had, at the isthmus, a strongly fortified wall, so the whole might very well be called a τεῖχος, or fortress.

ξυνεσελθόντες ἐπολίτευον] Here the sense is, not, as commentators explain it, 'rempublicam administrabant,' but rather, 'in civitate versabantur, vivebant,' as at ii. 46, ἄνδρες — πολιτεύουσι, and vi. 18, διαφόρως πολιτεύωσι. And this is indeed, as H. Stephens in his Thes. observes, its original and proper sense, 'Proprie (says he) πολιτεύειν dicuntur privati qui in republicâ versantur, et ejus legibus atque institutis vivunt.' And this probably the Scholiast means by τὴν πολιτείαν εἶχον. With this expression, ξυνεσελθόντες ἐπολίτευον, (equivalent to ἐσελθ. ξυνεπολίτευον,) compare Xen. Hist. v. 2, 12, τοῖς αὐτοῖς νόμοις χρῆσθαι καὶ συμπολιτεύειν.

By οἱ δὲ, a little after, understand the other party, namely, the democratic or popular one. Of ὑπεξελθόντες τούτους the sense is literally, 'secretly fleeing or flying them.' Matthiæ, in his Gr. Gr. § 393, 4, compares a similar use, with the accus., of ὑπεκστῆναι and ὑπεκτρέπεσθαι. And so in Latin refugio, and Engl. to 'fly any one,' meaning, to refuse association with him. Here the accus. is governed, not by the verb, but by some preposition understood, meaning, quod attinet ad. Though, indeed, there is a certain intensity of sense; for ὑπεξ. by itself would never signify, 'having privily gone out from the town,' but ὑπεξ. with τούτους must mean, 'having privily withdrawn from and abandoned all community with them.'

3. προκαλεσάμενος ἐς λόγους Ἱππίαν] Here, for vulg. προσκ., Haack, Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller edit, from ten MSS., προκ.: and very properly; the sense being evidently, 'having invited to a conference;' a sense, this, which προσκ. cannot yield; the term being never so used by any good writer. For as to the passage adduced from Dionys. Hal. 140, 7, ἃ δὲ προσκαλούμεθα ὑμᾶς, there ought undoubtedly to be read, even without authority of MSS., προκ.; the writer there evidently having in view a passage of our author supra ii. 74, 2, ἀδύνατα—ἃ προκαλοῦνται.

On this use of ὥστε, to signify 'on condition that,' see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 479, a, and § 629. In σῶν καὶ ὑγιᾶ we have an expression, like our 'safe and sound,' to denote total exemption from any kind of harm. And of this an example occurs in Herodot. iv. 76, ἢν σῶς καὶ ὑγιὴς ἀπονοστήσῃ, and iii. 124; and others are found in the Tragedians and Plato, where σῶν is Attic for σῶον; on which see Hesych., T. Mag., and Eustath. ad Hom. Il. N. p. 959. Also in a passage of Polyæn. we have, ἀβλαβῆ καὶ ζῶντα. A similar elegance, by a repetition not pleonastic, but corroborative, is found in Soph. Trach. 235, καὶ ζῶντα καὶ θάλλοντα, where this association of two terms synonymous is adopted, though it involves, just after, a tautology; for there to the question of Dejanira, δίδαξον εἰ ζῶντα Ἡρακλέα προσδέξομαι, Lichas answers, ἔγωγέ τοι σφ' ἔλειπον ἰσχύοντά τε καὶ ζῶντα, καὶ θάλλοντα, where the repetition of the same word in the answer has great beauty, as in a similar instance at Genesis xliii. 27, where to the question ὑγιαίνει ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν— ἔτι ζῇ; the answer is, ὑγιαίνει ὁ πατὴρ ἡμῶν, ἔτι ζῇ· where render, 'Is your father well? is he yet alive?—Our father is well; he is yet alive.' A passage which had Schaefer borne in mind, he would not, in order to get rid of a repetition, have proposed to read, in the above, for ζῶντα, σῶν τε, which would destroy a no inconsiderable beauty, and bring in a τε where there is no place for it; the true punctuation there being, ἰσχύοντά τε καὶ ζῶντα, καὶ θάλλοντα κοὐ νόσῳ βαρύν, and the κοὐ νόσῳ exegetical of θάλλοντα, in which there is a figure taken from trees which, while their foliage is green, are healthy and strong. So in Ps. xcii. 12, it is said, 'the righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree.' Schaefer was, I suppose, chiefly induced to hazard the above conjecture on account of the term ζῶντα following after ἰσχύοντα — it being, as would seem, unnecessary, after stating that a person is strong, to state that ὁ δ' ἐκεῖνον μὲν ἐν φυλακῇ ἀδέσμῳ εἶχεν, αὐτὸς δὲ προσβαλὼν τῷ τειχίσματι ἐξαπιναίως, καὶ οὐ προσδεχομένων, αἱρεῖ, τούς τε Ἀρκάδας καὶ τῶν βαρβάρων ὅσοι ἐνῆσαν διαφθείρει· καὶ τὸν Ἱππίαν ὕστερον ἐσαγαγὼν, ὥσπερ ἐσπείσατο, ἐπειδὴ ἔνδον ἦν, ξυλλαμβάνει καὶ κατατοξεύει. 4. Κολοφωνίοις δὲ Νότιον παραδίδωσι, πλὴν τῶν μηδισάντων. καὶ ὕστερον Ἀθηναῖοι οἰκιστὰς πέμψαντες κατὰ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν νόμους κατῴκισαν τὸ Νότιον, ξυναγαγόντες πάντας ἐκ τῶν πόλεων, εἴ πού τις ἦν Κολοφωνίων.

XXXV. Ὁ δὲ Πάχης ἀφικόμενος ἐς τὴν Μυτιλήνην, τήν τε Πύῤῥαν καὶ Ἔρεσσον παρεστήσατο, καὶ Σάλαιθον λαβὼν ἐν τῇ πόλει τῶν Λακεδαιμόνιον κεκρυμμένον, ἀποπέμπει ἐς τὰς Ἀθήνας, καὶ τοὺς ἐκ τῆς Τενέδου Μυτιληναίων ἄνδρας ἅμα, οὓς κατέθετο, καὶ εἴ τις ἄλλος αὐτῷ αἴτιος ἐδόκει εἶναι τῆς ἀποστάσεως. 2. ἀποπέμπει δὲ καὶ τῆς στρατιᾶς τὸ πλέον· τοῖς δὲ λοιποῖς ὑπομένων καθίστατο τὰ περὶ τὴν Μυτιλήνην καὶ τὴν ἄλλην Λέσβον, ᾗ αὐτῷ ἐδόκει.

XXXVI. Ἀφικομένων δὲ τῶν ἀνδρῶν καὶ τοῦ Σαλαίθου, οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι τὸν μὲν Σάλαιθον εὐθὺς ἀπέκτειναν,—ἔστιν ἃ παρεχόμενον, he is alive. But, in effect, the words ἰσχύοντά τε καὶ ζῶντα stand, by a frequent hysteron proteron, for ζῶντά τε καὶ ἰσχ., as we say, 'to be alive and hearty.' Certainly the learned critic might have recollected, if not the above passage of Gen., at least the similar one of Æschyl. Ag. 660, καὶ ζῶντα καὶ βλέποντα, where βλέποντα serves further to develope the idea in ζῶντα. In which view compare a passage of Ecclesiastes, xi. 7, 'Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is to behold the sun.' So also, in a fragment preserved by Hesych. in voc. χλωρὸν, we have, χλωρόν τε καὶ βλέπον (read βλέποντα) ἀντὶ τοῦ ζῶντα, where the expression χλωρόν τε καὶ βλέπ. exactly answers to the ἰσχύοντά τε καὶ ζῶντα of the above passage of Sophocles. And of βλέπειν as used in the sense to be alive, frequent examples occur in Euripides and Sophocles.

ὁ μὲν ἐξῆλθε] There is here a breaking off of the construction; the preceding participle, προκαλεσάμενος, not being followed by any verb. Almost any other writer would have put the participle and noun previous, Πάχης, in the genit. Why our author chose the construction with the noun, is ingeniously accounted for by Goeller as follows: 'Quoniam in altero verborum finitorum εἶχε idem subjectum est, quod in participio (quod si fit, genitivus absolutus participii poni non solet), nominativo scriptor usus est, et non genitivo, quamquam interposito altero subjecto ὁ μὲν, non ad participium spectante. Eadem structura repetitur iv. 80. præiit quodammodo Hom. Il. θ. 268, seqq.' Other instances of this union of perfidy and cruelty may be seen adduced in my Translation.

ἐν φυλακῇ ἀδέσμῳ εἶχεν] 'kept him in hold without bonds;' answering to the libera custodia of the Latins. By τῷ τειχίσματι, a little after, understand the διατείχισμα before mentioned; here called τειχ., because it is considered simply under the idea of a fortress.

4. κατὰ τοὺς ἑαυτῶν νόμους] i. e. 'ita ut necessitudinem ac religionum legumque communionem cum metropoli pro fundamento ac principio coloni haberent, a quo jura sua et officia repeterent.' Heyn. Opusc. Academ. vol. i. p. 317, qui ibidem exempla horum mutuorum officiorum ad suum quæque caput relata exposuit. (Goeller.)

Ch. XXXV. 2. καθίστατο] constituit, componit, 'adjust and settle.' So Plut. Pomp. διοικήσας τὰ ἐκεῖ καὶ καταστήσας. Appian, i. 669, 64, τὴν ἀρχὴν ὅλην ἐπῆλθε καὶ καθίστατο τὰς πόλεις. See more on i. 114.

Ch. XXXVI. 1. ἔστιν ἃ παρεχόμενον] The Schol. explains παρ. by ὑπισχνούμενον; a view of the sense also adopted by interpreters in general, and according τά τ' ἄλλα καὶ ἀπὸ Πλαταιῶν, (ἔτι γὰρ ἐπολιορκοῦντο,) ἀπάξειν Πελοποννησίους,—περὶ δὲ τῶν ἀνδρῶν γνώμας ἐποιοῦντο· καὶ ὑπὸ ὀργῆς ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς οὐ τοὺς παρόντας μόνον ἀποκτεῖναι, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἅπαντας Μυτιληναίους ὅσοι ἡβῶσι, παῖδας δὲ καὶ γυναῖκας ἀνδραποδίσαι, ἐπικαλοῦντες τήν τε ἄλλην ἀπόστασιν,—ὅτι οὐκ ἀρχόμενοι, ὥσπερ οἱ ἄλλοι, ἐποιήσαντο,—καὶ ‡προσξυνελάβοντο οὐκ to which the expression may be rendered literally, 'taking upon himself,' παρὰ ἑαυτῷ. As, however, this is a signification destitute of proof, it may be better, with Poppo, to take παρ. in the sense proferentem, 'bringing forward, offering, proposing,' scil. πρᾶξαι; a sense on which I have treated infra ch. 54, 1, where παρεχόμενοι stands for προτεινόμενοι.

In the words following, ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς—ἐπικαλοῦντες, &c., we have, as Goeller observes, a constructio ad sensum; the nomin. ἐπικαλ. being put as though there had been before written ἐψήφιζον, ἐβουλεύσαντο, or something like it, as involved in the words ἔδοξεν αὐτοῖς: of which idiom another example occurs infra vii. 42, 2, and in other passages of our author.

τὴν ἄλλην ἀπόστασιν — ἐποιήσαντο] 'reliquam defectionem fecerant.' The construction here is, ἐπικαλοῦντες ὅτι τήν τε ἄλλην ἀπόστασιν ἐποιήσαντο, 'ceteram, or reliquam, defectionem crimini dantes.' Of ἀρχόμενοι ὥσπερ οἱ ἄλλοι the sense is, 'not held under government, as the rest of the allies,' but indulged with a great degree of liberty and independence. So at ch. 39 it is imputed to the Mitylenæans as an aggravation of their crime in revolting, οἵτινες — αὐτόνομοι οἰκοῦντες — τοιαῦτα εἰργάσαντο.

προσξυνελάβοντο — παρακινδυνεῦσαι] There are few passages of our author in which the editors have been more at a loss to determine the true reading, though the general meaning is sufficiently clear,—namely, that 'the adventuring of the Peloponnesian fleet over to Ionia, to the aid of the Mitylenæans, was the chief occasion of the vehemence of the anger they evinced.' But no easy matter is it to bring the construction under the rules of regular composition, and still less to fix the reading, which latter must, however, first be determined before the former can be settled. Now the MSS. fluctuate between the readings προξυνελάβοντο and προξυνεβάλοντο, also προσξυνελάβετο and προσξυνεβάλετο. The common reading is προσξυνελάβοντο, which has been altered by Gottleber, Haack, Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, to προσξυνεβάλετο. And that ξυμβάλλεσθαι is often used in the sense to contribute and also to aid, cannot be doubted: but that ξυλλαβέσθαι and ξυνεπιλαβέσθαι have sometimes the same sense, is so certain, that it would be scarcely worth while to prove it, had not Goeller ventured to deny it. Suffice it to say, that the sense in question is found in Herodotus, as, for instance, at v. 44 & 45, where we have, προσεπιλαβέσθαι τοῦ πολέμου. And so ξυλλαβ. τοῦ τοιούτου in another passage of our author infra iv. 47, and also in Xen. Ages. ii. 30. Arrian, E. A. i. 7, 5. Ind. xx. 10, et al. Indeed that the idea of 'taking hold of any one, or taking part of any business with him,' must also imply that of helping him, or helping forward the thing to be done, is so obvious that, even without examples, it could not be doubted. Such being the case, it is plain that one term is as proper as the other, and the only difference is, that ξυλλαβέσθαι is the less usual term, and therefore the more likely to have been altered by the early critics into the other. But there is another reason why the preference is due to προσξυλλαβ., which is, that προσξυνεβάλοντο (or προσξυνεβάλετο) οὐκ ἐλ. τῆς ὁρμῆς would involve an anomaly of construction; for the usus linguæ would require ὁρμῇ: and in vain does Arnold seek to defend the genit. from Eurip. Med. 279, ξυμβάλλεται δὲ πολλὰ τοὐμὲ δείματος: for the construction there is as questionable as here; and the editors are put to as great straits as in the present case. Musgrave would take τοῦδε δείματος as standing for εἰς τόδε δεῖμα, which surely cannot be admitted, and still less the expedient of Elmsl., who would take the words as equivalent to πολλὰ σύμβολα (i. e. τεκμήρια) ἔχεις τοῦ δεινὴ εἶναι ('to be an object of fear'): for that would involve a harshness too great even for lyric poetry. Better is the defence of the genit. alleged by Matthiæ, who supposes the poet to have written ξυμβάλλεται τοῦδε δείματος, because he was thinking of συλλαμβάνεσθαί τινος, whose force quodammodo latet in συμβάλλεσθαι. But

might not any irregularity be defended on the score that the writer was, while putting down one thing, thinking of another? Better is it at once to suppose that Eurip. wrote τῷδε δείματι, and that δείματι was altered to δείματος by the scribes, who thought it to be in regimen with πολλὰ preceding; just as in the present passage, Poppo and Goeller maintain that ὁρμῆς belongs, not to προσξυμβ., but to ἐλάχιστον: which, however, would in like manner involve a construction quite unheard of, and produce a poor and frigid sense. Insomuch that not without reason did Arnold, in his first ed., doubt whether προσξυνεβάλετο τῆς ὁρμῆς were Greek. This must, I think, decide as to προσξυνελ. being the true reading, especially since it is supported by a passage of Dio Cass. p. 375, 6, containing no other than a close imitation of the expression, προσσυνελάβετο γὰρ τοῦ λόγου τούτου, ὅτι, &c.; 'and what helped, or increased, the rumour was, that,' &c. The reading in question is also strongly confirmed by a very similar passage of our author infra iv. 47, ξυνελάβοντο δὲ τοιούτου οὐχ ἥκιστα — οἱ στρατηγοί, meaning that 'they helped not a little to bring about such a state of things.' And so at vi. 70, we have, ξυνεπιλαβέσθαι τοῦ φόβου, 'helped their fear,' i. e. as Arnold explains there, 'helped to increase it.' And so Herodot. vii. 6, συνέλαβε γὰρ ἄλλα οἱ, σύμμαχα γενόμενα (scil. αὐτῷ) ἐς τὸ πείθεσθαι Ξέρξεα, where σύμμ. γεν. is exegetical of συνέλαβε before. Arnold on vi. 70, also aptly compares a passage of Milton, Par. Lost, vi. 656, 'their armour helped them harm,' i. e. increased their harm. And he might have added the following of Zechariah i. 15, 'I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward (i. e. increased) the affliction (lit. the evil, τῷ κακῷ) of my displeasure.' Again, so in Jos. Bell. i. 6, 6, (a passage probably written with a view to the present,) we have, καὶ προσεπέρρωσε τὴν ὁρμὴν ὁ Μιθριδάτου θάνατος, where, as here and at vi. 70, and in the passages just quoted, there is, in the term as thus used of what is evil, a sort of concealed sarcasm, as in our vulgar phrase, 'to help the lame dog over the stile,' i. e. to help for evil, increase a calumny. And hence Poppo's objection, that 'the sense of helping is unsuitable, while it is that of increasing that is required,' falls at once to the ground. It is true there is something harsh in things being said to help, as here ships, and in the passage of Milton, armour. For which reason, I suppose, it was that certain early critics altered προσξυνελάβετο or προσξυνελάβοντο to προσξυνεβάλετο or προσξυνεβάλοντο: for to them I ascribe the readings in question. But this was getting rid of an imaginary difficulty, by bringing forward one real and perhaps insurmountable; for, as to supposing a schema Pindaricum, with Matth., this is too much a 'device for the nonce' to be thought of, and at any rate supposes what is wholly unsuitable to prose composition; and the commixture of two modes of expression, here recognised by Goeller and Poppo, cannot be admitted without proof, of which not a shadow has been adduced. Again, to suppose, with Goeller and Arnold, that the words αἱ νῆες τολμήσασαι are used as a single term equiv. to τὸ τὰς ναῦς τολμῆσαι, is surely an expedient too precarious to be relied on. After all, such liberties as that of changing the number of a noun, from some notion of impropriety in its use, was not very unfrequent with the ancient critics. One example must here suffice, Xen. Hist. vii. 1, 35, μέγα δὲ συνεβάλλοντο τῷ Πελοπίδᾳ εἰς τὸ τιμᾶσθαι, καὶ ὅτι—καὶ ὅτι, &c. So the passage stands in the earlier editions; but in that of Schneider we find συνεβάλλετο,—on what authority does not appear; though the καὶ ὅτι—καὶ ὅτι not only warrant, but demand, the plural, notwithstanding that the singular, as referred to each of the clausulæ, would have been neater composition; yet, in that case, the former would not have been used.

I will only add, that the present passage was, I doubt not, in the mind of Strabo, p. 247, 9, who, speaking of the Massylians, says, καὶ αὐτοὶ χρήσιμοι κατέστησαν ἐκείνοις, κἀκεῖνοι προσελάβοντο τῆς αὐξήσεως αὐτῶν, where, though the editors make no remark, προσελ. is manifestly corrupt. Read προσσυνελάβοντο, and all will be right; the sense being thus literally, 'helped their increase,' 'helped them to thrive and prosper.' Possibly the above writer might also have had in mind another passage of our author, infra viii. 26, 1, ξυνεπιλαβέσθαι τῆς Ἀθηναίων καταλύσεως, where τῆς καταλύσεως is a verbal for the cognate verb (i. e. for τοῦ καταλυθῆναι αὐτούς).

ἐς Ἰωνίαν ἐκείνοις βοηθοὶ τολμήσασαι παρακινδυνεῦσαι] Here there seems to νοίας ἐδόκουν τὴν ἀπόστασιν ποιήσασθαι. 2. πέμπουσιν οὖν τριήρη ὡς Πάχητα ἄγγελον τῶν δεδογμένων, κατὰ τάχος κελεύοντες διαχρήσασθαι Μυτιληναίους. 3. καὶ τῇ ὑστεραίᾳ μετάνοιά τις εὐθὺς ἦν αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἀναλογισμὸς ὠμὸν τὸ βούλευμα καὶ μέγα ἐγνῶσθαι πόλιν ὅλην διαφθεῖραι μᾶλλον ἢ οὗ τοὺς αἰτίους. 4. ὡς δ' ᾔσθοντο τοῦτο τῶν Μυτιληναίων οἱ παρόντες πρέσβεις, καὶ οἱ αὐτοῖς τῶν Ἀθηναίων ξυμπράσσοντες, παρεσκεύασαν τοὺς ἐν τέλει ὥστε αὖθις be something pleonastic: but it is only a seeming, not a real, pleonasm; being, in effect, a stronger expression to intimate how very daring the attempt was thought to be. Of this idiom (which is very rare) another example occurs in Plato, p. 967, B, καί τινες ἐτόλμων τοῦτό γε αὐτὸ παρακινδυνεύειν: whence it is plain that Goell. is wrong in supposing παρακινδυνεῦσαι to stand for κινδυνεύσασαι παραπλεῦσαι. Indeed, the παρα has never, among the examples which I have noticed of the word, that force, but it has rather the frequent sense of præter, as said of what happens beyond expectation, or παρὰ γνώμην, implying something rash. Goeller was probably led into the error from supposing that some verb of motion ought here to be understood. But why, then, not understand πλεῖν? The verb of motion is expressed in Plato, p. 810, A.

Of ἀπὸ βραχείας διανοίας, just after, the sense is, 'from a slight thought or counsel,' as said of what is taken up without previous design, purpose, or plan; as opposed to what is done advisedly. Similarly in a passage of Liban. p. 117, cited by Krueger, we have, οὐκ ἀπὸ βραχείας γνώμης τὸν πόλεμον κατέστησαν, meaning to say, that 'this co-operation of the Lacedæmonians indicated that they had not made the revolt from slight thought or sudden resolution, but deliberately, advisedly, and from preconcerted plan.'

2. τριήρη ἄγγελον τῶν δεδογμένων] This use of ἄγγελος, as said of a ship, is employed with reference to the persons on board; ships being often put for the sailors on board, and sometimes vice versâ.

3. μετάνοιά τις] 'a sort of repentance,' i. e. some degree of it. Μετάνοια here signifies, according to its original import, a change of mind or purpose as to any thing that has been done, implying a feeling of regret for what has been done amiss, with an intention of amending it. For as the Athenians were ταχύβουλοι, so were they μετάβουλοι. See Aristoph. Ach. 574—6, Mitch. 'To Minerva (says Mitch.) was it ascribed, that the δεύτεραι φροντίδες of this hasty people were somewhat wiser than their first thoughts.' See Solon in Poëtæ Minores, i. 337.

ἀναλογισμὸς] 'a reflection that:' the verbal here taking the construction of its verb. In ὠμὸν καὶ μέγα we may suppose a hendiadys; but still the question recurs, What is the force here of the adj. μέγας? It is, I believe, that of the Latin immanis and the English 'enormous,' as applied to a very wicked action. So in Hom. Od. xix. 92, we have, ἔρδουσα μέγα ἔργον, 'perpetrating a wicked deed.' And in Cicero pro Rosc. 24, 'tantum facinus tam immane.' Virg. Æn. i. 347, where, by a poetic license, the word is applied to a person, though it is the disposition of the person that is meant: 'Pygmalion scelere ante alios immanior omnes.' The original sense, indeed, of immanis (whatever be its derivation) is probably not cruel, but enormous, exceeding all due bounds, (so Ovid has 'studium immane loquendi,' 'excessive desire of,' &c.) and hence, as used in a moral sense, whether of actions, or of the agents thereof, the word was, by tacit compact, taken to denote cruel. Here, then, by ὠμὸν καὶ μέγα is meant, 'enormously cruel;' and so, by a similar hendiadys, Cicero says, 'ferus et immanis,' and 'fera et immanis;' and in Ovid, Trist. ii. 135, we have, 'edictum immane minaxque,' i. e. cruelly threatening. Also in Juven. Sat. viii. 223, 'Quid Nero tam sæva crudaque tyrannide fecit?'

4. παρεσκεύασαν τοὺς ἐν τέλει] 'prepared,' i. e. disposed,—namely, their minds; as iv. 132. viii. 52. By τοὺς ἐν τέλει, 'those in office,' are here meant, as Arnold shows, the prytanes and ten prætores or στρατηγοί, generals of the state. By the former the assemblies were summoned in time of peace, or on ordinary occasions; but the latter had also the power of calling them together in war, and under extraordinary circumstances. See supra ii. 59. infra iv. 118, and Schoemann de Comitiis Atheniensium, p. 61.

γνώμας προθεῖναι· καὶ ἔπεισαν ῥᾷον, διότι καὶ ἐκείνοις ἔνδηλον ἦν βουλόμενον τὸ πλέον τῶν πολιτῶν αὖθίς τινας σφίσιν ἀποδοῦναι βουλεύσασθαι. 5. καταστάσης δ' εὐθὺς ἐκκλησίας, ἄλλαι τε γνῶμαι ἀφ' ἑκάστων ἐλέγοντο, καὶ Κλέων ὁ Κλεαινέτου, ὅσπερ καὶ τὴν προτέραν ἐνενικήκει ὥστε ἀποκτεῖναι, ὢν καὶ ἐς τὰ ἄλλα βιαιότατος τῶν

With the phrase following, αὖθις γνώμας προθεῖναι, 'to bring the subject again under consideration,' compare ch. 42, οὔτε τοὺς προθέντας τὴν διαγνώμην αὖθις, and 38, θαυμάζω τῶν προθέντων αὖθις περὶ Μ. λέγειν.

5. καταστάσης—ἐκκλησίας] 'the assembly being set for business.' In ἀφ' ἑκάστων the ἀφ' is taken for ὑφ' by Poppo, who refers to his note on i. 17, for examples of this idiom in verbs of speaking, acting, and sending: of the first of which he adduces as examples, besides the present passage, others at iii. 82, τὰ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐναντίων λεγόμενα, and vi. 32, ἐλέχθησαν τοιοίδε λόγοι ἀπό τε ἄλλων, καί, &c. viii. 14, λεγομένων λόγων ἀπό τε τοῦ Χαλκ. καὶ Ἀλκ. vi. 28. Yet in all those passages ἀπὸ does not strictly mean by, but 'on the part of.' And the same may be said of the examples adduced by him, of verbs of acting, as i. 17. vi. 61. viii. 48 and 68, (to which might be added others at i. 77, ἀπὸ τοῦ κρείσσονος καταναγκάζεσθαι, and iv. 115, μηχανῆς μελλούσης προσάξεσθαι ἀπὸ τῶν ἐναντίων,) and also of those of sending. It is true that Arnold there supposes the existence of a mixed meaning, partly expressive of derivation, and partly of agency. If so, the sense in the present case would be, 'proceeded from, and were uttered by.' But it may be observed, that the sense 'on the part of' is one so strong, as not to admit of any weaker one to be mixed with it. All that can truly be said is, that in such an idiom, action being implied, and consequently an agent, there is a sort of implied sense of by. The mixed meaning spoken of by Arnold might have been better established by him from iii. 38, 4, οὐ τὸ δρασθὲν πιστότερον ὄψει λαβόντες, ἢ τὸ ἀκουσθὲν ἀπὸ τῶν λόγῳ καλῶς ἐπιτιμησάντων. Yet that mixture arises from the sensus prægnans which subsists in ἀκουσθὲν, which stands for ἀκουσθὲν ὡς λεχθὲν, 'heard from (denoting origin) and uttered by or on the part of.' At τὴν προτέραν supply γνώμην from γνῶμαι preceding. This not unfrequent forensic phrase seems formed on the military one, νικᾶν μάχην.

βιαιότατος τῶν πολιτῶν] Here βίαιος exactly corresponds to the Latin violentus, as in Cic. Phil. Or. ii. 28, 'violentus et furens,' and Phil. Or. v. 7, 'homo vehemens et violentus.' Livy, xxxiv. 35, 'tyrannus violentus,' and ix. 34, 'violenti censores.' The epithet is here ascribed to Cleon, from his being the perpetual advocate of harsh counsels and stern measures, to be carried into effect no matter at what sacrifice of the principles of justice or equity. Poppo and Goeller illustrate this from an expression which occurs, as applied to Cleon, in a fragment of Hermippus cited by Plut. Pericl. 33, where Pericles is represented as δηχθεὶς αἴθωνι Κλέωνι. And true it is that αἴθων, as it properly signifies διάπυρος, on fire, so does it also denote fig. what is impetuous, ardent. So, too, in Soph. and Eurip. the phrase αἴθων ἀνήρ, and in Æschyl. Theb. 444, αἴθον λῆμα. Yet in the above passage Hermippus certainly could not mean to use the word in any but a bad sense, as signifying ferox, violentus, as in Plato, p. 559, D, ὅταν ξυγγένηται αἴθωσι θηρσὶ καὶ δεινοῖς. And, so understood, the epithet would be very suitable to a demagogue like Cleon, whose affected bluntness or resoluteness (affected, to cover his intrinsic feebleness by a show of energy) always hurried him into ferocity as a cloak to his natural cowardice; and who, like a true Cerberus, could bark as well as fawn for a sop. Yet, when we consider, in the above passage of Plutarch, the added term δηχθείς, I cannot but think, with Thirlwall, that there is there an allusion to the stinging of a horse-fly, alias gad-fly, meaning lit. the stinging-fly. And similar is the use of πρηστὴρ (from πρήθω, to burn) at Dioscor. vii. 14, as applied to a serpent, called lit. the burner or stinger. So also ὁ καύσων, 'the burner,' the term used to denote the Simoom. See St. James, i. 11. One cannot but observe the address (worthy of Aristophanes himself) by which in one word we have conveyed the character of Pericles as distinguished from that of Cleon. No other could have been employed so adapted to raise the one, and depress the other in our estimation: and yet in the term applied to Cleon, there may be also an allusion to this demagogue, as being, in the words of Shakspeare, 'a πολιτῶν, τῷ τε δήμῳ παρὰ πολὺ ἐν τῷ τότε πιθανώτατος, παρελθὼν αὖθις ἔλεγε τοιάδε.

XXXVII. "Πολλάκις μὲν ἤδη ἔγωγε καὶ ἄλλοτε ἔγνων δημοκρατίαν ὅτι ἀδύνατόν ἐστιν ἑτέρων ἄρχειν, μάλιστα δ' ἐν τῇ νῦν ὑμετέρᾳ περὶ Μυτιληναίων μεταμελείᾳ. 2. διὰ γὰρ τὸ καθ' ἡμέραν hare brained hotspur,' (διάπυρος ἀνήρ,) who, like 'hot Lord Percy,' is 'on fire to go' and consummate the sweeping massacre.

τῷ δήμῳ—πιθανώτατος] So infra vi. 35, π. τοῖς πολλοῖς. Dio Cass. xl. 60, πιθ. τοῖς πολλοῖς, where the expression πιθανώτατος has the somewhat rare use—though found in Plato, Arrian, and Diodorus,—of πείθειν δυνάμενος. Similarly in a passage of Eurip. Orest. 894, descriptive of a demagogue, and by some supposed to be written with reference to Cleon, we have, Ἀνήρ τις ἀθυρόγλωσσος, ἰσχύων θράσει, Θορύβῳ τε πίσυνος κἀμαθεῖ παῤῥησίᾳ Πίθανος ἔτ' ἀστοὺς περιβαλεῖν κακῷ τινι. And though Cleophon be there rather meant than Cleon, yet the traits perfectly tally. By θράσει seems denoted that impudence which nothing could abash; by θορύβῳ, that coarseness and clamour which characterised the eloquence of Cleon; and by the ἀμαθεῖ παῤῥησίᾳ, that freedom of speech or plain speaking, which, as affecting the plain, blunt, straightforward person, he always cultivated. The vast influence which he so long held with the common people, was owing, as Thirlwall shows, partly to the contrast which his language and manner exhibited to the ancient style of oratory, (the people finding a relief in his plain and homely diction, after their attention had been overstrained by the lofty eloquence of Pericles,) and yet more from his having gained credit for plain good sense and upright intention; and especially from his ever professing himself the devoted friend of the poorer citizens, and cherishing their envy and jealousy of the rich.

ἔλεγε τοιάδε] 'spoke to this purpose:' for I agree with Thirlwall, that the speech ascribed to him by Thucydides affords no specimen of the style or oratory, though it undoubtedly represents the vein of his arguments.

CH. XXXVII. 1. Πολλάκις—ἄρχειν] The speaker here, without using any preface, enters (probably according to his usual custom) at once into his subject; laying down a blunt and somewhat mortifying position,—but one the more likely to shame the people out of their humanity, —namely, that 'a democratic government, which is subject to changes of disposition, is unfit to rule an empire.' This dictum is pointed by a skilful turn of expression in πολλάκις ἤδη καὶ ἄλλοτε ἔγνων, meaning, that 'it is not the first time he has been convinced of this truth,' but he has often felt it, and most of all on the present occasion. The same sort of turn is observable in a passage of Eurip. Med. 447, οὐ νῦν κατεῖδον πρῶτον, ἀλλὰ πολλάκις, and 294, οὐ νῦν με πρῶτον, ἀλλὰ πολλάκις, ἔβλαψε δόξα, and Hel. 957.

For vulg. ἀδύνατος, Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller have edited ἀδύνατον; and very properly; such being found in the best MSS., and presenting in itself the more difficult reading. The construction is, ἔγνων ὅτι ἀδύνατόν ἐστι δημοκρατίαν ἑτέρων ἄρχειν, but, as Goeller observes, the writer, by a well-known attraction, has joined δημοκρατίαν with ἔγνων, so as to be for ἔγνων, δημοκρατίαν ὅτι ἀδύνατόν ἐστιν (αὐτὴν) ἑτέρων ἄρχειν.

Of the phrase περὶ Μυτ. μεταμελείᾳ, the sense is not, 'regret concerning,' but, 'change of purpose respecting,' as in Polyb. i. 39, 14. ii. 53, 6. Aristot. Eth. iii. 1, and μεταμέλεσθαι in Pol. xxv. 5, 11. iv. 50, 6.

2. διὰ γὰρ τὸ καθ' ἡμέραν—ἔχετε] In order to produce the effect intended, Cleon thinks fit to bring forward an observation which had been already made by Pericles, though for a different purpose,—namely, that 'the Athenian dominion was essentially a tyranny resting on force, and not on the affections of its subjects.' In order, however, to pave the way for this, and produce the greater effect, he thinks proper to conciliate the minds of his hearers by a præoccupatio benevolentiæ, such as very frequently occurs in the proems to ancient orations: a remarkable instance of which, and that in similar words, is found supra i. 68, where the Corinthians, in like manner, previously sooth the minds of the Lacedæmonians by the words, τὸ πιστὸν ὑμᾶς, ὦ Λακ., τῆς καθ' ὑμᾶς αὐτοὺς πολιτείας καὶ ὁμιλίας ἀπιστοτέρους ἐς τοὺς ἄλλους, ἢν τι λέγωμεν καθίστησι. The general purpose of the sentiment is to convey a reproach on the Athenians for being good easy people, too unsuspicious for the circumstances in which they are placed; as much as to say, 'because you never think of plotting against each other, you fancy the same temper of mind to exist in your allies towards you:' an indirect compliment to democracy, as if none would betray a democratical government as they would an aristocratical or monarchical one: a state of things calculated to maintain a daily and perpetual peace one towards another. Of the phrase τὸ ἀνεπιβούλευτον, though it is unaccompanied by any example in Steph. Thes., I have noted several in the later Greek writers. Τὸ αὐτὸ ἔχετε, 'ye bear the same disposition towards.'

The next words, καὶ ὅ τι ἂν ἢ—μαλακίζεσθαι, form, as it were, the vinculum to the proem; and the main argument intended is, that 'the Athenian government was a tyranny, and must be administered as such:' and this is introduced as a consequence on what went before. Render, 'and whatsoever errors ye, whether swayed by any representations from them, commit, or, moved by pity, fall into;' for in οἴκτῳ we have, as Portus and Poppo rightly observe, not a real dative, but what stands for the Latin ablative. Yet ἐνδῶτε is not well rendered by them remiseritis: nor is it properly by others regarded as having no particular force. To give way to a fault is to commit it: and when it is one proceeding from misplaced pity, the term is peculiarly appropriate; and is here used, as I long ago pointed out, and as Poppo has since done, by way of explaining the indefinite term ἁμάρτητε by a more definite one, ἐνδ., one also better corresponding to μαλακίζεσθαι in the apodosis. Properly, indeed, the participle (ἐνδόντες) ought to have been written: but the subjunctive is used the better to correspond to ἁμάρτητε preceding. Of the words οὐκ ἐπικινδύνως—μαλακίζεσθαι, the constr. is, οὐχ ἡγεῖσθε [ὑμᾶς] ἐπικινδύνως ἐς ὑμᾶς [αὐτοὺς] καὶ οὐκ ἐς τὴν τῶν ξυμμάχων χάριν. Of οὐχ ἡγεῖσθε the sense is, 'ye do not consider that,' &c. Μαλακίζεσθαι corresponds to ἐνδῶτε, just before: and so it is employed infra ch. 40, 6, where I have shown that μαλακίζεσθαι is used by the best writers for ἐνδοῦναι, signifying, 'to be softened into compassion.' Ἐπικινδύνως stands for ἐς τὸν κίνδυνον, vestro cum periculo, 'to your own peril,' lit. 'for peril as regards you.' The formula καὶ οὐ here contains an indirect antithesis; for in a plainer writer we should have had, ἡγεῖσθε ἐπικινδύνως μὲν—οὐ δὲ ἐς, &c. Of the next words, ἐς τὴν τῶν ξυμμάχων χάριν, the sense is, non cum sociorum gratiâ, 'so as not to procure any thanks or gratitude from the allies.' The sense is well expressed in the following paraphrastic version of the Scholiast, οὐκ ἐκείνοις τι χαρίζεσθε, ἀλλ' αὐτοὶ κινδυνεύετε καταφρονούμενοι· ἐκεῖνοι δὲ οὐκ ἴσασι χάριν ὑμῖν: the sense being lit. 'and not for the obtaining of any thanks from the allies.' The genit. τῶν ξυμμάχων is one of object, showing the object of the relation in the preceding word: and in plain phraseology a preposition is usually, in such a case, expressed, especially περὶ or ἕνεκα. Here it would be ἀπό.

The words following contain the observation itself by which Cleon chiefly hoped to produce the desired effect,—namely, that the empire they held was a tyranny: on which see supra i. 122. ii. 63, and notes. Cleon adds, that 'it is exercised over persons themselves plotting against [their rulers], and governed unwillingly.' The scope of the next words, οἳ οὐκ ἐξ ὧν—περιγένησθε, is to further develop the sentiment intimated in οὐκ ἐς τὴν τῶν ξυμμάχων χάριν preceding, and we may render, 'who do not obey you [swayed] by any favours which you may, yourselves injured, (i. e. to your own injury,) confer on them, but from what you may be superior to them in strength, (i. e. from such measures towards them as proceed from a superiority of strength,) rather than out of any good-will of theirs towards you.' The words ἐξ ὧν are to be resolved by ἐξ ἐκείνων ἃ, and αὐτοὶ is to be joined with βλαπτόμενοι. It is strange that the οἳ should, though indispensable to the construction and sense, be wanting in almost every good MS. To account for this, Arnold suspects certain words to have been lost between ἀρχομένους and οὐκ ἐξ ὧν, and supposes that the gap thus occasioned was attempted to be concealed by bringing together the words which immediately preceded and followed it, so that the copy might exhibit no mark of imperfection. This, however, is too fanciful a conjecture to deserve much attention, and, if adopted,—which surely it ought not without proof,—would not a little lessen one's confidence in the integrity of the MSS. of our author. This is paying too much to get rid of a present difficulty; which, after all, is rather imaginary than real. For why should we not suppose οἳ to have been left out by the inadvertence of copyists? The mistake might easily arise in MSS. written without any stops; for, in so very long a sentence as this, unless the construction be attended to, and the general sense tolerably understood, οἳ would not seem necessary, and consequently might easily be omitted. Moreover, the word is found in several MSS. and all the early editions; and though those MSS. be with one exception (namely, Cod. Reg. Paris, g) of an inferior value, from being modern, yet this is a case where later MSS., when carefully copied from ancient ones, are of nearly equal weight. Indeed the most ancient ones, both of the classical writers and the scriptural ones, are often very carelessly transcribed, and abound in omissions,—more so, indeed, than later ones. Again, if we remove the οἳ, there is no appearance of a gap; and it would be strange if the appearance of such could be so easily removed. Finally, as to the Bamberg MS. of Pliny having preserved many gaps, of which no trace is found in the other MSS., that will only prove how carelessly the MSS. of Pliny were copied, not those of Thucydides. Gaps, it is true, do occur not unfrequently in the MSS. of almost all ancient writers; but the traces of them are almost never found removed by trickery: and as to the defects of the latter half of the 18th book of Diod. Sic., in some MSS. of that writer, being concealed by tampering with the concluding words, so as to make it appear that the 19th book follows immediately after, that will only establish the fact of trickery in one instance of another writer, and that in a very different case from the present.

4. οἱ μὲν γὰρ—ὀρθοῦνται τὰ πλείω] What is contained in this section is meant to establish on just grounds (as indicated by the γὰρ) the foregoing position, that 'persons of plain understandings are better statesmen than the clever and eloquent;' and this is done by contrasting the characteristics of each. The latter (it is said) 'are marked by an arrogant self-sufficiency, which would be wiser than the laws, and perpetually seek to obtain the upperhand in all discussions of public affairs, not what will most benefit the public; thus turning the discussion of public measures into a theatre for the display of oratorical talent (whence they ruin states). The former, on the contrary, through distrust of their own cleverness, think it right to be less wise than the laws, and are content to be too untalented to be able to find fault with what has been well said; and, acting as impartial judges of measures, rather than as oratorical prize-fighters, they are mostly successful.' Such is the general sense intended. But to consider the phraseology in detail, this affecting to be wiser than the laws, was in Greece always regarded as highly censurable in any citizens. Thus Archidamus, i. 84, mentions, to the praise of the Spartans, that they were brought up to be ἀμαθέστεροι τῶν νόμων τῆς ὑπεροψίας. Hence in the early classical writers we not unfrequently meet with the maxim, as expressed in Eurip. Or. 487, τῶν νόμων γε μὴ πρότερον εἶναι θέλειν. And so in Aristot. Rhet. i. 16, (cited by Arnold,) we have, τὸ τῶν νόμων σοφώτερον ζητεῖν εἶναι, τοῦτ' ἔστιν, ὃ ἐν τοῖς ἐπαινουμένοις νόμοις ἀπαγορεύεται.

Of the next words, τῶν τε ἀεὶ—περιγίγ., the sense is, from a certain harshness of expression, obscure; but it appears to be

this, 'and in whatever is at any time spoken by the public, they wish to have the upper-hand;' as much as to say, they are not only conceited, but love to have the pre-eminence in the assembly, φιλοπρωτεύουσι, (see 3 John 9.) similar to what is said in Matth. xxiii. 6, φιλοῦσι τὰς πρωτοκαθεδρίας. Arnold, indeed, explains the meaning to be, 'and to outdo whatever is said or proposed for the public good, i. e. to find fault with and procure the rejection of all other measures than their own.' But this, though apparently adopted by Poppo, is a sense scarcely to be elicited from the words themselves; not to say that it is not doing, but speaking, that is here meant. The next words, ὡς ἐν ἄλλοις—γνώμην, suggest the reason why they do so,—namely, 'inasmuch as they could not evince their talent in matters of greater consequence:' as much as to say, that there are no occasions of greater importance whereon to evince their talent. The ὡς stands for ἅτε, quippe quod: and its use with δηλώσαντες falls under that rule of Matth. Gr. Gr. § 568, of the participle preceded by ὡς, ὥστε, ἅτε, &c., Thus here the sense is, 'inasmuch as they thought that they could not,' &c. It is true that Portus, Duker, and Goeller render οὐκ ἂν δηλώσαντες by 'quasi non possent ostendere in aliis rebus gravioribus.' Yet there is no proof that ὡς must here have the sense quasi; but a strong reason may be given why it should not,—which is, that thus a very inept sense arises; for what matters, it may be asked, were there of greater moment than those which affected the welfare of the state? Thus, moreover, we should be obliged to read, on conjecture, for μείζοσιν, μείοσιν, —a conjecture, this, which might be supported from ch. 40, οἵ τε ῥήτορες ἔξουσι καὶ ἐν ἄλλοις ἐλάσσοσιν ἀγῶνα: and certain it is, the two words μείζων and μείων are not unfrequently confounded by the scribes; insomuch that numerous errors yet remain to be emended in the best writers on this principle. Yet, when to the utter absence of authority from MSS. for such a reading, we add the feeble and far less suitable sense thus arising,—it is better to adopt the view above propounded.

In the words following, ἀπιστοῦντες τῇ ἐξ ἑαυτῶν ξυνέσει, I have not ventured to follow Bekker in cancelling the ἐξ, on the authority of five of the least valuable MSS.—an authority surely next to nothing when set against that of all the other MSS., and also against the internal evidence here existing, which is far greater in favour of the word, since no reason can be imagined why it should have been foisted into nearly all the MSS.; while a very sufficient reason may be given why it should be wanting in a few,—namely, as being cancelled by certain critics who deemed it useless, not bearing in mind the occurrence of such modes of expression as τῷ ἀφ' ἡμῶν εὐψύχῳ, ii. 39. προθυμία ἀπὸ τῶν ναυτῶν, vii. 70, and the usage of the Greek writers, by which instead of the genit. alone we have sometimes a preposition with the genit. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 378, obs. 4. The ἐξ was, I would observe, restored by Goeller in his second edition, and by Arnold, and has been finally adopted by Poppo. Retaining it, then, we may compare a similar form of expression at 1 Cor. ii. 12, τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, which is stronger than τὸ πν. τοῦ Θεοῦ.

With the words ἀμαθέστεροι τῶν νόμων ἀξιοῦσιν εἶναι, compare those supra i. 84, ἀμαθέστεροι τῶν νόμων τῆς ὑπεροψίας. Here, as there, the term ἀμαθ. is used sarcastically; q. d. 'You call us ignorant, but we are content to be so far ignorant, as not to be wiser than the laws.' A similar sarcasm is contained in the next words, ἀδυνατώτεροι δὲ, &c. q. d. 'You call us mere incapables, (ἀδυνατ. scil. λέγειν καὶ ἔρᾶν,) and we profess to be such, not finding fault with, or carping at, a speech from one who speaks well, or to the purpose.' Similarly in Herodot. i. 207, we have, μεμφόμενος τὴν γνώμην ταύτην: ii. 24, μεμψαμένου γνώμας τὰς προκειμένας: and vii. 146, μεμφθεὶς τῶν στρατηγῶν τὴν γνώμην. The construction is, ἀδυνατώτεροι δὲ [ἢ ὥστε] μέμψασθαι λόγον τοῦ καλῶς εἰπόντος. With respect to the ellipsis here existing, that of ὥστε is frequent, (see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 448, b.) while that of ἢ together with it is somewhat rare. What is here left to be supplied is in both cases expressed in a passage of λόγον· κριταὶ δὲ ὄντες ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου μᾶλλον ἢ ἀγωνισταί, ὀρθοῦνται τὰ πλείω. 5. ὡς οὖν χρὴ καὶ ἡμᾶς ποιοῦντας μὴ, δεινότητι καὶ ξυνέσεως ἀγῶνι ἐπαιρομένους, παρὰ δόξαν τῷ ὑμετέρῳ πλήθει παρ-

Here, though the editors make no remark, I cannot help suspecting some corruption at τοῦ καλῶς εἰπόντος μέμψασθαι λόγον; for while λόγον can scarcely dispense with the article, the participle may very well; since it can only mean, 'the person who speaks well,' 'the good speaker;' the art. here falling under the rule laid down by Bp. Middleton, Gr. Art. ch. iii. § 2, of insertions in hypothesis, as used with nouns subst. and with participles: and he adduces an example from Xen. Mem. iii. 1, ἃ δεῖ τὸν εὖ στρατηγήσοντα ἔχειν, remarking, that the art. is not, as the grammarians tell us, in such a case used indefinitely; the sense being, 'the general;' and so in a passage of St. John, x. 11, we have, ὁ ποιμὴν ὁ καλός. Here, however, that idiom would not be to the purpose; since in the above instance is designated a certain class of persons; whereas in the present is merely denoted any one indefinitely; the meaning being, 'to carp at the speech of any one, whoever he be, that speaks well.' Unless, therefore, the article be used indefinitely, (a principle which has been exploded by Bishop Middleton,) it can certainly have no place here. And as certain is it that λόγον cannot dispense with the article; for, as Bishop Middleton has shown, if one subject have it, the other cannot dispense with it. Out of this difficulty we may, indeed, be extricated by reading, with Stobæus, ἀδυν. δὲ τὸν τοῦ: yet for that there is no authority from MSS., and the testimony of a writer, like Stobæus, who, as a mere selector of the beauties of other writers, occasionally, in the exercise of his office, adds, curtails, or alters, for perspicuity sake, is surely very slender. However, I cannot but think that in τὸν τοῦ we have a mixture of two different readings, of which, I doubt not, τὸν is the genuine one, and τοῦ merely one proceeding from certain critics who imagined that the participle required the article,—which it does not: nay, it is better without it, the sense being, 'one who speaks well.'

By the next words, κριταὶ δὲ ὄντες —πλείω, it is intimated what statesmen should be, and what the plain common-sense persons, whom he is eulogizing, usually are,—namely, not rhetorical or oratorical prize-fighters, but impartial judges, who meet any question that comes under public consideration fairly and dispassionately, without any prejudice or self-interested bias, either for or against. Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, ex æquo; as infra ch. 42, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου λέγειν. By ἀγωνισταὶ are denoted, in a metaphorical sense, 'persons contending for the prize in oratory,' as in some measure did the ῥήτορες. Of this use of the word (which is rare) I have noted examples in Plutarch, Cat. 1, ὁ ἀγωνιστὴς πρόθυμος καὶ ῥήτωρ ἱκανός. Æschin. c. Ctesiph. τοὺς θεατὰς καὶ τοὺς χορηγοὺς καὶ τοὺς ἀγωνιστὰς ἐνοχλεῖσθαι. Lucian, iii. 22, ἀγωνιστὴς πάνδεινος ἐν τοῖς λόγοις. In a passage of Plato, p. 269, D, there is a similar antithesis in οὐ φάσκοντες ἀγωνιστὰ ('not mere rhetorical prize-fighters') and ἀλλὰ φιλόσοφοι εἶναι. Of ὀρθοῦνται the sense is, 'they judge rightly,' or 'take a right course of action,' as at v. 9, πλεῖστ' ἂν ὀρθοῖτο. The more usual signification of the term is, 'to be successful,' 'to be in prosperity,' as supra ii. 60, infra v. 42, and vi. 9. Herodot. i. 208. In either case the metaphor seems one taken from a person who goes well on his feet, does not stagger or stumble. This is plain from another passage, iv. 18, καὶ ἐλάχιστ' ἂν οἱ τοιοῦτοι πταίοντες διὰ τὸ μὴ τῷ ὀρθουμένῳ αὐτοῦ πιστεύοντες ἐπαίρεσθαι. By the same metaphor, πταίειν signifies both 'to fall into misfortune,' and 'to act wrongly.'

5. Here δεινότητι is, as the Schol. says, for ῥητορικῇ δυνάμει, 'rhetorical vehemence.' The words ξυνέσεως ἀγῶνι are explanatory of the foregoing, and serve to carry forward the agonistic metaphor; the sense being, 'a rivalry or prize-fighting in talent.' Of παρὰ δόξαν the meaning is certainly not, as Kistemacher and Goeller explain, 'adversus quam ipse populus scivit,' (for that were a sense little to the purpose, and, as Arnold says, would require παρὰ τὸ δόξαν,) but 'aliter quam sentimus,' 'beyond what we think.' And Arnold aptly compares the similar words of Diodotus, ch. 42, παρὰ γνώμην τι καὶ πρὸς χάριν λέγοι.

αινεῖν. XXXVIII. Ἐγὼ μὲν οὖν ὁ αὐτός εἰμι τῇ γνώμῃ, καὶ θαυμάζω μὲν τῶν προθέντων αὖθις περὶ Μυτιληναίων λέγειν, καὶ χρόνου διατριβὴν ἐμποιησάντων, ὅ ἐστι πρὸς τῶν ἠδικηκότων μᾶλλον· (ὁ γὰρ παθὼν τῷ δράσαντι ἀμβλυτέρᾳ τῇ ὀργῇ ἐπεξέρχεται· ἀμύ-

Ch. XXXVIII. 1. ἐγὼ μὲν οὖν ὁ αὐτός εἰμι τῇ γνώμῃ] Here the ἐγὼ is emphatic; q. d. 'I, for my part, am the same; however you may change.' Though the apodosis to μέν is here only implied, not expressed, as at ii. 61, 2, ἐγὼ μὲν ὁ αὐτός εἰμι, ὑμεῖς δὲ μεταβάλλετε, where γνώμῃ is to be supplied. The complete phrase occurs in Soph. Œd. T. 557, καὶ νῦν ἔθ' αὐτός εἰμι τῷ βουλεύματι. See also Eurip. Phœn. 935, and Soph. Phil. 521. Hence it is strange that in Lysias, p. 188, 7, the editors should have so stumbled at the words φησὶ δὲ καὶ ταῦτα, καὶ αὐτὸς γενόμενος, as to have had recourse to various emendations, all unnecessary; since if we simply, for αὐτὸς, write ἀὐτὸς, all will be plain; the sense being, 'he says all this, though still the same in mind,' or, 'nevertheless in his right mind.' And so in Eurip. Herc. Fur. 911, we have, ὁ δ' οὐκέθ' αὐτὸς ἦν.

The οὖν here is strongly confirmative, signifying assuredly: a force, this, which it derives from its original use, which is that of drawing an inference; for, as says Hoogev., 'confirmantur fortius quæ ex argumentis colliguntur.' Accordingly here the οὖν might best be rendered, 'such being the case;' 'seeing the manifold evils of change in a state like ours, holding empire as a sort of tyranny, I am still of the same mind as before, and my aim is to uphold things as they are.' The idiom recurs at ch. 40, 3, ἐγὼ μὲν δύο καὶ τότε πρῶτον καὶ νῦν διαμάχομαι. On this sentiment the speaker then engrafts another, containing a direct attack on those orators who maintained the contrary opinion, by imputing to them either folly or want of integrity. 'Being of the very same opinion as before, he cannot conceive, nay, he wonders, how any could come to the opposite conclusion, without being either seduced by the desire of displaying a perverse ingenuity, or, as swayed by mercenary motives, bribed to make the worse appear the better side.'

Of this use of θαυμάζω with a genitive, to signify 'I wonder at,' examples occur in the best writers, as Herodot., Xen., Soph., Plato, &c. On this forensic term, προθέντων, see note supra ch. 36, 5. No where else have I noted it thus followed by λέγειν; though it is found occasionally followed by λόγον, as in Eurip. Antiop. frag. 41. The proper phrase, however, is πρ. γνώμην or γνώμας: and so at vi. 14, we have, γνώμας προὐτίθει αὖθις Ἀθηναίοις. But our author has here preferred the verb, as did Dionys. Hal. in his Ant. 370, 1, προὔθεσαν σκοπεῖν.

By the words following, καὶ χρόνου διατριβὴν ἐμποιησάντων, are intimated the pernicious consequences of this again agitating of a question which had been set at rest by the decree,—namely, that 'the delay thus interposed would be in favour of the injuring [rather than the injured party].' For there is an emphasis on the word ἠδικηκότων, in which is implied the opposite part of the comparison, ἢ τῶν ἠδικημένων. With the phrase χρόνου διατριβὴν ἐμποιησάντων, compare in Dio Cass. 102, 84, χρόνον τινὰ ἐμποιῆσαι αὐτῷ: and 160, 26, τριβὴν (scil. χρόνον) τῇ δίκῃ ἐμποιεῖν. Arrian, E. A. i. 12, 19, τριβὰς ἐμπ. τῷ πολέμῳ. Aristid. t. ii. 5, χρόνου τριβὴν ἐμπ. Pol. xxii. 10, 6. In these and such like passages, ἐμπ. should not be rendered creare, 'to occasion,' but injicere, as in Livy, xxxv. 25, cunctationem injicere. On the sense of πρὸς here, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 316. In the interposed words, ὁ γὰρ παθὼν — ἀναλαμβάνει, is contained the ground of the advantage gained by the injurers; the sense being, 'for he who has suffered injury pursues it on the doer [of the wrong] with a blunter, or fainter, resentment,' namely, διατριβῆς μεταξὺ γενομένης, 'by the intervention of delay.' On this sense of ἀμβλὺς see note at ii. 40, 65, and 86, and compare Hdian. vi. 5, 19, and Æschyl. Theb. 712. Ἐπεξέρχεσθαι here bears the sense ulcisci, as at v. 89. Dio Cass. 456, 7, et al. Ἐπεξιέναι is more frequent in this sense, (especially in Plato and Dio Cass.) though either term is most frequently used with a dative of thing, (denoting the offence or crime,) rarely with one of person; yet such is found in Herodot. viii. 144, μιν ἐπέξιμεν ἀμυνόμενοι, where ἀμ. is added by way of explanation. This force of the term to signify 'avenge oneself upon any one,' is founded on the forensic one, in jus rapere, 'to prosecute,' persequi aliquem judicio: and so in Plut. p. 6, we have, φόνου ἐπεξιὼν νασθαι δὲ τῷ παθεῖν ὅτι ἐγγυτάτω κείμενον, ἀντίπαλον ὄν, μάλιστα τὴν τιμωρίαν ἀναλαμβάνει·) θαυμάζω δὲ καὶ ὅστις ἔσται ὁ ἀντερῶν, καὶ ἀξιώσων ἀποφαίνειν, τὰς μὲν Μυτιληναίων ἀδικίας ἡμῖν ὠφελίμους οὔσας, τὰς δ' ἡμετέρας ξυμφορὰς τοῖς ξυμμάχοις βλάβας καθισταμένας. 2. καὶ δῆλον ὅτι ἢ τῷ λέγειν πιστεύσας τὸ πάνυ

τῷ πατρί. In either case the dative is always used, and not the accus.; for that would be reserved for the crime, if expressed. So in Hos. i. 4, we have, 'I will avenge the blood of Jezreel (meaning the crime of that murder) upon the house of Jehu,' ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον Ἰ. Sept., more properly, τῷ οἴκῳ Ἰ. Hence in Jos. Ant. xiv. 12, 5, we have, κατὰ τὴν τοῦ πράγματος ἀξίαν μελήσει μοι ὑπεξελθεῖν τὸν οὐχ ὑπακούσαντα, where, though the MSS. present no variation, the true reading is doubtless ἐπεξ. τῷ οὐχ ὑπακούσαντι. The same mistake is found in a passage of Julian, Cæs. fin. 76, where read ἐπεξ., as just after. It is true that ἐπεξέρχ. occurs followed by an accus. in Antipho, p. 623, yet there the sense intended is, to prosecute any one at law: and the accus. of person in writers mediæ Græcitatis is sometimes found, as in Demosth. 501, 14. Again, though the accus. be found in Jos. Bell. ii. 12, 5, yet there the sense is not to punish, but, as the context shows, to prosecute.

The next words, ἀμύνασθαι δὲ τῷ παθεῖν—ἀναλαμβάνει, are meant to intimate that by such postponement of punishment even justice suffers: and in order to give the greater effect to what is said, it is couched in the form of an apophthegm. Render: 'the vengeance which follows closest on the injury, being of equal match with it, takes the most ample vengeance.' Here ἀμύνασθαι stands for τὸ ἀμύνασθαι; on which use of the inf. used as the subject of a sentence, see note on ii. 87, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 542. By ἀντίπαλον it is meant to be shown why this takes more ample vengeance, inasmuch as it is of equal match, so as to be of equivalent force. Ἀναλαμβάνειν is used in a very rare sense, but one by which it answers to the Latin repetere, or sumere supplicium ab aliquo; not resumere; the ἀνα here, as the re in the Latin repetere, alluding to the punishment as being a proper return made to the sufferer for the offence.

καὶ ἀξιώσων ἀποφαίνειν—καθισταμένας] Here there is something not a little obscure and far-fetched: so much so, indeed, that certain editors have supposed a corruption to exist in the present text, proposing either, for ξυμφορὰς, to read ξυμφόρως, or, from two MSS. and Valla, after ξυμφορὰς to insert οὐ. Yet, according to either of these emendations, a sense would arise not at all better than that yielded by the textual reading; and both are objectionable on other grounds. Accordingly Bekk. and Goell. have properly retained the common reading, of which the full sense may be thus expressed: 'Much, too, do I marvel that any one should be found who will gainsay [what has been averred], and will take upon him to show, on the one hand, that the so-called injuries done to us by the Mitylenæans are rather beneficial to us, while, on the other, our sufferings are injurious to the allies.' The gist of the argument is well conveyed in the words of Goeller, who paraphrases, 'Si injuriæ a Mytilenæis illatæ Atheniensibus damnosæ sunt, sequitur, mala ex illis injuriis nata sociis, qui hostes facti sunt, utilia fore. Nam ex mala re Atheniensium suam bonam quærunt.' 'The speaker (as Arnold observes) here insinuates that no man can plead for the Mytilenæans without maintaining one of these two paradoxes; either that their revolt was a service rendered to Athens, or else that the example was not to be dreaded, since the allies were linked to Athens by the bonds of a common interest, and would never think of revolting for their own sakes: whereas in truth the interests of Athens and her allies, instead of being identical, were diametrically opposite; and the loss of Athens was her subjects' gain.' In ἀποφαίνειν—οὔσας there is a reductio ad absurdum, or a pushing of an argument as far as it will go, so that it shall issue in a paradox, or absurdity. So Shakspeare says, 'You undergo (meaning, undertake) too strait a paradox, Striving to make an ugly deed look fair.'

2. We have here a continuation of the argumentum ex absurdo, by which what the opposite party maintains is shown to not merely involve a paradox or absurdity, but a point-blank falsehood, as it were affirming that to be white which is black. The full sense intended appears to be as follows: 'And plain it is, that it must be from confidence in his rhetoric that any orator should strive to counter-show, that what was positively a decree, has never been determined on at all.' And so Portus, Bredow, Haack, Kistemacher, Dukas, and Goeller explain; while Heilm. and Arnold object, that this sense would require, not δοκοῦν, but δόξαν. And they would understand τὸ δοκοῦν as used in the philosophical sense, found in Xen. Mem. iv. 6, τὰ δοκοῦντα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, notiones et placita. But, not to say that such a philosophical sense were unsuitable to the popular phraseology of a demagogue,—and least of all to a person of Cleon's turn of mind,—there would thus arise a sense not a little forced and far-fetched, and far from agreeable to the context; while the other is, as Kistemacher has shown, perfectly suited thereto. As to the awkwardness complained of, in the present tense at δοκοῦν, it is merely imaginary; since δοκοῦν may be the participle imperf., and the sense intended may be, quod placebat vobis, 'what seemed good to you,' namely, with allusion to the ἔδοξε δήμῳ, with which any decree of the people commenced. Thus Cleon, by so expressing himself, at once courted the people (as we find, from the Knights of Aristophanes, he was accustomed to do,) by attributing to them the sic placet or lubet, and thereby intimated that the thing was done (or decreed) and could not be undone. Now all this δόξαν would not have denoted; and therefore it was not employed by our author.

Poppo remarks, that this passage abounds in agonistical terms: which is true, if we include in the passage the two next sections. Probably the use here of the term ἀγωνίσαιτο (employed as in a passage of St. Luke, xiii. 24, ἀγωνίζεσθε εἰσελθεῖν), is introduced by association of ideas with the other agonistic images, whereby he was led to regard the contest on the βῆμα as an ἀγώνισμα, the orators as ἀγωνισταὶ, and the auditors as ἀγωνοθετοῦντες.

Of τὸ εὐπρεπὲς τοῦ λόγου ἐκπονήσας the meaning is, 'having worked out, elaborated, what is plausible in words;' where the term ἐκπ. has allusion to the extreme labour which was bestowed on the orations pronounced to the people; and παράγειν here, as at i. 91. ii. 64, and occasionally in Demosthenes, as also in Plut. ix. 102, bears the sense to deceive,—literally, to mislead, lead into error.

3. ἡ δὲ πόλις—ἀναφέρει] Here are intimated the evil consequences of such a system,—namely, that the state gives the ἆθλα, or rewards of such ἀγῶνες, to others, but herself carries off (suscipit) the dangers. For so the term ἀναφ. is explained by the Scholiast, Bauer, and Haack; and very properly; since, as I have shown, while ἀναφέρειν is used, in a general way, of carrying off any thing that is to be borne, as dangers, toils, &c.; here, however, it has allusion to the carrying off of any thing given as a prize (ἆθλον), especially when two persons share in the benefit, and one ἀναφέρει, carries off, his part, the other, his.

4. Having shown the evil of the above practice, the speaker now points out who is to blame for it. 'You yourselves,' he means to say, 'occasion this state of things. Your passion for novelty, and admiration of oratorical display, makes them aim rather to please your inclinations, than inform your judgment.' Which latter circumstance is adverted to in the word ἀγωνοθετοῦντες, which means, 'by making these matches of oratory, in which you act as ἀγωνοθεταὶ, or those who set the prizes, and decided to whom they should be given.' Ἀγωνοθετέω is a term scarcely noticed by lexicographers; though it occurs several times in Dio Cass., and sometimes in Josephus, Lucian, Plutarch, and Pausanias.

In οἵτινες εἰώθατε θεαταὶ—ἔργων we have a refined, but somewhat far-fetched, mode of expression, which may be understood to mean, in other words, 'What you hear from your orators, as they endeavour to persuade you, so does the thing seem to you to be; for talking is to you for deed (θεαταὶ τῶν λόγων); while what is done you imagine to be so done as ye suffer yourselves to be persuaded.' By this the speaker may intend to express, not simply, what the Scholiast and Arnold suppose, 'You go to the public assembly, as to the theatre, merely as θεαταὶ, for your amusement, and not as κριταὶ, as judges weighing carefully what is brought under your consideration,' (as it is said in Aristot. Rhet. i. 3, 3, ἀνάγκη δὲ τὸν ἀκροατὴν ἢ θεωρὸν, for θεατὴν ἢ κριτὴν,) but rather, as the Schol. Aug. remarks, that 'every thing with them is distorted from its natural state;' q. d. 'You so hear speeches, and repose faith in the speakers, as though you received your faith by the sight; and you so discredit the actions that fall under your view, as though you only heard of them by report.' If this be thought, as it may, a sense not sufficiently established, we may, as far as regards ἀκροαταὶ τῶν ἔργων, suppose that, something being sacrificed to the antithesis, the import of the words is, that instead of obtaining a personal knowledge of things, and ascertaining facts for themselves, they take up solely with the accounts of them which they heard from their orators. Yet, as far as regards the words θεαταὶ τῶν λόγων, the view taken by the Schol. Aug. is confirmed by the observation of Ammon., Phavor., and other ancient grammarians, that θεατὴς is a term used properly περὶ ἀγῶνος. Adopting, then, the above view,—which, upon the whole, is preferable,—we may suppose the words to import, 'You ought to be θεαταὶ τῶν ἔργων and ἀκροαταὶ τῶν λόγων; but you are the reverse,—and words are regarded as deeds.' Whenever θεαταὶ is used of words, it has a mixed sense, including with the idea of spectator that of inspector and judge of any one's merits. So Lucian, de Domo, 18, vol. iii. 200, οἱ παρόντες καὶ πρὸς τὴν ἀκρόασιν παρειλημμένοι, ἐπειδὰν εἰς τοιοῦτον οἶκον παρέλθωσιν, ἀντὶ ἀκροατῶν θεαταὶ καθίστανται. And so Arrian, E. A. iv. 29, 4, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐφειστήκει θεατὴς, καὶ ἐπαινέτης καὶ κολαστής. Max. Tyr. Diss. xxxi. 4, θεατὴς ὑγιής (meaning integer, 'unprejudiced'). Longin. p. 250 (Pearce), ὑγιὴς κριτὴς, and Plato, 173, C, οὔτε δικαστὴς οὔτε θεατής.

The words following, τὰ μὲν μέλλοντα —ἐπιτιμησάντων, are meant to be explanatory and illustrative of the foregoing. The construction and sense are well traced by Goeller and Arnold, thus: οὐ τὸ δρασθὲν ὄψει λαβόντες, ὃ πιστότερον ἦν, ἢ τὸ ἀκουσθὲν λαβεῖν ἀπὸ τῶν λόγῳ καλῶς ἐπιτιμησάντων, 'Not taking the actual fact as more credible from having yourselves seen it; but considering what you hear to be more credible, when you learn it from those who in words have found fault cleverly.'

καὶ μετὰ καινότητος, &c.] Cleon now glances at other dispositions of the Athenians, which made them more liable to suffer from this state of things,—namely, a fondness for novelty, and a disinclination for any thing of approved usefulness. 'They are,' he says, 'the best to be deceived with novelty of words;' where by best understand best for the deceiver, fittest for his purpose; the expression being here equiv. to ἐπιτήδειοι, as in Herodot. iii. 80, διαβολὰς δὲ ἄριστος ἐνδέκεσθαι, and Soph. Œd. T. 440. Dio Cass. 425, 22, ῥᾷστον ἀπατηθῆναι λόγοις, in which last passage the writer, who seems there to have had in view the one now before us, by employing the word ῥᾷστον, seems here to have read, for ἄριστοι, ῥᾷστοι. And indeed I have observed the two words to be sometimes confounded. Thus in Soph. Eryphyl. frag. iii. ὅπου δὲ μὴ τὰ ῥᾷστ' ἐλευθέρως λέγειν Ἔξεστι, νικᾷ δ' ἐν πόλει τὰ χείρονα, &c. for ῥᾷστ', ought undoubtedly to be read τἄριστ', and in Dio Cass. 234, 93, πεδιὰς (γὴ) ῥᾴστη τε ἵππους τρέφειν ἐστὶ, καὶ ἐπιτηδειοτάτη καθιππεύεσθαι, read, for ῥᾴστη, ἀρίστη. That Dio Cass. did not himself write ἀρίστη, is probable from his elsewhere using the phrase ῥᾷστ. ἀπατᾶσθαι, as 307, 3. This use of ἄριστος, for ἐπιτηδειότατος, is, indeed, rare: but, besides the above examples, it is found (at least in the positive, ἀγαθὸς) in Polyb. vi. 25, 11. Diod. Sic. vi. 345, 7. Aristoph. Vesp. 904. Philostr. Vit. Soph. ii. 30. But, to pass from words to things,—not a little illustrative of the subject here touched on is a passage of Aristoph. Eq. 1078, Mitch. ὦ Δῆμε,—εὐπαράγωγος εἶ, θωπευόμενός τε χαίρεις κἀξαπατώμενος, Πρὸς τόν τε λέγοντ' ἀεὶ Κέχηνας· ὁ νοῦς δέ σου Παρὼν ἀποδημεῖ, mens præsens abest; meaning, that 'while at home it is abroad,' is carried away from present objects to distant and imaginary scenes by the orator.

In the union of μετὰ and ξυνέπεσθαι there may seem to be something pleonastic: but, in effect, there is that which ἐπεσθαι ἐθέλειν· δοῦλοι ὄντες τῶν ἀεὶ ἀτόπων, ὑπερόπται δὲ τῶν εἰωθότων· 5. καὶ μάλιστα μὲν αὐτὸς εἰπεῖν ἕκαστος βουλόμενος δύνασθαι, εἰ δὲ μή, ἀνταγωνιζόμενοι τοῖς τοιαῦτα λέγουσι μὴ ὕστεροι ἀκολουθῆσαι δοκεῖν τῇ γνώμῃ, ὀξέως δέ τι λέγοντος προεπαινέσαι· καὶ προαισθέσθαι τε πρόθυμοι εἶναι τὰ λεγόμενα, καὶ προνοῆσαι βραδεῖς τὰ ἐξ αὐτῶν ἀποβησόμενα· ζητοῦντές τε ἄλλο τι, ὡς εἰπεῖν, ἢ ἐν οἷς ζῶμεν, φρονοῦντες δὲ οὐδὲ περὶ τῶν παρrather serves to intensity of sense. And though ξυνέπεσθαι is not, I believe, any where else to be found, yet of ἕπεσθαι σύν τινι an example occurs in Xenophon. And so we say, 'to fall in with' any counsel, and to follow up, i. e. attend to, any suggestion.

δοῦλοι ὄντες τῶν ἀεὶ ἀτόπων—εἰωθότων] These words are meant to develop the sense concealed in δεδοκιμασμένου; and may be rendered, 'being slaves to (i. e. enslaved, slavishly devoted to) each successive novelty or paradox, but despisers of the customary or wonted, what is tested by use and experience.' Ἀτόπων is for παραδόξων, lit. 'the extraordinary.' Imitated from this elegance of expression in δοῦλοι τῶν ἀεὶ ἀτόπων, are the similar words of Greg. Naz. i. p. 53, b. δοῦλοι ὄντες τῶν ἀεὶ παρόντων. Highly illustrative of the thing itself is a passage of Aristoph. Eccl. 581—8, Μισοῦσι γὰρ, ἢν τὰ παλαιὰ πολλάκις θεῶνται.—Εἰ καινοτομεῖν ἐθελήσουσιν, καὶ μὴ τοῖς ἤθεσι λίαν Τοῖς ἀρχαίοις ἐνδιατρίβειν.—τοῦτο γὰρ ἡμῖν Δρᾶν ἀντ' ἄλλης ἀρχῆς ἐστιν, τῶν δ' ἀρχαίων ἀμελῆσαι.

5. καὶ μάλιστα μὲν αὐτὸς — ἀποβησόμενα] Of this obscurely expressed passage, the general sense appears to be as follows: 'The first wish of every man is to be himself a speaker; or, if that be impracticable, to at least secure the credit of quickness of parts; so that he may be supposed to have at least power of thought, if not readiness of expression, so as to seem not behind-hand [with the speaker] in following up the thread of ratiocination; to be quick in comprehending and assenting to what is said, even before it is well uttered, though slow in foreseeing the consequences that will result therefrom.' Here by ἀνταγ. is imported, not their contradicting the orator, but their striving with him, viz. to appear not inferior in quickness of conception and readiness in seizing the gist of a question. The infin. μὴ ὕστεροι ἀκ. δοκεῖν serves to express the aim at which they are striving,—which is not to come, as it were, in the wake of them, catching wisdom at second-hand from them. Ἀκολουθῆσαι τῇ γνώμῃ signifies, 'to follow up the sentiment brought forward, by comprehending its scope and bearings.' So in Plato, p. 319, a. we have, ἕπομαι τῷ λόγῳ, and 192.

Here, however, the chief difficulty rests on the words ὀξέως δέ τι λέγοντος προεπαινέσαι, where the question is, with what ought ὀξέως to be construed? Poppo, Goeller, and Arnold say, with λέγοντος, explaining the term to mean acutely, cleverly. But that is a sense of the word far from established: and as ὀξέως appears here to correspond to ὕστεροι just before, it may rather be supposed to have here its usual sense, 'rapidly,' præpropere. Nor is there any such redundancy in the προ as Poppo imagines, who here does not sufficiently allow for the extreme brevity of the expression. As to the other objection which he urges, that thus we should require λέγοντος (τινός) τι, it is futile; for why may there not be supposed an ellipsis of τινός? So Dobree must have thought, when he conjectured the true reading to be δ' ἔτι λέγοντος, which, Arnold thinks, removes the difficulty satisfactorily. But so far from effecting this purpose, it only exchanges one difficulty for another scarcely less formidable; for surely most harsh were it to suppose one of two genitives absolute left to be understood. The sense cannot be otherwise than what I have laid down.

In προεπαινέσαι the αἰνέσαι signifies comprobare, 'to assent to,' 'to approve:' and λέγοντος is governed of the προ in composition. Compare Æschyl. Ag. 467, Γυναικὸς αἰχμᾷ πρέπει, πρὸ τοῦ φανέντος χάριν ξυναινέσαι, where the προ might have been, as here, united with the verb. At πρόθυμοι εἶναι repeat βουλόμενοι from the preceding, which arises out of ἀνταγωνιζόμενοι.

The next words of the sentence convey another brief, but searching, remark, importing that 'the aims of the persons in question are of quite another nature to what is required by the circumstances in which they are placed, live, and act.' Render, 'seeking, so to say, something ὄντων ἱκανῶς· ἁπλῶς τε ἀκοῆς ἡδονῇ ἡσσώμενοι, καὶ σοφιστῶν θεαταῖς ἐοικότες καθημένοις μᾶλλον, ἢ περὶ πόλεως βουλευομένοις. XXXIX. Ὧν ἐγὼ πειρώμενος ἀποτρέπειν ὑμᾶς, ἀποφαίνω Μυτιληναίους μάλιστα δή, μίαν πόλιν, ἠδικηκότας ὑμᾶς. 2. ἐγὼ γὰρ, οἵτινες μὲν μὴ δυνατοὶ φέρειν τὴν ὑμετέραν ἀρχὴν, ἢ οἵτινες ὑπὸ τῶν πολεμίων ἀναγκασθέντες ἀπέστησαν, ξυγγνώμην ἔχω· νῆσον δὲ οἵτινες ἔχοντες μετὰ τειχῶν καὶ κατὰ θάλασσαν μόνον φοβούμενοι τοὺς ἡμετέρους πολεμίους,—ἐν ᾧ καὶ αὐτοὶ τριήρων παρασκευῇ οὐκ ἄφρακτοι ἦσαν πρὸς αὐτούς,—αὐτόνομοί τε οἰκοῦντες, καὶ τιμώμενοι ἐς τὰ πρῶτα ὑφ' ἡμῶν, τοιαῦτα εἰργάσαντο,—τί ἄλλο οὗτοι ἢ ἐπεβούλευσάν τε, καὶ ἐπανέστησαν μᾶλλον ἢ ἀπέστησαν,—(ἀπόστασις μέν γε τῶν βιαιόν τι πασχόντων ἐστὶν,)—ἐζήτησάν τε quite different from that position in which we live [and act], but having no sufficient perception respecting things present (i. e. what is called for by the actual state of things present),' much less, as it is implied, any forecast as to things future, τῶν ἀποβησομένων. So the Schol. well explains it by καινότερα ζητοῦντες παρὰ τὰ εἰωθότα καὶ ἐν οἷς πολιτευόμεθα. The δὲ is continuative, and, like autem or porro in Latin, is nearly equivalent to imo, 'nay.' By 'the things present in which they live and act,' understand the political system of Athens considered ὡς τυραννίδα (supra ch. 37). For the use here of the plural οἷς, instead of, what we should expect, the singular ᾧ, Poppo refers to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 37, obs. 3. Yet the principle adverted to there will clear up nothing here, where the plural is used because the thing in question, while singular in sense,—namely, 'the Athenian form of government,'—is still often designated by the plural πράγματα, to which the relative has to be accommodated in number. Φρον. here answers to sapere in Latin, and savoir in French; meaning, that practical knowledge which regards action. In the next clause we have summed up in brief the evil consequences of this state of things: where ἁπλῶς, as at ch. 45, 7, stands for καθολικῶς. Render, 'In short, overcome by the gratification of hearing, and rather like unto those who sit as spectators of sophists, than those who are consulting for the good of the state:' by σοφ. being meant, the teachers of rhetoric at Athens, who used to give public lectures on their art; and their auditors, who sat around on benches, were called θεαταί.

CH. XXXIX. 1. ὧν] scil. ἐπιτηδευμάτων, 'course of habitual action.' Μίαν πόλιν, 'for one city;' an idiom of which frequent examples occur in Herodotus, Æschylus, Sophocles, and Xenophon. The force of the εἰς, however, is, I apprehend, not intensive, but limitative.

2. ἐγὼ γὰρ] 'for as to my part, I,' 'I, for my part.'

νῆσον δὲ οἵτινες, &c.] Poppo well observes, that νῆσον is thus put before οἵτινες gravitatis causâ: though in Latin we should say, 'qui vero insulam tenentes cum muris.' We may, indeed, suppose that what lay most at heart,—their being islanders, and therefore out of the power of the enemy,—would naturally suggest itself, and come out first: and therefore in its being put first, we have what may truly be called a stroke of nature.

In ἐς τὰ πρῶτα, 'in the highest degree,' there is an adverbial phrase for adverb, as in Dio Cass. lxiv.; the full meaning being, that 'they had been of all the allies distinguished with the most peculiar honours and privileges.' At τοιαῦτα εἰργάσαντο, 'have worked us such mischief,' there is a breaking off of the construction — the natural effect of deep feeling. The next words, τί ἄλλο οὗτοι—ἀπέστησαν; may be rendered, 'what else did they do but plot against us, and rise up against, rather than revolt from us, (for revolt is rather the case of those who suffer some kind of force,) and, ranged on the side of our bitterest foes, seek to work our ruin?' a most forcible mode of expression, (of which I have noted various imitations in Dio Cass. and Dionys. Hal.) importing that Mitylene had been guilty not simply of revolt, but deliberate and malicious conspiracy. In the parenthetical remark, ἀπόστασις μὲν—ἐστὶν, we have (as in a few others occurring in our author) what may be said to be founded on too subtile a distinction. With respect to the construction there, at μετὰ τῶν πολεμιωτάτων ἡμᾶς στάντες διαφθεῖραι; καίτοι δεινότερόν ἐστιν ἢ εἰ καθ' αὑτοὺς, δύναμιν κτώμενοι, ἀντεπολέμησαν. 3. παράδειγμα δὲ αὐτοῖς οὔτε αἱ τῶν πέλας ξυμφοραὶ ἐγένοντο, ὅσοι ἀποστάντες ἤδη ἡμῶν ἐχειρώθησαν, οὔτε ἡ παροῦσα εὐδαιμονία παρέσχεν ὄκνον μὴ ἐλθεῖν ἐς τὰ δεινά· γενόμενοι δὲ πρὸς τὸ μέλλον θρασεῖς, καὶ ἐλπίσαντες μακρότερα μὲν τῆς δυνάμεως, ἐλάσσω δὲ τῆς βουλήσεως, πόλεμον ἤραντο, ἰσχὺν ἀξιώσαντες τοῦ δικαίου προθεῖναι· ἐν ᾧ γὰρ ᾠήθησαν περιέσεσθαι, ἐπέθεντο ἡμῖν οὐκ ἀδικούμενοι. 4. εἴωθε δὲ, τῶν πόλεων αἷς ἂν μάλιστα καὶ δι' ἐλαχίστου ἀπροσδόκητος εὐπραξία ἔλθῃ, ἐς ὕβριν τρέπειν· τὰ δὲ πολλὰ κατὰ λόγον τῶν βιαίων τι πασχόντων ἐστὶν, there is an ellipsis of πρᾶγμα, 'is the action of.' See other examples of the idiom in Matth. Gr. § 372, 6. With respect to the phrase, just after, μετὰ τῶν πολεμιωτάτων στάντες, of this I have in Translation adduced several examples from Aristoph., Eurip., and Dionys. Hal. Of καθ' αὑτοὺς the sense is, 'of themselves,' namely, without joining our worst woes.

3. Cleon now shows that, as nothing could turn them from this course,—neither warnings from the example of others' ruin, nor the fear of losing their present property therefrom,—they deserve no pity. Of τῶν πέλας the sense is simply aliorum; on which idiom see note supra i. 32. In παρέσχεν ὄκνον μὴ ἐλθεῖν ἐς τὰ δ. the μὴ has the appearance of being pleonastic; though it is, in effect, not so; the full sense being, 'occasioned a dread, so as not to come into danger;' where ὥστε is to be supplied.

The style now rises from strong censure to vehement and bitter invective, (as at iii. 66, med.) especially visible in the words ἐλπίσαντες—βουλήσεως, 'hoping for, or expecting, things far beyond their power, but beneath their will;' intimating that their wishes would work mischief far worse than even their plans reached to. In πόλεμον ἤραντο we have a most forcible expression, denoting not merely the being at hostilities with, but engaging in a regular war with; what is signified by bellum movere, as at i. 80. Herodot. vii. 132. In ἰσχὺν ἀξιώσαντες τοῦ δικαίου προθεῖναι, there seems an allusion to some such adage as our common one, 'to set might above right.' Similar is the use of προτιθέναι at iii. 84, τοῦ τε ὁσίου τὸ τιμωρεῖσθαι προὐτίθεσαν.

4. Cleon now accounts for their revolt on another principle besides that of bitter hostility to Athens,—namely, from the corrupting nature of prosperity, which had intoxicated them, and urged them into the maddest schemes of ambition; and hence he argues that a less favoured condition would have been safer for them, as well as better for the Athenians. This, however, the speaker does not affirm directly, but leaves it to be implied from a pithy gnome, that 'it is usual for states to which any good fortune comes on the sudden and unexpectedly, to run into arrogance;' which may remind one of a common proverb in our language.

In εἴωθε δὲ--ἔλθῃ there is a somewhat harsh construction, which, however, we may, with Goeller, regard as standing for εἴωθε δὲ ἡ εὐπραξία ἐκείνας τὰς πόλεις ἐς ὕβριν τρέπειν, αἷς ἂν μάλιστα ἀπροσδόκητος ἔλθῃ. Καὶ δι' ἐλαχίστου may best be taken, as it is by Poppo, to constitute an additional circumstance interposed, thus: 'quibus maximè, et quidem minimè insperata, et quidem nuperrimè.' Similarly sup. ii. 42, fin. we have, δι' ἐλαχίστου κοιροῦ—ἀπηλλάγησαν. This passage has been, as the commentators show, extensively imitated by the later writers. Yet the passages they adduce are, with one exception, (that of Philistus ap. Clem. Alex. Strom. vi. 2, εἰώθασι γὰρ μάλιστα, &c.) parallel only in sentiment, not in expression.

On the foregoing gnome, which regards states only, the speaker then engrafts two more, which respect individuals, of which the sense may be thus expressed: 'And that good fortune which befals men agreeably to a sober measure of calculation, is more to be relied on, than that which is beyond expectation (or, which could not be calculated on); and, so to speak, men more easily keep at bay adversity, than preserve prosperity.' Τὰ κατὰ λόγον, scil. ξυμβαίνοντα, 'what does not exceed the measure, or proportion, in which good is dealt out to man, but bears a due proportion to what might be expected;' the contrary to which is τὰ παρὰ δόξαν. This view of the sense (which has not occurred to the commentators) is placed beyond doubt by a passage, imitated from the present, in Dionys. Hal. Ant. iii. 42, init. (p. 530, ed. Reiske) φθονεῖν δὲ ταῖς εὐτυχίαις ἀναγκαζόμενοι μείζοσιν ἢ κατὰ λόγον γινομέναις, 'which happened beyond all the bounds of calculation.' The τὰ before πολλὰ does not belong to πολλὰ, but to εὐτυχοῦντα, and is to be repeated, per ellipsin, at παρὰ δόξαν, and πολλὰ must be construed with εὐτυχ.; the sense being, that 'many such εὐτυχίαι are ἀσφαλέστεραι,' &c.; tantamount to, 'but it often so happens,' &c. In the next words, κακοπραγίαν—διασώζονται, we have the foregoing sentiment carried out a little further: and Poppo refers for passages similar in sentiment, to his note on Xen. Cyr. vi. 5, 76. The reason for this may be found in the fact,—adverted to by Aristid. t. ii. p. 57,—ὡς ἄρα οὐ ῥᾴδιον εὖ πράττοντας εὖ φρονεῖν· ἀλλ' οἱ πολλοὶ χείρους ὑπὸ τῆς τύχης (good fortune) γίγνονται, meaning, that men are better able to bear adversity than prosperity. No stronger instance of this can be brought forward than the example of Mark Antony; of whom Plutarch says, (Vit. 17) φύσει παρὰ τὰς κακοπραγίας ἐγένετο βέλτιστος ἑαυτοῦ, καὶ, δυστυχῶν, ὁμοιότατος ἦν ἀγαθῷ.

5. Cleon now strenuously contends for the punishment in question, on the ground that 'it was richly merited by the pitch of insolence they had reached;—which would not have been the case, had they before enjoyed no other honours or privileges than the rest of the allies. Hence it was time now to make a change, now to punish their insolence and injustice.' A sentiment, this, strengthened by the interposed moral maxim, πέφυκε γὰρ—θαυμάζειν, with which compare a kindred one at iv. 61. Of καὶ ἄλλως the full sense is, 'in this as well as other cases;' meaning, that the maxim holds good generally. To the examples adduced in Steph. Thes. might be added two passages of Eurip. Alc. 345. Sisyph. frag. i. 12. With the expression τὸ θεραπεῦον ὑπερφρονεῖν, Poppo compares Agath. iii. 9, and refers to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 378, 2. In τὸ θεραπεῦον—τὸ ὑπεῖκον we have the use of neut. for masc., as often in the Attic writers, especially in gnomes, and where, through delicacy, any thing is said tacitè.

6. In the words καὶ μὴ we have (as Poppo long ago pointed out) the commencement of a 'nova pars disputationis;' for notwithstanding that Bekk. and Goell. retain the comma of the common text, the former section certainly ended with the position, that 'as the offence had been aggravated, so the punishment ought to be condign.' The speaker now anticipates the objection arising from the word κολασθήτωσαν; q. d. 'What, all? all have not been guilty.' To which the reply is, that 'there was no ground for a distinction;' all classes were alike guilty, either as active agents, or as passively acquiescing in the rebellion, and willing to share its risks and participate in its gains. Such impunity would only encourage other offenders. In short, to use the words of Bp. Thirlwall, p. 189, 'If such were allowed to hope for impunity, there would be no end to the labours, the dangers, and the losses of the commonwealth, which would be involved in a series of contests, in which victory would be unprofitable, defeat calamitous.' This use of προστίθ., as said of blame, is exceedingly rare: but we may compare a similar one of the Latin, attribuere or ascribere crimen. Similarly at iii. 82, we have, τὸ δὲ ἐμπλήκτως ὀξὺ ἀνδρὸς μοίρᾳ προσετέθη. In ἀπολύσητε there is a variation of the construction; though that will not defend the common reading, ὑμῖν, which Arnold has restored instead of ἡμῖν, which had been before edited by Bekker, Poppo, and Goeller; and very properly; the other yielding a sense harsh and jejune. As to what Arnold urges, 'the authority of most of the best MSS.,' this τοῖς ἀνθρώποις εὐτυχοῦντα ἀσφαλέστερα ἢ παρὰ δόξαν· καὶ κακοπραγίαν, ὡς εἰπεῖν, ῥᾷον ἀπωθοῦνται ἢ εὐδαιμονίαν διασώζονται. 5. χρῆν δὲ Μυτιληναίους καὶ πάλαι μηδὲν διαφέροντας τῶν ἄλλων ὑφ' ἡμῶν τετιμῆσθαι, καὶ οὐκ ἂν ἐς τόδε ἐξύβρισαν· (πέφυκε γὰρ καὶ ἄλλως ἄνθρωπος τὸ μὲν θεραπεῦον ὑπερφρονεῖν, τὸ δὲ μὴ ὑπεῖκον θαυμάζειν·) κολασθήτωσαν δὲ καὶ νῦν ἀξίως τῆς ἀδικίας. 6. καὶ μὴ τοῖς μὲν ὀλίγοις ἡ αἰτία προστεθῇ, τὸν δὲ δῆμον ἀπολύσητε· πάντες γὰρ ἡμῖν γε ὁμοίως ἐπέθεντο· οἷς γ' ἐξῆν, ὡς ἡμᾶς is one of those cases where even the best MSS. have little weight. And moreover, as Poppo justly observes, 'at that rate we should have expected ὑμᾶς just after.' And he adds, 'Pro quo quum ἡμᾶς scriptor dicere maluerit, eandem κοίνωσιν jam in ἡμῖν admissam, et tantum in ἀπολύσητε, ubi sine superbia loquentis probari non poterat, evitatam esse putes.' Οἷς has reference to δῆμον, which, as a noun of multitude, may have the relative in the plural. Of τραπόμενοις ὡς ἡμᾶς the sense is, by implication, 'abandoning their city, while going over to the Athenians.' 'They might now,' he says, 'have been in their homes.'

κίνδυνον ἡγησάμενοι βεβ.] 'thinking the hazard of joining the oligarchy more to be depended upon in its result.' Of βεβ. with κινδ. I know no other instance except at v. 113; and there probably not in the same sense.

7. τῶν τε ξυμμ.] 'and, as for the allies.' The speaker means to hold forth the results of the line of policy in question, in a two-fold point of view,—first, as it regarded the allies; secondly, as it respected themselves. Προσθήσετε, 'shall apportion,' 'inflict.' Βραχείᾳ προφάσει, 'on some slight pretext.' In μηδὲν παθεῖν ἀνήκ. we have an euphemism for death, or condemnation to slavery; as appears from Dionys. Hal. Ant. 170, 17, ἢ κατορθώσαντες πλεῖον ἕξειν, ἢ σφαλέντες ἐν μηδενὶ δεινῷ ἔσεσθαι. On the nature of the idiom in τίνα οἴεσθε, see Schneider on Xen. Cyr. i. 4, 25, καὶ οὐδένα ἔφασαν ὄντινα οὐ δακρύοντ' ἀποστρέφεσθαι, and also Matth. Gr. Gr. § 483.

8. ἀποκεκινδυνεύσεται — ψυχαί] 'both our money and our lives will be exposed to peril.' At στερήσεσθε — ἕξομεν there is a harsh change of person, but such is frequent in our author; on which see Pop. Proleg. i. 1, 275.

CH. XL. Now follows the inference from the foregoing,—namely, that 'the persons in question must not have any hope of pardon held out, by whatever arguments however plausible, backed by interest however strong, since the thing would be pernicious. Justice and expediency alike called for vengeance: a signal example of wholesome severity was wanting, to teach such of the allies as might be tempted to revolt, a memorable lesson, convincing them that no acts, whether of eloquence or corruption, would screen them from vengeance.' (Thirlwall.)

1. οὔκουν δεῖ προθεῖναι] The reading here is doubtful. For vulg. προσθεῖναι, which is retained by Poppo and Goeller, four good MSS. and Valla have προθεῖναι, which is edited by Bekker, whom I have here thought proper to follow, not because προσθ. might not be defended in the sense addere, (meaning to give or impart: so Tacitus has, 'strenuis vel ignavis spem metumque addere,') yet no evidence is adduced that προστιθ. ever had this sense, and since proponere spem, 'to hold out a hope,' is a more natural expression than 'to give, i. e. impart, a hope.' As to the authority of MSS. in so minute a difference, it is very small. Πιστὴν is equiv. to πισύνην, and therefore takes its construction and sense, namely, fretam; of which an example is adduced in Steph. Thes. from Plato de Legg. p. 824, νυκτερευτὴν δὲ κυσὶ καὶ πλέκταις πιστὸν μηδεὶς ἐάσῃ—θηρεῦσαι: and others I have noted elsewhere in the same writer; as also Æsch. Pers. 55, τοξουλκῷ λήματι πιστούς. See note on i. 35. By λόγῳ is meant oratory; in which same sense the verb occurs ch. 38, καὶ δῆλον ὅτι ἢ τῷ λέγειν πιστεύσας. The expression χρήμασιν ὠνητὴν has reference, as Goeller observes, to bribery, which is also hinted at in ch. 38. The words ὡς ξυγγνώμην—λήψονται are best rendered, by Poppo, 'veniam humanitùs peccandi accipient,' or, 'veniam peccandi ideo accipient, quia peccare humanum est,' 'shall receive pardon for sinning humanly,' i. e. falling into such sin as human nature is prone to. Poppo here aptly compares Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, 37, συγγνώμην τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ἁμαρτημάτων: and Dio Cass. p. 24, τοῖς ἁμαρτάνουσι συγγνώμην κατὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπινον.

ξύγγνωμον δ' ἐστὶ τὸ ἀκούσιον] 'now the involuntary is excusable.' So in Dionys. Hal. i. 58, cited by Poppo, we have, ἅπαν δὲ συγγνώμης ἄξιον τὸ ἀκούσιον. See more on iv. 98.

2. τότε πρῶτον καὶ νῦν διαμάχομαι] The Schol. very properly, at τότε πρῶτον, supplies διεμαχησάμην: though, in following him, Hobbes and others absurdly make Cleon contend that the decree should not be annulled at a time when it was not yet made. To remove which awkwardness, we must at διεμαχησάμην supply, not μὴ μεταγν. τὸ δεδογμ., but rather something suggested by the context, as μὴ ἐᾶν ξυγγνώμην λαβεῖν τοὺς Μυτιληναίους. The form here, καὶ τότε πρῶτον καὶ νῦν, may be compared with the frequent one, καὶ τότε καὶ νῦν: though here πρῶτον is added in the sense 'at first,' 'when the matter was first debated on.' Διαμάχεσθαι signifies properly, 'to fight through or out,' 'to decide a dispute;' also, metaph., 'to contend strenuously in argument for any position;' and it is followed both by πρὸς and an accus. of thing, (as in Dem. 217.) and a genit. with περί: also, by an infin. with τὸ, as in Eurip. Alc. 677, διαμάχομαι τὸ μὴ θανεῖν, and sometimes without the τὸ, as in Xen. Anab. v. 8, 10, διεμάχετο ἀσπίδα μὴ φέρειν: Plat. 153: which last is the construction here, where a τὸ is left to be understood, and the sense of διαμ. is contendendo affirmare, as often in Plutarch. As to the sense of μεταγνῶναι, it cannot be the general one of repenting; but must be the particular one of altering one's mind. Arnold takes it to mean unvoting what they had resolved on; though he would unite that of repenting; and thus μεταγνῶναι would be equiv. to μεταγνόντας λύειν. This Goeller approves of; though he would resolve the words into μὴ μεταγνῶναι καὶ γνῶναι μὴ δεδόχθαι. But either method causes a needless mystification. The truth is, the direct sense is, 'to change your mind as to what was before decided on or decreed;' which implies undecreeing or unvoting: though the other sense is the principal one, as appears from the construction; the accus. τὰ προδ. being not governed of the verb, but depending on a preposition understood, quod attinet ad. So, in a passage of Eurip. Med. we have, μετέγνων καὶ τὰ πρόσθ' εἰρημένα, 'I have changed my sentiment as to what I before said.' And in Eurip. Iph. Aul. 1425, κἂν μεταγνοίης τάδε, and Herodot. Hist. vii. 15, μετέγνων, ἔγνων δὲ ταῦτα.

The next words, μηδὲ τρισὶ — ἁμαρτάνειν, are meant to set in a strong point of view the inexpediency of the thing, as involving three dispositions of mind the most adverse to rule and authority—compassion [for offenders], a fondness for words or oratory, and mildness or clemency. And here there is no occasion, with Goeller and Arnold, to refine on the distinction of sense between οἶκτος and ἔλεος, and between both those and ἐπιείκεια. Though it be true, as Arnold says, that οἶκτος or ἔλεος is a feeling, ἐπιείκεια a habit, yet that only respects the proper or philosophical, not the popular use, by which ἐπιείκεια might denote kindliness. As, however, the term is used of rulers, there is no doubt that the meaning here is not gentleness, (as Arnold understands,) but that the term has the sense of the Latin clementia, clemency or humanity towards the erring, as often in Cicero; and that, indeed, almost always when the term is used of princes or rulers. So Vopiscus in Aurel. ch. 44, says, 'Clementia præcipua est principum virtus et dos prima. Hi enim maximè eam exercere possunt in subditos peccantes, leniùs in eos animadvertendo, et mitè imperium exercendo.' Hence we may see the force of the expression τῇ σῇ ἐπιεικείᾳ in Acts οὔτε χρήμασιν ὠνητὴν, ὡς ξυγγνώμην ἁμαρτεῖν ἀνθρωπίνως λήψονται· ἄκοντες μὲν γὰρ οὐκ ἔβλαψαν, εἰδότες δὲ ἐπεβούλευσαν· ξύγγνωμον δ' ἐστὶ τὸ ἀκούσιον. 2. ἐγὼ μὲν οὖν καὶ τότε πρῶτον καὶ νῦν διαμάχομαι μὴ μεταγνῶναι ὑμᾶς τὰ προδεδογμένα, μηδὲ τρισὶ τοῖς ἀξυμφορωτάτοις τῇ ἀρχῇ, οἴκτῳ, καὶ ἡδονῇ λόγων, καὶ ἐπιεικείᾳ, ἁμαρτάνειν. 3. ἔλεός τε γὰρ πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοίους δίκαιος ἀντιδίδοσθαι, καὶ μὴ πρὸς τοὺς οὔτ' ἀντοικτιοῦντας, ἐξ ἀνάγκης τε καθεστῶτας ἀεὶ πολεμίους· οἵ τε τέρποντες λόγῳ ῥήτορες ἔξουσι καὶ ἐν ἄλλοις ἐλάσσοσιν ἀγῶνα, καὶ μὴ ἐν ᾧ ἡ μὲν πόλις, βραχέα ἠσθεῖσα, μεγάλα ζημιώσεται, αὐτοὶ δὲ ἐκ τοῦ εὖ εἰπεῖν τὸ παθεῖν εὖ ἀντιλήψονται. καὶ ἡ ἐπιείκεια πρὸς τοὺς μέλλοντας ἐπιτηδείους καὶ τὸ λοιπὸν ἔσεσθαι μᾶλλον δίδοται ἢ πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοίους τε, καὶ οὐδὲν ἧσσον πολεμίους ὑπολειπομένους. 4. ἓν δὲ ξυνελὼν λέγω, πειθόμενοι μὲν ἐμοὶ, τά τε δίκαια ἐς Μυτιληναίους καὶ τὰ ξύμφορα ἅμα ποιήσετε· ἄλλως δὲ γνόντες, τοῖς μὲν οὐ χαριεῖσθε, ὑμᾶς δὲ αὐτοὺς μᾶλλον δικαιώσεσθε. εἰ γὰρ οὗτοι ὀρθῶς ἀπέστησαν, ὑμεῖς ἂν, οὐ χρεών, ἄρχοιτε· εἰ δὲ δὴ, καὶ οὐ προσῆκον, ὅμως ἀξιοῦτε τοῦτο δρᾶν, παρὰ τὸ εἰκός τοι καὶ τούσδε ξυμφόρως δεῖ κολάζεσθαι, xxiv. 4, there being an allusion to clemency and mildness as being the especial virtue of a ruler.

At the dat. τρισὶ supply ἐπὶ or ἐν, which latter is expressed in Soph. Aj. 1072, τοιαῦθ' ἁμαρτάνουσιν ἐν λόγοις ἔπη. With respect to the use of the word τρισὶ, it may be observed, that the ancients were peculiarly fond of distributions into three. See supra i. 68, 3, and 70, 3, and compare Plut. Conj. Præc. 43, and Lucret. v. 93.

3. Cleon now shows that compassion were as unsuitable as it is inexpedient; since it is only right to be dealt out in return to those who are equal, namely, in good-will, similarly affected to us, so that they would reciprocally feel a like compassion for us. Ἐξ ἀνάγ. should be rendered, not as Portus, 'propter necessitatem,' but, as Kistem., necessario, 'necessarily;' intimating what cannot but be so or so from the circumstances of the case. Thus in a passage of Hebrews, vii. 12, we have ἐξ ἀνάγκης.

οἵ τε τέρποντες λόγῳ — ζημιώσεται] Meaning, that 'the matter in question is of too much consequence to be made a mere field for rhetorical contest or display, and of which the pleasure will be brief and dearly purchased by lasting injury to the state; in short, the only gainers will be the orators, who, ἐκ τοῦ εὖ—ἀντιλήψονται, from their well-speaking, will receive the return of being well treated in receiving a liberal return,'—namely, by the bribes of those whose interests they advocate, to the injury of the state. The persons here termed οἱ ῥήτορες, were of the class of men who, by their talents as orators and debaters, had acquired much influence in the assembly, and to whom the people looked up for counsel on matters of public importance; though they did not, as some say, form an order of persons out of which ten were chosen annually. See Schoemann de Comit. p. 10, and Mitch. on Aristoph. Ach. 38.

The next words glance at the inexpediency of the thing—at least in the present case; and may be rendered, 'The clemency [called for] were better bestowed on those who would be hereafter and in future our friends, and not on those who would be left just like what they were [before], sui similes, equally hostile in mind.' So the Schol. explains by τοὺς ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ διαθέσει ὄντας, οἷοί περ ἦσαν πρότερον.

4. ἓν δὲ ξυνελὼν λέγω] Constr. λέγω δὲ ἓν ξυνελὼν, 'one thing I say in sum,' i. e. 'to sum up the whole in one, I say.' Of οὐ χαριεῖσθε the sense is, 'will not confer a favour on,' 'lay them under obligation.' Ὑμᾶς δὲ αὐτοὺς μᾶλλον δικαιώσεσθε, 'will pass sentence of condemnation on yourselves,' proving that your rule is unjust and tyrannical; i. e. 'By allowing them to go unpunished, you will show that you regard them as having done no wrong, and consequently prove that your rule is tyranny.' Here, for δικαιώσεσθε, Elmsl. and Dind. would read δικαιώσετε. But the mid. form is well defended by Poppo, who compares i. 33, ἢ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς βεβαιώσασθαι, and other passages. See also Aristot. Eth. v. 9, and Herodot. iii. 29. At οὐ χρεὼν supply ἄρχειν from ἄρχοιτε; of which ellipsis examples have been adduced by Blomfield on Æschyl. Choëph. 917, and also Matth. Gr. Gr. § 564. Προσῆκον stands for προσήκοντες. Ξυμφόρως, suppl. ὑμῖν, 'for the promotion of your interest.'

ἢ παύεσθαι τῆς ἀρχῆς, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ἀκινδύνου ἀνδραγαθίζεσθαι. 5. τῇ τε αὐτῇ ζημίᾳ ἀξιώσατε ἀμύνασθαι, καὶ μὴ ἀναλγητότεροι οἱ διαφεύγοντες τῶν ἐπιβουλευσάντων φανῆναι· ἐνθυμηθέντες, ἃ εἰκὸς ἦν αὐτοὺς ποιῆσαι κρατήσαντας ἡμῶν, ἄλλως τε καὶ προϋπάρξαντας ἀδικίας. 6. μάλιστα δὲ οἱ μὴ ξὺν προφάσει τινὰ κακῶς ποιοῦντες ἐπεξέρχονται καὶ διόλλυνται, τὸν κίνδυνον ὑφορώμενοι τοῦ ὑπολειπομένου ἐχθροῦ· ὁ γὰρ μὴ ξὺν ἀνάγκῃ τι παθὼν χαλεπώτερος, ἢ παύεσθαι (scil. δεῖ) τῆς ἀρχῆς, &c.] Render, 'or else it would behove you to cease from rule, and at no hazard act the good sort of persons.' Comp. similar passages at ii. 63, and vi. 64. Evidently imitated from the present is a passage of Dio Cass. 967, 78, ἀκινδύνως ἀνδραγαθίζεται, and 351, 75, ἀνδρ. ἀσφαλῶς. The word occurs also in Appian, ii. 843.

5. τῇ τε αὐτῇ ζημίᾳ ἀξιώσατε ἀμύν.] Meaning, 'think it right to requite them with the same punishment [they would have inflicted on you].' Even more elliptical are the next words, which may be rendered, 'and [think it right] that those who have escaped should seem not less sensible of injury than those that plotted their ruin.' So the term ἀνάλγητον is by Dukas explained ἀνεπαίσθητον, and by Haack, 'sensus doloris magis expertes.' Οἱ διαφεύγοντες is by Poppo and Arnold taken as put substantively, like οἱ διαβάλλοντες at iii. 4. The next words, ἄλλως τε καὶ πρ. ἀδικίας, contain a stinging remark, the force of which is further unfolded in those following, μάλιστα δὲ οἱ μὴ ξὺν προφάσει, which may be rendered, 'For those especially who, from no cause, work evil to any one, persecute and hunt him to destruction, dreading the danger from a surviving foe;' where μὴ ξὺν προφάσει signifies, 'sine causâ,' 'not caused by the provocation of previous injury.' The words ἐπεξέρχονται καὶ διόλλυνται are highly significant, but somewhat perplexed, especially from the seemingly passive form διόλλυνται being joined with the active ἐπεξέρχ. Now, to avoid having to assign an active signification to διόλλυνται, Herm., Poppo, and Goell. construe the word with ὑφορώμενοι, in the sense, 'they are killed to live in suspicion of danger,' 'it kills them, they cannot bear it.' But so forced and frigid is the sense thus arising, that better is it to acquiesce in the common interpretation (adopted by the ancient interpreters) by which διόλλυνται is taken, as the natural constr. requires it should, with ἐπεξέρχ.; and consequently understood in an active sense; whether we are to consider it as a deponent, or, with Arnold, take it in a middle sense, (namely, 'they procure or effect his destruction,') may be thought doubtful; though the former, as yielding a stronger sense, is preferable, especially since the term is so closely connected with ἐπεξ., that it cannot be taken in any way different from that. The term ἐπεξέρχεσθαι signifies properly, like our verb to pursue, 'to go after any one in chase' (being in this acceptation both a military and a venatory term); also, 'to pursue with enmity,' 'persecute;' as in Eurip. Andr. 817. And such I should be inclined to think were the sense here, but for the added words καὶ διόλλ., which being taken with this, per hendiadyn, will mean, 'they pursue him to utter destruction,' lit. 'throughout to his destruction:' a metaphor taken from hunting and destroying wild beasts; as also in Dio Cass. 817, 34, οἱ δὲ ἐπιδιώκοντες σφᾶς ἐπίπαν ἐπεξῆλθον, καὶ ἐν ταῖς ὕλαις κρυπτομένους ἀνευρόντες, ὥσπερ θηρία, ἀπέκτειναν. Of ὑφορώμενοι the sense is, not suspecting, or discerning, but fearing, apprehending; as the word is used in Ælian, V. H. i. 14, ὑφορῶντες τὰ ἐν αὐτῷ θηρία. Polyb. iii. 18, 8, and 74, 5 & 8. 2 Maccab. vii. 24. And so the ancient lexicographers explain ὑφορώμενος by ὑποστελλόμενος, ὑπονοῶν, φοβούμενος. The word signifies properly, 'to look at an object with a side glance;' which implies distrust, suspicion, or fear, as the case may be.

The next words, ὁ γὰρ μὴ ξὺν ἀνάγκῃ—ἐχθροῦ, give the reason why such is the case, and may be rendered, 'For he who has suffered any evil, out of no necessity on the part of the injurer [i. e. for which no plea of necessity can be alleged], is, after having escaped, a more dangerous [enemy] than he who is such from equal reciprocity [of quarrel],' i. e. as Poppo explains, 'qui ex æquo inimicum se præbuit, æquè alterum læsit [ac hic ipsum],' or, as Goeller, 'qui μὴ προπαθὼν ἄνευ διαφυγών, τοῦ ἀπὸ τῆς ἴσης ἐχθροῦ. 7. μὴ οὖν προδόται γένησθε ὑμῶν αὐτῶν, γενόμενοι δ' ὅτι ἐγγύτατα τῇ γνώμῃ τοῦ πάσχειν, καὶ ὡς πρὸ παντὸς ἂν ἐτιμήσασθε αὐτοὺς χειρώσασθαι, νῦν ἀνταπόδοτε, μὴ μαλακισθέντες πρὸς τὸ παρὸν αὐτίκα, μηδὲ τοῦ ἐπικρεμασθέντος ποτὲ δεινοῦ ἀμνημονοῦντες. 8. κολάσατε δὲ ἀξίως τούτους τε, καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ξυμμάχοις παράδειγμα σαφὲς καταστήσατε, ὃς ἂν ἀφιστῆται, θανάτῳ ζημιωσόμενον· τόδε γὰρ ἢν γνῶσιν, ἧσσον, τῶν πολεμίων ἀμελήσαντες, τοῖς ὑμετέροις αὐτῶν μαχεῖσθε ξυμμάχοις."

XLI. Τοιαῦτα μὲν ὁ Κλέων εἶπε. μετὰ δ' αὐτὸν Διόδοτος ὁ Εὐκράτους, ὅσπερ καὶ ἐν τῇ προτέρᾳ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἀντέλεγε μάλιστα μὴ ἀποκτεῖναι Μυτιληναίους, παρελθὼν καὶ τότε ἔλεγε τοιάδε.

προφάσεως, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτὸς ἀδικήσας parem in inimicitia efficienda partem habuit,' meaning, as Arnold expresses it, one 'who has not suffered more than he has inflicted, has no more to complain of in his enemy than his enemy has to complain of in him'—where, in short, equal offence has been given on both sides. 'Talis inimicus (observes Goeller) exorabilior est, quam is, qui non prius alterum ad injuriam lacessens ipse injuria afficitur, utpote sibi conscius, non sine sua ipsius opera inimicitiam cœptam esse.' Cleon means this to be applied to the Mitylenæans, who, according to his representation, had suffered no injury from the Athenians.

7. Now comes the ἐπίλογοι or peroratio, which usually contains a brief recapitulation of the foregoing arguments, with an application, serving to stir up the auditors by an appeal to their passions, or to the moving principles of their actions. See Aristot. Rhet. iii. 19. The present deals chiefly in expostulation and warning, and appeals solely to the groveling principles of self, as all in all—no matter at what cost to others. Of the words γενόμενοι δ' ὅτι ἐγγύτατα τῇ γνώμῃ τοῦ πάσχειν, the sense is, 'keeping your minds as nearly as possible in the state they were in when you suffered;' or, as Arnold expresses it, 'recalling as nearly as possible the feelings of the actual moment of suffering;' lit. 'coming as near as possible to.' So in a passage of Plato, Menex. 9, cited by Poppo, we have, γενέσθαι λόγῳ ἐν χρόνῳ. And this view is confirmed by the similar expression at ch. 38, init. ἀμύνασθαι δὲ τῷ παθεῖν ὅτι ἐγγυτάτω κείμενον, ἀντίπαλον ὄν, μάλιστα τὴν τιμωρίαν ἀναλαμβάνει. As to the transition from the inf. in the next words, καὶ ὡς, we may repeat γενόμενοι τῇ γνώμῃ from the preceding, though in a somewhat modified sense,—namely, 'bearing in mind, considering how you then would have prized above every thing else their subjugation.' Compare i. 33, 2, ἢν ὑμεῖς ἂν πρὸ πολλῶν χρημάτων—ἐτιμήσατε ὑμῖν προσγενέσθαι.

ἀνταπόδοτε] 'render [to their crime] a just retribution.' Μὴ μαλακισθέντες, 'not being softened into compassion,'—namely, at the miserable condition of the Mitylenæans: of which use of μαλ. (besides a passage infra vi. 29.) examples occur in the best writers; and therefore the word ought not to be explained, as it is by the Scholiast and Goeller, of giving way to the gratification of oratory. In πρὸς τὸ παρὸν αὐτίκα we have, not a mere pleonasm, but a forcible mode of expression to signify, 'at the circumstances immediately present,' namely, the immediate distress of the Mitylenæans, so as to forget their past crime, and the future consequences of the step you now take.

8. κολάσατε δὲ — ζημιωσόμενον] At ἀξίως supply τῆς ἀδικίας, which word is expressed supra.

Here ζημιωσόμενον, as Goell. observes, does not depend on παράδειγμα, but is in apposition with it; as though our author had written, παράδειγμα καταστήσατε, ὃς ἂν ἀφιστῆται, θανάτῳ ζημ., 'that he who shall revolt will be punished with death.' The same sort of construction is observable in a passage of Eurip. Troad. 1030, ἀξίως τήνδε Κτανὼν σεαυτοῦ· νόμον δὲ τόνδε ταῖς ἄλλαισι θὲς Γυναιξὶ, θνήσκειν, ἥτις ἂν προσδῷ πόσιν: and Soph. Elect. 1505, χρῆν δ' εὐθὺς εἶναι τήνδε τοῖς πᾶσιν δίκην, Ὅστις πέρα πράσσειν γε τῶν νόμων θέλει, Κτείνειν. τὸ γὰρ πανοῦργον οὐκ ἂν ἦν πολύ· where κτείνειν is in apposition with δίκην.

XLII. "Οὔτε τοὺς προθέντας τὴν διαγνώμην αὖθις περὶ Μυτιληναίων αἰτιῶμαι, οὔτε τοὺς μεμφομένους μὴ πολλάκις περὶ τῶν μεγίστων βουλεύεσθαι ἐπαινῶ· νομίζω δὲ δύο τὰ ἐναντιώτατα εὐβουλίᾳ εἶναι, τάχος τε καὶ ὀργήν· ὧν τὸ μὲν μετὰ ἀνοίας φιλεῖ γίγνεσθαι, τὸ δὲ μετὰ ἀπαιδευσίας καὶ βραχύτητος γνώμης. 2. τούς τε λόγους ὅστις διαμάχεται μὴ διδασκάλους τῶν πραγμάτων γίγνεσθαι, ἢ ἀξύνετός ἐστιν, ἢ ἰδίᾳ τι αὐτῷ διαφέρει· ἀξύνετος μὲν, εἰ ἄλλῳ τινὶ ἡγεῖται περὶ τοῦ μέλλοντος δυνατὸν εἶναι καὶ μὴ ἐμφανοῦς φράσαι· διαφέρει δ' αὐτῷ, εἰ βουλόμενός τι αἰσχρὸν

CH. XLII. The speaker commences without preface, and, entering at once into the question before them, uses language of great moderation, as a kind of præoccupatio benevolentiæ, as regarded both the parties.

1. οὔτε τοὺς προθέντας, &c.] 'I neither blame those who have again brought forward the consideration and determination of this question.' Αὖθις must be construed with προθ. There is a reference to the words of Cleon at ch. 38, 1, θαυμάζω τῶν προθέντων αὖθις περὶ Μυτ. λέγειν.

οὔτε τοὺς μεμφομένους—ἐπαινῶ] 'nor do I commend those who censure frequent consultation on matters of the greatest moment.' With respect to the μὴ, it is put in, because after verbs which contain a negation, as μέμφεσθαι does, the Greeks often add a negative to the following verb in the infin. See Matth. Gr. Gr. § 534, obs. 4. In such a case, however, it is not pleonastic, but serves to strengthen the sense of the foregoing.

νομίζω δὲ—ὀργὴν] 'but my opinion is, that there are two things the most adverse to prudent counsel, [namely] precipitancy and passionateness:' glancing at the words of Cleon, where he deprecates this second consideration of the question as occasioning χρόνου διατριβήν. The ὀργὴν has reference to the vehement and passionate spirit in which Cleon and his supporters took up the matter. The τὸ μὲν must (as I long ago, in my former work, showed, and that view has since been adopted by Haack, Goeller, and Arnold) be referred to τάχος, and τὸ δὲ to ὀργήν; by ἀνοίας being understood, not amentia, madness, (as Portus, Hobbes, and Smith render,) but folly, indiscretion, imprudence. And so Goeller and Arnold now take it, explaining the sense to be, that 'haste is the companion of folly, since the less a man understands of the difficulties of a question, the more quickly he will decide upon it: while, on the other hand, passionateness is usually associated with a low, ignorant, and narrow mind.' I cannot, however, agree with Arnold in thus assigning to βραχύτητος γνώμης the sense 'narrowness of mind,' namely, those limited and short-sighted views which are inseparable from moral ignorance. For that sense, though a good one, cannot well be extracted from the expression; which will only mean tenuitas mentis vel rationis, 'scantiness or shallowness of judgment.' And this latter is a sense quite as applicable as the former: for, as Arnold himself observes, 'where reason is low, passion is necessarily predominant; and consequently ignorant and irrational natures are prone to violence.' Thus Dio Cass. p. 64, init., after mentioning a violence perpetrated on the Roman ambassadors by a barbarian queen, and the fear and abject submission which followed it, adds, (by an evident imitation of the present passage,) διήλεγξε δὲ τὴν τοῦ γυναικείου γένους ἀσθένειαν τάχα μὲν, ὑπὸ βραχύτητος γνώμης, ὀργιζομένην, ταχὺ δὲ καὶ ὑπὸ δειλίας φοβουμένην, where γνώμη means, as here, the faculty of reason or judgment.

2. τούς τε λόγους—διαφ.] The speaker now comes close home to the objection made by 'the blockheads,' whom Cleon represented, that 'there was no need of words or oratory to the dispatch of public business.' Render, 'And whoever (like Cleon) contends that words (and consultation) are not to be the teachers of affairs, (viz. how they are to be transacted,) he is either a simpleton, or he has some private interest of his own to serve.' On διαμάχ. see note at ch. 40, 2, where Cleon uses the word which is here carped at by Diodotus. The sense above assigned to ἰδίᾳ τι αὐτῷ διαφέρει is confirmed by a similar passage at i. 68, and another (evidently imitated from the present) of Synes. Epist. 48, ἐμοί δέ τι καὶ ἰδίᾳ διαφέρει. See Pind. Pyth. xi. 63, and Heyne on Pind. Isth. ii. 11.

διαφέρει δ' αὐτῷ, εἰ βουλόμενος—ἀκουσομένους] Render, 'On the other hand, he has an interest to serve, if desirous of carrying some base measure, and thinks that he would not indeed be able to speak well concerning a dishonourable matter, but that by calumniating well (i. e. vehemently), he should strike terror into both their opponents and the auditors in general.' This use of πείθειν with an accus. of person, recurs at ch. 43, where we have, πείθειν τὰ δεινότατα; but in so rare a construction, that I know no other example, except in Aristot. ap. Steph. Thes. τἀναντία πείθειν. Soph. Œd. Col. 1442, μὴ πεῖθ' ἃ μὴ δεῖ. Eurip. Hec. 813, ἵν' ἤ ποτε Πείθειν ἄ τις βούλοιτο. In this case there is an ellipsis of an accus. of person, expressed in Plat. Apol. 27, and Herodot. i. 163, by τοῦ μὴ καλοῦ, 'what is not morally good,' i. e. virtuous. The εὖ here, as often, signifies vehementer: and so probè in Latin, well in English. Indeed the very phrase εὖ διαβάλλειν occurs in Hdot. v. 50; and εὖ κατηγορεῖν in Aristot. Thesm. 444. The term διαβαλὼν has reference to the chief ingredient in the cup Cleon mixed up for the public taste, and the chief tool of his base purposes, calumny; and accordingly that is the epithet which is in Aristoph. Eq. 247, applied to Cleon, of whom it is said, παῖε τὸν πανοῦργον καὶ διαβολώτατόν τινα. And at v. 44 of the same drama he is styled βυρσοδέψην Παφλάγονα πανουργότατον, i. e. ready to perpetrate any thing; or, as we should say, up to any thing. With respect to the other term there, Παφλάγονα, it has not (what might seem at first sight) any allusion to Paphlagonia, but is an adjective from παφλάζω, ferveo, bullio, (a word used properly of the waves of the sea in a violent state of agitation. So in Hom. Il. xiii. 798, we have, κύματα παφλάζοντα πολυφλοίσβοιο θαλάσσης.) just as our verb to boil in an elegant couplet of Gay: 'Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide; The trembling fins the boiling waves divide.' In the above passage, however, of Aristophanes, it is used in a metaphorical sense, to denote not, what Mr. Mitchell understands, frothy, (for frothiness was not a characteristic of Cleon,) but rather what we should express by bullying; so corresponding to the term κεκράκτης applied to Cleon in the same drama, v. 137 & 304. And indeed it may be observed, that our verb to bully comes not from bulla or burly, but from bullio, as that does from φλύω, cognate with φλάω, whence παφλάζω. The epithet is, indeed, one the more applicable to Cleon, because, as with us a bully means a blustering fellow with only the semblance of courage, so here there is an allusion to the cowardice of this demagogue, as of his counterpart in modern times, Robespierre. Thus he is described by Aristophanes as a bawling, bullying hector, yet at the same time an utter coward, and a fawner when he had any purpose of his own to serve; the terrorist of all classes, especially such as had any thing to lose, turbulent and inquisitorial, rapacious and most unscrupulous. As to his eloquence, Bp. Thirlwall says, that 'if he had any, it was impetuous and coarse, set off with a loud voice and vehement gesticulation.' Perhaps, however, that may be going too far; since Cicero, after noticing the bad qualities of this demagogue, yet adds, 'tamen eloquens, grandis verbis, creber sententiis, compressione rerum brevis;' though, of course, merely with reference to his oratory as it stands in the speech attributed to him by Thucydides. Nay, this is at § 4 admitted by Diodotus himself. Eloquence Cleon must have possessed, otherwise he could not, as Mr. Mitchell says, have made himself master of the Athenian mob by their ears: but the eloquence was doubtless of a character adapted to the mob,—not that of a Pitt, Fox, or Burke, but rather of a Cobbett, dealing chiefly in invective. And though he depended chiefly on his power as inquisitor or terrorist general, he probably did not disdain laying those little word-traps and playing off those paronomasiæ, which Mr. Mitchell admits exist in the drama of Aristophanes, and which he seems to think were introduced there from having been used by Cleon,—and, I would add, from their being not unacceptable to the Athenians.

3. χαλεπώτατοι δὲ—τινα] Of this passage (which is one involving no little difficulty) it is by no means easy to fix the sense by the words themselves. We must, therefore, depend much on the connexion and context. Now Diodotus had just hinted at the chief feature in Cleon's character, as a person equally corrupt and calumnious. He now, I apprehend, means to go further, and to say, that 'the most formidable antagonists are those who,—not content with attacking a speech of the opponent on the score of being, however unintentionally, wrong in policy,—go so far as to ascribe it to corrupt motives;' which Cleon had insinuated at ch. 38, κέρδει ἐπαιρόμενος, τὸ εὐπρεπὲς τοῦ λόγου ἐκπονήσας, παράγειν πειράσεται. Such being the case, I am now inclined to adopt the interpretation proposed by Dr. Arnold (though that involves some difficulty), by which the construction will be, προσκατηγοροῦντες ἐπίδειξιν (ὡς) ἐπὶ χρήμασι (γεγενημένην). Render, 'who besides [their accusations on the score of ignorance or error] go so far as to accuse the speech of being a mere rhetorical display, got up for the sake of gain;' equiv. (as Arnold explains) to accusing the orator of speaking not what he thinks, but what he is paid to speak,—namely, a mere got-up harangue: a use, this, of ἐπὶ not unfrequent, and on which see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 588, β. So in Soph. Antig. 1048, we have, μὴ 'πὶ κέρδεσι λέγων: and Jos. Bell. i. 33, 7, τοὺς φύλακας ἱκέτευεν ἐπὶ χρήμασι ἐξαφιέναι αὐτόν. And the same use is observable in Latin; e. g. Virg. Æn. vi. 621, 'Vendidit hic auro patriam — fixit leges pretio atque refixit.'

As to the construction, Arn. and Poppo are agreed that προσκατηγοροῦντες ἐπίδειξιν (scil. τῶν ῥητόρων) is of the same kind as that of ἀδικία κατηγορεῖτο αὐτοῦ, at i. 95; the sense being, 'imputing to the orators an insincere display of rhetoric for corrupt motives.' And so Dukas explains, πρὸς τῷ τοὺς λόγους μέμφεσθαι τῶν λεγόντων, κατηγοροῦσιν αὐτῶν ἔτι καὶ δωροδοκίαν. Of χαλεπώτατοι the sense is, 'the hardest to deal with,' 'the worst to bear.' So Xen. Anab. i. 3, 12, χαλεπώτατος ἐχθρός: and Dionys. Hal. Ant. 1691, χαλεπώτεροι γὰρ ἂν τῶν μὴ τυγχανόντων ('those who do not obtain their request, who receive an absolute denial') ἀπαντήσειαν οἱ ψευσθέντες τῆς ἐλπίδος, 'who have been deceived by false hopes.' Liban. Epist. 192, ἀλλ' οὗτοί γε πάντων εἰσὶ χαλεπώτατοι νικῶντες ὥσπερ οἱ Σκυθ., where read οἱ νικ.

εἰ μὲν γὰρ ἀμαθίαν—ἄδικος] This is meant to show in what respect the case is worse. Render, 'for if, indeed, they had charged ignorance [upon us], he who had not carried his point would have come off with the repute rather of a simpleton than a knave; but when roguery is charged upon him, he who has carried [his measure] becomes suspected, and he who has failed is regarded as both blockhead and knave.' Καταιτιῶμαι generally governs an accus. of person; but sometimes—as here and in Dem. 553 & 1306,—an accus. of thing; in which case there is an ellipsis of the genitive of person governed of κατὰ in composition. Ἀξυνετ. ἢ ἀδικώτερος stands for μᾶλλον ἀξύνετος ἢ ἄδικος; on which double comparative see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 456. Of ἐπιφερομένης the sense is, charged upon, imputed to, as at v. 75. And so ἐπιφέρειν ψόγον, and αἰτίαν. Πείσας, just after, is to be taken like πείσας in the former part of the passage. At ἄδικος repeat γίγνεται, understood, in the accommodated sense 'is regarded.' Μετὰ ἀξυνεσίας stands for καὶ ἀξύνετος: an Attic elegance.

4. ἥ τε πόλις] 'the state too.' Τοὺς τοιούτους τῶν πολιτῶν, 'such citizens as those above mentioned,' § 3, οἱ ἐπὶ χρήμασι προσκατηγοροῦντες ἐπίδειξιν. Now that such persons should be eloquent, is no other than the very evil Cleon speaks of. This is admitting Cleon's eloquence; though it does not determine its kind. Of οὐκ ὠφελεῖται the meaning is, per meiosin, is injured. Πλεῖστ' ἂν ὀρθοῖτο, 'it would most prosper.' See note supra ch. 38, fin.

5. Diodotus now follows up this earnest representation of the evils of such a course, by direct admonition as to the duty of a true patriot. 'It behoves,' he says, 'the good citizen to show himself, in speaking, better than others,—not by terrifying gainsayers, but by proceeding on a footing of equality;' in other words, that he should carry his cause, not by terrifying his opponents, but by meeting them on a fair field of argument, in which nothing should be considered but the intrinsic merits of the counsel. With the expression here, τὸν ἀγ. πολ., compare the ὁ ποιμὴν ὁ καλὸς of John x. 11. Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, 'ex æquo,' 'æqua conditione:' see supra i. 77, 99, λέγοντα· τὴν δὲ σώφρονα πόλιν τῷ τε πλεῖστα εὖ βουλεύοντι μὴ προστιθέναι τιμήν, ἀλλὰ μηδ' ἐλασσοῦν τῆς ὑπαρχούσης, καὶ τὸν μὴ τυχόντα γνώμης οὐχ ὅπως ζημιοῦν, ἀλλὰ μηδ' ἀτιμάζειν. 6. οὕτω γὰρ ὅ τε κατορθῶν ἥκιστα ἂν ἐπὶ τῷ ἔτι μειζόνων ἀξιοῦσθαι παρὰ γνώμην τι καὶ πρὸς χάριν λέγοι, ὅ τε μὴ ἐπιτυχὼν ὀρέγοιτο τῷ αὐτῷ, χαριζόμενός τι καὶ αὐτὸς, προσάγεσθαι τὸ πλῆθος. 136, 140, and notes. For, as Duker observes, 'qui alium contra se dicentem corruptelæ insimulat, non patitur eum æquo jure secum esse, sed conditionem illius deteriorem facit.' Arnold very properly lays down the construction as follows: φαίνεσθαι ἄμεινον λέγοντα, μὴ ἐκφοβ.—ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου, where λέγοντα stands for λέγειν, as often. Ἄμεινον λέγοντα is not well explained by Arnold of 'triumphing in eloquence;' it merely means to have the better in argument, to speak more to the purpose. So Xen. Cyr. vi. 2, 7, ἄμεινον μαχομένους, and Hist. vi. 5, 24, μάχεσθαι ἄμεινον. There is no occasion, with Goell., to repeat λέγοντα; since ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου stands as much by itself here, as it does supra ch. 37, (which passage is alluded to by Diodotus,) κριταὶ ὄντες ἀπὸ τοῦ ἴσου μᾶλλον ἢ ἀγωνισταί.

Having thus pointed out the duty of the citizen, Diodotus, in the next words, τὴν δὲ σώφρονα πόλιν – ἀτιμάζειν, lays down the reciprocal duty of the state. Render, 'and, on the other hand, it is the duty of the state that acts soberly and wisely, I do not say to confer additional honour on him who has frequently counselled wisely, but, at least, not to detract from or lessen that which he already has; and him who has not obtained its assent or approbation [to his suggestions], not only not to punish or injure, but not even to cast disgrace or discredit upon him.' Such is, I apprehend, the general sense of these words, the obscurity attaching to which has, as Goeller and Arnold observe, chiefly arisen from the same words ἀλλὰ μηδ' bearing a different sense within the space of two lines,—signifying, first, 'but not either,' equivalent to if not, and then 'but not even.' Of τῷ πλεῖστα εὖ βουλεύοντι the sense is lit., 'to him who has well counselled very many things;' where βουλ. stands for συμβουλ., by a rare use of the term, though one found also in another passage, book iv., where we have, βουλεύσειν τῇ πόλει τὰ ἄριστα. And so in Hesiod, Op. i. 264, ἡ δὲ κακὴ βουλὴ τῷ βουλεύσαντι (scil. αὐτὴν) κακίστη. Such, too, is the use of βουλεύεσθαι in a passage supra ii. 44, ἴσον τι ἢ δίκαιον βουλεύεσθαι. The expression μὴ τυχόντα γνώμης is equivalent to μὴ τυχὼν just before, as opposed to πείσας. And Poppo aptly compares Dio Cass. xlii. 33, τοὺς μὲν τυχόντας τῆς γνώμης καὶ ἐπαίνει καὶ τίμα· τοὺς δ' ἁμαρτόντας μήτ' ἀτιμάσῃς ποτὲ, μήτ' αἰτιάσῃ. On the formula οὐχ ὅπως for οὐχ ὅπως οὐκ, see Herm. on Vig. The commentators have failed to remark, that the μὴ before προστιθέναι is to be taken for μὴ ὅτι, ('I would not say that,') as the context demands. Thus μὴ ὅτι — ἀλλὰ μηδὲ here is like the formula μὴ ὅτι — ἀλλ' οὐδέ, on which see Viger, p. 458.

6. The speaker now adverts to the benefit to the public arising from this wise and just course towards its counsellors; which is, that 'thus both he who succeeds will be least induced, in order to be thought worthy of yet greater rewards, to speak aught against his judgment, and merely for gratification to his hearers; and he who fails of success, will be least desirous in the same way,—by himself conciliating public favour,—to bring over the multitude to his interests.' The only difficulty here consists in the repetition of ἥκιστα ἂν at ὀρέγοιτο, which, though harsh, is demanded by the force of the antithesis. By τῷ αὐτῷ understand 'the same course of action,' namely, the speaking παρὰ γνώμην and πρὸς χάριν. The words χαριζόμενός τι καὶ αὐτὸς are exegetical of ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ. Προσάγεσθαι bears the same sense in Herodot. iv. 172.

CH. XLIII. In this chapter the speaker proceeds to set forth the pernicious nature of the course which now prevailed; whereby it was a matter full of difficulty and danger to offer the people wholesome counsel. He shows that the contrary to what befits a wise state to do, in the foregoing respects, is now done by the Athenians. 'If,' says he, 'any one be even suspected of speaking any thing for gain, though it be the best counsel; we,—envying him the lucre which we suspect he has got,—(although the suspicion be uncertain and little to be relied on,)—deprive the state of so much clear benefit.' For such is, I apprehend, the full sense of this too briefly worded sentence, where φθονήσαντες has the force of a whole clause. And so Dukas well paraphrases, φθονήσαντες αὐτῷ, ἐφ' οἷς ὑποπτεύεται κέρδεσιν, εἶτ' οὖν ἐπὶ τῷ ἀμφιβόλῳ κέρδει: and Poppo still better, 'Invidentes ei lucrum, quod eum sibi parasse suspicamur, quanquam parum certa est hæc suspicio.' On the construction of φθον. see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 368, a.

2. καθέστηκε δὲ] 'and thus it is (usu venire solet) that good and salutary counsels, when brought forward in a direct and straightforward manner, are not less objects of suspicion than bad.' On the expression, ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐθέος λεγόμενα, see i. 34, and note; and compare Paus. viii. 8, 2, ἐκ τοῦ εὐθ. λέγειν.

ὥστε δεῖν—γενέσθαι] 'so that it equally behoves him who would carry the most mischievous measures, to bring over the multitude by deceit, as it is for him who propounds the most salutary counsels, to obtain credence by the use of deceit.'

3. μόνην τε πόλιν—ἀδύνατον] Render, 'and the state alone, by reason of these extreme surmises, it is impossible for any one to openly benefit, without resorting to deceit and artifice.' At πόλιν it is not well, with Arnold, to supply ταύτην, so regarding it as equivalent to ὑμᾶς. For here there is not, what would have been alike invidious and unnecessary, a comparison instituted between Athens and any other state. Πόλιν stands for τὴν πόλιν, and the sense is, 'the state, or body politic, is the only body whom it is impossible to serve without deceit.' In my Translation I pointed out that περινοίας does not mean suspicions, or what were otherwise denoted by ὑποψίαι—for the speaker carefully avoids the use of an invidious term—but extreme surmises or imaginations: a view, this, I find, since adopted by Arnold, who explains the term to mean, 'extravagant and far-fetched notions, owing to the excesses of an active mind, which sees all that is to be seen, but fancies something more.' Yet it may be doubted whether the explanation itself may not deserve the name of the thing explained, a mere περίνοια. It would rather seem that the speaker, willing to avoid the direct term ὑποψίας, uses the indirect one, περινοίας, which may best be rendered over-surmisings, from that particular sense of περινοέω, by which it denotes περιττῶς νοέω, and on which see Hesychius, Suidas, and Budæus Comment. Græc. Here, then, the περι has the sense of præ, over (for as περὶ signifies about, around any object, that may sometimes imply over: and so we use the prefix over in our own language); and hence περινοέω might very well be rendered, 'to be overcome,' and περίνοια might mean over-wiseness (a term used by Sir Walter Raleigh); in which view we may compare another similarly formed expression, περιεργία. Here, however, the context determines the word to signify over-surmisings; by which it will be equivalent to the ὑπόνοιαι, evil surmisings, of 1 Tim. vi. 5. A vice, this, consisting in an over-suspiciousness of men's motives, as though all were knaves, or had only a base end in view; a surmising or fancying a thing to be so or so, without certain knowledge or proof that it is such. This view of the force of περίν. is much confirmed and illustrated by a passage of Aristoph. Ran. 956—9, Λεπτῶν τε κανόνων ἐσβολὰς, ἐπῶν τε γωνιασμοὺς, Νοεῖν, ὁρᾶν, ξυνιέναι, στρέφειν, ἐρᾶν, τεχνάζειν, Κἀχ' ὑποτοπεῖσθαι, περινοεῖν ἅπαντα.

ὁ γὰρ διδοὺς—ἔξειν] 'for he who bestows any benefit openly, is in turn suspected of having some secret by-interest in view (ἀνθυποπτεύεται standing, as Abresch has pointed out, for ἀντὶ τοῦ δοθέντος ἀγαθοῦ ὑποπτεύεται); for, as it is observed by Arn. (in a passage cited from Aristot. Rhet. iii. 16.) with respect to the people, ἀπιστοῦσιν ἄλλο τι πράττειν ἐκόντα (scil. τινα) πλὴν τὸ συμφέρον. Here, as τὰ μέγιστα, καὶ ἐν τῷ τοιῷδε ἀξιοῦντι, ἡμᾶς περαιτέρω προνοοῦντας λέγειν ὑμῶν τῶν δι' ὀλίγου σκοπούντων, ἄλλως τε καὶ ὑπεύθυνον τὴν παραίνεσιν ἔχοντας πρὸς ἀνεύθυνον τὴν ὑμετέραν ἀκρόασιν. 5. εἰ γὰρ ὅ τε πείσας καὶ ὁ ἐπισπόμενος ὁμοίως ἐβλάπτοντο, σωφρονέστερον ἂν ἐκρίνετε· νῦν δὲ, πρὸς ὀργήν, ἥντινα τύχητε ἔστιν ὅτε not unfrequently in the early Attic writers, πλέον ἔχειν stands for πλεονεκτεῖν: a use which may be sufficiently accounted for, when we consider that πλέον ἔχειν signifies, 'to hold (i. e. hold in hand, keep to oneself) more than one's share of any thing;' whence πλεονέκτης and πλεονεκτεῖν. The future is used, and not the present, because the object of suspicion has reference to the future rather than the present: and here there may be an ellipsis of αὐτόν; the full sense being, 'suspicion attaches to him, that he will, in some covert way, make a gain of the matter in hand.' Such is the import of πλεονεκτεῖν ὑμᾶς in 2 Cor. xii. 17, 18.

4. The drift of the speaker in this and the next section is, I apprehend, to pave the way for the proposal he intends to make as to the Mitylenæans,—which is, that they should take some time for cool deliberation, and weigh well the matter before them,—namely, as to the punishment to be adjudged to the guilty; similar to what is said at ch. 48, οὐχ—ἀδικοῦντας κρῖναι καθ' ἡσυχίαν. This, however, he veils under a simple plea, or justification, of his own and his colleagues' seeming backwardness in adjudging these guilty rebels to punishment.

χρὴ δὲ πρὸς, &c.] Meaning to say, 'We orators, as public state-counsellors, cannot, as you of the people may, form a hasty judgment per saltum. As you use περινοίας, so we are found ever to use πρόνοιαν, (to forecast for your safety,) which is inconsistent with hasty and passionate views; especially since the course that might be taken would involve most important interests, and consequently would demand long and patient attention, such as is proper for us to use, who have to give counsel, and cannot be expected from you, who have only to take the matter into temporary consideration.' Such is nearly the view of the sense adopted by me in my Translation. And, agreeably to this, Dr. Arnold observes, that 'the stress of the passage lies in the words περαιτέρω προνοοῦντας, which seem intended to introduce the speaker's view of the question before them, as one of expediency, and deeply momentous,—and therefore not to be decided in haste and anger, but only after a deliberate calculation of the probable results of the decree they had passed.'

To advert to the phraseology in detail, the construction is, χρὴ δὲ ἡμᾶς, καὶ ἐν τῷ τοιῷδε ἀξιοῦντι, λέγειν προνοοῦντας περαιτέρω ὑμῶν τῶν δι' ὀλίγου σκοπούντων, &c. Of ἐν τῷ τοιῷδε ἀξιοῦντι the sense is, 'especially amidst such a disposition of mind, namely, so distrustful and suspicious of corruption;' in other words, 'such being the case, and knowing the sinister construction that will be sure to be put on whatever we may say, we are bound to be the more cautious what it is that we say.' The turn of the phrase bears a near affinity to that supra i. 142, ἐν τῷ μὴ μελετῶντι, and at iii. 10, ἐν τῷ διαλλάσσοντι, where the participle stands for the inf.; on which idiom see Matth. Gr. § 570. At δι' ὀλίγου supply χρόνου, 'considering it for a short time.' So supra i. 141, ἐν βραχεῖ μορίῳ σκοποῦσί τι τῶν κοινῶν. That the orators were held accountable for their public counsels, appears from Demosth. Olynth. i. sub fin., cited by Arnold. And the same may be concluded from a passage of Æschin. p. 56, 19, οὐδείς ἐστιν ἀνεύθυνος τῶν πρὸς τὰ κοινὰ προσελθόντων. They were open, as Schoemann proves, (de Comit. Att. p. 159.) to impeachments for imputed misconduct, termed γραφαὶ παρανόμων.

5. This section contains merely an incidental remark, showing the inexpediency (he does not say injustice) of the course in question. Εἰ γὰρ, &c. Render, 'for if he who counselled a measure, and he who followed that counsel, had been alike liable to suffer injury, you would have been more moderate and sober-minded judges.' Ἐβλάπ. signifies, 'had been damnified' by the course taken. Σωφρ. has reference to that freedom from passion or prejudice which should accompany the office of judgment: a broad hint, this, of what they should avoid on the present occasion.

The next words, νῦν δὲ, &c., are meant to point out what is the just and wise course, by placing in contrast the reverse. Render, 'But as things now are, out of anger at whatever counsel ye chance occaσφαλέντες, τὴν τοῦ πείσαντος μίαν γνώμην ζημιοῦτε, καὶ οὐ τὰς ὑμετέρας αὐτῶν, εἰ πολλαὶ οὖσαι ξυνεξήμαρτον. XLIV. Ἐγὼ δὲ παρῆλθον οὔτε ἀντερῶν περὶ Μυτιληναίων, οὔτε κατηγορήσων· οὐ γὰρ περὶ τῆς ἐκείνων ἀδικίας ἡμῖν ὁ ἀγὼν, εἰ σωφρονοῦμεν, ἀλλὰ περὶ τῆς ἡμετέρας εὐβουλίας. 2. ἤν τε γὰρ ἀποφήνω πάνυ ἀδικοῦντας αὐτοὺς, οὐ διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ἀποκτεῖναι κελεύσω, εἰ μὴ ξυμφέρον·

sionally to fail of success by, ye visit with punishment the single judgment of the person who counselled the measure, and not your own, though many there were who participated in the error.' Such is, I apprehend, the true sense of this confessedly intricate passage, on which no little difference of opinion exists among commentators. The chief difficulty centres in the words πρὸς ὀργὴν—σφαλέντες, where Hermann, Haack, and Poppo place a comma after τύχητε, and construe thus: πρὸς ὀργὴν ἥν τινα τύχητε [ζημιοῦντες], ζημιοῦτε. But this produces a very forced and frigid sense; and moreover, as Arnold observes, 'there is no reason for qualifying the word ὀργὴν by ἥν τινα τύχητε, since it is the speaker's object not to represent the punishment varying according to the ebb or flow of the people's resentment, but to describe the resentment and the consequent punishment as certain and severe.' Bekker, Goeller, and Arnold put no comma after τύχητε, and join σφαλέντες ἔστιν ὅτε πρὸς ὀργὴν ἥν τινα τύχητε [σφαλέντες], assigning the following sense: 'meeting, from time to time, with some disaster, according to the various passions which may have lured you to incur disasters.' But this is liable to the very same objection as the preceding mode,—presenting a harsh construction and a forced jejune sense. Accordingly I must still adhere to my former view, joining πρὸς ὀργὴν—ζημιοῦτε, and at ἥν τινα supplying παραίνεσιν from the preceding context; which method presents what Arnold acknowledges to be 'a very good sense,' and is not liable to any serious objection. For as to that urged by him, that it is harsh to refer ἥν τινα to παραίνεσιν repeated from a former sentence, the word might almost be said to be in the same sentence, since εἰ γὰρ merely subjoins another portion to the same ῥῆσις; and if it were even otherwise, the so-called harshness is what is by no means unfrequent in our author. And surely if the sense of any given words can be with tolerable certainty determined by the context, we must not be deterred from adopting it by any demur so little valid as this. Again, as to Poppo's objection, that σφαλῆναι would require the genit. or dat., it is utterly futile; this verb being not unfrequently followed by an accus. with the ellipsis of κατά. So i. 69, σφαλεὶς τὰ πλείω, and Dio Cass. 35, 53, πολλὰ ἐσφάλη. Lucian i. 509, μυρία σφαλείς. Xen. Hist. iv. 1, 9, μηδὲν σφάλλεσθαι. vii. 1, 2, ἐλάχιστα ἐσφαλμένοι. This, indeed, is especially the case in the accus. of τίς; of which numerous examples might be adduced from our author and from Xen., Plato, and the Tragedians. It is scarcely necessary to add, that πρὸς ὀργὴν signifies præ irâ, as πρὸς φόβον, præ timore, &c.

Ch. XLIV. With the preceding chapter terminates the prefatory or preludial part of the speech. The orator has now paved the way for the introduction of the line of argument he means to adopt, and which, as Thirlwall observes, 'is one most judicious, on an occasion when the humane feelings of his hearers would be already roused, but many might want to be furnished with reasons for indulging them, and the rest would only be exasperated by any attempt to vindicate the objects of their resentment.' He tells them that for his part (such being the force of the ἐγὼ) he comes forward to be no man's gainsayer or accuser: he is willing to let the question then before them rest on the ground which his adversary has taken. He will not attempt to defend or excuse the Mitylenæans. He is ready to admit that they have deserved the utmost rigour of punishment; but he can show that although such might be just, it would not be expedient: the question, in short, being not what they desired, but what it was most for the interest of Athens to inflict. Ὁ ἀγών: meaning, the question in contest or at issue. Εἰ σωφρονοῦμεν, 'if we take a rational view.' Τῆς ἡμετέρας εὐβουλίας, 'what is the best counsel for us to take.'

2. ἤν τε γὰρ—φαίνοιτο] That this passage is corrupt, has been generally admitted; but on the mode of emending it, critics are by no means agreed. Suffice it to say, that, after a renewed and careful investigation of the passage itself, and all that has been written upon it, I am still of opinion, that the true reading is that which I have ventured, after Dind., to adopt,—namely, ἦν τε καὶ ἔχοντάς τι ξυγγνώμης, ἐᾷν, instead of vulg., retained by Bekker, Poppo, Goell., and Arnold, ἦν τε καὶ ἔχοντές τι ξυγγ. εἶεν. The εἶεν is quite indefensible; and utterly untenable are the methods of emendation proposed by Herm. and Goeller; while that propounded by G. Burges and Dind. is liable to no serious objection, and yields a very good sense. Ἔχοντας, indeed, is not a mere conjecture, since it must have had place in Valla's MS., and I found it in the famous Cod. Clarend. As to εἶεν, it evidently arose from the erroneous ἔχοντες; the participle thus requiring some verb to be supplied; in consequence of which, εἶεν was first written in the margin, and then crept into the text. Accordingly Goeller here would supply ὥσι. Not without reason, then, is the reading ἔχοντας preferred by Dobree and Poppo, who both concur in cancelling εἶεν: and justly does Poppo approve of ἐᾷν, since it is strongly confirmed by a passage of Plato, Euthyphr. p. 4, B. (cited by Dind.) εἴ τε ἐν δίκῃ ἔκτεινεν ὁ κτείνας εἴτε μὴ, καὶ εἰ μὲν δίκῃ, ἐᾷν ('let him'), εἰ δὲ μὴ, ἐπεξιέναι ('to prosecute him'). And so ch. 48, τοὺς δ' ἄλλους Μυτ. ἐᾷν οἰκεῖν. And though there is not any external authority to be adduced for ἐᾷν, yet internal evidence is quite in its favour; since it may easily have passed into the corrupt εἶεν, being mistaken for it in manuscript abbreviation, especially as the participle seems to require it. There is, I repeat, no direct authority for the reading in question; but nevertheless I suspect that it originally had place in the Cod. Clarend.; for that MS. has ἔχοντας, which is utterly inconsistent with εἶεν, while quite consistent with ἐᾷν. In that MS., indeed, the present reading is ἦν; but that is on rasure, and so very well permits the supposition that ἐᾷν was the original reading. Supposing, however, ἔχοντες to be the true reading, then εἶεν must be retained, though not taken in the sense esto, which Poppo has shown to be inadmissible, but regarded as an optative; in which case, for ἦν, propriety would require εἰ, which, indeed, is found in some MSS. any thing but valuable, yet doubtless from mere alteration. The great objection, however, to ἔχοντες εἶναι, is the extreme harshness of supplying the whole of the apodosis; for, although Arnold considers the difficulty as easy to be removed,—this being, he says, 'one of the cases alluded to in note on ch. 31, where two opposite members of an alternative being given, and the consequence of one of them being stated, the consequence of the other follows so directly to every one's apprehension, according to the common law of contraries, that it may safely be omitted without any obscurity'—yet insurmountable objections are urged by Poppo.

3. νομίζω—τοῦ παρόντος] Since they were not in effect consulting about a future but a present matter, the assertion must be taken in a qualified sense, to mean, 'the point at issue turns rather upon a future than a present view of things.' And such is the sense assigned by Wasse, who observes, that 'the speaker here argues from the real and not the apparent state of the case;' as at i. 36, and vi. 78.

4. καὶ τοῦτο — γιγνώσκω] Here, as Poppo well observes, the words τοῦτο—ἀντισχυριζόμενος have their opposite in the intermediate ὃ ἰσχυρίζεται. Render, 'And as to what Cleon strenuously maintains, that the enactment of death as a punishment will be expedient with a view to hereafter, inasmuch as there will be less revolt; I, on the other hand, by counter-asseveration, with a reference to what is good for the future, maintain the contrary opinion.' With respect to the reading here, instead of the ᾧ of several MSS., I have thought proper to retain ὃ, because the sense here required (which is argumentis contendere) requires the accusative, as in Dio Cass. 419, 12. Aristid. iii. 553, and elsewhere. Again, in the words ξυμφέρον — προθεῖσι, the common reading must be retained; though several MSS. have, for προθεῖσι, προσθεῖσι: a reading this which, as Duk. observes, can only yield the sense, 'to increase or make heavier the punishment,' not, what the context here requires, pœnam proponere.

εὐπρεπεῖ τοῦ ἐκείνου λόγου τὸ χρήσιμον τοῦ ἐμοῦ ἀπώσασθαι. 6. δικαιότερος γὰρ ὢν αὐτοῦ ὁ λόγος, πρὸς τὴν νῦν ὑμετέραν ὀργὴν ἐς Μυτιληναίους, τάχα ἂν ἐπισπάσαιτο· ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐ δικαζόμεθα πρὸς αὐτούς, ὥστε τῶν δικαίων δεῖν, ἀλλὰ βουλευόμεθα περὶ αὐτῶν, ὅπως χρησίμως ἕξουσιν. XLV. Ἐν οὖν ταῖς πόλεσι πολλῶν θανάτου ζημία πρόκειται, καὶ οὐκ ἴσων τῷδε, ἀλλ' ἐλασσόνων ἁμαρτημάτων· ὅμως δὲ, τῇ ἐλπίδι ἐπαιρόμενοι, κινδυνεύουσι· καὶ οὐδείς πω, καταγνοὺς ἑαυτοῦ μὴ περιέσεσθαι τῷ ἐπιβουλεύματι,

On this phrase θάνατον ζημίαν προτιθέναι, 'to hold out death as the penalty of crime,' (for which, indeed, we might have had, as at ch. 45 & 46, θανάτου ζημίαν,) see note at ii. 24. As regards the construction, it is sufficient to say, with Poppo, Arnold, and Goeller, that it would be, in full, ξυμφέρον ἔσεσθαι θάνατον προθεῖναι ζημίαν προθεῖσι. With this they compare similar ones at v. 111, and i. 118, εἰ πολεμοῦσιν ἄμεινον ἔσται, and refer to Matth. Gr. Gr. § 555, annot. 2.

5. οὐκ ἀξιῶ ὑμᾶς—ἀπώσασθαι] 'I am of opinion that you ought not to reject.' On this use of οὐκ ἀξιῶ (found also at i. 136, and ii. 89, οὐκ ἀξιῶν—ἔχειν) see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 608. In τῷ εὐπρεπεῖ τοῦ, which stands for τῇ εὐπρεπείᾳ τοῦ, we have a dativus commodi, 'for the speciousness of,' &c., meaning fair show, as opposed to what is really useful; where the speaker evidently glances at the expression in Cleon's speech, ch. 38, 2, τὸ εὐπρεπὲς τοῦ λόγου.

6. δικαιότερος] 'more consonant with strict justice.' Πρὸς τὴν νῦν ὑμετέραν, 'on account of your,' &c. Ἂν ἐπισπάσαιτο, scil. ὑμᾶς αὐτῷ, 'may draw you over to that [view].' So at v. 111, we have, πολλοὺς τὸ αἰσχρὸν καλ. ἐπεσπάσατο, and in Xen. Cyr. v. 5, 5. Lucian i. 215; in each of which cases the verb is followed by an infin. with the ellipsis of ὥστε used for ἐς τό. So also Dio Cass. 734. Plato, 863, εἰς τὴν αὐτοῦ βούλησιν ἐπισπώμενον ἕκαστον.

οὐ δικαζόμεθα πρὸς αὐτούς] cum ipsis non jure disceptamus, 'we are not impleaded,' 'are not at judicial process with them,' as i. 77. Xen. Cyr. i. 2, 7. viii. 8, 7, and elsewhere in the best Attic writers: on which middle force in δικαζ. see Kuster de Verb. Med. ii. 7. Hence, in a passage of Arist. iii. 65, εἰ μὲν οὖν δικάζομεν αὐτοῖς, for δικάζομεν read δικαζόμεθ'; and in Dio Cass. 401, 63, (closely imitated from the present,) οὐδὲ γὰρ δικάζετέ τισιν ἂν ἐν τῷ παρόντι, ὡς τό τε πανὺ ἀκριβὲς δίκαιον ζητηθῆναι δεῖν· ἀλλὰ βουλεύεσθε περὶ τῶν ἐνεστηκότων ὅπως ὡς ἀσφαλέστατα καταστῇ· for δικάζετε read δικάζεσθε, and cancel the ἄν. By τῶν δικαίων, just after, understand 'arguments of justice and equity;' in which sense the expression occurs at iii. 54. Aristoph. Thesm. 543. Plut. p. 485. Xen. Cyr. iii. 1, 8. Jos. Bell. ii. 2, 4.

CH. XLV. Having placed the thing on the footing of expediency, the speaker proceeds to show that such expediency will not justify the extreme harshness from which he is dissuading them: and this he does by appealing to the testimony of experience, which shows that no severity of punishment will avail to prevent crime.

1. ἐν οὖν ταῖς πόλεσι—ἐς τὸ δεινὸν] Render, 'Now in states generally the penalty of death is awarded against many offences, and those not equal in guilt to this, but of far lesser criminality: nevertheless, buoyed up by hope [of impunity], men do run all hazards; and no one ever yet came into peril, who despaired that he should be able to come off safe (or get through with the enterprise).' Προκεῖσθαι is a term frequently used of the enaction of laws: but of its use as applied to penalties awarded by law, I know no other example except in Xen. de Vect. iv. 21, καὶ προσκειμένης ζημίας τῷ πωλοῦντι: and there it is strange the editors should not have seen that for προσκ. should be read προκ. In Plato, p. 717, d. διότι κούφων λόγων βαρυτάτη ζημία, there is an ellipse of ἐστι understood, as put for πρόκειται. Evidently formed upon which neat turn is a similar one in Plut. viii. 12, 5, ἐπεσπάσαντο κουφοτάτου πράγματος, λόγων, βαρυτάτην ζημίαν. Since πόλεσι has the article, the sense must be 'the states in general,' civil communities at large. Οὐ stands for οὐ μόνον, as appears from the correspondent ἀλλὰ—καί: a use, this, also occurring infra iv. 92, and Acts v. 4. Of καταγνοὺς ἑαυτοῦ μὴ περ. the literal sense is, 'judging of himself despondingly, that he should not,' &c., as at vii. 51, 1, ὡς καὶ αὐτῶν κατεγνωκότων ἤδη

ἦλθεν ἐς τὸ δεινόν. 2. πόλις τε ἀφισταμένη τίς πω, ἥσσω τῇ δοκήσει ἔχουσα τὴν παρασκευήν, ἢ οἰκείαν ἢ ἄλλων ξυμμαχίᾳ, τούτῳ ἐπεχείρησε; 3. πεφύκασί τε ἅπαντες καὶ ἰδίᾳ καὶ δημοσίᾳ ἁμαρτάνειν, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι νόμος ὅστις ἀπείρξει τούτου· ἐπεὶ διεξεληλύθασί γε διὰ πασῶν τῶν ζημιῶν οἱ ἄνθρωποι, προστιθέντες, εἴπως μηκέτι κρεισσόνων εἶναι σφῶν. Xen. Cyr. vi. 1, αὐτὸς ἐμαυτοῦ μὴ ἂν κατερῆσαι. Dionys. Hal. i. 142, 18, τῆς οἰκείας δυνάμεως ἀσθένειαν κατεγνωκότα: and i. 305, 23, Σαβίνων τινὲς καταγνόντες τῆς πόλεως ἀσθένειαν. Pausan. x. 19, 4, καταγνόντες αὐτῶν, ὅτι ὀλίγοι τε ἦσαν καὶ οὐκ ἀξιόμαχοι.

2. πόλις τε ἀφισταμένη — ἐπεχείρησε] This is meant to be illustrative of the foregoing sentiment in οὐδεὶς—ἐς τὸ δεινόν; serving to establish the assertion by an appeal to facts, as follows: 'What state revolting (i. e. meditating revolt) did ever, having in its own estimation a preparation, whether its own or by the alliance of others, less [than was indispensably requisite] take in hand the enterprise?' In ἀφισταμένη we have the present tense of what is soon to happen, or may shortly happen, here used not so much of the commencement of action, as the meditating thereon. Τῇ δοκήσει stands for κατὰ τὴν δόκ., 'estimation,' as at vi. 64, and vii. 67.

For vulg. ξυμμαχίαν I have, with Haack, Poppo, Bekker, and Goeller, edited ξυμμαχίᾳ; because the latter, besides being supported by external testimony, is strongly borne out by internal evidence, from ξυμμαχίᾳ being, on account of οἰκείαν preceding, far more likely to be altered to ξυμμαχίαν, than the contrary: though ξυμμαχίαν taken as a subst. would be very good Greek. So in Hdian. viii. 6, 12, ἀφῖκτο δὲ αὐτῷ καὶ Γερμανῶν οὐκ ὀλίγη συμμαχία πεμφθεῖσα. Dionys. Hal. Ant. p. 648, συμμαχίαν ἀποστέλλοντος, and especially 705, 4, where the writer had evidently this passage in mind: οὐδὲν αὐτοῖς ἐχώρει κατὰ νοῦν τοσαύτην μὲν οἰκείαν δύναμιν ἐπαγομένοις τοσαύτην δὲ ξυμμαχίαν.

3. The speaker now proves the impracticability of effecting the desired object, on the testimony of experience, as attested in what seems like an adage, πεφύκασιν ἅπαντες—ἁμαρτάνειν, 'all mankind, whether states or individuals, are by nature prone to delinquency.' Closely imitated from the present is one of Orig. c. Cels. p. 151. Isæus, p. 4, 30. Dio Cass. 617. Isocr. p. 127. Compare, too, Soph. Antig. 1011, ἀνθρώποισι γὰρ Τοῖς πᾶσι κοινόν ἐστι τἀξαμαρτάνειν. Yet the sentiment of Sophocles is not so strong as that of Thucyd., the meaning in the former being merely, that to commit faults is common to all men; which might, indeed, be the sense here, did the context permit; but this it does not. There is a plain allusion to some principle of corruption innate, and therefore not to be eradicated by any human institutions: which important truth, and its application to the present case, is yet more plainly expressed in a passage of Sopater ap. Stobæi Serm. p. 313, (cited by Wasse,) ἐννόει δὲ, ὡς σύμφυτον τὸ ἁμαρτάνειν ἀνθρώποις· ὥσθ', ἕως ἂν τις ὡς ἀναμαρτήτους κολάζῃ, τὸ μέτρον ὑπερβαίνει τῆς κατὰ φύσιν ἐπανορθώσεως, where σύμφ. signifies ingenitus, insitus, 'inherent,' lit. 'born with us and growing up with us,' a naturâ insitus, as in Arist. Metaph. ii. Theophr. frag. i. 1, σύμφυτόν ἐστι τὸ γνωρίζειν τὰ συγγενῆ, and Galei frag. Pyth. p. 59. From fault being innate, it might be expected, as Diod. adds, that no laws would by their penalties avail to restrain men from crime; but the thing is proved to be so by facts, which attest that 'men (i. e. legislators) have gone through (had recourse to) all kinds of punishments, still adding to them, but all in vain.' In illustration of which use of διεξέρχεσθαι I have noted, besides several passages in Liban. and Isocr., the following in Jos. Bell. ii. 8, 10, διὰ πάντων ὀδεύοντες τῶν βασανιστηρίων, ἵνα βλ. For προστιθέντες some would here read προτιθ.: but although that be somewhat countenanced by a passage infra ch. 82, ἐπεξῄεσαν τὰς τιμωρίας ἔτι μείζους προτιθέντες, proponentes, this reading cannot be admitted, since thus it will be necessary to supply τὰς ζημίας, which, however, would require προστ. 'adding to,' (not injungentes, as Goeller explains,) i. e. 'continually adding to them or augmenting them.' This is perfectly agreeable to facts: see Mitford, and Wachsmuth, Antiq. Gr. ii. 1, p. 161. Our author, too, adds that 'the punishments of the greatest offences were of old very mild, but they (meaning the laws which enjoined them) being transgressed, the greater part reach unto death.' The greatest permanent extensions of judicial punishment (for Dracon's laws prevailed but a short time) were made during the Peloponnesian war; since our author, ch. 82, notices among its characteristics the τιμωριῶν ἀτοπίαν and τιμωρίας ἔτι μείζους προτιθέντας.

The words following, εἴπως ἧσσον ἀδικοῖντο ὑπὸ τῶν κακούργων, have reference to the sole end of punishments, the suppression of crime; which most legislators have thought would best be effected by visiting offence with speedy and condign punishment,—regarding punishment as alike a retaliation towards the offender, and a reparation to the sufferer and society at large. So in Plut. de Serâ Num. Vind. ch. 6, init. it is said: 'Ὡς αἱ μὲν δικαιώσεις αἱ παρὰ ἀνθρώπων μόνον ἔχουσι τὸ ἀντιλυποῦν, καὶ ἐν τῷ κακῶς τὸν δεδρακότα παθεῖν ἱστανται, περαιτέρω δ' οὐκ ἐξικνοῦνται· διὸ τοῖς ἁμαρτήμασι, κυνὸς δίκην, ἐφυλακτοῦσαι κατακολουθοῦσι, καὶ τὰς πράξεις ἐκ ποδὸς ἐπιδιώκουσι· meaning that 'punishments, as coming from men, have no other object than the retaliation of the injury on the injurer, and when he who has done κακῶς has suffered κακῶς, they stop, and proceed no further;' and in the exercise of that, they are compared with a savage dog set to defend property.

The next words are so connected with this highly important subject, that I subjoin them, and more especially for the purpose of removing a deeply seated corruption, which has defied all attempts of even Wyttenbach himself to remove it. They are as follows: τὸν Θεὸν δ' εἰκὸς, ἧς ἂν ἐφάπτηται τῇ δίκῃ ('in his righteous judgment') ψυχῆς νοσούσης, τά τε πάθη διορᾶν, εἴ πη τι καμπτόμενα πρὸς ἐπανόρθωσιν ('for correction, or reformation, of what is wrong') οἷς οὐκ ἄκρατος ('irrepressible') οὐδ' ἄτρεπτος (for ἄστρεπτος, or ἀμετάστρεπτος, ἀμεταμέλητος) ἡ κακία πέφυκε, προσιζάνειν, where πέφυκε has the same force as πεφύκασι in this passage of Thucydides, and, for the corrupt προσιζάνειν, I confidently propose to read προσορίζειν· an emendation strongly confirmed by the reading πορίζειν found in the Cod. Mezeriac. The mistake arose from the abbreviation for προσ being mistaken for a single π. Again, other scribes, it seems, inadvertently taking πορίζειν for προσίζειν, the critics altered it to the usual form, προσιζάνειν. The term προσορίζειν signifies, to mark out, to appoint: and Plutarch elsewhere uses this very phrase προσορίζειν χρόνον.

In καὶ τοῦτο ὅμως παραβαίνεται the τοῦτο has reference to something contained in the preceding context, by implication, as τὸ θανάτου ζημίαν προκεῖσθαι.

5. The speaker has already shown by the testimony of experience, that no rigour of the laws, how far soever it might be stretched, could avail to suppress crime: and he here draws the inference, that 'accordingly some other object of terror must be found, since this would nought avail.' It was not, however, for Diodotus or for Thucydides to point out, what can never be unknown to any Christian legislators, or governors,—namely, the fear of punishments in another world; but the speaker contents himself with pointing out how it comes to pass that no severity of law will avail to prevent offences: and this he does with so much address, as to interest the feelings of the compassionate, even in favour of the object of their just resentment. His words are, ἀλλ' ἡ μὲν πενία —— ἐξάγουσιν ἐς τοὺς κινδύνους· which may be rendered, 'For, on the one hand, poverty is found to impart boldness from necessity, and, on the other, the license of wealth is found to communicate, by insolence and arrogance, a grasping rapacity. The other conditions, too, of life (meaning the middle ones) by the impetuous workings of human passion, as each is respectively possessed and ruled by some unbridled lust, hurry men into dangers.' Such is the general sense: to advert to the phraseology in detail; in the datives ἀνάγκῃ, ὕβρει, καὶ φρονήματι, and ὀργῇ, we have, as Kistem., Poppo, and Arnold remark, datives of instrument or cause; the sense being, as Arnold explains, 'poverty making men bold from necessity, and large means making them ambitious from insolence and pride.' And ματι, αἱ δ' ἄλλαι ξυντυχίαι ὀργῇ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὡς ἑκάστη τις κατέχεται ὑπ' ἀνηκέστου τινὸς κρείσσονος, ἐξάγουσιν ἐς τοὺς κινδύνους. 6. ἥ τε ἐλπὶς καὶ ὁ ἔρως ἐπὶ παντὶ,—ὁ μὲν ἡγούμενος, ἡ δ' ἑφεπομένη, καὶ ὁ μὲν τὴν ἐπιβολὴν ἐκφροντίζων, ἡ δὲ τὴν

so Steph., Heilm., and Bredow explain, 'ex necessitate audaciam afferens;' and Dukas well paraphrases: ὁ μὲν πένης, τῇ ἐνδείᾳ ἀναγκαζόμενος, τολμᾷ κακουργεῖν, ὁ δὲ δυνατὸς, ὕβρει καὶ φρονήματι ἐπαιρόμενος, ὁρμᾷ πλεονεκτεῖν. In which view compare Eurip. El. 375, and Plato de Repub. iv. p. 331. By ἐξουσία is meant, 'power of wealth,' 'the possession of means conferred by wealth for gratifying the desires of the heart.' So Aristot. Eth. x. 8, συμβέβηκε τοῖς μὲν πένησι, διὰ τὴν ἔνδειαν, ἐπιθυμεῖν χρημάτων· τοῖς δὲ πλουσίοις διὰ τὴν ἐξουσίαν (scil. τοῦ πλούτου) ἐπιθυμεῖν τῶν μὴ ἀναγκαίων ἡδονῶν. In either, then, it is the desire, or want, which spurs them on κακουργεῖν. And so in Aristot. Rhet. i. 12, (cited by Arnold,) we have, ἀδικοῦσι, ὅσοι ἂν ἐνδεεῖς ὦσι· διχῶς δέ εἰσιν ἐνδεεῖς· ἢ γὰρ ὡς ἀναγκαίου, ὥσπερ οἱ πένητες· ἢ ὡς ὑπερβολῆς, ὥσπερ οἱ πλούσιοι. To this purpose also is the remark of Ammian. Marcell. l. xxxi. 4, 'Cupiditates sunt materia omnium vitiorum.'

By πλεονεξία is denoted that craving spirit which often accompanies wealth, making its possessor desire more,—or whatever it can purchase, as sensual pleasure, or power. Of ξυντυχίαι the meaning is, 'states or conditions of life,' in which men are placed by fortune (insomuch that the word bears the sense of fortune in Eurip. Herc. Fur. 766, and Herodot. v. 65); and here by καὶ ἄλλαι ξυντυχίαι must be understood, the middle stations: the meaning being, that 'in all classes of society men are, by the ὀργῇ, or impetuosity of the master-passion of their heart, carried away, and led to face every danger.' On this sense of ὀργὴ see note supra ch. 43, and i. 130, 140. Ἐξάγουσι is a very forcible term, used as in Eurip. Alc. 1033, ἀλλ' ἔρως τις μ' ἐξάγει. Dio Cass. 686, 63, ἡ φύσις πολλοὺς ἁμαρτάνειν ἐξάγει, and 678-9. Eurip. Herc. Fur. 775, ἅ τ' εὐτυχία Φρονεῖν βροτοὺς ἐξάγεται; perhaps by a metaphor taken from a ship carried out of its course by tempestuous winds. So Eurip. Herc. Fur. 1212, Κάτασχε λέοντος ἀγρίου θυμόν γ', ὅπως Βρόμον ἐπὶ φόνιον, ἀνόσιον ἐξάγῃ.

The words ὡς ἑκάστη τις (scil. ξυντυχία, meaning a person or individual of each of the classes) κατέχεται ὑπ' ἀνηκέστου τινὸς κρείσσονος, are meant to suggest, as does ἐξάγουσι, some excuse for the thing, on the ground of the agent being possessed and enslaved by some passion too powerful for human nature to combat: and ἀνήκεστον signifies incorrigible, namely, by human laws; a sense which the word bears in the ὀργὴ ἀνήκ. of Plut., and ἀνήκεστος πονηρία of Xen. Mem. iii. 5, 18. In κατέχεται we have a metaphor either founded on a comparison of physical disease with the moral disorder of unbridled passion, (and so the phrase κατέχεσθαι νόσῳ or νοσήματι,) or rather one taken from the being possessed with a superhuman influence; a sense which the word frequently bears in Plato and other writers: and sometimes it is used of the irresistible impulses of passion, as Xen. Symp. viii. 10, ὑφ' οὗ σὺ κατέχεσθαί μοι δοκεῖς ἔρωτος.

6. The speaker now adverts to those passions, which especially set these desires far more in motion,—namely, love of, or desire for, the object, and the hope of attaining it. Ἐπὶ παντὶ, scil. πράγματι, 'under every circumstance.' Πλεῖστα βλάπτουσι, 'work most of the mischief,' namely, these passions, hope and desire; for to πλεῖστα βλ. belong the foregoing nouns ἡ ἐλπὶς and ὁ ἔρως. These two master-engines, the main-springs of human action, may, indeed, seem placed out of their natural order; for, as the Schol. observes, 'a man first desires, and then hopes he shall attain what he desires, and lastly attempts it.' So Max. Tyr. Diss. xxxvii. (cited by Poppo,) συγκατῴκισεν ὁ Θεὸς τοῖς λογισμοῖς ἔρωτα καὶ ἐλπίδα, τὸν μὲν ὡσπερεὶ πτέρωμά τι κοῦφον καὶ μετάρσιον, ἐπαίρον τε καὶ ἀνακουφίζον τὴν ψυχὴν, καὶ παρέχον αὐτῇ δρόμον ἐπὶ τὰς αὐτῆς ὀρέξεις· αἱ δὲ ἐλπίδες συγκατῳκισμέναι τῇ ψυχῇ παραμύθιον ταῖς ἑκάστου ὁρμαῖς. Yet it must be borne in mind, that hope may, in some sense, be said to precede,—since, unless there be some hope of attaining an object, desire of it can scarcely come into existence: not to mention, that it is chiefly the blind hope which causes men always to calculate too securely on the chances of escaping from perils, by which they are chiefly engaged to rush on them. If others have perished, or may, nay must perish, in the course he is taking, each man thinks that he at least shall escape.

The next words, ὁ μὲν ἡγούμενος—ὑποτιθεῖσα, are illustrative of the process by which the deceit is accomplished; and here the two terms ἡ ἐλπὶς and ὁ ἔρως are considered in their strictly natural order,—desire as leading the way, hope as following in his steps. Desire is described as ἐκφροντίζων τὴν ἐπιβολήν: by which cannot be meant, as the commentators explain, 'contriving the project,' but literally, 'thinking out, working out by thought, figuring out to itself in imagination the object of desire, that on which the person τὸν νοῦν ἐπιβάλλει, sets his mind,' namely, the undertaking. Hope is represented as following up and furthering desire and purpose, by suggesting the facility of success. The dangerous nature of these deceits is then set forth in the words, a little after, ὄντα ἀφανῆ, κρείσσω ἐστὶ τῶν ὀρωμένων δεινῶν, of which the meaning is, that 'though unseen, (i. e. not falling under view as objects of the senses,) they have a greater effect [on the mind of man] than dangers that are seen;' in other words, making men slight them and coolly encounter them.

7. What is said in this section is meant to account for the prevalence of these two principles of action (the nouns denoting which accordingly take the neuter gender) thus leading men to face any dangers,—namely, from their being strengthened, and their purposes encouraged, by the capriciousness of fortune, which makes them reckon too securely on the chances of escape from danger.

ξυμβάλλεται ἐς τὸ ἐπαίρειν] 'contributes not less [than hope] to encourage them;' in other words, a fortunate concurrence of circumstances leads a man on to engage in a dangerous project, even ἐκ τῶν ὑποδεεστέρων, 'with insufficient resources.' The words, a little after, καὶ οὐχ ἧσσον τὰς πόλεις, are introduced by way of indicating that what was just said of individuals is applicable to states; of course, meaning Mitylene in particular. And one cannot but admire the address with which the feelings of compassion are worked upon and effectually interested, before a hint is given as to the objects meant to be benefited by this appeal. At εὐπορίαν τῆς τύχης ὑποτιθεῖσα,—πλεῖστα βλάπτουσι· καὶ, ὄντα ἀφανῆ, κρείσσω ἐστὶ τῶν ὀρωμένων δεινῶν. 7. καὶ ἡ τύχη ἐπ' αὐτοῖς οὐδὲν ἔλασσον ξυμβάλλεται ἐς τὸ ἐπαίρειν· ἀδοκήτως γάρ ἐστιν ὅτε παρισταμένη, καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὑποδεεστέρων κινδυνεύειν τινὰ προάγει,—καὶ οὐχ ἧσσον τὰς πόλεις, ὅσῳ περὶ τῶν μεγίστων, ἐλευθερίας ἢ ἄλλων ἀρχῆς· καὶ μετὰ πάντων ἕκαστος ἀλογίστως ἐπὶ περὶ τῶν μεγίστων supply κινδυνεύουσι, from κινδυνεύειν preceding. The argument is a powerful one, and it is strengthened by what is said in the next words.

καὶ μετὰ πάντων—ἐδόξασεν] The reading here is doubtful. The early editions and the generality of the MSS. have αὐτὸν, which was retained by Duker, Bauer, Haack, Bekker, and Poppo; while several of the best MSS. have αὐτῶν, which is preferred, though not adopted, by Poppo and Arnold, and has been edited by Goeller. I have thought proper to retain the common reading; first, because, in minute variations of this kind, the authority of MSS. is but slender; and secondly, because the sense arising from αὐτῶν, whether 'aliquid earum rerum (libertatis et in alios imperii) in majus animo concipit,' as Goeller renders, or, as Arnold, 'carries his imaginations something too far concerning them,' is too forced and far-fetched: besides, where, it may be asked, does δοξάζειν mean,—as Arnold says it does,—'to form schemes in imagination?' not certainly supra i. 120; for there δοξάζομεν merely imports, 'we form in our mind δόξας, ideas or images, imaginations [namely, how the thing will be and we shall act],' thus answering to ἐκφροντίζων supra § 6 of the present chapter. So, in a passage of Eurip. ap. Plut. vi. 428, 3, we have, εἴ τι πάσχοιμ' ὧν ἐδόξαζον φρενί: and so Eurip. Thes. frag. iv. says, εἰς φροντίδας νοῦν συμφορᾶς τ' ἐβαλλόμην· φυγάς τ' ἐμαυτῷ προστιθεὶς πάτρας ἐμῆς, θανάτους τ' ἀώρους, καὶ κακῶν ἄλλας ὁδοὺς ('inlets of evils'). Ὡς, εἴ τι πάσχοιμ', ὧν ἐδόξαζον, ποτὲ, ('if ever I should suffer aught of what I had formed to my mind in imagination,') Μή μοι νέορτον προσπέσον, μᾶλλον δάκοι· where, for νοῦν, I conjecture ought to be read νοῦ, taking φροντίδας νοῦ to mean 'solicitudes of mind,' answering to the 'thoughts of heart' in Judg. v. 15, where the Sept. has ἐξικνούμενοι καρδίας, for which I would propose to read ἐξικνιασμοὶ καρδίας, what in Aquila is expressed by 'investigations of heart.'

Finally, difficult is it to conceive how any one can be said 'to irrationally think πλέον τι ‡ αὐτὸν ἐδύξασεν. 8. ἁπλῶς τε ἀδύνατον, καὶ πολλῆς εὐηθείας ὅστις οἴεται, τῆς ἀνθρωπείας φύσεως ὁρμωμένης προθύμως τι πρᾶξαι, ἀποτροπήν τινα ἔχειν ἢ νόμων ἰσχύϊ, ἢ ἄλλῳ τῳ δεινῷ. XLVI. Οὔκουν χρὴ οὔτε τοῦ θανάτου τῇ ζημίᾳ ὡς ἐχεγγύῳ πιστεύσαντας, χεῖρον βουλεύσασθαι, οὔτε ἀνέλπιστον καταστῆσαι τοῖς ἀποστᾶσιν, ὡς οὐκ ἔσται μεταγνῶναι, καὶ ὅτι ἐν βραχυτάτῳ too highly of liberty or slavery,' since, as is said in the well-known couplet in Homer's Odyssey, xvii. 322, ἤμισυ γάρ τ' ἀρετῆς ἀποαίνυται εὐρύοπα Ζεὺς Ἀνέρος, εὖτ' ἂν μιν κατὰ δούλιον ἦμαρ ἕλῃσιν. On the other hand, excellent is the sense yielded by αὐτὸν,—namely, 'and because, together with the community at large, each individual, miscalculatingly, thinks of himself somewhat too much,' in majus. So in a passage of St. Paul, Rom. xii. 3, we have the similar expression, μὴ ὑπερφρονεῖν παρ' ὃ δεῖ φρονεῖν, ἀλλὰ φρονεῖν εἰς τὸ σωφρονεῖν. Yet so rare, we may say, is the possession of this quality of mind denoted by τὸ σωφρονεῖν, that the want of it would—Diodotus could not fail to see—be held far from inexcusable by all considerate persons: and the drift of the whole sentence is to suggest matter for excuse for the Mitylenæans. Goeller, indeed, speaks of the usus loquendi as being in favour of αὐτῶν. But all that can truly be said is, that it allows, not that it demands, that reading. I am not aware that there is any thing in the usus loquendi to forbid δοξάζειν bearing the sense (sometimes found in the Latin sentire) 'to form an opinion of a person.' Such is certainly the use of the word in Ælian, V. H. i. 16, πῶς καλῶς ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν οὕτω δοξάζει; Ecclus. v. 31, ἐν πραΰτητι δόξασον τὴν ψυχήν σου, for ἐν πρ. δόξ. σεαυτὸν, 'think with humility of thyself,' and not (what is denoted by ἐπὶ πλέον here) plusquam par est; 'judge of thyself in meekness, humility, and modesty.' And to this purpose is the expression of St. James, Ep. iii. 13, ἐν πραΰτητι σοφίας, meaning, 'such a wisdom as is accompanied with meekness and humility.'

Here we have an excuse suggested for the individuals, on the ground that they erred μετὰ πάντων, for which, however, I conjecture, ought to be read μεθ' ἁπάντων. In either case an excuse is suggested by the term ἀλογίστως: since what, it may be asked, is so venial as a miscalculation in our own favour?

8. The speaker now, from the foregoing considerations, ventures to lay down as a position not to be disputed, that 'it is impossible (and a mark of utter simplicity in any one to think otherwise) that when human nature is passionately bent on any object of desire, any effectual means can be found to restrain it, whether by force of laws, or any other terror;' an argument intended to act as a dissuasive against extreme severity, whether towards states or individuals, from the consideration that the desired security is unattainable. Closely imitated from the present is a passage of Dio Cass. p. 789, 19.

As respects the phraseology here, ἁπλῶς is well explained by the Schol. as standing for καθολικῶς, 'upon the whole.' The term is one not unfrequently employed with οὐδείς and ἅπας. In πολλῆς εὐηθείας ὅστις οἴεται we have, as Goell. and Arnold observe, a genus dicendi mixtum ex εὐηθείας ἐστὶ τὸ οἴεσθαι et εὐήθης ἐστὶν ὅστις οἴεται· in which view I would compare Aristoph. Thesm. 178. Ἀποτροπὴν ἔχειν signifies, as Poppo explains, 'habere rationem, quâ deterreamus [naturam a cupidè agendo].'

CH. XLVI. Leaving what he had said in the last sentence, though seemingly affirmed of individuals, to be applied to states,—the speaker now means to say, that none would ever be restrained from such an undertaking, as that of the Mitylenæans, by their knowledge of the evils which they would incur from a failure of success.

1. οὔκουν χρὴ, &c.] Render, 'Accordingly we must not come to any impolitic determination in reliance on the penalty of death as affording a security.' The term ἐχέγγυος signifies literally, 'having an ἐγγύη, or security, in hand,' like its cognate φερέγγυος occurring infra viii. 68, which similarly signifies, 'holding it in hand.' The latter term is found also in Herodot. v. 30, and Æschyl. Sept. 480, and elsewhere. Both are terms properly used of persons; though sometimes of things. Compare Dio Cass. 292, 39, ὥστε καὶ τὰ φαινόμενα πίστιν τῆς σωτηρίας ἐχέγγυον. Soph. Œd. Col. 284, ἀλλ' ὥσπερ ἔλαβες ἐχέγγυον (where, for ἐχέγγυον, read ἐχέγγυος). Eurip. Andr. 191, ἐχεγγύῳ λόγῳ πεισθεῖσ'.

οὔτε ἀνέλπιστον καταστῆσαι τοῖς ἀποστᾶσιν] In ἀνέλπ. we have, as Poppo remarks, the accus. of predicate, as in ὡς οὐκ ἔσται μεταγνῶναι the accus. of object, as though it had been written ἀνέλπιστον καταστῆσαι (i. e. ποιῆσαι) τὸ μεταγνῶναι. On this use of the negative see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 584, note 4, and § 609. Μεταγνῶναι signifies, 'to change one's mind and take another course,' as in Soph. Phil. 1270, ἔνεστι καὶ μεταγνῶναι, &c. On this collocation of ὅτι see Popp. Proleg. i. 301, and Matth. Gr. Gr. § 461. Of καταλῦσαι the sense is diluere. The simple λῦσαι is found supra i. 42, μεῖζον ἔγκλημα λῦσαι: and in Aristoph. Ran. 691, λῦσαι τὰς πρότερον ἁμαρτίας. The former, however, is a stronger term, signifying, 'to entirely do away the fault.'
